A few kilometres southeast of Nathu La, better-known Jelep La was the pass used by Francis Younghusband in the British Great Game era attack on Tibet (1904). Until 1962 Jelep La was the main trade route between Kalimpong and Lhasa, but it shows no signs whatsoever of reopening.

SOUTH SIKKIM

The main sights in South Sikkim are Namchi's gigantic statues. The region has plenty of other great viewpoints, too, but visitors generally hurry straight through en route to Pelling leaving much of the region comparatively untouristed. Ravangla (p581) falls administratively within South Sikkim, but we cover it in the Gangtok to Pelling section (see p580) where it fits more logically.

NAMCHI

Soon, two utterly vast statues will be facing off from opposite hillsides across this quietly prosperous market town. The Buddhist one at Samdruptse is already finished, the Hindu one at Solophok is still under construction.

Sights

SAMDRUPTSE

Painted in shimmering copper and bronze tones, the impressively vast 45m Padmasambhava statue (Indian adult/child Rs 10/5, foreigner Rs 50/10; 7am-5pm) stops just short of kitsch. Completed in 2004 on a foundation stone laid by the Dalai Lama, it's visible from miles around, shining like a golden cone amid the forests of Samdruptse hill. The site is 7km from Namchi, 2km off the Damthang road.

Taxis want around Rs 250 return. Alternatively you could walk back to Namchi, short-cutting via steps down to and through a rock garden (admission Rs 10). Or more interestingly follow the nose of the Samdruptse hill down to Ngadak Gompa. Ngadak's ruined old dzong, dating back to 1717, is delightfully 'real' despite the unsightly steel buttressing that stops it from falling down. Its unpainted stone exterior incorporates ancient carved door pillars and upstairs intriguing but very decrepit fragments of painting remain on the peeling old cloth wallpaper.

SOLOPHOK

As if one gigantic statue weren't enough, work is proceeding at a prodigious rate to raise a new 33m (108ft) Shiva statue on Solophok hilltop. Due for completion in mid 2008, the site is expected to become a major pilgrimage point. A surrounding complex of temples and visitor pavilions is already partly built. Solophok is 6km from central Namchi. The access road passes the hospital and stadium, winds around the base of the interesting Decchen Gompa, then continues up past Dungmali Guesthouse.

Sleeping & Eating

our pick Dungmali Guest House (☎ 263272; Solophok Rd, 4th km; d Rs 200-350) For now, this family homestay offers just three rooms, the best having a private bathroom and a fabulous view window and sitting room. But in the next two years, inspired owner Bimuka Dungmali plans to add traditional Sikkimese hut-bungalows and create a more upmarket ecoresort with spa, and yoga-meditation hall. She already grows her own organic veg, offers bird-watching walks in 2.4 hectares of private jungle and can take you to meet a traditional healer.

Hotel Samdruptse (☎ 264708; Jorethang Rd; d Rs 400-800) The Samdruptse has its share of scuffed paint and damp patches but the best rooms have great balconies with superb views. It's above Namchi's finest restaurant, 300m west of the centre facing the Solophok-bound road junction.

Above the main square's taxi stand, between Padma Shova Lodge (☎ 263144), under reconstruction, and the neat Hotel Zimkhang (☎ 263625), climb two floors to find internet access at the Bon Pizzeria.

Ravangla	17	1½ hr	11.30am, 2pm, 4.30pm road are the main market, the jeep stand and the SNT bus stand (☎ 263847). See above for details of SNT services.

Share jeeps leave when full to Jorethang (Rs 25, one hour) and Ravangla (Rs 30, one hour) plus, till lunchtime only, to Gangtok (Rs 92, 3½ hours) and Siliguri (Rs 100 via Melli, four hours). For Geyzing (Rs 90, three hours), a single jeep leaves around 12.30pm: otherwise change in Jorethang.

This useful transport hub between West Sikkim, Namchi and Darjeeling/Siliguri could make a launching point for visits to interesting but lesser-known Sikkimese villages like Rinchenpong (country getaways) or Reishi (hot springs and holy cave).

At its westernmost edge, Jorethang's most striking feature is the Akar Suspension Bridge, 400m north of which are the passingly photogenic roadside Shiva niches of Sisne Mandir (Legship Rd).

The brightest, friendliest accommodation option remains Hotel Namgyal (☎ 276852; d Rs 350), on the main drag 70m east of the bridge just before the SNT bus station. Across the road beside the Darjeeling jeep stand there's a particularly helpful tourist office and several other hotels. One longish block further east, turn right to find the main market and several cheap eateries, including Sanjay Hotel (snack meals Rs 10). Had you turned left instead, you'd have found the bustling main jeep stand hiding one short block north of the main road.

BUSES FROM JORETHANG

Destination	Cost (Rs)	Duration (hr)	Departure
Gangtok	55	4	7.30am
Namchi	13	1	8.30am, 4pm
Pelling (via Geyzing)	45	3	3pm
Ravangla (via Namchi)	30	2½	noon
Siliguri	56	3½	9.30am

Getting There & Away

Useful services from the SNT bus station are listed on left.

From the main jeep stand, sumos leave regularly to Namchi (Rs 25, one hour), Geyzing (Rs 52, two hours), and Siliguri (Rs 94, three hours). For Gangtok jeeps cost Rs 98 via Melli, Rs 112 via Namchi. A couple of sumos leave around noon for Tashiding (Rs 47, 1½ hours) and Yuksom (Rs 96, three hours). There are also morning jeeps to Kakarbhitta (Rs 133, four hours). Buy tickets before boarding.

Jeeps to Darjeeling (Rs 90, two hours) leave until about 3pm from opposite the SNT bus stand.

WEST SIKKIM

Sikkim's greatest tourist draw is simply staring at Khangchendzonga, white-peaked magnificence from Pelling. Most visitors then add excursions to nearby waterfalls and monasteries, plus perhaps a spot of walking. Some lovely one-day hikes start from the charming village of Yuksom. That's also the trailhead for serious multiday group-trek expeditions to Dzongri (group trekking permits required).

GANGTOK TO PELLING

There are three main routes from the capital to Sikkim's main tourist hub. The longest and least interesting loops a long way south to Rongphu, then back via Melli, Jorethang and Legship. Fortunately this is normally only used by public sumos when landslides block the two possible routes via Singtam and Ravangla. Both of these are highly attractive, especially the longer, little-used route via Yangang (hired jeep only), which approaches Ravangla along an extremely dramatic cliff-edge drive around the precipitous base of Maenam Hill.

Ravangla (opposite) makes a good tea stop. Better still, if you have a chartered vehicle, have lunch 3km west of Ravangla at the lonely Known as Guru Rinpoche in Tibetan, Sibaji in Nepali/Hindi or Padmasambhava in Sanskrit, this 8th-century 'second Buddha' is credited with introducing Tantric Buddhism to Tibet. Padmasambhava statues and murals are common throughout Sikkim. In his most classic form, he's usually shown sitting cross-legged with wild, staring eyes and a tirsul rod tucked into the folds of his left sleeve. This spears a trio of heads in progressive stages of decomposition representing the three kayas (aspects of enlightenment) . Meanwhile notice Padmasambhava's right hand surreptitiously giving a two-fingered Aloha greeting from behind a dorje (mini sceptre).

PADMASAMBHAVA

Padmasambhava has seven other alternative manifestations. The most striking of these, Dorje Bhurpa Vajrakila, shows him with three frightful heads and a lusty wench gyrating on his groin.

Mt Narsing Resort (☎ 9733084105; mains Rs 30-75), a rustic bungalow place with fabulous tree-framed views towards the mountains. You could also sleep here in simple bungalows (s/d Rs 550/850) with shared amenities or more luxurious cottages (Rs 1600/3100)

Don't miss the charming little Bon Monastery (right) before reaching Kewzing where the road starts its descent on seemingly endless hairpins to Legship (p582), only to climb all the way back up the other side again to Geyzing (p582).

Ravangla (Rabongla)

Rapidly expanding Ravangla is spectacularly perched overlooking a wide sweep of western Sikkim, the gompas of Old Ralang, Tashiding, Pemayangtse and Sangachoeling, all distantly visible against a horizon that's sawtoothed with snow-capped peaks.

The town itself is a modern creation of little aesthetic distinction, but useful as a hub to visit Ralang. Around the main road junction is a concentration of shops, small eateries and plentiful hotels, including Hotel 10-Zing (☎ 260705; d from Rs 300), a slightly eccentric place whose best room (Rs 450) has a new bathroom, gingham-wrapped TV and comes complete with Ozzy Ozbourne poster.

Hotel Snow-White (☎ 9836089533; s/d/tr Rs 300/400/700) has small but clean new rooms sharing very neat bathrooms. There are good if partially obscured views from the rear.

Several more hotels, many with views, line the Kewzing road for about a kilometre.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Transport gathers in front of Hotel 10-Zing. Buses leave around 9.30am for Gangtok (Rs 44, three hours), and at 9am and 1pm for Namchi (Rs 17, 1½ hours). Until around 2pm, share jeeps leave when full to Namchi (Rs 30, one hour) and Geyzing (Rs 60, two hours) via Legship (Rs 32). Mainamla Travels (☎ 260688) runs several morning jeeps to Gangtok (Rs 74, three hours).

Around Ravangla

RALANG

At Ralang 13km below Ravangla, the splendid 1995 Palchen Choeling Monastic Institute (New Ralang Gompa) is home to about 200 Kagyu-order monks. Arrive early morning or around 3pm to hear them chanting in mesmerising unison. There's a 9m-high golden statue of the historical Buddha in the main hall, and locally the gompa is famous for elaborate butter sculptures. At November's very impressive Mahakala Dance the dancers wear masks representing the Great Protector and chase away negative energy. Ask to peek inside the room where the amazing costumes are stored.

About 1.5km downhill on the same road is peaceful Old Ralang Gompa, established in 1768.

A chartered taxi to Ralang costs around Rs 350 from Ravangla (return with two hours' wait).

BON MONASTERY

Beside the main Legship road, 5.5km from central Ravangla, small but fascinating Yung Drung Kundrak Lingbon is the only Bon monastery in Sikkim. The Bon faith, ('Mahayana with more laughs') preceded Buddhism in Tibet. It's relevance and impact on Buddhist philosophy is brought superbly alive by the impeccable explanations of the monastery's joyful English teacher, Lama Yungdrung Tenzing.

MAENAM HILL

A steep three- to four-hour hiking trail leads from the Ravangla–Ralang road to the top of Maenam Hill through the rhododendrons and magnolia blooms of the Maenam Wildlife

Sanctuary. The views are wonderful and you just might see rare red pandas and monal pheasants (Sikkim's state bird). A guide is useful to avoid getting lost in the forest on return. Longer treks continue to Borong village.

GEYZING, TIKJUK & LEGSHIP

Geyzing is West Sikkim's capital, but for permit extensions you need Tikjuk, half way to Pelling.

Tikjuk

Sikkim Permits can be extended at Tikjuk's Police Station (☎ 250844; 10am-4pm Mon-Sat) beside the main Pelling Rd, 4km from Geyzing. Nearby the District Secretariat (10am-4pm Mon-Fri) offers internet access in its Community Information Centre (per hr Rs 20).

elev 1552m

Apart from its vaguely interesting Sunday market, Geyzing is most useful as West Sikkim's transport hub. However, for a pleasantly peaceful accommodation alternative, go 2.3km towards Sakyong (itself a village with considerable potential). Here the Tashigang Resort (☎ 250340; www.tashigangresort.com; s Rs 900-1300, d Rs 1150-1560, plus tax 20%) offers magnificently wide views from almost all except the cheapest 'deluxe rooms'. Curious roof lawns top the slightly frumpy red-brick building offering more chances for mountain contemplation.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Useful SNT bus services are listed below.

Share jeeps to Pelling (Rs 20, 20 minutes) and Legship (Rs 25, 30 minutes) leave when full, roughly every half-hour. Taxis cost Rs 150 to 200.

Jorethang-bound jeeps (Rs 52, 1½ hours) leave regularly throughout the day. There are several morning jeeps to Siliguri (Rs 125, four hours) and Gangtok (Rs 120, five hours) via Ravangla (Rs 60, two hours). Services to Tashiding (Rs 50, 1½ hours), Khecheopalri Lake (Rs 60, two hours) and Yuksom (Rs 70, 2½ hours) depart around 11am.

BUSES FROM GEYZING (GYASHALING)

Destination	Cost (Rs)	Duration	Departure
Gangtok	75	4½hR	8am
Jorethang	30	2hr	8am, 1pm
Pelling	10	30min	2pm
Siliguri	95	5hr	8am
Tashiding	30	3hr	2pm

Legship

When no other transport is available, especially to or from Tashiding, try connecting here. Should you get stranded, Hotel Trishna (☎ 259887; d with shared/private bathroom from Rs 200/300) is simple but has plenty of greenery and a rooftop terrace.

PELLING

Pelling's raison d'etre is its jaw-dropping dawn view of Khangchendzonga. It's not so much a town as a 2km string of tourist hotels, but don't be put off. The view is worth it. Despite hordes of visitors, locals remain surprisingly unjaded, and the best budget hotels are great for meeting fellow travellers. Don't miss strolling up to the helipad for even more panoramic views.

Orientation & Information

Pelling is nominally divided into Upper, Middle and Lower areas, though these effectively merge. A focal point of Upper Pelling is a small roundabout where the main road from Geyzing turns 180 degrees in front of Hotel Garuda. At the same point, minor roads branch south to Dentem and southwest to the helipad and tourist office (10am-4pm Mon-Sat).

Until Pelling's new telephone exchange is finished, the nearest internet access is in Tikjuk (left)

Tours

Hotel Garuda (opposite) and Simvo Tour & Travels (☎ 258549; per person/jeep Rs 175/1600) plus several other agencies offer one-day tours. A popular choice visits Yuksom via Khecheopalri Lake and three waterfalls. Several agents can arrange treks and permits for groups of four or more.

Sleeping

Unless otherwise stated all places listed have private bathrooms with hot water. Note that many hotels build new floors whenever they can afford to do so. That means that top storey rooms are usually the freshest. However, sometimes prices overreflect that fact.

Budget

The Garuda and Kabur are backpacker specialists. Others are just cheap local hotels.

Hotel Garuda (☎ 258319; dm Rs 60, d with shared bathroom Rs 150, d with private bathroom Rs 250-400) Pelling's backpacker favourite has clean, unsophisticated rooms, unbeatable Khangchendzonga views from the roof and a cosy Tibetan-style bar-restaurant ideal for meeting other travellers. Tours are good value and guests receive a handy schematic guide map.

Hotel Kabur (☎ 258504; r Rs 150-600) The Kabur's delightful staff fall over themselves to help. Great-value rooms have cute wicker lamps, towels and toilet paper, though a few have sticking locks and broken switches. Viewed from the charming café and open terrace, Khangchendzonga preens itself above the trees. A small rental car is available.

Hotel Parodzong (☎ 9733084348; d back/front Rs 250/300) No nonsense good-value rooms have clean squat toilets and water heaters. From those facing north you can see Khangchendzonga from your bed, albeit across a communal walkway terrace.

Hotel Haven (☎ 258238; d Rs 400-700) Choose view rooms 501 or 502, which are big, very clean and not cursed with carpets. Other rooms costing the same aren't nearly as good.

Midrange & Top End

The vast majority of Pelling's hotels are midrangers catering primarily to Bengali families. Rates typically drop 30% low season (before bargaining) and are highly negotiable whenever occupancy is down. With over 100 hotels and counting, the best place is often whichever has just been finished, probably blocking the view of the place behind it. Views tend to be best from Upper Pelling hotels, especially those near the old-helipad playing field but prices are accordingly higher there. Back-facing, viewless rooms should be cheaper.

Hotel The Touristo (☎ 258206; s Rs 350-700, d Rs 475-900) The best rooms have good Khangchendzonga views and pink marble floors in the neat, clean bathrooms. Cheaper options are viewless and rather small.

Hotel Simvo (☎ 258347; d Rs 600-1200) Down steps beside the Hotel Sonamchen and with similar fine views, the Simvo's upper rooms are its best but vastly more expensive than the acceptable cheapies on the bottom floors, which aren't as dingy as the corridors might suggest.

Hotel Rabdentse Residency (☎ 258612; rabdentse.pelling@yahoo.co.in; standard s/d/tr Rs 750/850/950) Hidden away down stairs behind the Touristo, this is an excellent midrange find with unusually obliging staff and a great attention to detail. A few rooms without views rooms go for just Rs 350. The idiosyncratic, bottom-floor restaurant cooks up really excellent Indian food, but doesn't serve beer.

Hotel Sonamchen (☎ 258346; d Rs 1000-2500) A big dragon design on the ceiling welcomes you in but sadly the rooms aren't anywhere near as atmospheric. Nonetheless, most – even on the cheapest bottom floor – have truly superb Khangchendzonga views, but the upstairs rooms are overpriced.

Newa Regency (☎ 258245; www.newaregency.com; s/d Rs 1450/1800) Pelling's most stylish choice is a triangular slice of modern architecture softened within by some delightful Sikkimese touches, notably in the charming 1st-floor sitting room. Some views are often partly obscured and oblique, but the service is impeccable.

Eating

Pelling's best dining is in the hotels. The Kabur and Rabdentse Residency serve particularly good food, while the Garuda's a great place for a beer and a travel chat. There aren't really any grocery shops, just a handful of kiosks.

Getting There & Away

At 7am SNT buses leave Pelling for both Gangtok (Rs 85, 5½ hours) via Ravangla and Siliguri (Rs 105, 4½ hours) via Jorethang (Rs 35, 2½ hours). Booking ahead is advised at the SNT counter (☎ 250707; Hotel Pelling; 🕑 6am-7pm) in Lower Pelling.

The frequency of shared jeeps increases as the season progresses but year-round rides depart early morning and around noon to Gangtok (Rs 150, five hours) and at 8am to Siliguri (Rs 150, 4½ hours). Simvo Tours & Travels (☎ 258549) also offers high-season sumos to Darjeeling (Rs 175, five hours, 8am). Father Tours (☎ 258219) has jeeps to Kalimpong (Rs 120, four hours, 6.15am). If nothing is available ex-Pelling, change in Geyzing. Share jeeps to Geyzing (Rs 20, 20 minutes) leave when full (around twice an hour) from near Hotel Garuda. They pass close to Pemayangtse, Rabdentse and Tikjuk police station. For Khecheopalri Lake (Rs 60) or Yuksom (Rs 60) jeeps originate from Geyzing and although booking ex-Pelling is sometimes possible, it's often easier simply to join a day-trip tour and throw away the return ticket.

AROUND PELLING

Literally translated as 'Perfect Sublime Lotus', 1705 Pemayangtse (donation appropriate) is one of Sikkim's oldest and most significant Nyingmapa gompas. Magnificently set on a hilltop overlooking the Rabdentse ruins, the atmospheric compound is ringed by gardens and traditional monks' cottages walled in unpainted stone. The contrastingly colourful prayer hall is beautifully proportioned, its doors and windows painted with Tibetan motifs. Its interior has been renovated many times, the most recent incarnation featuring murals, including multiple images of Guru Padmasambhava's three-headed form, overlaid into infinity as though for a 'Bohemian Rhapsody' video. Upstairs, fierce-looking statues depict all eight of Padmasambhava's incarnations (see p581). On the top floor, Zandog Palri is an astounding seven-tiered model of Padmasambhava's heavenly abode, hand made over five laborious years by a single dedicated lama.

In February/March impressive chaam dances celebrating Losar culminate with the unfurling of a giant embroidered scroll and the zapping of evil demons with a great fireball.

A 10-minute stroll from the gompa, Hotel Elgin Mount Pandim (☎ 250756; mtpandim@elginhotels.com; s/d Rs 3350/4280) has arguably the best mountainscape viewpoint in all of Sikkim. The old hotel had become somewhat run-down but a total, rebuild should totally transform it by the time you visit.

Pemayangtse is 25 minutes' walk from Upper Pelling. The signposted turnoff from the Pelling–Geyzing road is near an obvious stupa. Follow the side lane (left), then turn right for the monastery or continue and turn left through a gateway for the hotel.

Rabdentse

The royal capital of Sikkim from 1670 to 1814, now-ruined Rabdentse (admission free; 🕑 dawn-dusk) consists of chunky wall-stubs with a few inset inscription stones. These would look fairly unremarkable were they not situated on such an utterly fabulous viewpoint ridge. A small almost-finished museum building should eventually house local archaeological finds. The entrance to the site is around 3km from Upper Pelling, 1km closer to Geyzing than the Pemayangtse turn-off. From the site's ornate yellow gateway, the ruins are a further 15 minutes' hike around a pond then across a forested hill.

Sangachoeling Gompa

The second-oldest gompa in Sikkim, Sangachoeling has some beautiful murals and a magnificent ridgetop setting. It's a steep 3km walk from Pelling starting along the track that veers left where the asphalted road rises to Pelling's new helipad.

A jungle trek continues 10km beyond Sangachoeling to Rani Dhunga (Queen's Rock), supposedly the scene of an epic Ramayana battle between Rama and 10-headed demon king Ravana. Take a guide.

Darap

For a relaxing day trip from Pelling, walk down to gently pleasant Darap village using the web of village footpaths through small rural hamlets. Khangchendzonga should be visible to your right most of the way, at least if clouds are magnanimous. Hotel Garuda offers guided walks with a ride home afterwards.

THE MONASTERY LOOP

☎ 03595

The three-day 'Monastic Trek' from Pelling to Tashiding via Khecheopalri Lake remains possible; however, improvements to the Pelling–Yuksom road means dust clouds get stirred up by ever-more frequent tourist jeeps, diminishing the appeal of hiking the trek's on-road sections. Consider catching a ride to wonderful Yuksom (via Khecheopalri Lake using tour jeeps) and hiking from there to Tashiding (one day, no permit required). Even if you don't trek further than the Yak Restaurant, Yuksom is a delightful place to unwind.

Pelling to Yuksom

Tourist jeeps stop at several relatively lacklustre time-filler sites. Rimbi and Khangchendzonga Falls are forgettable but Phamrong Falls are impressive. Although it's several kilometres up a dead-end spur road, virtually all Yuksom-bound tours visit Khecheopalri, dropping you for about half an hour at a car park that's a five-minute stroll from the little lake.

Pronounced 'catch-a-perry', this holy lake is highly revered by Sikkimese Buddhists who believe that birds assiduously remove any leaves that fall onto its surface. During Khachoedpalri Mela held in March/April, butter lamps rather than leaves are floated out across the lake. The birds aren't fooled. Prayer wheels line the lake's jetty, which is backed by fluttering prayerflags and Tibetan inscriptions, but the setting, ringed with forested hills, isn't really dramatic. To sense its reputed serenity you could try staying overnight and visiting once the constant trail of tourists has petered out.

Khecheopalri Trekkers Hut (☎ 9733076995; dm/tw Rs 50/150) is an isolated pale-green house-hotel about 300m back down the access road from the car park. Rooms are modest but clean and share several bathrooms. You can get tongba and filling meals, and the owners are helpful with trekking information, sometimes offering bird-watching or culturally themed guided hikes. If sleeping over, you'll have time to trek up to Khecheopalri Gompa above the lake.

Around the car park is a Buddhist nunnery (behind a shrine-style gateway), a small shop, and the very basic Jigme Restaurant serving tea, momos and chow mein. There's no village.

Share jeeps to Geyzing (Rs 60, two hours) leave the lake at about 6am travelling via Pelling (23km).

The trail to Yuksom (9km) descends to the main road, emerging near the Khangchendzonga Falls. After a suspension bridge, follow the short-cut trail uphill to meet the Yuksom road, about 2km below Yuksom village. Ask at the Trekkers Hut for detailed directions.

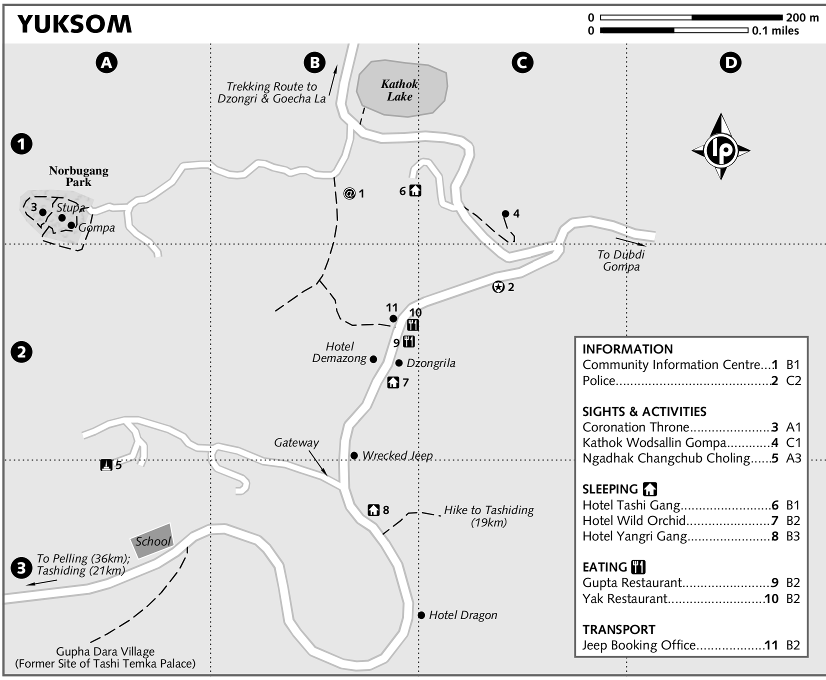
elev 1780m



Loveable Yuksom is historic and charming. It's the main trailhead for the Khangchendzonga Trek (p587), but, lacking direct views of the high mountains, has thus far been spared the rapacious development that's overwhelming Pelling. The Community Information Centre (per hr Rs 50; 🕒 10am-1pm & 3-5pm) offers internet connection in an unlikely hut near Kathok Lake.

SIGHTS

The word Yuksom means 'meeting place of the three lamas', referring to the trio of Tibetan holy men who crowned the first chogyal of Sikkim here in 1641. The site is now Norbugang Park, which contains a prayer house, chorten and the supposedly original Coronation Throne (Norbugang). Standing beneath a vast cryptomeria pine it looks something like an ancient Olympic medal podium made of whitewashed stone. Just in front is a spooky footprint fused into the stone. This was supposedly left by one of the crowning lamas: lift the little wooden guard-plank to see it.

Walking to Norbugang Park from Hotel Tashi Gang you'll pass murky Kathok Lake, from which anointing waters were taken for the original coronation.

When Yuksom was Sikkim's capital, a royal palace complex known as Tashi Tenka sat on a slight ridge to the south with superb almost 360-degree views. Today barely a stone remains but the views are still superb. To find the site take the small path marked by two crumbling little whitewashed stupas near the village school. The site is less than five minutes' walk away through tiny Gupha Dara, a sub-hamlet of around a dozen semi-traditional houses.

High above Yuksom, Dubdi Gompa is set in beautifully tended gardens behind three photogenic, coarsely hewn stupas. Established in 1701, it's touted as Sikkim's oldest monastery but the cubic prayer house looks vastly newer. There's no resident monk so if you want to look inside, locate the caretaker before you start the steep 45-minute climb from Yuksom's village clinic. The way rises through thickets of trumpet lilies and some lovely mature forest.

Yuksom has two photogenic new gompas. Kathok Wodsallin Gompa near Hotel Tashi Gang exudes a wonderful Chinatown kitsch and enshrines a big gilded Padmasambhava statue. Similarly colourful is Ngadhak Changchub Choling, accessed through an ornate gateway opposite Hotel Yangri Gang.

The trail to Dzongri and Goecha La heads uphill beyond the Hotel Tashi Gang, passing a police post where trekking permits are carefully checked.

SLEEPING & EATING

Many small hotels are dotted all along the meandering main street, especially towards the entrance of the village.

Hotel Wild Orchid (☎ 241212; tw/tr Rs 150/225) This neat, clean half-timbered house is slightly ragged but the most charming budget option. Bathrooms are shared.

Hotel Yangri Gang (☎ 241217; tw without/with bathroom Rs 150/200, deluxe s/d from Rs 300/400) Basement rooms are functional concrete cubes, but deluxe options are airy with wooden half-panelling and good hot showers.

Hotel Tashi Gang (☎ 241202; d Rs 1100, deluxe Rs 1300) Yuksom's most appealing option is tastefully designed to resemble a Sikkimese monastery. The décor of some rooms is a little too monastic, but deluxe versions have local fabrics, a thangka on the wall and most enjoy fine views.

Beers, chow mein and thukpa are cheaply available from a pair of atmospheric restaurants, Yak and Gupta, side by side at the bus/jeep stand. Both have an attractive thatched rotunda with one round table at which diners are effectively forced to get friendly. Eat early as everything closes for Yuksom's 8pm curfew.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Between 5.30am and 6.30am, several shared jeeps leave for Jorethang (Rs 80, four hours), via Tashiding (Rs 45, 1½ hours) from in front of Yak Restaurant. Given enough demand, jeeps for Gangtok (Rs 160, six hours) and for Geyzing via Pelling (Rs 60, approximately 2½ hours) leave at 6.30am.

Dzongri & Goecha La – The Khangchendzonga Trek

For guided groups with permits, Yuksom is the starting point of Sikkim's classic trek to Goecha La, a 4940m pass with quite fabulous views of Khangchendzonga.

Taking seven to 10 days, trek costs start at US$30 to US$50 per person per day (assuming a group of four), including food, guides, porters and yaks.

Trekking agencies will sort out the permits. Paperwork must be done in Gangtok, but given two or three days, agents in Pelling or Yuksom can organise things by sending a fixer to the capital for you.

Don't underestimate the rigours of the trek. Don't hike too high too quickly: altitude sickness usually strikes those who are fittest and fastest (see p1188). Starting at dawn makes sense as rain is common in the afternoons, spoiling views and making trail sections annoyingly muddy.

ROUTE NOTES

The route initially follows the Rathong Valley through unspoilt forests then ascends steeply to Bakhim (2740m) and the rustic village of Tsokha (3050m), where spending two nights helps with acclimatisation.

The next stage climbs to pleasant meadows around Dzongri (4025m). Consider another acclimatisation day here spent strolling up to Dablakang or Dzongri La (4550m, four-hour round trip) for fabulous views of Mt Pandim (6691m).

From Dzongri, the trail drops steeply to Kokchuran then follows the river to Thangsing (3840m). From huts here or at Samiti Lake (4200m), an early morning assault takes you to head-spinning Goecha La (4940m) for those incredible views of Khangchendzonga. Readers have recommended an alternative viewpoint reached by climbing an hour up from the left side of Samiti Lake.

The return is by essentially the same route but with short cuts that are sometimes a little overgrown. Alternatively at Dzongri you could cut south for about a week following the Singalila Ridge along the Nepal–Sikkim border to emerge at Uttarey, from where public transport runs to Jorethang.

Stage	Route	Duration (hr)
1	Yuksom to Tsokha, via Bakhim	6-7
2	Acclimatisation day at Tsokha,	2-3
3	Tsokha to Dzongri	4-5
4	Acclimatisation day at Dzongri, or continue to Kokchuran	1
5	Dzongri (or Kokchuran) to Samiti Lake, via Thangsing	7 (or 6)
6	Samiti Lake to Goecha La, then down to Thangsing	8-9
7	Thangsing to Tsokha	6-7
8	Tsokha to Yuksom	5-6

SLEEPING

There are trekkers' huts at Bakhim, Tsokha, Dzongri, Kokchuran, Thangsing and Samiti Lake (very run-down). Most have neither furniture nor mattresses, you just cuddle up with fellow trekkers on the floor. Bring a mat and good sleeping bag. Huts sometimes get booked-out during high trekking season, so some camping might be involved.

EATING

You (or your porter) will need to carry supplies, but limited food (and tongba) is available at Dzongri.

Yuksom to Tashiding trek

For this long but highly rewarding one-day trek, starting in Yuksom is easier than coming the other way. No trekking permits are required.

Start down the pathway between hotels Yangri Gang and Penathang. The most attractive but longest route leads around behind the Phamrong Falls (heard but not seen) then rises to Tsong, where Susan Chetri (☎ 9832352756; su_zee2000@yahoo.co.in) plans a homestay at her family's typical half-timbered house. From the terrace there are terrific views. Look for the blue-framed home towards the eastern end of the village: it's on the right side of the main trail when heading for Tashiding.

Beyond Tsong the trail divides. The upper route leads up fairly steeply to lonely Hongri Gompa, a small, unusually unpainted ancient monastery building with a superlative ridge-top location. Local folklore claims the gompa was moved here from a higher location where monks kept being ravaged by yeti.

Till this point the route is relatively easy to follow, with recently laid stone grips. But descending from Hongri there are slippery patches with lurking leeches. At Nessa hamlet, finding the way can be mildly confusing. A few minutes beyond in attractive Pokhari Dara (where a tourist lodge is mooted beside the sweet little pond), the trail divides again beside the village shop. Descending takes you the more direct way to Tashiding. Continuing high along the ridge brings you to Sinon Gompa very high above Tashiding. The final approach to that monastery has some fascinating, ancient mani walls but the descent to Tashiding is long and steep by the short-cut paths or almost 10km of long switchbacks by road.

Little Tashiding is just a single, sloping spur-street forking north off the Yuksom–Legship road, but its south-facing views are wide and impressive. Walking 400m south from the junction towards Legship takes you down past a series of atmospheric mani walls and brightly photogenic Tibetan inscriptions to a colourful gateway at the Km 14 post. From here an obvious if sometimes slippery moss-stone footpath leads somewhat steeply up to the ancient Tashiding Gompa in around 40 minutes. Founded in 1641 by one of the three Yuksom lamas (see p585), the monastery's five colourful religious buildings are strung out between more functional monks' quarters. Notice the giant-sized prayer wheel with Tibetan script picked out in gilt. Beautifully proportioned, the four-storey main prayer hall has a delicate filigree top knot and looks great from a distance. On closer inspection most of the exterior décor is rather coarse, but wonderfully wide views from here across a semi–wild flower garden encompass the whole valley towards Ravangla.

Beyond the last monastic building, a curious compound contains over a dozen white chortens, including the Thong-Wa-Rang-Dol, said to wash away the sins of anyone who gazes upon it. Smaller but more visually exciting is the golden Kench Chorgi Lorde stupa.

In January or February, the monastery celebrates the Bumchu festival during which lamas gingerly open a sacred pot. Then, judging from the level of holy water within, they make all-important predictions about the coming year.

Tashiding village's three basic, friendly hotels all have shared bathrooms. Hotel Blue Bird (☎ 243563; dm/s/d Rs 100) serves good-value food and, like the slightly neater Mt Siniolchu Guest House (☎ 243211, 9733092480; d/tr Rs 100/150) further up, has very helpful owners. New Tashiding Lodge (☎ 243249; Legship Rd; tr Rs 200), 300m south of the market, has fine views from Rooms 3, 4 and 5 and even better ones from the shared bathroom.

Share jeeps to Geyzing (Rs 50, 1½ hours) or Jorethang (Rs 60, two hours) via Legship (Rs 25, one hour) pass the main junction, mostly between 6.30am and 8am. A few jeeps to Yuksom pass through during early afternoon.

NORTH SIKKIM

The biggest attractions in North Sikkim are the idyllic Yumthang and Tsopta Valleys. Reaching them and anywhere north of Singhik currently requires a special permit but that's easy to obtain (see p571) unless you're travelling alone. It's perfectly possible to visit Phodong and Mangan/Singhik independently using public jeeps. However, they can be conveniently seen during brief stops on any Yumthang tour and at no extra cost.

GANGTOK TO SINGHIK

The narrow but mostly well paved 31ANHWay clings to steep wooded slopes high above the Teesta River, occasionally descending long coils of hairpins to a bridge, photogenically draped in prayer flags, only to coil right back up again on the other side. If driving, consider brief stops at Tashi Viewpoint (p574) and the Seven Sisters Waterfall at Km 30. The latter's a multi-stage cascade cutting a chasm above a roadside cardamon grove.

A little strip of roadside restaurants at Phodong make a popular lunch stop. Simple rooms are available, too, notably the Hotel Dzhambala (☎ 9434136873; d Rs 150-250), where English is spoken. Around 1km southeast near the Km 39 post, a 15-minute walk along a very degraded former road leads to the Phodong Gompa (established in 1740). The potentially beautiful two-storey prayer hall is somewhat marred by metal gratings but contains extensive murals and a large statue of the 9th Karmapa.

Walk on another 30 minutes to the much more atmospheric and peaceful Labrang Gompa (established in 1884). Its prayerhall murals repeat the same Padmasambhava pose 1022 times. Upstairs a fearsome deity sports a necklace of severed heads. Chaam dances take place in early December.

Phodong to Singhik

North Sikkim's district headquarters, Mangan (Km 67 post) proudly declares itself to be the 'Large Cardamon Capital of the World'. Some 1.5km beyond, weather-blackened stupas on a sharp bend mark a small footpath; a three-minute descent leads to a panoramic viewpoint.

Singhik has two decent accommodation choices both with more great views. Set in a roadside flower garden, Friendship Guest House (☎ 234278; s/d Rs 200/400) has rooms with shared bathrooms within the home of an adorable Sikkimese family (who speak no English).

Singhik Tourist Lodge (☎ 234287; Km 71; d Rs 550) is a clean if slightly musty hotel where rooms have heaters and private bathrooms with geysers. There's a restaurant, too, but it's usually only open when groups are prebooked (through the tourist office in Gangtok).

Singhik is a Rs 50 taxi ride from Mangan, which is served by regular jeeps from Gangtok (Rs 90, three hours).

BEYOND SINGHIK

With relevant permits (and a tour jeep for foreigners) you can continue north of Singhik. Accommodation is available in Lachung and Lachen, with two more basic options in Thanggu. We have listed a few favourites but normally your tour agencies will preselect for you. Some family places stay open on the off chance of passing Indian tourists, but many better lodges close up when there's no prebooked group due.

Cheaper hotels tend to have a mixed bag of rooms whose prices are the same whether or not the room has geyser, shower, heating, window or balcony. Some do, some don't. It's pot luck, so try to see a few different rooms even if you can't choose your hotel.

Lachen and Lachung are both Lepcha villages with a unique form of local democracy in which the pipon (headman) is elected every year.

Upper Teesta Valley

LACHEN

Till recently Lachen was an untouched, traditional Lepcha village. That's changing fast with pretty roadside houses being progressively replaced by concrete house-hotels. Nonetheless, alleyways remain sprinkled with old wooden homes on sturdy stone bases and Tibetan-style constructions with colourful, faceted window frames. Logs are stacked everywhere for winter fuel.

Around 15 minutes' walk above town, Lachen Gompa is an attractive two-storey monastery with engrossing, superbly coloured murals.

Lachen is the trailhead for expedition treks to Green Lake along the Yeti-infested Zemu Glacier towards Khangchendzonga's northeast face. These require long advance planning and very expensive permits.

NORTH SIKKIM TOUR TIPS

- A group size of four or five people strikes the ideal to balance cost spreading and space in the jeep.
- To find jeep-share partners, try hanging out in the café at New Modern Central Lodge (Gangtok) between 6pm and 6.30pm a few days before you plan to travel. There's no fixed system, just ask other travellers.
- Less than four days is too rushed to comfortably visit both Yumthang/Lachung and Lachen. Three-night/four-day tours start at Rs 2500 per person for groups of five depending on accommodation standards.
- Leave Gangtok early on the first day: it's a shame to arrive in the dark.
- Your (obligatory) 'guide' is actually more of a translator. Don't assume he'll stop at all potential points of interest without prodding.
- Bring a torch for inevitable power cuts.
- Don't miss tasting tongba (tiny extra cost).

If you can choose your accommodation, a great budget option is super-friendly Bayul Lodge (tw Rs 250), hose upper façade is colourfully carved with Tibetan motifs. It's above the tiny video-cinema, beside the post office.

Hotel Sonam Palgey (www.sonampalgey.com; d Rs 3000) is considered the most comfortable in town.

THANGGU & TSOPTA

Beyond a sprawling army camp 32km north of Lachen, Thanggu has an appealing end-of-the-world feel. Misleadingly named, Thanggu Resort (tw Rs 300; May-Nov) is an outwardly ordinary family house incorporating a very traditionally styled kitchen, dining area and tongba-drinking den (tongba Rs 10). Rooms are simple but two have attached squat toilet and views of the river.

A boulder-strewn moorland stream leads on 2km to tiny Tsopta. Indian visitors can continue 30km north to Gurudongmar Lake, but for foreigners the only option (if the guide allows) is veering left up the lovely Tsopta Valley. Just above the tree line, the scenery feels rather like Glencoe (Scotland) but the valley's western horizon has the added drama of a glacier-toothed mountain wall. Zo-yaks and donkey convoys wander through on missions to supply some of the Indian military's more far-flung outposts way beyond.

Lachung

Soaring rock-pinnacled valley walls embroidered with long ribbons of waterfall surround amorphous little Lachung. To appreciate the full drama of its setting, take the metal cantilever bridge across the wild Yumthang River to the Sanchok side then climb 1.5km along the Katao road for great views from the Lachung Gompa (established 1880). The gompa's refined murals include one section of original paintings (inner left wall as you enter) and its twin giant prayer wheels chime periodically.

Mt Katao, nearly 30km beyond, is popular with Bengali tourists who drive up to the top to play in the snow. However, it remains off limits to foreign tourists.

SLEEPING

Hotels are dotted about a very wide area with the most convenient concentration around Faka Bazaar where the Lachung village road turns off the main Yumthang road. Rates start at Rs 250 for the most basic, but prices double in high season. Many outwardly modern places maintain traditional Tibetan-style wood-fire stoves and can churn salt-butter tea for you in a traditional sudah plunger device.

Sila Inn Lodge (☎ 214808; s Rs 250 d Rs 350-400) Open year-round, the family-run Sila has a typically mixed bag of rooms above a friendly hostelry-restaurant, best on the top floor.

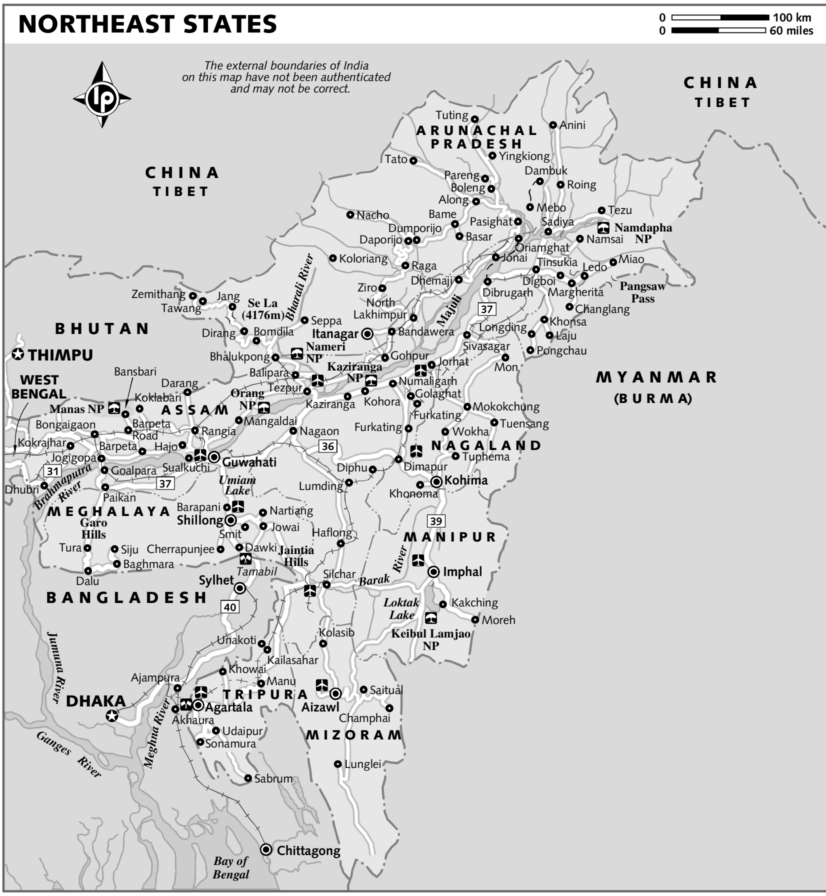
Nearby hotels Le Coxy (www.nivalink.com/lecoxyresort) and Sonam Palgey (www.sonampalgey.com) are more upmarket.

Modern Residency (Taagsing Retreat; ☎ 214888; Singring Village; d Rs 2500) In a side lane around 3km south of Lachung, this brilliantly colourful flight of fancy rises like a fairytale Tibetan monastery. Staying here is one great advantage of taking a tour with Modern Treks & Tours (p574). Rooms have local design features and are comfortable, though walk-in prices are very steep. Even if you don't stay, the building is well worth visiting. One upper floor has a veritable minimuseum and the top-floor roof, above the prayer room, offers magnificent views across the valley, marred only by the disgracefully tasteless pink concrete of the Marco Polo Hotel, 500m directly below.

Yumthang

The main point of coming to Lachung is continuing 23km further north to admire the majestic Yumthang Valley. Guides will doubtless enthuse about the highly overrated 'holy' hot springs, a grimy, unlit 2 sq metre pool in an unlit, rubbish-ringed hut. However, the real drama starts about 1km north of there. After driving that 1km, walk about five minutes gently downhill to the riverbank. Now, weather permitting, you should have 360-degree views of an utterly magnificent Alpine scene: glaciers, spiky peaks and a veritable candelabra of jagged mountains rising towards Tibet.

Northeast States



India's 1947 partition left the northeastern states dangling like a crooked cartographic handle, way out on the edge of the national map and consciousness. Yet the great, flat Brahmaputra valley was traditionally a Vedic heartland and backdrop to several Krishna tales. And Assam's beautiful tea plantations remain India's most productive. In contrast, most of the mountainous surrounding states are home to a fascinatingly fragmented jigsaw of 'tribal' peoples. Cultures and facial features there have more in common with Burma and Tibet than with mainstream India. Arunachal Pradesh offers an especially phenomenal patchwork of hill tribes amid seemingly endless mountain ranges. These are mostly forested but crest in a series of gorgeous Himalayan ridges dotted with colourful Tibetan-Buddhist monasteries, including India's largest at wonderful Tawang.

In recent decades many ethno-linguistic groups have jostled – often violently – to assert themselves in the face of immigration, governmental neglect and heavy-handed defence policy. Along with the infuriating permits (not required for Assam, Meghalaya or Tripura), and the lack of any truly iconic 'must-see' attraction, it's the somewhat exaggerated safety worries that deter most travellers from visiting the northeast. That means you'll meet very few foreigners in the region's magnificent national parks. And you'll get vast tracts of fabulous rice, tea and mountain scenery all pretty much to yourself. Quite a few insurgency campaigns do rumble on, but generally the people here are among the friendliest in the whole subcontinent. Although fabled as head-hunting warriors, most citizens of tribal states, like Mizoram and Nagaland, seem more interested these days in perfecting their English and penning rap songs about the love of Jesus.

HIGHLIGHTS

- Scramble through Tolkienesque root bridges in the magnificent canyon land below Cherrapunjee (p611)
- Feast on scrumptious Assamese food at Wild Grass Resort before creeping up on a rhino in Kaziranga National Park (p602)
- Explore the awesome Tawang Valley (p621), Arunachal's 'little Tibet'
- Visit picture-perfect thatched Adi villages around Along (p620) and meet the last of the bizarrely adorned Apatani women at Ziro (p619)
- Unwind in calm semi-luxury at a colonial mansion on one of Assam's delightful tea plantations around Jorhat (p604) or Dibrugarh (p606)

PERMITS

Permits are essential for Nagaland, Arunachal Pradesh, Mizoram and Manipur. Entry without one is a serious matter. Indian citizens need an inner line permit, issued with little fuss at each relevant state's office in Guwahati (addresses, p597), Kolkata (p491) or elsewhere. The rest of this section applies to foreigners who'll require a Restricted Area Permit (RAP).

Minimum Group Size

Permit applications generally need a four-person minimum group. Exceptions include the following:

- Nagaland for a legally married couple with marriage certificate
- Arunachal Pradesh for smaller groups if you pay the full four-person fee (US$200), through travel agencies only Once you arrive, authorities will be unimpressed if some people listed on your permit are 'missing', especially in Nagaland where the group must also stick together for crossing district boundaries. However, in Mizoram things seem much more flexible, so should the other three people on your four-person Mizoram permit become inexplicably incapacitated, you'll probably be allowed to continue alone.

Validity & Registration

Permits are normally valid for 10 days from an exact, specified starting date. You might be able to extend your permit, but only in state capitals at the Secretariat, Home Department. In Arunachal, extending permits will cost another US$200 for up to four people. Be aware that permits allow you to visit specified districts only; you'll need to plan carefully, as changing routes might be problematic.

Tourist season is October to April. However, most national parks only open from November and you'll see many more of the big animals if you wait till February.

Be sure to make multiple photocopies of your permit to show at checkpoints and police registration. Registration is compulsory both on arrival and on each night that you stay in a new location. If travelling on a tour, your guide will do this for you. Travelling without a guide (or 'guardian') can confuse authorities in Nagaland and Arunachal and might result in you being refused entry, though on-the-ground realities vary widely between individual checkposts and officers.

Where to Apply

Applications through the Ministry of Home Affairs (Map pp132–3) in Delhi can take months and end in frustration.

If it works, the best option will be the new system operated at Kolkata's Foreigners' Regional Registration Office (FRRO; see p491).

Otherwise the most reliable way to get permits is by booking a tailor-made tour through a reputable agency:

Agency	Based in	Best for
Himalayan	Bomdila	all, notably Arunachal
Jungle Travels	Guwahati	all
Omega	Aizawl	Mizoram
Purvi Discovery	Dibrugarh	Arunachal, Nagaland
Rhino	Guwahati	all
Tribal Discovery	Kohima	Nagaland

Start the application process at least six weeks ahead.

Costs

Costs per person:

State	Through FRRO Kolkata	Through agency
Arunachal Pradesh	free (not Tawang)	US$50 + commission
Manipur	free	Rs 1500 + commission
Mizoram	not possible	commission (Rs 400)
Nagaland	free but limited	commission only

Climate

Until October you'll generally need decent air-con (AC) anywhere that is not set well up a mountain. But by December even sweaty Guwahati can feel chilly at night. Warm clothes will be useful at any time in Tawang where temperatures can dip to -15°C in January.

ASSAM

Fascinating Assam (Asom, Axom) straddles the fertile Brahmaputra valley, making it the most accessible core of India's northeast. The archetypal Assamese landscape offers mesmerising autumnal vistas over seemingly endless gold-green rice fields patched with palm and bamboo groves and distantly hemmed with hazy blue mountain horizons. In between are equally endless, equally gorgeous manicured tea estates. Unlike Sri Lanka's or Darjeeling's, Assamese tea estates are virtually flat and take their particular scenic splendour from the dappled shade of interplanted acacia trees that shield sensitive tea leaves from the blazing sun.

Assamese people might look 'Indian', but Assamese culture is proudly distinct: the neo-Vaishnavite faith is virtually a 'national' religion (see the boxed text, p605) and the gamosa (a red-and-white embroidered scarf worn for prayer by most Assamese men) is a subtle mark of 'national' costume. Despite similari-

Brahmaputra Beach Festival (Jan; Guwahati, opposite) Elephant races and adventure sports.
Kaziranga Elephant Festival (late Jan; Kaziranga, p602) New tourist tempter.
Torgya (Jan) and Losar (Feb/Mar) Tibetan-Buddhist chaam (masked dances) held most spectacularly at Tawang Gompa (p621).
Chapchar Kut (Mar; Mizoram statewide; http://mizotourism.nic.in/festival.htm) Annual forest clearance dances.
Ashokastami Mela (Mar/Apr; Unakoti, p616) Shivaite pilgrims bathe amid Tripura's greatest ancient sculptures.
Rongali Bihu (late Apr; Assam statewide) Assamese new year.
Ambubachi Mela (Jun; Kamakhya Mandir, Guwahati p597) Tantric rituals and even more animal sacrifices than usual.
Behdienkhlam (Jul; Jowai, Meghalaya, p611) Jaintia cultural festival.
Kang (Rath Yatra; Jul; Manipur & Assam, statewide) Chariot fest for Krishna's birthday.
Durga Puja (Oct; all Hindu areas) The region's biggest festival (see p487).
Nongkrem Dance (Oct; Smit, p610) Five-day Khasi royal festival.
Buddha Mahotsava (variable; http://tawang.nic.in/tawangbm/main.html; Tawang, p622) Government-sponsored Buddhist cultural festival.
Diwali (Oct/Nov; all Hindu areas) Lamps lit on banana-stem posts outside homes, Kali images dunked in rivers, general good humour.
Wangala (Oct/Nov; Asanang, p612) Four-day Garo harvest festival.
Ras Mahotsav Festival (third week of Nov; Majuli Island, p604) Major Vaishnavite festival with plenty of Krishna-epic recitations and dance-theatre.
Pawl Kut (Nov/Dec; Mizoram statewide) Mizoram's harvest festival.
Hornbill Festival (Dec; Kohima, p617) Nagaland's biggest event with wildly costumed dance performances by all main Naga tribes.

TRAVELLING SAFELY IN THE NORTHEAST STATES

A wide variety of insurgent groups are active in the northeast. Some want independence from India, others want linguistic autonomy, yet more are effectively fighting clan or turf wars. Although many Western governments currently advise against travel in Manipur, Tripura, Nagaland and Assam (an announcement that might affect your travel insurance), it's worth noting that not all of these states are equally affected. Generally Manipur really is too risky to contemplate. However, the most accessible tourist areas of Tripura and Nagaland are usually OK, and within the huge state of Assam pockets of rebel activity are mostly limited to the Cachar Hills and remote patches of the far east. The problem is that trouble can flare up suddenly and unpredictably. One-off bombings have hit the normally safe cities of Guwahati and Dimapur just as they have struck London and Madrid, so the level of danger to travellers is hard to quantify. A flare-up of attacks by ULFA (an Assamese independence outfit) in late 2006 made headlines, but most locals see these as a last gasp from a discredited organisation rather than a popular uprising. Still it's wise to keep abreast of latest news with the Assam Tribune (www.assamtribune.com). Mizoram, Meghalaya and the vast majority of Arunachal Pradesh are considered safe. Some areas, including Manas National Park, have a relatively high malaria risk.

ties between Bengali and Assamese alphabets, Assam is vehemently NOT Bengal. Indeed the influx of Bengali migrants to the state remains one of Assam's hottest political issues. The Assamese have long bemoaned a perceived neglect and imperial attitude from Delhi for failing to stem that tide of immigration.

However, by no means all of Assam is ethnically Assamese. Before the Ahom invasions between the 13th and 15th centuries, much of today's Assam was ruled from Dimapur (ironically now appended to Nagaland) by a Kachari-Dimasa dynasty. The Chutiaya (Deori-Bodo) kingdom was an important force further west. While this might seem of minor historical interest, the Dimasa and Bodo peoples didn't just disappear. During the 20th century, increasing ethnic consciousness led their descendents to resent the Assamese in much the same way as the Assamese have resented Bengal and greater India. The result was a major Bodo insurgency that was only settled in 2004–05 with the creation of a partially self-governing 'Bodoland' in northwestern Assam. In the Cachar Hills around Haflong, the Dimasas continue a violent campaign for autonomy.

Don't let that put you off. Assam is a delightful, hospitable and deeply civilised place that you can easily grow to love. Its national parks protect a remarkable range of wildlife. And don't miss the delicious Assamese food: fruity, mild and finely pH-balanced using a unique banana-alkaline extract called khar.

Assam's beautiful rice fields look their emerald best in October. However, the national parks rarely open before November and, even then, the state's iconic rhinoceroses will remain hard to spot amid elephant-height grasses. These grasses have burnt off by February, but by that stage the plains will have turned a relatively drab brown.

TOURS

Visiting the permit states by tour smoothes the bureaucracy but travel is still comparatively slow and rugged. Agencies simply supply a sumo jeep, translator and driver-cum-mechanic, plus a tent for emergencies. Accommodation is often relatively basic, meals are haphazard and delays commonplace. It's all part of the experience and still vastly more comfortable than travelling by rare, packed-full, over-fast local transport.

city was a vibrant cultural centre well before the Ahoms arrived, and later the theatre of intense Ahom-Mughal fighting, changing hands eight times in the 50 years before 1681. Most of the old city was wiped out by a huge 1897 earthquake followed by a series of devastating floods.

Capital of Assam since 1972, the Asom State Government is ensconced in a Disneyesque new secretariat complex 6km south of the train station in the Dispur district.

Orientation

Hectic commercial bustle animates the central Fancy- and Pan-Bazaar areas, and stretches 10km southeast down GS road from Paltan Bazaar (the bus station area).

Sights

KAMAKHYA MANDIR

When Sati's disintegrated body parts rained toes on Kolkata (see p486), her yoni (female genitalia) fell on Kamakhya Hill. This makes Kamakhya Mandir an important centre for sensual tantric worship of female spiritual power (Shakti). Goats are ritually beheaded in a gory pavilion and the hot, dark inner sanctum is sticky with sacrificial blood. The huge June/July Ambubachi Mela festival celebrates the end of the mother goddess' menstrual cycle with even more blood. Nine nearby mandirs represent incarnations of Shakti.

Kamakhya is 7km west of central Guwahati, 3km off the airport road by a spiralling side road. Occasional buses from Guwahati's Kachari bus stand run all the way up (Rs 5, 20 minutes). Continue 1km further for sweeping Brahmaputra viewpoints.

RIVERSIDE GUWAHATI

Umananda Mandir complex sits on a pretty forested river island, accessed by 36-seater cruise boats (Rs 10 return; 9.30am-4pm). They depart when full (about half-hourly) from Kachari Ghat, which itself offers attractive afternoon river views.

Sukreswar Devalaya comprises three mostly modern-looking temples, including one where holy water dribbles continuously over a Shiva lingam from a suspended bell-metal amphora. Almost adjacent, little Sukreswar Ghat Park (MG Rd; adult/child/camera Rs 5/2/5; 9am-9pm) contains a playful, multi-arched ornamental gateway built by the British.

FANCY BAZAAR

Guwahati's commercial centre, Fancy Bazaar, offers a fascinating discordant melange of images with a silver-spired church, a Sikh temple dome, and minarets rising like lighthouses above the stacked signboards and shop fronts. At night Guwahati's homeless curl up here while the nouveau riche nibble cones (Rs 47) of Baskin Robbins ice cream.

ASSAM STATE MUSEUM

The excellent Assam State Museum (☎ 2540651; GNB Rd; adult/camera/video Rs 5/10/250; ⏲ 10am-4.15pm Tue-Sun) displays tribal artefacts, ancient Assamese coins, fabrics and fabulous sculptures that hint at Guwahati's 14th-century grandeur. You get to walk through reconstructed tribal homes, while upstairs there's an engrossing reference library.

OLD GUWAHATI

The distinctive beehive dome of the Courthouse (MG Rd) rises above mildly attractive Dighulipukhuri Park (HB Rd; admission Rs 2, boats per adult/child Rs 15/10; ⏲ 9.30am-8pm) tank. The nearby Guwahati Planetarium (☎ 2548962; MG Rd; star shows Rs 15; ⏲ noon & 4pm) looks somewhere between a mosque and a grounded UFO. The half-hidden Urra Tara Temple (Lamb Lane) is Guwahati's second holiest, backed by the gently attractive Jorpulkuri ponds.

OTHER SIGHTS

Around the city there are several more hill-top temples, while some 30km northwest, the pleasant little town of Hajo attracts Hindu and Buddhist pilgrims to its five ancient temples topping assorted hillocks. Pious Muslims need to walk (or drive) 4km further up a spiral road to reach the holy if visually underwhelming hill-top Poa Mecca mosque.

Tours

Traveller's Point (☎ 2604018; www.assamtourism.org; Tourist Lodge, Station Rd), in Assam Tourism's commercial booth, runs day excursions to the gently atmospheric temple town of Hajo via the dreary silk-weaving centre Sualkuchi (adult/child Rs 450/375, minimum five people). It also offers two-day all-inclusive packages to Kaziranga National Park (Indian/foreigner from Rs 1280/2280).

Jungle Travels India (☎ 2660890; www.jungletravelsindia.com; 1st fl, Mandovi Apt, GNB Rd) is a highly experienced agency in an office beneath the 'Not Just Dosaz' sign. It covers the entire northeast with wide-ranging tailor-made tour options, and fixed-date departures for Nagaland and Arunachal Pradesh proposed. It is an agent for Brahmaputra river cruises (www.assambengalnavigation.com) and Bansbari Lodge (p601).

Rhino Travels (☎ 2540666; MN Rd) is a helpful, professional agency with a wide range of tour possibilities and its own river lodge (p604). It's an agent for Manas multiday elephant safaris (p600).

Sleeping

BUDGET

Sundarban Guest House (☎ 2730722; ME Rd, first side lane; s Rs 150-600, d Rs 300-800; ❄) At this well-kept, friendly if unfinished hotel, the bargain top-floor options (singles/doubles Rs 150/300 with shared bathroom) are possibly the cleanest rock-bottom rooms in town. Many nastier cheap hotels line the surrounding lanes.

Tourist Lodge (☎ 2544475; Station Rd; s/d Rs 275/330, d with AC Rs 633; ❄) Convenient for the train station, the fresh, clean rooms have fan, geyser and balcony. It's a genuine bargain, though be prepared for some train noise and up to five-storeys of stairs.

Other cheap possibilities:

Hotel Suradevi (☎ 2545050; MN Rd; dm Rs 85, s/d with shared bathroom Rs 100/170, with private bathroom Rs 150/230) Well-organised warren of Spartan rooms.

Hotel Tibet (☎ 2639600; AT Rd; s/d/t from Rs 150/250/350) Perfectly survivable bed-factory, very handy for the bus station.

MIDRANGE & TOP END

All the hotels listed here offer cable TV and private bathrooms with hot water. Many add a 25% tax and service charge.

Hotel Siroy Lily (☎ 2608492; Solapara Rd; s/d Rs 550/750, with AC Rs 850/1050; ❄) Professionally run, well-maintained hotel with a lift, a pleasantly air-conditioned foyer and complimentary newspapers delivered to your door. Try the Manipuri food in its modest restaurant.

Hotel Nova (☎ 2523464; SS Rd; s/d from Rs 680/890, with AC Rs 890/1090 plus 25%; ❄) In the buzzing Fancy Bazaar area, this 15-room hotel is immaculately well kept and has a striking 1960s feel. Beneath the ceiling fans of the recommended restaurant (mains Rs 50 to 120) one could imagine stoned Vietnam War journalists scribbling reports between slices of cold turkey.

Hotel Rajmahal (☎ 2549141; www.rajmahalhotel.com; AT Rd; s/d with fan from Rs 1200/1800, with AC from Rs 1900/2500 plus 25%; ❄ 🏊) If you pick this 10-storey semi-international tower-hotel, pay the extra Rs 100 and upgrade to the attractively remodelled super deluxe rooms (singles/doubles Rs 2000/2600). The rooftop swimming pool would be a great attraction if it was cleaned more regularly.

Pragati Manor (☎ 2341261; pragatimanor@lycos.com; GS Rd; s/d from Rs 1800/2100; ❄) Were it nearer the centre, Pragati Manor would be Guwahati's undisputed upmarket pick. A costumed doorman ushers you into this 47-room oasis where modern architecture is softened with Indian art. Back rooms look out over palm-swathed hillocks and there's a glass-pod elevator.

Eating

RESTAURANTS

As well as the restaurants reviewed here there are many floating boat-restaurants moored between Kachari and Sukreswar Ghats.

Silk Route (☎ 2608024; GNB Rd; mains Rs 25-80; ❄) Reasonably priced momos (dumplings), Chinese and Thai food are served in a cosy, two-storey place, with cheaper Indian food available in friendly, simpler places next door.

JB's (MG Rd; mains Rs 30-95; ❄) All-in-one complex with bakery, ice-cream parlour, somewhat Mexican-styled snack bar and (upstairs via the sweet counter) a restaurant serving world-class Indian vegetarian food.

Gopal (☎ 2510364; Kamrup Chamber Rd; mains Rs 45-70; ❄) Just around the corner from JB's, Gopal is another decent veggie option whose stylish décor has an appealing, low-key modern vibe.

Delicacy (☎ 2233402; cnr GS & RGB Rds, Ganeshguri; dishes Rs 20-100; ⏲ 9am-4pm & 8-11pm; ❄) Tucked beneath a repulsive overpass junction, the odd location is far from central but worth the trek for Guwahati's very best selection of northeastern cuisine styles. There are almost a dozen types of rice alone. Take buses 1, 2, 3 or 21 from near the museum.

Sagar Ratna (☎ 9954097416; MD Shah Rd; mains from Rs 45, coffee Rs 26; ⏲ 8am-11pm; ❄) This sparkling, modern chain restaurant specialises in vegetarian Indian food with wickedly delicious coconut dosas. Big windows and good AC.

Tandoori (☎ 2516021-5; Dynasty Hotel, SS Rd; mains Rs 100-300; ⏲ noon-3pm & 7-11pm) Majestic North-Indian cuisine served at stylish low tables by waiters in Mughal uniforms accompanied by gentle live tabla music.

QUICK EATS

MC Rd offers several tastefully appointed fast-food joints. Choose Pizzas (☎ 2663329; pizzas Rs 40-285) for tasty if bready pizzas, cartoon-walled Beatrix (Rs 30-70) for burgers and Cakes'n'Bakes (mains Rs 15-25) for delicious fresh pastries (from Rs 6).

Beauty Valley (Dighulipukhuri Park) and Anamika (Sukreswar Ghat Park) offer inexpensive alfresco snack dinners.

Drinking

Café Coffee Day (Taybullah Rd; espresso Rs 23; ⏲ 10am-11pm; ❄) Guwahati's most central answer to Starbucks pumps out contemporary music and attracts the city's gilded youth with perfect (if very slow) macchiatos.

Trafik (☎ 2661275; GNB Rd; beers Rs 60; ⏲ 10am-10pm) This hip, under-lit bar rolls out a vast screen to show key cricket matches.

Shopping

Northeast Network (☎ 2603833; www.northeastnetwork.org; JN Borooah Lane; ⏲ 9.30am-5.30pm Mon-Fri) This nonprofit NGO seeds self-help projects in rural villages including several handloom weaving cooperatives. Buying beautiful (and good-value) cottons here supports this fine work and allows you to peep inside one of old Guwahati's few remaining colonial-era mansions.

Artfed (☎ 2548987; GNB Rd; ⏲ 10am-8pm) Well stocked with bargain bamboo crafts, wickerwork and many a carved rhino. Several nearby shops specialise in Assam's famous golden-toned silks.

Getting There & Away

AIR

Guwahati's pleasantly orderly Lok-Priya Gopinath Bordoloi International Airport is 'international' thanks to Indian Airlines' Wednesday flight to Bangkok. For details of some of the flights from Guwahati, see the table, p600.

There's considerable competition between domestic carriers:

Air Deccan (DN; ☎ 1-800 4257008; www.airdeccan.net)
Indian Airlines (IC; ☎ 2264425, Ganeshguri)
IndiGo (6E; ☎ 9910383838; http://book.goindigo.in)
Jet Airways (9W; ☎ 2668255; GNB Rd)
Kingfisher (IT; ☎ 1-800 1800101; www.flykingfisher.com)
Sahara Airlines (S2; ☎ 2548676; GS Rd)
spiceJet (SG; ☎ 1-800 1803333; http://book.spiceJet.com)

Helicopter

Pawan Hans Helicopters (☎ 2416720) shuttles to Shillong (Rs 725, 30 minutes, twice daily), Tura (Garo Hills, thrice weekly), Naharlagun near Itanagar (Rs 3000, 1¼ hours, six weekly) and Lumla (Rs 3000, twice weekly) for Tawang. Phone your booking then pay at the airport if the service actually decides to fly.

Helicopter travel in India has a poor safety record (see p1170).

For Shillong shared taxis/sumos (Rs 110/150) leave from outside Hotel Tibet. For Aizawl (Mizoram), Zam Zam (☎ 2639617; ME Rd, 2nd side lane) runs several daily sumos (Rs 650, 16 hours) via Silchar (Rs 350, 11 hours).

Buses/sumos to Tura (Rs 175/230, six/10 hours) in western Meghalaya depart from KRB Rd.

TRAIN

Trains to Kolkata take around 24 hours, so to arrive early morning take the 7.15am Kamrup Express to Howrah (sleeper/2AC Rs 299/1212). For Darjeeling or Sikkim take the 10.30pm Kanchenjunga Express to New Jalpaiguri (sleeper/2AC Rs 164/663) arriving at 7.35am. For Jorhat (6½ hours) the 6.30am train via Dimapur (four hours) is much faster than buses (no service Sunday). Trains to Jorhat, Dibrugarh and Tinsukia cut through Nagaland, but you don't need a Nagaland permit as long as you stay on the train (that's not true for buses).

Getting Around

Shared taxis to the airport (Rs per person/car 100/500, 23km) leave from the driveway of Hotel Mahalaxmi (GS Rd). From the Kachari bus stand city buses run to Kamakhya Mandir, Hajo (bus 25; Rs 15, one hour) and Sualkuchi (bus 22; Rs 15, one hour). Autorickshaws charge Rs 20 to 50 for shorter hops.

NORTHWESTERN ASSAM (BODOLAND)

Manas National Park

☎ 03666

Bodoland's Unesco-listed Manas National Park (www.manas100.com; Oct-Mar) has two 'ranges'. National park fees are as for Kaziranga (p603).

EASTERN RANGE

This is the place to spot an ultrarare Bengal Florican (what a bustard!). Inspiring community-based management led by MMES (Manas Maozigendri; ☎ 268052; mahammes4_U@yahoo.com) imaginatively employs former Bodo insurgents to protect the forest from poachers. The gateway village of Koklabari has a fascinating little museum (admission Rs 30) displaying impounded poaching weapons, and a handicraft workshop that sells traditional Bodo aronai scarves. The Jhobgang Jungle Camp (d Rs 600) will soon offer accommodation in traditionally styled Bodo stilt cottages with private bathrooms. Homestays are planned.

WESTERN RANGE

Famous for tigers (though you'll probably only see their claw marks), this range is comparatively accessible and can be appreciated in delightful comfort from Bansbari Lodge (www.assambengalnavigation.com/bansbari.htm; d Rs 1250). Bookings (100% essential) are handled by Jungle Travels in Guwahati (p598), which sometimes demands that foreigners buy full jungle-tour day packages.

Access is from Barpeta Rd, where Manas Guest House (☎ 260935; Durgabari Rd; with shared bathroom d/s 60/100, private bathroom s/d from Rs 150/250, with AC d Rs 850; ❄) is excellent value, two blocks east of Main Rd behind the sprawling Municipal Market.

MOTHANGURI LODGE

Staying at Mothanguri within the park is Manas's top highlight. Two simple, lonely lodges are 20km north of Bansbari beside the unguarded Bhutan border crossing. Choose the seven-room upper lodge with its enchanting views across the Beki River and a stuffed man-eating tiger in the lounge. Bring food and diesel fuel (for the generator). Book months ahead through the Manas Field Director's Office (☎ 261413; abhijitrabha@hotmail.com; Main Rd, Barpeta Rd).

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Guwahati–Kokrajhar buses serve Pathsala junction and pass within 3km of Barpeta road. A single daily Pathsala–Koklabari bus (Rs 15, two hours) departs around 2pm, returning at 6am. Barpeta Rd–Bansbari buses (Rs 10, 1½ hours) leave twice hourly till around 4pm from just north of the railway line. Trains run from Barpeta Rd to Guwahati (three hours) at 9.40am and 1.10pm, and overnight to New Jalpaiguri at 11.15pm. To reach Mothanguri jeep rental is available at Koklabari, Barpeta Rd and (for guests) at Bansbari.

TEZPUR

Tezpur is probably Assam's most attractive city thanks to beautifully kept parks, attractive lakes and the enchanting views of the mighty Brahmaputra River as it boldly caresses the town's central underbelly. Internet access is available at Softec Point (NB Rd; per hr Rs 20; 🕑 9am-10pm), 250m north of the Baliram Building restaurants.

Sights

At Chitralekha Udyan (Cole Park; Jenkins Rd; adult/child/camera Rs 10/5/20; 🕑 9am-8pm), a U-shaped pond wraps around pretty manicured lawns dotted with fine ancient sculptures. The bearded chap in Mesopotamian-style costume is Banasura. A block east then south, Ganeshgarh temple faces a ghat on the wide, sandy Brahmaputra banks. Nearly 1km east along the narrow, winding riverside lane, Agrigarh Hill (Padma Park; adult/child Rs 10/5; 🕑 8am-7.30pm) can't be proven to be Banasura's fire fortress site. Nonetheless river views are lovely and plentiful statuary vividly illustrates the Usha legend.

Cross town to boulder-strewn Oguri Hill (adult/child Rs 5/2; 🕑 11am-4pm) for even better views of both across the river and towards the white-toothed Himalayan horizon (if the haze clears).

Sleeping & Eating

Hotel Durba (☎ 224276; KK Rd; s/d Rs 250/400) Around 400m north of the bus station, Durba's clean, windowless rooms have sit-down flush toilets and geysers in tiled private bathrooms.

Tourist Lodge (☎ 221016; Jenkins Rd; r without/with AC Rs 330/550; ❄) Facing Chitralekha Udyan, two blocks south of the bus station, the Tourist Lodge offers excellent-value spacious rooms with bathrooms and mosquito nets.

Hotel Luit (☎ 222083; Ranu Singh Rd; s/d 'old wing' Rs 200/300, 'new wing' Rs 600/700, with AC Rs 1000/1200) Close to the bus station, the Luit is on a

SOME LIKE IT HOT

How hot is a chilli pepper? Incredibly there's a whole science to measuring spiciness. A grading system assesses peppers in Sco ville Units of pungency. Pimento scores 500, Tabasco sauce tops 2500 and Jalapeño peppers go up to 8000. But that's nothing compared to Tezpur's bih-jolokia (literally 'poison-chilli') which has been recorded at a phenomenal 1,041,427. That made it the world's hottest pepper. At least until March 2006 when it was out-hotted by a Dorset Naga chilli grown in unexotic rural England.

small lane linking KK/Jenkins Rd with Main Rd. Reception is professional and budget rooms are remarkably reasonable, but the AC offerings have aging bathtubs and require a sweaty climb to the 5th floor (unless the lift is mended). Taxes 25%.

The modern glass tower Baliram Building (☎ 232726; cnr NB & NC/SC Rds) contains several floors of good dining. The ground-floor dosa house (🕑 6am-9pm) serves South Indian fare and cheap breakfasts. Semismart China Villa (🕑 10am-10.30pm) offers Indian and Chinese food in AC comfort, while the rooftop Chat House (🕑 8am-9.30pm) is an open-sided snack bar with city views.

Getting There & Away

Near the Tourist Lodge, Anand Travels (☎ 220 083/231657; Jenkins Rd) is the Indian Airlines agent. Direct flights to Kolkata (US$94, 1¼ hours) operate on Wednesday when you could arrive from Shillong. On Tuesday and Sunday Kolkata flights ($170, 3¼ hours) go via Jorhat (US$64, 40 minutes). The airport is an intimidating military affair ringed with razor-wired fences. Its guarded gates are 10km up the NH52 (along which Balipara-bound buses pass regularly), then 600m east.

The busy bus station (KK/Jenkins Rd) has regular departures for Guwahati (Rs 110, five hours) and for Jorhat (Rs 90, four hours) via Kaziranga (Rs 50, two hours). APST buses for Dirang (Rs 205, 7½ hours) via Bomdila leave at 6.30am. Private buses leave from outside the bus station.

BLOODY TEZPUR

Banasura, the thousand-armed demon-king was so overprotective of his beautiful daughter Usha that he locked her into an impregnable 'fire fortress' (Agrigarh) to keep away unwanted suitors. The ploy failed. A dashing prince, Aniruddha, magically found his way in and secretly married her. Banasura was not a happy demon. He pondered feeding Aniruddha to his pet snakes as punishment. But the lad turned out to be Lord Krishna's grandson. Krishna sent in his troops and an almighty battle ensued. The resulting carnage was so appalling that the site has been known ever since as Tezpur (or Sonitpur), the City of Blood.

Sumos for Ziro, Along, Bomdila, Dirang and Tawang have their booking counters around Hotel Durga.

Buses to Bhalukpong (Rs 28, 1½ hrs) via Balipara and Gamani (for Nameri) leave roughly twice hourly from the northwest corner of Padun Pukhuri lake.

AROUND TEZPUR

Picturesque Nameri National Park (Indian/foreigner Rs 20/250; 🕑 Nov-Apr) specialises in low-key, walk-in bird-watching strolls not elephant-backed rhino adventures. Access is from Potasali, 2km off the Tezpur–Bhalukpong road (turn east at one-house hamlet Gamani, 12km north of Balipara). Potasali's delightful Eco-Camp (☎ 9435250052; dm/d Rs 100/1150 plus Rs 60 per person 'membership') organises all Nameri visits, including two-hour ornithological rafting trips (Rs 1305 per boat). Evening dances round the fireside are magical. Accommodation is in 'tents', but colourful fabrics, private toilets, sturdy beds and thatched-roof shelters make the experience relatively luxurious. A bigger thatched construction offers great-value dorm beds and there's an atmospheric open-sided restaurant. At dawn, walk 1.3km to the idyllic Bharali riverbank, above which rise layers of forested foothills crowned by a line of white-topped horizon peaks.

If the Eco-Camp is full, you could continue to Bhalukpong where the Tourist Lodge (☎ 03782-234037; cottage Rs 550-650) has appealing cottages arranged around a raised grassy area overlooking a sweep of the Bharali/Kameng River. The Tourist Lodge is 300m east of Bhalukpong's busy market. Turn right shortly before the Arunachal 'border'.

KAZIRANGA NATIONAL PARK

Assam's must-do attraction is a rhinoceros-spotting safari in the expansive flat grasslands of Kaziranga National Park (🕑 1 Nov-30 Apr, elephant rides 5.30am & 6.30am, jeep access 7.30-10.30am & 2.30-5pm). Kaziranga's population of around 1800 Indian one-horned rhinos (up from just 200 in 1904) represents over two-thirds of the world's total. There are several 'ranges', but the central and most accessible one generally offers the best viewing chances for rhinos, elephants and swamp deer along with plenty of bird life, including greater adjutant storks (take binoculars). One-hour elephant-back rides are especially satisfying when a 'team' of several elephants makes pincer movements, surrounding rhinos without frightening them off.

Elephant rides start from November, but at that time grass is elephant-high so the ride can feel like sailing mysteriously on a green sea. The grass burns off in December or January improving visibility, and by February new sprouts and cooler temperatures tempt more big game to venture into the open. In especially dry years the park opens for jeep safaris from mid-October.

Information

For Kaziranga's central range, everything is close to Kohora village. That's marked by an obvious Rhino Gate near the Km 378 marker on the NH37. Don't head for the park entrance (2km north) till you've paid relevant fees at the Range Office (☎ 262428; 24 hr) within the Kaziranga Tourist Complex, 800m south of Rhino Gate. Jeep rental (from Rs 550) is available across the complex's grassy central square, just east of which is the elephant-ride booking office (6-7pm only). A taxi to and from the elephant-ride departure point costs Rs 150 extra.

Better hotels can organise all bookings, paperwork and jeep rentals for you at minimal extra cost.

National park fees for Indians/foreigners:

- Entry fees Rs 20/250 per day
- Camera Rs 50/500
- Video Rs 500/1000
- Elephant ride Rs 120/750
- Vehicle toll fee Rs 200/200, including the services of an armed escort (Rs 50 tip customary)

Sleeping & Eating

When Kaziranga Park closes (May to mid-October) prices drop at least 30%.

TOURIST COMPLEX

All of the following are within a five-minute walk of the Range Office. Booking ahead is wise and advance payment is often required. Kunjaban Lodge (☎ 262423; dm without/with linen Rs 25/50) has perfectly passable three- and 12-bed dorms. Bonoshree Lodge (☎ 262423; s/d Rs 210/260) offers aging but well-renovated rooms with tile-floored bathrooms in a long, green bungalow. Bonani Lodge (☎ 262423; s/d ground floor Rs 320/380, 2nd floor Rs 350-410) has spacious, whitewashed rooms in a two-storey building with wicker furniture. The excellent Prashanti Cottage (☎ 262429; d Rs 690) has six modernist split-level units. Bigger and less attractive, Aranya Lodge (☎ 262429; s/d Rs 630/690, with AC Rs 750/860;) is a could-be-anywhere concrete hotel but the better rooms have AC and there's a restaurant and bar.

Cafeteria meals (Rs 30 to 50) are served at the two-room Network Travels Motel (☎ 262699; d Rs 450).

BEYOND THE COMPLEX

Uninspired Rs 500 house-hotels are sprinkled along 2km of the NH37 east of Rhino Gate. None are great value, nor as good as equivalents in the Tourist Complex. However, there are two much better options.

our pick Wild Grass Resort (☎ 262085; www.oldassam.com; d season/low season Rs 1600/900;) This delightful, ecofriendly resort is so justifiably popular that it doesn't even bother with a sign. Raj-inspired room décor makes you feel like you're on safari, the atmospheric dining room serves fabulous Assamese food and there's a jungle-edged summer-only swimming pool. Accomplished Krishna dances are performed nightly in the garden folly. Wild Grass is 600m off the NH37, south of Km 373 (4km east of Kohora). In season, bookings are essential.

Bonhabi Resort (☎ 262675; www.bonhabiresort.com; s/d Rs 1200/1400;) Suave modern rooms, some with AC, are very comfortable but the experience is marred by all-night generator noise.

Getting There & Away

Buses between Guwahati (Rs 150 to 210, six hours) or Tezpur and Jorhat (Rs 60, two hours) or Dimapur all pass through Kohora on the NH37. Many Network buses even divert the 800m up to the Tourist Complex for a lunch stop. A small Public Call Office (PCO) directly west of Rhino Gate can book bus seats. If stranded you could increase your chances of a ride by taking the twice-hourly local bus to Bokakhat (Rs 10), 20km east. Overnight tours to Kaziranga run regularly from Guwahati (see p598).

UPPER ASSAM

Jorhat

☎ 0376 / pop 70,000

Bustling Jorhat is the transit point for reaching Majuli Island. The 1876 Gymkhana Club (☎ 2311303; Club Rd; green fees Rs 100) offers bargain-value golf if you can rustle clubs. Jorhat's commercial street (Gar-Ali) meets the main east–west thoroughfare (AT Rd) in front of a lively central market area where giant hornets buzz around golden-brown piles of jaggary. Head 400m west along AT Rd then south to find the small museum (admission free; Postgraduate Training College, MG Rd; 10am-4.30pm Tue-Sun) and nearby Assam Tourism (☎ 2321579) in the good-value Tourist Lodge (☎ 2321579; MG Rd; s/d Rs 210/330).

Handy for the train station, Hotel GK Palace (☎ 2309972; Gar-Ali; r fan/AC from d Rs 650/1100;) is a smart new business hotel with obliging staff, a 'Chill Bar' and acres of marble.

Tucked conveniently behind the ASTC Bus Station (on AT Rd), Solicitor Rd has half-a-dozen passable hotels. Hotel Janata Paradise (☎ 2320610; Solicitor Rd; d Rs 200-400) has budget fan rooms with a little soul. Its lobby-restaurant (open noon to 4pm and 8pm to 9pm) serves excellent-value 10-dish Assamese thalis (Rs 35).

Hotel Heritage (☎ 2321719; Solicitor Rd; d fan/AC Rs 425/950;) is a reliable new midrange choice, next door to the faded Hotel Paradise in which you'll find Indian Airlines (☎ 2320011) and Jet Airways (☎ 2325652) offering twice-weekly Kolkata and Guwahati flights, fog willing.

ASTC buses run several times hourly to Sivasagar (Rs 25, 1½ hours) and fairly frequently to Tezpur or Guwahati (Rs 200, eight hours) passing Kaziranga en route. Trains to Guwahati (2nd/AC chair Rs 127/420, 6½ hours) depart at 1.45pm, except Sunday.

Around Jorhat

TEA ESTATE GETAWAYS

Colonial-era tea estate bungalows offer relaxing, do-nothing heritage-style getaways. Bookings are essential.

Sangsua (☎ 2385075; bookings 9954451548; www.heritagetourismindia.com/sangsua.html; d Rs 1500-1800) Sangsua dates from the 1870s and has wonderful lawns and verandas. There's some antique furniture but standards are homy rather than lavish. The site is 7km down rural tracks from Km 442 on NH37 (the Jorhat–Deragaon road) or take Jorhat–Furkating local trains (7am and 5pm) to Moabondha station (Rs 7, 45 minutes).

With classical portico and wide, cow-mown lawns, Thengal Manor (☎ 2339519; bookings 9954451548; Jalukanburi; s/d/tw Rs 2300/2875/2300) looks incredibly grand. Old photos, four-poster beds and medal certificates from King George VI add atmosphere but some walls have damp patches and there are hot-water issues. The cheaper twin is smaller and windowless. Opinions on the Rs 360 set dinners vary wildly. Thengal is 15km south of Jorhat down MG Rd towards Titabor.

NIMATIGHAT

This windswept sandbank is the departure point for photogenically overcrowded ferries to Majuli Island. On an otherwise deserted river-island reached from here by private launch (Rs 50), newly opened Mou Chapori River Resort (☎ 9435357171; hornbill121@rediff.com; furnished tent/bamboo hut/luxury cottage d Rs 600/1200/2000) has traditionally styled hut-accommodation. From here the one-day group tours (Rs 800 per person) are a particularly convivial way to visit Majuli Island. Book via Rhino Travels (p598).

Nimatighat is a very potholed 12km from Jorhat by shared autorickshaws (Rs 10, 40 minutes).

Majuli Island

The great grey Brahmaputra River's ever-shifting puzzle of sandbanks includes Majuli, the world's largest river island. Amid the gently contemplative landscapes of rice fields, water meadows and fish traps here, attractions include meeting the local Mising people and learning about neo-Vaishnavite philosophy at one of Majuli's 22 ancient satras (see the boxed text, opposite).

Ferries arrive 3km south of Kamalabari, from where the main village Garamur is 5km further north. The most interesting, accessible satras are the large, beautifully peaceful Uttar Kamalabari (1km north, then 600m east of Kamalabari) and Auniati (5km west of Kamalabari), where monks are keen to show you their little museum of Ahom royal artefacts. The best chances of observing chanting, dances or drama recitations are around dawn and dusk or during the big Ras Mahotsav Festival (third week of November).

SLEEPING

Accommodation is very basic: bring a sleeping bag.

La Maison de Ananda (☎ 274768; dm Rs 150) On a green Garamur back lane, this is a new but traditionally styled thatched house on bamboo stilts with three bamboo beds and locally made fabrics. It's run by local guide/fixer Danny Gam (☎ 9435205539).

At the central crossroads in Garamur, Hotel Island (☎ 274712; s/d/tr Rs 120/240/350) is a less-than-exciting dive. Those actively interested in neo-Vaishnavite philosophy can usually arrange space at a satra guesthouse.

GETTING THERE & AWAY
Packed-full little passenger ferries from Nimatighat depart at 10.30am and 3pm (adult/jeep Rs 12/450, 2½ hours) returning at 7.15am and 2pm. The ferry schedule makes day trips pointless unless you charter your own boat (Rs 4000); ask the harbour manager (☎ 9435203421).

GETTING AROUND
Jam-packed buses meet arriving ferries then drive to Garamur (Rs 10) via Kamalabari where three-wheelers are easier to rent.

Sivasagar (Sibsagar)
☎ 03772 / pop 64,000

This oil-service town was once the capital of the Ahom dynasty that ruled Assam for over 600 years. Sivasagar takes its name ('waters of Shiva') from its graceful central feature, a rectangular reservoir dug in 1734 by Ahom queen Ambika. Three typical Ahom temple towers rising proudly above the tank's partly wooded southern banks include 33m-high Shivadol Mandir, India's tallest Shiva temple. Its uppermost trident balances upon an egg-shaped feature whose golden covering the British reputedly tried (but failed) to pilfer in 1823. Several sadhus sit along the temple approach path and its interior is eerie. Dominating the tank's western side is the red-painted Assam Tai Museum. At the tank's southwest corner, Assam Tourism is within the great-value Tourist Lodge (☎ 2222394; s/d Rs 210/260), whose six large rooms have clean tiled floors.

Around 500m from Shivadol (south then east on Hospital Rd) are a gaggle of hotels along AT road close to the ASTC bus station. The most appealing of these is the surprisingly swish Hotel Shiva Palace (☎ 222629; fax 225184; economy s/d Rs 480/576, with AC & hot water from Rs 875/1000), incorporating a decent, AC restaurant.

The ASTC bus station has several hourly services to Jorhat (Rs 26, 1½ hours) and Dibrugarh (Rs 38, 2¼ hours). Many private buses have ticket counters on nearby AT Rd. For Kareng Garh, use Gargaon buses (Rs 10, 45 minutes), which depart from an unmarked stop on BG Rd, 300m north up AT Rd then 50m right.

Around Sivasagar
Dotted around Sivasagar are many lemon-squeezer-shaped temples and ochre-brick ruins built by the Ahom monarchs during their 17th- and 18th-century heyday.

TALATALGARH
This famous (if not incredibly dramatic) Ahom ruin complex is 4km down AT Rd from central Sivasagar. Some 2km beyond a WWII-era metal lift-bridge, look right to see Rang Garh (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; 8am-5pm). From this two-storey oval-shaped 'pavilion', Ahom monarchs once watched buffalo and elephant fights. Just beyond turn left, continue 700m passing the Golagarh (Ahom ammunition store) to reach Talatalgarh (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; 8am-5pm), the extensive, two-storey Ahom palace ruins. Like Rang Garh, the lumpy brick structure and its beautifully tended gardens are arguably most attractive viewed at a distance from the entrance gate.

KARENG GARH
Dramatic if largely unadorned, this 1752 brick palace (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; 8am-5pm) is the last remnant of the Ahom's pre-Sivasagar capital. The unique four-storey structure rises like a sharpened, stepped pyramid above an attractive forest-and-paddy setting that's slightly spoilt by nearby electrical transformer substations. It's 900m north of the Sivasagar–Sonali road: turn just before Gargaon (14km).

GAURISAGAR
Like a practice run for Sivasagar, Gaurisagar has an attractive tank and a trio of distinctive 1720s temples built by 'dancing girl queen' Phuleswari. Most impressive is the Devidol (admission free; 24hr). It's not as tall as Sivasagar's

SATRAS
A satra is a monastery of neo-Vaishnavism, Assam's distinctive form of everyman-Hinduism. Formulated by 15th-century Assamese philosopher Sankardev, the faith eschews the caste system and idol worship, focussing on Vishnu as God, especially in his Krishna incarnation. Much worship is based around dance and melodramatic play-acting of scenes from the holy Bhagavad Gita. The heart of any satra is its namghar, a large, simple, prayer hall usually open sided and shaped like an oil tanker sailing west. Beneath the eastern end, an inner sanctum hosts an eternal flame, the Gita and possibly a horde of instructive (but not divine) images. Satras are highly spiritual, but don't expect anything enormously photogenic.

Shivadol but sports finer stone carvings, even if they're significantly eroded. Gaurisagar is just 50m off the main NH37 Sivasagar–Jorhat road at Km 501.5.

Dibrugarh

Travelling to 'tea-city' Dibrugarh usefully closes a loop between Kaziranga and the Ziro–Along–Pasighat route (see p620).

From Dibrugarh Town train station, RKB Path follows the rail tracks northeast passing HS Rd (which leads to the market area). After 800m RKB Path meets Mancotta Rd. Around this junction are many places to eat, plus there's fast-connection internet at Ajmera (Sachit Studio, Mancotta Rd; per hr Rs 20; 10am-9pm). Across the railway tracks, 1km south on Mancotta Rd then 300m right on Convoy/TRP Rd is the main bus station.

Purvi Discovery (☎ 2301120; www.purviweb.com; Medical College Rd, Jalan Nagar) organises regional tours, vehicle rental and horse-riding trips (around Rs 7000 per day, including meals) with set date departures (October to April). Given three days' notice it can organise two-hour tea estate visits (admission Rs 400; Tue-Sat Apr-Nov). Purvi also handles bookings for two colonial-era tea bungalow retreats: the delightful 1849 Mancotta Chang Bungalow (Mancotta Rd, Mancotta; s/d main Bldg Rs 2000/3600, s 'executive' Rs 1000), 4km from town, and Jalannagar South Bungalow (Convoy Rd; s/d upstairs Rs 1500/2600, downstairs Rs 1600), 700m from the bus station. In both cases choose the upper rooms that have polished hardwood floorboards and a wonderful heritage feel.

East End Hotel (☎ 2322698; New Market; s/d from Rs 230/345), just off HS Rd, is conveniently central, with tired, basic but clean budget rooms and attached cold showers.

Near the train station, Hotel Indsuriya (☎ 2326322; RKB Path; s/d fan Rs 345/564, AC from Rs 805/1035;) has bright, modern rooms, a children's play area and some local furniture motifs. Spot Princess Diana amongst the lobby's Assamese textiles.

H20 (Mancotta Rd; mains Rs 50-110, beers Rs 55) is an upstairs bar-restaurant with elements of spaceship décor. Upbeat little Flavours (☎ 2326438; Mancotta Rd; mains Rs 20-60; 10am-10pm) nearby serves doughy pizzas. El Dorado (☎ 2326805; City Regency Hotel, RKB Path; beers Rs 90) is a suave, underlit lounge with bottle-spinning barman and Indian trance music.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Air Deccan (www.airdeccan.com) and Kingfisher (www.flykingfisher.com) fly to Guwahati, while Indian Airlines (☎ 2300114; Circuit House Rd) flies to Kolkata. Mohanbari airport is 16km northeast of Dibrugarh, 4km off the Tinsukia road. Shared three-wheelers (Rs 10) from AT Rd stop 500m short at Mohanbari market.

From the main bus station ASTC buses depart three times an hour till mid-afternoon for Sivasagar (Rs 38, 2¼ hours), Jorhat (Rs 68 to 90, four hours) and Tinsukia (Rs 23, 1½ hours). Various overnight services to Guwahati (Rs 265 to 320, 12 hours) leave from Mancotta Rd or from outside the train station. The best-timed overnight train for Guwahati (3AC/2AC Rs 865/1275, 14½ hours) is the 4pm Kamrup Express.

The rough-and-ready DKO Ferry (passenger/bicycle/motorbike/elephant Rs 67/44/199/4190, vehicle Rs 1500 to 3087) cruises daily to Oriamghat where it's met by a bus to Pasighat (Arunachal Pradesh, p621). It can carry just two jeeps. There's little shelter and the journey takes around eight hours (5½ hours downstream on return), so bring an umbrella and sunscreen. Brief stops en route give scenic glimpses of isolated riverside hamlets like Berachapuri and Tinmil, where fishing canoes sport domed central sun-shelters. Exact departure points vary according to the Brahmaputra's water level. Dibrugarh's Kusum Hotel (☎ 2320143; Talkiehouse Rd) sells a jeep-ferry-jeep combination ticket to Pasighat (Rs 250, 10 hours).

SOUTH ASSAM

The attractive Cachar Hills are suffering serious insurgency from DHD Dimasa separatists whose poetically named subfactions (like 'Black Widow', led by Jewel Gorlosa) are also embroiled in a bloody 'turf war'. Visiting Haflong, once a popular hill station, is not advised, but further south, the predominantly Bengali city of Silchar is safe.

Silchar

☎ 03842 / pop 155,000

Flat, sprawling Silchar offers a welcome break in long journeys between Shillong and Mizoram or Tripura. Club, Central and Park Rds converge at a small roundabout near the main bus station. There's patchy internet access at CyberMagic (☎ 261837; Park Rd; 8am-10pm). Hotels are great value.

SERVICES FROM SILCHAR

To	Bus fare (Rs)	Sumo fare (Rs)	Duration (hr)	Departures
Agartala	220	250	11+	6.30am
Guwahati	310	375	12-15	7.30am, 7pm
Jowai	205 (ASTC)	325	6-9	6.45am, 7am, 7.45am
Shillong	250	325	8-11	7am, 5.30pm

Four minutes' walk from the bus station, down a narrow passageway before Indian Airlines, Hotel Geetanjali (☎ 231738; Club Rd; s/d from Rs 150/265, with AC d Rs 550) has budget rooms that are much better than its gloomy foyer suggests.

Hotel Kalpataru (☎ 245672; s/d from Rs 170/290, with AC d Rs 550; ❄) is neat, new, if not quite as plush as its lobby suggests, and right beside the bus station.

Hotel Kanishka (☎ 246764; Narsingtola; s/d from Rs 290/520; ❄) is a new six-storey tower with Art Deco designs on doors and a grandfather clock in the little lobby. It's cheaper and more stylish than better-known Hotel Borail View. Take the first paved link street between Park and Central Rds.

Silchar's Kumbeergram airport (☎ 282311) is 30km northeast. Shared Ambassador taxis (per person/car Rs 70/350) depart from outside Indian Airlines (☎ 245649; Club Rd; ⏰ 10am-5pm), which flies daily to Kolkata (Rs 5675), Guwahati (Rs 3855) and Imphal (Rs 2810, 30 minutes), and thrice weekly to Agartala (Rs 3855, 35 minutes). Air Deccan has daily budget flights to Kolkata.

Buy bus and sumo tickets from various counters around the bus station; see above.

For Jowai you'll usually pay the full Shillong fare except on slow ASTC buses. For Agartala, buses join guarded military convoys making progress dreadfully slow: consider breaking the trip via Kailasahar (for Unakoti, p616).

MEGHALAYA

Carved out of Assam in 1972, hilly Meghalaya (The Abode of Clouds) is a cool, pine-fresh contrast to the sweaty Assam plains. Set on dramatic horseshoes of rocky cliff above the Bengal plains, Cherrapunjee and Mawsynram are statistically the wettest places on earth. Most of this precipitation falls April to September (and mostly at night), creating some very impressive waterfalls and carving out some of Asia's longest caves.

Eastern and central Meghalaya are mainly populated by the closely related Jaintia, Pnar and Khasi peoples (see p609), originally migrants from Southeast Asia. Western Meghalaya is home to the unrelated Garo tribe (see p612). Despite their different ethnic backgrounds, these two groups both use a matrilineal system of inheritance, children taking the mother's family name and babies often carried on the father's back.

SHILLONG

☎ 0364 / pop 268,000

From 1874 until 1972, this sprawling hill station was the capital of British Assam. Since Independence it has developed into a fairly typical modern Indian town, but it still retains elements of charm and the air is refreshingly cool, if you don't mind a good chance of rain.

Information

INTERNET ACCESS

None are fast, all charge Rs 20 per hour.

Sights & Activities

COLONIAL SHILLONG

Colonial Shillong was arranged around the ever-attractive Ward's Lake (admission/camera Rs 5/10; 5.30am-5.30pm Wed-Mon) with its photogenic ornamental bridge. The city's half-timbered architecture has been rather swamped by drab Indian concrete, but areas like Oakland retain many older houses and even in the centre a few gems remain. The Pinewood Hotel, a 1920s tea-growers retreat, is particularly iconic and looks great at night (at least from the outside). The 1902 All Saints' Cathedral (Kachari Rd) would look perfect on a biscuit tin. Nearby the turreted Das-Roy House (closed to the public) lurks behind a traffic circle that harbours five forgotten Khasi monoliths and a mini Soviet-style globe monument.

MUSEUMS

The very professional Don Bosco Museum of Indigenous Cultures (www.dbcic.org; Sacred Heart Theological College; Indian/foreigner Rs 90/150, student Rs 30/50; 9.30am-3.30pm) displays a truly vast, very well laid-out collection of tribal artefacts interspersed just occasionally with gratuitous galleries on Christian missionary work. The hexagonal museum building is an impressive, symbolic tower, seven storeys high for the seven states of the northeast. Tours (compulsory) last over an hour departing on the half-hour. For an extra Rs 50, a 16-minute video explains the Nongkrem festival (p610) or you could choose from various alternatives films.

The memorably named Wankhar Entomology Museum (☎ 2544473; Riatsamthiah; admission Rs 25; 🕑 11am-4pm Mon-Fri or by arrangement) is a remarkable one-room display of pinned butterflies, gruesome Rhinoceros beetles and incredible stick-insects in the home of the original collector.

IEW DUH

This vast market at Bara Bazaar is one of the most animated in the northeast. Thousands of Khasi tribespeople flock in from their villages selling everything from tribal baskets to fish traps and edible frogs. Except, of course, on Sunday when everyone goes to church.

SIAT KHNAM

All around Shillong gambling windows offer 'Forecast' odds on Siat Khnam. This is a unique 'sport': a semicircle of photogenic old Khasi men fire hundreds of arrows at a straw-trussed target. Those that stick are counted and bets predict the last two digits of this total. It's effectively a lottery but the shooting is a gently fascinating spectacle. Shoots are usually at 3.30pm and 4.30pm daily, except Sunday when a different version is played. Timings can vary somewhat by season.

The easy-to-miss Siat Khnam site is a small grassy area approximately opposite the big Nehru Stadium on the south river bank. To drive there head east past the Mizo Church, fork left up Bampfyled Rd, then after crossing the hill and descending to the river, turn left: the ground is almost immediately to your right. If walking, take the footpath down to Ginger Restaurant/Polo Towers Hotel. Continue just beyond to Polo Market, then turn right. Walk in front of the Matri Mandir (north side) and along the riverside road for about 1km. The ground is almost opposite the entrance to an army officers' housing area.

KHASI CULTURE

Meghalaya is dotted with timeless stone monoliths erected as memorials for tribal chieftains. Local Khasi 'monarchies' are still nominally ruled by a syiem (traditional ruler). Although they might lack political power, the Syiem of Mylliem remains a considerable economic force effectively controlling Shillong's vast Iew Duh market (see above), while the Syiem of Khrim is elaborately feted at Smit's annual Nongkrem festival (p610).

Many Khasi women wear a jaiñnkyrsha pinafore in gingham-checked cotton, fastened on one shoulder and overlaid with a tartan shawl. Most Khasis consider kwai (betel) chewing a semireligious habit. Khasi markets work on an eight-day rotation and some village fairs feature yaturmasi (bull versus bull fights). Thank you in Khasi is kublei.

Tours

Meghalaya Tourism's city tours (Rs 120) take unsuspecting tourists to a viewpoint at Shillong Peak (1960m) and the picnic spot at Elephant Falls (adult/child/camera Rs 5/3/10; 🕑 9.30am-4pm). While pretty enough, neither are exactly mind-blowing.

Sleeping

Tariffs are seasonal and highly negotiable in the low season. During peak periods hotels fill fast, but there are dozens of choices around the Police Bazaar area so just keep looking.

Hotel Shantiniketan (☎ 2500747; Thana Lane; s/d Rs 50/100) Shoebox bed spaces are squeezed into a sagging old wooden house that could use fumigation and fire escapes. What did you expect for Rs 50? No English is spoken.

Baba Tourist Lodge (☎ 2211285; GS Rd; s with shared bathroom Rs 125, s with private bathroom Rs 250-300, d with private bathroom Rs 400-475) Ageing but clean and popular with backpackers, Baba hides behind a deceptively small PCO shop. The best rooms have windows and views onto the rear cherry blossoms. Bucket showers.

Hotel Embassy (☎ 2223164; boulevard@yahoo.co.in; AC Lane; s/d from Rs 200/300) Central yet quiet, bright and very clean compared to the many other cheapies nearby. Beware of hefty 'taxes' (30%) and 'compulsory' meals (perfectly good, reasonable value).

Earle Holiday Home (☎ 2228614; Oakland Rd; d from Rs 350) The cheapest rooms are original half-timbered affairs within a classic 1920 Shillong hill house that has little turrets and looks sweet when decked with fairly lights at night. Pricier rooms are less atmospheric if more comfortable in a new concrete annexe. There's also a great, inexpensive restaurant (City Hut Dhaba, see below).

Hotel Rainbow (☎ 2222534; GS Rd; d Rs 550-650, tr Rs 750) Nine new, pleasantly styled rooms with sauna-style décor (but no geyser) are managed by a friendly man called Vicky. The best is room 103 with a little balcony.).

our pick Hotel Boulevard (☎ 2229823; boulevard@yahoo.co.in; Thana Rd; s/d from Rs 820/948) Amongst dozens of similarly priced hotels, the Boulevard stands out for its modernist chic and unusually luxurious standards even in the cheapest rooms. Don't miss the view from the stylish top-floor bar-café.

Hotel Tripura Castle (☎ 2501111; www.tripuraroyalheritage.com; Cleve Colony; s/d from Rs 1680/2160) Tucked away on a wooded hillside is the distinctively turreted summer villa of the former Tripura maharajas. It's this private 'castle' that features in hotel brochures, but accommodation is actually in a mostly new, if pseudo-heritage building behind. Pine-framed rooms have a gently stylish, slightly Balinese vibe with some period furniture and a level of service that's hard to beat.

Eating & Drinking

Cheap street stalls abound around Police Bazar with many dreary but inexpensive eateries along Thana Rd. Brighter for microwaved snacks is Little Bites (Keating Rd; dishes Rs 10-25), while just beyond there's real coffee and good cakes at Café Coffee Day (Hotel Mi Casa, Keating Rd; 🕒 10am-10.30pm).

City Hut Dhaba (☎ 2220386; Oakland Rd; mains Rs 40-110; 🕒 11am-9.30pm) Tucked behind Earle Holiday Home, modestly priced City Hut boasts 'Shillong's best food' and actually delivers. Seating is in attractive, flower-decked pavilions, but they're open-sided so bring a coat for winter evenings.

Skye Asia (☎ 2225210; Hotel Centrepoint; mains Rs 70-180; 🕒 1-9.30pm) With wood and rattan chairs and great views, this top-floor lounge-restaurant serves dainty Thai dishes and cocktails, morphing later into the Cloud 9 bar-disco. Downstairs La Galerie (1st fl; mains Rs 50 to 130) is less atmospheric but offers excellent Indian food.

Ginger Restaurant (☎ 2222341; www.hotelpolotowers.com; Hotel Polo Towers, Polo Bazaar; mains Rs 90-200; 🕒 11am-10pm) Sink into designer cream-leather chairs at Shillong's suavest restaurant. Continental dishes include crepes, cannelloni and stroganoff. Attached is the futuristic, metal-panelled bar Platinum (beers Rs 120).

Getting There & Away

Indian Airlines (☎ 2223015; Sheba Travels, Ward's Lake Rd) flies from Kolkata to Shillong (Rs 6030) returning via either Jorhat (Monday) or Tezpur (Wednesday). The airstrip is at Umroi, 35km north of Shillong (Rs 600 by taxi).

From an air force base 8km towards Cherrapunjee, Meghalaya Transport Corporation (☎ 2223129) offers helicopter flights to Guwahati (Rs 725, 30 minutes, twice daily except Sunday) and Tura (Rs 1525, 1½ hours, thrice weekly). Book at the MTC bus station (Jail Rd).

The MTC bus station also has a computerised railway-reservation counter (nearest train station is Guwahati), hourly minibuses to Guwahati (Rs 64, 3½ hours), and overnight buses to Silchar (Rs 151, 10 hours) and Tura (Rs 202, 12 hours via Guwahati).

More comfortable private buses for Siliguri (Rs 350, 18 hours), Agartala (Rs 450, 21 hours), Silchar, Dimapur and Aizawl depart from the Polo Ground; book tickets from counters around Police Bazaar, including Network Travels (☎ 2222747; Shop 44, MUDA Complex, Police Bazaar) and Deep (☎ 9836047198; Ward's Lake Rd).

From a Kacheri Rd parking area, shared taxis/sumos leave frequently to Guwahati (Rs 125/90, 3½ hours). Some shared taxis continue to Guwahati airport (Rs 170).

For most destinations within Meghalaya buses are infrequent and antiquated. Faster and much more frequent, shared jeeps leave when full from various points around Bara Bazaar, including to Cherrapunjee (Sohra; Rs 40, 1½ hours), Dawki (Rs 70, two hours), Jowai (Rs 50, 1¾ hours) and Barapani (Rs 20, 40 minutes).

Getting Around

Shared black-and-yellow taxis run fixed routes (Rs 7 to 10 per hop) but if empty want Rs 50 for a one-way trip within town. For longer hires, contract a van from the Khasi Hills Tourist Taxi Cooperative (☎ 2223895; Kachari Rd).

AROUND SHILLONG

Smit

Framing itself as the Khasi cultural centre, Smit hosts the major five-day Nongkrem Festival (October). This features animal sacrifices and a curious slow-motion shuffling dance performed in full costume in front of the thatched bamboo 'palace' of the local syiem (traditional ruler). Smit is 11km from Shillong (Rs 8 by chuntering local bus), 4km off the Jowai road.

Umiam Lake

Accessed from Barapani, 17km north of Shillong, Umiam Lake is a hydroelectric reservoir that's popular for water sports and picnics and has a couple of resort hotels.

Although straggling for several kilometres, Cherrapunjee (known locally as Sohra) has a compact centre. The sumo stand, one-computer internet shop and simple two-room Sohra Plaza Hotel (☎ 235762; s/d Rs 350/450) all huddle beside the marketplace. Nearby grassy moors somewhat justify Meghalaya's over-played 'Scotland of the East' soubriquet, though they're dotted with Khasi monoliths and scarred by quarrying. Much more impressive is the series of 'grand canyon' valleys that plummet away into deep lush bowls of tropical forest sprayed by a succession of seasonally inspiring waterfalls. The Nohkalikai Falls are particularly dramatic. You can see them easily enough without quite entering the official viewpoint (admission/camera Rs 3/10), 4.4km southwest of Sohra market.

Tour buses of Bengali sightseers are whisked on to a minimal museum at Cherrapunjee's Ramakrishna Mission (admission free; 9am-2pm) and prodded through the sad, soot-blackened ex-stalagmites of the mildly claustrophobic, 150m-long Mawsmai Cave (minimum fee per group Rs 60; 9am-4.30pm). Mawsmai's tall row of roadside monoliths are much more impressive than the cave.

Better than any of this is descending the 14km narrow road to Mawshamok for views back up to the falls and cliffs. Few places in the northeast are more scenic. Just 3km further along the ridge, the six-room, ecofriendly Cherrapunjee Holiday Resort (☎ 03637-264218; www.cherrapunjee.com; Laitkynsew village; d Rs 720-840) is comfortable and run by truly delightful hosts. They offer a selection of hikes, either self-orientated (using their hand-drawn maps) or with a local guide (Rs 70 to 150). The most exciting of these is a visit to the absolutely incredible 'root-bridges', living ficus elastica tree roots that ingenious Khasi villagers have trained across streams to form natural pathways. Three of these root bridges (including an amazing 'double-decker') are near Nongriat. Access requires at least 1½ hours' very steep trek down from Tyrna, a pretty, palm-clad village that's 5km from the resort, 2km from Mawshamok. This hike is highly strenuous and en route there's a truly hair-raising wire bridge to cross, but the scenery is magnificent.

The Cherrapunjee Holiday Resort also encourages summer 'monsoon tourists' to experience first hand the world's rainiest place, its unforgettable thunder and the drama of its brewing storms.

pop 5500

You'll probably only go to Dawki for the Bangladesh border-crossing, but the journey from Shillong includes a dramatic 10km section along the lip of the vast green Pamshutia Canyon. It then descends through mildly picturesque Khasi villages like Pongtung (Km 142) and Mawsun (Km 146) amid waving betel-nut palms, finally crossing a suspension bridge over the surreally blue-green Umngot Creek where waters are dotted with flimsy local fishing boats. A colourful boat race is held here every February.

All public sumos from Dawki to Shillong (Rs 70, 2½ hours) depart by 11am (3pm on market days), mostly returning early afternoon. If coming northbound from Bangladesh, sleep in Sylhet and start very early as Dawki's only accommodation, the Inspection Bungalow (d Rs 100), usually refuses tourists. Shillong–Dawki–Sylhet is considerably easier southbound.

JAINTIA HILLS

Situated in pretty, rolling countryside (think Sussex with rice), Nartiang (pop 6000) is famous for its forest of monoliths, a scatter-brained Stonehenge wannabe tucked behind the village football pitch. Raised to honour the Jaintia kings, the highest stone is almost 8m tall. Around 1km away, the famous but heavily over-renovated Durga temple was once used for human sacrifices. Spot the 'endless hole' into which severed heads were once tipped.

Nartiang probably doesn't justify a special trip from Shillong (54km each way), but if you're travelling the Silchar–Shillong route, it offers blessed respite from the endless coal trucks. Nartiang's 12km off the main road: turn northeast at Ummulong. By public transport change in Jowai (pop 27,300), the district centre of eastern Meghalaya's Jaintia Hills.

CROSSING INTO BANGLADESH

Border Hours

The border is open from 6am to 5pm.

Foreign Exchange

There's no official exchange booth but ask at the Bangladesh customs office and a freelance moneychanger can usually help out.

Onward Transport

The border post is at Tamabil, 1.7km from Dawki market. That's Rs 30 by taxi (southbound) but northbound expect to walk, as there's usually nothing but massed coal trucks waiting at the checkpoint's Indian side. Northbound beware that Tamabil has no Sonali bank, so prepay your Tk300 Bangladesh departure tax in Sylhet (55km from Tamabil) or in Jaintiapura (17km). Frequent Tamabil–Sylhet minibuses pick up from (but don't terminate at) a triangular junction 350m from the checkpoint: walk through the field of coal stacks! Trains from Sylhet to Dhaka leave at 7.30am.

Visas

The nearest Bangladesh consulates are in Kolkata or Agartala (Tripura), so you'll need to have planned well ahead.

Although architecturally drab, Jowai's vibrant market is full of kwai-chewing, traditionally dressed local women. The town gets particularly lively during the July Behdienkhlam festival when towers of cloth and wood are erected to the accompaniment of music, dancing and archery competitions.

Astoundingly overfilled Jowai–Nartiang share taxis (Rs 10, 35 minutes) leave from the central market. The last one back departs from Nartiang around 3pm. That makes it just about possible to arrive in Jowai on the 7am Silchar–Shillong bus, see Nartiang and continue to Shillong the same evening. Jowai–Shillong sumos (Rs 50, 1½ hours) leave when full till around 5.30pm from just beyond Jowai's sorry Hotel New Broadway (☎ 212714; Shillong Rd; s/d Rs 150/300).

GARO HILLS

Although administratively within Meghalaya, the rolling green Garo Hills are easier to visit from Guwahati than from Shillong. The landscape's undulations vary from charming patchworks of rice field, cassava-patch and orange orchard to sad slash-and-burn hillsides of depleted jungle choked with gourd-creepers and bamboo thickets. Towns aren't visually distinctive, but cottages in small hamlets remain traditionally fashioned from bamboo-weave matting and neatly cropped palm thatch. Around 80% of Garos are Christian. Nonetheless 'witch doctors' are still active and superstitious jhum villages still practise Wangala dances before the harvest. These have been formalised into a four-day 100-Drum cultural festival (early November) at Asanang (Asananggri), 18km north of Tura, the Garo capital. Tura's Rikman Hotel (☎ 220744; s/d from Rs 390/500) is the best and most central accommodation option. Its restaurant serves excellent Garo food.

Tura's tourist office (☎ 242394; 🕒 10am-5pm Mon-Fri), 4km out of town towards Nazing Bazaar, can arrange guides for the three-day hike to Nokrek Biosphere Reserve, where it's possible to watch for Hoolock Gibbons from a traditional style borang (Garo tree house). Tura–Guwahati sumos (Rs 230, six hours) depart at 6.30am and 2pm. Aashirwad (☎ 222217) runs handy if grindingly slow night buses to Siliguri (Rs 280, 15 to 17 hours) crossing the 2.3km Naranarayan Setu road-rail bridge between Jogighopa and Goalpara. Dura Travels (cnr HK & Circular Rds) offers shared sumos to Baghmara (Rs 100, four to five hours, 6am), where a simple Tourist Lodge (☎ 222141; dm Rs 100) can organise jeep hire to visit the Balpakhram National Park (entrance 45km away), traditionally considered by Garo people as the 'abode of souls'.

TRIPURA

Tripura is culturally and politically fascinating, and the state's royal palaces and temples now draw a growing flow of domestic tourists from Kolkata. However, if you're expecting the exotic grandeur of Rajasthani castles, Tripura might seem a long detour for relatively little.

History

Before joining India in 1949, Tripura (Twipra) was ruled for centuries by its own Hindu royal family (the Manikyas), based first at Udaipur, then Old Agartala (Kayerpur) and finally Agartala. In the 1880s Tripura's maharajah became a major benefactor of Bengali renaissance poet-philosopher Rabindranath Tagore. Indian partition flooded Tripura with Bengali refugees leaving the local Borok-Tripuri people a minority in their own state. Resulting tensions saw dozens of armed groups fighting for – and against – the creation of an independent state.

Dangers & Annoyances

The Agartala, Udaipur and Kailasahar areas are generally safe. However, there is serious instability in north-central Tripura. All vehicles must travel in armed convoys through two sections of the Agartala–Kailasahar road. While attacks are rare, they do happen.

Compared to the shy greetings and glances elsewhere in the northeast, Tripura's more forthright stares and slightly forced hospitality can seem a little invasive. But compared to neighbouring Bangladesh, it feels relaxed.

AGARTALA

☎ 0381 / pop 189,330

Tripura's low-key capital is centred on the imposing Ujjayanta Palace. The town feels refreshingly organised and manageable if you're arriving from Bangladesh, whose border is just 3km east of the centre.

TOURIST INFORMATION

TripuraInfo (☎ 2380566; www.tripurainfo.com) Useful news and tourism website.
Tripura Tourism (☎ 2225930; www.tripura.nic.in/ttourism1.htm; 1st floor, Swet Mahal, Palace Complex; 10am-5pm Mon-Fri, 3-5pm Sat & Sun) Helpful and enthusiastic. With sufficient numbers staff can organise many great-value tours.

Sights

Agartala's indisputable centrepiece is the striking, dome-capped Ujjayanta Palace. Flanked by two large reflecting ponds, the whitewashed 1901 edifice was built by Tripura's 182nd Maharaja. It looks particularly impressive floodlit at night, a spectacle that strollers can enjoy for just one hour daily, entering from the relatively grand south gate (admission Rs 3; 5.30-6.30pm). To see the palace's comparatively unspectacular interior (now the Tripura state assembly chamber), sign in between 2.30pm and 3pm, weekdays (admission free) then report to the caretaker. Of four Hindu temples around the palace compound, much the most fanciful is Jagannath Mandir.

The small Tripura Government Museum (☎ 232 6444; http://tripura.nic.in/museum/welcome.html; Post Office Circle; admission Rs 2; 10am-5pm Mon-Fri) has interesting artefacts recovered from excavations around Tripura. The upstairs gallery shows maharajah portraits, including one with Tagore.

Several royal mausoleums are decaying quietly behind Batala market.

The curious, mosaic-fronted Gedumian Mosque (Masjid Rd) is like a mini Brighton Pavilion.

OLD AGARTALA

Nothing much remains of Tripura's second capital, Old Agartala, 7km east down AA Rd (the NH44) at Kayerpur, though the small, pointy Chaturdasha Devata Mandir (Temple of Fourteen Deities) hosts a big seven-day Kharchi Puja festival in July.

Sleeping

All places listed here offer rooms with private bathroom. AC rooms generally have geysers.

Hotel Chandana Guest House (☎ 2311216; Palace Compound Lane; s/d/tr Rs 95/210/285) Lacklustre but cheap and quite bearable, the Chandana's simple rooms have mosquito nets and cold showers. Peaceful yet central.

Hotel Welcome Palace (☎ 2384940; bantob@sancharnet.in; HGB Rd; s/d from Rs 220/330, with AC Rs 550/660; ❄) This hard-to-beat option has helpful English-speaking staff, zealous room service and superb food. Rooms are neat if not huge with scalding hot showers and multi-channel TV.

Radha International (☎ 2384530; 54 Central Rd; s/d with fan from Rs 375/500, with AC from Rs 500/750; ❄) This new hotel's great-value AC rooms are neatly tiled and doubles have a little sitting area. However, some bathrooms already suggest damp patches.

Executive Inn (☎ 2325047; 9 Mantri Bari Rd; s old Bldg Rs 275-385, d Rs 495; s/d new Bldg from Rs 660/880; ❄) The new building has stylishly understated modern rooms with AC and enough space to relax. The old building's fan rooms are overpriced.

Hotel City Centre (☎ 2385099; jaininn_pvtltd@yahoo.co.in; s/d from Rs 385/495, d with AC from Rs 720; ❄) New and youthful, with 25 rooms in 10 categories.

Eating

Restaurant Rajdhani (☎ 2208635; Top fl, Hotel Rajdhani, BK Rd; mains Rs 35-120; ❄) Playful fake-forest décor and a birds-eye view on the palm-framed palace add to the pleasure of fine Indian and Chinese cuisine. The chicken dopiaza includes half a hen.

Restaurant Kurry Klub (☎ 2384940; Hotel Welcome Palace; mains Rs 40-150; ⏰ 10am-10pm) Scrumptious tandoori chicken and gingery 'Thai' soup served in a small dining room whose décor would be rather striking if only the lighting would be turned up.

Abhishek Restaurant (☎ 2328296; Durga Bari Rd; mains Rs 60-100; ⏰ 11am-10pm; ❄) Reliable Indian-Chinese-Thai food served either on an inviting outdoor terrace or in a marine-themed dining room with good AC.

Getting There & Around

Indian Airlines (☎ 2325470; VIP Rd; ⏰ 9am-1pm & 2-4pm), Air Deccan (www.airdeccan.com), Jet Airways (☎ 2341400) and Kingfisher (www.flykingfisher.com) all fly to Kolkata and Guwahati. Indian also flies thrice weekly to Silchar (US$91). Agartala's airport is 12km north, Rs 90 by autorickshaw. Arrive early: before reaching the check-in area you must get tickets endorsed at airline counters outside the terminal then visit the immigration desk across the arrivals hall (yes, for domestic departures).

Private bus offices clustered on Durga Bari Rd include Sagar Travels/Network Travels (☎ 2222013) and Sherowali Travels (☎ 2310398). However, most leave from the main TRTC bus station (☎ 2325685; Thakur Palli Rd). Tickets are sold at Counter 1 for 6am and noon buses to Guwahati (around 25 hours, Rs 355 to 500) via Shillong (21 hours) and 6am buses to Silchar (Rs 190 to 220, 14 hours). TRTC state-run buses (Counter 4) are somewhat cheaper and also serve Kailasahar (Rs 68, seven hours). BRTC's daily bus to Dhaka (Rs 232, 1pm) will use the gleaming new International Bus Terminal once that opens.

For Udaipur (Rs 20, 1¾ hours) and Melagarh (for Neermahal; Rs 20, 1½ hours) use the south bus station.

The planned new Assam–Agartala railway has yet to progress beyond Manu. Construction continues, plagued by extortion and attacks from insurgent groups. There's a computerised train-booking office (⏰ 8am-7.30pm Mon-Fri, 8am-11.30am Sun) at Agartala's main bus station.

AROUND AGARTALA

Southern Tripura's best-known sights could be combined into a long day trip from Agartala, though sleeping at Neermahal is worthwhile. All transport passes the gates of Sepahijala Wildlife Sanctuary (NH44 extension, Km 23; ⏰ 8am-5pm Sat-Thu), a local picnic and boating spot famous for its spectacled monkeys.

CROSSING TO BANGLADESH AT AGARTALA

Border Hours

The border is open from 6am to 5pm.

Foreign Exchange

There's no official exchange booth, so changing money is hit and miss; ask local travellers.

Onward Transport

From central Agartala the border is just 3km along Akhaura Rd (Rs 15 by rickshaw). On the Bangladesh side the nearest town is Akhaura, 9km beyond. Locals pay Tk 50 (around Rs 30) by 'baby taxi' (autorickshaw) but supply is thin and drivers often ask over Tk 250. Akhaura train station is on the Dacca–Comilla line. However, for Dacca–Sylhet trains continue 3km further north to Ajampur train station, from where trains to Sylhet (five hours) depart at 9.20am and 4.40pm. Coming eastbound be sure to pay your Tk 300 Bangladesh departure tax at Sonali bank (the nearest is in Akhaura) before heading for the border. On holidays when banks are closed you might be able to negotiate payment at the hut before immigration, but don't count on it (if you can, there will be a modest supplement to pay).

Visas

The northeast's only Bangladesh visa office (☎ 2324807; Airport Rd, Kunjaban; ⏰ visa applications 9am-1pm, visa collection 4pm) hides down a small lane in Agartala, about 2km north of the Ujjayanta Palace. Turn right beside Barnali gift shop. The office is 30m ahead on your left. Same-day service.

Udaipur was Tripura's historic capital and remains dotted with ancient temples and a patchwork of tanks. Ruined but still comparatively massive, Jagannath Mandir is the most curious temple, overgrown with creepers Angkor Wat–style. It sits at the southwest corner of huge Jagannath Digthi tank, around 1km from Udaipur bus stand, and once held the famous Jagannath statue of Puri (p645). You'll pass three more ancient temple complexes en route to the flimsy Badashaheb bamboo bridge (concrete replacement under construction). Cross the Gomati River, turn left and walk 10 minutes uphill to find the Bhuveneswari Temple (small but celebrated in Tagore's writings) just beyond the lumpy brick ruins of the Rajbari, hardly recognisable as a 17th-century palace.

Facing Udaipur bus stand, the friendly Sarada Guest House (☎ 225737; d without/with AC Rs 200/400;) has windowless but well-kept rooms. Manager Guru Prasad is extremely helpful with local tips. In central Udaipur, Gouri Hotel (☎ 222419; Central Rd; s/d from Rs 150/250;) has acceptable fan rooms, plus two relatively smart Rs 600 AC rooms.

MATABARI

When Sati's toes fell on Kolkata (see p486), her divine right leg dropped on Matabari. This gruesome legend is piously celebrated at the Tripura Sundari Mandir, a 1501 Kali temple where a steady stream of pilgrims make almost endless animal sacrifices that leave the grounds as bloody as the temple's vivid-red vihara. Even more people come here at the big Diwali festival (October/November) to bathe in the fish-filled tank over which the two-storey concrete Gonabati Yatri Niwas Lodge (dm/d Rs 66/165) offers views from simple rooms. Book through Tripura Tourism (☎ 0381-2225930).

The temple is 100m east of the NH44, 4km south of Udaipur.

Neermahal & Melagarh

Tripura's most iconic building, Neermahal is a long, red-and-white water palace (admission Rs 3; 9am-4pm) shimmering on its own boggy island in Rudra Sagar Lake. The delightful waterborne approach (per motorised/hand-rowed boat Rs 150/75) is the most enjoyable part of visiting this 1930 royal folly, whose interior is bare and could use a lick of paint. If there are enough people staying at the tourist lodge, the palace organises a sound-and-light show.

Boats leave from near the remarkably decent Sagarmahal Tourist Lodge (☎ 0381-2544418; dm Rs 66, d with AC from Rs 330-440, d without AC from Rs 165;) where most rooms have lake-facing balconies and there's a good restaurant. The lodge is 1km off the Agartala–Sonamura road, 1.3km from Melagarh bus stand.

Getting There & Away

Frequent, ever-stopping buses bound for Belonia or Sapbrum stop briefly at the Udaipur bus stand and Matabari. From Udaipur to Melagarh, minibuses (Rs 13, 50 minutes) leave the Udaipur bus stand at 7.30am, 10.30am, 11.30am and 3.10pm. Alternatively, you might consider chartering a van direct to Neermahal (Rs 450, 25 minutes). The last sumos back from Melagarh to Agartala (Rs 20, 1½ hours) leave around 4pm.

NORTH TRIPURA

Around 180km from Agartala, North Tripura's regional centre is Kailasahar, where the excellent new Unakoti Tourist Lodge (☎ 223635; d without/with AC Rs 165/330) is a real bargain. Unakoti itself, around 10km away, is an ancient pilgrimage centre famous for 8th-century bas-relief rock carvings, including a 10m-high Shiva. Reaching Kailasahar from Agartala requires transiting Tripura's most sensitive areas. Foreign tourists are very rare and will turn heads.

NAGALAND

The Naga peoples originated in Southeast Asia and are distributed all along the India/Myanmar border. However, in Nagaland they form a majority everywhere except Dimapur. For centuries some 20 headhunting Naga tribes valiantly fought off any intruders. In between they kept busy by fighting each other and developing mutually unintelligible languages. Today inter-tribe communication uses a 'neutral' lingua franca called Nagamese (a sort of market Assamese). Major Naga groups include the developed Angami and Rengma of Kohima district, the Lotha of Wokha district (locally famed for their cooking) and the Konyak of Mon district, whose villages have the most striking traditional architecture. For festivals, Naga women wear a hand-woven shawl that's distinctive for each subtribe, while the men dust off their old warrior wear, loin cloth and all.

It's festival Nagaland that most tourists imagine when booking a Nagaland tour. And Kohima's December Hornbill Festival easily justifies the trip. At other times (except perhaps in rural Mon district), some visitors find the contrasting lack of spectacle to be a disappointment. But if you lower your expectations from those National Geographic images, there's still lots of interest in meeting a people whose culture, in the words of one Indian journalist, has been through '1000 years in a lifetime'.

See www.nagalandtourism.com for information and p592 for permit advice.

Dangers & Annoyances

Since 1947 Naga insurgents have battled for an independent Nagaland and some remote areas are partially under rebel control. Most major Nagaland towns are stable, though can't be considered totally safe. Always check the current security situation before visiting anywhere in the region. Even in Kohima virtually everything closes by 7pm and travel by night is highly discouraged. You're not expected to wander into Naga villages unaccompanied: ask permission from the local headman. Even if you have a guide, you'll possibly be expected to employ another local guide for each specific district. Guides can be twitchy about taking back roads for fear of jeep-eating potholes and armed bandit rebels charging hefty 'tolls'.

DIMAPUR

Nagaland's flat, largely uninspiring commercial centre was the capital of a big Kachari kingdom that ruled much of Assam before the Ahoms showed up. All that remains are some curious, strangely phallic pillars of a former palace complex dotted about scraggy Rajbari Park (admission free) near an interesting market. The only reason tourists visit Dimapur is to transfer to Kohima. Right beside the NST bus station, the Tourist Lodge (☎ 226355; Kohima Rd; dm/s/d Rs 40/150/200) is a basic but acceptable budget option. Hotel Avilyn (☎ 230245; Kohima Rd; s/d Rs 500/700, with AC from Rs 700/945; ✈) halfway to Rajbari Park is trendy, friendly and super clean. Indian (Alliance) Airlines (☎ 229366/242441) flies in daily from Kolkata (US$130, 1¼ hours). The airport is 400m off the Kohima road, 3km out of town. NST buses runs hourly services to Kohima (normal/super Rs 55/64, three hours) and daily to Shillong (Rs 284, 12½ hours). Useful overnight trains run to Guwahati at 9pm (6¾ hours) and to Dibrugarh at 10.20pm (eight hours).

Sights & Activities

An immaculate War Cemetery contains graves of 1200 British and Indian soldiers killed fighting the Japanese during an intense 64-day WWII battle. This reached its climax on the deputy commissioner's tennis court (still marked) with seven days of incredibly short-range grenade-lobbing across the net. Deuce!

The superb State Museum (☎ 2220749; admission Rs 5; 🕑 10am-3.30pm Tue-Sun), 3km north, includes a guide to tribal shawl designs and plenty of mannequin-in-action scenes depicting traditional Naga lifestyles.

At the fascinating if tiny central market (Stadium Approach; 🕑 6am-4pm), tribal people sell such 'edible' delicacies as wriggling hornet grubs (borol).

Kisama Heritage Village (adult/child/car/bus Rs 5/5/5/10; 🕑 8am-4.30pm winter, 8am-6pm summer) is an open-air museum 10km down the well-paved Imphal road. The collection of traditional-style Naga buildings fully represents differing tribal styles, including traditional morungs (bachelor dormitories) and a full-size log drum. Nagaland's biggest annual event, the Hornbill Festival (1–7 December), is held here with various Naga tribes converging for a colourful week-long cultural, sporting and costumed dance celebration. This is the best opportunity to see Naga tribal 'warriors' in their traditional garb.

NAGA CULTURE

Naga villages are perched defensively on top of impregnable ridge tops. Although often appearing essentially modern, many are still subdivided into *khel*s guarded by ceremonial karu gates. The most interesting gates retain their massively heavy, strikingly carved wooden or stone doors. Although exact designs vary considerably, the central motif is usually a Naga warrior between the horns of a mithun (distinctive local bovine), with sun, moon, breasts (for fertility) and weaponry all depicted. A sign of wealth, mithun skulls also once adorned traditional Naga houses whose designs typically had rounded or Torajan-shaped prow-fronts. Traditional Naga houses are vanishing as the modern world catches up with Nagaland, but you can still see them in rural areas, particularly the Konyak villages of Mon district, where you might also still find vast hollow tree-trunk drums. Villages that are not yet 100% Christian retain morungs (bachelor dormitories) where non-Christian young men live communally while learning traditional skills.

Headhunting was officially outlawed in 1935, with the last recorded occurrence in 1963. Nonetheless, severed heads are still an archetypal artistic motif found notably on yanra pendants that originally denoted the number of human heads a warrior had taken. Some intervillage wars continued into the 1980s, and a curious feature of many outwardly modern church-crowned settlements are their recently inscribed 'treaty stones' recording peace settlements between neighbouring communities.

Simultaneously Kohima also hosts a play-off rock festival (www.hornbillmusic.com).

Sleeping & Eating

Capital Hotel (☎ 2224365; Main Rd; s/d from Rs 100/150) One of several cheapies across from the NST bus station, rooms are unusually clean for the price and views are fabulous from the shared rear balcony.

Viewpoint Lodge (☎ 2241826; 3rd fl, Keditsu Bldg, PR Hill; s/d Rs 700/1000) Perched above two handy internet cafés at Police Station Junction (1km south of the bus station), Viewpoint Lodge offers sparklingly clean rooms with neatly tiled floors. Curfew is 9pm.

Hotel Japfü (☎ 2240211; hoteljapfu@yahoo.co.in; PR Hill; s/d Rs 900/1200) This high-service hotel on a small hill directly above Police Station Junction has glassed-in balconies, hot showers and only slightly worn décor.

Popular Bakery (PR Hill; 🕔 5.30am-8.30pm) Stroll two minutes down the hill from Viewpoint Lodge for delicious breakfast pastries.

Dream Café (☎ 2290756; cnr Dimapur & Imphal roads; instant coffee Rs 10; 🕔 10am-6pm) Beneath UCO Bank is Kohima's youth meeting point, with twice-monthly live minigigs and CDs of Naga music for sale from hip-hop to choral to heavy rock.

Getting There & Away

The NST bus station offers many Nagaland services, including regular shuttles to Dimapur (normal/super Rs 55/64, three hours). Private buses to Guwahati (Rs 330 to 375, 13 to 15 hours) depart around 2.30pm from Old Minister Hill, some 200m east of Police Station Junction. From that junction, frequent minibuses battle through the traffic to the New Secretariat or pass close to the museum.

AROUND KOHIMA

Khonoma

A painfully potholed 18km from Kohima, this historic Angami-Naga village was twice besieged by Brits but now sits idyllically amid flowers and pomelo trees, squash gourd vines, and megaliths, graves and dahu circles. Houses are not antique but some are still decorated with mithun skulls (denoting hunting prowess/wealth). Several karu stone gateways retain stylised pictogram 'doors'. Through one of these, steps lead up to the 'fort' for panoramic views. The best of three simple homestay-guesthouses is Via Meru's House (per person Rs 200).

Tuophema

If you're driving between Kohima and Mokokchung, an intriguing overnight option is Tuophema Tourist Village (☎ 0370-2270786; s/d/tr Rs 800/1200/1200) where you sleep in comfortable but traditionally styled Naga thatched bungalows set in a delightful flower garden with great sunset views. The cultural programme is excellent.

NORTHERN NAGALAND

To find semitraditional Naga villages that are at all accessible by road, your best bet is exploring the Mon district villages of the Konyak tribe. The town of Mon is not an attraction but does have a small tribal museum and some basic accommodation. However, in rural Mon villages you're still likely to come across tattooed people in loincloths, some still living in communal longhouses. Shangnyu village has a totem pole depicting warriors with giant phalluses. Langmeang (35km) has a relatively high proportion of traditional Naga houses and a log-drum. Effectively the only way to reach these places is on a tour (see p595 for agencies). Mon is more accessible from Sivasagar (Assam, p605) than from Kohima, and Dimapur–Mon buses drive via Assam.

ARUNACHAL PRADESH

The 'Land of Dawn-lit Mountains' grips northern Assam in an embrace of densely forested ridges. These rise to some fabulous snow-capped peaks along the Chinese border. In Arunachal's deep-cut foothill valleys live at least 65 different tribal groups (101 by some counts) with bucolic cultures and photogenic bamboo-house settlements. High in the beautiful Tawang Valley are several splendid Tibetan-Buddhist monastery villages. China has never formally recognised Indian sovereignty here and it took their surprise invasion of 1962 before Delhi really started funding significant infrastructure. The Chinese voluntarily withdrew. Now border passes are heavily guarded by the Indian military, but the overall atmosphere is extremely calm. Sadly permits (see p592) remain annoying and expensive enough to deter most potential foreign visitors.

Arunachal Tourism (www.arunachaltourism.com) offers more information.

ITANAGAR

Built since 1972, Arunachal's pleasantly green, tailor-made capital is named for the mysterious Ita Fort whose utterly dull brick ruins crown a hill top 2km above town. For tourists Itanagar is mainly useful for its helicopter and sumo connections to Central Arunachal.

With oversized rooms and endless underutilised foyer space, Hotel Arun Subansiri (☎ 2212806; Zero Point; s/d Rs 700/900) is a good accommodation choice. It's within walking distance of the decent State Museum (☎ 2222518; admission Rs 50; ⏰ 9.30am-5pm Tue-Sat) and a colourful little Tibetan Temple. Some cheaper guesthouses, like Itafort Hotel (☎ 2212590; s/d Rs 250/400, with AC Rs 500/600), are 300m west around Bank Tinali junction. Here Sahara (☎ 2291284) offers private buses to Tezpur and sumos to Pasighat (Rs 300, 5.30am), Along (Rs 350, 5.30am and 5pm) and Ziro (Rs 300, 5.30am and 11.30am).

From the APST bus station (Ganga Market), 3km further west, buses leave at dawn to Along, Tezpur (Rs 110, four hours) and Pasighat (Rs 160) via North Lakhimpur (Rs 42, 1½ hours), where you'll find the nearest airport (Lilabari).

Helicopter tickets are only sold at Naharlagun Helipad (☎ 2243262; ⏰ 7.30am-4pm Mon-Sat). That's 16km east of Itanagar's Zero-Point. Flights run daily (except Sunday) to Guwahati (Rs 3000) and weekly to many destinations, including Along (Rs 3300), Ziro (Rs 1200), Tuting (Rs 4400), Daporijo (Rs 1550) and Pasighat (Rs 2200).

CENTRAL ARUNACHAL PRADESH

☎ 03788

More plateau than valley, Ziro's rice fields and fenced bamboo groves are attractively cupped by highland pine-clad hills. Tall babo poles and traditional lapang meeting platforms add interest to the tight-packed villages of the utterly intriguing Apatani tribe. The voyeuristic main attraction here is meeting older Apatani women who sport alarming facial tattoos and

FACIAL TATTOOING

Historically famous for their beauty, Apatani women were all too often kidnapped by warriors of the neighbouring Nishi tribes. As a 'defence', Apatani girls were deliberately defaced. They received facial tattoos, like graffitied beards scribbled onto living Mona Lisa paintings and into holes cut in their upper nostrils were fitted extraordinary nose plugs known as dat, sometimes the size of US quarters.

Peace with the Nishis in the 1960s meant the end to that brutal practice. But many women in their 50s and older still wear dat. Photography is an understandably sensitive issue: snapping a lady because of her imposed 'ugliness' is pretty distasteful and some Apatani women have had cosmetic surgery to remove their tattoos.

CENTRAL ARUNACHAL'S TRIBAL GROUPS

Adi (Abor), Nishi, Tajin, Hill Miri and various other Tibeto-Burman tribes of Central Arunachal Pradesh consider themselves very self-consciously different from one another. But most are at least distantly related. Most traditionally practise Donyi-Polo (sun and moon) worship. For ceremonial occasions, village chiefs typically wear scarlet shawls and a bamboo-wicker hat spiked with porcupine quill or hornbill feather. A few old men still wear their hair long, tied around to form a top knot above their foreheads. Women favour hand-woven wraparounds like Southeast Asian sarongs. House designs vary somewhat. Traditional Adi villages are generally the most photogenic with luxuriant palmyra-leaf thatching and stilted granaries that are ingeniously protected from mice using 'mushroom stones' (sizeable disks between the stone stilts and the base of the building to keep the rats from climbing in).

bizarre nose plugs (see above). People-watching is best just before dusk when villagers return from their rice fields. The most authentic Apatani villages are Hong (biggest and best known), Dutta (atmospheric and easier to reach), Hari, Bamin and Hijo. None are more than 10km apart.

There's a weekly helicopter service to undistinguished Ziro town from Naharlagun (Itanagar, Rs 1200). Sprawling Hapoli (New Ziro), starting 7km further south, has all the hotels and road transport. Highland Hotel (☎ 225238; MG Rd, s/d/deluxe Rs 170/300/400) and Hotel Valley View (☎ 225398; JN Complex, MG Rd; s/d Rs 400/500) are acceptable choices near the main markets. Hotel Blue Pine (☎ 224812; s/d Rs 300/450) is a friendly alternative with a creditable restaurant albeit a slightly long walk from town (unlit at night). Hot water by bucket.

Sumos depart from Hapoli's main market to Itanagar (Rs 200, 6½ hrs) and North Lakhimpur (Rs 144, 4½ hours) around 5.15am and again around 10.30am. The journey has some particularly beautiful forest sections. Jeeps to Daporijo (Rs 200, 11am) leave from an unmarked shop (☎ 225100) beside Pearl Cafe (Hapoli–Ziro road).

Ziro to Pasighat

A peaceful lane winds on and on through forested hills and tribal settlements linking Pasighat to the fascinating Ziro Valley. Highlights are dizzying suspension footbridges and thatched Adi villages around Along. If everything was closer together, this would be one of the northeast's most popular tourist trails. However, as it is, the journey from Ziro to Pasighat typically requires at least three exhausting days of jeep travel, by which time the area's gentle charms can start to wear a little thin.

☎ 03792 / pop 14,000 / elev 699m

You have little choice but to sleep in sprawling, attractively set 'Dapo' if transiting from Ziro to Along. The four-room Circuit House (☎ 223250; d Rs 300) is scenically plonked on a hill top overlooking town through a bamboo veil. Otherwise the best market-area option is Hotel Santanu (☎ 223531; New Market; s/d from Rs 200/300), with faulty plumbing but serving good local delicacies in the cheerless restaurant (try papuk – chicken in banana-flower broth, Rs 60). Nishi and Hill Miri bamboo-and-thatch villages around Daporijo lack the grace of Adi equivalents near Along, but occasional bamboo totem poles commemorate the recently deceased. They're strung with cane and bamboo-thread loops and often topped, surreally, with an umbrella.

ALONG (AALO)

☎ 03783 / pop 20,000 / elev 302m

This friendly, nondescript market town has an Internet Café (Abu-Tani Centre, Nehru Chowk; 🕑 6.30am-7pm) opposite the APST bus station and an informative little District Museum (☎ 222214; admission free; 🕑 9am-4.30pm Mon-Fri), 300m east selling Adi-related books. A great guide is English-speaking local farmer Taje Komut (☎ 224653; from Rs 1500 per day), who knows many strenuous village trails and is a mine of interesting information.

The best accommodation choice is Hotel Holiday Cottage (☎ 222463; Hospital Hill; s/d Rs 250/400) southwest of the helipad.

AROUND ALONG

An accessible yet relatively unspoilt thatched Adi village is Paia. Drive 8km west of Along (1km beyond Podbi), then walk 15 minutes across the footbridge and up. Returning you can stroll 3km along the riverbank then cross back to Kabu using a picturesque but very wobbly cane-trussed suspension bridge. Both Kabu and Podbi are on the Along–Tato road. There are many other picturesque Adi villages en route to Pasighat, notably Lokpeng (17km) and Koreng (88km, 2km before Pangin town).

☎ 0368

Nestled before a curtain of luxuriantly forested foothills, Pasighat holds the Minyong-Adi tribe's Solung Festival (1–5 September), while Adi Banekebang (☎ 2104075; taringtabi@rediffmail.com) publishes Adi books and is making a movie about Adi history. Sleep at friendly, central Hotel Oman (☎ 2224464; s/d Rs 300/450) or plusher Hotel Aane (☎ 2223333; tw/d Rs 600/1000, d with AC Rs 1500), which has hot showers and an appealing rooftop terrace.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Helicopters from Pasighat Aerodrome (☎ 2222088; ⌚ 8am-noon Mon-Sat), 3km northeast, serve Naharlagun (Itanagar) via Mohanbari (Dibrugarh) on Monday, Wednesday and Friday, Guwahati via Naharlagun on Tuesday and Tuting via Along on Friday.

The inconveniently located APST bus station has services to Along (Rs 100, 5½ hours) at 7am daily (except Wednesday) and Itanagar (Rs 170) at 6am (except Monday). Sumos run to Along (Rs 200, 5½ hours) at 6am and Hotel Siang (☎ 2224559) sells jeep-boat-jeep combination tickets (Rs 250, eight hours) to Dibrugarh via the DKO ferry. This departs from Oriamghat (Assam), a lonely sandbank 30km from Pasighat (7km off the NH52). En route notice photogenic Sille village set in wide rice fields 20km from Pasighat (NH52, Km 523).

WESTERN ARUNACHAL PRADESH

Culturally magical and scenically spectacular, a mountain-hopping journey to Tawang's 'little Tibet' is one of the northeast's greatest attractions. Ideally budget at least five days' return from Guwahati (or Tezpur) breaking the journey each way at Dirang or less interesting Bomdila. Consider stopping at Nameri's wonderful Eco-Camp (p602), too. Be prepared for intense cold in winter.

Bhalukpong to Tawang

Permits are checked in Bhalukpong (p602). The road winds up through lush mature forest then through once-lovely river dales (now marred by military camps) before mountaintop Bomdila (☎ 03782, elevation 2682m). Bomdila has sumo connections, many hotels and the reliable tour-agency Himalayan Holiday (☎ 222017; www.himalayan-holidays.com; ABC Bldg, Main Market). However Dirang (☎ 03780, elevation 1621m) is more appealing. Fabulous Old Dirang is an almost picture-perfect Tibetan-Monpa stone village. The main road divides its squat, rocky minicitadel from a huddle of photogenic stream-side houses above which rises a steep ridge topped with a timeless gompa. All Dirang's commercial services are in New Dirang, 5.5km further north. New Dirang is, by contrast, an ordinary valley town, but it's not unpleasant and there's a small huddle of cheap hotels, eateries and sumo counters around the central crossroads. Dirang Resort (☎ 242352; IB Rd; d Rs 650-700) is a friendly, family hotel in an old-style hill house with walls like Battenburg cake and a wooden wraparound balcony. Dirang's most comfortable option is Hotel Pemaling (☎ 242615; d standard/deluxe/ste Rs 700/1500/2000), 1km south overlooking New Dirang. Suites have great views towards the sometimes snow-bound 4176m Sela Pass, across which the endlessly zigzagging road continues eventually to Tawang.

Calling the Tawang Valley a valley just doesn't do justice to its incredible scale. Ringed by immense mountains, it's a vast sweep of field-patched sloping plateaux dotted with Buddhist monasteries, prayer wheels and archetypal Tibetan-style villages. Semi-hidden Rhou, 18km before Tawang, is an especially picturesque example. By far the valley's biggest tourist drawcard is magical Tawang Gompa (☎ 222243; admission free; ⌚ dawn-dusk). Founded in 1681, this self-contained medieval citadel is reputedly the world's second-largest Buddhist monastery complex. The 3km approach from Tawang town offers several wonderful vantage points, the gompa framing a spiky backdrop of snow-speckled peaks. Within its fortified walls, narrow alleys divide three whitewashed rows of monks' dwellings leading up to the hulking, colourful prayer house (heavily restored between 1992 and 1997). Across the gompa's central square is a small but interesting museum (admission/camera/video Rs 20/20/100; ⌚ 7am-sunset on request).

Many other enchanting gompas and anigompas (nunneries) offer great day hikes from Tawang, including ancient if modest Urgelling Gompa, the birthplace of the sixth Dalai Lama. By road, that's 6km from Tawang town but it's much closer on foot, directly downhill from Tawang Gompa. About 10 minutes' walk from Urgelling on the main Dirang road, Tenzing Guesthouse (☎ 222893; s/d Rs 450/750, tr Rs 850-1000) is a wonderfully inviting, six-room homestay. Owner, Prem, speaks faultless English and can make suggestions for many fascinating hikes.

Tawang town, 3km from the gompa, is a transport hub and accommodation base whose setting is more beautiful than the town itself. Nonetheless, colourful prayer wheels add interest to the central old-market area. These are turned by apple-cheeked Monpa pilgrims, many of whom sport traditional woolly black gurden skull caps that look like giant Rastafarian spiders. Just 50m east is Monyul Cyber Café (Rs 50; 8.30am-8pm). PL Traders (☎ 222987) sells handicrafts, including embroidered shoulder bags (Rs 100).

Tawang has roughly around 20 small hotels. Tourist Lodge (☎ 222359; tw Rs 200) is a slightly tatty but very good-value option with hot showers and renovations underway. It's 150m above the main drag. Outwardly smart, pseudo-Tibetan Hotel Gourichan (☎ 224151; s Rs 350, d Rs 600-900) dominates the upper old-market area and although rooms aren't as plush as the exterior suggests, they all have bathrooms with geyser. If Gourichan is full, try the Hotel Dungphoo (☎ 223765; d/tr with shared bathroom Rs 350/400, d with private bathroom Rs 600) behind it. Tawang Inn (☎ 224096; d/ste from Rs 880/1650), which you enter from a back lane 400m southeast of the market, is central Tawang's most polished choice.

Getting There & Away

From Lumla, 42km towards Zemithang from Tawang, helicopters (Rs 3000, two hours) fly Monday and Wednesday to Guwahati. APST buses run Tezpur–Dirang (Rs 205, 7½ hours) daily and Tawang–Bomdila (Rs 170, eight hours) via Dirang (Rs 130, 6½ hours) on alternate days. Public sumos to Tezpur depart at dawn from Tawang (343km), Dirang (218km) and Bomdila (162km).

MIZORAM

Seen from the sky, Mizoram seems to have been ploughed by a forgetful god who left the deep north-south furrows with a green fuzz of bamboo. Mizoram is tidy and almost entirely Christian. You'll see very few Indian faces amongst the local Thai-Chinese style features. People are surreally but uninvasively friendly. Don't be surprised if you're warmly thanked by total strangers for bothering to visit their state.

Mizoram runs entirely to its own rhythm. Most businesses are long shut by 6pm, and virtually everything closes tight on Sunday. Forget breakfast-lunch-dinner, Mizos traditionally have two main meals, zingchaw (morning meal, 9am to 10am) and tlaichaw (afternoon meal, 4pm to 6pm). Both feature rice, boiled leaves, boiled vegetables and boiled fatty smoked-pork alongside. Flavour is added using rawt, a salsa of diced chillies, ginger and onion. On paper Mizoram is a dry state but friendly, wobbling drunks are surprisingly common.

Mizo culture has no caste distinctions and women seem pretty liberated; in Aizawl girls smoke openly, wear jeans and hang out in unchaperoned posses meeting up with their beaus at rock concerts on the central field. Musical tastes favour gospel, Megadeath and Avril Lavigne, preferably all combined (yes, they try!). Similarly curious are the Aizawl Thunders, Mizoram's local biker gang who despite their leathers and growling Enfields are determinedly democratic.

History

About every 50 years Mizoram's endless bamboo forests flower for three seasons, producing millions of egg-shaped fruit. Although inedible to humans, these fruit are adored by rats, which multiply rapidly to enjoy the free feast. But after the third year the bamboo stops fruiting. Suddenly hungry, the rats swarm onto anything else edible, notably human crops. This last happened in 1959 causing a serious famine. The Indian government's inept response left Mizos feeling entirely abandoned. The Mizo Famine Front (MFF) later spawned the Mizo National Front (MNF) insurgents. In 1966 they launched a stunning surprise raid, briefly capturing Mizoram's then-tiny capital Aizawl. India's appallingly heavy-handed response was the infamous 'grouping' policy. The entire rural population was corralled into virtual concentration camps. The old jhumming hamlets were then destroyed to deprive insurgents of resources (so don't look for ancient 'traditional' homes in Mizoram). Obviously such tactics backfired massively, creating a huge wave of support for the rebels. However, after two decades of fighting, the 1986 cease-fire led to a lasting peace settlement. Today the MNF holds a majority in the democratically elected state government and Mizoram is proud of being the safest state in the northeast. Many Mizos remain bemused as to how their 'country' ever got attached to India. But everyone's relieved that at least they didn't end up within Myanmar. In late 2006 the bamboo forests started flowering again. Let's hope that everyone will be better prepared for the inevitable in 2009.

PERMITS

Agencies, notably Omega Travels (below), can arrange paperwork and fax you a permit copy. This gets you through arrival formalities, but once in Aizawl collect the original and take it to SP-CID (see right) for registration. Officially permits limit you to Aizawl district but with an unofficial nod from SP-CID you might be OK travelling further afield.

AIZAWL

Balanced precariously on a razor-sharp ridge, Aizawl (pronounced eye-zole) could well be the world's steepest capital. Homes at road level might be held there with rear stilts three times higher than their roofs. In comparison, San Francisco seems as flat as Florida.

Addresses refer to areas and junctions ('points' or 'squares'). The unnamed spaghetti of roads and steep linking stairways are confusing, but the central ridge road is reasonably flat linking Zodin Sq (old bus station), Upper Bazaar (shops), Zarkawt (hotels and long-distance sumos) and Chandmari (east Mizoram sumos). This section is walkable, although appalling rush-hour traffic creates suffocating fumes.

Sights

Mizoram State Museum (☎ 2340936; Zarkawt; admission Rs 5; 11am-3.30pm Mon-Fri) has interesting exhibits on Mizo culture. It's up a steep lane from Sumkuma Point past Aizawl's most distinctive church, whose modernist bell-tower spire is pierced by arched 'windows'.

The Salvation Army 'Temple' (Zodin Sq) has bell chimes that are endearingly complex.

The KV Paradise (Durtlang; admission Rs 5; 10am-9pm Mon-Sat, noon-9pm Sun) site is 8km from Zarkawt, 1km off the Aizawl–Silchar road via an improbably narrow mud lane. V is for Varte who died in a 2001 motor accident. K is for her husband Khawlhring who has since lavished his entire savings and energy creating a three-storey mausoleum complex to her memory. The marble fountain-patio has wonderful panoramic views. Inside an odd collection displays Varte's wardrobe and shoe collection. Locals call it Mizoram's Taj Mahal, but being a school principal not a Mughal emperor, Khawlhring's 'Christian Taj' isn't quite Agra-sized.

Sleeping

ZARKAWT

There's a convenient concentration of lower midrange hotels around Zarkawt's Sumkuma Point.

Chawlhna Hotel (☎ 2346418; s Rs 170-300, d Rs 260-600, s/d with shared bathroom Rs 100/200) The ever-popular Chawlhna has a mixed bag of rooms and is entered from a side alley 200m south of Sumkuma Point.

Hotel Tropicana (☎ 2346156; hoteltropicana@rediffmail.com; s Rs 170-250, d Rs 450-550) Right at Sumkuma Point roundabout, the Tropicana's better doubles are rather cosy with fitted curtains, ethnic furniture and balcony.

Hotel Chief (☎ 2346418; s Rs 480-540, d Rs 540-650) Almost next door to the Chawlhna, the friendly Hotel Chief is somewhat more polished with neat tiled floors and almost-hot geysers.

ZEMABAWK

Tourist Home (☎ 2352067; Mizoram Science Centre; d Rs 350-500) High above Zemabawk, some 11km

from Zarkawt, the peaceful Tourist Home has great new rooms and older, mustier cottages. The hill top setting is idyllic and Aizawl's best viewpoint is just a 10-minute stroll away.

Eating

David's Kitchen (☎ 2341263; Zarkawt; mains Rs 65-210; ⏰ 10am-10pm Mon-Sat) David's fine Indian, Chinese and continental food, mocktails, friendly staff and pleasant décor are undermined by incessant Kenny G music. It's 200m south of Hotel Chief.

Mizo food can be found around the bazaar but is especially good at roadside family restaurants in Selling village, halfway to Saitual.

On Sundays hotels are pretty much your only hope for sustenance.

Indian Airlines (☎ 344733) and Air Deccan (www.airdeccan.com) fly Aizawl–Kolkata (one hour) daily. Indian also serves Guwahati (US$91, one hour) most days and Imphal (US$61, 30 minutes) thrice weekly. Efficient little Lengpui airport is 35km west. Taxis charge Rs 500. A 9am airport minibus service (☎ 2573384; Rs 100) runs from Hotel Ritz (Upper Bazaar) returning around 2pm once the Air Deccan flight has arrived. Obliging minibus-organiser Malsoma (☎ 9436374454) also rents a new sumo jeep (Rs 15 per km, Rs 2000 per day minimum).

Counters for long-distance sumos are conveniently clustered around Zarkawt's Sumkuma Point. For Saitual the most central are RKV (☎ 2305452) and Nazareth in Chandmari. For details, see below.

Getting Around

Frequent city buses run Zodin Sq–Upper Bazaar–Zarkawt–Chandmari-Lower Chatlang–Zasanga Point, then either climb to Durtlang or curl right round past the new Chunga Bus Station (6km) to Zemabawk. Maruti–Suzuki taxis are ubiquitous and reasonably priced.

SERVICES FROM AIZAWL

RURAL MIZORAM

Mizoram's pretty, green hills get higher as you head east. Champhai is widely considered the most attractive district. But for a more accessible taste of small-town Mizo life, visit Saitual. An incredibly good-value Tourist Lodge (☎ 2562395; d Rs 150) in a hill-top garden, 700m north of Saitual market, offers extensive views. There's little to do but meet the locals and find some biscuits for dinner. However, a very bumpy 10km side trip to Tamdil Lake is mildly memorable. This local beauty spot is ringed by lush mountains, patches of poinsettia and a few musty if pleasantly situated cottages (d Rs 300). There are paddle boats to rent (Rs 10), but no café.

MANIPUR

This 'Jewelled Land' is home to Naga, Kuki, Chin and many other tribal peoples but the main grouping is the predominantly neo-Vaishnavite Meitei, who are battling to have Meitei script used in local schools. Manipuris are famed for traditional dances, spicy multi-dish thalis and the sport of polo that they claim to have invented. Manipur's forested hills provide cover for rare birds, drug traffickers and dozens of guerrilla armies making it by far the northeast's most dangerous state. Foreigners who miraculously manage to get a permit are required to fly in and out via the capital, Imphal. Even there safety can not be assured.

Imphal has a tourist office (☎ 224603; http://manipur.nic.in/tourism.htm), State Museum and what is supposedly the world's tallest topiary bush (http://imphalwest.nic.in/sambanlei.html). The Shri Govindajee Mandir has two rather suggestive domes.

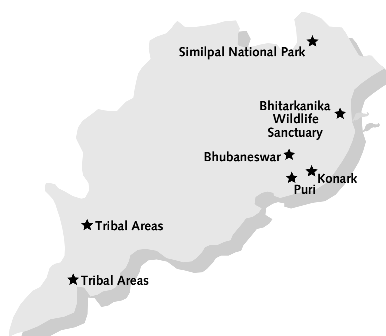
Lokpaching battlefield (Red Hill), 16km south of Imphal, has WWII graves and a Japanese memorial. Loktak Lake, known for floating 'islands' of thick matted weeds, is reportedly home to the rare Sangai 'dancing deer'.

Air Deccan (DN; ☎ 1800 4257008; www.airdeccan.net), Indian Airlines (IC; ☎ 2220999) and IndiGo (6E; ☎ 9910383838; http://book.goindigo.in) all offer flights into Manipur.

Orissa



Orissa is a captivating state with diverse, vibrant living cultures and an unrivalled architectural legacy. It's where mighty temple chariots carrying powerful deities are pulled through city streets by a heaving throng of devotees, where serene stone carvings of exceptional beauty continue to be excavated from early Buddhist sites and where Adivasis (tribal people) maintain remarkable traditions that predate many of the great empires of the subcontinent.

Orissa is also celebrated for its natural heritage: elephants and tigers crash and prowl through the Eastern Ghats at Similipal National Park, a key tiger reserve. Chilika Lake, Asia's largest lagoon, hosts the rare Irrawaddy dolphin as well as millions of migratory birds, including pink flamingos. Bhitarkanika Wildlife Sanctuary has dolphins, a surfeit of birdlife and monster crocodiles. In January masses of olive ridley turtles pull themselves up onto Orissa's long beaches to lay their eggs; two months later, thousands of tiny hatchlings crawl to the sea.

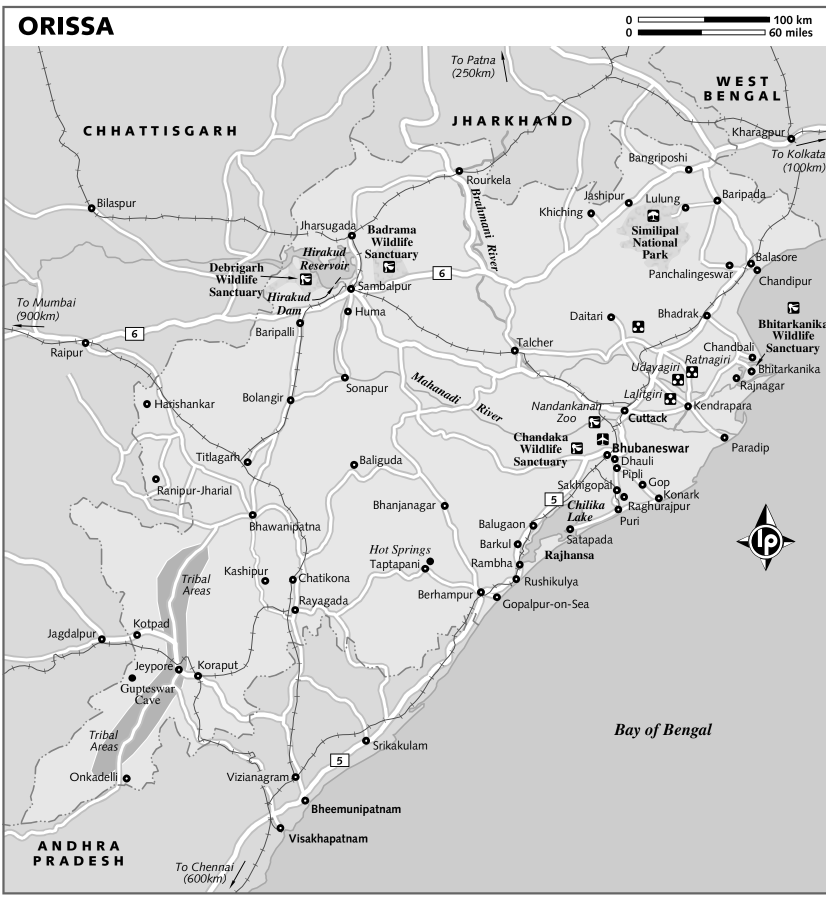
Ancient civilisations and tradition resonate through contemporary Orissa. Witness the grand Sun Temple of Konark, a dream of genius adorned with a storyboard of Orissan life. Modern artistry is no less adept with stone carving, painting, silverwork and textiles in abundance.

Many of Orissa's attractions are clustered along the coast where weary travellers can also find inexpensive seaside retreats. Inland there's a different India, where tribes live precariously on the edge of mainstream society, yet manage to retain their colourful, fascinating traditions.

HIGHLIGHTS

- Exercise the eyes viewing exquisite carvings of the everyday, the exotic and the erotic at the renowned Sun Temple (p649) in Konark
- Mind your mandirs as you explore the myriad carved stone temples (p628) in old Bhubaneswar
- Follow Lord Jagannath's mighty car through Puri in the Rath Yatra (p645), one of India's most spectacular festivals
- Spy on wild elephants and just maybe an elusive tiger in the jungles of Similipal National Park (p656)
- Spot rare Irrawaddy dolphins, crocodiles, lizards, flashy kingfishers and herons as your boat chugs through the mangroves of Bhitarkanika Wildlife Sanctuary (p658)
- Rest your weary limbs and indulge in a surplus of seafood in laid-back Puri (p643)
- Explore Orissa's tribal areas (p654) to witness the distinctive Adivasi culture and barter for hand-beaten metal jewellery and tribal cloth

History



Despite having been a formidable maritime empire, with trading routes down into Indonesia, the history of Orissa (formerly Kalinga) is hazy until the demise of the Kalinga dynasty in 260 BC at the hands of the great emperor Ashoka. Appalled at the carnage he had caused, Ashoka forswore violence and converted to Buddhism.

Around the 1st century BC Buddhism declined and Jainism was restored as the faith of the people. During this period the monastery caves of Udayagiri and Khandagiri (p637) were excavated as important Jain centres.

By the 7th century AD, Hinduism had supplanted Jainism. Under the Kesari and Ganga kings, trade and commerce increased and Orissan culture flourished – countless temples from that classical period still stand. The Orissans defied the Muslim rulers in Delhi until finally falling to the Mughals during the 16th century, when many of Bhubaneswar's temples were destroyed.

FAST FACTS

- Population: 36.7 million
- Area: 155,707 sq km
- Capital: Bhubaneswar
- Main language: Oriya
- When to go: November to March

Until Independence, Orissa was ruled by Afghans, Marathas and the British.

At the end of the 1990s a Hindu fundamentalist group, Bajrang Dal, undertook a violent campaign against Christians in Orissa in response to missionary activity. Squeezed in the middle are the tribal people, targeted because they are 'easy souls', without power, and illiterate.

The creation of the neighbouring states of Jharkhand and Chhattisgarh has prompted calls for the formation of a separate, tribal-oriented state, Koshal, in the northwest of Orissa, with Sambalpur as the capital.

Climate

Monsoon time is July to October, when cyclones are likely. Cyclones and severe monsoonal rains can have substantial impacts on road and rail transport. A particularly devastating cyclone struck Orissa in 1999 causing significant damage and the loss of thousands of lives.

National Parks

In 2005 the admission fee for Orissa's wonderful national parks and wildlife sanctuaries was dramatically raised for foreigners to Rs 1000 per day. Because this fee increase is discouraging visits, it is being actively protested by Orissa's private tour companies and may change in the near future.

Information

Orissa Tourism (www.orissatourism.gov.in) has a presence in cities and most tours, with its office being a one-stop shop for information and tour/hotel booking. It also maintains a list of approved guides for tribal-area visits. Orissa Tourism Development Corporation (OTDC; www.panthanivas.com), the commercial arm of Orissa Tourism, runs tours and hotels throughout the state.

Dangers & Annoyances

Mosquitoes here have a record of being dengue and malaria carriers. Load yourself up with pills (see p1185), repellents and bring a mosquito net in case your hotel doesn't provide one.

Getting There & Away

Air routes connect Bhubaneswar with Delhi, Mumbai (Bombay), Chennai (Madras) and Kolkata (Calcutta). Major road and rail routes between Kolkata and Chennai pass through coastal Orissa and Bhubaneswar with spur connections to Puri. Road and rail connect Sambalpur with Kolkata, Chhattisgarh and Madhya Pradesh.

Getting Around

Public transport in the coastal region is good with ample long-distance buses and trains. For touring around the interior hiring a car is the best option.

FESTIVALS IN ORISSA

Makar Mela (2nd week of Jan; Kalijai Island, Chilika Lake, p650) Celebrates the sun entering the orbit of Capricorn. Surya, the sun god, is the attention of worship.

Adivasi Mela (26-31 Jan; Bhubaneswar, p628) Features art, dance and handicrafts of Orissa's tribal groups.

Magha Mela (Jan/Feb; Konark, p648) Sun festival, with pilgrims bathing en masse at the beach before sunrise then worshipping at the temple.

Maha Shivaratri (Feb/Mar; Bhubaneswar, p628) Devotees fast and perform pujas (prayers or offerings) throughout the night ready to witness the priest placing a sacred lamp on the top of Lingaraj Mandir.

Ashokastami (Apr/May; Bhubaneswar, p628) The idol of Lord Lingaraj is taken by chariot to Bindu Sagar for ritual bathing and then to Rameswaram Temple for a four-day stay.

Rath Yatra (Jun/Jul; Puri, p643) Immense chariots containing Lord Jagannath, brother Balbhadra and sister Subhadra are hauled from Jagannath Temple to Gundicha Mandir.

Beach Festival (Nov; Puri, p643) Song, dance, food and cultural activities, including sand artists, on the beach.

Tribal Festival (16-18 Nov; location varies) An exposition of Orissan tribal dances and music. Contact Orissa Tourism as the location changes yearly.

Baliyatra (Nov/Dec; Cuttack, p657) Four days commemorating past trading links with Indonesia. A huge fair is held on the river bank.

Konark Festival (1-5 Dec; Konark, p648) Features traditional music and dance and a seductive temple ritual. Festivities are in the open-air auditorium with the Sun Temple as the backdrop.

Bhubaneswar's rapid expansion has been tempered by the construction of wide avenues and the green belts; nevertheless a typically hectic, noisy, congested city centre greets the traveller. The old city's spiritual centre is around Bindu Sagar where, from the thousands that once stood here, 50-odd stone temples remain, survivors from the heyday of Orissan medieval temple architecture.

The city is also a base for day trips to Dhauli (p642), Konark (p648), Nandankanan Zoological Park (p642) and Cuttack (p657).

Orientation

Most lodgings, restaurants, banks and transport are within an area bounded by Cuttack Rd, Rajpath, Sachivajaya Marg and the train station.

Sights

BINDU SAGAR

Also known as Ocean Drop Tank, Bindu Sagar reputedly contains water from every holy stream, pool and tank in India – obviously a good place to wash away sin. During the Ashokastami festival (p627), the Lingaraj Mandir's deity is brought here for ritual bathing.

TEMPLES

Lingaraj Mandir and the other temples scattered around Bindu Sagar may suffice for many temple watchers, but for more, amble along to the cluster of temples by Lewis Rd. To see all the major temples, charter an autorickshaw for two to three hours (about Rs 300).

Lingaraj Mandir excludes non-Hindus and Raja Rani charges an entrance fee. Priests expect a donation; Rs 10 is reasonable. Consider it a guiding fee as undoubtedly the priest will reveal something about his temple.

Lingaraj Mandir

The 54m-high Lingaraj Mandir is dedicated to Tribhuvaneswar (Lord of Three Worlds). The temple dates from 1090 to 1104, although parts are over 1400 years old, and is surrounded by more than 50 smaller temples and shrines. The granite block, representing Tribhuvaneswar, is bathed daily with water, milk and bhang (marijuana). In the northeastern corner, there's an attractive temple to Parvati and a chamber where 51 beggars and 51 priests eat the daily food offerings that are purportedly consumed by Parvati. The main gate, guarded by two moustachioed yellow lions, is a spectacle in itself as lines of pilgrims approach, prasad (temple-blessed food offering) in hand.

Because the temple is surrounded by a wall, and closed to non-Hindus (Indira Gandhi wasn't allowed in, as her husband was a Parsi), foreigners can see it only from a viewing platform. Face the main entrance, walk around to the right and find the viewing platform down a short laneway to the left. You might be asked for a 'donation'; again, Rs 10 is enough. On the way you should see a couple of gigantic wheels used in the Ashokastami festival.

Vaital Mandir

This 8th-century temple, with a double-storey 'wagon roof' influenced by Buddhist cave architecture, was a centre of Tantric worship, eroticism and bloody sacrifice. Look closely and you'll see some very early erotic carvings on the walls. The grotesque Chamunda (Durga), representing old age and death, can be seen in the dingy interior, although her necklace of skulls and her bed of corpses are usually hidden beneath her temple robes.

Parsurameswar Mandir

Just west of Lewis Rd lies a cluster of about 20 smaller but important temples. Best preserved is Parsurameswar Mandir, an ornate Shiva temple built around AD 650. It has lively bas-reliefs of elephant and horse processions, and Shiva images.

Mukteswar, Siddheswar & Kedargauri Mandirs

Not far from Parsurameswar is the small, 10th-century Mukteswar Mandir, one of the most ornate temples in Bhubaneswar. Intricate carvings show a mixture of Buddhist, Jain and Hindu styles. The ceiling carvings and stone arch are particularly striking, as is the beautiful arched torana (architrave) in front, clearly showing Buddhist influence.

Siddheswar Mandir, in the same compound, is a later but plainer temple with a fine red-painted Ganesh.

Over the road is Kedargauri Mandir, one of the oldest temples in Bhubaneswar, although it has been substantially rebuilt.

Raja Rani Mandir

This temple (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100, video Rs 25; ⏲ dawn-dusk) is an Archaeological Survey of India (ASI) monument, hence the admission fee. Built around 1100 and surrounded by manicured gardens, it's famous for its ornate deul (temple sanctuary) and tower. Around the compass points are pairs of statues representing eight dikpalas (guardians) who protect the temple. Between them, nymphs, embracing couples, elephants and lions peer from niches and decorate the pillars.

Brahmeswar Mandir

Standing in well-kept gardens, flanked on its plinth by four smaller structures, this 9th-century temple is a smaller version of Lingaraj Mandir. It's notable for its finely detailed sculptures with erotic elements.

STATE MUSEUM

This museum (☎ 2431797; Lewis Rd; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/50; ⏲ 10am-4.30pm Tue-Sun) boasts Orissa's best collection of rare palm-leaf manuscripts, traditional and folk musical instruments, Bronze Age tools, an armoury and a fascinating display of Orissan tribal anthropology.

The magnificent collection of Buddhist and Jain sculptures, which is displayed in chronological order, constitutes the most important antiquities in the museum.

MUSEUM OF TRIBAL ARTS & ARTEFACTS

For anyone considering a visit to the tribal areas, this museum (☎ 2563649; admission free; ⏲ 10am-5pm, closed 2nd Sat in month), off National Hwy (NH) 5, is recommended. Dress, ornaments, weapons, household implements and musical instruments are displayed in well-lit and captioned galleries. Behind the galleries are five representative village houses furnished to illustrate traditional life.

ORISSA MODERN ART GALLERY

Housing a high standard of contemporary art by local artists, this small gallery (☎ 2595765; 132 Forest Park; admission free; ⏲ 11am-1.30pm & 4-8pm Mon-Sat, 4-8pm Sun) also has prints and originals for sale.

UDAYAGIRI & KHANDAGIRI CAVES

Six kilometres west of the city centre are two hills riddled with rock-cut shelters (admission to both sites Indian/foreigner Rs 55/100, video Rs 25, guides one side/both sides Rs 150/250; ⏲ dawn-dusk). Many are ornately carved and thought to have been chiselled out for Jain ascetics in the 1st century BC.

Udayagiri (Sunrise Hill) on the northern side has the more interesting caves. Ascend the ramp, noting Swargapuri (Cave 9) to the right with its devotional figures. Hathi Gumpha (Cave 14) at the top is plain, but a 117-line inscription relates the exploits of its builder, King Kharavela of Kalinga, who ruled from 168 to 153 BC.

Clamber up around to the left where you'll see Bagh Gumpha (Tiger Cave; Cave 12), with its entrance carved as a tiger mouth. Nearby are Pavana Gumpha (Cave of Purification) and small Sarpa Gumpha (Serpent Cave), where the tiny door is surmounted by a three-headed cobra. On the summit are the remains of a defensive position. As you descend around to the southeast you'll come to the single-storey elephant-guarded Ganesh Gumpha (Cave 10), almost directly above the two-storey Rani ka Naur (Queen's Palace Cave; Cave 1). This is the largest and most interesting of the caves and is carved with Jain symbols and battle scenes.

Continue back to the entrance via Chota Hathi Gumpha (Cave 3), with its carvings of elephants, and the double-storey Jaya Vijaya Cave (Cave 5) with a bodhi tree carved in the central compartment.

Across the road, Khandagiri offers fine views over Bhubaneswar from its summit. The steep path splits about one-third of the way up the hill. The right path goes to Ananta Cave (Cave 3), with its carved figures of athletes, women, elephants and geese carrying flowers. Further along is a series of Jain temples; at the top is another (18th-century) Jain temple.

Buses don't go to the caves, but plenty pass nearby on NH5, or take an autorickshaw (about Rs 60 one way).

REGIONAL SCIENCE CENTRE

Dinosaur-infatuated kiddies will love this parkland museum (☎ 2542795; Sachivajaya Marg; admission Rs 7; 🕑 10.30am-7pm Tue-Sun, 10am-5.30pm Mon) with its prehistoric beasties. Included in the admission is a 30-minute movie screened hourly. Other treats are hands-on demonstrations of the laws of physics and displays on astronomy and insects.

PATHANI SAMANTA PLANETARIUM

This interesting planetarium (☎ 2581613; JL Nehru Marg; admission Rs 12; 🕑 2-6pm Tue-Sun, show in English 4pm) features hour-long 'out-of-this-world' shows.

Tours

Orissa Tourism (☎ 2431299; www.orissatourism.gov.in; behind Panthanivas Bhubaneswar, Lewis Rd; 🕑 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd Sat in month) offers a free guided tour of Bhubaneswar's temples at 8am on the last Sunday of the month. The tour, starting and finishing points are different each time, so contact Orissa Tourism for details.

A city tour offered by OTDC (☎ 2432382; www.panthanivas.com; behind Panthanivas Bhubaneswar, Lewis Rd; Rs 180; 🕑 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) covers the Nandankanan Zoo, Dhauli, the Lingaraj and Mukteswar temples, the State Museum, and Udayagiri and Khandagiri Caves. Another tour goes to Pipli, Konark and Puri. Both tours require a minimum of five people and leave from the Panthanivas Bhubaneswar hotel.

The private tour operators below organise customised tours into Orissa's tribal areas; these can also include visits to handicraft villages, and Similipal National Park and Bhitarkanika Wildlife Sanctuary. Prices will depend on number of people, transport (non-AC/AC) and hotel standards, but expect to pay US$50 to US$100 per person per day for tours that include transport, accommodation and a professional guide. Tribal tours usually start on a Sunday or Monday to synchronise with village markets.

Discover Tours (☎ 2430477; www.orissadiscover.com; 463 Lewis Rd) A recommended agency specialising in tribal and textile village tours, as well as Bhitarkanika and Similipal.

Swosti Travels (☎ 2535773; www.swosti.com; Hotel Swosti, Janpath) Apart from hotel bookings and car rental, it runs tours to the tribal areas and national parks.

Travel Club (☎ 2341115; www.travelclubindia.com; Room 5 BDA Market Complex, Palaspalli) Operates tribal and wildlife tours.

Sleeping

Bhubaneswar has plenty of accommodation, but no great traveller dens. Rates drop substantially during the monsoon season, June to September. Many places have 24-hour checkout, which means you check out 24 hours after you check in.

BUDGET

Hotel Padma (☎ 2313330; fax 2310904; Kalpana Sq; s with shared bathroom Rs 70, d Rs 200-250) Hotel Padma is cheap and not very cheerful. Its lowest priced singles masquerade as prison cells. Slightly more comfort comes with paying more: an extra Rs 50 brings a TV and phone. Car rental can be organised here.

Hotel Bhagwat Niwas (☎ 2313708; Kalpana Sq; s/d from Rs 160/250, d with AC Rs 750;) Hiding behind the Padma and signed down a small lane, the much friendlier Bhagwat has decent rooms with a TV around a courtyard, some boasting a balcony. Checkout is 24 hours.

Bhubaneswar Hotel (☎ /fax 2313245; Cuttack Rd; s/d from Rs 175/235, with AC Rs 600/700;) The Bhubaneswar is another welcoming hotel with rooms that are nothing special. The hierarchy of room rates is determined by your TV choice. Non-TV viewers will be quite happy in cheaper rooms, which are the better option. Checkout is 24 hours.

Hotel Richi (☎ 2534619; fax 2539418; 122A Station Sq; s/d from Rs 250/400, d with AC from Rs 700;) Proximity to the train station makes this a (very) popular haven for weary travellers. Booking ahead is advised. Rates include bed, tea and breakfast, there's 24-hour checkout and a 24-hour coffee shop to while away ungodly hours.

Hotel Deepali International (☎ 5560678; 54 Buddhanagar, Kalpana Sq; s/d Rs 300/350, with AC Rs 700/750;) Probably the best hotel on Cuttack Rd, and certainly the friendliest, this tidy and well-cared-for hotel is partially hidden behind a rank of small stalls. The rooms are clean and comfortable and there's a choice of toilets types; checkout is 24 hours.

ORISSA

MIDRANGE & TOP END

Panthanivas Bhubaneswar (☎ 2432314; Lewis Rd; r Rs 490, with AC Rs 790;) The Panthanivas is well located, quiet and the closest hotel to the temples. The spacious rooms are a little tired and musty but perfectly comfortable. Checkout is at an inconvenient 8am.

Hotel Pushpak (☎ 2310185; Kalpana Sq; s/d Rs 500/550, with AC Rs 700/750;) All rooms are comfortable and have a private bathroom, and while the cheaper rooms are rather threadbare, the AC rooms are good. Checkout is 24 hours; there's a restaurant and bar.

Hotel Keshari (☎ 2534994; 113 Station Sq; s/d from Rs 675/775, with AC Rs 1300/1450;) Five minutes' walk from the train station, Keshari has a decent restaurant and noon checkout. Inspection is essential as some of the cheaper rooms are to be avoided but the AC rooms are OK. The hotel asks you carry US dollars but you can argue to pay in rupees.

our pick Ginger (☎ 2303933; www.gingerhotels.com; Jayadev Vihar, Nayapalli; s/d Rs 999/1199;) This is one of a chain of progressive hotels that has set new standards for midrange accommodation in India. It may look a bit corporate and sterile at first glance, but the young friendly staff and clean modern lines will win you over. The spotless rooms have LCD TVs, wi-fi access, tea and coffee, minifridge, and opening windows so you can regulate the central AC with fresh air. Meals are served buffet style in the restaurant – there's no room service (hence the sparkling clean rooms). There's a gym to use and a Rs 50 discount if you book on the net.

New Marrion (☎ 2380850; marrion@sancharnet.in; 6 Janpath; s/d from Rs 1950/2650;) The New Marrion is a large, conveniently located hotel with clean, spacious rooms where you can negotiate the price. A real bonus of this place is the proximity to Foodville, a court of restaurants, including Deep Down South (opposite), a Chinese restaurant, and a café with real coffee.

Hotel Sishmo (☎ 2433600; www.hotelsishmo.com; 86 Gautam Nagar; s/d Rs 2700/3500;) A well-appointed place with friendly staff and some pleasant rooms; the better ones have views of the pool (which nonguests can use for Rs 150) and distant temples. There's a relaxing bar and a very good restaurant. The tariff includes bed, tea and breakfast, and discounts are a possibility.

Mayfair Lagoon (☎ 2360101; www.mayfairhotels.com; Jaydev Vihar; standard/deluxe cottages Rs 5000/10,000, villas Rs 20,000;) This five-star hotel has the feel of an adventure movie set. In the jungly grounds you'll find static tigers, deer and herons, and even a twin-prop 1942 aircraft. The luxurious cottages are scattered around a lagoon, and facilities run to a complimentary breakfast, a British-style pub, and oriental and Indian restaurants. Of course there's a spa and gym. A discount is possible.

Eating & Drinking

our pick Khana Khazana (Outside Hotel Padma, Kalpana Sq; mains Rs 35-70) This is an amazingly popular street stall morphing into a restaurant. Alfresco diners savour tandoori chicken or, more likely, the stall's famous and filling chicken biryani. Otherwise you are stuck with large serves of delicious chow mein featuring chicken, vegetables and prawns. Feeding starts at 5.30pm and finishes when the food runs out – which it does by about 9.30pm.

Mithai Shop & AC Restaurant (Rajpath; mains Rs 25-75) In addition to its range of North and South Indian curries, this place is Jagannath's gift to thali lovers and connoisseurs of Indian sweets and ice cream. Cyclone-force fans make it difficult to hold the menu but are most refreshing when the heat strikes.

Maurya Gardens (☎ 2534619; Hotel Richi, Station Sq; mains Rs 65-100) The Maurya restaurant is so dimly lit you may have trouble reading the menu of Indian, Chinese and continental dishes. The curries are nice and hot, though if you want a beer with your meal you have to eat (same menu) in the bar next door. Nearest to the train station, it's suitable for pre- or post-travel drinks.

Deep Down South (☎ 2380850; New Marrion, Janpath; mains Rs 30-50) Here you'll find all the South Indian culprits expertly executed. First have a lassi, and then go for a masala dosa (curried vegetables inside a crisp pancake) served on a plastic banana leaf, backed with an all-you-can-eat sambar. Room left over? There's a sweet shop attached.

Zaika (☎ 5539738; Lewis Rd; mains Rs 30-70) A clean, modern oasis on busy, dusty Lewis Rd. As well as excellent curries and tandoori there is an extensive Chinese menu but alas no beer. Fresh prawns and pomfret are ritually tandooried on Wednesday and Sunday.

Park Inn Bar & Restaurant (Rajpath; meals Rs 40-100; 🕑 10am-11pm) A cinema-dark bar with attentive waiters always ready to suggest another cold beer. Lots of nice cooking smells from the kitchen make you hungry for chicken, fish or prawn dishes.

Café Coffee Day (New Marrion, Janpath; drinks Rs 20-80) Yes it's a chain, but you'll appreciate the real coffee beans, the refreshing iced drinks and the chilly AC on any typically sweltering day.

Entertainment

Rabindra Mandeep (☎ 2417677; Sachivajaya Marg) and Soochana Bhawan (☎ 2530794; Sachivajaya Marg) are concert venues periodically used for music or dance performances. Phone the venues to find out what's coming up.

Shopping

A wide-ranging exposition of Orissan handicrafts can be found at Ekamra Haat (☎ 2403169; Madhusudan Marg; 🕑 10am-9pm), a permanent market in a large garden space.

Orissan textiles, including appliqué and ikat (a technique involving tie-dyeing the thread before it's woven) works, can be bought around Market Building (Rajpath) or the Orissa State Handloom Cooperative (Utkalika; Eastern Tower, Market Bldg; 🕑 10am-1.30pm & 4.30-9pm Mon-Sat).

Both sides of Rajpath, between Janpath and Sachivajaya Marg, are given over to day and night sell-almost-anything markets. You'll be able to buy a mosquito net here (Rs 250, check the seals first) for a visit to the coast.

Getting There & Away

AIR

Indian Airlines (☎ 2530544; www.indianairlines.in; Rajpath; 🕑 10am-5pm Mon-Sat), or its subsidiary Alliance Air, flies daily to Delhi (US$315, 2.30pm), Mumbai (US$335, 2.25pm), Chennai (US$250, 3.55pm) and Kolkata (US$130, 12.55am).

SHOPPING IN ORISSA

Ancient Orissa's diverse guilds of shilpins (artisans) grew rich on Puri's pilgrimage status and are still in business today. The appliqué work of Pipli (near Bhubaneswar) features brightly coloured patches of fabric, and Cuttack is known for its tarakasi (silver-filigree ornaments). Raghurajpur (near Puri) is famous for its pattachitra (paintings on specially prepared cloth) and chitra pothi (intricate images from the Kamasutra, painstakingly inscribed onto palm leaves).

Many Orissans work as handloom weavers, producing numerous types of unique silk and cotton fabrics. The Sambalpur region specialises in ikat fabrics, a technique involving tie-dyeing the thread before it's woven.

The best places to pick up these items are where they are produced, more specifically from the artists or workers themselves. Ekamra Haat (above) in Bhubaneswar is the best place to shop for all of Orissa's crafts.

two hours), and hourly buses to Berhampur (Rs 98, five hours).

Several services go to Kolkata (Rs 200 to 525, 12 hours), where price relates to comfort, Sambalpur (Rs 180, nine hours) and infrequent services to Baripada (Rs 120, seven hours).

Cuttack buses also go from the city bus stand, just off Station Sq, and the bus stop at the top end of Lewis Rd, from where buses also go to Puri.

TRAIN

The Coromandal Express No 2841 travels daily to Chennai (non-AC sleeper/3AC sleeper/2AC sleeper Rs 397/1061/1502, 20 hours, 9.40pm). The Purushotlam Express No 2801 goes to Delhi (Rs 489/1320/1876, 31 hours, 9.48pm) and the Konark Express No 1020 to Mumbai (Rs 493/1358/1943, 37 hours, 3.15pm). Howrah is connected to Bhubaneswar by the Jan Shatabdi No 2074 (2nd class/chair Rs 142/460, seven hours, 6am daily except Sunday) and the Howrah Dhauli Express No 2822 (Rs 130/439, seven hours, 1.15pm). To Sambalpur, the Bhubaneswar-Sambalpur Express No 2893 (chair Rs 356, five hours, 6.40am) is quick, comfortable and convenient.

Getting Around

No buses go to the airport; a taxi costs about Rs 100 from the centre. An autorickshaw to the airport costs about Rs 50, but you'll have to walk the last 500m from the airport entrance. Prepaid taxis from the airport to central Bhubaneswar cost Rs 100, and Puri or Konark Rs 600. There are ever-willing cycle- and autorickshaws to take you around.

AROUND BHUBANESWAR

Nandankanan Zoological Park

Famous for its blue-eyed white tigers, the zoo (☎ 246 6075; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/40, car Rs 35, optional guide Rs 45, camera/video Rs 5/500; 🕑 8am-5pm Tue-Sun) also boasts rare Asiatic lions, rhinoceroses, copious reptiles, monkeys and deer. Just inside the gate, the small Nature Interpretation Centre has some displays about Orissa's major national parks.

Undoubtedly the highlight is the lion and tiger safari (Rs 30), which leaves on the hour from 10am to noon and 2pm to 4pm) in an electric bus. Other attractions include a toy train and boat rides. A cable car (Rs 25; 🕑 8am-4pm) crosses a lake, allowing passengers to get off halfway and walk down (300m) to the State Botanical Garden.

OTDC has a café (mains Rs 25; 🕑 8am-4.30pm) selling basic food but unfortunately it can't be counted on for having cold drinks.

OTDC tours stop here for only an (insufficient) hour or so. From Bhubaneswar, frequent public buses (Rs 6, one hour) leave from Kalpana Sq (near Padma Hotel) and outside the former Capital bus stand for Nandankanan village, about 400m from the entrance to the zoo. They may state 'Nandankanan' or 'Patia' as their destination. By taxi, a one-way trip costs about Rs 300.

Dhauli

After slaughtering members of his family to gain power, and then hundreds of thousands of people on the battlefield, Ashoka penitently converted to Buddhism. In about 260 BC one of his famous edicts was carved onto a large rock at Dhauli, 8km south of Bhubaneswar. The rock is now protected by a grill-fronted building and above, on top of a hillock, is a carved elephant. Ashoka's edicts are detailed on several noticeboards at the base.

On a nearby hill is the huge, white Shanti Stupa (Peace Pagoda), built by the Japanese in 1972. Older Buddhist reliefs are set into the modern structure.

The turn-off to Dhauli is along the Bhubaneswar–Puri road, accessible by any Puri or Konark bus (Rs 7). From the turn-off, it's a flat 3km walk to the rock, and then a short, steep walk to the stupa. By autorickshaw/taxi, a one-way trip costs about Rs 100/250.

Chandaka

Also known as the City Sanctuary because of its proximity, Chandaka Wildlife Sanctuary (Indian/foreigner Rs 10/1000, car Rs 20, guide Rs 150, camera/video Rs 25/200; 🕑 8am-5pm Tue-Sun) was declared primarily to preserve wild elephants and elephant habitat. If you are lucky, you can also see leopard, deer, mugger crocodiles and over 100 species of birds.

Chandaka's 200 sq km represents a remnant of the forest that once covered the northeastern Ghats. Facilities include five watchtowers, two of which contain rest houses for overnight stays. Before you visit you must pay for and collect an entry permit, gain permission for photography and reserve a rest house, all at the office of the Divisional Forest Officer (☎ 2472040; Chandaka Wildlife Division, SFTRI campus, Ghatika). Chandaka is about 20km by road from Bhubaneswar, and visits and transport are best organised through a travel agent in Bhubaneswar.

Hirapur

Among iridescent-green paddies, 15km from Bhubaneswar, is a small village with an important Yogini Temple, one of only four in India. The low, circular structure, open to the sky, has 64 niches within, each with a black chlorite goddess. Getting here requires hired transport or coming on OTDC's tours.

Pipli

This town, 16km southeast of Bhubaneswar, is notable for its brilliant appliqué craft, which incorporates primary colours and small mirrors and is used for door and wall hangings, and the more traditional canopies hang over Lord Jagannath and family during festival time. Lampshades and parasols are the main tourist item, and hung outside the shops they turn the main road into an avenue of rainbow colours. Pipli is easily accessible by any bus between Bhubaneswar and Puri or Konark.

SOUTHEASTERN ORISSA

PURI

☎ 06752 / pop 157,610

Attracted by spiritual or earthly pleasures, three types of visitors come to Puri: Hindu pilgrims, Indian holidaymakers and foreign travellers, and each group sets up camp in different parts of town. For Hindus, Puri is one of the holiest pilgrimage places in India, with religious life revolving around the great Jagannath Mandir and its famous Rath Yatra (Car Festival).

Puri's other attraction is its long, sandy beach and esplanade – an Indian version of an English seaside. Backing this, in Marine Pde, is a long ribbon of old hotels, flashy resorts and company holiday homes that become instantly full when Kolkata rejoices in a holiday.

In the 1970s Puri became a scene on the hippie trail wending its way through Southeast Asia, attracted here by the sea and bhang, legal in Shiva's Puri. Travellers now come just to hang out, gorge on good food and recharge their backpacking spirit.

Orientation

The action is along a few kilometres of coast, with the backpacker village clustered around Chakra Tirtha (CT) Rd to the east, busy Marine Pde to the west and resorts in the middle. A few blocks inland is the holy quarter's chaotic jumble of streets. Buses and trains arrive in the centre of town.

RATH YATRA – THE CAR FESTIVAL

One of India's greatest annual events, Rath Yatra, takes place each June or July (second day of the bright half of Asadha month) in Puri (and elsewhere across Orissa), when a fantastic procession spills forth from Jagannath Mandir. Rath Yatra commemorates Krishna's journey from Gokul to Mathura. Jagannath, brother Balbhadra and sister Subhadra are dragged along Grand Rd in three huge 'cars', known as ratha, to Gundicha Mandir.

The main car of Jagannath (origin of 'juggernaut') stands 14m high. It rides on 16 wheels, each over 2m in diameter – in centuries past, devotees threw themselves beneath the wheels to die gloriously within the god's sight. Four-thousand professional temple employees haul the cars, which take enormous effort to pull and are virtually impossible to turn or stop. In Baripada a woman-only team pulls Subhadra. Hundreds of thousands of pilgrims (and tourists) swarm to witness this stupendous scene, which can take place in temperatures over 40°C.

The gods take a week-long 'summer break' at Gundicha Mandir before being hauled back to Jagannath Mandir, in a repeat of the previous procession. After the festival, the cars are broken up and used for firewood in the temple's communal kitchens, or for funeral-pyre fuel. New cars are constructed each year.

Periodically, according to astrological dictates, the gods themselves are disposed of and new images made. The old ones are buried in a graveyard inside of the northern gate of Jagannath Mandir.

Orissa Tourism's Puri Shree Jagannath Dham (Rs 60) reveals the annual cycle of festivities associated with Lord Jagannath.

Dangers & Annoyances

Ocean currents can be treacherous in Puri, so don't venture out of your depth. Watch the locals or ask one of the curiously outfitted nolias (fishermen/lifeguards), with their white-painted, cone-shaped wicker hats, for the best spots.

Muggings and attacks on women have been reported along isolated stretches of beach, even during the day, so take care.

Sights

JAGANNATH MANDIR

This mighty temple belongs to Jagannath, Lord of the Universe and incarnation of Vishnu. The jet-black deity with large, round, white eyes is hugely popular across Orissa. Built in its present form in 1198, the temple (closed to non-Hindus) is surrounded by two walls; its 58m-high sikhara (spire) is topped by the flag and wheel of Vishnu.

Guarded by two stone lions and a pillar crowned by the Garuda that once stood at the Sun Temple at Konark, the eastern entrance, or Lion Gate, is the passageway for the chariot procession of Rath Yatra. The southern, western and northern gates are guarded by statues of men on horseback, tigers and elephants, respectively.

Jagannath, brother Balbhadra and sister Subhadra reside supreme in the central jagamohan (assembly hall). The brothers have arms but no hands, while smaller Subhadra, sitting in between, has neither. Priests continually garland and dress the three throughout the day for different ceremonies. Incredibly, the temple employs about 6000 men to perform the complicated rituals involved in caring for the gods. An estimated 20,000 people – divided into 36 orders and 97 classes – are dependent on Jagannath for their livelihood. The kitchen, with 400 cooks, is reportedly the largest in the world.

Non-Hindus can spy from the roof of Raghunandan Library (cnr Temple Rd & Swargadwar Rd; 🕑 9am-1pm & 4-7pm Mon-Sat) opposite. Ask permission; a 'donation' is compulsory (about Rs 10) and your amount is entered in a book. On Sunday a nearby hotel takes over the scam and demands Rs 50 – easily negotiated down to Rs 20.

BEACH

Puri is no palm-fringed paradise – the beach is wide, shelves quickly with a nasty shore break and is shadeless; but it is the seaside. To the east it's a public toilet for the fishing village. Between Pink House Hotel and Hotel Shankar International, the beach improves, but keep away from the fetid drain oozing into the sea.

ORISSA

By Marine Pde the beach is healthier and often crowded with energetic holidaymakers, especially at night. Look out for artists constructing sand sculptures, a local art form.

It's worth getting up before sunrise to watch the fishermen head out through the surf and, for a little financial motivation, they might take you along.

Tours

OTDC (☎ 223526; Marine Pde; tour No 1 Rs 130, tour No 2 Rs 110) runs day trips. Tour No 1 skips through Konark, Dhauli, Bhubaneswar's temples, Udayagiri and Khandagiri Caves plus Nandankanan Zoo. Tour No 2 goes for a boat jaunt on Chilika Lake.

Several tour operators organise tours into Orissa's tribal areas that can include visits to handicraft villages plus Similipal National Park and Bhitarkanika Wildlife Sanctuary. Tribal tours have to be approached cautiously as not all agencies have experienced guides and the necessary local contacts to conduct a suitable and responsible tour. For more recommended options in Bhubaneswar, see p639, and for more details see the boxed text, p654.

Adventure Odyssey (☎ 2226642; travelpack_orissa@hotmail.com; CT Rd) Runs a Chilika Lake tour for two people for a combined US$100. Includes a night camp on Rajhansa beach.

Heritage Tours (☎ 2236656; www.heritagetourorissa.com; Mayfair Beach Resort Hotel, off CT Rd) Organises customised tours of tribal villages and markets for US$60 per person (based on twin share) per day.

Tribe Tours (☎/fax 2224323; CT Rd; 7.30am-9pm) Organises a Chilika Lake day tour for two people for Rs 650 plus Rs 550 per hour for the boat.

Festivals

A four-year calendar of festivals and events can be consulted at www.orrissatourism.gov.in. Highlights of the festival-packed year include the celebrated festival of Rath Yatra (see p645) and the Puri Beach Festival (23–27 November) featuring magnificent sand art, food stalls, traditional dance and other cultural programmes.

Sleeping

For Rath Yatra, Durga Puja (Dussehra), Diwali or the end of December and New Year, book well in advance. For foreigners, Z Hotel and Hotel Ghandara (which only take foreign tourists) may offer the best chance of finding a bed.

Prices below are for October to February. Significant discounts can be negotiated during the monsoon, while prices can triple during a festival. Annoyingly, many hotels have early checkout times owing to the early arrivals of overnight trains bringing fresh holidaymakers.

BUDGET

These places are mostly in a strip along the eastern end of CT Rd. The Z and Ghandara have dorms suitable for solo women travellers.

Hotel Love & Life (☎ 224433; fax 226093; CT Rd; dm Rs 30, s/d with shared bathroom Rs 80/100, s/d with private bathroom from Rs 125/250, cottages Rs 250, with AC Rs 750;) The dorms and rooms in the three-storey building are simple but adequate, while the cottages at the rear are more comfortable. The hosts are friendly and helpful and also run a travel agency (p643).

Hotel Lotus (☎ 227033; CT Rd; r Rs 100-150) Above Harry's Cafe (opposite), the friendly Lotus has a range of inexpensive, fan-cooled rooms, some with intact flywire and some with balconies that bizarrely front on to the neighbour's brick wall only centimetres away. The front rooms may suffer a bit of street noise.

Pink House Hotel (☎ 222253; off CT Rd; r with shared bathroom Rs 150-250, with private bathroom Rs 250-350) One of the closest to the beach with sand drifting to your front door, the Pink House and its outdoor restaurant (opposite) looks the part. The basic rooms, either on the beach side with little verandas, or round at the back, are passably clean. Mosquito nets are provided and the toilets are all squat.

Hotel Derby (☎ 223660; off CT Rd; r Rs 300-350) This is an older-style hotels, with 10 small, neat rooms with private bathrooms set around a cheerful garden close to the beach. Mosqiuto nets are provided and there's a great little restaurant, Golden Green (opposite), attached.

Hotel Ghandara (☎ 224117; www.hotelgandhara.com; CT Rd; dm Rs 40, dm women only Rs 50, s/d with shared bathroom Rs 110/150, s/d with private bathroom from Rs 350/450, with AC Rs 550/750;) Ghandara has a wide range of rooms for different budgets. The rear five-storey block has some fine rooftop AC rooms catching breezes and views; other rooms are arrayed around a tree-shaded garden and have balconies. A nice touch is a daily newspaper to your room. There's a rooftop restaurant and a travel agency that does foreign exchange.

ORISSA

Z Hotel (☎ 222554; www.zhotelindia.com; CT Rd; dm women only Rs 60, s/d with shared bathroom Rs 200/300, with private bathroom Rs 500/600; 💻) Z is a travellers' favourite and rightly so. Formerly the home of a maharaja, it has huge, spotless, airy rooms, many of them facing the sea. There are great common areas, including a big-screen TV showing movies nightly, a roof terrace, plus a restaurant. The two doubles with an enclosed balcony are well worth the splurge.

Puri Hotel (☎ 222114; www.purihotel.in; Marine Pde; d from Rs 300, with AC from Rs 800; ❄) Saris and underwear adorn the balconies, while inside the place has the feel of crowded hospital ward, nevertheless the Puri Hotel is a Bengali holiday institution and the place to bring the whole family; room sizes go all the way to sleeping 10. Children under six stay free. Checkout is 24 hours.

MIDRANGE & TOP END

BNR (☎ 222063; CT Rd; s/d from Rs 400/650, with AC Rs 650/900; ❄) BNR stands for Bengal National Railways, which explains the steam locomotive parked out the front. This remnant of the Raj is well worn, slightly senile and rattles around in a huge heritage building set at an angle to the sea. The capacious rooms are rather threadbare, but the liveried staff, billiard room (per hour Rs 40), dusty library and lethargic restaurant have a certain charm; and it welcomes credit cards old chap. Checkout is 24 hours.

Panthanivas Puri (☎ 222740; off CT Rd; r Rs 400-690, with AC Rs 990; ❄) This government hotel is rather large and impersonal, but the nonchalant staff can be stirred into friendliness. The newer block gazes right onto the sea; best rooms and views are on the 1st floor. The cheaper rooms in the old block are worn and depressing. Checkout is 8am.

Hotel Lee Garden (☎ 223647, leegarden@rediffmail.com; VIP Rd; r Rs 500-800, with AC Rs 900-1200; ❄) This welcoming hotel has a range of spacious, spotless rooms that boast cable TV and windows with unbroken flyscreens. A bonus of staying here is the excellent Chung Wah Chinese restaurant (p648). Checkout is 7am!

Hotel Samudra (☎ 222705; www.samudrahotel.com; r Rs 550-750, with AC from Rs 900; ❄) Backing onto the beach, off CT Rd, this hotel is the best of a bunch in the area. All rooms have balconies facing the sea, though those closest to the sea are the best, and all are very comfortable. However, avoid northern rooms at the front with the smell wafting in from the malodorous creek.

Mayfair Beach Resort (☎ 227800; www.mayfairhotels.com; r from Rs 4000; ❄ 🏊) The benchmark for Puri luxury features spacious hideaway units nestled into lovely gardens dotted with carved stone statues. The swimming pool, which nonguests can use for Rs 200 when hotel occupancy is low, comes with a swim-up bar. The hotel backs onto a semiprivate beach and boasts an outstanding restaurant, gym and spa.

Eating & Drinking

Puri is a smorgasbord: there's excellent fresh seafood to be enjoyed in inexpensive beachside eateries or plush hotel restaurants. In CT Rd there's muesli, filter coffee, pancakes, pizzas and puddings for homesick travellers and, refreshingly, most places can serve a cold beer. All the following are open for breakfast, lunch and dinner.

Peace Restaurant (CT Rd; mains Rs 20-130) 'Peace Restaurant world famous in Puri but never heard of anywhere else.' So reads the menu, which features curries, macaroni and tasty fish dishes. This restaurant, a simple row of tables with thatch canopies, is deservedly popular.

Xanadu Restaurant (☎ 227897; CT Rd; mains Rs 20-150) Another garden setting with a sandy floor, Xanadu is for the early riser – enjoy a breakfast fry-up or muesli from under the shade of coconut and banana palms. In the evening, over a cold beer and some crunchy pappadam, you can choose between prawns or fish curry or try one of numerous continental dishes.

Honey Bee Bakery & Pizzeria (☎ 320479; CT Rd; mains Rs 60-125) The pizzas aren't bad and the pastas and burgers are acceptable, while the lassis are excellent. Choose between filtered or espresso coffee to wash down the small range of bakery items.

Achha (☎ 9437304761; CT Rd; mains Rs 30-150) Another sand-floor garden restaurant, with lilting background sounds of Indian music. Sit under a thatched pavilion and choose seafood and veg dishes from the extensive Indian menu.

Pink House (☎ 222253; off CT Rd; mains Rs 60-100) Right on the beach the Pink House is an open-air restaurant that does all the things travellers seem to demand: muesli or pancakes for breakfast; and lots of fish and prawns for dinner.

Chung Wah Restaurant (☎ 223647; VIP Rd; mains Rs 55-135). The Chung Wah is a first-rate Chinese restaurant serving the real thing. There's lot's of favourites on the menu, including sweet and sours and a commendable Sichuan chicken.

Wildgrass Restaurant (☎ 9437023656; VIP Rd; mains Rs 50-100) Wildgrass is a secret garden gone wild with trees and shrubs, surrounding a small restaurant and a scattering of thatched canopies for alfresco dining. The Indian and continental menu is enlivened with excellent seafood dishes.

Also recommended:

Harry's Cafe (☎ 227033; CT Rd; mains Rs 20-60) Harry's serves tasty Marwadi basa, strictly vegetarian food without onions or garlic.

Golden Green Restaurant (☎ 223660; off CT Rd; mains Rs 15-100) A cosy little restaurant where the best, freshest seafood is not on the printed menu.

Shopping

Shops along Marine Pde sell fabric, beads, shells and bamboo work. Stalls at the eastern end of town, nearer the village, sell Kashmiri and Tibetan souvenirs.

Near Jagannath Mandir, many places sell palm-leaf paintings, handicrafts and Orissan hand-woven ikat, which you can buy in lengths or as ready-made garments. Popular souvenirs include cheap, silk-screen-printed postcards and Jagannath images – carved, sculpted or painted.

Getting There & Away

BUS

From the sprawling bus station (☎ 224461) near Gundicha Mandir, frequent buses serve Konark (Rs 20, 30 minutes), Satapada (Rs 39, three hours) and Bhubaneswar (Rs 25, two hours). For Pipli and Raghurajpur, take the Bhubaneswar bus. For other destinations change at Bhubaneswar.

TRAIN

Book well ahead if travelling during holiday and festival times. The booking counter at the train station can become incredibly crowded, but CT Rd agencies will book tickets for a small fee.

The Purushottam Express No 2801 travels to Delhi (non-AC sleeper/3AC sleeper/2AC sleeper Rs 501/1354/1924, 32 hours, 8.15pm), while Howrah can be reached on the Puri-Howrah Express No 2838 (Rs 247/641/895, nine hours, 7.35pm) and the Sri Jaganath Express (Rs 227/611/865, 10 hours, 10.15pm). The Neelachal Express No 2875 goes to Varanasi (Rs 377/1005/1421, 21 hours, 10.40am), continuing to Delhi on Tuesday, Friday and Sunday. To Sambalpur, the Puri-Sambalpur Express No 8304 (2nd class/chair Rs 105/356, six hours, 4.30pm) is best.

Getting Around

Several places along CT Rd rent bicycles for Rs 20 per day and both mopeds and motorcycles for Rs 250.

RAGHURAJPUR

The artists' village of Raghurajpur, 14km north of Puri, is two streets and 120 thatched brick houses adorned with mural paintings of geometric patterns and mythological scenes – a traditional art form that has almost died out in Orissa.

Everyone in the village is apparently an artist and there are nine classical arts and crafts practised here. The village is famous for its pattachitra – work made using a cotton cloth coated with a mixture of gum and chalk and then polished. With eye-aching attention and a very fine brush, artists mark out animals, flowers, gods and demons, which are then illuminated with bright colours.

In chitra pothi images are etched onto dried palm-leaf sections with a fine stylus, after which the incisions are dyed with a wash of colour.

Take the Bhubaneswar bus and look for the 'Raghurajpur The Craft Village' signpost 11km north of Puri, then walk or take an autorickshaw for the last 1km.

KONARK

The majestic Sun Temple at Konark – a Unesco World Heritage site – is, like the Taj Mahal, one of India's signature buildings and Konark exists purely for it. Most visitors are day-trippers from Bhubaneswar or Puri, but it's not a bad place to kick back in overnight.

Originally nearer the coast (the sea has receded 3km), Konark was visible from far out at sea and known as the 'Black Pagoda' by sailors, in contrast to the whitewashed Jagannath of Puri.

Orientation & Information

The road from Bhubaneswar swings around the temple and past a couple of hotels and a splash of eateries before continuing to meet Marine Dr, which follows the coast to Puri. To the north and east of the temple is the post office (10am-5pm Mon-Sat) and bus stand and numerous souvenir stands. There is also a tourist office (236821; Yatri Nivas hotel; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat).

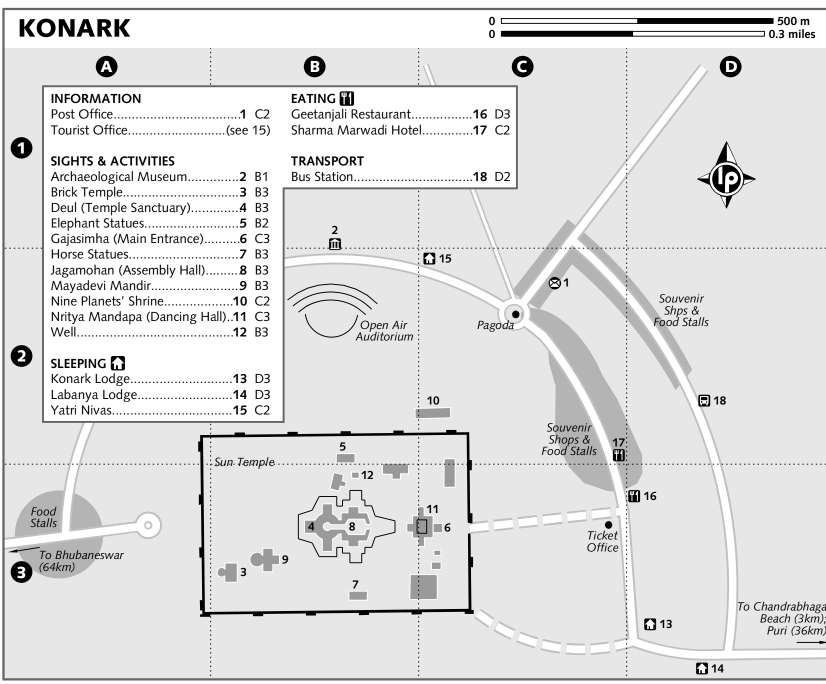
Sights



SUN TEMPLE

The massive Sun Temple (Indian/foreigner Rs 10/250, video Rs 25, guides per hr Rs 100; dawn-dusk) was constructed in mid-13th century, probably by Orissan king Narashimhadev I to celebrate his military victory over the Muslims. In use for maybe only three centuries, the first blow occurred in the late 16th century when marauding Mughals removed the copper over the cupola. This vandalism may have dislodged the loadstone leading to the partial collapse of the 40m-high sikhara; subsequent cyclones probably compounded the damage.

As late as 1837 one half of the sikhara was still standing but collapsed completely in 1869. (An illustration in the Yatri Nivas foyer shows the Sun Temple with still half a sikhara and gives an idea of its splendour.) Gradually, shifting sands covered the site, with only the deul and jagamohan rising proud of its burial mound. Excavation and restoration began in 1901; the jagamohan was closed off and filled with rocks and sand to prevent it from collapsing inwards.

The entire temple was conceived as the cosmic chariot of the sun god, Surya. Seven mighty prancing horses (representing the days of the week) rear at the strain of moving this leviathan of stone on 24 stone cartwheels (representing the hours of the day) positioned around the temple base. The temple was positioned so that dawn light would illuminate the deul interior and the presiding deity, which may have been moved to Jagannath Mandir in Puri in the 17th century.

The gajasimha (main entrance) is guarded by two stone lions crushing elephants and leads to the intricately carved nritya mandapa (dancing hall). Steps, flanked by straining horses, rise to the still-standing jagamohan. Behind is the spireless deul with its three impressive chlorite images of Surya aligned to catch the sun at dawn, noon and sunset.

The base and walls present a chronicle in stone of Kalinga life, a storyboard of life and love in a continuous procession of carvings. Many are in the erotic style for which Konark is famous and include entwined couples as well as solitary exhibitionists. Sometimes they're minute images on the spoke of a temple wheel; at other times they're larger-than-life-sized figures higher up the walls.

Around the grounds are a small shrine called Mayadevi Mandir; a deep, covered well; and the ruins of a brick temple. To the north are a couple of elephant statues, to the south a couple of horse statues, both trampling soldiers.

If there's anywhere worth hiring a guide, it's here. The temple's history is a complicated amalgam of fact and legend, and the guides' explanations are thought provoking. They'll also show you features you might otherwise overlook – the woman with Japanese sandals, a giraffe (proving this area once traded with Africa) and even a man treating himself for venereal disease! Be sure your guide is registered. There are only 29 registered guides in Konark and the name board by the entrance has still to be updated. Unlicensed guides will dog your steps from arrival.

NINE PLANETS' SHRINE

This 6m-chlorite slab, once the architrave above the jagamohan, is now the centrepiece of a small shrine just outside the temple walls. Carved seated figures represent the Hindu nine planets – Surya (the sun), Chandra (moon), Mars, Mercury, Jupiter, Venus, Saturn, Rahu and Ketu.

ARCHAEOLOGICAL MUSEUM

This interesting museum (☎ 236822; admission Rs 5; ⏰ 10am-5pm Sat-Thu), 200m west of Yatri Nivas, contains many impressive sculptures and carvings found during excavations of the Sun Temple. Highlights include the full-bellied Agni (the fire god) and the fulsome Bina Badini.

CHANDRABHAGA BEACH

The local beach at Chandrabhaga is 3km from the temple down the Puri road. Walk, cycle or take an autorickshaw (Rs 50 return), or use the Konark–Puri bus. The beach is quieter and cleaner than Puri's, but beware of strong currents. To the east is a fishing village with plenty of boating activity at sunrise. Exploration to the west can give you a relatively clean beach all to yourself.

Sleeping & Eating

Konark Lodge (☎ 236502; Sea Beach Rd; r Rs 150) One among several bare-bones cheapies where you'll share your grim room with an army of mosquitoes, There's only four rooms. Bring your own mosquito net and insecticide.

Labanya Lodge (☎ 236824; Sea Beach Rd; s Rs 75, d Rs 150-250; 💻) This laid-back option is the best budget choice, with a tropical garden and a fresh coconut drink to welcome guests. The comfortable rooms with private bathroom (squat toilets and no geyser) come in different sizes, and there's a pleasant rooftop terrace to spread out on. This is the only internet facility (per hour Rs 60) in town and there's bike hire (per day Rs 25). There's no restaurant but food can be ordered in.

Yatri Nivas (☎ 236820; r with/without AC from Rs 650/350; ❄) Set in large garden next to the museum, the Yatri Nivas is the best place to stay. The rooms are in two blocks; the rooms in the newer block have silent AC systems for a good night's sleep. The restaurant has a standard Indian menu (mains RS 30 to 75) plus a small selection of fresh seafood dishes. Staff may rent you their bike for Rs 50 per day.

Sharma Marwadi Hotel (mains Rs 30-50) Reputedly the best of the dhabas (snack bars), whose touts incessantly cajole worshippers and tourists into their fan-blown dining halls. Here you can select from eight generous and delicious thalis or order off the inexpensive menu.

Geetanjali Restaurant (mains Rs 30-75) Featuring the same menu as the Yatri Nivas hotel, this restaurant caters mostly to day-trippers who stagger from the temple entrance opposite desperate for refreshments.

Getting There & Away

Overcrowded minibuses regularly run along the coastal road between Puri and Konark (Rs 20, one hour). There are also regular departures to Bhubaneswar (Rs 40, two hours). Konark is included in OTDC tours from Bhubaneswar (p639) and Puri (p646). An autorickshaw will take you to Puri, with a beach stop along the way, for about Rs 200. Because the Puri–Konark road is flat, some diehards even cycle the 36km from Puri.

CHILIKA LAKE

Chilika Lake is Asia's largest brackish lagoon. Swelling from 600 sq km in April/May to 1100 sq km in the monsoon, the shallow lake is separated from the Bay of Bengal by a 60km-long sand bar called Rajhansa. Due to silting, a new mouth was dredged in 2000.

The lake is noted for the million-plus migratory birds – including grey-legged geese, herons, cranes and pink flamingos – that flock here in winter (from November to mid-January) from as far away as Siberia and Iran. Possibly the largest congregation of aquatic birds on the subcontinent, they concentrate in a 3-sq-km area within the bird sanctuary on Nalabana Island. Changes in salinity have caused some birds to move to Mangaljodi near the northern shore. Other problems, such as silting and commercial prawn farming, are also threatening this important wetland area and the livelihood of local fisherpeople.

Other attractions are rare Irrawaddy dolphins near Satapada, the pristine beach along Rajhansa, and Kalijai Island temple where Hindu pilgrims flock for the Makar Mela festival (p627) in January.

Satapada

☎ 06752

This small village, on a headland jutting southwestwards into the lake, is the starting point for most boat trips. There's an Orissa Tourism office (☎ 262077; Yatri Nivas hotel) here.

SIGHTS & ACTIVITIES

Boat trips from Satapada usually cruise towards the new sea mouth for a feed of fresh prawns, a paddle in the sea, and some dolphin- and bird-spotting en route. At the time of research, some of the better dolphin-spotting areas were made off-limits to tourist boats because of a dolphin fatality.

OTDC (☎ 262077; Yatri Nivas) has boats for hire (for large groups) or a three-hour tour (per person Rs 80) at 10.30am.

Dolphin Motor Boat Association (☎ 262038; Satapada jetty; 1-8hr trips per boat Rs 400-1000), a cooperative of local boat owners, has set-price trips mixing in dolphin spotting, the Nalabana Bird Sanctuary and Kalijai Island temple.

Chilika Lake Wetland Centre (☎ 262013; admission Rs 10; 10am-5pm) is an exhibition on the lake, its wildlife and its human inhabitants. The centre has an upstairs observatory with a telescope and bird identification charts.

A regular ferry (Rs 20, four hours, departs noon, returns 6am next day) plies between Satapada and Barkul.

SLEEPING & EATING

Yatri Nivas (☎ 262077; d Rs 250, with AC 650;) A good option where the best rooms have balconies with lake views. The restaurant is OK (mains Rs 30 to 75), with a small selection of fresh seafood dishes as well as the standard Indian fare.

Several shops and food stalls line the road to the jetty. Don't forget to take water on your boat trip.

Barkul

On the northern shore of Chilika, Barkul is just a scatter of houses and food stalls on a lane off NH5. From here boats go to Nalabana and Kalijai Islands. Nalabana is best visited in early morning and late afternoon, November to late February.

The OTDC (locally contact the Panthanivas hotel) runs a boat trip (per hour Rs 400, eight to nine hours) to the sea mouth with some dolphin spotting. With a minimum of 14 people OTDC runs tours to Kalijia (Rs 50), and Nalabana and Kalijia (Rs 150). Otherwise, a boat with a quiet engine (that doesn't scare birds) can be hired for Nalabana (Rs 900, two hours) or an ordinary boat for Kalijai (Rs 450, 1½ hours). Private operators (with no insurance and no safety gear) charge around Rs 350 an hour.

The Panthanivas Barkul (☎ 220488; r Rs 500, with AC Rs 900;) has a great aspect with its clean, comfortable and renovated rooms overlooking the garden to the lake. This was the best Panthanivas we visited. The restaurant (mains Rs 30 to 80) is also good, with seafood specials, such as crab masala, always available.

Frequent buses dash along NH5 between Bhubaneswar (Rs 40) and Berhampur (Rs 70). You can get off anywhere on route.

Rambha

The small town of Rambha is the nearest place to stay for turtle watching on Rushikulya beach. Not as commercial as Barkul, Rambha is also a very pleasant little backwater. Boat hire costs Rs 500 for a three-hour trip around the lake.

Panthanivas Rambha (☎ 06810-278346; dm Rs 50, d Rs 350, with AC Rs 750;), about 200m off the main road and 1km west of Rambha centre, has reasonable rooms with balconies overlooking the lake. The restaurant (mains Rs 20 to 75) is surprisingly good. Order the khainga besara: the local lake fish (khainga) simmered with mustard seed, garlic, chilli and curry leaves and only Rs 50!

There are regular buses to and from Bhubaneswar (Rs 70) and Berhampur (Rs 40), as well as several slow passenger trains (no express trains) stopping on the way to Bhubaneswar (2nd class Rs 25) and Berhampur (Rs 15).

Rushikulya

The nesting beach for olive ridley turtles is on the northern side of Rushikulya River, near the villages of Purunabandh and Gokharkuda. The nearest accommodation is in Rambha (p651), 20km away.

During nesting and hatching there will be conservationists on the beaches and activity takes place throughout the night. Do not use lights during hatching as they distract the turtles away from the sea.

GOPALPUR-ON-SEA

Gopalpur-on-Sea is a seaside town the British left to slide into history until Bengali holidaymakers discovered its attractions in the 1980s. Prior to this, it had a noble history as a seaport with connections to Southeast Asia.

It's no paradise, but its uncrowded, peaceful and relatively clean beach is great for a stroll and a paddle, or you can just relax and watch the fishing boats come and go.

Orientation & Information

The approach road from NH5 rushes straight through town and terminates in front of the sea. Around here are most of the hotels and restaurants. There is a Public Call Office (PCO) by Krishna's restaurant; the bus stand is 500m before the beach.

Dangers & Annoyances

Foreigners, especially women, are always an attraction for the curious, particularly men hoping to see a little flesh. It can be incredibly annoying. Remember to cover up, and if you go for a walk find a fellow traveller for company or just attach yourself to an obliging Indian family and bask under their general protection.

Swimming in the nasty shore break at Gopalpur, where there are undercurrents, is an untested activity; most visitors are content with a paddle.

Sights

Peering over the town is the lighthouse (admission Rs 5; 3.30-5.30pm) with its immaculate gardens and petite staff cottages. It's a late-afternoon draw card and after puffing up the spiral staircase you're rewarded with views, welcome cooling breezes and mobile-phone reception.

ORISSA'S OLIVE RIDLEY TURTLES

Olive ridley turtles, one of the smallest of the sea turtles and a threatened species, swim up from deeper waters beyond Sri Lanka to mate and lay their eggs en masse on Orissa's beaches. The main nesting sites are Gahirmatha within the Bhitarkanika National Park, Devi near Konark and Rushikulya.

Turtle deaths due to fishing practices are unfortunately common. Although there are regulations, such as requiring the use of turtle exclusion devices (TEDs) on nets and banning fishing from certain areas, these laws are routinely flouted in Orissa. Another threat has been afforestation of the Devi beach-nesting site with casuarina trees. While preserving the beaches, they take up soft sand necessary for a turtle hatchery. Other potential threats include oil exploration off Gahirmatha and seaport development near Rushikulya.

Turtles mass at sea between late October and early December. Then in January they congregate near nesting beaches and, if conditions are right, they come ashore over four to five days. If conditions aren't right, they reabsorb their eggs.

Hatching takes place 50 to 55 days later. Hatchlings are guided to the sea by the luminescence of the ocean and can be easily distracted by bright lights; unfortunately, NH5 runs within 2km of Rushikulya beach, so many turtles crawl the wrong way. However, villagers in the Sea Turtle Protection Committee gather up errant turtles and take them to the sea.

The best place to see nesting and hatching is at Rushikulya (above).

Sleeping & Eating

Gopalpur can be booked out during holiday and festival time. Prices below are for the high season (November to January); discounts are available at other times.

Hotel Rosalin (☎ 2242071; r with shared or private bathroom Rs 150) A small, single-storey house, opposite Sea Shell, with tiny rooms facing a 'garden'. It's for those who are over budget and who carry a mosquito net.

Hotel Green Park (☎ 2242016; greenpark016@yahoo.com; d Rs 200-400, with AC Rs 600;) One street back from the beach, Green Park is a clean and friendly budget option, but note there is no bar or restaurant. Some rooms have front-facing balconies and there's a 24-hour checkout.

Hotel Sea Side Breeze (☎ 2242075; Main Rd; d from Rs 300) More like a guesthouse than a hotel, this friendly choice is located right on the sand with most rooms facing the beach. The rooms are bare but clean and spacious with private bathrooms. The restaurant (mains Rs 30 to 70) is also a simple affair but is good value serving one or two choices of simple, home-style curries.

Hotel Sea Pearl (☎ 2242556; d with side views Rs 600-700, with sea views Rs 750, with AC Rs 950-1200;) Any nearer the sea and it'd be in it; the big and popular Sea Pearl has some great rooms, especially the upper-storey, beach-facing, non-AC rooms. There are two restaurants, with standard multicuisine menus (mains Rs 40 to 120); one is on the roof.

Swosti Palm Resort (☎ 2243718; www.swosti.com; Main Rd; s/d Rs 1980/2310;) The Swosti has the best accommodation in town with luxurious and spacious, well-appointed rooms. The excellent multicuisine restaurant, Chilika, serves exquisite seafood, including authentic Odissi dishes (mains Rs 45 to 200).

Sea Shell (mains Rs 15-45) Camped on the beach, thatch roofed and with open sides for views and sea breezes, Sea Shell is an ideal place to while away the day with a good book, some snacks (Chinese, Indian) and a resuscitating ice cream or cold beer.

Krishna's (mains Rs 20-100) The folks at Krishna's have a keen eye for Western travellers and can make good pancakes, pasta and fried calamari or fish and chips in addition to their standard Indian offerings. Expect to pay Rs 100 and up for some of the seafood.

Getting There & Away

Frequent, crowded minibuses travel to Berhampur (Rs 7, one hour), where you can catch onward transport by rail or bus. Alternatively, an autorickshaw costs Rs 150.

WESTERN ORISSA

Although permits aren't usually needed, there are tribal areas in western and central Orissa where foreigners have to register their details with the police. This is all done for you if you are on a tour but independent visitors should check their plans with the police in the nearest city.

TAPTAPANI

Apart from the small hot springs in this peaceful village in the Eastern Ghats, there's not much else to see. The public baths (free) next to the sacred springs are particularly popular with people with skin diseases and other disorders.

For a great winter treat (December nights plunge to zero) book one of the two rooms at Panthanivas Taptapani (☎ 06816-255031; s/d Rs 450/600, with hot bath Rs 800). Hot spring water is channelled directly to vast tubs in its Roman-style bathrooms. Rooms can be rented for the day at half-price.

Buses go regularly to Berhampur (Rs 25, two hours).

BALIGUDA

This tiny one-street town is the base for visits to the Belghar region, home to fascinating and friendly Desia Kondh and Kutia Kondh villages. The State Bank of India ATM accepts Visa, and you can check email at Mahakali Communication (Main Rd; per hr Rs 15).

The nearby village of Padar Sahi makes interesting small statues using the lost wax process, which the villagers are keen to sell.

The only place to stay in Baliguda is the Hotel Santosh Bhavan (☎ 06846-243409; s Rs 150-300, d Rs 250-500), with clean rooms with soap, towel and mosquito coil. Unfortunately the staff start working and shouting at 3.30am! All the restaurants are dhaba style; the Kalyani P Hotel (mains Rs 15-40) has great fried chicken.

☎ 06856

Bustling Rayagada is the base for visiting the weekly Wednesday market at Chatikona (about 40km north). Here, highly ornamented

ORISSA'S INDIGENOUS TRIBES

Sixty-two tribal groups (Adivasi) live an area that encompasses Orissa, Chhattisgarh and Andhra Pradesh. In Orissa they account for one-quarter of the state's population and mostly inhabit the jungles and hilly regions of the centre and southwest. Regardless of their economic poverty, they have highly developed social organisations and distinctive cultures expressed in music, dance and arts.

Tribal influence on Indian culture is little recognised, but it is claimed that early Buddhist sanghas were modelled on tribal equality, lack of caste and respect for all life. Many of the Hindu gods, including Shiva and Kali, have roots in tribal deities. Many Adivasis have become integrated into Hindu society as menials, while others have remained in remote hilly or forested areas.

Most Adivasis were originally animists but have been the focus of attention for soul-seeking Christian missionaries over the last 30 years. In reaction, extreme Hindu groups have been aggressively converting the Adivasis to Hinduism. Naxalites have also exploited Adivasi powerlessness by using them as foot soldiers, while claiming to defend them.

The tribes have become something of a tourist attraction. Visits are possible to some villages and haats (village markets) that Adivasis attend on a weekly basis. There are arguments regarding the morality of visiting Adivasi areas. Usually you need to gain permission to visit the villages, whereas at the haats you are free to interact with and buy directly from the villagers. However, it remains the case that tourism still brings very little income to the tribes.

Of the more populous tribes, the Kondh number about one million and are based around Koraput in the southwest and near Sambalpur in the northwest. The Santal, with a population above 500,000, live around Baripada and Khiching in the far north. The 300,000 Saura live near Bolangir in the west. The Bonda, known as the 'Naked People' for wearing minimal clothing, have a population of about 5000 and live in the hills near Koraput.

It is important to visit these areas on an organised tour for the following reasons:

- Some areas are prohibited and others require permits, which are much more easily obtained by a tour operator.
- Some tribal areas are hard to find and often not accessible by public transport.
- Adivasis often speak little Hindi or Oriya, and usually no English.
- Some tribes can get angry, even violent, if foreigners visit their villages uninvited and without official permission.
- Some people do not allow themselves to be photographed.

Most tours start from Bhubaneswar (p639) or Puri (see p646), take in the more accessible areas in the southwest and can then go on to visit Similipal National Park. Options can include jungle trekking, staying at a village (tents and cooking supplied by the tour operator) and visiting one or more of the haats.

Dongria Kondh and Desia Kondh villagers from the surrounding Niayamgiri Hills bring their produce and wares to sell.

Hotel Jyoti Mahal (☎ 223015; Convent Rd; s/d Rs from 150/175, with AC from Rs 550; ❄) has the best budget rooms in town and a restaurant (mains Rs 20 to 70) that has 73 ways to serve the humble chicken. The friendly Hotel Rajbhavan (☎ 223777; Main Rd; r from Rs 350, with AC Rs 650; ❄) has bright and airy rooms and a good multicuisine restaurant (mains Rs 40 to 80).

There's a regular local bus from Rayagada to Chatikona (Rs 35, two hours).

JEYPORE

Jeypore is the base for visiting the amazingly colourful Onkadelli market (opposite). The foreboding and derelict palace here was built in 1936 and is off limits. There's a State Bank of India ATM on Main Rd.

Hotel Madhumati (☎ 241377; NKT Rd; s/d Rs 275/300, with AC Rs 400/550; ❄) is in a quiet neighbourhood and surrounded by lawns. The spacious rooms are a little aged but well kept and the restaurant (mains Rs 35 to 100), serving Indian, Chinese and continental dishes, is OK.

Hello Jeypore (☎ 231127; www.hoteljeypore.com; NH Rd; s/d from Rs 400/500, with AC Rs 595/695; ❄ 💻) is the best place to stay in town with clean, comfortable rooms and an excellent restaurant (mains Rs 35 to 100) serving fresh produce.

The new bus station is 2km out of town but buses still stop in town to pick up passengers. Frequent buses go to Koraput (Rs 15, one hour); others go to Berhampur (Rs 180, 12 hours), Bhubaneswar (Rs 280, 16 hours) and Rayagada (Rs 60, two hours).

Jeypore is on the scenic Jagdalpur–Visakhapatnam railway line (p714). Slow passenger trains Nos 1VK and 2VK connect Jeypore with Visakhapatnam daily. The Bhubaneswar Koraput Hirakhand Express No 8447/8 plies daily between Bhubaneswar and Koraput stopping at Rayagada.

AROUND JEYPORE

The following towns are best accessed by hired car and Onkadelli should only be visited with a professional guide.

Koraput

☎ 06852

The tourist office (☎ 250318; Raipur–Visakhapatnam road; ⏰ 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd Sat in month) has information and can arrange car hire.

The Tribal Museum (admission Rs 1; ⏰ 10am-5pm) has an extensive static exhibit of tribal culture, including utensils, tools and clothes, as well as some paintings for sale. The useful Tribes of Koraput is for sale for Rs 90, and the museum will open out of hours if you can find the friendly caretaker.

For non-Hindus unable to visit Puri's Jagannath Mandir there's the opportunity to visit a Jagannath temple here that comes with an exhibition of gods of the different states of India. At the back of the temple is a series of apses containing statuettes of Jagannath in his various guises and costumes.

Onkadelli

This small village, 65km from Jeypore, has a most remarkable and vibrant haat (⏰ Thu, best time 11am-2pm) that throngs with Bonda, Gadaba and Didai villagers. Photographs should only be taken with the consent of the subject and will often come with a request for Rs 10 or more. Bring plenty of small demonination notes and other money to purchase souvenirs. Alcohol is an important ingredient in this social event; combined with the hunting bows and arrows, it's a further incentive to make use of a professional guide.

Gupteswar Cave

Located 64km west of Jeypore is this cave temple, dedicated to Shiva on account of a handily shaped stalagmite serving as a lingam. Take a torch, as there are a few passages and chambers to explore alongside the lingam's grotto.

Kotpad

This town, 40km north of Jeypore on the road to Sambalpur, has a thriving home-based fabric-dyeing industry. Along the lanes you'll see ropes of thread in a rich range of colours from reds and burgundies to browns laid out to dry.

SAMBALPUR

☎ 0663 / pop 154,170

Sambalpur is the centre for the textile industry spread over western Orissa. If you haven't already bought examples of ikat or sambalpuri weaving, Gole Bazaar is the place to look. The town is important as a base for nearby Badrama National Park, and Debrigarh Wildlife Sanctuary on the edge of Hirakud Dam.

Orientation & Information

NH6 passes through Sambalpur to become VSS Marg. There are no moneychanging facilities but there are a couple of ATMs that advertise credit-card advances.

Internet Browsing Point (VSS Marg; per hr Rs 20; ⏰ 9am-9pm)

Orissa Tourism (☎ 2411118; Panthanivas Sambalpur, Brooks Hill; ⏰ 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd Sat in month) Can arrange tours to Debrigarh and Badrama.

State Bank of India (VSS Marg) MasterCard and Visa ATM next to Sheela Towers hotel.

Sleeping & Eating

Rani Lodge (☎ 2522173; VSS Marg; s/d Rs 100/140) A basic cheapie with adequately clean and well-cared-for rooms that come with a fan and mosquito nets.

Hotel Uphar Palace (☎ 2400519; fax 2522668; VSS Marg; s/d from Rs 300/350, with AC from Rs 600/650; ❄) An unexpected level of cleanliness characterises this friendly hotel, where the rooms are also spacious. The Sharda restaurant has an Indian and Chinese menu (mains Rs 45 to 130) plus daily specials.

Sheela Towers (☎ 2403111; www.sheelatowers.com; VSS Marg; s/d from Rs 795/845; ❄) This is Sambalpur's top hotel, with a range of comfortable rooms. Checkout is 24 hours. The restaurant, Celebration (mains Rs 50 to 150), provides a buffet breakfast and there's a relaxing bar.

New Hong Kong Restaurant (☎ 2532429; VSS Marg; mains Rs 40-165; ⏲ Tue-Sun) For 15 years the Chen family has been providing authentic Chinese in Sambalpur. The menu also includes several tasty Thai dishes.

Shakti (VSS Marg; sweets per kg Rs 120-160; ⏲ 7am-10.30pm) This popular sweet shop usually sells Rasmulli and other delicacies by the kilo.

Getting There & Away

The government bus stand (Laxmi Talkies) has buses running to Jeypore (Rs 180, 14 hours), Bhubaneswar (Rs 178, eight hours) and Berhampur (Rs 194, 12 hours). Adjacent travel agencies book (usually more comfortable) buses leaving from the private Ainthapali Bus Stand (☎ 2540601), 3km from the city centre (Rs 25 by autorickshaw). Several buses go to Jeypore (Rs 210), Bhubaneswar (Rs 180), Raipur (Rs 150, eight hours) and Jashipur for Similipal (Rs 168, 10 hours).

The Tapaswini Express No 8451 goes to Puri (non-AC sleeper/3AC sleeper/2AC sleeper Rs 178/471/666, nine hours, 10.50pm) via Bhubaneswar (Rs 160/420/592, seven hours). The Koraput-Howrah Express No 8006 goes to Howrah (Rs 243/654/927, 10 hours, 9.25pm).

AROUND SAMBALPUR

Access to Huma, Khiching and Baripalli is only by organised tour.

Debrigarh & Badrama Wildlife Sanctuaries

The 347-sq-km Debrigarh Wildlife Sanctuary (☎ 0663-2402741; Indian/foreigner per day Rs 20/1000; ⏲ 8am-5pm 1 Oct-30 Jun), 40km from Sambalpur, is an easy day out. Mainly dry deciduous forest blankets the Barapahad Hills down to the shores of the vast Hirakud reservoir, a home for migratory birds in winter. Wildlife here includes deer, antelopes, sloth bears, langur monkeys, and the ever-elusive tigers and leopards. Badrama Wildlife Sanctuary (Ushakothi; Indian/foreigner per day Rs 20/1000; ⏲ 1 Nov–mid-Jun), 37km from Sambalpur, shelters elephants, tigers, panthers and bears.

Access to the sanctuaries usually requires a 4WD, which can be arranged through Orissa Tourism, a private tour agency, or your hotel in Sambalpur for about Rs 1000 for a half-day.

Huma

The leaning Vimaleswar temple at Huma, 32km south of Sambalpur, is a small Shiva temple where the deul slants considerably in two directions. The puzzle is that the porch of the temple appears square and there are no apparent filled-in gaps between the porch and deul. Was it built that way?

Khiching

On the way east to Similipal (north of the highway), about 50km west of Jashipur, is the 10th-century Maa Kichakeswari temple (⏲ 8am-noon & 3-8pm), reconstructed in 1934. Another of Shiva's avatars, Kichakeswari is resident in this single-room temple. Outside are several bands of sculptures, including Durga killing a buffalo demon.

Baripalli

The Costa Pada area in Baripalli, on the road to Jeypore, is where to discover how tie-dye ikat textiles are created. Skeins of threads separated into cords are wrapped around frames. Painstakingly, these cords are then tied in red cotton to mark out the dyeing pattern. Strips of rubber are then wound around to protect the undyed areas. Dyed and dried, the threads are then woven on the many looms you can see through open doorways. There's also a thriving terracotta industry here.

NORTHEASTERN ORISSA

SIMILIPAL NATIONAL PARK

The 2750-sq-km Similipal National Park (Indian/foreigner per day Rs 40/1000; ⏲ 6am-noon day visitor, entry by 2pm with accommodation reservation 1 Nov-15 Jun) is Orissa's prime wildlife sanctuary.

The scenery is remarkable: a massif of prominent hills creased by valleys and gorges, and made dramatic by plunging waterfalls, including the spectacular 400m-high Barheipani Waterfall and the 150m-high Joranda Waterfall. The jungle is an atmospheric mix of dense sal forest and rolling open savanna. The core area is only 850 sq km and much of the southern part is closed to visitors.

The wildlife list is impressive: 29 reptile species, 231 birds and 42 mammals, including chital and sambar providing food for leopards and tigers. The tigers aren't tracked; the best chance to spot them will be at the Joranda salt lick. What you may well see is your first wild elephant (there are over 400 in the park), most probably at the Chahala salt lick. The best time to visit is early in the season before the heavy visitation of the park impacts animal behaviour.

Orientation & Information

There are two entrances, Tulsibani, 15km from Jashipur, on the northwestern side, and Pithabata, near Lulung, 25km west of Baripada. Options are a day visit or an overnight stay within the park.

Entry permits can be obtained in advance from the assistant conservator of forests (☎ 06797-232474; National Park, Jashipur, Mayurbhanj District, 757091), or the field director, Similipal Tiger Reserve Project (☎ 06792-252593; Bhanjpur, Baripada, Mayurbhanj District, 757002). Alternatively a day permit can be purchased from either gate.

Visitors either come on an organised tour or charter a vehicle (Rs 1200 to 2000 per day for 4WD); hiring a guide (around Rs 400) is advisable.

If you want to avoid the hassles of arranging permits, transport, food and accommodation, an organised tour is the answer; see p639, p646 and right for details.

Sleeping & Eating

Most accommodation is at 700m above sea level; in winter (November to February) overnight temperatures can plummet to zero.

Forest Department bungalows (d Indian/foreigner from Rs 440/880) Seven sets of bungalows with Chahala, Joranda and Newana being best for animal spotting and Barheipani for views. The very basic accommodation has to be booked well in advance (30 days) with the field director at Baripada – see above. You have to bring your own food and water.

Panthanivas Lulung (dm Rs 125, d with fan Rs 750) This comfortable lodge, 5km inside the Pithabata gate, is run by OTDC; book with Orissa Tourism in Baripada (right).

JASHIPUR

☎ 06797

This is an entry point for Similipal Park and a place to collect an entry permit and organise a guide and transport. Accommodation is very limited.

The youth hostel (☎ 232633; dm/d Rs 50/100) off Main Rd is bare-bones accommodation with no food available. For more comfort, Sai Ram Hotel (☎ 232827; Main Rd; s Rs 70, d with/without AC Rs 500/200; ❄) has small singles, adequate non-AC rooms and bigger AC rooms. The owner can help arrange Similipal trips.

☎ 06792

With the very helpful Orissa Tourism (☎ 252710; Baghra Rd; 🕓 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd Sat in month), this town is the better place to organise a Similipal visit.

Hotel Durga (☎ 253438; r Rs 180, with AC from Rs 550; ❄) has fan-cooled budget rooms, restaurant and bar. Better is Hotel Ambika (☎ 252557; ❄), a large rambling hotel set in pleasant gardens. The rooms are clean and comfortable, and there's a good bar and restaurant. It can organise Similipal trips.

Regular buses go to Kolkata (Rs 140, three hours) and frequently to Bhubaneswar (Rs 170, five hours) and Balasore (Rs 35, one hour).

CUTTACK

Cuttack, one of Orissa's oldest cities, was the state capital until 1950; today it's a chaotic, crowded city. The tourist office (☎ 2612225; Link Rd; 🕓 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd Sat in month) is along the Bhubaneswar road. Shopping is great: saris, horn and brassware are crafted here, along with the famed, lace-like, silver filigree work (tarakasi). The best jewellers are on Naya Sarak and Chowdary Bazaar, while you can see pieces being crafted in Mohammedia Bazaar.

The 14th-century Barabati Fort, about 3km north of the city centre, once boasted nine storeys, but only some foundations and the moat remain. The 18th-century Qadam-i-Rasool shrine, in the city centre, is sacred to Hindus as well as Muslims (who believe it contains footprints of the Prophet Mohammed).

Bhubaneswar with its temples and better range of accommodation is less than an hour away, and Cuttack can easily be covered in a day trip. Express buses to Bhubaneswar leave every 10 minutes (Rs 14, 30 to 45 minutes).

BALASORE

Balasore, the first major town in northern Orissa, was once an important trading centre with Dutch, Danish, English and French warehouses. Now it's a staging post for Chandipur or Similipal National Park. Orissa Tourism (☎ 262048; 1st fl, TP Bldg, Station Sq; 🕓 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd Sat in month) is 500m from the train station.

Several buses leave from Remuna Golai at around 10pm for Kolkata (Rs 190, seven to eight hours) and more frequently for Bhubaneswar (Rs 100, five hours). Infrequent buses to Chandipur makes an autorickshaw (Rs 150) a better option.

☎ 06782

This delightful seaside village ambles down to the ocean through a short avenue of casuarina and palm trees. The place amounts to a couple of hotels, snack places and some souvenir shops. Chandipur has a huge beach at low tide when the sea is some 5km away; it's safe to swim here when there's enough water.

A bustling fishing village, the home of refugee Bangladeshis, is 2km further up the coast at a river mouth. In the early morning, walk up and watch the boats unloading fish and prawns.

Panthanivas Chandipur (☎ 272251; dm Rs 80, d with/without AC Rs 750/390;) has a great location overlooking the beach. Of the two blocks choose the one with sea views for a dramatic sunrise. Alternatively, there's the Hotel Chandipur (☎ 270030; d with/without AC from Rs 700/250;), a three-storey hotel with comfortable rooms overlooking a courtyard with a fountain and fragrant frangipani trees.

Regular buses ply the NH5 between Bhubaneswar and Balasore. From Balasore, taxis and autorickshaws can take you the 15km to Chandipur.

BHITARKANIKA WILDLIFE SANCTUARY

Three rivers flow out to sea at Bhitarkanika forming a tidal maze of muddy creeks and mangroves. Most of this 672-sq-km delta forms Bhitarkanika Wildlife Sanctuary (☎ 272460; permit Indian/foreigner per day Rs 20/1000). A significant ecosystem, it contains 63 of the world's 75 mangrove varieties. Hundreds of estuarine crocodiles, some 6m-plus monsters, bask on mud flats waiting for the next meal to swim by. Dangmar Island contains a successful breeding and conservation programme for these crocodiles. Less dangerous creatures are pythons, water monitors, wild boar and timid deer. The best time to visit is from December to February.

Bird-watchers will find eight species of brilliantly coloured kingfishers, plus 190 other bird species. A large heronry on Bagagaham Island is home for herons that arrive in early June and nest until November. Raucous open-billed storks have set up a permanent rookery here.

The sanctuary also protects the Gahirmatha nesting beach of the endangered olive ridley turtles (see the boxed text, p652). Gahirmatha is out of bounds due to a missile-testing site on one of the nearby Wheeler Islands. Rushikulya (p652) is a more accessible nesting beach.

Orientation & Information

Permits, accommodation and boat transport can all be organised in the small port of Chandbali. Organise a boat (per day Rs 2000, negotiable) with one of the private operators, such as the recommended Sanjog Travels (☎ 06786-220495; Chandbali Jetty), who can also help with obtaining the permit from the Forest Officer (☎ 9937254800; Chandbali Jetty; 6am-6pm).

Sights

First stop is a permit check at Khola jetty before chugging on to Dangmar Island for the crocodile conservation programme and an interesting interpretive centre (admission free; 8am-5pm) about the sanctuary. Binoculars can be useful to scan trees for birds, mud banks for crocs and lizards, and the undergrowth for monitors and deer.

The heronry at Bagagaham Island is reached by a wonky boardwalk leading to a watchtower, where you can spy on a solid mass of herons and storks nesting in the treetops.

Back at Khola, a 2km walk leads to Rigagada with its interesting 18th-century Jagannath temple, built with some passionate erotica in Kalinga style. While there, take an amble through this typical Orissan village.

Sleeping & Eating

Forest Rest Houses (dm Indian/foreigner Rs 40/80, d from Rs 150/400) These basic dorms and comfortable doubles are at Dangmal and Ekakula and have solar lights, mosquito nets and shared bathrooms. You need to bring your own drinking water and food, which staff will cook for you. The haphazard divisional forest officer (☎ 06729-272460; Rajnagar; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd Sat in month) is the only place to make bookings, which must be paid in advance. These complications make going through a travel agent preferable.

Aranya Nivas (☎ 06786-220397; Chandbali; dm/d Rs 70/250) Set in a pleasant garden within 50m of the Chandbali jetty, the comfortable accommodation here is great value and the restaurant serves up some scrumptious food (mains Rs 30 to 75).

Hotel Orion (☎ 220397; NH 5 Bhadrak; s/d Rs 250/450, with AC Rs 350/550) The Orion is a good place to overnight on your way to Chandbali. The rooms are clean and come with TV and private bathrooms. The hotel has money-changing facilities, a multicuisine restaurant (mains Rs 40 to 90) and it can organise a car to Chandbali (Rs 450).

Getting There & Away

Chandbali is 55km southeast of Bhadrak on NH5. Buses go from Chandbali bazaar to Bhadrak (Rs 27), Bhubaneswar (Rs 72) and Kolkata (Rs 150). The Howrah–Bhubaneswar Dhauli Express Nos 2821/2 stops in Bhadrak at 10.27am going south to Bhubaneswar (2nd class/chair Rs 71/232, two hours); and at 3.35pm going north to Howrah (2nd class/chair Rs 104/346, five hours).

RATNAGIRI, UDAYAGIRI & LALITGIRI

These Buddhist ruins are on hilltops about 60km northeast of Cuttack. Currently there's no accommodation and inadequate transport, so the only feasible way to visit is by hired car organised in Bhubaneswar or Puri. However, the OTDC was constructing a Panthanivas hotel opposite the museum in Ratnigiri at the time of research.

Ratnagiri

Ratnagiri has the most interesting and extensive ruins (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100, video Rs 25; dawn-dusk). Two large monasteries flourished here from the 6th to 12th centuries and noteworthy are an exquisitely carved doorway and the remains of a 10m-high stupa. The excellent museum (admission Rs 2; 10am-5pm Sat-Thu) contains beautiful stone sculptures from the three sites.

Udayagiri

Another monastery complex is being excavated here. At present there's a large pyramidal brick stupa with a seated Buddha and some beautiful doorjamb carvings. Expect an entry fee soon.

Lalitgiri

Several monastery ruins (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100, video Rs 25; dawn-dusk) are scattered up a hillside leading to a small museum and a hillock crowned with a shallow stupa. During excavations of the stupa in the 1970s, a casket containing gold and silver relics was found.

Madhya Pradesh & Chhattisgarh

Madhya Pradesh (MP) was India's largest state until tribal Chhattisgarh broke away in 2000. It's still a significant chunk of most train rides from Delhi to central India, yet many travellers see little more than its train tracks; a shame for more reasons than having to train it for two days.

Khajuraho, Mandu and Sanchi have some of India's finest Hindu, Islamic and Buddhist monuments. A more lively form of religion is at the ghats (steps or landings) on the Narmada River, one of the seven sacred rivers. There's also Ujjain, one of the seven holy cities, and the holy island, Omkareshwar. Historical sites include the millennia-old Bhimbetka rock paintings and Gwalior's lavish Jai Vilas Palace. Among the temple towns, Khajuraho is famous for the erotic carvings writhing across its 10th-century temples. Another historical hotspot near the Agra–Varanasi route is secluded Orchha, where riverside cenotaphs and palaces exude a 'lost world' atmosphere matched only by Mandu's plateau-top tombs.

For outdoor enthusiasts there are 1000m-plus peaks, forests and waterfalls at hill station Pachmarhi, and tiger-filled national parks. View the cats from an elephant at Kanha, Bandhavgarh, Panna (site of Kipling's Jungle Book) and Pench. The distinctive craftwork and colourful markets in Chhattisgarh's Bastar region show tribal communities keeping tradition alive.

HIGHLIGHTS

- Eye with the king of the Indian jungle in the national parks, Panna (p681), Pench (p708), Kanha (p709) and Bandhavgarh (p711)
- Blush at Khajuraho's (p673) erotic 10th-century temple carvings, before cooling off among the chhatris (small domed Mughal kiosks) and palaces rising from the undergrowth in Orchha (p670), the 'hidden place'
- Climb above the plains at historic hill station Pachmarhi (p693) and Mandu (p702) to the finest relics left in India by the Afghans
- Join the sadhus (spiritual men) and yatris (pilgrims) offering puja (prayer) at the ghats in the holy cities Ujjain (p695), one of the sites of Kumbh Mela, and Maheshwar (p701)
- Gaze across the sacred Narmada River at Omkareshwar (p700) and ponder the locals' claim that the holy island looks like the Om symbol if seen from above
- See Bhopal's (p682) mosques, lakes and museums from the Lake Princess cruise boat or the Bhopal-On-Wheels tour bus
- Watch a huge, garlanded chariot being dragged through the streets of Jagdalpur (p713), capital of Chhattisgarh's tribal Bastar region, during the animist celebration of Dussehra (p663)

History

Virtually all phases of Indian history made their mark on the region historically known as Malwa, starting with the rock paintings at Bhimbetka (p688) and Pachmarhi (p693), which date back more than 10,000 years. They tell of a cultural succession through the late Stone Age to the start of recorded history in the 3rd century BC, when the Buddhist emperor Ashoka (see the boxed text, p41) controlled the Mauryan empire from Malwa and built Sanchi's Great Stupa (p689).

The Mauryas were followed by the Sungas and the Guptas (p41) – Chandragupta II ruled from Ujjain (p695) and had the caves cut at Udaigiri (p692) – before the Huns rampaged across the state. Around 1000 years ago the Parmaras reigned in southwest Madhya Pradesh – notably Raja Bhoj, who ruled over Indore (p698), Mandu (p702) and Bhopal (p682). The state capital's name derives from its original moniker, Bhojapal, which refers to the pal (dam) Bhoj built to create the city's two lakes.

From AD 950 to 1050 the Chandelas' nimble-fingered sculptors enlivened the façades of some 85 temples in Khajuraho (p673) with erotic scenes. Between the 12th and 16th centuries, the region experienced continuing struggles between Hindu and Muslim rulers (p43), and Mandu was the scene of some decisive clashes. The Mughals were eventually superseded by the Marathas (p46), who enjoyed most power in Malwa before they fell to the British, for who the Scindia maharajas (see the boxed text, p667) of Gwalior (p662) were powerful allies.

With the States Reorganisation Act of 1956, several former states were combined to form Madhya Pradesh. In 2000 Chhattisgarh (p712) became an independent state.

Information

Madhya Pradesh Tourism (MT Tourism; ☎ Bhopal 0755-2774340, Delhi 011-23341187; www.mptourism.com) has offices of varying usefulness in all towns and cities, and counters at most major train stations and airports; in the cities it will book cars for you. The website is useful for information on tours and locations, and for booking MP Tourism hotels.

ACCOMMODATION

Backpacker-style accommodation outside Khajuraho and Orchha is limited but there are plenty of budget hotels, and midrange hotels often have some budget rooms. The air-conditioning is often the only difference between AC and non-AC rooms.

MP Tourism places, often in choice locations, are good, if a little pricey. Rooms can be booked centrally through the website or the head office, and prices normally include breakfast.

Many hotels in Eastern Madhya Pradesh and Chhattisgarh ask guests to leave a deposit.

Getting There & Away

AIR

Domestic flights serve Gwalior (p668), Khajuraho (p681), Bhopal (p687), Indore (p700), Jabalpur (p707) and Raipur (p712).

TRAIN

Train is generally a better way to navigate Madhya Pradesh than road. Travelling from north to south on the state's most significant line, it comes from northwest India via Delhi and Agra, and passes through Jhansi (see the boxed text, p670) and Bhopal (see the boxed text, p687), before forking at Itarsi, from where it heads to Mumbai (Bombay) and to Hyderabad and Chennai (Madras).

Travelling northeast from Mumbai, the state's other useful line passes through Itarsi, Jabalpur (see the boxed text, p707), Katni and Satna en route to Allahabad, Varanasi and Howrah. From Katni, lines run into Chhattisgarh, Orissa and Jharkhand.

Two lines run from Indore to Jaipur, one via Ujjain (see the boxed text, p698), but there is only one direct train a day; the other option is to go via Agra.

Unless otherwise mentioned, fares in this chapter are sleeper/3AC/2AC for long journeys and 2nd class/chair car for short journeys.

Getting Around

Madhya Pradesh's pothole-ridden roads are appalling and Chhattisgarh's are worse. Work on a basis of 20km/h and, particularly in the more mountainous areas, avoid travelling after dark unless near-death experiences are your bag. The roads in remote areas such as around Khajuraho, Kanha National Park, Pench Tiger Reserve and Mandu are notably abysmal.

NORTHERN MADHYA PRADESH

GWALIOR

☎ 0751 / pop 826,919

Gwalior is famous for its medieval hilltop fort, described by the Mughal emperor Babur as 'the pearl amongst fortresses in India'. For travellers making a detour from the Golden Triangle, the slow-paced town sprawling around the hill is a good introduction to an un-touristy part of central India. Jai Vilas Palace, home of the Scindia Museum, is the historic seat of the Scindias, one of the country's most revered families.

FESTIVALS IN MADHYA PRADESH & CHHATTISGARH

Jhansi Festival (28 Feb; Jhansi, p669) Music, arts and dance.
Festival of Dance (Feb/Mar; Khajuraho, p673) Week-long event with the cream of Indian classical dancers performing amid floodlit temples in the western enclosure.
Shivaratri Mela (Feb/Mar; Pachmarhi, p693) Up to 100,000 Shaivite pilgrims, sadhus (spiritual men) and Adivasis (tribal people) attend celebrations at Mahadeo Temple. Participants bring symbolic tridents and hike up Chauragarh Hill to plant them by the Shiva shrine.
Ahilyabai Holkar's birthday (Apr/May; Maheshwar, p701) Her birthday (b 1725) is celebrated with palanquin (enclosed seats carried on four men's shoulders) processions through the town and cultural activities including music and dance.
Navratri (Dussehra; Sep/Oct; Ujjain, p695) Celebrated with particular fervour. Lamps on the large pillars in Harsiddhi Mandir are lit.
Dussehra (Oct; Jagdalpur, p713) Nothing to do with Ramayana, but this 75-day festival is dedicated to local goddess Danteshwari. It culminates with eight days of (immense) chariot-pulling around the streets.
Feast of St Jude (28 Oct; Jhansi, p669) Christian pilgrims converge on St Jude's Church to plead their case to the patron saint of lost causes.
Chethiyagiri Vihara Festival (Nov; Sanchi, p689) Buddhist monks and pilgrims flock to see relics of two of Buddha's early disciples, Sari Puttha and Maha Moggallana (discovered in Stupa 3 in 1853).
Tansen Music Festival (Nov/Dec; Gwalior, opposite) Four-day music festival attracting classical musicians and singers from all over India; free performances are usually staged at the great musician's tomb.

History

Gwalior's legendary beginning stems from the hermit Gwalipa curing the Rajput chieftain, Suraj Sen, of leprosy using water from Suraj Kund tank (which still remains in Gwalior fort). Renaming him Suhan Pal, he foretold that Suhan's descendants would remain in power as long they retained the name Pal. His next 83 descendants did just that, but number 84 changed his name to Tej Karan and, naturally, lost his kingdom.

In 1398 the Tomar dynasty came to power. Gwalior Fort became the focus of continual clashes with neighbouring powers and reached its ascendancy under Raja Man Singh (1486–1516), remembered for his love of music and architecture. After his death the fort fell to Ibrahim Lodi; two centuries of Mughal possession followed, ending with its capture by the Marathas in 1754.

Over the next 50 years the fort changed hands several times, including twice to the British. Finally it passed to the Scindias, one of only five noble clans to be honoured with a 21-gun salute by the British (see the boxed text, p667).

During the Indian Uprising in 1857, Maharaja Jayajirao remained loyal to the British but his troops rebelled, and in mid-1858 the fort was the scene of some final dramatic events of the whole uprising. Near here the British finally defeated rebel leader, Tantia Topi, and it was in the final assault on the fort that the Rani of Jhansi was killed (p669).

Orientation

Gwalior sprawls beneath its fort, which crowns the massive ridge to the west. The old town clings to the northeast base of the fort. To the south is the new town, Lashkar, with its market area, Jayaji Chowk.

The train station is on the east side of town. Taxi touts will meet you with their choice of commission-paying hotel so walk to the main road and hail an autorickshaw.

tiles as turquoise as the skies above. Once up there, it's great for a wander at any time of day, among the butterflies and dragonflies flitting through the ruins and shady spots offering views across the white and blue walls of the old town far below.

There are two approaches to the fort. From the west a steep road passes through Urvai Gate, where you will likely be approached by a guide and a driver. Only taxis are allowed past the gate.

From Gwalior Gate on the east side it's a steep 1km slog uphill to the fort compound. The best option is to be driven up to Urvai Gate and then walk down to Gwalior Gate.

A ticket counter (☎ 2480011; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100, video Rs 25; dawn-dusk) near Man Singh Palace sells tickets for the monuments, and another ticket for the small museum (right).

An atmospheric sound-and-light show (Indian/foreigner Rs 40/100; Hindi 7.30pm, English 8.30pm Oct-Jun) is held nightly in the open-air amphitheatre.

There are several historical sites in the fort, much of which is now occupied by the prestigious private Scindia School, established by Maharaja Madhavrao Scindia in 1897 for the education of Indian nobility.

Rock Sculptures

While there are sculptures carved into the rock on the way up from Gwalior Gate, the most impressive are those on the long ascent up from Urvai Gate. Mostly cut into the cliff face in the mid-15th century, they represent nude figures of tirthankars (the 24 great Jain teachers), defaced and castrated by Babur's Muslim army in 1527 but more recently repaired.

The images are numbered in white lettering at the base. Image No 20 is a 17m-high standing sculpture of the first tirthankar, Adinath, while image No 22 is a 10m-high seated figure of Nemnath, the 22nd tirthankar.

Teli ka Mandir

Used as a soda factory and coffee shop by the British after the Indian Uprising of 1857, this 30m-high, 8th-century temple is the oldest monument in the compound. Its hybrid design incorporates a Dravidian square roof and Indo-Aryan decorations. Dedicated to Vishnu, the Pratihara temple is covered with sculptures and a Garuda tops its 5m-high doorway.

The modern gold-topped gurdwara (Sikh temple) nearby is dedicated to Sikh hero Guru Har Gobind, who Nur Jahan imprisoned in Man Singh Palace.

Sasbahu Temples

The Mayan-like Sasbahu, or Mother-in-Law and Daughter-in-Law temples, rise close to the eastern wall. They are similar in style and date from the 9th to 11th centuries. Mother-in-Law is dedicated to Vishnu, with an ornately carved base and figures of the deity over the entrances; four gigantic pillars support the heavy roof, layered with carvings. The smaller Daughter-in-Law, dedicated to Shiva, is also stacked with sculptures. Once damaged by Aurangzeb's roaming band of image defacers, vandalism is fortunately restricted to the lower levels.

Man Singh Palace

Whimsical is the only way to describe it: an imperial palace decorated with a frieze of yellow ducks! These – and mosaic tiling of elephants, tigers and crocodiles in blue, yellow and green – give it its alternative identity of Chit Mandir (Painted Palace).

Built by Tomar ruler Man Singh between 1486 and 1516, this fine example of early Hindu architecture consists of two open courts surrounded by apartments on two levels. Below ground lie another two storeys constructed for hot weather, connected by 'speaking tubes' built into the walls and used by the Mughals as prison cells.

Here Aurangzeb imprisoned his brother, Murad, and slowly poisoned him with opium, which drove him mad before finishing him off. The dungeon with the cage in the floor looks like the scene of the grisly deed, but it was actually a bathing chamber.

Bring a torch to help you navigate the subterranean gloom. The attendants have torches but they are often lost somewhere inside the building with other tourists.

Museum

The small museum (☎ 2480011; admission Rs 2; 10am-5pm Sat-Thu) by Man Singh Palace houses sculptures and carvings from around the fort. Of equal attraction to overhot visitors are the oversize fans.

Other Palaces

A set of gates north of the palace leads to more ruins. There is bound to be an unofficial guide who'll reveal all for Rs 50.

The 16th-century Hindu temple Vikram Mandir, with its open hall, was destroyed in World War I. Narrow galleries connect it to the narrow, elongated two-storey Karan Palace, next to an old jailhouse.

The tank Jauhar Kund marks the spot where Rajput women of the harem committed jauhar (ritual mass suicide by immolation) to avoid rape by the forces of Iltutmish, the slave king of Delhi, when he defeated the Raja in 1232.

At the northern end of the enclosure, with another tank at their bases, are the Jehangir Mahal and Shah Jahan Mahal, chiefly interesting for the dizzying views of the Gujari Mahal and across Gwalior to the moundlike hills.

Northeast Entrance

A series of gates punctuates the worn steps of the path down to Gwalior Gate. The top, sixth gate, Hawa Gate, no longer exists; the fifth gate, Hathiya Paur (Elephant Gate) is now the entrance to the palace.

Descending to the north, you pass a 9th-century Vishnu shrine known as Chatarbhuj Mandir (Temple of the Four-Armed). The interesting Ganesh Gate was built in the 15th century. Nearby is a small pigeon house, or Kabutar Khana, and a small four-pillared Hindu temple to the hermit Gwalipa, after whom fort and town were named.

The third gate is Badalgarh, named after Badal Singh, Man Singh's uncle, while the second gate, Bansur (Archer's Gate), has disappeared. The bottom and first gate is Gwalior Gate (Alamgiri Gate) dating from 1660.

MADHYA PRADESH & CHHATTISGARH

State Archaeological Museum

The museum (☎ 2350743; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/30, camera/video Rs 20/50; 🕑 10am-5pm Tue-Sun) is within Gujari Mahal, uphill west of Gwalior Gate. Built in the 15th century by Man Singh for his favourite rani (wife), the palace is now rather deteriorated. There's a large collection of Hindu and Jain sculptures, including the famed Salabhanjika (an exceptionally carved female figure) plus copies of Bagh Caves frescoes.

JAI VILAS PALACE & SCINDIA MUSEUM

This museum (Indian/foreigner Rs 30/200, camera/video Rs 30/80; 🕑 10am-5.30pm Thu-Tue) occupies some 35 rooms of the Scindias' opulent Jai Vilas Palace (see the boxed text, opposite), built by Maharaja Jayajirao in 1874 using prisoners from the fort. The convicts were rewarded with the 12-year job of weaving the hall carpet, the largest in Asia.

The gold paint around the durbar (royal court) hall weighs half a tonne. Eight elephants were suspended from its ceiling to check it could cope with two 12.5m-high, 250-lightbulb, 3.5-tonne chandeliers, said to be the largest pair in the world.

Bizarre items fill the rooms: Belgian cut-glass furniture and stuffed tigers. There's a ladies-only swimming pool with diving boards, a boat and a wine cabinet. The cavernous dining room displays the pièce de résistance, a model railway with silver train that carried after-dinner brandy and cigars around the table.

It's well worth collaring Ramashankar (Rs 50), a guide at the museum since it opened in 1964.

OLD TOWN

Old Gwalior lies eastwards below Man Singh Palace. Nearby is the resplendent tomb of Mohammed Gaus, a Muslim saint who played a key role in Babur's acquisition of the fort.

In the same compound is the smaller, simpler tomb of Tansen, a singer much admired by Akbar and held to be a father of Indian classical music. Chewing the leaves of the tamarind tree at Tansen's grave supposedly enriches your voice and during the Tansen festival in October/November it takes on an unseasonably autumnal look when stripped by visiting singers.

BUDGET

Hotel DM (☎ 2342083; Link Rd; r Rs 120-250) The 17 pint-sized rooms leading to a small lawn at the back of the building range from those with basic, shared bathrooms to those with TVs and private bathrooms with all mod cons. It's quieter than its closeness to the bus stand suggests, and guests can jog on the roof for free.

Hotel Safari (☎ 2340638; Station Rd; s Rs 180-550, d Rs 240-600; ❄) Near the train station, this aged hotel's 1st-floor reception is gloomy and its bar-restaurant is rough, but the rooms are clean enough, with reasonable furniture and enough space to swing a langur.

Hotel Mayur (☎ 2325559; Padav; dm Rs 81, s Rs 180-850, d Rs 300-920; ❄) A solid choice down a quiet alley near the bridge on Station Rd. The wide range of accommodation starts with men-only dorms and proceeds up the scale to AC rooms

BLESSED MAHARAJAS

The Scindia Museum, which occupies a quarter of the neoclassical Jai Vilas Palace, gives a glimpse of the lives of India's Prince Williams and Princess Beatrices.

Mahadji (1761–94) founded the Scindia dynasty at the time of the Mughal emperor Babaur, after his three brothers were killed in the third battle of Panipat. He devised the family crest – a sun flanked by two black cobras – as a tribute to the cobra that, when he was a child, spread its hood to protect him from the sun.

The Scindia salute, inscribed in the music room, reads: 'God bless the Maharaja, long to reign over us, happy and glorious, god bless the Maharaja'. Looking no further than the neighbouring rooms, with their ivory figurines, Sanskrit manuscripts, miniature paintings, Chippendale furniture and one of only three Napoleon tables in existence, these Maharajas do indeed seem blessed.

But the Scindias have borne tragedies. Madhavrao (1945–2001) died in a plane crash, aborting a political career that would have likely seen the Congress member crown the family's many political achievements by running for prime minister. Photos of his meetings with political notables such as Saddam Hussein and Fidel Castro can be seen upstairs. He was fond of recalling the time he was stopped late at night by a London policeman, who gave a nonplussed reply to the maharaja's revelation of his identity: 'Well if you're the Maharaja of Gwalior, I'm the Pasha of Iran.'

In classic blue-blooded fashion, the Scindias have intermarried with other high-caste clans. Maharaja Jyotiraditya (b 1971), who followed his father into parliament, is married to the daughter of the Maharaja of Baroda, Gujarat. His sister is married to the crown prince of Kashmir and the family also has ties with the Nepali aristocracy.

Also true to form, the Scindias allied themselves with the British during the colonial era, as the sepia-tinted photos of walrus-moustached hunting parties suggest. Visitors to the palace were often taken to the family estate at Shivpuri (p668). A photo shows eight tigers killed in a day during Lord Harding's visit in 1916; five tigers bagged in a day by Madhavrao are on display.

Unflinchingly contemporary touches, such as the poolside aromatherapy spa and the granite swimming pools adjoining the two villas, mingle in the air-conditioned kingdom with reminders of its heritage. Meals are Rs 650.

Eating

Gwalior's limited eating-out scene revolves around the hotel restaurants.

Indian Coffee House (Station Rd; dishes Rs 15-65) The perennial favourite for a snack and real coffee served by fellows in white jackets and fan-tailed headgear. Dose up with a masala dosa (curried vegetables inside a crisp pancake), or give the uttapam (pancake of rice and dhal) a bite.

Kwality Restaurant (MLB Rd; meals Rs 75-130; 🕙 10.30am-11pm) This popular restaurant serves up subtle curries, from a plethora of paneer (unfermented cheese) dishes to chicken and lamb curries. Many dishes take up to 30 minutes to prepare – the textured chicken bhurta (curry with roasted eggplant) is among the quicker options.

Blue Fox (☎ 2326209; Hotel Shelter, Tansen Rd; meals Rs 100-150) With its cool blue décor, this res-

Getting There & Away

AIR

Air Deccan (☎ 2479851; Central Park hotel; 10am-6pm) has daily budget flights to Indore and Delhi at 3.10pm and 7pm respectively.

BUS

From the bus stand (Link Rd) there are half-hourly services to Agra (Rs 65, three hours), Jhansi (Rs 55, three hours) and Shivpuri (Rs 65, 2½ hours). Ten buses serve Indore (Rs 252, 12 hours), and there's a night bus to Bhopal (Rs 250, 10 hours, 8pm).

Getting Around

Cycle rickshaws (Rs 5 to 10) and autos (Rs 10 to 30) are plentiful. Brutish-looking tempos (Rs 2 to 6) run on fixed routes.

SHIVPURI

☎ 07492 / pop 146,860

Shivpuri is the old Scindia summer capital and the site of the family's chhatris (small, domed Mughal kiosks), appropriately grand memorials to the maharajas and maharanis (see the boxed text, p667).

There is a State Bank of India ATM in town.

Set in formal gardens east of the bus stand, the chhatris (☎ 221412; admission Rs 2; camera/video Rs 10/30; 8am-noon & 3-8pm) are walk-in marble structures with Mughal pavilions and sikharas (Hindu spires), facing each other across a pool with a network of walkways. The chhatri to Madhorao Scindia, built between 1926 and 1932, is exquisitely inlaid with intricate pietra dura (marble inlay work).

Madhav National Park (☎ 222350; Indian/foreigner Rs 15/150, camera/video Rs 40/300, vehicle Rs 75, guide Rs 40; 6-11am & 3pm-dusk) is scattered with relics from the Scindias' hunting days – a shooting box, hunting lodge and sailing club, the latter now closed due to all the marsh crocodiles and pythons in the artificial lake. The 355-sq-km park hosts leopards, waterfowl, panthers, antelope and deer, wild boar, and a caged tigress. The 20km circuit of the park, entered at the visitors centre 6km east of the bus stand, takes about two hours. The best visiting time is October to March.

Tarun Residency (☎ 508257; tarunresidencyvp@yahoo.co.in; ITBP Gate No 2, AB Rd; r non-AC/AC from Rs 500/600, ste Rs 750;) is a basic hotel next to MM Hospital, 4km out of town towards the park. Rooms are overpriced but cleaner than the dishevelled reception suggests. Tourist Village (☎ 223760; tvshivpuri@sancharnet.in; r non-AC/AC Rs 790/1190;) includes breakfast in its prices. This breezy MP Tourism complex with big-windowed cottages and bungalows is set among the palms and frangipani trees, overlooking the nearby lake and park; staff can arrange trips to the national park.

Buses leave regularly for Jhansi (Rs 52, three hours), Gwalior (Rs 58, three hours) and, once a day, for Bhopal (Rs 124, eight hours).

A daily passenger train between Shivpuri and Gwalior (2nd/sleeper Rs 42/230, four hours) leaves Shivpuri at 7.52am and Gwalior at 8.15pm.

To get about and explore the park, hire a jeep for the day (Rs 400), but beware of hotels taking commission.

JHANSI

☎ 0517 / pop 420,665

Looking at the map, Jhansi lies at the narrow mouth of a globular Uttar Pradesh incursion into Madhya Pradesh. It's in the west of the mountainous Bundelkhand region that has long been a hiding place for dacoits (outlaws) such as Phoolan Devi, the 'Bandit Queen'. Jhansi fort bears testament to the town's turbulent history, but Jhansi today is mostly used by travellers as a transit point for Orchha and Khajuraho.

History

When a raja died in 1853, his widow and successor Rani Lakshmibai was forcibly retired by the British (a controversial law allowed them to take over any princely state under their patronage if the ruler died without a male heir). During the Indian Uprising four years later, Rani Lakshmibai was at the forefront of Jhansi's rebellion. The British contingent here was massacred, but the following year they retook Jhansi while the rebel forces quarrelled among themselves. The rani fled to Gwalior. In a fatal last stand she rode out against the British disguised as a man and subsequently became a heroine of Indian Independence.

Orientation

The Shivpuri–Khajuraho road is the spine of the town. The fort is 1km to the north of the centre, the train station 2km southwest and the bus station 3km east.

Information

Madhya Pradesh Tourism (☎ 2442622; 10am-6pm) At the train station, books taxis and MP Tourism hotels, and has information about Orchha and Khajuraho.

Sify Cyber Café (Shivpuri Rd; per hr Rs 20; 10am-10pm) Below National Bakery.

State Bank of India (☎ 2330319; Elite Rd; 10am-4pm Mon-Fri, 10am-1pm Sat) Cashes major currencies, and Amex travellers cheques up to Rs 10,000 per day. The ATM (opposite the train station) accepts Visa and MasterCard.

Uttar Pradesh Tourism Hotel Veerangana (☎ 2441267; Shivpuri Rd; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, closed every 2nd Sat); train station (☎ 2442622; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat, closed every 2nd Sat) Has information about Agra and Uttar Pradesh.

JHANSI FORT

Built in 1613 by Maharaja Bir Singh Deo of Orchha, Jhansi Fort (☎ 2442325; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; dawn-dusk) still bears signs of the blood-letting that took place within its double walls and moat, which was inhabited by crocodiles. Guides (Rs 100) can tell some colourful tales.

Near the flag turret is a parapet, over which the fleeing Rani Lakshmibai with her adopted son mounted behind her, rode her horse. The horse is said to have died, but the story still seems incredible looking at the steep rocky slope 15m below.

Elsewhere, there's the second cannon made in India, constructed in 1787 using eight metals, and a German machine gun used by the British. Having had boiling water poured on them from the battlements, the victorious British later rebuilt a wall with slits for machine guns.

The British incarcerated the captured freedom fighters in a dingy jail and buried three deceased fighters, two Muslims and a Hindu, in the compound. They built themselves a blue-spired church and left standing the temple dedicated to Shiva.

STATE MUSEUM

This museum (☎ 0510-2330035; admission Rs 2, camera Rs 10; 10.30am-4.30pm Tue-Sun, closed every 2nd Sun) below the fort is a ragbag of central Indian miniature paintings, illustrated manuscripts, terracotta sculptures, and portraits of Rani Lakshmibai, cricketers and politicians.

Festivals & Events

Jhansi Festival, a locally organised programme of music, arts and dance, commences on 28 February. Jhansi is also known for the Feast of St Jude (28 October), when thousands of

Sleeping & Eating

There is a strip of reasonable hotels on Shivpuri Rd.

Hotel Samrat (☎ 0510-2444943; Shivpuri Rd; s non-AC/AC from Rs 275/625, d Rs 325/675;) The offer of an illicit beer is never far away in this clean, busy hotel with the feel of a boarding house. At the top of a leg-stretching series of staircases, the budget rooms have squat loos and TVs.

National Bakery (Shivpuri Rd; meals Rs 60) A fast-food joint offering pizzas, sundaes, namkin (savoury, often spicy, nibbles) and Chinese dishes, all set to a soundtrack of Hindi pop videos.

Vidhata (Elite Crossing; meals Rs 60) A tasty paneer tikka masala (marinated cheese dish) is on the vegetarian menu at this popular family restaurant at a busy crossroads.

Getting There & Away

BUS

Express buses for Khajuraho leave from the train station (Rs 96, five hours, 5.30am and 11am). The second connects with the Shatabdi train from Delhi; MP Tourism (☎ 2442622) sells tickets for it. Local buses also leave the bus stand (☎ 2445745; Khajuraho Rd) for Khajuraho (Rs 85, six hours, 11.45am, 1.30pm, 3.45pm and 7.30pm).

An alternative is a bus to Bamitha (Rs 80, 4½ hours, frequent), then an 11km-jeep ride (Rs 15) to Khajuraho. Frequent services go to Shivpuri (Rs 52, three hours) and Gwalior (Rs 55, three hours), which also stops at Datia (Rs 20, one hour).

TAXI

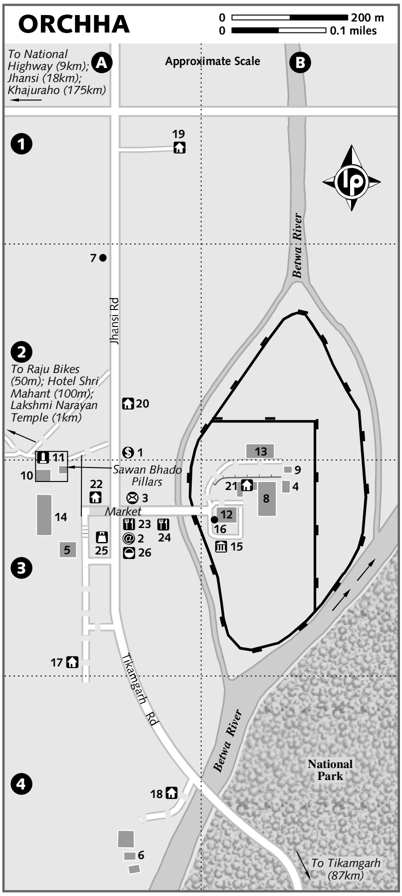
Train station taxis charge Rs 1500 for a trip to Khajuraho.

Getting Around

An autorickshaw from the train station to the bus stand costs Rs 40 and to Orchha it is Rs 150. Taxis to Orchha charge Rs 300/350 for non-AC/AC. Tempos from the bus stand cost Rs 10 for the 40-minute journey, and the bus costs the same.

ORCHHA

☎ 07680 / pop 8500



Entered by a gate crowned with a red Ganesh, Orchha's name (Hidden Place) is singularly appropriate. Temples, palaces and chhatris fight their way out of the encroaching jungle, their spires and domes overshadowing a few ramshackle streets. At sunset, vultures peer down from the temple tops at the Hindu faithful drifting in to chant incantations to Lord Rama, who they believe lives and breathes in Ram Raja Temple.

History

Orchha was the capital of the Bundela rajas from the 16th century to 1783, when they decamped to nearby Tikamgarh. Bir Singh Deo ruled from Orchha from 1605 to 1627 and built Jhansi Fort. A favourite of Mughal Prince Salim, he feuded with Akbar, who all but ruined his kingdom. In 1605 Prince Salim became Emperor Jehangir, making Bir Singh a powerful figure, and the Jehangir Mahal was built for his visit the following year. When Shah Jahan became emperor in 1627 Bir Singh was once again out of favour; his revolt was crushed by 13-year-old Aurangzeb.

Orientation

The limpid-green Betwa River, with its boulder-strewn riverbed, forms an eastern boundary. A channel, mostly dry outside monsoon time, loops around an elevated area creating a fortifiable island on which the palaces were built.

MP Tourism (☎ 252624; Hotel Sheesh Mahal; 7am-10pm) Information on Orchha and transport.

Post office (☎ 252631; Jhansi Rd; 9am-5pm Mon-Sat)

Sights & Activities

A day ticket for Orchha's sites (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/30, camera Rs 20), covering seven monuments and the museum, is only available from the ticket office (7.30am-6pm).

PALACES

Crossing the granite bridge over the seasonal offshoot of the Betwa brings you to three 17th-century palaces. Jehangir Mahal, an assault course of steep staircases, precipitous walkways, bamboo scaffolding and rubble-filled rooms, may put off visitors who aren't into outward-bound travel, but it nonetheless represents a zenith of medieval Islamic architecture.

There's a small archaeological museum on the ground floor and behind the palace are sturdy camel stables, overlooking a green landscape dotted with monuments. In the nearby Raj Mahal, the caretaker will open the painted rooms where Rama, Krishna and Orchha royalty wrestle, hunt, fight and dance across the walls and ceilings.

Downhill from the palace compound are the smaller Raj Praveen Mahal, a pavilion and formal Mughal garden, and Khana Hammam (Turkish Bath), with some fine vaulted ceilings.

On the other side of the village, Palki Mahal was the palace of Dinman Hardol, the son of Bir Singh Deo who committed suicide to 'prove his innocence' over an affair with his brother's wife. His memorial, two cloth-covered stone beds in a pavilion, is in the adjacent Phool Bagh, a traditional charbagh (formal Persian garden). Prince Hardol is venerated as a hero in Bundelkhand culture. Women sing songs about him, tie threads onto the jali (carved marble lattice screen) of his memorial and walk around it five times, clockwise, to make wishes they hope he'll grant.

MUSEUM

Amid a scattering of minor monuments with crumbling lotus arches, the Saaket Museum (admission free; 10am-5pm Tue-Sun) has masks and oil-on-cloth paintings narrating the adventures of Hanuman.

TEMPLES

Orchha's impressive 16th-century temples still receive thousands of Hindu pilgrims. At the centre of a lively square is the pink-and-gold-domed Ram Raja Temple (8am-noon & 8-10pm), the only temple where Rama is worshipped as a king. Built as a palace for Madhukar Shah's wife, it became a temple when an image of Rama, temporarily installed by the rani, proved impossible to move. The best times to visit are during the peaceful morning and evening prayer sessions.

Neighbouring Chaturbhuj Temple is an immensely solid building on a cruciform plan. Buy a cheap torch from the bazaar and climb the internal stairs to the roof where, from among the mossy spires and domes, you get the best view in town.

Lakshmi Narayan Temple is worth the 1km trek from Ram Raja for the rooftop views and the well-preserved murals on the ceilings of its domed towers.

CENOTAPHS

Cenotaphs to Orchha's rulers including Bir Singh Deo; the chhatris rise from the rubble and undergrowth 500m south of the village. They're best seen at dusk, when the birds reel above the children splashing in the adjacent Betwa River ghats.

RAFTING & TREKKING

River rafting (per 1½/3 hr Rs 1200/2000) can be booked through MP Tourism (p671).

A 12km track loops through the 45-sq-km national park (admission Rs 200; 1 Oct-1 Jul), which isn't exactly purring with tigers. It's entered on the far side of the bridge southeast of town, maps are available from the forestry office (9425337932; 9am-5pm), off Jhansi Rd, and jeeps can be hired from the bus stand (per half-day Rs 300).

Sleeping

Hotel Shri Mahant (252341; Lakshmi Narayan Temple Rd; r with AC Rs 700, without AC Rs 200-400;) Has a chilled-out location with some of Orchha's best views.

Shri Mahant Guest House (252715; r with air-cooler Rs 150-350;) Overlooking the market, this is an excellent budget choice with clean rooms and friendly management.

Fort View Guest House (252701; s with squat toilet Rs 100, r Rs 200-400;) Pokey rooms opening onto a riverside garden with a view of the palaces. There's a big discrepancy between the rooms and the more expensive choices are better value. The AC room has a large window with a superb view and a blue-and-yellow tiled bathroom with hot water.

Betwa Retreat (252618; bcorchha@rediffmail.com; s/d Rs 690/790, with AC Rs 890/990;) MP Tourism place on a rise above the river on the outskirts of town. Wander between the 14 cottages and 10 tents in the well-tended garden and you could imagine yourself many miles away from the usual MP Tourism menu in the restaurant.

Bundelkhand Riverside (252612; s Rs 1750-2500, d Rs 2600-4100;) The Maharaja of Orchha's hotel abounds with latticework, gold paint and functional fireplaces. The 29 rooms overlook either the river or the flowery garden with a 200-year-old Hanuman shrine. Excursions to local villages are on offer.

Amar Mahal (252102; Bypass Rd; s Rs 1750-2500, s Rd 2950-3750, ste Rs 4500;) Amar Mahal's name means 'immortal fort' and the place is lent a distinguished air by architectural details modelled on the Jehangir Mahal. Rooms have four-poster beds, dressers, wardrobes and baths. The only disappointment is the restaurant.

our pick Hotel Sheesh Mahal (252624; hsmorcha@sancharnet.in; Jehangir Mahal Rd; s/d Rs 1190/1490, ste Maharani/Maharaja Rs 3990/4990;) The air-cooler is the only sound you'll hear at night in the rooms of this literally palatial MP Tourism hotel in a wing of Jehangir Mahal. Every room is unique and the two suites have regal touches such as throne-like toilets.

Eating & Drinking

Orchha does a good line in fudge.

Bhola Restaurant (cnr Jehangir Mahal & Tikamgarh Rds; meals Rs 40) This streetside restaurant's hotchpotch of global dishes, from tandoori (marinated meat dishes) to Korean, has Oriental commentary scrawled on the menus. It's a good spot for an energising breakfast of pancakes or paratha (bread).

Ram Raja (Jehangir Mahal Rd; meals Rs 45) This small restaurant under a tree offers reasonable vegetarian fare, and it's worth trying the kheer (rice pudding) for dessert.

Hotel Sheesh Mahal (☎ 252624; Jehangir Mahal Rd; meals Rs 70-110) It's the same old MP Tourism menu but it's worth it for the historic surroundings and the classical and folk music and dancing.

Betwa Tarang (Jehangir Mahal Rd; beer Rs 100) Serves beer on its terrace overlooking Jehangir Mahal, but the food is best avoided.

Shopping

Rajasthan Emporium & Indian Art Gallery (Shops 12 & 13, Tikamgarh Rd; 7am-9.30pm) Embroidery, paintings on silk and marble, and silver and copper handicrafts sold in a low-pressure environment.

Getting There & Around

Tempos (Rs 10) ply the 18km journey to the Jhansi bus stand; autorickshaws charge Rs 150 for the same journey. Coming from Khajuraho, you can ask the bus driver to drop you off at the Orchha turn-off on the National Hwy 9km east of Jhansi, though the autorickshaw drivers here demand high prices.

Taxis to Khajuraho cost Rs 1500, to Gwalior Rs 1200 and to Agra Rs 2700. For Khajuraho, catch a tempo or autorickshaw into Jhansi and pick up a bus (p670). If you're willing to risk the bus being full, wait for it 9km away on the National Hwy.

AR Tours & Travels (☎ 9993263100; Tikamgarh Rd), based at Cyber Café, can organise transport.

Orchha is easily crossed on foot or by bike. Raju Bikes (Lakshmi Narayan Temple Rd) hires out rickety cycles (per hour/day Rs 10/50).

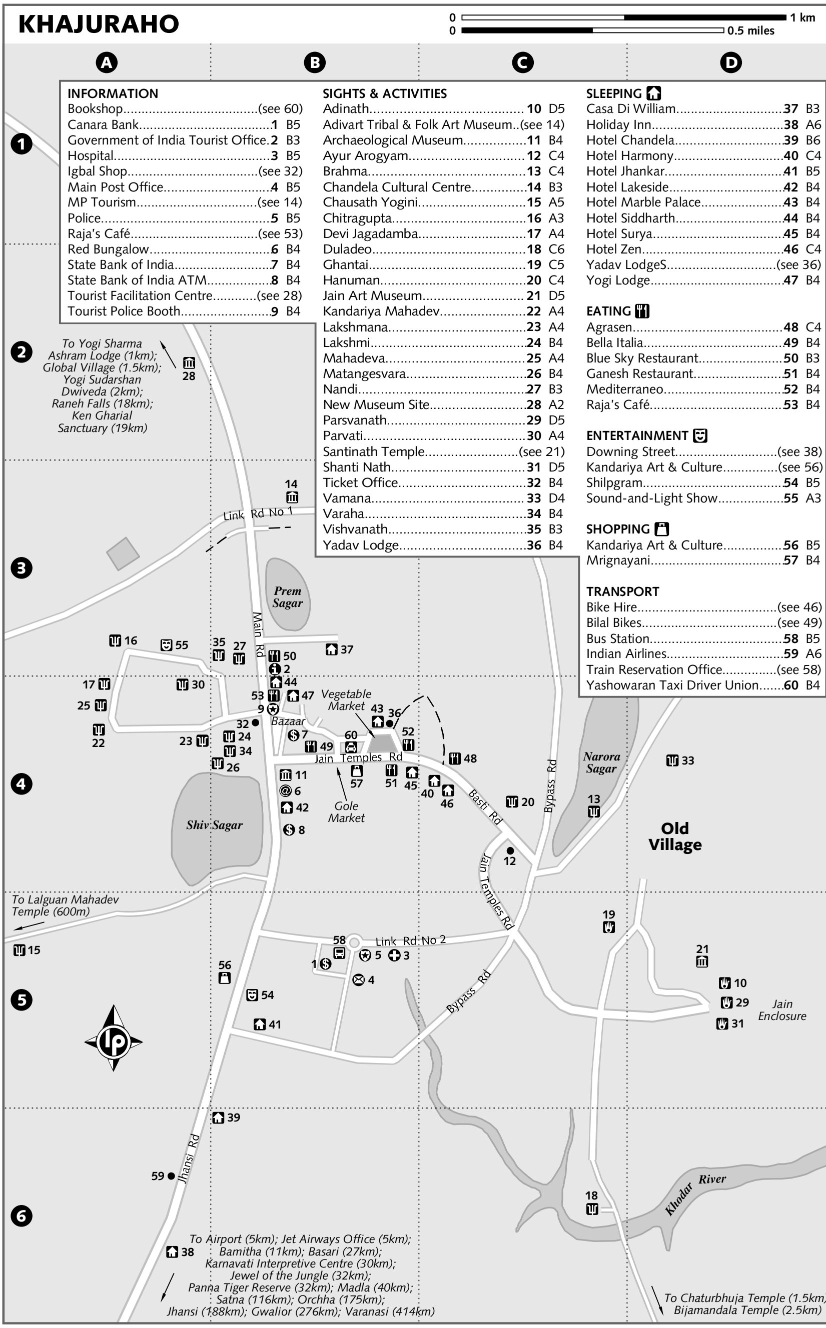
KHAJURAHO

☎ 07686 / pop 19,290

The Kamasutra carvings that swathe Khajuraho's three groups of temples are among the finest temple art in the world. While many travellers take a quick peek at the sensuous sculptures as a stop-off between Agra and Varanasi, those who linger discover a spiritual but modern spot where everything from yoga to folk dancing can be experienced.

History

Legend has it that Khajuraho was founded by Chardravarman, the son of the moon god Chandra, who descended on a beautiful maiden as she bathed in a stream. The Chandela dynasty built the temples, many of which originally rose from a lake, and survived for five centuries before falling to the Mughal onslaught. Most of the 85 temples – of which some 25 remain – were built during a century-long burst of creative genius from AD 950 to 1050. Almost as intriguing as the temples' size and beauty is the question of why they were built here. There's nothing of great interest or beauty to recommend Khajuraho as a building site and no great population centre nearby.



How did the Chandelas manage to turn their exhilarating dreams into stone? Building so many temples of such monumental size in just 100 years would have required a huge amount of labour. Whatever the answers, Khajuraho's isolation helped preserve it from the desecration Muslim invaders inflicted on 'idolatrous' temples elsewhere.

Under threat from Afghan invaders from the north, the Chandelas forsook Khajuraho for their forts. People no longer prayed at the temples, which fell into ruin and the jungle took over. The wider world remained ignorant until British officer, TS Burt, was guided to the ruins by his palanquin (enclosed seats carried on four men's shoulders) bearers in 1838. There this stalwart Victorian soldier was surprised at the architectural treasure house but shocked by what he saw, first describing the erotica as 'a little warmer than there was any absolute necessity for'.

Orientation

A cluster of hotels, restaurants and shops lies near the western group of temples. About 1km northeast of the bus stand is the old village and the eastern temples, with another set to the south.

Dangers & Annoyances

Be aware that something as seemingly innocuous as accepting a lift on the back of a boy's bicycle can lead to a commission changing hands in Khajuraho.

The most notorious scam is when children invite you to visit their classroom, normally in the old village, concluding with demands for rupees, which the child splits with their teacher. They may use the Urdu word for school, madarsa, to make the proposition more intriguing. If you are keen to visit a school, establish a price before you go, and take no extra cash.

Even the government-approved guides should be approached with scepticism. Discuss the itinerary of your tour – they may plan to conclude it at a commission-paying shop or school. Equally, the yogis and masseurs who pop up in every hotel may not be professionally qualified. At the temples, do not feel pressured to leave a financial offering – you can be sure it won't be given to Shiva.

If you need assistance, the Government of India tourist office (272348; Main Rd; 9.30am-6pm Mon-Sat) and tourist police booth (Main Rd) are good ports of call.

Sights

TEMPLES

The temples are superb examples of Indo-Aryan architecture, but it's their liberally embellished carvings that have made Khajuraho famous. Around the temples are bands of exceedingly artistic stonework showing a storyboard of life a millennium ago – gods, goddesses, warriors, musicians, real and mythological animals.

Two elements appear repeatedly – women and sex. While the mithuna (carved figures running through a whole Kamasutra of positions and possibilities) are certainly eye-catching, the erotic content should not distract from the great skill underlying the sculptures. Sensuous, posturing surasundaris (heavenly nymphs), apsaras (dancing surasundaris) and nayikas (mortal women) have been carved with a half-twist and slight sideways lean that make the playful figures dance and swirl out from the flat stone. A classic example is the washerwoman with a wet sari clinging to her body – an image imbued with as much eroticism as any of the couples, threesomes or foursomes.

Walk round the temples with your right shoulder facing the building – the right side is considered divine.

BIRDS DO IT, CHANDELAS DO IT

Why all the sex? Scholars are uncertain. The audioguide at the western group of temples stuffily posits that the ritualised positions and calm expressions suggest that sex was a way of practising restraint. Another theory has it that the erotic posturing was a kind of Kamasutra in stone, a how-to manual for adolescent Brahmin boys growing up in all-male temple schools. Another claims that the figures were thought to prevent the temples being struck by lightning, by appeasing the rain god Indra. This old lecher is supposedly a keen voyeur who wouldn't want the source of his pleasure damaged.

Rather more convincing is the explanation that these are Tantric images, especially as they're not limited to Khajuraho. According to this cult, gratification of the baser instincts is one way to transcend the evils of the world and achieve enlightenment. Bhoga (physical enjoyment) and yoga (spiritual exercise) are seen as equally valid in this quest for nirvana.

The Khajuraho sculptors may have been simply representing life as it was in their society, with unhampered sexual expression alongside many other day-to-day scenes. The carvings should be seen as a joyous celebration of all aspects of life.

Western Group

The main temples are in the western group (Indian/foreigner Rs 20/250, video Rs 25; dawn-dusk), the most interesting group although the others are free. An Archaeological Survey of India (ASI) guidebook to Khajuraho (Rs 60) and a two-hour audio guide (Rs 50) are available at the ticket office.

The temples are described here in a clockwise direction.

Varaha, dedicated to Vishnu's boar incarnation, and the closed-up Lakshmi are two small shrines facing the large Lakshmana Temple. Inside Varaha is a 1.5m-high sandstone boar, dating to 900–25 and meticulously carved with a pantheon of gods.

The large Lakshmana Temple took 20 years to build, completed in about 954 during the reign of Dhanga according to an inscribed slab in the mandapa (pillared pavilion in front of a temple; see the boxed text, opposite). One of the temple's many anonymous sculptors has added himself to a subsidiary shrine at the southwest corner. There are also battalions of soldiers – the Chandelas were generally at war when they weren't inventing new sexual positions. On the south side is a highly gymnastic orgy, including one gentleman proving that a horse can be a man's best friend, while a shocked figure peeks out from behind her hands. More sensuous figures intertwine between the elephants in the frieze ringing the basement.

One of the earliest and best-preserved monuments in this group, Lakshmana is dedicated to Vishnu, although in design it is similar to the Shiva temples Vishvanath and Kandariya-Mahadev.

The 30.5m-long Kandariya-Mahadev, built between 1025 and 1050, is the largest temple in town and represents the highpoint of Chandelan architecture. It also has the most representations of female beauty and sexual aerobics, all crammed into three central bands. There are 872 acrobatic statues (226 inside and 646 outside), most of them nearly 1m high – taller and more slender than on the other temples.

The 31m-high sikhara is, like linga, a phallic Shiva symbol, worshipped by Hindus hoping to seek deliverance from the cycle of reincarnation. It's decorated with 84 subsidiary spires – replicas of itself.

Mahadeva, a small, ruined temple on the same platform as Kandariya-Mahadev and Devi Jagadamba, is dedicated to Shiva, who is carved on the lintel of its doorway. Although small and insignificant compared with its mighty neighbours, this temple houses one of Khajuraho's finest sculptures – a sardula (mythical beast, part lion, part some other animal or even human) caressing a 1m-high lion.

Devi Jagadamba was originally dedicated to Vishnu, but later to Parvati and then Kali. Some believe it's still a Parvati temple and that the Kali image is actually Parvati, painted black. The carvings include sardulas accompanied by Vishnu, sarasundaris, and mithunas frolicking in the third uppermost band. Its three-part design is simpler than Kandariya-Mahadev and Chitragupta (1000–25). It has more in common with Chitragupta, but is less embellished with carvings so is likely a little older.

North of Devi Jagadamba, Chitragupta is unique in Khajuraho – and rare among North Indian temples – in being dedicated to the sun god Surya. While not in as good condition as the other temples, it has some fine carvings of apsaras and sarasundaris, elephant fights and hunting scenes, mithuna and a procession of stone-carriers. In the inner sanctum, Surya drives his seven-horse chariot, while on the central niche in the south façade is an 11-headed statue of Vishnu, representing the god and 10 of his 22 incarnations.

Continuing around the enclosure, the closed-up Parvati Temple is on your right. The name's probably incorrect, since this small temple was originally dedicated to Vishnu and now has an image of Gauri riding a godha (iguana).

Believed to have been built in 1002, the Vishvanath Temple and Nandi Shrine are reached by steps flanked by lions on the northern side and elephants on the south. Vishvanath anticipates Kandariya-Mahadev, with which it shares saptamattrikas (seven mothers) flanked by Ganesh and Virabhandra, and is another superlative example of Chandelan architecture. Its sculptures include sensuous surasundari writing letters, cuddling babies, and playing music while languishing more provocatively than at other temples.

At the other end of the platform, a 2.2m-long statue of Nandi, Shiva's bull vehicle, faces the temple. The basement of the 12-pillared shrine is decorated with an elephant frieze that recalls similar work on Lakshmana's façade.

Matangesvara, outside the fenced enclosure, is the only temple in Khajuraho still in everyday use. It may be the plainest temple here

TEMPLE TERMINOLOGY

Khajuraho temples follow a fairly consistent and unique design pattern of a three- or five-part layout.

The ardhamandapa (entrance porch) leads to a mandapa (initial hall) and then into the mahamandapa (main hall), which is supported with pillars and has a corridor around it. An antarala (vestibule) then leads into the garbhagriha (inner sanctum) where the resident deity is displayed. A pradakshina (enclosed corridor) runs around this sanctum. Simpler three-part temples lack the mandapa and pradakshina.

Externally the temples consist of successive waves of higher and higher urusringas (towers), culminating in the soaring sikhara (spire) topping the sanctum. While the lower towers, over the mandapa or mahamandapa, may be pyramid-shaped, the sikhara is taller and curvilinear. The ornate design of these vertical elements is balanced by the equally ornate horizontal bands of sculptures that run around the temples.

The whole temple sits upon a adisthana (high terrace) and the finely carved entrance gate to the temple is a torana.

The temples are almost all aligned east to west, with the entrance facing east. Some of the earliest temples were made of granite, or granite and sandstone, but all those from the classic period are made completely of sandstone.

The sculptures and statues play such an important part that many have their own terminology:

- apsara – heavenly nymph, beautiful dancing woman
- mithuna – Khajuraho's most famous image; sensuously carved, erotic figures that have shocked a variety of people, from Victorian archaeologists to busloads of blue-rinse tourists
- nayika – the only difference between a surasundari and a nayika is that the surasundari is supposed to be a heavenly creature while a nayika is human
- salabhanjika – female figure with tree, they act as supporting brackets within the temple; apsaras also perform this bracket function
- sardula – a mythical beast, part lion, part some other animal or even human; sardulas usually carry armed men on their backs
- surasundari – when a surasundari is dancing she is an apsara; otherwise she attends the gods and goddesses by carrying flowers, ornaments, mirrors or other offerings; she also engages in everyday activities, such as playing with pets, babies, musical instruments or herself

(suggesting an early construction) but inside it sports a polished 2.5m-high lingam (phallic image of Shiva).

The ruins of Chausath Yogini, beyond Shiv Sagar, date to the late 9th century and are probably the oldest at Khajuraho. Constructed entirely of granite and the only temple not aligned east to west, the temple's name means 64 – it once had 64 cells for the yoginis (female attendants) of Kali, while the 65th sheltered the goddess herself. It is possibly India's oldest yogini temple.

A further 600m west is the sandstone-and-granite Lalguan Mahadev Temple (c 900), a small, ruined shrine to Shiva.

Eastern Group

The eastern group consists of four temples scattered around the old village and three Jain temples in a walled enclosure.

The Hanuman Temple on Basti Rd contains an almost 2.5m-tall statue of the monkey god. The interest is in the pedestal inscription dating to AD 922, the oldest dateable inscription in Khajuraho.

Its sandstone sikhara overlooking Narora Sagar, the granite Brahma Temple is one of the oldest in Khajuraho. The four-faced lingam in the sanctum led to it being incorrectly named but the image of Vishnu above the sanctum doorway reveals its original dedication to Vishnu. Similarities with Lalguan Mahadeva link it to the same period, about AD 900.

Resembling Chaturbhuja Temple in the southern group, Javari Temple (1075–1100) stands outside the chaotic old village. It's dedicated to Vishnu and is a good example of small-scale Khajuraho architecture for its crocodile-covered entrance and slender sikhara.

Vamana Temple (1050–75), 200m further north, is dedicated to the dwarf incarnation of Vishnu. It has quirky touches such as elephants protruding from the walls, but its sikhara is devoid of subsidiary spires and there are few erotic scenes. Its roofed mahamandapa (main hall) is an anomaly in Khajuraho but typical among medieval west Indian temples.

Located between the old village and the Jain group, the small Ghantai Temple is named after the ghanta (chain and bell) decorations on its pillars. It's similar to nearby Parsvanath Temple, but is a little more evolved so likely dates from the late 10th century. Unfortunately, only its pillared shell remains and it's normally locked.

While not competing in size and erotica with the western-enclosure temples, Parsvanath, the largest of the Jain temples in the walled enclosure, is notable for the exceptional skill and precision of its construction, and for its sculptural beauty. Some of Khajuraho's best-known figures can be seen here, including the woman removing a thorn from her foot (some say, painting her foot for a temple dance) and another applying eye make-up. Although the temple was originally dedicated to Adinath, a jet-black image of Parsvanath was substituted about a century ago. Both an inscription on the mahamandapa doorway and its similarities with the slightly simpler Lakshmana Temple date it to 950–70.

The adjacent smaller Adinath has been partially restored over the centuries. With fine carvings on its three bands of sculptures it's similar to Khajuraho's Hindu temples, particularly Vamana. Only the striking black image in the inner sanctum triggers a Jain reminder.

Shanti Nath, built about a century ago, houses components from older temples, including a 4.5m-high Adinath statue with a plastered-over inscription on the pedestal dating to about 1027.

Outside the enclosure is the circular Jain Art Museum (admission Rs 5; 🕙 7am-6pm). Its artworks salvaged from the temples are not worth a special visit if you're touring the temples themselves. More interesting are the photographs relating to Jainism in the modern Santinath Temple.

Southern Group

A dirt track runs to the isolated Duladeo Temple, about 1km south of the Jain enclosure. This is the youngest temple, dating to 1100–50. Its relatively wooden, repetitious sculptures, such as those of Shiva, suggest that Khajuraho's temple builders had passed their artistic peak by this point, although they had certainly lost none of their zeal for the Kamasutra.

Anticipating Duladeo and its flaws, the ruined Chaturbhuja Temple (c 1100) has a fine 2.7m-high, four-armed statue of Vishnu in the sanctum. It is Khajuraho's only developed temple without erotic sculptures.

Just before Chaturbhuja there's a signed track leading to Bijamandala Temple. This is the excavated mound of an 11th-century temple, dedicated to Shiva judging by the white marble lingam at the apex of the mound. Although there are some exquisitely carved figures, unfinished carvings were also excavated, suggesting that what would have been Khajuraho's largest temple was abandoned as resources flagged. Scattered around the base are various misplaced stones from the upper parts while nearby are three smaller mounds containing unearthed buildings.

MUSEUMS

The Archaeological Museum (☎ 272320; Main Rd; admission Rs 5; ⏰ 10am-5pm Sat-Thu) is announced by a statue of Ganesh dancing rather sensuously for an elephant-headed deity. This collection of statues and sculptures from around Khajuraho is moving to a larger site north of the western temples.

Adivart Tribal & Folk Art Museum (☎ 272721; Chandela Cultural Centre, Link Rd No 1; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/50; ⏰ 10am-5pm Tue-Sun) makes a colourful change from the temples. It gives a taste of Madhya Pradesh's vibrant tribal culture through pointillist Bhili paintings, terracotta Jhoomar sculptures, masks, statues and bamboo flutes.

Activities

The four-handed Ayurvedic treatments at the Keralan-run, India Tourism–approved Yadav Lodge (☎ 272572; treatment US$25-50; ⏰ 24hr) win rave reviews and are the perfect way to rejuvenate after a day of temples and touts. The lodge is set to reopen on Basti Rd under the name Ayur Arogyam.

Apart from the hotels offering yoga, the inspiring Yogi Sudarshan Dwiveda (☎ 9893912141; Vidhya Colony; ⏰ 5.30am & 6pm) runs sessions at his home, with attendant children and cows.

Volunteers can help at workshops run by NGO Global Village (☎ 74237; globalvillage@indiatimes.com; Main Rd), which targets environmental problems such as the plastic bags littering Khajuraho.

Sleeping

Khajuraho's popularity means a plentiful supply of hotels, and hefty discounts (20% to 50%) available out of season (April to September).

To avoid adding a tout's commission to your bill, get a ride to a place near your chosen hotel, pay your driver and walk in alone.

The Government of India tourist office (☎ 272348; Main Rd; ⏰ 9.30am-6pm Mon-Sat) can organise homestays in Basari, a tribal village 27km east of Khajuraho.

BUDGET

Some budget hotels move into midrange with their better rooms.

Yogi Lodge (☎ 274158; r from Rs 120-150) These small, spartan rooms with sit-down toilet, bucket shower, air-cooler and TV are among the best budget choices. There's a rooftop restaurant and, as at Yogi Sharma's other hotel, Ashram Lodge, yoga classes (7.30am to 8.30am).

Yadav Lodge (☎ 272572; r Rs 150) If a treatment here isn't enough (see left), there are seven basic but charming rooms with bucket showers, and Ayurvedic meals.

Yogi Sharma Ashram Lodge (☎ 272273; Main Rd; r Rs 100-300) Monastery-like place 1.5km north of town in a garden thick with mango and lemon trees, which guests can plunder for their cooking. Yogi Sharma runs yoga classes (7.30am to 8.30am), which nonguests can attend for a small donation, and free room and board is offered to guests who get involved with his mission at 10 local Adivasi schools.

our pick Hotel Surya (☎ 274145; www.hotelsuryakhajuraho.com; Jain Temples Rd; r Rs 200-600, with AC Rs 750; ❄ 💻) Well-appointed rooms set among whitewashed corridors, marble staircases and a walled garden. If you're opting for non-AC, it's well worth spending Rs 600 for a room with balcony, bath and TV. The atmosphere is refreshingly laid-back, and yoga (7am to 8am) and massage are on offer.

Hotel Zen (☎ 274228; oshozen62@hotmail.com; Jain Temples Rd; r Rs 200-700, with AC Rs 500-1200; ❄ 💻) A popular backpacker hang-out. Rooms have TVs with BBC Worldwide and overlook a series of courtyards with lotus ponds, candles flickering at night and an overpriced restaurant. The attentive staff is more than happy to organise tours and travel.

MIDRANGE

Casa Di William (☎ 274244; anupamgupta74@hotmail.com; s/d Rs 300/400, with air-cooler Rs 350/450, with AC Rs 550/650; ❄) Fifteen simple, colourful rooms set around a leafy courtyard with a rooftop restaurant and, of course, yoga and massage centre. Room 651 is across the road from the western temples.

Hotel Harmony (☎ 244135; Jain Temples Rd; s/d from Rs 350/400; ❄) This upbeat hotel has 25 comfortable rooms with TV and a decent courtyard restaurant (meals Rs 75 to 100) serving pizza, pasta, Mexican, and bread and tiramisu made daily. One-hour yoga sessions are at 7am and 6pm.

Hotel Lakeside (☎ 274120; avinashkhr@rediff.com; Main Rd; s/d Rs 300/350, with AC Rs 775/975;) There are views across Shiv Sagar from the 22 breezy rooms with hot water and the restaurant on the roof, which is also the venue for yoga and meditation sessions (9am).

Hotel Marble Palace (☎ 274353; palacemarble@hotmail.com; s/d Rs 350/450, with AC Rs 550/650;) This quiet hotel does indeed have marble floors plus a large winding staircase. The 10 rooms have attractive black, white and brown minimalist décor.

Hotel Siddharth (☎ 274627; hotelsiddharth@rediffmail.com; Main Rd; r with air-cooler/AC Rs 390/790;) One of the best midrange hotels, with cool, spacious rooms, hot-water bath tubs for a post-temple soak, and a popular terrace restaurant (meals Rs 60 to 80) with some of Khajuraho's best temple views. Pot plants sit in the windows of the more expensive rooms upstairs.

Hotel Jhankar (☎ 274063; mptkhaj@sancharnet.in; r non-AC/AC Rs 690/1190;) Dated but clean and comfy MP Tourism hotel with tiled floors, 24-hour hot water and an AC restaurant, set among the trees in a secluded location south of the modern village.

TOP END

These deluxe hotels are south of the modern village.

Holiday Inn (☎ 272301; www.holidayinnkhajuraho.com; Jhansi Rd; s/d/ste from US$65/75/110;) Not as stylish as Hotel Chandela but the 82 AC rooms with minibars and safes leave little to be desired. Its facilities match the other top-end hotel. Meals are Rs 200 to 250.

Hotel Chandela (☎ 272355; www.tajhotels.com; Jhansi Rd; s/d/ste from Rs 4000/4300/6000;) Five-star hotel with a fountain in the AC foyer and a swimming pool (Rs 300 nonguests) that's perfect for cleansing temple-tired legs. Other amusements include minigolf, badminton, flute recitals (8pm to 9pm), two restaurants (meals Rs 400 to 500), boutiques and a bookshop. The 90 rooms feature a tasteful mix of old and new furnishings.

Eating

Khajuraho has a restaurant to suit every palette, many with temple views.

Raja's Café (rajacafé@hotmail.com; Main Rd; dishes Rs 50-80) The Swiss-owned restaurant at Khajuraho's kilometre zero serves scrumptious Indian and Chinese favourites, as well as less orthodox dishes such as macaroni, goulash and chicken Szechwan, in a shady courtyard and terrace.

Agrasen (Jain Temples Rd; meals Rs 60) Up and coming terrace restaurant offering a good range of grub including pizza, thali (traditional south Indian and Gujarati 'all-you-can-eat' meal), nonvegetarian curries, soups and Chinese.

Ganesh Restaurant (Jain Temples Rd; meals Rs 50-110) Quality food – Indian and Chinese, vegetarian and nonvegetarian, and curd-and-banana-based breakfasts – although the cold coffee leaves a bit to be desired. You can sit on the roof at night.

Blue Sky Restaurant (☎ 274120; Main Rd; meals Rs 150-200; 7am-midnight) Scores for its balcony seating as well as its fine selection of Italian, Japanese and more traditional dishes. Up in the tree-house dining area, with its bird's-eye view of the temples, you ring a bell for service. Don't believe the staff – you can't see the sound-and-light show (below) from here.

Mediterraneo (☎ 272246; Jain Temples Rd; meals Rs 150-200) Overdosing on thali? Get down to this rooftop Italian restaurant for mouth-watering wood-fired pizzas, homemade pasta, crepes, and bread and cakes baked freshly every day.

If your budget won't stretch as far as Mediterraneo, try Bella Italia (☎ 274582; Jain Temples Rd; meals Rs 80-190).

Entertainment

Sound-and-light show (Indian/foreigner Rs 50/300; in English 6.30pm/7.40pm, in Hindi 7.30pm/8.40pm Nov-Feb/March-Oct) Technicolour floodlights sweep across the temples of the western group as Indian classical music soundtracks a potted history of Khajuraho narrated by the 'master sculptor'.

Folk dancing can be seen at the government-operated Shilpgram (☎ 9425143528; 7am-9.30pm Oct-Mar), designed to promote Indian culture. Folk dances are also performed in the comfortable indoor theatre at Kandariya Art & Culture (☎ 274031; Jhansi Rd; admission Rs 300; 7-8pm & 8.30-9.30pm). Downing Street (☎ 272301; Holiday Inn, Jhansi Rd; 8pm-midnight) is the only disco in town.

Shopping

Mrignayani (Gole Market; 10am-8pm Wed-Mon) MP government shop with fixed prices and dispassionate but helpful staff selling state-produced handicrafts. Also has a booth at the western group of temples.

Kandariya Art & Culture (☎ 274031; Jhansi Rd; 9.15am-8pm) Two showrooms containing large antiques and India-wide goods.

Getting There & Away

Visitors to Khajuraho may feel uncomfortably like its intrepid Victorian discoverer by the end of a long, shaky bus journey from one of the nearest railheads. Flying is a good alternative, and a railway line is being built to link Khajuraho with Jhansi and Varanasi.

AIR

Reserve in advance, as seats can be booked solid for days by tour groups.

Indian Airlines (☎ 274035; Jhansi Rd; 🕒 10am-5.35pm Mon-Sat) flies daily to Delhi (US$170, 4.10pm) and Varanasi (US$120, 1.30pm).

Jet Airways (☎ 274407; 🕒 9.30am-5.30pm), at the airport, flies daily to Delhi (US$175, 1.30pm) via Varanasi (US$120).

BUS

The bus station has a ticket office (🕒 8am-noon & 1.30-7pm) off Link Rd No 2.

There are regular buses to Jhansi (Rs 90, five hours) including deluxe services (Rs 170, 9am and 11.15am); the second connects with the Jhansi–Delhi Shatabdi train. There's a bus to Agra (Rs 240, 10 hours, 8am) and, on Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday, a night bus to Varanasi (Rs 190, 14 hours, 3pm).

Three buses run to Satna (Rs 80, 3½ hours, 7.30am, 2pm and 3pm) and there are regular services to Mahoba (Rs 40, four hours) and to Madla for Panna National Park (Rs 25, one hour).

More buses can be caught at Bamitha, 11km away on Hwy 75 where buses between Gwalior, Jhansi and Satna shuttle through all day. Catch a shared jeep (Rs 10, 7am to 7pm) to Bamitha from the bus station.

TAXI

Yashowaran Taxi Driver Union (☎ 9425143774), opposite Gole Market, drives to Satna (with/without AC Rs 1500/1200), Varanasi (with/without AC Rs 5000/4500), Agra (with/without AC Rs 6000/5500) and Orchha or Jhansi (with/without AC Rs 2500/2200).

To Bamitha costs Rs 300; a jeep, necessary for Panna National Park, costs Rs 1500.

Prices are fixed but off-season bargaining is a possibility. Costs can be cut by sharing a ride.

TRAIN

Train tickets can be bought from the train reservation office (☎ 274416; 🕒 8am-noon & 2-5pm Mon-Sat) at the bus station. When it's closed, the amiable chai (tea) shop owner outside has a current timetable.

Jhansi is the nearest station on the Delhi–Mumbai train line; Satna on the Mumbai–Allahabad line is better for Varanasi. An alternative is to get the bus to Mahoba and take train 1107 Bundelkhand Express overnight to Varanasi (Rs 334/788/991, 10 hours, 12.34am).

Getting Around

Bicycle is the favourite way to get around flat and pleasantly traffic-free Khajuraho; bikes cost from Rs 20 per day to hire from several places along Jain Temples Rd, including Bilal Bikes (☎ 274176; 🕒 8am-7pm).

Cycle-rickshaws should cost about Rs 10 to 15 per kilometre and for a half-day/whole day Rs 100/200. Make sure the cost includes the southern temples plus waiting time. Quicker for the southern temples is an autorickshaw at about Rs 20 a kilometre or for a half-day/whole day Rs 200/300.

Taxis to and from the airport charge Rs 150, while autorickshaws ask Rs 50.

AROUND KHAJURAHO

Raneh Falls

These waterfalls (☎ 07686-272622; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/200, compulsory guide Rs 40, video Rs 200, autorickshaw/car entry Rs 15/30; 🕒 6am-6pm) are 18km from Khajuraho – a Rs 300 autorickshaw or Rs 400 taxi return journey. While the falls are only 30m high they are wide and tumble as a churning mass over black and red rocks. There are boats for hire (Indian/foreigner Rs 50/100) and it's possible to view gharial or mugger river crocodiles 1km away at Ken Gharial Sanctuary (🕒 1 Oct-30 Jun).

Panna National Park

The Satna road passes the Madla Gate of this 543-sq-km tiger reserve (☎ 07732-252135; 1/2/3 drive Indian Rs 25/40/60, foreigner Rs 500/750/1000, video Rs 200, compulsory guide Rs 75, jeep entry/hire Rs 30/800, elephant ride Indian/foreigner Rs 100/600; 🕒 6.30-10.30am & 2.30-4pm 1 Oct-15 Feb, 6-10am & 3-5pm 16 Feb-30 Jun) along the Ken River, 32km from Khajuraho. It has a variety of wildlife, including 37 tigers, leopards, nilgais (antelope), chittals (spotted deer), langur monkeys and sambars.

About 2km west of the park entrance is an Interpretative Centre (☎ 07732-275231; Indian/foreign Rs 5/50; 🕒 6am-6pm) with a useful introduction to the history and ecology of the area.

Pandav Falls (Indian/foreigner Rs 10/100, camera/video Rs 40/300, autorickshaw/jeep entry Rs 15/30; 6am-5pm), a short drive east of Madla, are mentioned in the Mahabharata as one of the places where the five Pandava brothers stayed during their exile – commemorated by five small sculptures of houses.

Jewel of the Jungle (07732-275241; www.thejewelofthejungle.com; Madla Gate, Panna National Park; tw per person US$50-75, American Plan US$100-110, Jungle Plan US$130-150;) has cottages with animal-themed decoration and the atrium of the main building, which has facilities such as a wood-panelled library-cum-bar, is open to give breezes and butterflies free passage. The Jungle Plan includes goodies such as a herbal massage.

Transport in the park is in petrol-driven jeeps only; they can be hired at Madla Gate or in Khajuraho (see p681).

SATNA

07672 / pop 225,470

Pass straight through Satna (known as 'cement city') if you can – on the bus to Khajuraho or the train to Varanasi. The bus and train stations are 3km apart (Rs 20 in an autorickshaw). There is a State Bank of India ATM opposite the bus stand and MP Tourism (225471) has an often-closed counter at the train station.

If you do wash up here overnight, Chandra View (226906; Rewa Rd; s/d from Rs 300/475;), 300m from the bus stand, is a little unclean but infinitely preferable to the Pepsi-branded station hotel.

Four buses go to Khajuraho (Rs 65, five hours, 6.30am, 7am, 9.10am and 2.30pm). At other times go via Panna (Rs 40, four hours).

The best train to Varanasi is No 5159 Sarnath Express (Rs 310/720/892, nine hours, 8am).

CENTRAL MADHYA PRADESH

South of the two lakes, the state capital lives up to its role in life – shopping complexes and bright lights compete for space in New Market; hotels, museums and restaurants nestle in the Arera and Shamla Hills. On Upper Lake, nicknamed 'the Bhopal beauty', the wealthy race around in speedboats or fill the night with ringtones on the Lake Princess cruise boat.

North of the lakes is the old city, where Hamidia Rd is a streak of modernity alongside an area of bazaars and mosques. Bhopal's population is 40% Muslim – one of India's highest concentration of Muslims – and the women in black niqabs (veils) are reminders of the female Islamic rulers who built up Bhopal in the 19th century. North of the old city is a reminder of a more recent, more tragic history – the Union Carbide plant, site of the world's worst industrial disaster (see the boxed text, p684).

Orientation

The train and bus stations are just off Hamidia Rd, within easy walking distance of the main hotel area. The 6-sq-km Upper Lake (Map p683) is separated from the smaller Lower Lake (Map p683) by a causeway, which links the old city's Muslim-dominated, maze-like streets with the broad, leafy avenues of the new city. Autorickshaw drivers tend to use the 'back road' to the east of Lower Lake – to use the causeway, ask to go via Sadar Manzil (Hall of Public Audience). Most of the city's shops, banks and facilities are in New Market.

Dangers & Annoyances

Beware of pickpockets working around the train station, the bus stand and along Hamidia Rd.

THE BHOPAL DISASTER – A CONTINUING TRAGEDY

On 3 December, 1984, 40 tonnes of deadly methyl isocyanate (MIC) gas leaked out over Bhopal from the US-owned Union Carbide chemical plant (Map p683). Blown by the wind, rivers of the heavy gas coursed through the city. In the ensuing panic, people were trampled trying to escape while others were so disorientated that they ran into the gas.

The leak at the plant resulted from a saga of untested technology, negligent maintenance and cost-cutting measures that, according to some estimates, saved a mere US$70 a day. There were 3828 initial fatalities according to official figures, although truckloads of bodies were secreted away to mass graves. The continuing death toll stands at over 20,000, while more than 500,000 people suffer from a catalogue of illnesses from hypertension and diabetes to premature menopause and skin disorders. Their children experience growth disorders, such as shrunken rib cages.

Of US$3 billion demanded in damages, Union Carbide paid the Indian government US$470 million in 1989. However, winning compensation for the many victims (there were about a million compensation claims) has been a tortuous process, slowed by the Indian government's wrangling over who was a victim and Dow Chemical's acquisition of Union Carbide in 2001. Both buyer and seller deny ongoing liability.

The Indian government is also reluctant to discourage foreign investors. It took a 19-day hunger strike in 2003 to force the government to request that its American counterpart extradite former Union Carbide chairman Warren Andreson, who absconded from court hearings in 1992. Andreson continues to enjoy his retirement on Long Island, New York State.

Union Carbide financed the building of a multimillion dollar hospital, while charity Sambhavna Trust (Map p683; ☎ 2730914; Bafna Colony, Berasia Rd) runs a clinic, treating more than 200 people a day using yoga, allopathic and Panchakarmic (an Ayurvedic procedure for detoxification through medicated oil massage, steam bath and medicinal enema) treatments, and Ayurvedic remedies prepared using herbs from its medicinal garden. Sambhavna volunteers also work in areas such as advertising, medical research and internet communications.

Some 25,000 people are estimated to have been poisoned by chemicals washed into the ground from the plant, where substances including mercury and tar lie baking in the sun. The water in most of Bhopal is the same as in the rest of India, but in the bastis (slums) near the plant, wells have been marked as dangerous. Safe water is brought in, but not enough, and the residents of these areas continue to use the wells. 'This is not just something that happened in 1984,' an American Sambhavna volunteer told us. 'People get poisoned every day by the water – high on our list of priorities is stopping fresh victims.'

For more information, visit www.bhopal.org or www.bhopal.com, or read Five Past Midnight in Bhopal, the royalties of which go to disaster victims.

Sights & Activities

MOSQUES

One of the largest mosques in India, Taj-ul-Masjid (Map p683; ⌚ closed to non-Muslims Fri) was built by Bhopal's third female ruler, Shah Jahan Begum (1868–1901). The building was incomplete at her death, as funds were diverted to her other projects including the city's waterworks, railways and postal system, and construction did not resume until 1971. Fortresslike terracotta walls surround three gleaming white onion domes and a pair of towering pink minarets with white domes. If you can make the dawn azan (call to prayer), you won't regret it.

The gold spikes crowning the squat minarets of the Jama Masjid (Map p683), built in 1837 by Qudsia Begum, glint serenely above the skull caps and veils swirling through the bazaar below.

The Moti Masjid (Map p683) near Sadar Manzil was built by Qudsia Begum's daughter, Sikander Jahan Begum, in 1860. Similar in style to the Jama Masjid in Delhi, it's a smaller marble-faced mosque with two dark-red minarets and gold-spiked cupolas.

RASHTRIYA MANAV SANGRAHALAYA

The Museum of Man (Map p683; ☎ 2661319; admission Rs 10, vehicle Rs 10; ⌚ 10am-5.30pm Tue-Sun Sep-Feb, 11am-6.30pm Tue-Sun Mar-Aug) is the best way to learn about the life, culture and beliefs of India's 450-plus tribes without visiting an Adivasi village. It would be easy to lose track of a day in the sprawling complex, overlooking the forested hills of the Van Vihar National Park (right).

The hilltop museum focuses on individual tribes as well as giving an overview of Adivasi life from Tamil Nadu to Himachal Pradesh, through art, photographs, dress, cooking implements and entire tribal dwellings.

Tribal Habitat is an open-air exhibition of some 30 buildings in village settings, best toured at the beginning or end of the day – unless you take the Bhopal-On-Wheels bus (see right). Built and maintained by Adivasis using traditional tools and materials, its authentic feel is accentuated by its hillside location.

As well as dwellings from across India – from the Himalayan foothills to the Rajasthani desert and the Orissan forest – there is a mythological trail exploring the tribal people's extraordinary myths and legends through their crafts.

STATE MUSEUM

This archaeological museum (Map p683; ☎ 2661856; Shamla Hills; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/30, camera/video Rs 20/50; ⏲ 2-9pm Tue-Sun Mar-Sep, 10am-5pm Tue-Sun Oct-Feb) boasts 16 AC rooms stacked with sculptures, cave paintings, photographs and artefacts tracing local and national history; from 87 Jain bronzes unearthed by a surprised farmer in western MP to a letter in which Queen Elizabeth II takes over the administration of India.

BHARAT BHAVAN

Architect Charles Correa designed cultural centre Bharat Bhavan (Map p683; ☎ 2660239; admission Rs 10; ⏲ 2-8pm Tue-Sun Feb-Oct, 1-7pm Tue-Sun Nov-Jan) to blend into the landscape – though this doesn't preclude multicoloured domes. Offering some of Bhopal's best lake views, the complex is a serene place to take in modern Indian art, tribal carvings and paintings, a library, and private contemporary art galleries. There is a café, and regular evening performances of poetry, music and theatre.

LAKSHMI NARAYAN TEMPLE & BIRLA MUSEUM

Lakshmi Narayan Temple (Map p683; Birla Mandir; Arera Hill) has a series of marble panels illustrating the central tenets of the Bhagavad Gita and views across the lakes to the minaret-dotted old city. An adjacent museum (Map p683; ☎ 2551388; admission Rs 5/51; ⏲ 9.30am-8pm Tue-Sun) contains a small collection of local sculptures dating back to the 6th century. For those who don't make it to Bhimbetka (p688), there's a reconstruction of one of the rock shelters.

VAN VIHAR NATIONAL PARK

The best time to visit this 445-hectare safari park (Map p683; ☎ 2674278; dirvvnp@sancharnet.in; Indian/foreigner Rs 15/200, camera/video Rs 40/300, autorickshaw/car Rs 20/40; ⏲ 6.30am-5.30pm Sat-Thu Mar-Sep, from 8am Oct-Feb) is at 4.30pm, when animals including two white tigers, an albino sloth bear and a lion pace the edges of their cages waiting to be fed. You may want to hire a rickshaw – it's 5km from the entrance to the basic interpretation centre at the end.

UPPER LAKE

The MP Tourism Boat Club (Map p683; ☎ 32095; Lake Drive Rd; ⏲ 5.30am-7pm) offers motorboat rides (per 5min Rs 35, minimum 3 people) and two-to-four-person pedalboats (per 30 min Rs 30), as well as boats suitable for 10 people and upwards (Rs 25 to 50 per person).

Tours

Bhopal-On-Wheels (adult/child 3hr tour Rs 60/30; ⏲ 11am) is a guided tour in a dinky open minibus, departing from Palash Residency (Map p683; ☎ 2553066; TT Nagar) and winding through the hills and the old city. Stops include Lakshmi Narayan Temple, MP Tourism Boat Club and Rashtriya Manav Sangrahalaya.

Lake Princess (upper deck/AC lower deck Rs 75/100; ⏲ 6.30pm) cruises Upper Lake for 45 minutes, leaving from MP Tourism Boat Club (above). It's not exactly a serene sunset cruise, with young guys doing their best to rave to Hindi pop on the minute top-deck dance floor.

HAMIDIA ROAD

Hotels here generally offer both budget and midrange rooms, as well as 24-hour checkout. Those on Hamidia Rd are noisy – ask for a room away from the road. Budget hotels are often full, so book ahead.

Hotel Ranjit (Map p686; ☎ 2740500; ranjeethotels@sancharnet.in; 3 Hamidia Rd; s Rs 250-450, d Rs 350-550, with AC s Rs 450-600, d Rs 550-700; ❄) The comfortable rooms have hot-water showers and TVs, and the bar-restaurant (meals Rs 80) is deservedly popular, but the hotel trails behind its near neighbours.

Hotel Sonali (Map p686; ☎ 2740880; sonalinn@sancharnet.in; 3 Radha Talkies Rd; s/d from Rs 275/350, AC with breakfast from Rs 600/675;) The wide range of rooms includes some of the area's smartest budget accommodation. The more expensive rooms seem a little worn for the money, but 24-hour service and facilities such as a travel desk are compensation.

Hotel Richa (Map p686; ☎ 4231980; 1 Hamidia Rd; s Rs 320-370, d Rs 400-450, with AC s/d Rs 570/700, ste Rs 900;) Beyond the gloomy reception, the rooms are good value – particularly in executive class – with Hollywood films on the TV and a newspaper under the door in the morning.

Hotel Manjeet (Map p686; ☎ 2740949; hmanjeet@sancharnet.in; r Rs 250-725, ste Rs 825-875;) Don't be put off by the alleyway outside – Manjeet is competing with Sonali for the 'best midrange hotel' rosette. The clean and tidy rooms, quiet retreats off Hamidia Rd, have sparkling tile floors and all mod cons.

NEW CITY

Palash Residency (Map p683; ☎ 2553066; palashotel@sancharnet.in; TT Nagar; s/d from Rs 1790/2090;) Whitewashed walkways lead past a lawn to 33 spacious, shipshape AC rooms let down only by cramped bathrooms. One of MP Tourism's smartest properties.

Jehan Numa Palace Hotel (Map p683; ☎ 2661100; www.hoteljehanumapalace.com; 157 Shamla Hill; incl breakfast, cottage s/d Rs 2299/2799, s Rs 2999-4699, d Rs 3699-5399, ste Rs 5999-6999;) A former late-19th-century palace that's lost none of its character through conversion into a fine hotel. Book ahead to bag a cottage – the best value, with cosy rooms around an enclosed garden. Some more expensive rooms have direct access from their balconies to the palm-lined swimming pool.

Eating & Drinking

Eating places in Bhopal divide into the cheap on Hamidia Rd and midrange restaurants in TT Nagar.

Manohar (Map p686; 6 Hamidia Rd; meals Rs 40) A busy team of uniformed waiters serves Chinese, pizza, snacks, South Indian favourites, juices, shakes and even fresh fruit to Bhopal's well-to-do. For a memorable feast, try the elongated special masala dosa followed by the bright-yellow, sweet-noodle faluda (chickpea flour noodles).

Indian Coffee House (Map p686; Hamidia Rd; meals Rs 50) Not as salubrious as the TT Nagar branch (Map p683), on New Market Rd, but nonetheless a top spot for a breakfast of filter coffee and scrambled eggs.

our pick Bapu Ki Kutia (Map p683; Sultania Rd; meals Rs 50; 11am-11pm) Located between the Nehru statue and Café Coffee Day, this quality dhaba (snack bar) is so popular you'll probably have to share a table. Its name means 'Papa's Shack'.

New Inn (Map p683; Bhadbhada Rd; meals Rs 80) A popular TT Nagar haunt where waiters bustle between marble walls and painted windows. Mains, including a range of kebabs, are pricey, but there is also a good selection of soups, noodles and chop suey.

Wind & Waves (Map p683; meals Rs 100; 10.30am-10.30pm) It's the usual MP Tourism menu, but it's worth facing those 'mood lifters' and staples 'from the soup tureen' for the view across the Upper Lake. Perfect for a pre–Tribal Habitat power-up or a sunset beer, it's off Lake Drive Rd.

Jehan Numa Palace Hotel (Map p683; ☎ 2661100; 157 Shamla Hill) Head up the hill to indulge yourself at the lavish hotel's two bars (beer from Rs 70) and four eateries: Caféchino café, La Kuchina Trattoria, the fountain-side Under the Mango Tree, and the grand Shahnama (meals Rs 300), where fish in piquant sauces is a speciality.

The supermarket (Map p683; 10am-10pm) off Bhadbhada Rd has a good range of items for DIY eating.

Shopping

Bhopal's two main shopping areas are New Market and the chowk (marketplace) off Hamidia Rd. While similar items can be found in both markets, prices are more reasonable in the atmospheric chowk. The labyrinthine alleys, weaving towards the Jama Masjid (p704), stock delicate gold and silver jewellery, fancifully woven saris, hand-embroidered appliqué skirts and jari (glittering embroidery, often including shards of mirror or glass) shoulder bags, a speciality of Bhopal.

Many shops carry MP handicrafts – mainly silk and cotton textiles, and clay, brass, wood and silver sculptures (prices Rs 50 to 2000).

Mrignayani (Map p683; 23 New Market Shopping Centre; 11am-2.30pm & 3.30-8pm Tue-Sun) This state-owned place offers stress-free shopping, though the fixed prices are higher than elsewhere.

Getting There & Away

AIR

Flights can also be booked at the MP Tourism head office (p683).

Indian Airlines (Map p683; ☎ 778434; Airlines House, Bhadbhada Rd; 10.30am-1pm & 2-5pm Mon-Sat) flies daily to Mumbai (US$165, 7.15pm) via Indore (US$80) and to Delhi (US$155, 6.40pm).

Jet Airways (Map p683; ☎ 2760372, airport 2645676; 8 Ranjit Towers; 9.30am-7pm) also flies daily to Mumbai (US$180, 8pm) and Delhi (US$115, 11am), with an additional Delhi service via Indore (US$90, 6.45pm) every day but Tuesday.

Air Deccan (2645676), at the airport, has daily budget flights to Delhi (9.05am or 10.40am and 7pm), going via Jabalpur (9.05am) on Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Sunday.

BUS

From the central bus stand (Map p686; ☎ 4257602; Hamidia Rd) there are numerous daily buses to Raisen (Rs 21, one hour), Bhimbetka (Rs 31, one hour), Sanchi (Rs 22, 1½ hours), Vidisha (Rs 27, two hours), Indore (ordinary/deluxe Rs 97/135, five/four hours), Ujjain (Rs 103, five hours), Pachmarhi (Rs 90, seven hours, 6.15am, MP Tourism's 18-seater runs from Palash Residency (Map p683; ☎ 2553066; TT Nagar) to Pachmarhi (Rs 103, six hours, 6.45am) and Indore (Rs 135, four hours, 7am, from the bus stand 7.30am; 1.30pm, from the bus stand 2.30pm); book ahead (Rs 15).

Getting Around

Minibuses for TT Nagar constantly depart from the corner of Hamidia Rd, while an autorickshaw costs about Rs 40. Autorickshaws often have unused meters; negotiating a fare should work out no more expensively. The airport is 16km from central Bhopal; expect to pay Rs 100/200 for an autorickshaw/taxi. MP Tourism (p683) can organise a car and driver from Rs 750 per day.

AROUND BHOPAL

Islamnagar

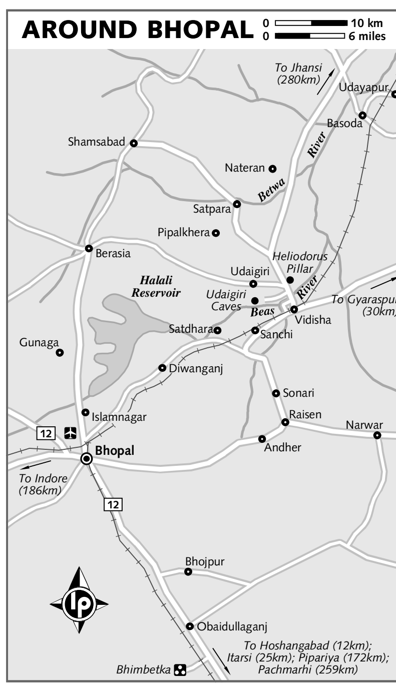
This fortified city 11km north of Bhopal was the first capital of Bhopal state, founded as Jagdishpur by the Rajputs before Dost Mohammed Khan occupied and renamed it in the early 18th century. The still-standing walls enclose two villages and remains including two palaces, Chaman Mahal and Rani Mahal (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100, camera/video Rs 20/50; 10am-5pm Tue-Sat).

The 18th-century Chaman Mahal is a synthesis of traditional Indian and Islamic architecture with Bengali-influenced drooping eaves. The main attraction is the Mughal water garden with sporadically functional channels and fountains. There are also an interpretation centre, giving a fragmented view of local history, and a hammam (Turkish bath) with changing rooms and water troughs in the dark, cool interior.

Adjacent is the dusty 19th-century Rani Mahal with a sturdily colonnaded Diwan-i-Am. Outside stand eight massive iron treasure chests, presumably delivered by outsized porters from the nearby hathi khana (elephant stables).

Catch a tempo (Rs 6) up Beresia Rd (Map p686), though you will probably have to change, or take an autorickshaw (Rs 100).

Bhojpur



Raja Bhoj (1010–53), founder of Bhopal, constructed an estimated 400-sq-km lake in Bhojpur, 28km southeast of Bhopal. The lake was unfortunately destroyed by Hoshang Shah, ruler of Mandu, in a pique in the early 15th century.

What did survive is the Bhojeshwar Temple, squatting on a small hill. For some reason the building was never finished and behind the temple are the remains of a ramp used to haul masonry. Sometimes called the Somnath of the north (see p745), the Shiva temple is unusual – an unrefined rectangle that houses an enormous 2.5m lingam. While there are some carvings, and presumably more were meant to follow, this temple lacks the fineries of its contemporaries. Fenced-off areas on nearby rocky slopes look to have been used as tracing boards, and lines still etched into the rock show grand future plans.

Take the Bhimbetka bus to the turn-off for Bhojpur (Rs 10), where tempos (Rs 7) ply the road to the temple.

Bhimbetka

Secreted in a forest of teak and sal in craggy cliffs, 46km south of Bhopal, are more than 600 rock shelters (Indian/foreigner Rs 2/10, vehicle Rs 10; dawn-dusk); almost half contain prehistoric paintings.

Thanks to their natural red and white pigments, the colours are remarkably well-preserved and, in certain caves, paintings of different eras adorn the same rock surface. A gamut of figures and scenes spill across the rocks: wild buffaloes (gaurs), rhinoceroses, bears and tigers, hunting scenes, initiation ceremonies, childbirth, communal dancing and drinking sessions, religious rites and burials.

The oldest paintings (Upper Palaeolithic) in white, often of huge animals, are probably up to 12,000 years old. Successive periods depict hunting tools, trade with the agricultural communities on the Malwa plains, and, still later, religious scenes involving tree gods. The latest are crude, geometric figures probably dating from the medieval period, when much of the artistry was lost.

The rock shelters are easy to find; 15 are accessible, signposted with a number (S1 to S15) and linked by a concrete path. A knowledgeable guide (agree on a fee beforehand) will point out the more obscure paintings and explain their significance. Zoo Rock Shelter (S4), famous for its variety of animal paintings, is one of the first you come to; S15 features a huge red bison attacking a helpless stick figure. There are no facilities here, so bring water.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Ask your bus driver to drop you at the turning for Bhimbetka, about 6.5km southeast of Obaidullaganj. Follow the large blue sign in Hindi with a red arrow pointing '3.2' right, crossing the railway line for a 3km walk into hills. Alternatively, take an autorickshaw from Obaidullaganj.

On the return journey, flag down a bus on the main road, or pay your autorickshaw to wait. If you want to visit both Bhimbetka and Bhojpur, it's worth hiring a car (about Rs 850) from MP Tourism in Bhopal (see p683).

SANCHI

☎ 07482 / pop 6790

Rising from the plains, 46km northeast of Bhopal, is a rounded hill topped with some of India's oldest Buddhist structures.

In 262 BC, repentant of the horrors he had inflicted on Kalinga in present-day Orissa, the Mauryan emperor Ashoka (see the boxed text, p41) embraced Buddhism. As a penance he built the Great Stupa at Sanchi, near the birthplace of his wife. A domed edifice used to house religious relics, it was the first Buddhist monument in the region and many other religious structures followed.

As Hinduism gradually reabsorbed Buddhism, the site decayed and was forgotten. In 1818 a British army officer rediscovered its treasures, leading to immense damage at the hands of amateur archaeologists and treasure hunters before a proper restoration took place between 1881 and 1919.

Although Sanchi can be visited from Bhopal, the crossroads village is a relaxing spot to spend the night. The stupas are best visited at dawn and at dusk, when the stone still glows with the heat of the day as the sun sinks behind the surrounding hills.

Orientation & Information

The Bhopal–Vidisha road intersects Monuments Rd, which leads from the train station to the hill with the stupas.

Canara Bank (☎ 266732; Monuments Rd; 10.30am-2.30pm Mon-Tue & Thu-Fri, 10.30am-12.30pm Sat) Changes travellers cheques and currency up to Rs 15,000.

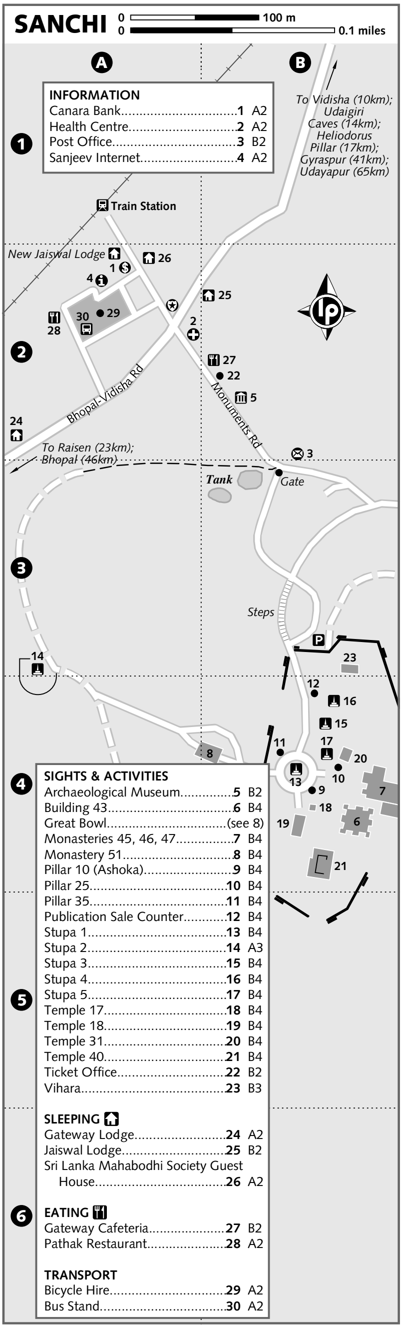
Sights

The hilltop stupas (Indian/foreigner Rs 10/250, car Rs 10, museum Rs 5; dawn-dusk) are reached via a path and stone steps at the end of Monuments Rd. The publication sale counter (10am-5pm) sells guidebooks and postcards.



If you're going up to the stupas for sunrise, buy a ticket the day before. Remember that you should walk clockwise around all Buddhist monuments.

STUPA 1

Beautifully proportioned, the Great Stupa is the main structure on the hill. Originally constructed by Ashoka, it was later enlarged and the original brick stupa enclosed within a stone one. Presently it stands 16m high and 37m in diameter. A wall encircles the stupa. There are four entrances through magnificently carved toranas (gateways) that are the finest Buddhist works of art at Sanchi and possibly in India.

TORANAS

Four gateways were erected around 35 BC and had all completely fallen down at the time of the stupa's restoration. Scenes carved onto the pillars and their triple architraves are mainly tales from the Jatakas, episodes from Buddha's various lives. At this stage in Buddhist art he was never represented directly – his presence was alluded to through symbols. The lotus stands for his birth, the bodhi tree his enlightenment, the wheel his teachings, and the footprint and throne his presence. The stupa itself also symbolises Buddha.

Northern Gateway

Topped by a broken wheel of law, this is the best preserved of the toranas. Scenes include a monkey offering a bowl of honey to Buddha, represented by a bodhi tree. Another panel depicts the Miracle of Sravasti – one of several miracles represented here – in which Buddha, again in the form of a bodhi tree, ascends a road into the air. Elephants support the architraves above the columns, while horses with riders and more elephants squeeze in between. Delicately carved yakshis (maidens) hang nonchalantly on each side.

Eastern Gateway

The breathtakingly carved figure of a yakshi, hanging from an architrave, is one of Sanchi's best-known images. One of the pillars, supported by elephants, features scenes from Buddha's entry to nirvana. Another shows Buddha's mother Maya's dream of an elephant standing on the moon, which she had when he was conceived. Across the front of the middle architrave is the Great Departure, when Buddha (a riderless horse) renounced the sensual life and set out to find enlightenment.

Southern Gateway

The back-to-back lions supporting the oldest gateway form the state emblem of India and can be seen on every banknote; they're an excellent example of the Greco-Buddhist art of that era. The gateway narrates Ashoka's life as a Buddhist, with scenes of Buddha's birth and another representation of the Great Departure. Also featured is the Chhaddanta Jataka, in which Buddha took the form of a six-tusked elephant. One of his two wives became jealous and had the elephant hunted and killed. The sight of his tusks, sawn off by the hunter, was sufficient for the queen to die of remorse.

Western Gateway

Potbellied dwarfs support the architraves of this gateway, which has some of the site's most interesting scenes. The top architrave shows Buddha in seven different incarnations, manifested three times as a stupa and four times as a tree. The rear of one pillar shows Buddha resisting the Temptation of Mara, while demons flee and angels cheer. The Chhaddanta Jataka features again.

OTHER STUPAS

Lesser stupas cover the hill, some of them tiny votive ones less than 1m high. Ashoka built eight, but only three remain, including the Great Stupa. Stupa 2 is halfway down the hill to the west. If you come from the town by the main route you can walk back down via Stupa 2. Instead of gateways, 'medallions' decorate the surrounding wall – naïve in design, but full of energy and imagination. Flowers, animals and people – some mythological – ring the stupa.

Stupa 3 is northeast of the main stupa and similar in design, though smaller. With a single, rather fine gateway, it may just postdate the completion of Stupa 1. It once contained relics of two important disciples of Buddha (see the boxed text, p663). They were moved to London in 1853 but returned in 1953 and are now kept in the modern vihara (resting place).

Now almost totally destroyed, the plain 2nd-century-BC Stupa 4 stands behind Stupa 3. Between Stupas 1 and 3 is the small Stupa 5, unusual in that it once had an image of Buddha, now displayed in the museum.

PILLARS

Of the scattered remains of pillars, the most important is Pillar 10, erected by Ashoka and later broken by a local landowner. Two upper sections of this beautifully proportioned and executed shaft lie side by side under a shelter 20m away; the capital (pillar's top, usually sculpted) is in the museum (right). Pillar 25, dating from the Sunga period (2nd century BC) and the 5th-century-AD Pillar 35 are not as fine as the earlier pillar.

TEMPLES

Temple 18 is a chaitya (prayer room or assembly hall) remarkably similar in style to classical Greek-columned buildings. It dates from around the 7th century AD, but traces of earlier wooden buildings have been discovered beneath it. Nearby is the small Temple 17, also Greek-like. The large Temple 40, slightly southeast, in part dates back to the Ashokan period.

The rectangular Temple 31 was built in the 6th or 7th century but reconstructed during the 10th or 11th century. It contains a well-executed image of Buddha, which may come from another temple as it doesn't exactly fit its pedestal.

MONASTERIES

The earliest monasteries were made of wood and are long gone. The usual plan is of a central courtyard surrounded by monastic cells. Monasteries 45 and 47, standing on the eastern ridge, date from the transition from Buddhism to Hinduism, with strong Hindu elements in their design. The former has two exceptional sitting Buddhas.

Behind Monastery 51, partway down the hill towards Stupa 2, is the Great Bowl, carved from a huge boulder, into which food and offerings were placed for distribution to the monks. The vihara (9am-5pm) was built to house the returned relics from Stupa 3. They can be viewed on the last Sunday of the month.

ARCHAEOLOGICAL MUSEUM

This museum (10am-5pm Sat-Thu) has a small collection of sculptures from the site. The most interesting pieces are the lion capital from the Ashoka pillar, a yakshi hanging from a mango tree, and beautifully serene Buddha figures in red sandstone – some of the earliest found anywhere.

Sleeping & Eating

Jaiswal Lodge (266610; Bhopal-Vidisha Rd; s/d Rs 100/200) Set to be renamed Krishna Lodge, the better of the two Jaiswal hotels (New Jaiswal Lodge is up near the train station) has simple rooftop rooms with sit-down toilets and bucket showers, and a basic restaurant. It's above the pharmacy.

Sri Lanka Mahabodhi Society Guest House (2266699; Monuments Rd; r Rs 100-250, with AC & bathroom Rs 450;) Visiting Buddhists stay here in cloistered rooms around a garden quadrangle – there's even a prayer room. The monks are friendly and it's a good choice if you don't mind basic rooms.

Gateway Lodge (266723; tl_san@sancharnet.in; Bhopal-Vidisha Rd; r with breakfast & air-cooler/AC Rs 890/1290;) Southwest of town, this has the edge on the competition in quality and '70s architecture. Rooms have bright bedspreads, patterned bathroom tiles and, in the bungalows, verandas overlooking the garden.

Pathak Restaurant (meals Rs 20; 10am-10pm) Among the small restaurants at the bus stand producing cheap, hearty vegetarian meals.

MP Tourism also runs Gateway Cafeteria (☎ 266743; Monuments Rd; meals Rs 70), which has two air-cooled bedrooms (singles/doubles Rs 490/590).

Getting There & Around

Frequent local buses connect Sanchi with Bhopal (Rs 22, 1½ hours) and Vidisha (Rs 5, 20 minutes). See also p687.

Train 8235 Bhopal–Bilaspur Express (sleeper Rs 271, 45 minutes) departs Bhopal at 8.10am, with the return service leaving Sanchi at 4.30pm. There are many passenger trains to Sanchi, and trains at 10am and 5.30pm in the opposite direction.

You can rent bicycles at the market for about Rs 5 per hour.

AROUND SANCHI

Within cycling distance of Sanchi are more Buddhist sites, although none match those at Sanchi. Sonari, 16km southeast of Sanchi, has eight stupas, one of them important because many of its carvings are still intact. At Satdhara, west of Sanchi on the banks of the Beas River, are another two stupas, one 30m in diameter. At Andher, 20km southeast of Satdhara, there are three small but well-preserved stupas, unearthed in 1851 following the discovery of Sanchi.

Further afield, Gyraspur, 41km northeast of Sanchi, is noted for two delicately carved temples dating from the 9th and 10th centuries. About 65km northeast of Sanchi, Udayapur has the large, red-sandstone Neelkantheswara Temple, thought to have been built in 1059. Raisen, 23km south of Sanchi, has a large, colourful hilltop fort built around 1200.

Vidisha

Vidisha, 10km northeast of Sanchi in a fork of the Betwa and Bes Rivers, was a major commercial centre in the 5th and 6th centuries BC. Later, it was known as Besnagar during the Buddhist emperor Ashoka's reign, then passed through the hands of everyone from the Mughals to the Scindias.

The ruins of a 2nd-century BC Brahmanical shrine here show traces of lime mortar, possibly the earliest use of cement in India. There is also a sun-worshipping temple, Bija Mandal. Finds from local sites are displayed in the dusty District Museum (☎ 250592; Sagar-Vidisha Rd; Indian/foreigner Rs 2/20, camera Rs 20; 10am-5pm Tue-Sun). Muscling over you as you pay for your ticket is a 3m-high, 2nd-century BC stone statue of Kuber Yaksha, treasurer of the gods. Other ancient residents include an 11th-century serpent couple, a 13th-century Hanuman, and Kamdev, the sex god – the one with the busty maidens and the wine.

There are frequent buses and shared jeeps from Sanchi (both Rs 5, 20 minutes) or take an autorickshaw (Rs 60).

Udaigiri Caves

Cut into a sandstone hill, about 5km northwest of Vidisha, are some 20 Gupta cave shrines (dawn-dusk) dating from the reign of Chandragupta II (382–401) according to an inscription. Most are Hindu but two are Jain (Caves 1 and 20) – unfortunately both are closed due to unsafe roofs. There may be an ASI caretaker on hand to show you around.

In Cave 4 is a lingam bearing Shiva's face complete with a third eye. Cave 5 has a superb image of Vishnu in his boar incarnation topped with a frieze of gods, who also flank the entrance to Cave 6. Lotus-ceilinged Cave 7 was cut out for the personal use of Chandragupta II. On the top of the hill are ruins of a 6th-century Gupta temple dedicated to the sun god.

To get there, take an autorickshaw from Vidisha (Rs 50) or straight from Sanchi (Rs 200 return). To reach the caves by bicycle from Sanchi, cycle towards Vidisha and turn left 1km after the river at an obvious intersection and stone traffic island/sign. After 2km turn right at a T-junction to another junction about 500m further along, and turn left. Take this road over the river and take the first left to the caves, another 3km.

Heliodorus Pillar

Instead of turning left for the Udaigiri Caves (see above) continue straight on for 3km to Heliodorus Pillar (Khamb Baba), erected in about 140 BC and dedicated to Vasudeva. An inscription says it was erected by a Greek ambassador, Heliodorus, from Taxila (now in Pakistan).

The pillar is worshipped by local fishermen. On full moon nights one is chained to the pillar, becomes possessed and is able to drive evil spirits from other locals. When someone has been exorcised, they drive a nail into the tamarind tree nearby, fixing to it a lime, a piece of coconut, a red thread, and supposedly the spirit. The large tree is bristling with old nails.

PIPARIYA

This small town is the road and rail junction for Pachmarhi, 54km up in the hills. The railway footbridge exits into the bus stand.

MP Tourism's two rooms near the bus stand at Tourism Motel (☎ 222299; tourpip@sancharnet.in; r Rs 390) have fans, TVs and bucket showers.

Jeeps go to Pachmarhi (back seat Rs 40, front seat Rs 150, two hours) at all hours. Ask your driver to break the journey at Denwa View lookout.

Alternatively there are buses (Rs 35, two hours, 10am, 11am, 2.30pm and 7.30pm) and MP Tourism's 18-seater (Rs 43, two hours, 11.30am).

Train 2853 Amarkantak Express goes to Bhopal (Rs 291/601/707, 3½ hours, 7am) daily and No 1464 Jabalpur–Veraval Express (Rs 271/571/677, 4½ hours, 2.25pm) on Tuesday to Friday and Sunday. Train 1093 Mahanagari Express goes to Varanasi (Rs 431/1062/1383, 15 hours, 1.40pm) daily.

☎ 07578 / pop 11,370 / elev 1067m

Madhya Pradesh's hill station feels a long way from steamy central India. The mountain town is surrounded by waterfalls, cave temples, the forested ranges of the Satpura National Park and rock paintings dating back 10,000 years. Visitors flock here to attend mass religious meetings held by big-name gurus and to scale Chauragarh, or simply to go trekking in a cool climate.

Explorer Captain J Forsyth 'discovered' Pachmarhi as late as 1857 and set up the first Forestry Department at Bison Lodge in 1862. Always keen to move to a cool hill station, the British army set up regional headquarters here, starting an association with the military that remains today.

Orientation

The road from Pipariya passes the bus stand at the northwest end of the small town, which has a bazaar and several hotels, before running southwest for about 2km to the seven-way junction called Jaistambha.

Sights and midrange accommodation are rather spread out, so hire a bicycle – it's pleasant riding.

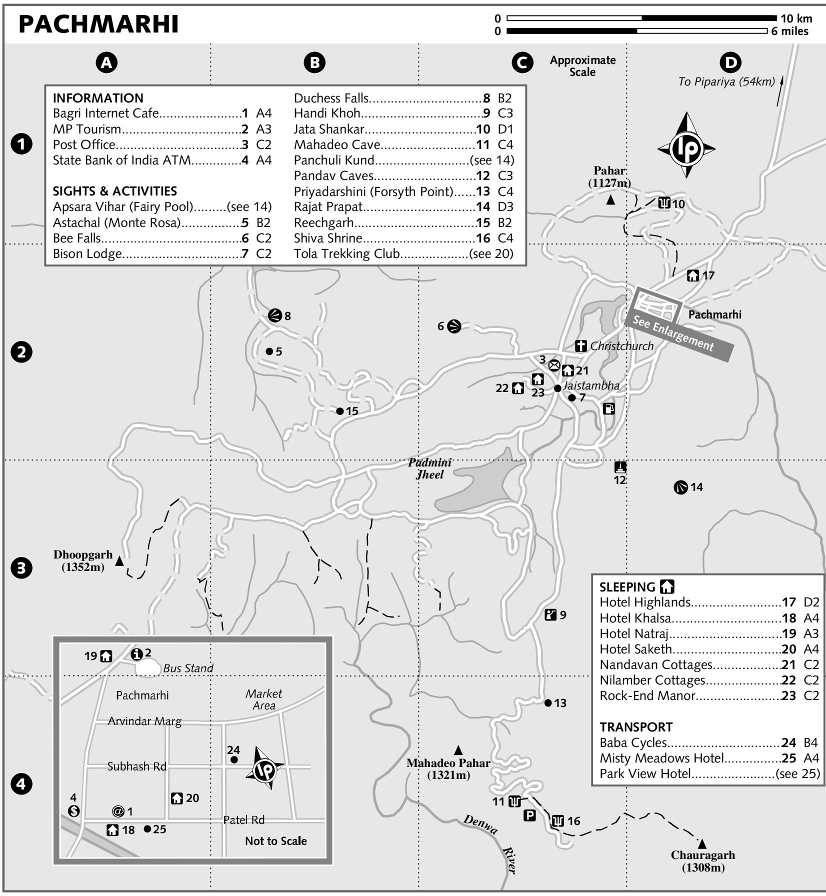
Sights & Activities

Captain Forsyth named Bison Lodge (☎ 225130; Indian/foreigner Rs 15/200; ⏲ 8am-noon & 4-7pm Tue-Sun Apr-Oct, 9am-1pm & 3-7pm Tue-Sun Nov-Mar), Pachmarhi's first forest lodge, after a herd of bison he spotted here. It's now an interesting museum focusing on the history, flora and fauna of the Satpura region.



Most of Pachmarhi's sights are accessible by road and a short walk. More demanding hikes, such as those around Astachal (Monte Rosa) and Duchess Falls from the trailhead of Reechgarh, might require a guide.

Discuss hiking plans with helpful Vinay Sahu of Tola Trekking Club (☎ 252256; ⏲ 9am-5pm), based at Hotel Saketh, off Patel Rd. His guides (Rs 200 per person per day) can take you deep into the highlands, with the option of camping or staying at an Adivasi village (Rs 1500 including food and transport).

MP Tourism's one-day bus tour (Rs 100; ⏲ 9.30am) covers most of the following sights, while Tola Trekking Club offers a hike from Priyadarshini to Chauragh, then down to Mahadeo Cave.

The Shiva shrine atop Chauragarh (1308m), Madhya Pradesh's third-highest peak, attracts tens of thousands of pilgrims during Shivaratri Mela (see the boxed text, p663). On the way there, stop at Handi Koh, also known as Suicide Point, to gawk down the 100m canyon into the dense forest. You'll spy Chauragarh in the distance from here and Priyadarshini (Forsyth Point).

About 3km beyond Priyadarshini the road ends at Mahadeo Cave, where a path 30m into the damp gloom reveals a lingam with attendant priest. This is the beginning of the 1365-step pilgrim trail to Chauragarh (five hours' return hike). A kilometre further on, another Shiva shrine is at the back of a terrifyingly narrow passage created by sticks holding open a fissure in the cliff.

Bee Falls (Indian/foreigner Rs 15/200, own petrol 4WD Rs 100, hired jeep Rs 200; 8am-7pm) are popular and accessible. Turn right south of Christchurch, then right again down a dirt road. You have the option of a 2km hike downhill or sharing a jeep. From the chai stalls at the bottom, several flights of steps lead to a lookout and the base of the falls.

Jata Shankar is a cave temple in a gorge about 2.5km along a good track that's signed just north of the town limits. The small Shiva shrine is hidden under a huge overhanging rock.

Pachmarhi's name derives from Pandav Caves. Legend has it that the Pandava brothers, of the Mahabharata, stayed in the five caves, some 2km southeast of Jaistambha, during their 13-year exile. The foundations of a brick Buddhist stupa have been excavated on top of the caves, which are believed to have been carved by Buddhists as early as the 4th century.

About 1km southeast of the caves, a 1km track leads from the car park to Rajat Prapat (Indian/foreigner Rs 15/200, own petrol 4WD Rs 100, hired jeep Rs 200; 8am-7pm), or Big Fall, where a waterfall cascades down a gulley in a sheer cliff. In the forest nearby are Panchuli Kund, five descending rock pools leading to Apsara Vihar (Fairy Pool).

Sunset Point on Dhoopgarh (1352m), Madhya Pradesh's highest peak, is a great place to finish the day.

Vinay Sahu, of Tola Trekking Club (☎ 252256; ⌚ 9am-5pm) was setting up rafting, parasailing, paragliding, rock-climbing and horse-riding trips at the time of research.

Sleeping & Eating

High seasons are from April to July and December/January, when places fill up and room rates rocket, especially during holidays and festivals. Hotel Saketh and Hotel Khalsa have the best restaurants.

BUDGET

Hotel Khalsa (☎ 252991; Patel Rd; r Rs 300) Portraits of gurus decorate this Sikh-run hotel. The professional managers make the most of the old rooms with battered furniture and toilets of varying quality. The restaurant (meals Rs 60), which has a riverside section overlooking two of the town's thoroughfares, serves Gujarati, Chinese and, of course, Punjabi dishes.

Hotel Natraj (☎ 252151; r Rs 300-450) Opposite the bus stand, this place is a little frayed but rooms are reasonable, with TVs, sit-down toilets and tiled floors. The Sai Baba–following management offers yoga classes.

Nandavan Cottages (☎ 252018; fax 252207; cottages Rs 450-500) A quiet place in a garden dotted with swings, behind the restaurant on Jaistambha and opposite the post office. The more expensive huts are smaller but newer and marginally better – and they look like flying saucers. If you're on a tour, you'll likely stop at the outdoor restaurant – it pays commission.

MIDRANGE & TOP END

Hotel Saketh (☎ 252165; r Rs 150-800; ❄) There is a wide range of rooms in this friendly hotel on a quiet side street off Patel Rd, from budget classics to midrange options with AC and bath tub. The restaurant Raj Bhoj (meals Rs 50) produces Gujarati, Bengali Chinese and South Indian dishes, including dosa (lentil-flour pancakes) for breakfast.

Hotel Highlands (☎ 252099; hhmptdc@dataone.in; Pipariya Rd; r Rs 590) MP Tourism's 40 rooms in tiled, colonial-style bungalows in flowery gardens are good value, with comfortable furniture and even little dressing rooms and backyards.

Nilamber Cottages (☎ 252039; d Rs 809) Above Rock-End Manor, Nilamber's six air-cooled cottages have cable TV and hot water. They're uninspiring but have great views across the hills from their verandas.

Rock-End Manor (☎ 252079; mptremph@sancharnet.in; r with AC Rs 2990; ❄) Pachmarhi's top hotel, another MP Tourism enterprise, was used by the local Maharaja and later the Indian army. There is still a distinguished air to the high ceilings, dressing rooms, large bathrooms, and verandas overlooking the hilltop grounds.

Getting There & Away

There are frequent services to Bhopal (Rs 103, six hours, 7am, 8am, 9am, 1.30pm, 3pm, 3.30pm and 6.30pm) via Pipariya (Rs 30, two hours) and one to Indore (Rs 197, 12 hours, 6.30pm). MP Tourism's 18-seater to Bhopal (Rs 103, six hours, 3.30pm) also goes via Pipariya (Rs 43, two hours) – book ahead (Rs 15).

Getting Around

A place in a shared jeep costs about Rs 150 for a half-day trip. Baba Cycles (Subhash Rd; ⌚ 9.15am-9pm) hires out bikes (per 24 hours Rs 30) and Misty Meadows Hotel (☎ 252136; Patel Rd) rents out motorcycles (per hour/day Rs 50/350), as does nearby Park View Hotel (☎ 252855; Patel Rd).

WESTERN MADHYA PRADESH

UJJAIN

Ujjain initially seems like an outpost of Indore – a nondescript city where sadhus (spiritual men) squatting on the pavement are occasional flashes of colour. But sit at a chai stand on the ghats at sunset, alongside fellow customers clapping along with the music drifting across the water, and it becomes clear what has drawn the sadhus. An energy undeniably pulses through the temples – perhaps because of their Hindu significance or perhaps because the Tropic of Cancer runs through Ujjain.

The holy city is one of the sites of the Kumbh Mela (see the boxed text, p1136), during which millions bathe in the Shipra River. It takes place here every 12 years – book now to get a room during the 2016 event.

History

On an ancient trade route, Ujjain has a distinguished history with origins lost in time. As Avantika, it was an important city under Ashoka's father; later Chandragupta II (AD 380–414) chose to rule from here rather than his capital, Pataliputra.

With the passing of the Guptas and the rise of the Parmaras, Ujjain became the centre of struggle for Malwa, before eventually passing into the hands of the Mandu sultans.

Following the demise of the Mughals, Maharaja Jai Singh (of Jaipur fame) became Governor of Malwa, building the observatory and several new temples. With his passing, Ujjain experienced more turmoil under the Marathas, until the Scindias finally took it in 1750. When they moved their capital to Gwalior in 1810, Ujjain's prominence declined rapidly.

Orientation

The train line divides the city: the old section, including most of the temples and ghats, is to the northwest; the new section is to the southeast, centred around the wedding-cake clock tower. Budget hotels line Subhash Rd, within walking distance of the train and bus stations. Indore is the closest place to change money (see p698).

Sights

TEMPLES

Mahakaleshwar Mandir

While not the most stunning temple, tagging along behind a conga–line through the underground chambers can be magical. At other times, the marble walkways are a peaceful preamble to the subterranean chamber containing one of India's 12 jyoti linga – naturally occurring lingam believed to derive currents of shakti (creative energies) from within themselves rather than being ritually invested with mantra-shakti by priests. The temple was destroyed by Altamish in 1235 and restored by the Scindias in the 19th century. You may be asked to give a donation, but it's not compulsory.

Harsiddhi Mandir

Built during the Maratha period, this temple enshrines a famous image of goddess Annapurna. At the entrance, two blackened stone towers bristling with lamps are a special feature of Maratha art. They add to the spectacle of Navratri (Dussehra) in September/October when filled with oil and ignited.

Gopal Mandir

The Scindias built this magnificent, marble-spired example of Maratha architecture in the 19th century. Muslim pillagers originally stole the sanctum's silver-plated doors from Somnath Temple in Gujarat (p745) and installed them in Ghazni, Afghanistan. Mohammed Shah Abdati later took them to Lahore (in present-day Pakistan), before Mahadji Scindia brought them back here.

Chintaman Ganesh Mandir

This temple is believed to be of considerable antiquity – the assembly hall's artistically carved pillars date to the Parmara period. Worshippers flock here to pray to the deity, whose name means 'assurer of freedom from worldly anxieties'.

Mangalnath Mandir

A holy banyan tree, supposedly planted by Parvati, stands near this Shiva temple where the Shipra and Khilchipur Rivers meet. The Mughals cut and barricaded the tree, but it soon sprang back to life. Pilgrims tie threads around its limbs and make wishes, including for successful pregnancies for childless wives.

GHATS

The best times to visit the ghats including Ram Ghat, the largest, are dawn and dusk when the devout chime cymbals and twirl fire at the water's edge.

VEDH SHALA (OBSERVATORY)

Ujjain has been India's Greenwich since the 4th century BC and this observatory (Jantar Mantar; admission Rs 2; ⌚ dawn-dusk) was built by Maharaja Jai Singh in about 1730. He also built observatories in Jaipur, Delhi, Varanasi and Mathura, but Ujjain's is the only one still in use. Among the instruments are a small planetarium and a telescope used to determine the locations of heavenly bodies for astrological divinations. Ujjain is the first meridian of longitude for Hindu geographers, and the Tropic of Cancer passes through here.

KALIADEH PALACE

The Mandu sultans built this island water palace in 1458 on the site of a sun temple in the Shipra River. Nasir-ud-din added the tanks, through which river water is diverted to stir up cooling breezes – he liked to purge himself with mercury, which raises the temperature. The central dome is a good example of Persian architecture. The palace gradually fell to ruins following the downfall of Mandu, and was restored by the Scindias in 1920 before sinking into disrepair again.

Sleeping & Eating

The cheap hotels on Subhash Rd fill up at festival time, so book ahead.

Hotel Rama Krishna (☎ 2553017; Subhash Rd; s/d Rs 240/330, with AC Rs 540/660; ❄) The rooms with TV and sit-down toilet are grubby and mosquitoes could be a problem, but the accommodating management will provide a coil. Meals Rs 40.

Yatri Niwas (☎ 2511398; yatriniwas@sancharnet.in; dm Rs 90, r Rs 690) MP Tourism's budget hotel has four air-cooled doubles and 58 beds in dorms with shared bathrooms and squat toilets. Its inconvenient location is at least quiet.

Shipra Residency (☎ 2551495; mptujjshipra@sancharnet.in; s/d Rs 490/590, with AC from Rs 990/1090; ❄) MP Tourism has done it again. The cool-coloured rooms are the best in their price bracket, prices include breakfast in the reasonable restaurant (other meals Rs 50), and the bar is the perfect place to unwind after the temples.

Hotel Grand Tower (☎ 2553699; 1 Vikram Marg; s/d from Rs 500/600; ❄) With their light wood furnishings, the 15 modern rooms have poky bathrooms but are better value than hotels near the train station. The vegetarian restaurant (meals Rs 50) serves good Kashmiri, Punjabi and Chinese food.

Food stalls at the Clock Tower sell ice creams, snacks and juices.

Getting There & Away

There are frequent buses to Indore (Rs 25, two hours) and one to Bhopal (Rs 97, four hours, 3pm) and to Kota, Rajasthan (Rs 120, 12 hours, 6.30pm).

Dangers & Annoyances

Some rickshaw drivers aggressively demand more money at the end of a journey – clearly agree on a fee before setting off. If you are using the meter and he turns it off, ask him to stop so you can resolve the matter.

Sights

Built between 1886 and 1921, Lal Bagh Palace (☎ 2473264; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100, camera/video Rs 10/50; 10am-5pm Tue-Sun) is the finest building left by the Holkar dynasty. Replicas of the Buckingham Palace gates creak at the entrance to the 28-hectare garden, where there is a statue of Queen Victoria. The palace is dominated by European styles, with baroque and rococo dining rooms, an English library with leather armchairs, a Renaissance sitting room with ripped sofas, and a Palladian queen's bedroom.

The Central Museum (☎ 2700374; AB Rd; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/30, camera/video Rs 20/50; 10am-5pm Tue-Sun), another Holkar building, has one of Madhya Pradesh's best collections of medieval and premedieval Hindu sculptures, along with tools, weaponry and copper-engraved land titles. Skirmishes took place here during the Indian Uprising – the well in the garden was poisoned during the struggle.

The Gothic Gandhi Hall (Town Hall), built in 1904 and originally called King Edward's Hall, stands incongruously next to MG Rd like a ghost of the Independence era.

MP Tourism's 18-seater goes to Bhopal (Rs 135, four hours, 8.30am and 3.30pm) and back – book ahead (Rs 15; p687).

CAR

An alternative to the slow public transport to Mandu, Omkareshwar and Maheshwar is a taxi or hired car. MP Tourism charges from Rs 50 per hour of driving and Rs 250 for a night halt – you may get a better price outside the bus or train station.

TRAIN

There's a train reservation office (⏰ 8am-8pm Mon-Sat, 8am-2pm Sun) 300m north of the train station.

Getting Around

The airport is 9km from the city; autorickshaws charge Rs 80 and taxis Rs 200. Autorickshaw journeys around Indore cost about Rs 20, and drivers generally use their meters. Tempos and new city buses ply the major routes.

AROUND INDORE

Omkareshwar

☎ 07280

A regular mini Varanasi, Omkareshwar is an Om-shaped island that has long attracted sadhus in droves but is only beginning to show up on travellers' itineraries. When the sadhus aren't sleeping off their pilgrimages in the island's warren of lanes, among colourful stalls selling souvenir linga, they attend Shri Omkar Mandhata. This cavelike temple, which houses the only shapeless jyothi lingam (p696), is one of many Hindu and Jain monuments on the island.

You can walk 8km round the island or up the 370 steps to the ruined Gaudi Somnnath Temple, from where you can descend the hill to the northern tip of the island, where sadhus bathe in the confluence of the holy Narmada and Keveri Rivers.

ORIENTATION & INFORMATION

Most activity takes place on the 500m of main drag Mamaleshwar Rd between the bus stand and main square Getti Chowk, from where the old bridge crosses to the island. South of the old bridge are the ghats, where you can cross the river on boats (Rs 5), and the new bridge and controversial dam (p89).

Crowds gather for puja (prayer) performed in the temple three times a day. Initiates may ask you to give a financial token, but remember this is strictly voluntary.

Satir STD (Mamaleshwar Rd; per hr Rs 60; 8am-10pm) is one of two highly temperamental internet cafés. The State Bank of Indore ATM (Mamaleshwar Rd) accepts Visa and MasterCard.

SLEEPING & EATING

Ganesh Guest House (☎ 271370; r Rs 100-150) Lost up a maze of lanes off Mamaleshwar Rd, friendly Ganesh has spotless budget rooms. Its shaded garden restaurant overlooking the ghats is among Omkareshwar's best eateries.

Gita Shri Guest House (☎ 271560; r Rs 150-300, with AC Rs 600;) The 14 rooms are clean enough, with squat toilets and bucket showers, and the friendly management plans to open a rooftop restaurant. It's off Mamaleshwar Rd.

Tourist Bungalow (☎ 271455; tbomkareshwar@sancharnet.in; dm Rs 85, r with breakfast Rs 680, with air-cooler Rs 1025, with AC Rs 1370-1830;) Reached by road from the bus station or by lanes from the market, MP Tourism's hilltop hotel is out of the Omkareshwar aura but is a pleasant, breezy retreat.

When we visited, a Spanish resident of Omkareshwar was setting up Narmada Café, off Mamaleshwar Rd, promising to serve everything from Indian grub to pizza and quality coffee. Vikas, at the bus stand, and Om Shiva, off Getti Chowk, are the best of many vegetarian dhabas.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Regular buses serve Indore (Rs 40, two hours, 8am to 5pm) and Maheshwar (Rs 40, two hours, 7.30am to 3.30pm); alternatively, take a tempo to Barwaha (Rs 12, 45 minutes) and change there.

Maheshwar

Maheshwar has long held spiritual significance – it's mentioned in the Mahabharata and Ramayana (p66) under its old name, Mahishmati, and still draws sadhus and yatris (pilgrims) to its ancient ghats and temples on the holy Narmada River. The town enjoyed a golden age in the late 18th century under Holkar queen Ahilyabai, who built the towering fort and many other monuments.

SIGHTS

Its battlements, buttresses and balconies overlooking the Narmada, the fort (admission free; 7am-6.30pm) encloses several tiered temples within its 1.5km circumference. Central to the fort is the Maheshwar Palace and within the main courtyard, among a collection of rusty matchlocks and dusty palanquins, is a glass-cased statue of Ahilyabai, treated with the reverence of a shrine. Nearby is a Shiva Temple with a golden lingam – the starting point for palanquin processions on her birthday (see the boxed text, p663) and Dussehra. Ahilyabai gave over her kingdom to Shiva and her descendents have all ruled in his name.

From the ramparts there's a view of boats and incense smoke drifting across the water to the Shiva Temple in the middle of the river. Descending to the dhobis (clothes washers) at the ghats, you pass two stone temples. The one on the right, guarded by stone Holkar sentries and a frieze of elephants, houses more images of Ahilyabai and two candle towers, lit during festivals.

Before the temples a small doorway announces the NGO Rehwa Society (☎ 273203; www.rehwasociety.org; 10am-12.30pm & 2.30-5.30pm), a craft cooperative where profits are ploughed back into the education, housing and welfare of the weavers. Maheshwar saris are famous for their unique weave and complex patterns; you can watch the weavers at work and buy shawls, saris, scarves and fabrics (Rs 500 to 5000) made using silk, cotton and wool.

Akash Deep (Fort Rd; r Rs 150) Owned by a comedic Indian family, these nine basic rooms with squat toilets and bucket showers include three on the roof with fort views. Check-out time is 10am.

Labboo's Café (☎ 273329; r Rs 700) The four clean, simple rooms flanking the main fort gate are small but there are views across town from the battlements. The management organises boat rides and the café (meals Rs 70), set in a shady courtyard, serves snacks and continental dishes.

Narmada Retreat (☎ 273455; mptmaheshwar@sancharnet.in; r with breakfast Rs 690, family r Rs 890, r with AC Rs 990-1490;) Located 1km out of town on the banks of the Narmada, MP Tourism's cottages are tastefully decorated with local prints and terracotta paintwork. The restaurant (meals Rs 100) is the perfect place to see in the sunset.

Ahilya Fort (☎ 273329, Delhi 011-41551575; www.ahilyafort.com; r per person with full board US$120-300;) This heritage hotel at the fort is owned by a descendent of Ahilyabai and its turquoise swimming pool, library and gardens below the battlements have a quietly regal atmosphere. The rooms are beautifully understated – exposed beams, terracotta pots, antique furniture and scatter cushions abound.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

There are regular buses to Indore (Rs 45, four hours) – direct or via Dhamnod – and Omkareshwar (Rs 35, two hours). For Mandu, see p705.

MANDU

☎ 07292 / pop 8550 / elev 634m

Mandu is home to India's finest examples of Afghan architecture, clinging to the edges of a ravine-riddled 20-sq-km plateau overlooking the hazy plains. With monuments on every corner – from Rupmati's Pavilion, scene of India's Romeo and Juliet, to obscure ruins such as the wet nurse's tomb, and of course the wet nurse's sister's tomb – the mountain village has a 'lost world' atmosphere.

History

Mandu was founded as a fortress retreat in the 10th century by Raja Bhoj and conquered by the Muslim rulers of Delhi in 1304. When the Mughals captured Delhi in 1401, the Afghan Dilawar Khan, governor of Malwa, set up his own little kingdom and Mandu's golden age began.

Although Dilawar Khan established Mandu as an independent kingdom, it was his son, Hoshang Shah, who shifted the capital from Dhar to Mandu and raised it to its greatest splendour. Hoshang's son Mohammed ruled for just one year before being poisoned by the militaristic Mohammed Khalji, who then ruled for 33 years.

Ghiyas-ud-din succeeded Mohammed in 1469 and spent the following 31 years making his father turn in his grave, devoting himself to women and song (but not wine). He was poisoned, aged 80, by his son, Nasir-ud-din.

In 1526, Bahadur Shah of Gujarat conquered Mandu, only to be ousted in 1534 by the Mughal Humayun, who in turn lost the kingdom to Mallu Khan, an officer of the Khalji dynasty. Ten more years of feuds and invasions saw Baz Bahadur eventually emerge in the top spot, but in 1561 he fled Mandu rather than face Akbar's advancing troops.

After Akbar added Mandu to the Mughal empire, it kept a considerable degree of independence, until taken by the Marathas in 1732. The capital of Malwa was then shifted back to Dhar, and the slide in Mandu's fortunes that had begun with the absconding of Baz Bahadur became a plummet.

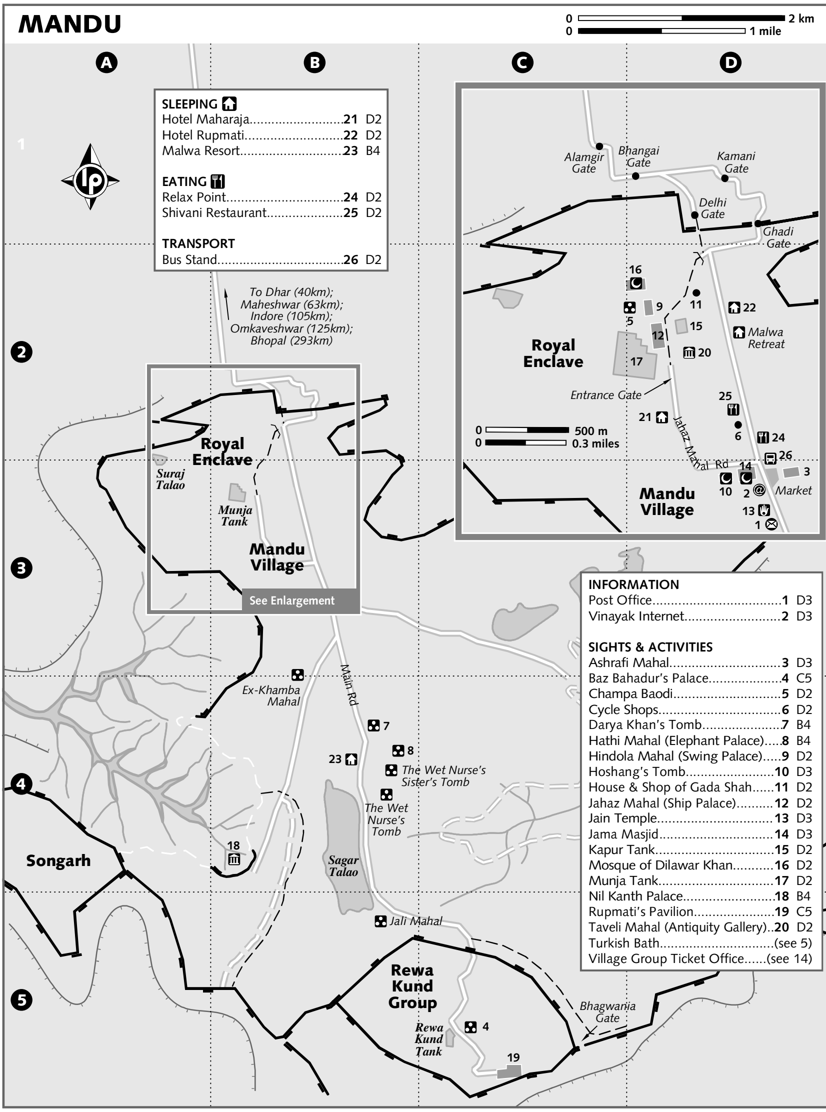
Orientation & Information

The Royal Enclave, the most impressive of the three main groups of monuments, stands northwest of the bus stand, near Delhi Gate, the main entrance to the fort. Most activity takes place along Main Rd between Shivani Restaurant and the post office, particularly around the bus stand, where you'll also find the Village Group. The Rewa Kund group is 4km south of the village.

ASI's excellent guidebook Mandu (Rs 20) is available at the Royal Enclave and guides can be hired from Rs 50 per hour. You may be able to change money at Shivani Restaurant (p705).

Post office (☎ 263222; Main Rd; 9am-5pm)

Vinayak Internet (Main Rd; per hr Rs 100; 8am-10pm) The slow connection makes this useful only for emergencies.



Sights

ROYAL ENCLAVE

These ruins (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100, video Rs 25; dawn-dusk Sat-Thu) are the most visited in Mandu.

Jahaz Mahal

Also called the Ship Palace, this is the most famous building in Mandu. Built on a narrow strip of land between Munja and Kapur Tanks, with a small upper storey like a ship's bridge, it's far longer (120m) than it is wide (15m). Ghiyas-ud-din constructed its lookouts, scalloped arches, airy rooms and beautiful pools for 'grand entertainment' (in the words of one visitor) with his reputed harem of 15,000 maidens.

Taveli Mahal

These stables were converted into a guesthouse and now house the ASI's Antiquity Gallery (9am-5pm Sat-Thu), which features artefacts found here including stone slabs with Quranic text dating back to the 15th century.

Hindola Mahal

Just north of Ghiyas' stately pleasure dome is Hindola Mahal, or Swing Palace, so called because the slope of the walls is supposed to create the impression that they are swaying. The ramps are said to have been built to enable the royal ladies to ascend on ponies, palanquins or even elephants.

House & Shop of Gada Shah

The house is within the enclave but the shop is outside on the road to Delhi Gate. As the buildings' size and internal workmanship suggest, their owner was more than a shopkeeper. His name, which means 'beggar master', is thought to identify him as Rajput chief Medini Ray, a powerful minion of the sultans. The 'shop' was a warehouse for saffron and musk, imported and sold at a handsome profit when there were enough wealthy people to shop here.

Mosque of Dilawar Khan

Built by Dilawar Khan in 1405, this mosque is Mandu's earliest Islamic building. Typically for this era, there are many Hindu elements to the architecture, notably the pillars and ceilings inside.

Turkish Bath & Champa Baodi

Champa Baodi, so called because its water supposedly smelt as sweet as the champak flower, is a step-well surrounded by subterranean vaulted chambers cooled by Munja Tank. Stars and octagons perforate the domed roofs of the adjacent hammam, which had hot and cold water and a hypocaust sauna.

VILLAGE GROUP

One ticket covers the three monuments (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100, video Rs 25; dawn-dusk).

Jama Masjid

Entered by a flight of steps leading to a 17m-high domed porch, this disused mosque dominates the village of Mandu. Hoshang begun its construction, basing it on the great Omayyad Mosque in Damascus, Syria, and Mohammed Khalji completed it in 1454. It's reckoned to be the finest and largest example of Afghan architecture in India – despite its plain design and the distinctly Hindu decoration of the imam's (Muslim religious leader's) 'pulpit'.

Hoshang's Tomb

As with Jama Masjid, the work of Hindu sculptors employed by the Muslim sultans can be seen on Hoshang's imposing tomb. Reputed to be India's oldest marble building, the tomb is crowned with a crescent thought to have been imported from Persia or Mesopotamia. Inside, light filters into the echoing dome through stone jalis, intended to cast an appropriately subdued light on the tombs. An inscription records Shah Jahan sending his architects – including Ustad Hamid, who worked on the Taj Mahal – here in 1659 to pay their respects to the tomb's builders.

Ashrafi Mahal

Mohammed Shah originally built his tomb as a madrasa (Islamic college), before converting and extending it. The overambitious design later collapsed – notably the seven-storey circular tower of victory. The building is an empty shell, but intricate Islamic pillar-work can be seen at the top of its great stairway.

JAIN TEMPLE

Entered by a turquoise doorway, this complex is a splash of kitsch among the Islamic monuments. The richly decorated temples feature marble, silver and gold tirthankars with jade eyes, and behind them is a themepark-like museum with a walk-on replica of Shatrunjaya, the hilltop temple complex at Palitana (p738) in Gujarat. In the colourful murals, bears devour sinners' arms, crocodiles chew their heads, and demons saw one evil character in half, lengthways. One panel shows the consequences of drinking and meat eating: a drunken carnivore lies in the street with dogs urinating on him.

REWA KUND GROUP

About 4km south of the village, past Sagar Talao, is the Rewa Kund group (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100, video Rs 25; dawn-dusk).

Baz Bahadur's Palace

Baz Bahadur was the last independent ruler of Mandu. His palace, constructed around 1509, is beside the Rewa Kund Tank where a water lift at the northern end supplied water to the palace. A curious mix of Rajasthani and Mughal styles, it was actually built decades before Baz Bahadur came to power.

Rupmati's Pavilion

Standing at the top of a cliff plunging 366m to the plains, Rupmati's Pavilion has a subtle beauty unmatched by the other monuments. According to Malwa legends, the music-loving Baz Bahadur built it to persuade a beautiful Hindu singer, Rupmati, to move here with him from her home on the plains. From its terrace and domed pavilions Rupmati could gaze down at the distant glint of the sacred Narmada River, still visible on a clear day.

In fact, the pavilion was built in two or three phases and the style of its arches and pillars suggest it was completed 100 years before Rupmati's time. Nonetheless, the love story is a subject of Malwa folk songs – not least because of its tragic ending. Lured by tales of Rupmati's beauty, Akbar marched on the fort and Baz Bahadur fled, leaving his lover to poison herself.

For maximum romantic effect come and catch the breezes at sunset, or under a full moon. Bring a torch, as there's no lighting on the road back.

DARYA KHAN'S TOMB & HATHI MAHAL

Hathi Mahal (Elephant Palace), a pleasure resort that was converted into a tomb, is so named because the pillars supporting its dome have massive proportions – like elephant legs. Nearby, Darya Khan's tomb has domed corners like Hoshang's tomb and was once decorated with intricately patterned mosaic tiles.

NIL KANTH PALACE

Leave Main Rd at the red Shivani Restaurant advertisement to reach this Mughal palace, which is well worth the journey on a covered road and stone steps built into the cliff. It stands at the head of a ravine, on the site of an earlier Shiva shrine – its name means God with Blue Throat – and is now used as a place of worship. A stream built by one of Akbar's governors trickles through a spiral channel. Persian inscriptions record Akbar's delight at his visit here and warn against vanity and pomposity.

Sleeping & Eating

Mandu has quality accommodation, which is lucky because the day you intend to spend here can easily turn into a week.

Hotel Maharaja (Jahaz Mahal Rd; s/d Rs 200/300) This budget option is the only disappointment in Mandu's otherwise good sleeping options.

Hotel Rupmati (☎ 263270; Main Rd; d Rs 550, with air-cooler/AC Rs 650/1100;) Sandwiched between a ruin and a cliff, these colourful bungalows are a little overpriced but you pay for the view – the best offered by any hotel in the state. The management is also open to negotiation.

Malwa Resort (☎ 263235; tcmandav@sancharnet.in; Main Rd; r with/without AC Rs 1790/1090;) The 20 rooms, including 10 suitelike AC rooms, are in cottages with new furniture and verandas overlooking the lake. It's the more pleasant of two MP Tourism hotels (the other is Malwa Retreat), and prices include breakfast.

Relax Point (dishes Rs 20-30) The village shop and gathering point serves basic vegetarian fare and snacks for that pilgrimage to Rupmati's Pavilion.

Shivani Restaurant (meals Rs 60) This superb restaurant serves South Indian, Chinese, and local specialities such as the delicious mandu kofta (dumplings in a mild sauce). There are Kit-Kats in the fridge and the friendly owner can organise beer.

Look out for the green, hard-shelled seed of the baobab tree – it's a bit like eating sweet-and-sour chalk. Mandu is one of the few places in India where you'll see the baobab, which looks like it has been planted upside down with its roots in the air.

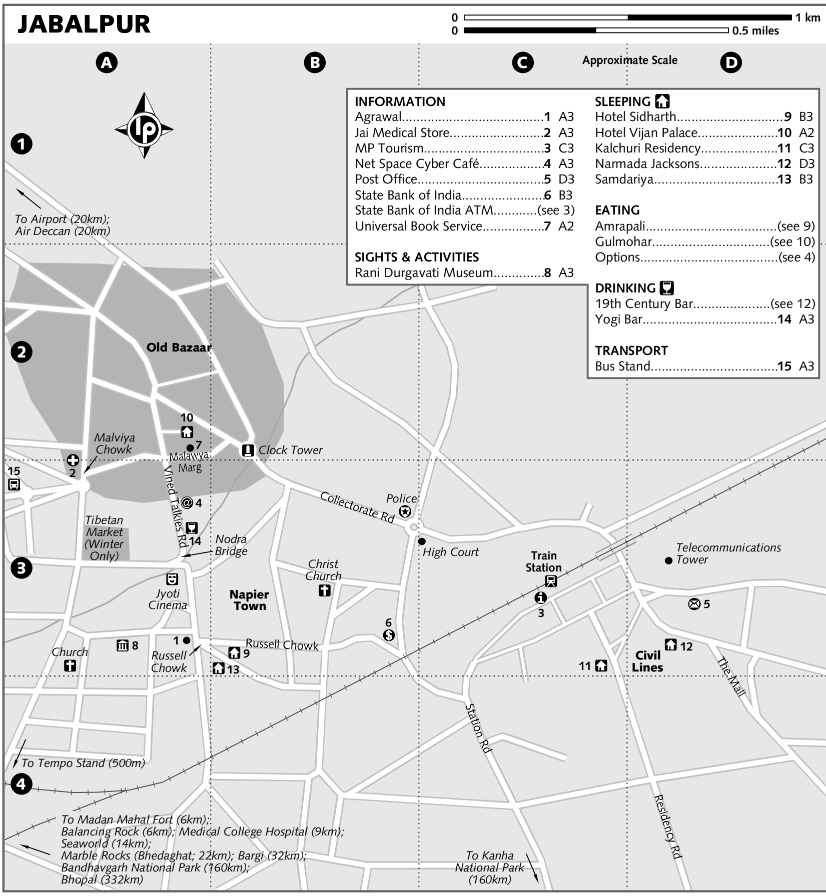
Getting There & Away

There are four buses to Indore (Rs 50, 3½ hours, 7am, 9am, 9.30am and 3.30pm), from where transport heads to Bhopal. Coming from Indore you must change at Dhar.

Maheshwar is tricky by bus – take a taxi (Rs 500, 1¾ hours); for Rs 1200 you can continue to Omkareshwar, though bus is a reasonable option after Maheshwar.

The alternative is hiring a car in Indore; see p700.

Getting Around



Cycling is best, as the terrain is flat, the air clear and the countryside beautiful. Shops on Main Rd hire out bikes from Rs 20 per day. You can tour the monuments in half a day using a taxi, autorickshaw or moped (from Rs 150).

EASTERN MADHYA PRADESH

JABALPUR

☎ 0761 / pop 1.12 million

A military and industrial centre, the capital of eastern Madhya Pradesh is a grimy city of chowks and working men's taverns, which will likely give you a dose of culture shock if you're emerging from the surrounding bush. The High Court is one of the buildings left by the British, for whom Jabalpur was capital of the Central Provinces.

RANI DURGAVATI MUSEUM

West of Russell Chowk, this museum (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/30, camera/video Rs 20/50; 🕑 10am-5pm Tue-Sun) has a collection of 10th-century sculptures from local sites such as Chausath Yogini (p708). Upstairs are letters and photographs relating to Mahatma Gandhi, coins and an elaborate gallery exploring tribal culture.

Activities

WATER SPORTS

Some 14km towards Marble Rocks is a Seaworld (☎ 4917601; Bhedaghat Rd; adult/child Rs 90/60; 10am-7pm), a swimming-pool complex with outdoor slides and pools.

MP Tourism is building a water-sports complex at Bargi, 32km southwest of Jabalpur.

Sleeping

Hotel Vijan Palace (☎ 5063310; Vijan Market; r Rs 270-810;) Hiding down a lane off Vined Talkies Rd, the busy Vijan spans budget and midrange. Room service, checkout and hot water are all 24-hour; cheaper rooms have squat toilets.

Hotel Sidharth (☎ 4007779; hotel_sidharth@hotmail.com; Russell Chowk; s/d from Rs 450/500;) An old-fashioned lift leads to comfortable, compact rooms in this no-frills midrange hotel. AC rooms are no smarter than non-AC.

Kalchuri Residency (☎ 2678491; mptkalch@sancharnet.in; Residency Rd, Civil Lines; s Rs 790-1190, d Rs 890-1290;) It's not just its proximity to the train station that recommends this MP Tourism hotel – the rooms are a little worn but have touches such as balconies and curvy bedheads. Ask to see a few rooms as they vary greatly.

Samdariya (☎ 2316800; www.thesamdariyahotel.com; s/d/ste from Rs 1100/1350/3000;) This 64-room hotel off Russell Chowk offers a swimming pool and health club, a travel desk, online commodity trading, a disco, an astrological consultant and, for all its long red carpets, Indian eccentricity in spades. More expensive rooms have little more than standard options apart from fridges and tiled floors.

Narmada Jacksons (☎ 5001122; info@hoteljacksons.com; South Civil Lines; s Rs 1295-2500, d Rs 1495-3000, ste Rs 5000-6000;) Jabalpur's top spot is nominally a heritage hotel but its splashes of primary colour look wholeheartedly contemporary. Rooms have attractive furnishings and internet connectivity; the five-star facilities include three restaurants (meals Rs 120 to 200) and a health club.

Options (☎ 4006279; Vined Talkies Rd; meals Rs 50-75; 10am-11pm) This classy 1st-floor vegetarian restaurant with stripy seats among metal and glass is popular with Jabalpur's youth, who come here to down mocktails, pizza, paneer, paratha and Chinese food.

Hotel Vijan Palace's restaurant Gulmohar (☎ 5063310; Vijan Market; meals Rs 60-100) and Hotel Sidharth's Amrapali (☎ 4007779; Russell Chowk; meals Rs 60-120; 11am-11.30pm) have a good offering of Indian and Chinese food and snacks.

19th Century Bar (Narmada Jacksons, South Civil Lines) is the coolest bar in town. Jabalpur is also thick with seedy drinking dens – one of the more salubrious establishments is Yogi Bar (Vined Talkies Rd; dishes around Rs 40).

Getting There & Away

AIR

Air Deccan (☎ 2901048; 6am-3pm) at the airport has a daily budget flight to Delhi (9.20am or 10.20am), via Bhopal (9.20am) on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

BUS

Buses go to Raipur (Rs 186, 12 hours, 9.30am and 6am), calling at Kawardha (Rs 105, seven hours), and to Kanha National Park (Rs 84, 5½ hours, 7am and 11am). Between October and June, MP Tourism runs an AC coach to Kanha from the train station (Rs 150, four hours, 9am) and is introducing a cruise boat from Bargi (see left) to Mandla.

Getting Around
Most budget and midrange hotels are within a 10-minute walk from the bus stand. Rs 10 should get you anywhere in the city in a cycle rickshaw; Rs 30 in an autorickshaw.

For Marble Rocks, catch a bus along the main road to the turn-off for the rocks (Rs 10, 45 minutes), where tempos wait to take you the last 3km (Rs 10).

AROUND JABALPUR
Madan Mahal Fort
About 6km along the Marble Rocks road a track leads left to steps up to Madan Mahal Fort, built by Gond ruler Madan Shah in 1116. It's a small watchtower perched on a bulbous rock on a hilltop with extensive views over the rocky landscape.

Partway along the track is an amazing balancing rock perched precariously on another, looking as if a sneeze would dislodge it.

Marble Rocks
Known locally as Bhedaghat, this gorge on the holy Narmada River is 22km west of Jabalpur. The marblelike magnesium limestone cliffs turn different colours in different lights, from pink to black. Locals say the 'snow-white marble', as described by Captain J Forsyth in The Highlands of Central India (1889), is nature's answer to Khajuraho (p673). The gleaming cliffs are an impressive sight by moonlight, and parts are floodlit at night.

The trip up the 2km-long gorge is made in a shared rowboat (Rs 20; ⌚ 6am-7pm, full moon 8pm-midnight 1 Oct-30 Jun) from the jetty at Panchvati Ghat; alternatively bargain for your own boat. As you glide upstream, naturally sculpted crags crowd around you. An amusing commentary is given in Hindi – if someone translates, you'll learn which star sang from which crag in which Bollywood film. Otherwise, hire a guide (Rs 100) or take a stroll by yourself; turn right just before Motel Marble Rocks.

Dhuandhar (Smoke Cascade) is a worthwhile 2km walk uphill from the jetty. Along the way is the exquisitely carved Chausath Yogini, a circular 10th-century temple dedicated to the goddess Durga. It is said to be connected to the Gond queen Durgavati's palace by an underground passage.

Hotel Marble Palace (☎ 2830443; Bhedaghat; r from Rs 300) is a reasonable budget choice in the village. It has clean rooms, some on the roof, with showers and sit-down toilets, while Shagun Resort (☎ 3296061; cottage/ste Rs 400/600; ❄) has six fan-cooled cottages and four AC suites in a shambolic garden with swing chairs, a basic restaurant (meals Rs 50), and views of Dhuandhar.

There are cheap cafés in the village.

PENCH TIGER RESERVE
☎ 07695 / tiger pop 50

Pench is but a pug mark compared with Kanha National Park (opposite), but there are plenty of reasons to take a trip into this corner of the southern Satpura Hills. Apart from its tigers, leopards and literary associations, the 758-sq-km reserve has the highest concentration of prey of any park in India and some 250 species of bird. You're also unlikely to get stuck in a jeep jam here.

Orientation & Information
A 12km track winds between Khawasa, 80km from Nagpur on Hwy 7 towards Jabalpur, and the accommodation in Turia. Head to Nagpur for an international airport, a train station on three major lines, and other facilities.

The main gates to the park (☎ 223794; 1 drive Indian/foreigner Rs 25/500, elephant ride Rs 100/600, watchtower Rs 150/500, camping Rs 500/2000; ⌚ dawn-dusk 1 Oct-30 Jun) are 2km past Turia. See the boxed text, p710.

Sleeping & Eating
Kipling's Court (☎ 232830; kiplingc@sancharnet.in; s/d American Plan with air-cooler Rs 1640/1990, Jungle Plan Rs 6900/9200; ❄) MP Tourism's hotel, popular with domestic tourists, has smart midrange rooms ringing a shambolic garden, a watchtower overlooking a water hole, and a quiet bar-restaurant.

Pench Jungle Camp (☎ 232817, Delhi 011-30988460; www.wildlife-camp-india.com; Village Avarghani; s/d US$150/200, Jungle Plan US$260/320; ❄) Commune with nature without surrendering your creature comforts at this eco-friendly, English-run retreat. The 12 marble-floored tents, three cottages and four rooms have locally made wicker, teak, bamboo and cut-glass furniture. There are cheaper rates for Indian nationals.

Bagh Van (☎ 232829, Delhi 011-66503559; Jungle Plan per person US$600; ❄) A 5.2-hectare Taj Wilderness Lodge with a library and riverside swimming pool. The 12 cottages have watchtowers and bamboo-covered walkways linking bedroom and bathroom, complete with indoor and outdoor showers.

MOWGLI WAS HERE

Generations of children have followed the adventures of Baloo et al in Rudyard Kipling's Jungle Book (1894). But what prompted this tale of a boy raised by wolves, and where is it set? Kipling (1865–1936) probably never visited Pench Tiger Reserve, but the idea of Mowgli likely comes from a case recorded in 1831 by William Henry Sleeman of a wolf-boy captured in the Seoni district. The writer would also have drawn on RA Strendale books including Seonee – Camp life in Satpura Hills, Dunbar Brander's Wild Animals of Central India and Captain J Forsyth's The Highlands of Central India.

Kanha National Park has also laid claim to The Jungle Book. But 'Seonee' (Seoni) Hills, Kanhiwara village and Waingunga River gorge, where Shere Khan meets his end, are all actual locations around Pench. The consolation prize for Kanha is that in Kipling's day both parks were part of the same jungle belt.

Getting There & Away

Regular buses link Khawasa – connected to Turia by jeep (Rs 120) – with Nagpur (Rs 51, 2½ hours) and Jabalpur (local/private bus Rs 120/230, five/3½ hours).

KANHA NATIONAL PARK

☎ 07649 / tiger pop 131

Kanha regularly tops lists of the best places to glimpse a tiger in India. Unfortunately, this attracts many visitors to its sal forests and meadows, but they are outnumbered by a four-legged population, including more than 200 tigers and leopards, 350 barasingha (swamp deer) and 22,000 spotted deer, and more than 300 species of bird.

Orientation & Information

The 1945-sq-km park (☎ 07642-250760; 1/2/3 drive Indian Rs 25/40/60, foreigner Rs 500/750/1000, video Rs 200/350/500, own vehicle entry Rs 150/250/350, compulsory guide 1 drive Rs 100-400, 2 drive Rs 175-700, 3 drive Rs 250-1000, elephant ride Indian/foreigner Rs 100/600, camping from Rs 400; ⏲ dawn-dusk) is 160km southeast of Jabalpur. See the boxed text, Visiting Tigers, p710.

Khatia Gate, the entrance to the 1005-sq-km buffer zone, is at the village of Kisli. Some 4km further into the park, Kisli Gate, the main gate, is the entrance to the 940-sq-km core zone. Mukki Gate, 35km southeast on the far side of the park, is more remote.

There are few facilities outside the hotels, and nowhere to change money.

VISITOR CENTRES

There are visitor centres (⏲ 8-11am & 3.30-5pm 1 Oct-15 Feb, 7.30-10.30am & 4.30-6pm 16 Feb-15 Apr, 7-10am & 5.30-7pm 16 Apr-30 Jun) at Khatia and Mukki Gates and Kanha (within the park). The latter centre is the most impressive, with several galleries.

Wildlife Safaris

Book gypsies in advance, either through your hotel or at one of the gates. Gypsies typically cost Rs 900 per 60km – enough for a good look at the park – and Rs 13 per kilometre thereafter.

Sleeping & Eating

KISLI

Apart from Baghira Log Huts, the following are within 500m of Khatia Gate. There are some small dhabas in the same area.

Panther Resort (☎ 277233; dm Rs 240, r Rs 350-900) The best budget option is run by friendly Tushar, who has a handle on everything going on in Kisli. Basic, fan- and air-cooled rooms are housed in emerald-green bungalows and meals are cooked over an open fire.

Pugmark Resort (☎ 277291; pugmark1kanha@yahoo.co.in; s/d Rs 800/1400, American Plan Rs 1200/2400, Jungle Plan Rs 900/1800) The 12 pink-and-white cottages are a little lacking in character but there's a gazebo-covered campfire and a naturalist family run the show.

Hiawatha (☎ 277269; hiawatharesortkanha2002@yahoo.co.in; s/d US$35-65, American Plan US$75/90, Jungle Plan US$125/250) Named after the 16th-century Native American chief, Hiawatha has 16 aged cottages with big windows and fireplaces overlooking a wildlife-attracting pond.

Baghira Log Huts & Tourist Hostel (☎ 277227; Kisli Gate; s/d American Plan from Rs 1640/1990, Jungle Plan s/d Rs 6900/9200; ❄) This gem among MP Tourism properties is the only hotel in the core zone. The huts are a little old but bolstered by new furniture and views of a meadow where the animals go about their business. The bar-restaurant is also prime wildlife-watching territory.

MUKKI

There is less traffic through this gate thanks to fewer hotels.

Kanha Safari Lodge (☎ 07637-226029; s/d American Plan with air-cooler Rs 1640/1990, with AC Rs 2140/2490; ✇) As at the other Mukki hotels, you pay for access to the quieter gate at this MP Tourism establishment. The rooms have hot water and there's a basic restaurant.

Kanha Jungle Lodge (☎ Delhi 011-26853760; www.tiger-resorts.com; s/d Jungle Plan US$160/290) Owned by the family of the founder of Project Tiger, the 4.5-hectare resort blends into the surrounding sal, bamboo and medicinal plants through verandas, plenty of windows and an open-air dining area.

Overlooking a pond and Mughal-style watchtowers, the 16 rooms have dark Barmatic wood furniture and marble bathrooms.

VISITING TIGERS

The attraction of Madhya Pradesh's four national parks – Panna (p681), Pench (p708), Kanha (p709) and Bandhavgarh (opposite) – is a spine-tingling meeting with a tiger; maybe in the undergrowth or padding along the road. There are a number of lesser players, from leopards to sloth bears, jackals, wild dog, and several species of deer. Innumerable birds make the jungle their home, as do myriad fluttering butterflies.

The bigger parks are circuslike. We visited Kanha on the first day of the season, when there were 45 gypsies (small, diesel-powered jeeps) in the park, as opposed to the 150 it receives during peak season. A line of gypsies surrounded one tiger, and coach parties squeezed onto elephants to get close to another. However, there is no greater buzz than heading through the sal trees on a misty morning in search of Shere Khan. A knowledgeable driver or guide will take you off the beaten track.

Entrance to the parks is strictly controlled – take your passport. You can cut costs by sharing a gypsy with others. If you get a knowledgeable driver, you can get a cheap guide (the bigger parks offer four levels of compulsory guide, from basic escort to experienced naturalist). Book ahead, as gypsies and naturalists do run out during peak season.

Entrance is priced according to 'drives' or 'rounds', with the cost of each decreasing the more you buy. Two four-hour drives take place a day, after dawn and before sunset when the animals are most active. Some of the parks are now open all day, all year round, but sightings are still most likely on morning visits, when prior to your arrival mahouts (elephant drivers) on elephants track down the tiger population. Information on sightings is relayed to a central point, where you break for tea after maybe an hour of wandering around. If a tiger is sighted, elephants are used to take you close to the quarry.

Pug marks (footprints), presence of a recent kill, alarm calls from other animals and the experience and intuition of the expert all help to find the hidden tiger, but a sighting can never be guaranteed. It's a good idea to let a week pass after the 1 October opening to let rangers get an idea of where tigers currently live.

Sightings are more likely in the February to June period, when obscuring foliage has withered away and water holes are drying up, concentrating both hunter and prey. The hottest months are May and June, when temperatures can reach 42°C in the afternoon. December and January are the coldest months – night-time temperatures quickly plunge to zero and below as the parks are generally in mountainous country. You must have adequate clothing for zero temperatures in those months, and dress to blend in with the vegetation at all times.

Sleeping & Eating

Most national park private accommodation offers guests a Jungle Plan, which in addition to full board includes entrance to the park, guide fees, jeep hire costs and the services of a naturalist; all you have to pay is your video fee. American Plan includes room and full board. Most resorts fill up during peak season, and prefer advance booking through their head office but do accept walk-in visitors. Hotels generally close when the parks close – those that stay open offer hefty discounts between July and September.

Getting There & Away

There are buses from Kisli Gate to Jabalpur (Rs 84, 5½ hours, 6.20am, 8.15am and 12.30pm) via Khatia Gate. Between October and June, MP Tourism runs a coach (Rs 150, four hours, 2pm). Alternatively, catch one of the many buses to Mandla (Rs 30, 2¾ hours). For travel from Jabalpur, see p707.

There are frequent buses from Mandla to Jabalpur (Rs 50, 2½ hours, 6am to 8.30pm) and Kanha (Rs 36, 2¾ hours, 10.15am, 3pm and 4.15pm), one to Nagpur (Rs 145, 6½ hours, 9pm) and two to Raipur (Rs 140, seven hours, 12.45pm and 9.30pm).

There are a few daily buses between Mandla and Mukki (Rs 50, five hours) via the other gates, often changing at Baihar.

BANDHAVGARH NATIONAL PARK

Bandhavgarh may be smaller than Kanha but it claims to have the world's highest-density tiger population – offering day-trippers a 99.99% chance of spotting a big cat. In addition to its tigers (27 in the 105-sq-km core area), the 448-sq-km park is inhabited by some 40 leopards, 250 species of bird and some 35 species of mammal, including nilgais, wild boars, jackals, gaurs, sambars and porcupines.

The park takes its name from the ancient fort atop the 800m-high cliffs of the escarpment, part of the Vindhyan mountain range. The ramparts of the fort, reached by a one-hour uphill hike, provide a home for vultures, blue rock thrushes and crag martins.

Bandhavgarh owes its existence to the Maharajas of Rewa, who preserved it as their hunting ground; on the other hand they endangered many species with rampant slaughter – Maharaja Raman Singh dispatched 111 tigers.

White Tiger Forest Lodge (☎ 265366; wtflmpt@sancharnet.in; s/d American plan from Rs 1640/1990, Jungle Plan Rs 5140/5490;) MP Tourism's riverside operation is a little run-down but the AC rooms in particular, linked by elevated walkways between the trees, are smarter than their façades suggest. Postpark fun includes a campfire, tribal dancing displays and wildlife documentaries.

our pick King's Lodge (☎ Delhi 011-25885709; www.kingslodge.in; s/d Jungle Plan US$180/270;) Luxurious resort with eight huts on stilts and four cottages with verandas set around a water channel in 4 hectares of grounds, also boasting an ecofriendly swimming pool and elevated massage deck.

Bandhavgarh Jungle Lodge (☎ 265317, Delhi 011-26853760; www.tiger-resorts.com; tw Jungle Plan US$300) Garden paths wind between old and new village-style mud-brick 'huts' decorated in Rajasthani style at this eco-resort. Entertainments include astronomy classes, bird-watching and an ecoshop.

There are dhabas in the village and the hotels have restaurants. Tiger's Den restaurant (meals Rs 200) serves tea-time nibbles, perfect for post-tiger hunger.

Getting There & Away

Tala is connected with Umaria, the nearest railhead, by frequent buses and shared jeeps (Rs 15, one hour) and taxis (Rs 300).

Useful trains out of Umaria: 8478 Kalinga Utkal Express to Puri (Rs 531/1343/1788, 25 hours, 6.17am) and 8477 Kalinga Utkal Express to Delhi Nizamuddin (Rs 466/1160/1524, 17 hours, 8.50pm).

For other places it's best to go to Jabalpur on the 8234 Narmada Express (Rs 230/561/663, 4½ hours, 4.25pm), which continues on to Pipariya (for Pachmarhi), Bhopal, Ujjain and Indore.

CHHATTISGARH

Chhattisgarh split from Madhya Pradesh in 2000 and is coming out of the bigger state's shadow. It's one of the eastern states associated with the Naxalite guerrillas (an ultra-leftist political movement that began in Naxal Village, West Bengal), but they rarely stray from their remote hideouts on Chhattisgarh's borders. It also suffers from dire roads and scant buses outside the Raipur–Jagdalpur stretch of Hwy 43, but for intrepid travellers, the state is a forested Adivasi kingdom. The tribes' pointillist paintings and spindly sculptures are as vivid as the colourful haats (markets) that take place across the Bastar region. The forests also hide waterfalls and unspoilt nature reserves.

RAIPUR

The 12 rooms are lavishly decorated – even the non-AC options (which have squat toilets). The restaurant (meals Rs 70 to 120) is Jagdalpur's best.

Getting There & Away

BUS

There are regular services to Raipur (Rs 160 to 200, seven hours) and Kanger Valley National Park (Rs 25, 30 minutes), three to Chitrakote (Rs 30, 1½ hours, 9am, 1pm and 6pm) and interstate buses to destinations including Visakhapatnam (Rs 225, 12 hours, 6.30pm) and Hyderabad (Rs 280, 16 hours, 8pm and 4pm).

BASTAR BISON HORNS

With some 400,000 Adivasi inhabitants, Bastar is one of the best areas in India to see tribal culture. The Adivasis are a significant presence here, making up almost a third of Bastar's population, but they are marginalised as in other states. This has enabled the Naxalites to exploit them as foot soldiers by offering them more in the way of electricity, roads and infrastructure than the state and central governments have.

As well as their handicrafts – vastly different to anything produced by other Indian craftspeople – these animist people are famous for Ghotals. These are a tribal version of boarding school, where teenagers live away from their parents in order to learn how to behave in society outside the home. The students sleep in mixed dormitories, an arrangement that often sees sexual education informally added to the curriculum. Ghotals are now dying out due to media focus on the sleeping arrangements.

Bastar's eight major tribal groups include the Bison Horn Maria, named after the head-dresses they wear while dancing. The tribes are also known for their reverence for alcohol and tobacco, which have long been central to everything they do, from settling territorial disputes to visiting the deogudi (temple). A major feature of a haat (market) is the liquor market, where wines, beers and 60%-proof spirits fermented from rice, palm, millet and mohwa flowers are doled out using metal and earthenware ladles. In contrast, they might serve food using a rough wooden spoon.

TRAIN

The Kirandul–Visakhapatnam train (No 2VK) heads over the scenic Eastern Ghats on India's highest broad gauge line to the Andhra Pradesh coast. Train reservations (8am-noon & 2-4pm Mon-Sat, 8am-noon Sun) can be made at the train station.

AROUND JAGDALPUR

With no government buses in Chhattisgarh, the best way to see the Jagdalpur area is by car (per day Rs 1200) – ask at the tourist office (p713). If you're planning to visit tribal areas, you'll need a guide (per day Rs 500). Again, head to the tourist office; Awesh Ali is an outstanding guide.

Village Haats

Visiting a market with a guide is an excellent way to get an overview of Bastar's vibrant tribal culture. Different tribes walk up to 20km to trade everything from their distinctive, almost fluorescent saris to red ants, which they eat with salt and chilli.

Bastar sees haats most days – the tourist office has details.

Chitrakote Falls

A late afternoon outing to Chitrakote Falls, 38km northwest of Jagdalpur, is a must for when the setting sun lights up the face of these falls, two-thirds the size of Niagara.

On the right of the road, some 8km before the waterfalls, is a tribal burial ground featuring a headstone sculpted to resemble a car: the grave of an elder who longed for a car in life.

Chitrakote Log Huts (☎ 07859-288387; s/d Rs 700/1000) is five elevated bamboo huts with verandas and all mod cons inside. Meals cost around Rs 50 to 150.

Kanger Valley National Park

The 200-sq-km park (☎ 07782-227596; Indian/foreigner Rs 25/200, camera/video Rs 25/200, vehicle entry Rs 50; 8am-4pm 1 Nov-30 Jun), some 40km southwest of Jagdalpur, consists of ancient forest flanking the Kanger River.

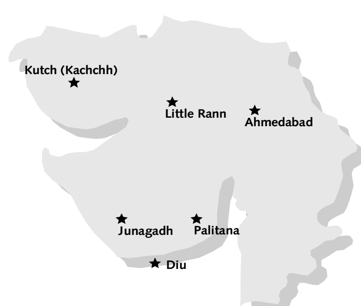
Some 4km from the park entrance are Tirathgarh Falls, where water drops 100m through three sets of cascades. Open all year, they're best visited after the monsoon. Three caves (compulsory guide Rs 25, lights hire Rs 25; 8am-3pm 1 Nov-30 Jun) with stunning, pristine formations can also be visited.

Wildlife includes deer, boars, sloths and leopards. Small lake Bhaimsa Darha is the habitat of turtles and crocodiles.

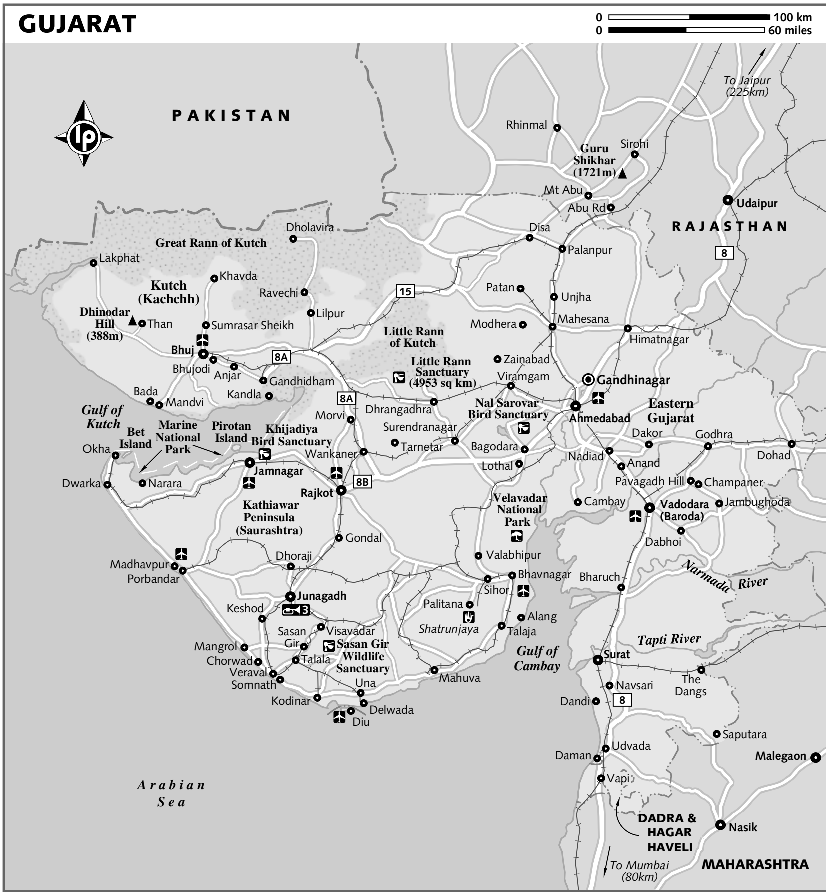
Gujarat

Gujarat is a dazzlingly diverse state that shakes up the know-it-all Indophile, and reveals treasures hidden from the tourist hordes. Gujaratis are renowned for their entrepreneurial nous, both home and abroad. Encounter an Indian anywhere, from Wall Street to Wellington, and there's a good chance they hail from this wealthy, resourceful state.

Dynamic Gujarat has a 1600km coastline and an easily traversable landscape. The highly visible Jain community – the devout of whom follow a disciplined path towards moksha (liberation) – are largely responsible for Gujarat's industrious reputation, stunning white marble temples, and exquisite, ever-so-slightly sweet vegetarian fare (and prohibition laws!).



In the northwest, the seasonal island of Kutch trickles into hardened salt plains come summer, and local artisans weave the finest textiles in India and battle the unforgiving elements of Little Rann – habitat of the wild ass and flocks of flamingos. Meanwhile, only 100km south is Saurashtra, a long, lush, remote coastal region dotted with slow-paced, one-bullock towns, and bejewelled farmers dressed head to toe in white.



The sapphire of the salty isthmus is the ex-Portuguese island enclave of Diu, with its lazy, whitewashed vibe. At Shatrunjaya, climb to a mountain-top marvel of Jain architecture, or head off the map to Somnath and Dwarka, two powerful temples by the sea.

The main city of Ahmedabad is hard on the lungs and frantic but friendly. It's home to Mahatma Gandhi's ashram, and the world's finest textile museum. Rajkot and the university town of Vadodara house well-educated, young and upwardly mobile populations – suitable heirs to this proud and purposeful state.

History

It's said that Gujarat's Temple of Somnath witnessed the creation of the universe, and many significant sites in Krishna's life lie along the south coast.

On a firmer historic footing, Lothal and Dholavira (Kutch) were sites of a Harappan (Indus) civilisation more than 4000 years ago. Gujarat featured in the exploits of the mighty Buddhist emperor, Ashoka, and you can see his rock edict near Junagadh.

Later, Gujarat suffered Muslim incursions by Mahmud of Ghazni and subsequent Mughal rulers, and was a battlefield between the Mughals and the Marathas. It was also an early point of contact with the West; the first British commercial outpost was established at Surat. Daman and Diu survived as Portuguese enclaves within Gujarat borders until 1961.

Saurashtra was never incorporated into British India. Instead it survived as more than 200 princely states until Independence.

FAST FACTS

- Population: 50.6 million
- Area: 196,024 sq km
- Capital: Gandhinagar
- Main language: Gujarati
- When to go: October to March

In 1956, all the states were amalgamated into the state of Mumbai. In 1960, Mumbai was split, on linguistic grounds, into the states of Maharashtra and Gujarat.

Congress was mainly in control of Gujarat after Independence, till 1991 when the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) came to power. In 2002, communal violence erupted after a Muslim mob was blamed for an arson attack on a train at Godhra that killed 59 Hindu activists. Hindu gangs then set upon Muslims in revenge. This violence coincided with the beginning of the election campaign, and BJP Chief Minister Najendra Modi followed a policy of fiercely Hindu rhetoric, which may have encouraged division in the state, but brought him a landslide victory. Since the 2002 riots, however, the state has been peaceful, and continues to enjoy its reputation as one of India's most prosperous states.

EASTERN GUJARAT

AHMEDABAD (AMDAVAD)

☎ 079 / pop 4.52 million

Ahmedabad (also called Amdavad) is Gujarat's major city, and a startling mini-metropolis. Straddling the Sabarmati River, it's one half old-world charm, and the other half new-world noise. Yet it's also remarkably cosmopolitan, with a rich Muslim history, a tangled, beautifully restored old city, stunning museums, fine restaurants and fabulous night markets. Many travellers stop off briefly on route to Rajasthan or Mumbai, sneaking in a visit to Sabarmati Ashram (Gandhi's former headquarters). However, those able to swallow the smog will discover a pulsating Indian city, with a media that preaches tolerance. Ahmedabad is a sky-scraping step-off point to the rest of Gujarat.

Each January, the city hosts Makar Sakranti, an international kite festival that's well worth the stiff neck.

History

Over the centuries Ahmedabad ('abad' means 'prosper') has boomed and declined. Founded

FESTIVALS IN GUJARAT

Makar Sakranti (Jan; Ahmedabad, above) This international kite festival is the time to see the sky filled with flickering, swooping colour.
Modhera Dance Festival (Jan; Modhera, p728) A three-day festival that aims to present classical dance in its original atmosphere.
Bhavnath Fair (Jan/Feb; Junagadh, p748) Held in the month of Magha. Folk music and dancing takes place and nagas (naked sadhus) throng Bhavnath Mahadev Temple, at the foot of Girnar Hill.
Dang Durbar (Feb/Mar; The Dangs, east of Surat, p732) This major tribal festival is held a week before Holi in the little-visited forested region called The Dangs, near the Maharashtra border.
Mahakali (Mar/Apr; Pavagadh, p731) In the month of Chaitra, pilgrims pay tribute to the goddess Mahakali at Pavagadh hill, near Vadodara.
Janmastami (Aug/Sep; Dwarka, p753) This important festival celebrates Krishna's birthday.
Tarnetar Fair (Aug/Sep; Tarnetar, northeast of Rajkot, p757) In the month of Bhadra, the Trineteshwar Temple at Tarnetar, 65km northeast of Rajkot, hosts this extraordinarily colourful fair, an opportunity for dressed-to-impress tribal men and women to find spouses. Men are seated under glorious embroidered chhatris (umbrellas) so that women can check them out to see who they fancy. Gujarat Tourism arranges accommodation for the fair, and special state buses go to/from Rajkot.
Navratri (Sep/Oct; statewide; www.navratrifestival.com) The Festival of Nine Nights is a fantastic time to be in Gujarat. The festival leads up to Dussehra and is devoted to the worship of Durga, the mother goddess. Junctions and market places are filled with nightly garbas – where people dress up in sparkling finery to perform entrancing dances till the early hours – it's a great festival for foreigners to join in.
Dussehra (Sep/Oct; statewide) Dussehra is the culmination of Navratri, and celebrates the victory of Durga and Rama over the demon king Ravana, with more all-night dancing and often fireworks.
Kartik Purnima (Nov/Dec; Somnath, p745) A large fair at the full moon of Kartik Purnima.

in 1411 by Ahmed Shah, at the spot where he saw a hare chasing a dog (he was impressed by its bravery), Ahmedabad was thought to be one of the finest cities in India in the 17th century, but by the 18th century its influence had waned. Its industrial strength once again raised the city to prominence, becoming a huge textile centre from the second half of the 19th century, which resulted in much immigration to man the mills. From 1915 it became famous as the site of Gandhi's ashram. In 1970 the last mills closed and the subsequent economic hardship may have been a contributing factor in the communal unrest that split the city in 2002.

Orientation

On the eastern bank of the Sabarmati River Mahatma Gandhi (MG) Rd and Relief Rd run east to the train station, about 3km away. The old city spreads north and south of Relief Rd. The busy road flanking the western bank of the Sabarmati is known as Ashram Rd and leads to Sabarmati Ashram. The airport is to the northeast. Most of the old city walls are now demolished, although some gates remain.

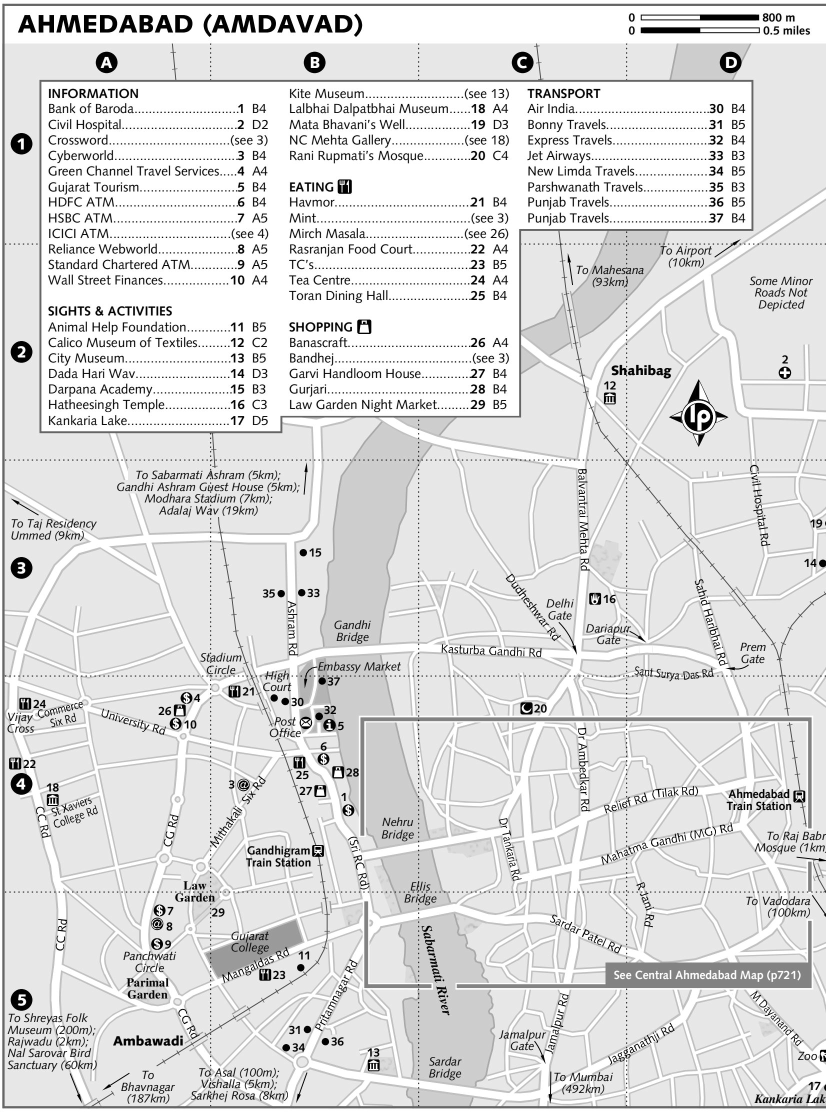
Staff can also arrange car hire or fast-paced five-day tours to Saurashtra and northern Gujarat/southern Rajasthan (around Rs 3000; worth considering if your time is short). Prices include all transport, accommodation and guide fees. Check out the excellent website for details.



Sights

BHADRA FORT & TEEN DARWAJA

Bhadra Fort (Map p721; Lal Darwaja), built by the city's founder, Ahmed Shah, in 1411, now houses government offices. Ask for access to the roof, where you can check out the formidable structure, a perfunctory gallows and good views of the surrounding streets. Two of the fort bastions partly collapsed in the 2001 earthquake. To the east stands the Teen Darwaja (Triple Gateway), which was the gateway into the Royal Square, or Maidan Shahi, where royal processions and polo games took place. The gate too was damaged by the 2001 tremors, but has been repaired.

MOSQUES & MAUSOLEUMS

The Jama Masjid (Map p721), built by Ahmed Shah in 1423, is to the east of the Teen Darwaja. Demolished Hindu and Jain temples provided the building materials. The 260 columns support 15 domes at different elevations. There were once two 'shaking' minarets, but they lost half their height in the great earthquake of 1819 and collapsed after another tremor in 1957. The 2001 earthquake then took its toll, leaving cracks in the masonry and destroying several jalis (carved marble lattice screens).

The Tomb of Ahmed Shah (Map p721), constructed after his death in 1442, stands outside the Jama Masjid's east gate, and includes the cenotaphs of his son and grandson. Women are not allowed to go into the central chamber. Across the street on a raised platform is his queen's tomb, now a market and in poor shape.

Southwest of Bhadra Fort and dating from 1414, Ahmed Shah's Mosque (Map p721) was one of the city's earliest mosques. It has an elaborately carved ceiling with a circular symmetry reminiscent of Hindu and Jain temples, and beautiful pillars and jalis.

Sidi Saiyad's Mosque (Map p721; Dr Tankaria Rd), close to the river, was once part of the old citadel wall. Constructed in 1573 by Sidi Saiyad, a sometime slave of Ahmed Shah, it is one of Ahmedabad's most stunning buildings, with exquisite jalis – spider-web fine – depicting the intricate intertwining of the branches of a tree.

North of the centre, Rani Rupmati's Mosque (Map p719), built between 1430 and 1440, was named after the Hindu wife of the sultan. The minarets were damaged in the great earthquake of 1819. The dome is elevated to allow light in around its base. Like so many of Ahmedabad's early mosques, it combines elements of Hindu and Islamic design.

The small Rani Sipri's Mosque (Map p721), southeast of the centre, is also known as the Masjid-e-Nagira (Jewel of a Mosque) because of its graceful construction, with slender minarets – again a blend of styles. It's said to have been commissioned in 1514 by a wife of Sultan Mahmud Begara after he executed their son for some minor misdemeanour – she is also buried here.

South of Ahmedabad station, outside Sarangpur Gate, the Sidi Bashir Mosque (Map p719) is famed for its 21.3m-high shaking minarets (jhulta minars). Built to shake to protect against earthquake damage, this certainly worked in 2001.

The shaking minarets of the Raj Babri Mosque, southeast of Ahmedabad station in Gomtipur, were destroyed by their ingenuity, as one was partially dismantled by an inquisitive Englishman in an unsuccessful attempt to find out how it worked. It was never completely repaired, then in 2001 both minarets collapsed. Repairs continue.

TEMPLES

Outside Delhi Gate, north of the old city, the Jain Hatheesingh Temple (Map p719; Balvantrai Mehta Rd) is typically fine and made of delicately carved white marble. Built in 1848, it's dedicated to Dharamanath, the 15th Jain tirthankar (great teacher).

Dive into the old city's narrow streets to find the glorious, multicoloured, woodcarved Swaminarayan Temple (Map p721), a great, grand haveli (traditional, ornately decorated residence) dating from 1850, enclosed in a large courtyard.

KANKARIA LAKE

Built in 1451, this polygonal lake (Map p719), southeast of the city, is a breath of fresh air, and a popular place for a promenade. There is a grand colonial Dutch tomb nearby, one of Gujarat's oldest.

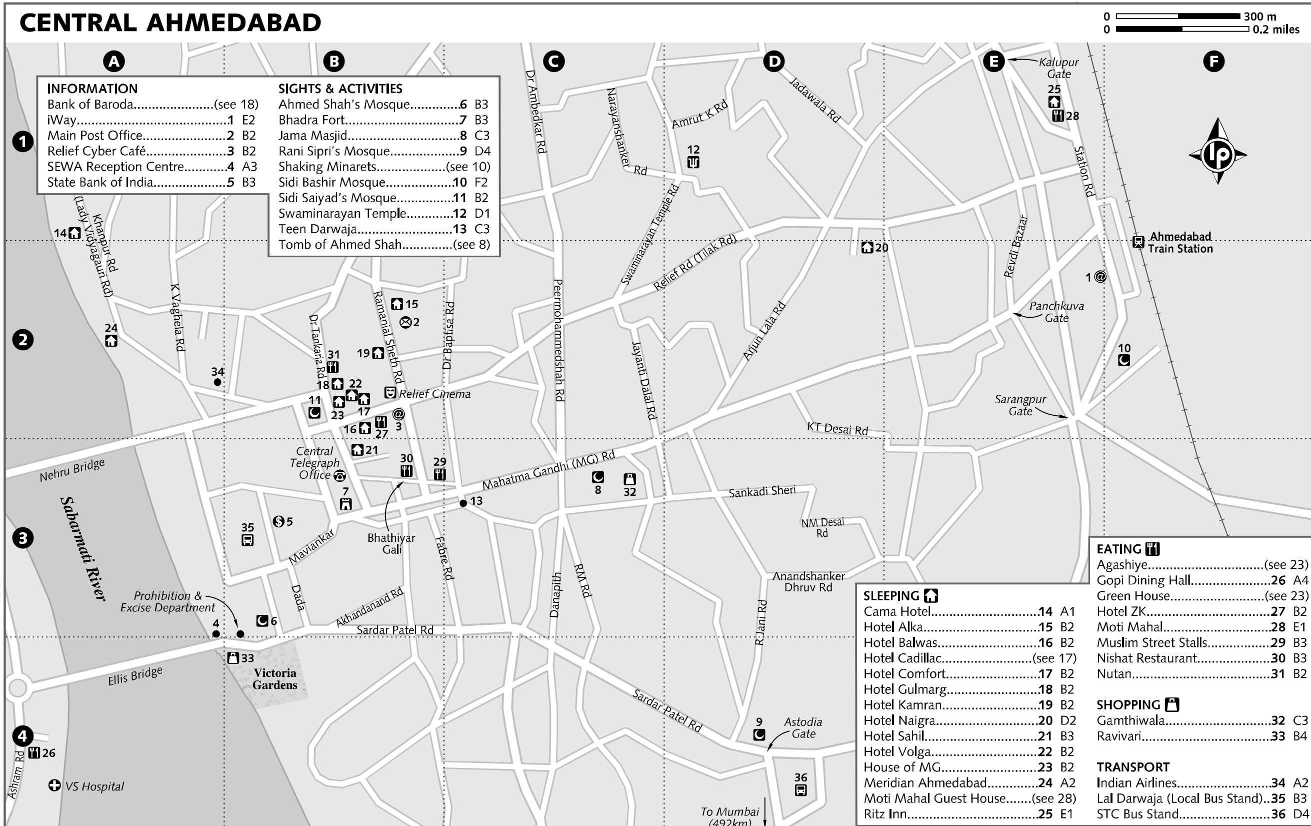
SARKHEJ ROSA

Located 8km southwest of the city, Sarkhej Rosa (☎ 26828675; admission free; ⏰ 6am-10pm) is a fascinating collection of Islamic buildings. They cluster around a great tank, constructed by Sultan Mahmud Shah I (1458–1511).

By the entrance is the tomb of Sultan Mahmud Begada, with geometric jalis casting patterns of light on the floor.

Shaikh Ahmed Khattu (his name means 'bestower of wealth') lived at Sarkhej and built this mosque with a great open space in front of the prayer hall, surrounded by domes.

A return rickshaw here will cost around Rs 150.



BAOLIS

Dada Hari Wav (Map p719; admission free; ⏰ dawn-dusk), built in 1499 by a woman of Sultan Begara's harem, has steps to lower platforms, terminating at a small, octagonal well. The depths are cool, even on the hottest day. Neglected and often bone dry, it's a fascinating and eerie place. The best time to visit and photograph the well is between 10am and 11am (earlier in the summer; later in the winter); at other times the sun doesn't penetrate to the various levels. Bus 34 and 111 (Rs 5) to Asarwa stops nearby.

Mata Bhavani's Well (Map p719) is about 200m north of Dada Hari's. Thought to be several hundred years older, it's less ornate and used as a simple Hindu temple.

CALICO MUSEUM OF TEXTILES

This museum (☎ 27868172; Shahibag; admission free; ⏰ 10.30am-12.30pm, no entry after 11am & 2.45-4.45pm, no entry after 3.15pm Thu-Tue) contains one of the world's finest collections of antique and modern Indian textiles – there are some astoundingly beautiful pieces here, displaying incredible virtuosity and extravagance.

There are two parts to the museum: first, the Calico Museum's main textile galleries, which can only be visited in the morning session, and second, Invisible Presence: Images and Abodes of Indian Deities, which explores depictions of Indian gods, with indoor and outdoor exhibits, also including textile galleries, which can only be visited in the afternoon. It's worth making time to visit both parts of the museum. Opposite the Underbridge, the museum is part of the Sarabhai Foundation, housed in a haveli constructed from old village houses, with wonderful woodcarving. It's 4.5km north of the city. Take bus 101, 102 or 105 (Rs 5) through Delhi Gate. An autorickshaw should cost Rs 40.

Photography is prohibited.

OTHER MUSEUMS

The excellent City Museum (Map p719; ☎ 26578369; Sanskar Kendra; admission free; 10am-6pm Tue-Sun), housed in a striking Le Corbusier building reminiscent of a multistorey car park, covers Ahmedabad's history, with sections on the city's religious communities, Gandhi and the Independence struggle. On the ground floor is the Kite Museum (Map p719; admission free; 10am-8pm Tue-Sun) with a selection of patterned tissue-paper kites resembling trapped butterflies.

The Lalbhai Dalpatbhai Museum (Map p719; ☎ 26306883; admission free; 11.30am-5pm Tue-Sun), near Gujarat University, houses fine stone, marble and wood carvings from around India, as well as local bronzes, cloth paintings and coins. Among the sculptures is a sandstone carving from Madhya Pradesh dating from the 6th century AD, the oldest-known carved image of the god Rama.

Nearby is the NC Mehta Gallery (Map p719; ☎ 26302463, ext 31; admission free; 10.30am-5.30pm Tue-Sun Jul-Apr, 8.30am-12.30pm Tue-Sun May-Jun) with an important collection of jewel-like illustrated manuscripts and miniatures. Best known is Chaurapanchasika (Fifty Love Lyrics of a Thief), written by Vilhana, an 11th-century Kashmiri poet sentenced to be hanged for loving the king's daughter. Just before his execution he composed the poems and so impressed the king that there was a lucky turnaround for Vilhana and the king gave his daughter to him in marriage.

The Shreyas Folk Museum (☎ 26601338; Indian/foreigner Rs 7/45; 10am-1.30pm & 2-5.30pm Fri-Tue), about 2.5km west of the river, in the suburb of Ambavadi, displays an impressive range of Gujarati folk arts and crafts, with elaborately decorated everyday items, including textiles, clothing and woodcarving. Take bus 34 or 200 (Rs 5), or an autorickshaw costs around Rs 30.

The Utensil Museum (☎ 26602422; Vishalla; admission Rs 8, camera/video Rs 50/100; 11am-3pm & 4.30-10pm), opposite Vasana Tol Naka, displays the graceful practicality of pots, with around 3500 utensils.

GUJARAT SCIENCE CITY

This educational theme park (☎ 65220111; www.scity.org; Hebatpur; 3-9pm daily), on the road to Gandhinagar, is well worth a visit. Features include an IMAX theatre (tickets Rs 100-125, hourly), the interactive Hall of Science, a 30-seater Thrill Ride Simulator, a spot-lit Musical Fountain (with shows at 7.30pm, 8.10pm and 8.45pm), and an Energy Education Park. Planet Earth is under construction.

SABARMATI ASHRAM

About 5km from the centre, peacefully set on the river's west bank, this ashram (☎ 27557277; admission free; 8.30am-6.30pm) was Gandhi's head-

WATERY WONDERS

The profound significance of water in the drought-prone districts of Gujarat and Rajasthan is set in stone in step wells – baolis (baoris in Rajasthan) – elaborate constructions unique to northwestern India. Ancient Hindu scriptures venerate those who build communal wells. With the natural Indian inclination to turn the functional into works of art, elaborate water-storage structures were developed, first by Hindus and then under the Mughals. Although the nobility considered it a religious obligation to construct these, the wells were evidently status symbols – the grandeur and artistry reflected the power and sensibility of their patrons. Often attached to temples so that devotees could bathe, the baolis were also meeting places, with verandas where people could take refuge from the fierce summer heat, and stopping places on the long caravan routes. Reliant on rainfall and ground water, and fulfilling so many differing watery needs, the wells are not the cleanest of containers, but certainly beautiful.

quarters during the long struggle for Indian independence. He founded the ashram in 1915 and it moved to its current site a few years later. It was from here on 12 March 1930 that Gandhi set out on his famous Salt March to the Gulf of Cambay in a symbolic protest. Handicrafts, handmade paper and spinning wheels are still produced on the site – there's a paper factory (11am-5pm Mon-Sat) over the road that's worth a look (ask at the ashram for permission). Gandhi's poignant, spartan living quarters are preserved and there's an excellent pictorial record of his life. The library contains the letter sent by Gandhi to Hitler on 23 July 1939 asking him to pull back from war. Gandhi was imprisoned at Sabarmati Jail, just down the road, in 1922.

There's usually a sound-and-light show – telephone for current times. Bus 81, 83/1 or 84/1 (Rs 5) run here. An autorickshaw costs about Rs 30.

Courses

The Darpana Academy (Map p719; 27550566; www.darpana.com; Ashram Rd, Usmanpura; Jul-Apr) was founded in 1949 and teaches Indian classical dance. Courses cost US$50 per week (two hours per day).

Tours

The Municipal Corporation (9824032866; Indian/foreigner Rs 20/50) runs fascinating heritage walking tours through the old city. They start from the Swaminarayan Temple at 8am and finish near the Jama Masjid around 10.30am. It's advisable to book. The tours, through narrow, confusing streets and past dilapidated, carved wooden houses, are an excellent way to get a feel for the city and its pols (neighbourhoods). Commentaries are given in English and there's a brief slide show beforehand.

The Municipal Corporation has also collaborated with the House of MG (see p724) to develop an ingenious audio guide walk (Rs 100). Beginning at the famed hotel, this 80-minute MP3-guided walk takes an alternative route through the Old City, ending at the Bholantah Divetia Haveli. This finely carved house is now a museum-in-progress.

There's also a Gandhi-inspired walk that takes in the key monuments of the freedom struggle.

Sleeping

As a part of the Walled City Revitalisation project, several heritage homes have been restored with modern facilities. A few have started accommodating guests, and it's a fascinating way to experience Ahmedabad. Contact the Municipal Corporation (9824032866).

Otherwise, many budget hotels are scattered around noisy, polluted Relief Rd. Some have 24-hour check-out, although most top-end hotels will turf you out at a stingy 9am. Day rates (ideal for those awaiting a night train) are about half-price.

BUDGET

The following have shared bathroom unless otherwise indicated.

Hotel Cadillac (Map p721; 5507558; Advance Cinema Rd, opposite Electricity House; dm Rs 60, r Rs 100-150) This is a good cheap option.

Hotel Gulmarg (Map p721; 25507202; Dr Tankaria Rd; s/d Rs 150/200) Near Sidi Sayad's Mosque, this 4th-floor place has a range of decrepit, dusty but spacious rooms, with clean bathrooms, and most have a TV and telephone. Stretch your calves if the lift isn't working.

Hotel Naigra (Map p721; 22172204; s/d with private bathroom Rs 200/350, with AC Rs 400/500;) Just off Relief Rd, near Zakaria Masjid, this 'ultra-modern and luxurious guesthouse' is kidding itself, but remains friendly and quiet, with cramped, rather grubby rooms, some with balcony.

Hotel Sahil (Map p721; 25507351; Dr Tankaria Rd; s/d/tr with private bathroom from Rs 300/400/500) Opposite the Advance Cinema, this hotel has small, slipshod rooms, some immeasurably better than others.

MIDRANGE

All of these have private bathroom.

Hotel Comfort (Map p721; 5503014; Relief Rd; s/d Rs 350/450, deluxe with AC Rs 450/550;) Hotel Comfort is a dependable midrange option, with chatty management, and clean, comfortable rooms. Ask to see a few because some lack a window. It's opposite Electricity House.

Hotel Alka (Map p721; 25500830; hotelalka@usa.net; Ramanial Sheth Rd; s/d Rs 350/500, with AC Rs 550/675;) This is a minor revelation set above a garage. It has smart, clean rooms, and friendly staff. The triple rooms (Rs 700 with AC) make you wish you had more friends.

Gandhi Ashram Guest House (27559342; s/d Rs 500/675, with AC Rs 900/1100;) Opposite Sabarmati Ashram, 5km from the centre, is this relatively tranquil, state-run option, that recently underwent a successful facelift. Rooms have balconies facing a leafiness that's unusual in this city. There's a stingy 9am checkout.

Moti Mahal Guest House (Map p721; ☎ 22121881; Kapasia Bazaar; s/d Rs 400/450, with AC Rs 500/600) Near the train station, this brand new guest house is jovially run by the same crowd as the famed restaurant downstairs (see right). It offers glossy, slightly cramped rooms, all with modern bathrooms.

Hotel Kamran (Map p721; ☎ 25509586; GPO Rd; s/d from Rs 400/500, with AC from Rs 550/650;) This unassuming option has comfortable rooms (cheaper ones are a bargain), and is located near the post office.

Hotel Balwas (Map p721; ☎ 25507135; Relief Rd; s/d with balcony Rs 425/550, with AC Rs 525/650;) Here, rooms at the front have balconies overlooking the Relief Rd mayhem. AC rooms are at the back and a bit larger and quieter, but all are good value.

Hotel Volga (Map p721; ☎ 25509497; volga@icenet.net; s/d Rs 450/600, with AC Rs 650-900;) This is the premier option in town, tucked in a quiet alley off Relief Rd, with smart, spic-and-span rooms, more dashingly decorated than most, and sharp, attentive service.

Ritz Inn (Map p721; ☎ 22123842; Station Rd; s/d with AC Rs 1350/1650;) Near the railway station, this smart hotel has unusual class, with comfortable rooms done out in Art Deco style. There's a good veggie restaurant. Check-out is 24 hour and it offers free airport transfer.

TOP END

All these places accept major credit cards.

House of MG (Map p721; ☎ 25506946; www.houseofmg.com; Dr Tankaria Rd; s/d from Rs 3000/4000, ste from Rs 5000;) This 1920s building (with two excellent restaurants; see right) was once the home of industrialist Sheth Mangaldas Girdhardas, converted into a beautiful heritage hotel with vast, veranda-edged suites beautifully and simply decorated, with great attention to detail and excellent service. It's an icon of the upper classes, and hugely popular with Indians and foreigners alike. The new indoor swimming pool and health club are ideal antidotes to a day on foot. Book in advance online to receive up to 30% discount. You can also purchase the furniture or accessories from your room.

Cama Hotel (Map p721; ☎ 25601234; www.camahotelsindia.com; Khanpur Rd; r Rs 3600-4600;) The Cama's unusually large rooms are carefully finished with light wood writing desks, and comfy beds. Pay a little extra for a room with a view of the Sabarmati.

Meridian Ahmedabad (Map p721; ☎ 25505505; Khanpur Rd; s/d from Rs 6000/6500, ste Rs 12,000;) This is a better-than-average Meridian venture that towers over the fragile shacks along the river bank. All rooms are sumptuous and the suites are palatial. The price includes breakfast and free airport transfer. There's an indoor swimming pool (Rs 250 nonguests), spa and sauna.

Taj Residency Ummed (☎ 66661234; residency.ahmedabad@tajhotels.com; International Airport Circle, Hansol; d US$165-180, ste US$350-500) Located close to the airport, this new addition to the Taj empire caters predominantly to the high-flying business crowd. Pool-facing doubles are good value, and the deluxe suites are superb.

Eating

As capital of this foodie state, Ahmedabad has some superb restaurants. It's a great place to sample the Gujarati thali – the traditional all-you-can-eat vegetarian meal, but with a greater variety of dishes, lighter and less oily than Punjabi food and with several sweet dishes.

RESTAURANTS

Nishat Restaurant (Map p721; Khas Bazaar; dishes Rs 18-62; 11am-4pm & 7-11.30pm;) This welcoming place gets packed in the evenings with Muslim men smashing hearty veg and, more often, nonveg tandooris dishes.

Moti Mahal (Map p721; Kapasia Bazaar; dishes Rs 20-70; 5-1am) Ahmedabad's oldest restaurant is still going strong, with a long Indian menu, and a regularly updated specials board. You can eat downstairs in an open-fronted simple restaurant, or upstairs in small elevated cubby holes and behind grills for more privacy.

Green House (Map p721; House of MG, Dr Tankaria Rd; dishes Rs 30-60; 7am-11pm;) Downstairs from Agashiye, this relaxed eatery has outdoor courtyard seating and a laid-back AC room. The food is delicate and delicious: try delicious panki, a thin pancake cooked between banana leaves; or divine malpura, a sweet, deep-fried pancake in saffron syrup, topped with rose petals. Don't leave without trying the hand-churned ice cream.

Nutan (Map p721; Opposite Dinbai Tower; dishes Rs 30-63) An immensely popular pure veg eatery that's packed with businessmen at lunchtime. They also do a side trade in hotel room service.

Hotel ZK (Map p721; Opposite Relief Cinema; dishes Rs 35-90) Slick new AC restaurant, with tinted windows and impeccable service. The Afghan curry is amazing and all the paneer dishes are great.

TC's (Map p719; ground fl, Aakash Ganga; dishes Rs 35-140; 11am-11pm) This trendy little café behind Gujarat College offers pita and hummus, Vietnamese noodles and Indian dishes tweaked for Western tastes, all in a bright diner setting, complete with rock music, big TV screens and Americanised waiters. Red bull cocktails (Rs 150) are about as wild as this party gets.

Gopi Dining Hall (Map p721; Ashram Rd; thalis Rs 45-65; 10am-3pm & 6-10.30pm) Just off the west end of Ellis Bridge, opposite the Town Hall, this small restaurant is a much-loved thali institution. The evening meal is spicier and heavier.

Mint (Map p719; G-36 Shree Krishna Centre, Mithakhali Circle; dishes Rs 40-105) This is a cool, small, mint-coloured place for the moneyed, with a calm atmosphere and good snacks, from Gujarati favourites such as pav bhaji (spiced vegetables with bread) to international comfort food such as cheese-topped mashed potatoes.

Toran Dining Hall (Map p721; Opposite Sales India; thali Rs 80; 11am-3pm & 7-10pm) Ahmedabad has a new champion in the thali stakes! Gung-ho staff knock up delicious, never-ending Gujarati specialities to a mostly middle-class crowd.

Mirch Masala (Map p719; CG Rd; dishes Rs 49-159; 12.30-3pm & 7-11pm) Lively and popular, with lots of bright pictures, puppets and film posters. Although à la carte is good for dinner, the lunch specials (Rs 89) are brilliant value.

Vishalla (26602422; lunch Rs 71, dinner Rs 179; 11am-3pm & 8-11pm) On the southern edge of town, opposite Vasana Tol Naka, Vishalla is a magical eating experience, evoking a traditional Gujarati village. You eat a veggie thali seated on the floor in rustic wooden huts, and the complex includes craft stalls and a fascinating Utensil Museum (p722). Dinner is accompanied by puppet or magic shows and traditional music. Bus 150 will take you nearby; an autorickshaw costs Rs 45 (about Rs 70 return).

Agashiye (Map p721; House of MG, Dr Tankaria Rd; lunch reg/deluxe Rs 195/295, dinner reg/deluxe Rs 255/375; noon-2.30pm & 7-11pm) This is Ahmedabad's best dining experience. On the rooftop of one of the city's finest mansions, the lovely terrace is an oasis of calm and space, candle-lit at night, a world away from the congested streets. The menu, which changes daily, includes dainty little snacks, a multitude of ravishingly tasty vegetable dishes, sweets and ice cream.

QUICK EATS

Havmor (Map p719; Stadium Complex; ice cream Rs 15-70) Ahmedabad is famous for its ice cream and the Havmor ice-cream bar, behind Navrangpura bus stop, has tons of flavours.

Tea Centre (Map p719; Vijay Char Rasta; dishes Rs 10-80) A calm place to sip sophisticated chai, above a busy chowk (intersection). The iced teas are heavenly – try the caiparinha.

Rasranjan Food Court (Map p719; Vijay Cross Rd, Navrangpura Rasta, CG Rd; dishes Rs 15-78; 11am-11pm) A popular, bustling food emporium offering fast-food South Indian and Punjabi dishes, with sweets and chaat downstairs.

Excellent Muslim street food is available near Teen Darwaja on Bhathiyar Gali (Map p721), a small street parallel to MG Rd. You can get a good feed for about Rs 25 from the evening stalls, with halal meat, fish and vegetarian dishes. The Law Garden Night Market (Map p719) is also good for street food.

Shopping

Law Garden Night Market (Map p719; Law Garden) This evening market is packed with stalls selling glittering wares from craft-rich Kutch and Saurashtra, under the beguiling light of kerosene lamps. It's chock-a-block with cholis (backless mirrored blouses) and richly decorated chaniyas (long, wide traditional skirts), both traditionally worn at Navratri (see the boxed text, p717); intensely embroidered wall hangings; costume jewellery and more.

Gurjari (Map p719; Ashram Rd; 10am-2pm & 3-7pm) South of Gujarat Tourism is this state emporium on several floors, with some fantastic finds if you rummage around, including funky clothes and silk saris.

Garvi Handloom House (Map p719; Ashram Rd; 10.30am-8pm) Opposite Gurjari, this place sells a range of textiles.

Gamthiwala (Map p721; Manekchowk; 11am-1pm & 2-7pm Mon-Sat) In the old city, this sells excellent quality block-printed textiles and gorgeous, thick cotton.

Asal (5 Tejpal Society; 10am-8pm) An extraordinary dung-floored organic shop that is well worth seeking out – so eco-friendly that it's lit by candles rather than electricity in the evenings. It sells utensils, khadi fabric, Ayurvedic spices, herbal bath soaps, oils and essences.

Bandhej (Map p719; Shree Krishna Centre, Mithakali Six Rd; 10am-8pm) This boutique feels like it got lost en route to New York, and has some beautiful traditional clothes and furnishings at upmarket prices.

Banascraft (Map p719; 8-9 Chandan Complex, CG Rd; 10.30am-8pm Mon-Sat, to 6.30pm Sun) The retail outlet of the Self-Employed Women's Association (SEWA; see the boxed text, below). It sells embroidered shawls, clothes and wall hangings.

Ravivari (Map p721; dawn-dusk Sun) This riverside flea market is a crazy mass of animals, music, crockery, clothing and gadgets that makes for fascinating rummaging.

AIR

Two recommended booking agents are Parshwanath Travels (Map p719; ☎ 27544142; parshtrvl@wilnetonline.net; Ashram Rd; 10am-6.30pm Mon-Sat) and Express Travels (Map p719; ☎ 26588602; express@wilnetonline.net; 11am-6.30pm Mon-Sat), around the corner from Gujarat Tourism. Both places accept major credit cards.

Air India (Map p719; ☎ 26585382; Premchand House, Ashram Rd), near the High Court building, has flights to New York (US$740) and Chicago (US$850) via Mumbai and London (£278).

Indian Airlines (Map p721; ☎ 26585622, airport office 22867237; Relief Rd; 10am-5pm) is near the Nehru Bridge. It flies to Sharjah (Rs 14,100), Kuwait (Rs 19,225) and Muscat (Rs 14,095).

Singapore Airlines (☎ 30012840), off CG Rd, flies to/from Singapore.

Jet Airways (Map p719; ☎ 27543304; Ashram Rd; 10am-6.30pm Mon-Fri, to 4pm Sat & Sun) flies regularly to Mumbai (US$95 to US$140; daily connections to Goa) and Delhi (US$100 to US$190).

BUS

Private buses from the north drop you at Naroda Rd, about 7km northwest of the city centre – an autorickshaw will complete the journey for around Rs 50.

Leaving from the bus stand near Rani Sipri's Mosque, State Transport Corporation (STC; Map p721; ☎ 25463360) buses go to Vadodara (Rs 60, two hours, every 10 minutes), as well as hourly to Jamnagar (Rs 115, seven hours), Junagadh (Rs 120, eight hours), Bhavnagar (Rs 90, four hours) and Rajkot (Rs 95, 4½ hours).

If you're travelling long distances, private buses are quicker; some offices are east of the STC bus stand. Punjab Travels (Map p719; 9am-9pm); Embassy Market (☎ 26589200; off Ashram Rd); Shefali Shopping Centre (☎ 26579999; Pritamnagar Rd) offers a number of intercity services, including to Ajmer (ordinary/sleeper Rs 200/320, 11 hours), Aurangabad (ordinary/sleeper Rs 320/420, 16½ hours), Jaipur (ordinary/sleeper Rs 250/360, 14½ hours), Jodhpur (Rs 210, 11 hours) and Udaipur (ordinary/sleeper Rs 130/220, seven hours).

SEWA

The Self-Employed Women's Association (SEWA) is Gujarat's largest union, comprising 700,000 members in India (535,000 in Gujarat). It's based on the simple notion that poor women need organisation, not aid.

Established in 1972, SEWA identifies three types of self-employed workers: hawkers and vendors; home-based workers such as weavers, potters and bidi (handmade cigarette) rollers; and manual labourers and service providers such as agricultural labourers, construction workers and domestic workers.

SEWA assists self-employed workers to organise into unions and cooperatives, so that they can control the fruits of their own labours. SEWA's approach focuses on health and childcare, literacy, appropriate housing and self-sufficiency, and the SEWA Academy conducts leadership training courses for its members. In Video SEWA, women make films on their issues and problems. SEWA is also active in the campaign for a needs-based minimum wage. Membership costs Rs 5 per annum.

SEWA also runs a bank, giving many poor women their first access to a savings or reputable lending body, and provides access to legal aid.

The SEWA Reception Centre (Map p721; ☎ 5506444; www.sewa.org; 10.30am-6pm Mon-Sat) is at the eastern end of Ellis Bridge. It has a range of literature and visitors are welcome. SEWA's fixed-price handicrafts are sold at Banascraft (above).

TRAIN

There's a computerised booking office (Map p721; ☎ 135; 8am-8pm Mon-Sat, to 2pm Sun) to the left as you exit Ahmedabad train station. Window 6 handles the foreign-tourist quota, and you could try booking with your credit card at Window 7.

Getting Around

TO/FROM THE AIRPORT

The airport is 10km north of town; an autorickshaw costs about Rs 100. A cheaper option is bus 105 from Lal Darwaja (Rs 6).

AUTORICKSHAW

Autorickshaw drivers here use the meter (it's the dial by their left knee) and are mostly honest, though the occasional rascal might try to fleece you. Travelling from Ahmedabad train station to Sidi Saiyad's Mosque should cost about Rs 30.

AROUND AHMEDABAD

Adalaj Wav

Adalaj Wav, 19km north of Ahmedabad, is among the finest of the Gujarati baolis. Built by Queen Rudabai in 1499, it has three entrances leading to a huge platform that rests on 16 pillars, with corners marked by shrines. The octagonal well is five storeys deep. The baoli is decorated with exquisite stone carvings; subjects range from eroticism to buttermilk. The Gandhinagar bus will get you within walking distance (ask the conductor where to get off). An autorickshaw costs Rs 300 return.

Nal Sarovar Bird Sanctuary

This 116-sq-km lake, located some 60km southwest of Ahmedabad, is a flood of ceaseless blue dissolving into the sky, surrounded by iron-flat plains. Between November and February, the sanctuary (Indian/foreigner Rs 10/250, car Rs 20, video Rs 2500) sees flocks of indigenous and migratory birds with as many as 250 species passing through the park. Ducks, geese, pelicans and flamingos are best seen early in the morning (aim for 5.30am) and in the evening.

The sanctuary is busiest at weekends and on holidays. To see the birds, it's best to hire a boat (Rs 100 per hour) for a few hours. Don't let your guide scare the birds.

Take supplies such as mineral water and food, as there's no café. Gujarat Tourism runs a group of pod-like huts (☎ 079-26589172; d Rs 800) outside the sanctuary boundary.

Buses are infrequent (Rs 35, 2½ hours); your best bet may be a taxi from Ahmedabad (return around Rs 1000).

Lothal

About 85km southwest of Ahmedabad, this important archaeological site was discovered in 1954. The city that stood here 4500 years ago is clearly related to the Indus Valley cities of Mohenjodaro and Harappa, both in Pakistan. It has the same neat street pattern, carefully assembled, neat brickwork, and scientific drainage system.

Lothal means 'mound of the dead' in Gujarati, as does Mohenjodaro in Sindhi. Excavations have revealed a tidal dockyard (with a complex lock-gate system) – at its peak, this was probably one of the most important ports on the subcontinent. The Sabarmati River, which no longer runs past here, connected the dock to the Gulf of Cambay. Seals discovered at the site suggest that trade may have been conducted with the civilisations of Mesopotamia, Egypt and Persia.

The archaeological museum (admission Rs 3; 10am-5pm Sat-Thu) at the site displays fragments of this well-ordered civilisation, such as intricate seals, weights and measures, games and jewellery.

Palace Utelia (☎ /fax 079-26445770; r Rs 2000), 7km from the archaeological site, by the Bhugavo River, is an imposing palace – complete with aged retainers – that dwarfs the village it oversees. The shabby rooms are overpriced, but it's an unusual place with charm if not comfort.

Lothal is a long day trip from Ahmedabad. There are buses (Rs 68, three hours), or you can reach it via train to Bhurkhi (6km away), from where you can take a bus. There's a train from Ahmedabad at 7.50am (2nd class Rs 41, three hours).

Modhera

The beautiful Sun Temple (8am-6pm) was built by King Bhimdev I in 1026 and 1027 and resembles the better-known Konark temple in Orissa, which it predates by 200 years. It was similarly designed so that the dawn sun shone on the image of Surya, the sun god, during the equinoxes. The main hall and shrine are reached through a complex, pillared pavilion. The temple exterior is intricately and delicately carved, showing demons and evolving gods. As at Somnath, this temple was ruined by Mahmud of Ghazni, but it remains impressive. Fifty two intricately carved pillars depict scenes from the Ramayana and the Mahabharata. The interior contains a hall with 12 niches representing Surya's different monthly manifestations. Erotic sculpture panels complete the sensual decoration.

It's fronted by the Surya Kund, an extraordinary rectangular baoli that contains over 100 shrines, resembling a sunken art gallery. Shrines to Ganesh, Vishnu and an incarnation of Shiva surround the tank on its other three sides.

In January Modhera is also the scene for a three-day dance festival.

Modhera is 102km northwest of Ahmedabad. There are direct buses (Rs 68, 3½ hours), or you can take the train to Mahesana and then catch a bus to Modhera (26km). Buses from Zainabad stop at Modhera (Rs 27, 1½ hours, three daily), and go on to Patan (Rs 56, one hour).

Patan

Patan is a dusty, little-visited town, but its narrow streets are lined by elaborate, faded wooden houses, and are worth exploring. They hold more than 100 Jain temples, the largest of which is Panchasara Parasvanath.

About 130km northwest of Ahmedabad, Patan was an ancient Hindu capital before being sacked by Mahmud of Ghazni in 1024 – the only sign of its former glory is Rani-ki-Vav (admission Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; 8am-6pm), an astoundingly beautiful baoli, incongruously grand in this unassuming town. Built in 1050, the baoli is the oldest and finest in Gujarat and is remarkably well preserved – it was protected by centuries of silt and restored in the 1980s.

Patan's also famous for its beautiful Patola silk saris produced in a torturously laborious process. Threads are painstakingly tie-dyed to create the pattern before the weaving process begins. To see them being made visit VK Salvi (www.patanpatola.com; Salviwado, Patolawala St).

Neerav Hotel (☎ 222127; s Rs 150, d Rs 200-400, r with AC Rs 900;), near Kohinoor Cinema, is reasonable, while nearby Anand Restaurant (Kilachand Shopping Centre; dishes around Rs 30) has good thalis and à la carte dishes.

Patan is 25km northwest of Mahesana. Buses from Ahmedabad take 3½ hours and cost Rs 55. There are buses from Zainabad (Rs 60, 2½ hours, three daily), via Modhera.

GANDHINAGAR

pop 195,891

Gandhinagar forms a striking contrast to Ahmedabad, with big broad avenues and lots of greenery. This is where state politicians live, in large, well-fortified houses. Although Ahmedabad became the capital of Gujarat when the old state of Mumbai was split, this new capital was planned 32km northeast on the west bank of the Sabarmati River. Named Gandhinagar after Mahatma Gandhi, it's India's second planned city after Chandigarh. The secretariat was moved here in 1970.

The reason for visiting is spectacular Akshardham Temple (Ja Rd, Sector 20; 9.30am-6.30pm Tue-Sun), belonging to the wealthy Hindu Swaminarayan group. Built by nearly 1000 artisans, it is an elaborately carved building constructed out of 6000 tonnes of pink sandstone and surrounded by manicured lawns and perfect trees.

In September 2002, two suspected Islamist terrorists opened fire on visitors, murdering 31 people, before they themselves were killed, but there's little trace of this tragedy today, other than some bullet grazes on the ceiling.

Getting There & Away

From Ahmedabad, buses to Gandhinagar (Rs 16, 45 minutes, every 15 minutes) depart from the back northwest corner of Lal Darwaja and from the numerous stops along Ashram Rd.

VADODARA (BARODA)

0265 / pop 1.49 million

Vadodara (or Baroda as it's often known) is a cultured, harmonious university town 100km southeast of Ahmedabad, which explodes into life during festival season. The impressive museum, overwrought Indo-Saracenic palace and beautiful Tambekar Wada can be visited in a day or two, but the main reason for coming here is the nearby, wonderful Unesco World Heritage site Champaner, with its mosques lost in the landscape.

Prior to Independence, Vadodara was the capital of the princely Gaekwad state, and today prides itself as an educational centre, and home to the sprawling MS University.

Orientation & Information

The train station, bus stands and hotels are on the west side of the Vishwarmurti River, which bisects the city. Tilak Rd connects the station with the main part of town.

There's an ICICI ATM at the train station and SBI and Standard Chartered ATMs on RC Dutt Rd.

Crossword (2/1 Arunoday Society, Alkapuri; 10.30am-8.30pm Mon-Fri, to 9pm Sat & Sun) A brilliant bookstore, with a good café.

Gujarat Tourism (2427489; ground fl, Narmada Bhavan, Jail Rd; 10.30am-6pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd & 4th Sat of month)

HB's (104 Helix Sayjigunj; per hr Rs 10; 24hr) Part of a complex of several internet cafés.

Municipal tourist office (2794456; 24hr) Opposite the train station.

Thomas Cook (2355574; Shriram Chambers, RC Dutt Rd) Changes travellers cheques and currency.

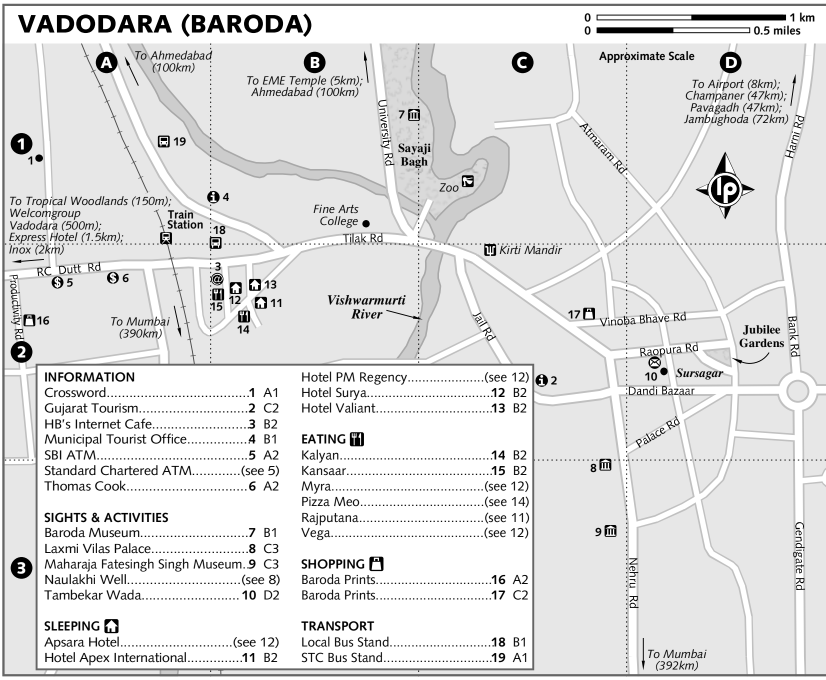
Sights

SAYAJI BAGH

Within this shady, pleasant park is the Baroda Museum (admission Rs 10; 10.30am-5pm), which houses some good Asian statues and carvings, mangy zoology exhibits and an Egyptian room. The gallery has lovely Mughal miniatures and a motley crew of European masters.

TAMBEKAR WADA

This wooden multistoreyed townhouse (admission free; 8am-6pm) is a typical Maratha mansion, once the residence of Bhau Tambekar, Diwan of Baroda (1849–54). Inside are some beautiful 19th-century murals.



OTHER SIGHTS

Laxmi Vilas Palace (Nehru Rd; admission Rs 100; 10.30am-5.30pm Tue-Sun) was built in full-throttle 19th-century Indo-Saracenic style for Rs 6 million. You don't get much for your entrance fee – a few weapons and the Durbar Hall. Tickets are available from the neighbouring, underwhelming Maharaja Fateh Singh Museum. The Naulakhi Well (Nehru Rd), a fine baoli, is 50m north of the palace. About 5km north of town is the unusual Dakshinamoorthy Temple, more commonly known as the EME (Electrical Mechanical Engineering) Temple, built in the grounds of an Indian Army complex with an aluminium-domed roof.

In the centre of Sursagar, a lake in the east of town, is a huge statue of Shiva.

Sleeping

There are numerous hotels in and around Sayaji Gunj. The midrange options have 24-hour check-out and free airport transfer.

BUDGET

Apsara Hotel (☎ 5549600; Sayaji Gunj; s/d from Rs 150/250) In the street west of Hotel Surya is this friendly, welcoming place with a leafy yard. The rooms are small and a bit grubby, though those upstairs (without TV) are brighter. Showers shoot out at right angles.

Hotel Valiant (☎ 2363480; 7th fl, BBC Tower, Sayaji Gunj; s/d Rs 400/550, with AC from Rs 600/750) The bargain of the city, this popular hotel is hidden behind the main drag, and reached via a creaky lift. Rooms are clean and well-presented – all with TV and fridge.

Hotel PM Regency (☎ 2361616; Sayaji Gunj; s Rs 300-600, d Rs 600, with AC Rs 850/1050; ❄) This mainstay has reasonable rooms, with good value options overlooking the pleasant street. Condemning yourself to an 'economy' single is not for the claustrophobic.

MIDRANGE & TOP END

Hotel Surya (☎ 2361361; www.hotelsurya.com; Sayaji Gunj; s/d with breakfast Rs 525/750, with AC from Rs 825/1000; ❄ 💻) Surya is incredibly popular, with a cordial atmosphere and professional staff. Rooms are spacious, and most overlook leafy Sayaji Gunj. There are two restaurants (see opposite).

Hotel Apex International (☎ 2362551; www.hotelapex.com; Sayaji Gunj; s/d from Rs 800/1050) Opposite the statue of Sardar Patel, this has smart, well-designed rooms with balconies; some have views.

Express Hotel (☎ 2330960; www.expressworld.com; RC Dutt Rd; s/d/ste Rs 2600/3200/4000; ❄) The first government approved hotel in Gujarat (way back in 1973), this is a good choice, with business-minded though aesthetically pleasing rooms, and two very good restaurants. It's 1.5km west of the train station.

Welcomgroup Vadodara (☎ 2330033; www.welcomgroup.com; RC Dutt Rd; r with breakfast Rs 4500-8000; ❄ 🏊) Perhaps the finest five-star hotel in Gujarat, this has well-appointed rooms, an inviting outdoor pool and a swish restaurant.

Eating

Vadodara has a burgeoning number of good restaurants, particularly in the popular Alkapuri area.

Kalyan (Sayaji Gunj; dishes Rs 15-80) Kalyan is a cool student hang-out, and is a perfect spot for people-watching. The breezy restaurant serves healthy portions of Indian food (the sizzler plate is heavy duty), but unhealthy Western dishes.

Rajputana (☎ 5522799; Sayaji Gunj; mains Rs 45-85; 🕒 11am-3pm & 7-11pm) Specialising in North Indian (including Rajasthani) and Chinese dishes, this feels intimate, divided up by interior walls that feature gaps and hanging chains, and has a view over the busy small chowk with its food stalls.

Kansaar (101 Unique Trade Centre, Sayaji Gunj; thali Rs 80) A classy 12-year-old thali joint on the second floor, with impeccable service and delicious food; smokers can enjoy the fine street view.

Tropical Woodlands (139 Windsor Plaza, RC Dutt Rd; dishes Rs 18-100) This place provides popular, delicious South Indian food in pleasant surroundings, with big plate-glass windows for overlooking the busy road and a ceiling centred on dangling plastic plants.

Pizza Meo (Sayaji Gunj; pizza Rs 75-140, pasta Rs 90-105) This small Italian ristorante serves excellent pizza, and so-so pasta. Monday night buffet (Rs 150) is standing room only.

Mandap (Express Hotel, RC Dutt Rd; thali Rs 130; 🕒 11am-3pm & 7.30-10.30pm) has one the best thalis in town in a room with a mock-desert-tent interior.

Hotel Surya (☎ 2361361; www.hotelsurya.com; Sayaji Gunj) has two restaurants: Vega (dishes Rs 40-140; 🕒 7-10.30am, noon-3pm & 7.30-11pm), which has a comfortable atmosphere and good Chinese and Indian dishes, and Myra (thali Rs 85-115; 🕒 11am-3pm & 7-11pm), with good, filling thalis.

Entertainment

Inox (Ellora Park) This is a glossy mall about 2km west of the centre. It's a big local attraction, with fast-food places and a fashionable department store as well as an eight-screen multiplex showing all the latest releases.

Shopping

Baroda Prints Salatwada (Main Rd; 🕒 9am-8pm Mon-Sat, 10am-8pm Sun); Aries Complex (GF-2,3 Productivity Rd; 🕒 9.30am-8.30pm Mon-Sat, 10.30am-8.30pm Sun) A fantastic shop selling hand-printed textiles, including bright, beautiful bed sheets, dress material and so on. In the Salatwada store you can see the printers at work in the back room.

Getting There & Away

AIR

The airport is 8km northeast of town. Indian Airlines (☎ 2794747/8) has daily flights to Mumbai (US$125) and Delhi (US$215). Jet Airways (☎ 2343441) also has daily Mumbai flights.

BUS

The STC bus stand is 400m north of the train station, and there are buses to many destinations in Gujarat, western Madhya Pradesh and northern Maharashtra. Every 10 minutes there are buses to Ahmedabad (Rs 60, two hours). Regular buses also serve Bhavnagar (Rs 100, five hours), Palitana (Rs 110, eight hours, two daily), Diu (Rs 145, 13 hours, two daily) and Tararbul (for Lothal; Rs 55). Many private bus companies have offices nearby.

TRAIN

To Ahmedabad, the 9115 Sayajinagari Express leaves Vadodara at 9.51pm (2nd class Rs 51, 2¼ hours, 99km) and the 9011 Gujarat Express leaves at 12.13pm. The 2009/10 Shatabdi departs at 11.51am Saturday to Thursday (chair/executive Rs 315/590, two hours). From Ahmedabad it leaves at 2.30pm, arriving in Vadodara at 4.15pm and going on to Mumbai, arriving at 9.45pm (chair/executive Rs 695/1330). Also to Mumbai, the 9144 Lokshakti Express leaves at 11.10pm (sleeper/3AC Rs 212/565, 7¼ hours, 392km).

AROUND VADODARA

Champaner & Pavagadh

Spectacular Champaner and Pavagadh are 47km northeast of Vadodara: Champaner is a Unesco World Heritage site, Gujarat's former capital, scattered on and around Pavagadh, an 800m volcanic hill looking like a chunk of the Himalaya dumped on the plain.

Pavagadh's oldest monument is the 10th- to 11th-century Lakulisha Temple, near the top of the hill. On the highest point is the temple of Kalika Mata – an important pilgrimage site, and home to a month-long festival in honour of the goddess Mahakali, which takes place in the month of Chaitra (March/April). You can walk to the temples at the top of Pavagadh hill, which will take two to three hours, or you can take the recently re-opened cable car (Rs 70 return). You'll need to take a bus to the base from Champaner (Rs 10).

Champaner (☎ 02676-245631; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; 🕒 10am-6pm) was established as the Chauhan Rajput capital in about the 8th century. On a strategic trade route, it was besieged by Sultan Mahmud Begara, who succeeded in taking it in 1484 (the Rajputs committed jauhar – ritual mass suicide – in the face of defeat) and built many religious structures as well as the impressive fort wall on Pavagadh. But the city began to decline from 1535 when the Mughals, led by Humayun himself, scaled the fort walls using iron spikes driven into the rocks and captured both the fort and its city.

The walls at the base of the hill were once 6km long; they surrounded military, civic and religious buildings and complex water-harvesting systems. The most stunning features are the mosques, with a blending of Islamic and Hindu decoration styles. The most spectacular monument is the Jama Masjid. Dating from 1513, it took 125 years to build, and has a wonderful carved entrance and imposing courtyard. Inside, the ruler's prayer hall is divided from the main space by jalis. Behind the building is an octagonal kund (lake), Hauz-i-Vazu, used for washing before prayer.

Other beautiful mosques include Kewda Masjid, where you can walk up the narrow stairs to the rooftop, with the globelike domes, as rounded as fruit, and even further up the minarets for great views. Nearby is Iteri Masjid, with brick-built minarets that resemble factory chimneys, and even further into the countryside is Nagina Masjid, with no minarets but exquisite geometric carving.

Hotel Champaner (☎ 02676-245641; Pavagadh Manchi; dm/s/d Rs 75/200/300, s/d with AC Rs 500/750; ❄) has state-run rooms that are plain and basic, but all have balconies with superb views.

There are six daily buses from Vadodara (Rs 42, two hours); a return taxi costs around Rs 550.

Jambughoda

Around 25km from Champaner is the charming ex-princely state of Jambughoda, turned sanctuary in 1992, encompassing 130 sq km of lush countryside. You can stay at Jambughoda Palace (☎ 241258; jambughodapalace@rediffmail.com; r Rs 1000-1200), a lovely rambling place, built in 1924, run by the erstwhile royal family who still live here. Rooms are simple and it's an enchantingly peaceful place, with resident geese and ducks.

BHARUCH

Bharuch appeared in historical records nearly 2000 years ago. It's on the main rail line between Vadodara and Surat, about an hour from each.

The hilltop fort overlooks the wide Narmada River and has the Jama Masjid at its base. On the river bank, east of the city, is the Temple of Bhrigu Rishi, from which the city took its name, Bhrigukachba, later shortened to Bharuch.

The Narmada River is notorious because of the Sardar Sarovar, a hugely controversial dam, upstream of Bharuch near the village of Manibeli (see p89).

SURAT

☎ 026 / pop 2.4 million

On the Tapti River, Surat is a busy commercial centre for textiles and diamonds. It's long attracted outsiders: Parsis settled here in the 12th century, it later became a vital Mughal port and transit point for Mecca, and in 1613 was the first English settlement in India.

Once India's chief trading port, it declined when the East India Company shifted to Bombay. In 1994, there was an outbreak of the plague, and it was rated as India's filthiest city. Big cleanups have reportedly left it the second cleanest and healthiest (after Chandigarh). You might be inclined to rate it most exhausting and noisy, but travellers with an interest in colonial history might be tempted to stop.

Built in 1546, the riverside castle is alongside the Tapti Bridge and now full of offices, but there are good views from its bastions. Colonial tombs here date from the 15th to the 18th centuries. Most magnificent is the 17th-century memorial to Baron Adrian Van Reed, a local Dutch company director.

The city has huge textile outlets, including Bombay Market (Umarwada) – a big sari retail centre 1km south of the train station.

The nearby Dangs mountains near Maharastra host a spectacular, largely tourist-free festival in the week before Holi.

Getting There & Away

Surat is on the main Mumbai–Ahmedabad railway line. There are many trains to/from Ahmedabad, including the 9215 Saurashtra Express (sleeper Rs 132, five hours, 229km) and the 9301 Kutch Express from Mumbai (sleeper, Rs 143, four hours, 263km).

AROUND SURAT

Twenty-nine kilometres south of Surat (30 minutes by train), Navsari has been a headquarters for the Parsi community since 1142. Some 13km from Navsari is Dandi, the destination of Gandhi's epic Salt March in 1930. It's reached along a pleasant rural road, and by the strikingly empty beach are several monuments to Gandhi, including a small museum. There's another museum at Karodi, 3km from Dandi, where he was arrested.

Udvada, 10km north of Vapi, the station for Daman, has India's oldest Parsi sacred fire; it's said to have been brought from Persia to Diu, on the opposite coast of the Gulf of Cambay, in AD 700. Sanjan, in the extreme south of the state, is the small port where the Parsis first landed. A pillar marks the spot.

DAMAN

The ex-Portuguese enclave of Daman is like Diu's feral cousin – a wild-eyed resort town on a grey, soupy sea that ain't no tropical paradise. There is the piquancy of old Portugal here though, in the fine forts and churches (the evening services are spiritually charming), and a booze-soaked whimsy (to be sure, to be sure) that attracts exiles from Mumbai and feni-filled Gujarati thrill-seekers swaying harder than the palms on nearby Devka Beach.

Along with Diu and Goa, Daman was taken in 1961 from the Portuguese, who had seized in 1531. The Portuguese had been officially ceded the region by Bahadur Shah, the last major Gujarati sultan, in 1559. For a time Daman and Diu were governed from Goa but both now constitute the Union Territory of Daman and Diu, overseen by Delhi.

You are forbidden to take alcohol out of Daman unless you have a permit; there are police checks as you leave.

Sights & Activities

NANI DAMAN

You can walk around Nani Daman's Fort of St Jerome ramparts, with views over the colourful fishing fleet – the nearby bridge often tumbles in monsoon season. The fort has a magnificent giant gateway facing the river to impress incoming traffic. The 1901 Church of Our Lady of the Sea inside the walls is worth a look.

To the north is a Jain temple with 18th-century murals depicting the life of Mahavira, who lived around 500 BC.

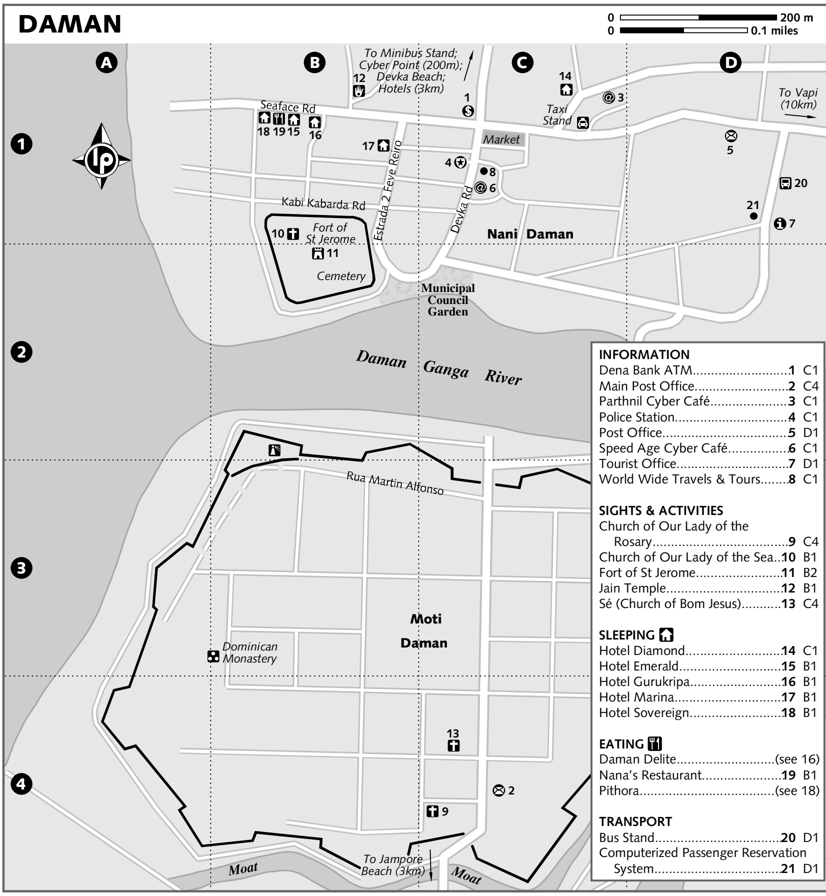
MOTI DAMAN

Moti Daman's fort dates from 1559. The walls, divided by 10 bastions, encircle 30 sq km of land. Inside are sleepy, leafy streets reminiscent of the Portuguese era, and there are relaxing views across the river to Nani Daman from the ramparts near the lighthouse. Moti Daman once housed the Portuguese gentry, and near the fort gate is the sometime home of 18th-century Portuguese poet Bocage.

Sé (Portuguese for 'cathedral'), or Church of Bom Jesus, built in 1603, is a piece of Iberia in India, with elaborate woodcarving.

The Church of Our Lady of the Rosary, across the overgrown square, has ancient Portuguese tombstones set into its cool, damp floor. Light filters through the dusty windows, illuminating the altar, a masterpiece of furiously detailed, gold-painted woodcarving. If it's closed, try the Sé for the key.

BEACHES



About 3km north of Nani Daman are the grubby, rocky shores of Devka Beach – not an appealing prospect. But the ambience of the place is easy-going; bars and hotels dot the quiet beachside road. The palm-shaded beach at Jampore, about 3km south of Moti Daman, is better, but still no good for swimming. An autorickshaw from town will cost Rs 30 to Devka and Rs 40 to Jampore.

Sleeping & Eating

Daman gets packed during holiday periods (particularly Diwali), when it's advisable to book ahead.

In February, Daman is noted for papri, boiled and salted sweet peas served wrapped in newspaper. Crab and lobster are in season in October. Tari palm wine is a popular drink sold in earthenware pots.

A Kingfisher beer costs only Rs 35 at local bars, but hotels charge Rs 45 or more. Or you may fancy a drop of mellow port (Rs 35 per glass).

TOWN AREA

Hotel Diamond (☎ 2255135; s/d Rs 250/400, with AC Rs 550/750; ❄) This is a friendly choice, with musty but decent rooms, very near the taxi stand.

Hotel Marina (☎ 2254420; Estrada 2 Feve Reiro; s/d Rs 495/595, deluxe Rs 595/685) By far the pick of Daman, this converted Portuguese-style house has delightful upstairs rooms opening onto a thatched mezzanine. Rates are excellent value, and the restaurant does a few mean seafood dishes.

Hotel Sovereign (☎ 2250236; Seaface Rd; s/d Rs 725/875; ❄) Near Hotel Gurukripa, this has reasonable, smartish rooms.

Hotel Gurukripa (☎ 2255046; www.hotelgurukripa.com; Seaface Rd; s/d Rs 825/950; ❄) This option has good rooms with satin-quilted bed covers lending a touch of the boudoir. They also run yoga classes.

Hotel Emerald (Seaface Rd; s/d Rs 900/1100; ❄) A sparkling new, bright red premises better suited to manic Mumbai than lazy Daman. Rooms are ultra chic, and staff are amiable. The lounge bar is a class act. You could call ahead, but they don't have a phone.

Pithora (Hotel Sovereign, Seaface Rd; limited/unlimited thali Rs 60/90; 🕑 6am-3.30pm & 7-11pm; ❄) Serves up tasty thalis in AC comfort or at an attractive rooftop restaurant with a sloping bamboo ceiling.

Nana's Restaurant (Seaface Rd; dishes Rs 45-120) A polished new nosh spot well on the tourist beat, with spicy meat dishes and powerful AC.

Daman Delite (Hotel Gurukripa, Seaface Rd; dishes Rs 40-200) Daman's best restaurant, a small place with stars on the ceiling and white tablecloths, popular with groups of men on their Daman break and the occasional family (however, even women alone will feel fine).

BEACH AREA

There are lots of decent midrange places at Devka Beach, stretching for 1.5km along the main road. All have a restaurant.

Sandy Resort (☎/fax 2254644; www.sandyresort.com; r Rs 650-950;) This is a friendly place with comfortable rooms ranging from rundown standard to bright and breezy deluxe options with balconies.

Hotel Shilton (☎ 2254558; r from Rs 600, with AC Rs 700-850;) Nearest to Daman, this offers a range of rundown rooms with small balconies; it'll drop prices like a shot.

Hotel Miramar (☎ 2250671; www.miramarmirasol.com; r with AC from Rs 1200, 6-person cottages Rs 2400;) This place is on the beach, 4km from Nani Daman. Rooms feel tired but the better ones have shady balconies.

Kalyan (Hotel Miramar; dishes Rs 40-400; 8am-midnight) This is a good open-air restaurant, in a fantastic setting jutting above the beach.

Getting There & Away

Vapi (3½ hours from Vadodara), on the main railway line, is about 10km from Daman. You can reserve tickets at the Computerized Passenger Reservation System (☎ 2254254; 8am-4pm), opposite the tourist office.

Plenty of share-taxis (Rs 15 per person, 20 minutes) wait outside the train station and leave frequently for Daman. It costs Rs 70 by autorickshaw, but most aren't permitted to enter Daman district. There are also some ramshackle buses (Rs 5).

SAURASHTRA

Saurashtra, also known as the Kathiawar peninsula, is the poster child for Gujarati diversity. Never part of British India, it consisted of 200 separate princely states until Independence during which time the laid-back landowners had amassed considerable feudal wealth. Head to toe in white, with turbans, pleated jackets and jodhpurs, and huge, golden stud earrings, these men are marvels of modern India, while the rural women are as colourful as those of Rajasthan and wear embroidered backless cholis and heavy jewellery. City folk, meanwhile, continue to be hard-at-it and industrious.

Saurashtra has a reputation for being fond of its sleep, and siesta takes place from at least 1pm to 3pm. Traffic moves slower than the flowery fields grow, and the sea breeze is never far away.

The peninsula took its name from the Kathi tribespeople who used to roam the area at night stealing whatever was not locked into the many kots (forts). It consists of a central plateau – with some fabulously remote terrain – sloping down towards secluded coastal plains, with dense forests on its other side.

BHAVNAGAR

☎ 0278 / pop 510,958

Bhavnagar is a busy industrial centre that makes a useful base for journeys to nearby Shatrunjaya and Velavadar National Park. Founded in 1743, Bhavnagar has long been an important cotton trading post, but now supplements its survival on diamonds, plastics and ship parts – Bhavnagar lock gate keeps ships afloat in the port at low tide. The tangled bazaars and crumbling wooden houses of the old city feel remarkably untouched by the outside world, but otherwise there's little to see, and tourists are treated with a warm second glance.

Gandhi attended university here – a small museum displays photos of his life.

Orientation & Information

Bhavnagar is a sprawling city with distinctly separate old and new sections. The STC bus stand is in the new part of town and the train station is at the far end of the old city, around 2.5km away. There's an HDFC ATM near the museum.

Post office (10am-8pm Mon-Fri, to 3pm Sat)

State Bank of India (☎ 2439746; 10.30am-2.30pm & 3-7pm Mon-Fri, 10.30am-4pm Sat) In the old city; changes cash and travellers cheques.

Yayoo Cyber Café (188 Madhav Darshan, Waghawadi Rd; per hr Rs 20; 9am-midnight)

Sights & Activities

Takhteshwar Temple sits on a small hillock high enough to provide splendid views over the city and out into the Gulf of Cambay.

Northeast, by the clock tower, the interesting, dusty Barton/Gandhi Smriti Museum (admission Rs 3; 9am-6pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd & 4th Sat of month), has religious carvings, betel-nut cutters, a skeleton in a cupboard and more Gandhi photographs than you could think existed.

Near the State Bank of India is the oldest part of the city, worth a wander, busy with small shops and cluttered with dilapidated elaborate wooden buildings.

Sleeping

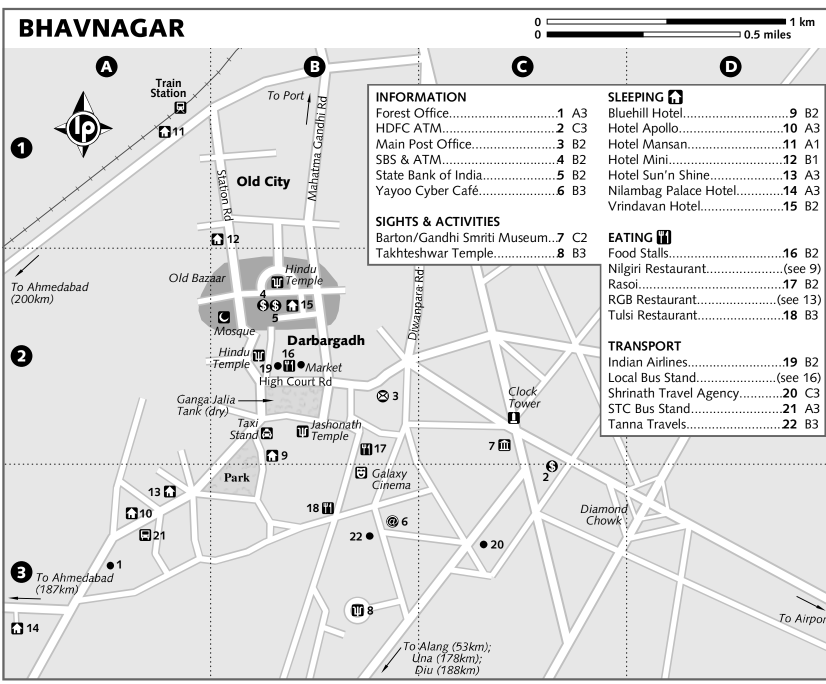
The cheap hotel scene – mostly found in the old city – is fairly grim, but the midrange hotels are reasonable value.

BUDGET

Hotel Mini (2512915; Station Rd; s/d Rs 150/275) Close to the train station, this place is cleanish and quiet, with decent-sized rooms – doubles are much better than singles. Checkout is 24 hours. It's the best choice but only because the competition is so shoddy.

Vrindavan Hotel (2518928; Darbargadh; d/tr Rs 200/300;) This looks promising – a huge, old, rambling place around a courtyard, with rooms of various shapes and sizes but they are not that clean.

MIDRANGE & TOP END



Hotel Apollo (2515655; s/d Rs 500/700, with AC Rs 700/900;) Apollo, opposite the STC bus stand, has drab but spacious cheaper rooms with balconies, and smart but musty AC ones. Bathrooms are notably clean. There are money-changing facilities (lowish rates).

Hotel Mausan (2512565; Station Rd; r Rs 700-1200;) Near the train station, this place is well turned-out, with comfy beds, modern facilities and helpful staff.

Bluehill Hotel (2426951; bluehillad1@sancharnet.in; s/d from Rs 1000/1100;) Down a quiet parkside road, this is a good choice with airy, light, bright rooms overlooking storks nesting in tree-tops. There are two restaurants.

Hotel Sun'n Shine (2516131; s/d from Rs 1100/1400;) This well-run hotel has a luxuriant lobby with fresh, clean rooms. The more you pay, the more windows you get. There are two restaurants.

Nilambag Palace Hotel (2424241; s/d Rs 2000/3800;) On the Ahmedabad road is a former maharaja's palace, a stern place (built 1859), with stately rooms with dark, solid wooden furniture, but an impersonal feel. There's a circular swimming pool (Rs 100 nonguests) and an appealing garden restaurant.

Eating

Food stalls line the northern side of Ganga Jalia Tank.

Tulsi Restaurant (Kalanala Chowk; veg dishes Rs 35-60; noon-3.30pm & 7-11pm) Low-lit with plants and understated décor, this is small, popular and has a short but good menu.

Rasoi (dishes Rs 35-150, unlimited thali Rs 80; 11am-3pm & 7-11pm) This recently overhauled bungalow restaurant is Bhavnagar's best. Inside you'll find great thalis, while the spot-lit lawn is reserved for Punjabi and Chinese fare – with a few twists. It's located off the main road.

Nilgiri Restaurant (Bluehill Hotel; dishes Rs 40-80; 11am-3pm & 7-11pm) Nice and bright, with big plate-glass windows, this has reliable Indian and Chinese vegetarian dishes.

RGB Restaurant (Hotel Sun'n Shine; veg dishes Rs 45-105; 7-11pm) This restaurant offers pure veg Jain, North Indian and Chinese dishes in smart plaid surroundings, with interesting daily specials.

Getting There & Away

AIR

The Indian Airlines office (☎ 2426503) is north of the Ganga Jalia Tank, off High Court Rd; there are regular Mumbai flights (US$85).

An autorickshaw to/from the airport costs Rs 150. A bus (Rs 5) leaves from behind the Indian Airlines office.

BUS

State transport buses connect Bhavnagar with Ahmedabad and other regional centres. There are regular departures for Una (for Diu; Rs 95, six hours), Palitana (Rs 25, 1½ hours, hourly) and Ahmedabad (Rs 90, four hours, every two hours).

Private bus companies include Tanna Travels (☎ 2425218; Waghawadi Rd) and Shrinath Travel Agency (☎ 2427755), on the road to Palitana, with buses to Ahmedabad (with/without AC Rs 120/100, four hours) and Vadodara (Rs 110/130, five hours).

TRAIN

There are at least three trains to Ahmedabad daily, including the Bhavnagar Express departing at 8.15pm (sleeper/3AC Rs 174/433, 5¼ hours, 268km).

AROUND BHAVNAGAR

Alang

On the coast between Bhavnagar and Talaja is Alang, India's largest ship-breaking site, where supertankers, container ships, warships and other vessels are dismantled – by hand – by 20,000 workers day and night. A huge ship takes around two to three months to pull apart.

It's an epic, Dickensian scene, but tricky to see as a tourist. In 2002 Greenpeace visited the yard posing as buyers, gathering material and photographs to support its protests against the dangerous conditions for workers at the yard and the toxic waste produced through ship breaking. Their actions have had some success; in February 2006, French President Jacques Chirac was forced to recall an asbestos-laden French ship to Europe. You can keep up to date with the controversy at www.greenpeace.org. These protests have made it more difficult for foreign tourists to visit the yard, but authorities can be lax. You may find you can wander unobtrusively onto the beach after asking a gatekeeper – it all depends on luck. A few kilometres along the road approaching the shipyard is a fascinatingly curious collection of junk shops selling things pulled off the ships – this is where to come if you want to buy a 1970s 20-seater sofa, a mirrored bar or a few hundred portholes.

For official permission, contact the Gujarat Port Trust (☎ 079-23238346) in Ahmedabad. You'll have to send a fax stating the date of the proposed visit, the reason and your passport number, and pay a fee.

Velavadar National Park

This beautiful, off-the-beaten-track, 34-sq-km park (Indian/foreigner Rs 10/250, car Rs 20/250, 4hr guide Rs 30/250, camera Rs 5/250, video Rs 200/2500; 7.30am-6pm 15 Oct-15 Jun), 65km north of Bhavnagar, encompasses large areas of pale, custard-coloured grassland stretching between two seasonal rivers.

It's famous for its blackbucks, beautiful, fast creatures, with around 3500 in and around the park, which sport elegant spiralling horns – as long as 65cm in mature males. It's also good for spotting birds such as wintering harriers, and the strange nilgai, which look half-horse, half-cow. You can explore by car or by walking. Local guides don't tend to speak English.

You can book accommodation at the Tourist Lodge (d Rs 300), which has four rooms at the sanctuary, through the Forest Office (☎ 0278-2426425; 1st fl/10 Annexe Bldg, Bahamali Bhan; ⏲ 11am-6pm Mon-Fri) near the STC bus stand in Bhavnagar.

A taxi from Bhavnagar costs about Rs 800 return. However, there are also buses (Rs 24) that run here.

PALITANA

☎ 02848 / pop 51,934

The hustling, bustling town of Palitana, 51km southwest of Bhavnagar, has grown up to serve the pilgrim trade around Shatrunjaya.

Sights

SHATRUNJAYA

One of Jainism's holiest pilgrimage sites, Shatrunjaya (Place of Victory; camera Rs 40; ⏲ temples 6.30am-7.45pm) is an incredible hilltop sea of 863 temples, built over 900 years on a plateau dedicated to the gods.

Jains believe that merit is derived from constructing temples – so this hill must have garnered a truckload. The hilltops are bounded by sturdy walls and the temples are grouped into nine tunks (enclosures) – each with a central temple and many minor ones. Some of the earliest were built in the 11th century, but were destroyed by Muslims in the 14th and 15th centuries; the current temples date from the 16th century onwards.

The 600m climb from the base of the hill to the summit is 2.5km, up 3200 steps, and will take about 1½ hours. It's best to start around dawn so you can climb before it gets too hot (or walk up for sunset). You can be carried up the hill in a dholi (portable chair with two bearers), which costs from Rs 200.

You should be properly dressed (no shorts etc). Leave behind leather items, including belts and bags, and don't take any eatables, drinks or mineral water inside the temple. Photo permits must be obtained from the main office before you commence the ascent.

As you near the top of the hill, the road forks. The main entrance, Ram Pol, is reached by taking the left-hand fork. To see the best views over the site first, take the right-hand fork.

There are superb views in all directions; on a clear day you can see the Gulf of Cambay. Approaching from the right, you reach one of the finest temples first, dedicated to Shri Adishwara, one of the most important Jain tirthankars. Note the frieze of dragons. Adjacent is the Muslim shrine of Angar Pir, where women who want children make offerings of miniature cradles. The Muslim saint protected the temples from a Mughal attack.

Built in 1618 by a wealthy Jain merchant, the Chaumukh (Four-Faced Shrine) has images of Adinath facing out in the four cardinal directions. Other important temples are Kumar Pal, Sampriti Raj and Vimal Shah, named after their wealthy Jain patrons.

An autorickshaw from the bus station to the hill costs Rs 20, or you can walk in about 30 minutes. Water (not bottled) can be bought at intervals, and you can buy refreshing curd in pottery bowls outside the temple compound (Rs 5).

Sleeping & Eating

Palitana has scores of dharamsalas (pilgrim's guesthouses), but for Jains only.

Hotel Shravak (☎ 252428; men-only dm Rs 60, s/d with shared bathroom Rs 100/200, d/tr/q with private bathroom Rs 300/400/500) Opposite the bus stand is this friendly place with basic rooms. Doubles are better than singles for cleanliness and are also spacious; however, décor is a depressing dark brown. Check-out is 24 hours (9.30am for the dorm).

Hotel Sumeru (☎ 252327; D/59 Dr Naleshwar Mahadu; dm Rs 75, s/d Rs 200/300, with AC Rs 400/600; ❄) Run by Gujarat Tourism, this charismatic, heavily-staffed place is 200m towards the station from the bus stand. Rooms are rundown and not that clean but those upstairs have balconies, and there's a certain dilapidated charm. Prices almost halve from mid-June to mid-September. Check-out is 9am.

Vijay Vilas Palitana (book through North West Safaris in Ahmedabad ☎ 079-26302019; ssibal@ad1.vsnl.net.in; s/d incl meals Rs 1800/3600) This lovely, small 1906 palace has six plain but nicely decorated rooms, with original furniture. It's family-run, with great attention to detail and delicious home-cooked food.

Jagruti Restaurant (limited thali Rs 25, snacks Rs 12; ⏲ 10am-10pm) Across the alley from Hotel Shravak, Jagruti is a wildly busy snack place offering puris (flat dough that puffs up when fried), sabzi (curried vegetables), puri baji (puri with vegetables), curd, roasted peppers and ganthia (varieties of fried dough).

Sohali Dining Hall (limited/unlimited thali Rs 30/40; ⏲ noon-4pm & 7-11pm) On the right after the bridge, Sohali is a grubby-looking back room, but recommended for tasty thalis. The sign is in Gujarati, so you'll have to ask locals to find it.

Getting There & Away

STC buses go to/from Bhavnagar (Rs 17, 1½ hours, hourly) and regularly to/from Ahmedabad (Rs 85, five hours).

Regular buses go to Talaja (Rs 15, one hour), where you can nab a bus to Una or Diu (six hours); it's a trip from hell, along bumpy roads in dilapidated old rattletraps. There's a daily bus at 5am to Una (Rs 65).

At the time of research, the train from Bhavnagar was undergoing conversion to broad gauge.

DIU

☎ 02875 / pop 21,576

What is Diu? For better or worse, this tiny ex-Portuguese island is the reason most travellers come to Gujarat. And while it might not quite be the tropical paradise they imagined, it has a quirky charm that will tame you from asking too many questions.

Diu also has fine beaches, whitewashed churches, an imposing fort, colourful Lisboa streets, a gorgeous climate, lush seafood and giggly Gujarati weekenders who flock for the cheap booze and sunshine. Plus it's the safest place to ride a scooter in all of India, with minimum traffic and excellent roads.

Like Daman and Goa, Diu was a Portuguese colony until taken over by India in 1961. With Daman, it is still governed from Delhi as a Union Territory. It includes Diu island, about 11km by 3km, separated from the coast by a narrow channel, and two tiny mainland enclaves. One of these, housing the village of Ghoghla, is the entry point to Diu from Una.

The northern side of the island, facing Gujarat, is tidal marsh and salt pans, while the southern coast alternates between limestone cliffs, rocky coves and sandy beaches.

The island's main industries are fishing, tourism, booze and salt. Kalpana Distillery at Malala produces rum from sugar cane.

History

Between the 14th and 16th centuries Diu was an important trading post and naval base from which the Ottomans controlled the northern Arabian Sea shipping routes.

Portugal made an unsuccessful attempt to capture the island in 1531, during which Bahadur Shah, Sultan of Gujarat, was assisted by the Turkish navy. The Portuguese finally secured control in 1535 by taking advantage of a quarrel between the sultan and the Mughal emperor, Humayun.

Under pressure from the Portuguese and the Mughals, Bahadur signed a peace treaty with the Portuguese, giving them control over Diu Port. The treaty was soon ignored and, although both Bahadur Shah and his successor, Sultan Mahmud III, attempted to contest the issue, the peace treaty that was eventually signed in 1539 ceded the island of Diu and the mainland enclave of Ghoghla to Portugal.

Seven Rajput soldiers and a few civilians were killed in Operation Vijay, which ended Portuguese rule in 1961. After the Indian Air Force unnecessarily bombed the airstrip and terminal near Nagoa, it remained derelict until the late 1980s.

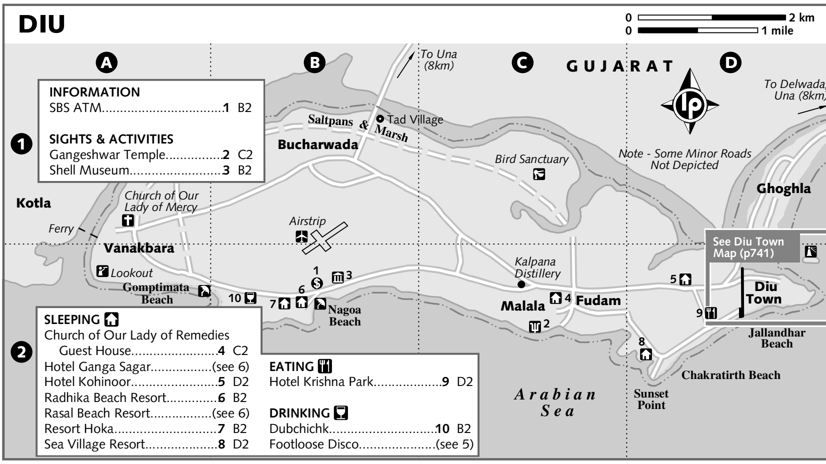
Orientation & Information

The unhelpful tourist office (Map p741; ☎ 252653; www.diuindia.com; Bunder Rd; 9am-1.30pm & 2.30-6pm Mon-Sat) is on Diu Town's main road, parallel to the waterfront. It has simple maps (Rs 10).

You can change money at the State Bank of Saurashtra (Map p741; ☎ 252492; Main Bazaar; 10am-4pm Mon-Fri, to 1pm Sat), near the town square, but at lower rates than on the mainland. Many shops around town also change money. There are SBS ATMs near Nagoa Beach and on Fort Rd.

The post office (Map p741; ☎ 252122) overlooks the town square. The best internet café is A to Z (Map p741; Vaniya St; per hr Rs 40; 9am-11pm), near Pancharti Rd. Uma Cyber Café (Map p741; Uma Shakti Hotel; per hr Rs 30; 9.15am-2pm & 4-11pm) and Dee Pee Telecom (Map p741; Gandhi Bhavan; per hr Rs 40; 8am-11pm) are also pretty good.

Dangers & Annoyances



Much more an annoyance than a danger, drunk male tourists can be tiresome, particularly towards single or pairs of women, and particularly around Nagoa Beach.

Sights & Activities

DIU TOWN

Diu Town was the first landing point for the Parsis when they fled from Persia, although they stayed for only three years.

The town is sandwiched between the massive fort to the east and a huge city wall to the west. The main Zampa Gateway (Map p741) has carvings of lions, angels and a priest, while just inside the gate is a chapel with an icon dating from 1702.

Cavernous St Paul's Church (Map p741; 8am-6pm) is a wedding cake of a church, founded by Jesuits in 1600 and then rebuilt in 1807. Inside, it's a great barn, filled with heavy dark wood, with a small cloister next door, above which is a school. Daily mass is heard here. Nearby is white-walled St Thomas' Church, a lovely, simple building housing the Diu Museum (Map p741; admission by donation; 8am-9pm) downstairs. There's a spooky, evocative collection of worn Catholic statues. Once a year, on 1 November, this is used for a packed-out mass. There are also some remnants of a Jain temple. There's a guesthouse upstairs and you can ask George, the manager, to let you climb up onto the roof for amazing views. The Church of St Francis of Assisi (Map p741) has been converted into a hospital, but is also sometimes used for services. The Portuguese-descended population mostly live in this area, still called the 'foreigner's quarter'.

Unlike Daman, many Diu buildings show a lingering Portuguese influence. The town is a maze of narrow, winding streets and many houses are brightly painted, with the most impressive buildings on Panchwati, including decadent Nagar Sheth Haveli (Map p741), laden with curly stucco, fruit and animal carvings.

Built in 1535, with additions made in 1541, the massive, well-preserved Portuguese fort (Map p741; admission free; 8am-6pm) with its double moat (one tidal) must once have been impregnable, but sea erosion and neglect are leading to a slow collapse. Cannonballs litter the place and the ramparts have a superb array of cannons, many in good condition. The lighthouse is Diu's highest point, with a beam that reaches 32km. There are several small chapels, one holding engraved tombstone fragments. Part of the fort also serves as the island's jail.

The former jail is Fortim-do-Mar (Pani Kotha), the boat-shaped vacant white building that seems to float in the bay. You can take boat trips out around the harbour, which stop at Pani Kotha, when it's calm enough (which is seldom; Rs 25 return to Pani Kotha).

Outside the city wall are the Naida Caves (Map p741), an intriguing, overgrown network of square-hewn hollows and steps leading off into nowhere. This is where the Portuguese hacked out their building materials.

Diu-by-Night is an evening ferry cruise (Rs 110 incl drink; Oct-Mar) that departs from the jetty at 7.30pm nightly. It heads to Pani Kotha and Nagoa Beach, and returns around 9pm. Music and snacks are provided.

AROUND THE ISLAND

Nagoa Beach is a long, palm-fringed beach that's safe for swimming but busy, and often with drunk men: foreign women receive a lot of unwanted attention. Gomptimata, to the west, is a long, empty, sandy beach that gets big waves – you need to be a strong swimmer here. Beaches within easy reach of Diu Town include Jallandhar, Chakratirth and the stunning Sunset Point, the most popular with foreign tourists, a small, gentle curve that's good for swimming and pretty hassle free.

The Shell Museum (Map p740; admission Rs 10; ⌚ 9am-6pm) is a labour of love – Captain Devjibhai Vira Fulbaria, a merchant navy captain, has collected shells for almost 50 years. The amazing shells range from silver abalone to folding shells.

Close to Diu Town, Fudam has a simple church, Our Lady of Remedies, that is now a guesthouse. A large, old carved wooden altar remains inside.

At the extreme west, Vanakbara is a fascinating little fishing village. It's great to wander around the port, packed with colourful fishing boats and bustling activity – best at 9am when the fishing fleet returns and sells off its catch. Tourists are something of an oddity here so the villagers are welcoming and intrigued.

Sleeping

Most hotels offer a discount of as much as 60% when things are quiet.

BUDGET

The following options are all located on the map below.

Hotel São Tomé Retiro (☎ 253137; georgedesouza84@hotmail.com; smaller r Rs 200-300, larger r Rs 400-500, rooftop Rs 100) A gorgeous guesthouse housed in lovely old St Thomas' Church, this is definitely the place to stay for the shoes-off, gone fishin' Diu experience. Your cruisy host, George D'Souza, will either bemuse or becalm you, but either way he's a gentle soul, and his barbeque parties (see p742) are a treat. Rooms range from small structures on the roof to beautiful, breezy abodes – and they all come at a fairly cheap price. You can sleep on the roof when it's full (which is often), and negotiate longer stays. The 360° views from the church spire are unrivalled on the island.

Super Silver Guest House (☎ 255011; Super Silver Marketing Complex; s/d/tr from Rs 200/300/500) A block south of the vegetable market, Super Silver is just super, with spic-and-span rooms and helpful owners, but without the communal vibe the island seems to foster.

Herança Goesa (☎ 253851; 205/3 Behind Diu Museum; d Rs 350) This family house, off Hospital Rd, has just one nice double for rent. Plus they cook up a storm (see p742).

Around the Island

Jay Shankar Guest House (Map p741; ☎ 252424; near Jalandhar Beach; d Rs 100-250, with AC Rs 450;) Here, the cheapest rooms are not that clean, but pay Rs 250 and you'll get a simple, good-value double with balcony. Some have sea views. It has a good restaurant.

Sea Village Resort (Map p740; ☎ 254345; Chakratirth Beach; d Rs 250-350) This low-budget resort has the prime location at Sunset Point, with a steady stream of guests sipping beers in wicker chairs overlooking a pretty bay. Detached rooms are airless and grubby, though – and stinking hot in summer. Get past that and you'll love it.

Church of Our Lady of Remedies Guest House (Map p740; ☎ 255010; d with shared bathroom Rs 250, with private bathroom Rs 350) In quiet Fudam village, this average guesthouse hangs out upstairs in an empty church, but is handy for long-stayers (there's a self-catering kitchen) who have tired of their fellow man.

MIDRANGE

Diu Town

The following options are all located on Map p741.

Apana Hotel (☎ 253650; Fort Rd; r Rs 750-1500;) On the seafront, Apana is friendly and has white-tiled rooms with balconies and breezy sea views. There's a great garden restaurant (see opposite).

Hotel Alishan (☎ 252340; Fort Rd; d Rs 700-1500;) Alishan has decent, bright rooms – with lots of bed-tilted mirrors – cheaper rooms are scrubby and at the back. Again, there's a good restaurant.

Hotel Samrat (☎ 252354; s/d Rs 800/1000, Rs 1500/2000;) A couple of blocks south of the town square, Hotel Samrat is the town's best upper-range choice, with pleasant, large, very comfortable doubles with street-facing balconies. Credit cards are accepted. There's an excellent restaurant and bar.

Uma Shakti Hotel (☎ 252150; d Rs 800;) Next door to Super Silver, and near the vegetable market, this has decent, small, overpriced doubles. Yep, you guessed it, there's a lovely rooftop restaurant.

Sim Shree Sanmaan Palace (☎ 253031; d Rs 1600;) This is an old Portuguese villa, between the town square and fort. New management has sacrificed the old charm, though the location is still superb. There's a pleasant rooftop restaurant – perfect for a beer.

Around the Island

The following options are all located on Map p740.

Hotel Ganga Sagar (☎ 252249; Nagoa Beach; d/t Rs 600/800) A once classic beachfront hotel, now more salty sea shack with a well-stocked bar and clammy clientele. The seafood is delicious though, and the shabby triple rooms are the best darn value from here to the mainland.

Rasal Beach Resort (☎ 255402; d Rs 1750) The latest addition to the Nagoa Beach scene has overpriced but fresh, stream-lined rooms – some unfortunately overlooking a landing strip. The restaurant is worth a visit.

Resort Hoka (☎ 253036; resorthoka@travelindia.com; Nagoa Beach; r Rs 1150;) Hoka is a great place to stay, with atmospheric rooms in a small, palm-shaded complex. Some have terraces over the palm trees. The food here is excellent.

Hotel Kohinoor (☎ 252209; r with AC Rs 1550-1850, ste Rs 2950;) On the road to Fudam is this comfortable option. Its well-equipped rooms have balconies and are grouped in villas around a pool. There's a good restaurant and the Footloose disco.

Radhika Beach Resort (☎ 252553; www.radhikaresort.com; Nagoa Beach; s/d Rs 1750/2150;) An immaculate, smart, modern place – Diu's most upmarket – set in grassy grounds; rooms are spacious with balconies. There's an appealing pool and good restaurant.

Eating

Beer and drinks are blissfully cheap – around Rs 35 for a large Kingfisher. Port (nice with ice) costs around Rs 120 per bottle. Fresh fish is good here, and best of all are the traditional Portuguese-style meals on offer at a couple of places.

RESTAURANTS

Hotel São Tomé Retiro (Map p741; ☎ 253137; all-you-can-eat BBQ Rs 100) From around September to April, hospitable George and family hold BBQ parties every other evening. The food offered is fantastic – fresh fish and delicious salads, beer's available and it's an atmospheric place to sit around a blazing campfire and meet other travellers.

Herança Goesa (Map p741; ☎ 253851; 205/3 Behind Diu Museum, off Hospital Rd; breakfast Rs 20-30, dinner Rs 20-100) Here you eat in the friendly Indo-Portuguese family's front room. For breakfast you can wander in till noon, and the cold coffee is good. For dinner you'll have to book, and it's deservedly popular, with dishes such as delicious baked prawns with piripiri sauce.

Hotel Krishna Park (Map p740; Nagoa Beach Rd; dishes Rs 30-80; 7.30am-11pm) A two-level restaurant, this is scenically set next to a small, landscaped lake, in a peaceful setting. In season there are pedaloes on the lake (Rs 20 for 30 minutes).

Apana's Garden Restaurant (Map p741; Apana Hotel; dishes Rs 20-110; 7am-5pm & 7-11pm) This has a great outdoor, waterfront garden setting overlooking the sea. It does everything from breakfasts and South Indian to Punjabi, Chinese and fish dishes. The fruit salad is delicious.

Resort Hoka (Map p740; ☎ 253036; resorthoka@travelindia.com; Nagoa Beach; dishes Rs 15-225) This has notably good food, with inviting choices such as a fresh tuna sandwich or prawn-and-tomato curry. It's relaxed, pleasant and palm-shaded.

There are two fish markets (Map p741), one opposite Jethibai bus stand, and a night market, lit by flame torches, in Ghoghla. The fresh fish and seafood are delicious; most guesthouses and hotels will cook anything you buy.

QUICK EATS

Shri Ram Vijay (Map p741; ice creams Rs 10-20) A small, old-fashioned ice cream parlour, this has tables and benches, and delicious handmade ice cream – our top tips are fig and almond, and mango.

Night Heron Restaurant (Map p741; Jetty, Bunder Chowk; mains Rs 15-95) This friendly open-air café, a small wooden-slatted building with outside tables, right on the water's edge, is ideal for an ice cream or a beer.

Drinking

Apart from the restaurants (most of which double as bars), there are some good places for a tipple.

Casa Luxo Bar (Map p741; 9am-2pm & 4-10pm Tue-Sun) Open since 1963, it looks like the décor hasn't changed since, with lots of dusty bottles. A Kingfisher costs only Rs 27.

Dubchichk (Map p740; Nagoa beach; dishes Rs 20-110; 11am-3.45pm & 6.30-10pm) This has a great vantage point for overlooking drunken antics on the beach from a safe distance.

Footloose Disco (Map p740; Hotel Kohinoor; Sat & Sun) This pint-sized disco can be fun, with booming cheesy pop and some eclectic movers on the floor.

Cafe Bela Vista (Map p741), near St Thomas' Church, is little more than a couple of tables, but is a scenic setting for a beer.

Getting There & Away

AIR

Jet Airways (☎ 252365; airport) flies to Mumbai (US$117, 12.15pm Sunday to Friday). The agent is Oceanic Travels (Map p741; ☎ 252180; Gandhi Bhavan; 9am-1pm & 3-7pm), near the post office.

BUS

STC departures from Jethibai bus stand are usually inconvenient. There are buses to Veraval (Rs 35, three hours, four daily), Rajkot (Rs 90, five hours, four daily), Jamnagar (Rs 100, seven hours, two daily) and Bhavnagar (Rs 75, five hours). More civilised and frequent departure times exist from Una, about 10km away (Rs 10, 40 minutes, every 30 minutes from 5.30am to 10pm).

Buses depart from Una bus stand for Diu (from 6.30am to 8.15pm). Outside these hours, walk 1km to Tower Chowk in Una, from where shared autorickshaws go to Ghoghla or Diu for about the same fare. An autorickshaw costs Rs 100.

Private buses go from Diu to Mumbai at 10am (Rs 450 sleeper, 22 to 24 hours) and to Ahmedabad (Rs 170, Rs 220 sleeper, 10½ hours). Book in advance at A to Z (Map p741; Vaniya St; 9am-11pm).

TRAIN

Delwada, between Una and Ghoghla, and only about 8km from Diu, is the nearest railhead. A shared autorickshaw from there to Ghoghla costs about Rs 10. There's a direct train (313/314) at 8.10am from Delwada to Veraval (2nd class Rs 18, 3½ hours), which stops at Gir at 9.50am (Rs 12, 1¾ hours).

Getting Around

Travelling by autorickshaw anywhere in Diu Town should cost no more than Rs 20. To Nagoa beach pay Rs 40 and to Sunset Point, Rs 25. Shared autorickshaws to Ghoghla cost Rs 10 per person. Note that rickshaw-wallahs in Una are unable to proceed further than the bus station (Rs 75), so cannot take you all the way to Nagoa Beach (an additional Rs 50).

Mopeds are a perfect option for exploring the island – the roads are deserted and in good condition. The going rate per day is Rs 100 for a moped (plus fuel). Motorcycles and scooters cost Rs 150 to 200. Most hotels arrange mopeds, although quality varies. Try Kismat (☎ 252971; 9am-7pm Mon-Sat, to 1pm Sun), which also rents bicycles (Rs 15 per day), or friendly Auto Servicing Works (☎ 252824; Raberi Rd; 9am-10pm), opposite the petrol pump. A Rs 200 to 1000 deposit is usually required.

Local buses from Diu Town to Nagoa and Vanakbara leave from the Jethibai bus stand at 7am, 11am and 4pm. From Nagoa, they depart for Diu Town from near the police post at 1pm, 5.30pm and 7pm (Rs 5).

VERAVAL

Veraval is cluttered and chaotic, and smells strongly of fish – not surprising given that it's one of India's major fishing ports (nearly 4000 boats work from here) and its busy harbour is full of bustle and boat building. On the south coast of Saurashtra, Veraval was the major seaport for Mecca pilgrims before the rise of Surat. In the west of town is the eerie Old Nawab's Palace (closed to public). The main reason to come here is to visit the Temple of Somnath, 6km to the east.

JP Travels International (☎ 220110) changes travellers cheques and cash. The State Bank of Saurashtra (☎ 221266) will also change these on occasion. Magnet Cyber Café (Chandra-Mauli Complex; per hr Rs 25; 9.30am-midnight), in the same building as Hotel Ustav, allows you to slowly surf the internet. There's an HFDC ATM near the municipal gardens.

Sleeping

Hotel standards have fallen away here in recent years, probably due to the newly built hotels in Somnath.

Hotel Satkar (☎ 240006; dm Rs 100, s/d from Rs 150/250, better d/tr Rs 400/600;) Around the corner from Chetna Rest House, the cheapest rooms here are dingy but the best are nice, plain and freshly painted, with glass-covered balconies.

Toran Tourist Bungalow (☎ 246588; s/d Rs 300/400, with AC Rs 400/600;) Near the lighthouse, this is inconvenient, but quiet and well maintained. Deluxe rooms have balconies complete with swing chair, and sunset and ocean views. Check-out is 9am. The restaurant serves good Gujarati and Punjabi food (thalis Rs 45).

Hotel Utsav (☎ 222306; 3rd fl, Chandramauli Complex, ST Rd; d with private bathroom Rs 300, with AC Rs 600;) This hotel, opposite the local bus stand, has quite clean doubles with views over the dusty town; staff are eager to please.

Hotel Kaveri (☎ 220842; 2 Akar Complex, ST Rd; r Rs 500-1000;) Popular with the business set, Kaveri is Veraval's best choice, with a range of well-kept rooms, some overlooking the main street.

Hotel Park (☎ 242703; Veraval-Junagadh Rd; r with private bathroom Rs 500-1500;) About 1.5km out of town, this has a nice big pool in the palm-shaded grounds, spacious though shabby rooms and a good restaurant.

Eating

Prakash Dining Hall (ST Rd; thali Rs 40) This is a simple, clean place serving up damn fine thalis.

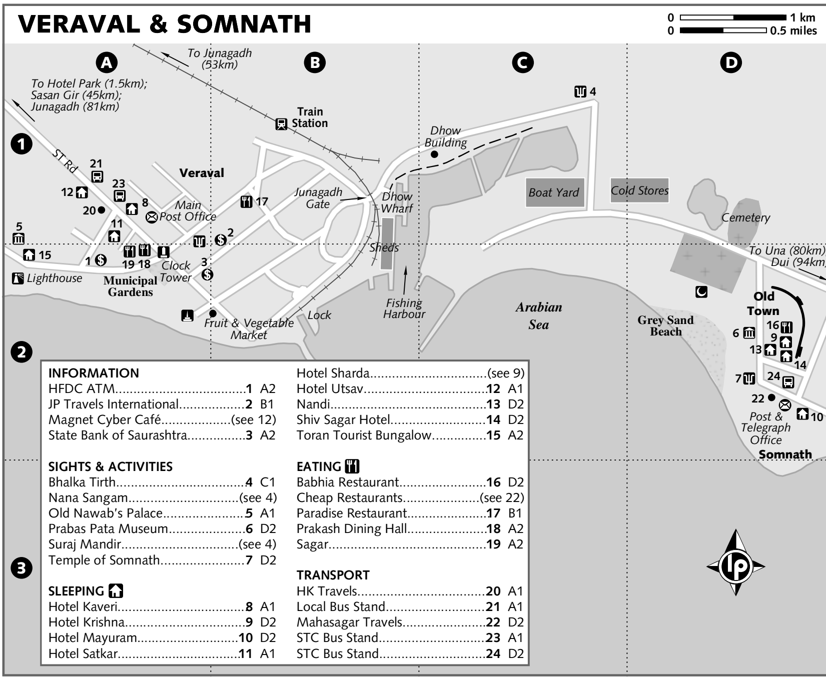
Sagar (ST Rd; dishes Rs 15-90; 9am-3.30pm & 5-11pm) This subdued, friendly vegetarian restaurant, smothered in thick brown paint, serves good Punjabi and Chinese food.

Paradise Restaurant (dishes Rs 50; 10am-3pm & 7-10.30pm) Paradise might be overstating it, but it does surprisingly palatable Chinese food. There aren't many vegetarian dishes.

Getting There & Away

BUS

Departures are more frequent if you change at Una. See below for details of STC buses from Veraval.



There are private bus agencies opposite the STC bus stand, including HK Travels (☎ 221934; ST Rd; 7am-11pm) which offer a nightly jaunt to Ahmedabad (ordinary/sleeper Rs 160/220) at 9pm.

TRAIN

The 1465/3 Veraval-Jabalpur Express to Ahmedabad goes at 10.15am (2nd class/2AC Rs 108/775, 8¼ hours, 456km) via Rajkot (2nd class Rs 55, 3½ hours). Trains leave for Sasan at 9.40am, 2.20pm, 2.40pm and 3.05pm (2nd class Rs 10, 1½ to two hours).

BUSES FROM VERAVAL

Destination	Fare (Rs)	Duration (hr)	Frequency
Ahmedabad	125	10	4 daily
Diu	40	3	5 daily
Junagadh	41	2	every 30min
Porbandar	55	3	15 daily
Rajkot	70	5	hourly
Sasan	25	1½	5 daily

A passenger service (313) to Delwada (for Diu) leaves at 4.05pm (2nd class Rs 20, 3½ hours, 104km).

There's a reservation office (☎ 131; ⏰ 8am-8pm Mon-Sat, to 2pm Sun) at the station.

Getting Around

An autorickshaw to Somnath, 6km away, should cost you about Rs 35; buses are Rs 8 and leave from the local bus stand, near the STC bus stand.

☎ 02876

Somnath consists of a few streets leading away from its phoenix-like temple. The rugged sea below gives it a lonely, wistful charm. The pilgrim trade is constant, but merchants are surprisingly relaxed – perhaps in deference to the shadows cast by the awe-inspiring temple.

TEMPLE OF SOMNATH

This temple (⏰ 6am-9.30pm), 80km from Junagadh, has been razed and rebuilt at least eight times. It's said Somraj, the moon god, constructed a gold version, rebuilt by Ravana in silver, by Krishna in wood and by Bhimdev in stone. A description of the temple by Al-Biruni, an Arab traveller, was so glowing that it prompted a visit in 1024 by a most unwelcome tourist – Mahmud of Ghazni. At that time, the temple was so wealthy that it had 300 musicians, 500 dancing girls and even 300 barbers.

Mahmud of Ghazni, a legendary looter, descended on Somnath from his Afghan kingdom and, after a two-day battle, took the town and the temple. Having stripped its fabulous wealth, he destroyed it. So began a pattern of Muslim destruction and Hindu rebuilding that continued for centuries. The temple was again razed in 1297, 1394 and finally in 1706 by Aurangzeb, the notorious Mughal fundamentalist.

After the 1706 demolition, the temple wasn't rebuilt until 1950. Outside, opposite the entrance, is a statue of SV Patel (1875–1950), responsible for the reconstruction.

The current temple was built to traditional designs on the original coastal site, and is a serene, symmetrical, sinuous structure. Some cracks appeared as a result of the 2001 earthquake, but they have since been repaired. It contains one of the 12 sacred Shiva shrines known as jyoti linga. Photography is prohibited.

PRABAS PATA MUSEUM

Nearby, the Prabas Pata Museum (☎ 232455; Indian/foreigner Rs 2/50; 🕐 10.30am-5.30pm Thu-Tue, closed 2nd & 4th Sat of month) is strikingly laid out in courtyard-centred rooms and contains interesting remains of the previous temples, with lots of beautiful fragments, including an elaborate 11th-century ceiling.

OTHER SIGHTS

Halfway between Veraval and Somnath is Bhalka Tirth, where Krishna was mistaken for a deer (sleeping in a deerskin – a dangerous outfit) and wounded by an arrow. The legendary spot is at the confluence of three rivers. You get to it through the small sangam (confluence gate), known simply as the Nana (Small Gate). North of this sacred spot is Suraj Mandir (Sun Temple), which Mahmud of Ghazni also had a go at knocking down. This ancient temple, with a frieze of lions with elephant trunks, probably dates from the same time as the original Temple of Somnath.

Sleeping & Eating

Good-value hotels are popping up everywhere.

Shiv Sagar Hotel (☎ 233111; r without/with AC Rs 250/500) Opposite the temple with bright rooms, busy staff and a generous noon check-out.

Hotel Mayuram (☎ 231286; s/d with private bathroom Rs 250/350; ❄) Just down the main road heading away from the temple, this quiet option has cleanish, bright, serviceable, plain doubles.

Nandi (☎ 231839; r with private bathroom without/with AC Rs 350/550; ❄) The Somnath stalwart on a market-filled street leading from the temple, this has small, clean, bright rooms with an unusually cheery atmosphere and mostly with temple views.

Hotel Sharda (☎ 571798; near temple; d without/with Rs 450/700) Another excellent new temple-facing hotel. The rooms are straight from the box, especially 103.

Hotel Krishna (☎ 232245; behind temple; Rs d/tr with AC from 600/800; ❄) Colourful hotel, with good value doubles, some with temple views. Bubbly young staff abound.

Babhia Restaurant (meals Rs 35-60) Tucked away near Shiv Sagar, this is the best restaurant on the temple side of town. It has faux marble tables bolted onto grotty purple walls. The food is fresh and particularly good, especially the veg handi.

There are dozens of cheap restaurants between the temple and Hotel Mayuram.

Getting There & Away

BUS

Somnath has fewer departures than Veraval, but buses run to Jamnagar (Rs 90, seven hours, three daily), Porbandar (Rs 65, six hours, hourly), Dwarka (Rs 90, seven hours, five daily), Una (Rs 45, three hours, hourly) and Rajkot (Rs 80, five hours, hourly).

Mahasagar Travels (☎ 232189; 🕐 10am-10pm), opposite the STC bus stand, has buses to Ahmedabad (Rs 190, sleeper Rs 250, 10 hours).

SASAN GIR WILDLIFE SANCTUARY

☎ 0285

The last refuge of the Asiatic lion (Panthera leo persica) is 59km from Junagadh via Visavadar. The rugged, hilly, 1400-sq-km sanctuary feels beguilingly uncommercial, and encompasses some beautiful forested land. It was set up to protect lions and their habitat: since 1980 numbers have increased from fewer than 200 to an estimated 325 in May 2004 – a trend unheard of in modern India. However, while lions have been lucky, the distinctively dressed local maaldharis (herders), a devout, nomadic community, have lost valuable grazing land. In recent years the lions have been wandering outside the limits of the sanctuary in search of easy game – namely calves. One ended up on the beaches of Diu! The problem is compounded by the declining areas of forest outside the sanctuary, forcing villagers to forage for fuel within its precincts, reducing the lions' habitat.

Sasan Gir is not big enough for the number of lions, but moves by the Madhya Pradesh government to transfer 200 lions to the Pulpur Kuno sanctuary in Madhya Pradesh were unceremoniously canned by the Gujarat government, and there are no concrete plans to address the difficulties caused by the competition for scarce resources.

As well as lions, there are more than 30 species, including leopards, hyenas, foxes, wild boars, parrots, peacocks, crocodiles (there's also a crocodile-breeding centre), monkeys and deer – including the largest Indian

THE LAST WILD ASIATIC LIONS

In the 19th century the territory of the Asiatic lion stretched from its current refuge in Gujarat's Gir Forest as far east as Bihar. Widespread hunting decimated the population, with the last sightings recorded near Delhi in 1834, in Bihar in 1840 and in Rajasthan in 1870. The last lion to die in the Indian wild outside Gujarat's Kathiawar peninsula was recorded in 1884. Why did they survive in Gujarat? They almost didn't. Hunting pushed Gir lions to the brink of extinction, with as few as 12 remaining in the 1870s. It was not until one of their erstwhile pursuers, the enlightened nawab of Junagadh, decided to set up a protection zone at the beginning of the 20th century, that the lions began slowly to recover. This zone now survives as the Sasan Gir Wildlife Sanctuary.

Separated from their African counterpart (Panthera leo leo) for centuries, Asiatic lions have developed unique characteristics. The mane of Panthera leo persica is less luxuriant and doesn't cover the top of the head or ears, while a prominent fold of skin runs the length of the abdomen. The skin is slightly lighter in colour, too. They are also purely predatory, unlike African lions which sometimes feed off carrion.

antelope (nilgais), graceful chinkara gazelles, chow-singhas and barking deer.

The best time to visit is from December to April; it's closed from mid-June to mid-October and possibly even longer if there has been a heavy monsoon.

Information

The Gir Orientation Centre (9am-6pm), next to the Sinh Sadan Forest Lodge, offers displays and descriptions of the park's inhabitants and a replica maaldhari hut. A creaking film about the park is screened at 7pm.

Sights & Activities

SAFARIS

The lions are elusive, but you'd be unlucky not to see at least one on a safari. If you're determined to spot one, allow for a couple of trips. Understandably, the lions retreat into the undergrowth during Indian holiday periods when convoys of jeeps roar through the park.

Before you go on safari, you must get a permit. These are issued on the spot at the Sinh Sadan Forest Lodge Office (Indian/foreigner Rs 30/US$5, 4hr vehicle entry Rs 100/US$10, camera Rs 50/US$5, video Rs 2500/US$200; 6-10am & 3-5pm 16 Oct-Feb, 6-9.30am & 3.30-6pm Mar-15 Jun) and are valid for the whole day. The guide's fee is Rs 50/US$10. Jeeps (maximum six) can be hired (US$10) from the lodge office. Although prices are quoted in US dollars, payment is in rupees.

Try to take a jeep rather than a minibus. While the latter stick to the main tracks, the jeeps can take the small trails, where you're much more likely to come across lions.

GIR INTERPRETATION ZONE

Twelve kilometres from Sasan village at Devalia, within the sanctuary precincts, is the Gir Interpretation Zone (Indian/foreigner Rs 30/US$5, jeep Rs 100/US$10, guide Rs 50/US$10; 8-11am & 3-5pm Thu-Tue). The 4.12-sq-km zone is home to a cross section of Gir wildlife. Chances of seeing lions here are good, but stage-managed and you're only likely to get 30 to 45 minutes looking for wildlife. Vehicles run here from Sasan Gir's main street for Rs 150.

CROCODILE BREEDING CENTRE

This centre (admission free; 8.30am-6pm), near Sinh Sadan, is a good place to see crocs, from baby to big – there are around 100, bred here to restock the sanctuary.

Sleeping & Eating

It's a good idea to make an advance booking. Sasan Gir has one main street and most accommodation is on it or nearby, with a couple of attractive options further away. These all have private bathroom unless stated otherwise.

Hotel Umang (☎ 285728; SBS Bank Rd; r Rs 450, with AC Rs 700;) Signposted off the main road 100m west of Rajeshri Guest House, this is a quiet, gleaming, but overpriced option. Extensive renovations have returned it to life. Management works for the park, and can be overbearing.

Anil Farmhouse (☎ 285590; r Rs 550-650;) Off the Junagadh road, 4km from Sasan (turn left along a difficult track from Bhalchhel village), this is deep in the forest, set by a mango orchard. It has seven simple rooms – some share balconies with wonderful views over the forest and flower-filled grounds. Call ahead.

Sinh Sadan Forest Lodge (☎ 285540; dm Indian/foreigner Rs 50/US$5, r Rs 500/US$30, with AC Rs 1000/US$50;) This is pleasant but outrageously priced for foreigners (meal prices are similarly imbalanced) and service is lackadaisical.

Amidhara Resort (☎ 285950; www.amidhararesort.com; Talala; r from Rs 1000) On the road to Veraval, this brand-spanking hotel still has the plastic wrapping on parts. The nearly completed pool looks the goods though, and rooms are generously decked out.

Maneland Jungle Lodge (☎ 285690; Nov-Jan/Feb-Oct r full-board Feb-Oct Rs 2500, Nov-Jan Rs 3500, without meals Feb-Oct Rs 1500, Nov-Jan Rs 2500;) Also off the road to Junagadh, 3km from Sasan, this rural place has lovely rooms in cottages with alcoves, window seats and floors of polished terracotta. The pool may need cleaning.

Gir Lodge (☎ 285521; s/d from US$50/70, with AC US$60/80;) Down by the river, about 200m from Sinh Sadan Forest Lodge, is a pleasant, peaceful hotel operated by the Taj Group. Rooms have balconies with woodland views and the restaurant is serene.

Rajeshri Guest House (☎ 285505; r Rs 100-200), opposite the gate to Sinh Sadan, has basic, slightly grubby rooms. The young, smooth-talking staff are eager park guides. Thalis cost Rs 35. Local guide Nitin Ratangayra also opens his family house (☎ 285686; d with shared bathroom Rs 100-200) around the corner, with three smart rooms. He arranges excellent village tours, including to Jambut, 18km south of Sasan, which is famed for its strange African-flavoured music.

Sasan village is lined with food stalls and nothing-special thali restaurants, the best of which is Hotel Gulmohal (dishes Rs 30-35; 8am-4pm & 7-11pm), with reasonable South Indian and Punjabi food.

Getting There & Away

STC buses travel regularly between Junagadh and Veraval via Sasan. There are buses to Veraval (local/express Rs 12/20, 1½ hours, 45km, hourly) and to Junagadh (Rs 20/31, two hours, 59km).

Trains run to Veraval (Rs 10, 1½ hours) and Delwada (for Diu, Rs 20, three hours).

JUNAGADH

☎ 0285 / pop 168,686

Junagadh is a seductive little city, practically void of tourists, and ideal for aimless meanderings. It's an ancient, fortified city at the base of spectacular Girnar Hill, which towers over town like a cloudy, holy spectre. The area around the Durbar Hall Museum is dotted with exotic old buildings, and crumbling Uperkot fort is properly spooky.

The city is named after the fort that enclosed the old city (jirna means old). Dating from 250 BC, the Ashokan Edicts nearby are testament to its earthly age.

At the time of Partition, the nawab of Junagadh opted to take his tiny state into Pakistan – a wildly unpopular option as the inhabitants were predominantly Hindu, so the nawab departed on his own.

Information

The centrally located tourist office buzzes with action, but offers little other than a visitors' map.

The State Bank of India (11am-2pm) near Diwan Chowk changes travellers cheques and cash. Travellers have reported efficient service from the Bank of Vadodara next to the local bus stand. Swati Restaurant (Jayshree Rd; 11am-3pm & 5.30-10.30pm) will change travellers cheques and currency for a little under the normal rate. SBS (Jayshree Rd) has an ATM.

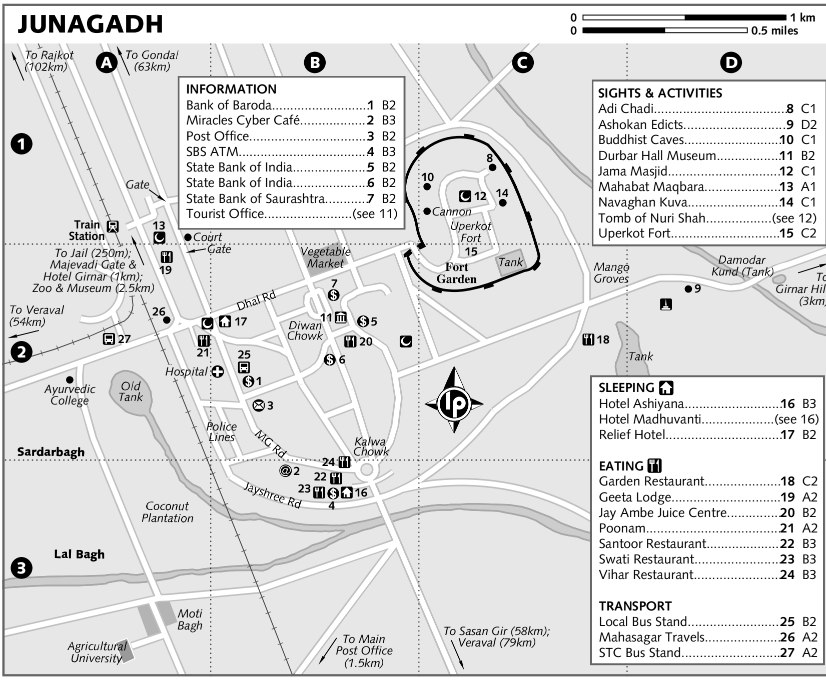
Main post office (☎ 2627116) Inconveniently located south of the centre at Gandhigram.

Miracles Cyber Café (Shripal Complex, MG Rd; per hr Rs 10; 10am-midnight) Fast and filled with students.

Post office (10am-3pm) Off MG Rd, near the local bus stand.



Sights

UPERKOT FORT

This ancient fort (admission Rs 2; 6.30am-6.30pm, closed 2nd & 4th Sat of month), on Junagadh's eastern side, is believed to have been built in 319 BC by Chandragupta, though it has been extended many times. An ornate triple gateway forms the entrance, and in places the walls reach 20m high. It's been besieged 16 times, and legend has it that the fort once withstood a 12-year siege. It's also said that the fort was abandoned from the 7th to 10th centuries and, when rediscovered, was completely overgrown by jungle.

The Jama Masjid, the mosque inside the fort, was built from a demolished Hindu temple and has an interior filled with columns.

Close to the mosque are 2nd century AD Buddhist caves (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100, video Rs 25; 8am-6pm), an eerie three-storey carved complex – the main hall contains pillars with weathered carvings.

Other points of interest include the Tomb of Nuri Shah and two fine baolis. One is Adi Chadi (named after two slave girls who used to fetch water from it), built into the narrow leaning walls of a cave, and the other, Navaghan Kuva, dramatically deep and reached by a magnificent staircase cut into the rock.

MAHABAT MAQBARA

This stunning mausoleum of a nawab of Junagadh seems to bubble up into the sky. One of Gujarat's most glorious examples of Indo-Islamic architecture, its lavish appeal is topped off by silver doors and minarets encircled by storybook, spiralling stairways. Completed in 1892, it's generally locked (the exterior's best anyway) – you can try to obtain the keys from the adjacent mosque.

DURBAR HALL MUSEUM

This museum (admission Rs 5; 9am-12.15pm & 2.45-6pm Thu-Tue, closed 2nd & 4th Sat of month) displays weapons, armour, palanquins, chandeliers, and howdahs from the days of the nawabs, as well as a huge carpet woven in Junagadh's jail. There's a royal portrait gallery, including photos of the last nawab with his various beloved dogs (he had hundreds of them).

ASHOKAN EDICTS

On the way to the Girnar Hill temples, you pass a huge boulder (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; 8am-1pm & 2-6pm) on which Emperor Ashoka inscribed 14 edicts in Pali script in about 250 BC instructing people to be kind to women and animals and give to beggars, among other things. Sanskrit inscriptions were added around AD 150 by Emperor Rudradama and in about AD 450 by Skandagupta, the last emperor of the Mauryas, referring mainly to recurring floods destroying the embankments of a nearby lake, the Sudershan, which no longer exists.

The boulder, with its beautiful spidery inscriptions, is curiously enclosed in a small building.

GIRNAR HILL

The climb up 10,000 stone steps to the summit of Girnar is best begun at dawn. It's a magical experience in the early morning light, as pilgrims and porters trudge up the well-maintained steps, built between 1889 and 1908, through scrubby teak forest and past chai stalls. The start is about 2km beyond Damodar Kund – the road takes you to around the 3000th step – which leaves you only 7000 to the top. As you gain height, the views begin to sweep across wooded hills.

The refreshment stalls on the 2½-hour ascent sell chalk, so you can graffiti your name onto the rocks. As you near the top, take a moment to marvel at how the stalls can rustle up a chilled drink. If you can't face the walk, dholis carried by porters can be hired; they are charged by weight so, before setting off, you suffer the indignity of being weighed on a huge beam scale.

Like Palitana, the temple-topped hill is of great significance to the Jains, but several important Hindu temples mean that Hindus make the pilgrimage, too.

The Jain temples, a cluster of mosaic-decorated domes interspersed with elaborate stupas, are about two-thirds of the way up. The largest and oldest is the 12th-century Temple of Neminath – dedicated to the 22nd tirthankar – go through the first left-hand doorway after the first gate. Many temples are locked from around 11am to 3pm, but this opens all day.

The nearby triple Temple of Mallinath, dedicated to the ninth tirthankar, was erected in 1177 by two brothers. During festivals this temple is a sadhu magnet.

Further up the steps are various Hindu temples. First, the Temple of Gorakhnath is perched on the highest peak at 600m. The next peak is topped by the Temple of Amba Mata, where newlyweds worship to ensure a happy marriage. On top of the final outcrop is Dat Tatraya, dedicated to three gods.

Bus 3 or 4 from the local bus stand will take you to Girnar Taleti at the hill's base. Buses run about once an hour from 6am (Rs 5) and pass by the Ashokan edicts. An autorickshaw from town costs about Rs 35.

JUNAGADH ZOO

If you don't make it to Sasan, Junagadh's zoo (admission Rs 10; 9am-6.30pm Thu-Tue) at Sakar Bagh, 3.5km from the centre, on the Rajkot road, has Gir lions. The nawab set up the zoo in 1863 to save lions from extinction, and though the concrete enclosures at the front rival much of Asia for sheer cruelty, it has a surprisingly good 'safari' park, with an abundance of lions, tigers and leopards in their natural habitat. There is also a fine museum (closed 2nd & 4th Sat of month) at the zoo with paintings, manuscripts, archaeological finds and other exhibits, including a natural- history section. Take bus 6 (Rs 5) or an autorickshaw (Rs 25) to get here.

Sleeping

Hotel Ashiyana (2624299; Jayshree Rd, Kahra Chowk; s/d from Rs 150/250) This place is on the 2nd floor of the same building that houses Hotel Madhuvanti, and has decent rooms.

Hotel Madhuvanti (2620087; 1st fl, Sabri Shopping Centre, Kahra Chowk; s/d Rs 150/300) This spacious, marble-floored hotel has large, clean, nondescript doubles around a courtyard. There's a pool hall on the same floor.

Relief Hotel (2620280; Dhal Rd; s/d Rs 150/200, r with AC Rs 500; dishes Rs 15-100) Mr Sorathia presides over the pick of the town, which has plain, freshly painted, good-value rooms and the best setup for travellers. Their fabulous new restaurant is fast and friendly, and secure parking is available.

Hotel Girnar (2621201; Majewadi Darwaja; s/d Rs 200/300, with AC Rs 400/650) About 2km out of town, this is state-run but good, with spacious rooms; try to get one with a balcony. There are big discounts mid-June to mid-September. Good thalis cost Rs 45.

Eating

Junagadh is famous for its fruit, especially for kesar (mangoes) and chiku (sapodilla), which are popular in milkshakes in November and December.

Garden Restaurant (dishes Rs 25-90; 6.30-10.30pm Thu-Tue) Something different: this restaurant has a lovely garden setting near Jyoti Nursery and beneath Girnar hill, spaced-out tables and reasonable Jain, Punjabi and South Indian food – it's popular with Indian families and is worth the short rickshaw ride.

Santoor Restaurant (MG Rd; dishes Rs 21-55) Popular Santoor has quick service, good, fresh vegetarian Punjabi and South Indian, delectable mango shakes, 1970s booth seating and dim, dim lighting from mini-chandeliers.

Swati Restaurant (Jayshree Rd; dishes Rs 17-70; 11am-3pm & 5.30-10.30pm) This is welcoming and of a similar standard to Santoor, with tasty food (go for Indian rather than Chinese) and, in keeping with the Gujarati restaurant craze, has brown-booth seating and dim lighting.

Vihar Restaurant (Kalwa Chowk; thali Rs 30) Stunning Gujarati food in a packed streetside restaurant. Hard to miss, and harder to beat.

Geeta Lodge (thali Rs 45; 10am-3.30pm & 6-11pm) Close to the station, with all-you-can-eat thalis (sweet costs extra) and an army of waiters.

Poonam (thali Rs 35) Down a small side street off Dhal Rd is another vegetarian option. It's above an STD phone place (its sign is in Gujarati).

Jay Ambe Juice Centre (snacks & drinks Rs 15-40; 7-1am) Great for a fresh juice, milkshake or ice cream; this is a perfect retreat.

Getting There & Away

BUS

Buses leave regularly for Rajkot (Rs 50, two hours), Sasan (Rs 22, two hours), Porbandar (Rs 53, three hours), Veraval (Rs 45, three hours), Una (for Diu; Rs 65, five hours), Jamnagar (Rs 65, four hours) and Ahmedabad (Rs 115, eight hours).

Various private bus offices are on Dhal Rd, near the rail tracks. Mahasagar Travels (☎ 2629199) serves Mumbai (non-AC/AC Rs 350/700), Vadodara (non-AC/AC/sleeper Rs 180/200/220), Ahmedabad (non-AC/AC/sleeper Rs 140/150/190, eight hours) and Udaipur (Rs 275, sleeper Rs 330, 15 hours).

TRAIN

There's a reservation office (☎ 131; 8am-1pm & 3-8pm Mon-Sat, 8am-2pm Sun) at the station.

Trains serve Rajkot (sleeper/2AC Rs 121/298, 2¼ hours, 103km) and Veraval (2nd class/2AC Rs 121/291, 1¾ hours, 83km). The 1465/3 Veraval-Jabalpur Exp leaves at 11.50am and arrives in Ahmedabad at 6.25pm (2nd class/2AC Rs 93/666, 373km). They rarely stop at the station for longer than a couple of minutes.

GONDAL

Gondal is a small, leafy town, 38km south of Rajkot, that sports a string of palaces on a gentle river. Once capital of a 1000-sq-km princely state, it was run by the Jadeja Rajputs, later overtaken by the Mughals, then recovered in the 1650s. Maharaja Bhagwat Singhji ruled in the 19th century and was a progressive social reformer who, among other things, introduced compulsory education for both sexes.

Sights & Activities

Naulakha Museum (Naulakha Palace; admission Rs 100) is housed in the beautiful riverside palace and built in a mixture of styles, with striking gargoyles. The museum shows royal artefacts, including scales used to weigh the maharaja in 1934 (his weight in silver was distributed to the poor) and dinky toys.

The Car Museum (Orchard Palace; admission Rs 100; 8.30-11.30am & 2.30-5.30pm) contains the royal fleet of around 50 impressive vehicles, including a car from 1907, so early that its make is given as: 'New Engine Company Acton'.

The Shri Bhuvaneshwari Aushadhashram Ayurvedic Pharmacy (☎ 222445; www.bhuraneshwaripith.com; Ghanshyam Bhuvan Mahader Wadi) was founded in 1910 by the Royal Physician. The pharmacy manufactures medicines and it's possible to see all the weird machinery involved, as well as buy the result (for treating hair loss, vertigo, insomnia etc). The founding physician here first coined the title 'Mahatma' (Great Soul) for Gandhi.

Swaninarayan Temple (7.30am-1pm & 3.30-8.30pm), owned by the wealthy Swaninarayan sect, is a white, 19th-century building built on land donated by the maharaja, with an attached farm.

About 3km off the road to Rajkot is Veri Lake, a large reservoir that's good for birdwatching (return rickshaw Rs 40 to 50).

Udhyog Bharti Khadi Gramodyog (Udhyog Bharti Chowk; 8am-1pm & 3-5pm) is a large khadi shop where around 800 women work spinning cotton upstairs, while downstairs embroidered salwar suits and saris are on sale at reasonable fixed prices.

Sleeping & Eating

These places have private bathroom.

Bhuveneshari Guest House (☎ 222481; r Rs 200, with AC Rs 400) A few streets from Orchard Palace, and part of the Bhuveneshari complex, this is a pilgrims' guesthouse that has reasonable rooms (AC ones are cleaner) with balconies.

Orchard Palace (☎ 221950; Palace Rd; r full-board Rs 2200, without meals Rs 1200, with AC 1400) This small palace, once the royal guesthouse, has six well-kept, high-ceilinged rooms of different sizes, filled with original 1930s and '40s furniture. It's a charming, peaceful place to stay and guests get free admission to all of Gondal's attractions.

Dreamland (2nd fl, Kailash Complex; dishes Rs 20-68, thali Rs 45; 11am-3pm & 7-11pm) Near the bus stand, this has Gondal's best thalis, in a bright, clean, busy restaurant, with good Punjabi dishes, too.

Getting There & Away

Buses run to/from Rajkot (Rs 25, one hour, every 30 minutes), Junagadh (Rs 30, two hours, hourly), Bhavnagar (Rs 85, 3½ hours, every two hours) and Porbandar (Rs 85, three hours, every two hours).

Trains from Rajkot (Rs 12, one hour, three daily) to Junagadh (Rs 18, 1½ hours) stop at Gondal (they go on to Veraval).

PORBANDAR

The port town of Porbandar, located between Veraval and Dwarka, is famed as the birthplace of Mahatma Gandhi. This friendly beachside town on the southeast coast is Gujarat now builds its reputation on cement and soda ash, and is well off the tourist map. You can't swim here due to rough, repugnant seas; in fact, you can't do much except stroll the tree-lined streets enjoying the invigorating sea breeze, visit the former house of the loin-clothed fakir, or pay respects at a neighbouring shrine. Back towards Jynbeeli bridge you'll find some lovely mangroves replete with birdlife.

In ancient times, the city was called Sudamapuri after Sudama, a compatriot of Krishna, and there was once a flourishing trade from here to Africa and the Gulf. The Africa connection is apparent in the number of African-Indians, known as Siddis, who form a separate caste of Dalits.

Sights

KIRTI MANDIR

This memorial (admission free; ⏲ 7.30am-7pm) to Gandhi was built in 1950. Reflecting Gandhi's age when he died, it's 79ft high and has 79 candle holders; symbols from all the world's major religions are incorporated. There's a small bookshop and photographic exhibition (take the stairs by the entrance). Next door is Gandhi's birthplace – a three-storey, 220-year-old house. He was born here on 2 October 1869 (the very spot is marked on the floor by a swastika), and it was his home till the ripe old age of six. The house is an interesting warren of 22 rooms.

Sleeping

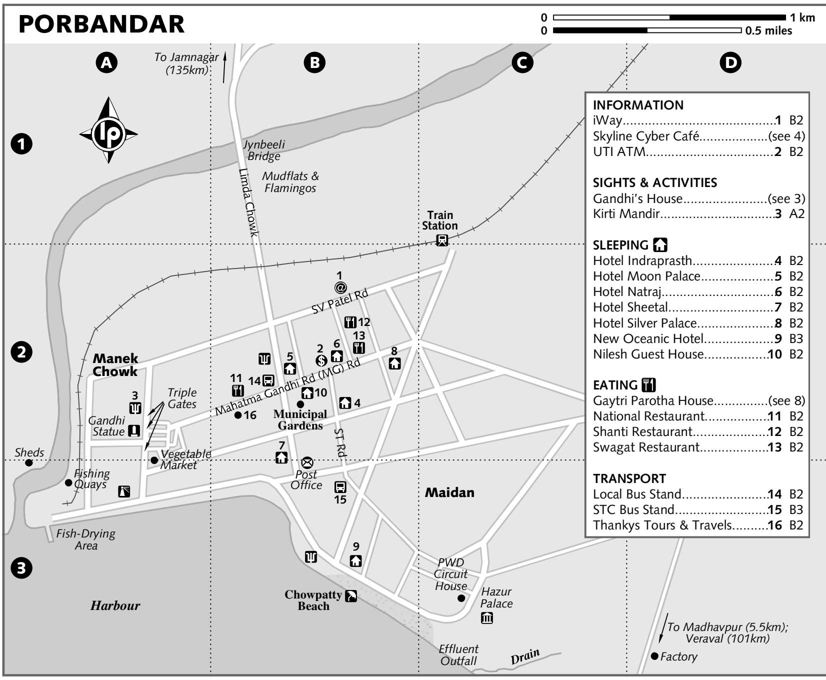
Nilesh Guest House (☎ 2250247; MG Rd; r Rs 150) A welcoming, dollar-friendly guesthouse, with passable doubles.

Hotel Moon Palace (☎ 2241172; moonpalace@porbandaronline.com; MG Rd; s/d from Rs 150/250, deluxe ste Rs 600/700; thali Rs 35) This is a clean, comfortable, friendly, well-run option, with some good-value rooms (the single is a bargain). Pricier rooms are bigger, better and brighter. There's a popular restaurant.

Hotel Silver Palace (☎ 2252591; www.silverpalcehotel.com; silver complex, ST Rd; s/d from Rs 200/300, with AC 550-850) A well-run hotel, with colour-coded rooms – blue room (Rs 850) stands out. Prices include tax, and the noon check out is rare.

Hotel Indraprasth (☎ 2242681; ST Cross Rd; s Rs 300-1500, d Rs 450-2000; ❄) An unprepossessing mall block leads to an attractive and unusually decorated hotel, with painted dancing girls along the corridor and rococo paintings in the rooms.

Hotel Sheetal (☎ 2247596; s/d from Rs 500/700, with AC Rs 800/1000, Rajwari Ste d Rs 1950; ❄) Opposite the main post office, family-run, eager-to-please Hotel Sheetal has a big range of smart rooms, from very small to cheerful larger ones to the Rajwari Suite, which has two heart-shaped beds and a rain shower. Prices include breakfast.



Hotel Natraj (☎ 2215658; www.hotelnatrajp.com; near UTI bank, MG Rd; s/d from Rs 500/800 with AC) Forgive the clashing colours, this brand spanker is the pick of the town. Rooms are generously sized and comfortable, with tasteful bathrooms.

New Oceanic Hotel (☎ 2242917; Sea Face Chowpatti; s Rs 500-800, d Rs 600-1200) In a great position on the waterfront, the rooms are better than you might expect from its dilapidated exterior – costlier ones are clean and roomy. The best have sea views.

Eating

Swagat Restaurant (MG Rd; dishes Rs 16-75; ⏲ 8.30am-3pm & 6-10pm; ❄) Porbandar's finest, this 1st-floor restaurant is a calm retreat from the street, with brown-booth seating and cool chrome chairs, selling tasty Punjabi and Chinese food.

DWARKA

Dwarka literally feels like the end of the earth. This remote pilgrimage town at the extreme western tip of the Kathiawar peninsula is one of the four most holy Hindu sites in India – Krishna is said to have set up his capital here after fleeing from Mathura. It's a well-organised town, busy with pilgrims and farmers. Men wear white clothes and red turbans, and both men and women are weighed down with gold nugget-like jewellery. It gets packed with pilgrims at festival times. Archaeological excavations have revealed five earlier cities lying just off the coast – submerged as the sea encroached.

The town swells to breaking point for Janmastami in August/September in celebration of Krishna's birthday.

Sights & Activities

Dwarkanath Temple (7-8am, 9am-12.30pm & 5-9.30pm) is dedicated to Krishna and has a magnificent, five-storey spire that is supported by 60 columns. Non-Hindus must make a declaration of respect for the religion to enter.

Also worth a look are the carvings of Rukmini Temple, about 1km to the east, and the many-pillared Sabha Mandapa, reputed to be over 2500 years old, as well as the Nageshwar Mandir, with its underground chamber, about 16km away.

Dwarka's lighthouse (admission Rs 6; 5-6.30pm) affords a beautiful panoramic view. Photography strangely not allowed.

About 30km north of Dwarka is a ferry service (Rs 5, 25 minutes, sunrise to sunset) crossing the 3km from Okha to the island of Bet, where Vishnu is said to have slain a demon. There are modern Krishna temples on the island, and a deserted beach on the northern coast. An STC bus goes to Okha (Rs 15, every 30 minutes) from Dwarka.

The sights around Dwarka can be visited on a five-hour tour (Rs 40 not incl ferry ticket; 8am & 2pm), which whips around Nageshwar, Gopi Taleo (a river), Bet and Rukmini Temple. It's run by Dwarka Darshan, which has an office in the vegetable market. You could also see the sights by taxi (Rs 400 to 500).

Sleeping & Eating

Most places offer significant discounts, except during festivals.

Meera Hotel (☎ 234031; High Way Rd; s/d/tr Rs 120/180/240, with AC Rs 500/750/1000, thalis Rs 40;) This hotel is on the main approach road, and rather on the outskirts, but has a good range of rooms – those on the top floor are cheap and cheerful, while the deluxe rooms are comfortable. There's a popular dining hall, which does good thalis.

Kokila Dhiraj Dham (☎ 236746; Hospital Rd; r Rs 300) This Reliance hotel is seriously good value (though no AC). A lift takes guests to long corridors, and numerous well-apportioned rooms. The communal TV room can get rowdy at night.

Hotel Rajdhani (☎ 234070; Hospital Rd; d/tr Rs 300/400, with AC 500/600;) A good, quiet, central hotel, with marble floors and smart, clean rooms in all categories.

Hotel Gurupreena (☎ 234512; opposite Bhadrakali Temple; without/with AC Rs 500/700) Lush on the outside, bland in the middle, Gurupreena is still good value, and has one of the best restaurants in town.

Hotel Darshan (☎ 235034; near old bus stand; d Rs 600;) Lovely new place, with polished white floors and a large seated area filled with black vinyl.

If you don't fancy feeding from street stalls, try Sharanam Restaurant (Hotel Gurupreena; dishes Rs 15-75; 8am-3pm & 6-11pm) for Punjabi and South Indian food.

Getting There & Away

There are trains to Jamnagar (2nd class Rs 25, 2½ hours, 139km), and Mumbai (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 295/828/1324, 20 hours, 961km) via Rajkot (2nd class Rs 63, 4¼ hours, 223km) and Ahmedabad (sleeper/2AC Rs 176/789, 10½ hours, 469km). The station is 3km from town and has a reservation office (8am-2pm & 2.15-8pm Mon-Sat, 8am-2pm Sun).

STC buses serve Jamnagar (Rs 60, four hours, hourly), Junagadh (Rs 75, six hours, every two hours) and Somnath (Rs 110, 6½ hours).

JAMNAGAR

☎ 0288 / pop 447,734

Jamnagar is another Gujarat delight, a fabulous, little-visited city, overflowing with ornate, decaying buildings and colourful bazaars displaying the town's famous, brilliant-coloured bandhani – produced through a laborious 5000-year-old process involving thousands of tiny knots in a piece of folded fabric. It's an ideal base for exploring the surrounding coastline that stretches to Dwarka, where rare birds flock to ankle-deep islands, and fine beaches are empty all year-round.

Jamnagar is best known for having India's only Ayurvedic university, where you can learn the techniques of ancient medicine and yoga, and a temple that's hosted nonstop chanting since 1964 (it's in the Guinness Book of Records; see opposite).

Prior to Independence, the town was ruled by the Jadeja Rajputs. It's built around appealing Ranmal Lake, which has a small palace at its centre, and huge weekend crowds around its edge.

Orientation & Information

The centre of the newer town, with most places to stay, is Teen Batti Chowk. The old town, known as Chandi Bazaar, is to the southeast, with Darbar Gadh, a semicircular gathering place where the maharajas of Nawanagar once held public audiences, at its centre. The bus stand and train station are a long way west and northwest respectively.

The Forest Office (☎ 2552077; 🕑 10.15am-6.15pm Mon-Fri, closed 2nd & 4th Sat of month) provides information on exploring the Gulf of Kutch, with its marine park, as well as the nearby Khijadiya Bird Sanctuary, though not much English is spoken. You can also contact Hotel President (p756) for assistance in visiting these parks.

Precious Money Exchange (☎ 2679701; Teen Batti Chowk) changes money. The Hotel President will change US dollars, pounds sterling and euros, but accepts cash only. There are plenty of ATMs.

Surf the internet at iWay (per hr Rs 25; 🕑 8am-11pm).

Sights & Activities

LAKHOTA PALACE & RANMAL LAKE

This mid-19th-century diminutive palace on Ranmal Lake once belonged to the maharaja of Nawanagar. Today it houses a museum (Indian/foreigner Rs 2/50; 🕑 10.30am-5.30pm Thu-Tue, closed 2nd & 4th Sat of month), a striking building with some fine woodcarving and grotesque gargoyles that contains sculpture and inscriptions from the surrounding region. The lake itself is a scenic breath of fresh air.

BALA HANUMAN TEMPLE

At this temple on the southeastern side of Ranmal Lake, there's been continuous, 24-hour chanting of the prayer Shri Ram, Jai Ram, Jai Jai Ram since 1 August 1964. This devotion has earned the temple a place in the Indian favourite, the Guinness Book of Records. Early evening is a good time to visit as the temple gets busy, as does the whole lakeside.

JAIN TEMPLES & OLD CITY

In the thick of Chandi Bazaar are four beautiful Jain temples. The larger two, Shantinath Mandir and Adinath Mandir, dedicated to the 16th and first tirthankars, in front of the post office near Darbar Gadh, explode with fine murals, mirrored domes and elaborate chandeliers. The Shantinath Mandir is particularly beautiful, with coloured columns and a gilt-edged dome of concentric circles. Opening hours vary, but you can usually find someone to let you in.

Around the temples spreads the old city with its lovely buildings of wood and stone, peeling, pastel-coloured shutters and crumbling wooden balconies. Subhas market – the vegetable market – has lots of local colour.

KHIJADIYA BIRD SANCTUARY

This small sanctuary (Indian/foreigner Rs 10/250; 🕑 dawn-dusk) is unique in that it encompasses salt and freshwater marshlands – from September to March there are lots of cranes here. It's best to visit around sunrise. Permits are available from the Forest Office (left). A return taxi costs around Rs 400, or you can take a bus (Rs 8) to nearby Khijadiya, then walk the last 3km.

MARINE NATIONAL PARK

This gorgeous, isolated park (Indian/foreigner Rs 30/250, Narara car permit Rs 35/200, camera Rs 50/250, video Rs 2500/US$200; 🕑 Oct-Jun) stretches 170km along the coast and encompasses 42 islands, 33 of which are ringed by coral reefs. It's rich in marine and bird life. The best time to visit is from December to March. The Forest Office (left) administers the park, or you can arrange a visit (or a sailing trip to Mandvi) through Hotel President (p756). It takes two hours to reach Pirotan island (timings are restricted because of tides – you must spend 12 hours on the island to wait for the tide to turn), which is the only offshore route set up for visitors. Nearby Okamadhi Beach as one of many sheltered havens.

You can also visit beaches along the coast, such as Narara, 110km from Jamnagar off the Dwarka road, where it's possible at low tide to walk among the corals.

Industry along the coast has affected this fragile ecosystem. In January 2005 Essar Oil, responsible for a new refinery in the region, paid for a whole coral reef to be shifted 1km from its original location. It's hoped the transplant will prevent damage to the marine ecology, which is threatened by an undersea petrol pipeline and rising sedimentation.

AYURVEDIC UNIVERSITY

India's only Ayurvedic university (☎ 2770103; www.ayurveduniversity.com; 🕑 6am-noon & 3-7pm Mon-Sat) runs many courses in Ayurvedic medicine, including a full-time, 12-week introductory course (registration Rs 200, fee Rs 15,000) teaching basic theory and medicine preparation, as well as diploma and degree courses. These courses are set up for foreign nationals with medical qualifications; see the website for more. You can also study hatha yoga here – either a Certificate in Yoga Education (US$625; six hours per day for 1½ months) or Practical Training in Yoga (US$100; one hour per day for three months). You can also join for a couple of weeks (US$8 per week). Massage, steam baths and mud therapy are also available (around Rs 150/US$7 Indian/foreigner per treatment).

Sleeping

Hotel Ashiana (☎ 2559110; s Rs 200-400, d Rs 300-450, s/d with AC from Rs 500/600; ❋) A vast, rambling top-floor hotel in the heart of the old city, with rooms ranging from simple and cleanish to huge and comfortable, all with 1970s furnishings. Renovations are very 21st century.

Hotel Kirti (☎ 2558602; Teen Batti; r Rs 300-500, with AC Rs 550-850; ❋) Off Teen Batti Chowk is this great-value option, with good, clean, bright rooms that have a bit of a view.

Hotel Dreamland (☎ 2542569; hoteldreamland@yahoo.co.uk; Teen Batti; s/d from Rs 200/350, with AC Rs 600/750; ❋) North of Teen Batti Chowk, this hotel is set back from the street, with reasonable rooms backing a courtyard. Upstairs rooms are better, though all are good value and unintentionally kitsch.

Hotel President (☎ 2557491; www.hotelpresident.in president@wilnetonline.net; Teen Batti Chowk; s/d Rs 550/650, with AC Rs 800/950;) This efficient, pleasant hotel has very helpful management. Many of the well-appointed rooms have a balcony. There's also an excellent restaurant (see below).

Eating

For cheap snack food in the evening try the stalls set up near Bala Hanuman Temple.

7 Seas Restaurant (Hotel President, Teen Batti Chowk; dishes Rs 40) This offers tasty food, with excellent choice. Vegetable biryani is good, and tandoori bhindi (okra) is a triumph.

Hotel Swati (1st fl, Teen Batti Chowk; dishes Rs 17-80; 10am-3pm & 5-11pm) This vegetarian place has a good atmosphere, decked out with droopy chandeliers. It offers a big range of delicious South Indian and Punjabi dishes.

Madras Hotel (dishes Rs 18-60; 8am-11pm Wed-Mon) This place, near Hotel Swati, is simple and popular and specialises in veggie South Indian and Punjabi cuisine, as well as the odd pizza.

Fresh Point (Town Hall Rd; dishes Rs 28-65; 10.30am-3pm & 6-11pm) Good food in a simple, informal restaurant with red, wiped-clean surroundings.

Getting There & Away

AIR

Indian Airlines (☎ 2550211; Bhid Bhanjan Rd; 10am-5pm) has daily flights to Mumbai (US$180). Bookings can be made with Save Time Travels (☎ 2553137; Town Hall Rd; 9.30am-8.30pm).

BUS

There are STC buses to Rajkot (Rs 37, hourly, two hours) and Junagadh (Rs 63, every 30 minutes, four hours); other buses head for Dwarka (Rs 69, four hours), Porbandar (Rs 58, four hours) and Ahmedabad (seven hours).

There are also various private companies, many based west of the clock tower. Ashwamegh Travels (☎ 26920405) offers buses to Ahmedabad (ordinary/AC Rs 170/190, 6½ hours, six daily) via Rajkot (two hours). Patel Travels (☎ 2552419; Pancheswar Tower Rd) serves Bhuj (Rs 130, three daily), Mandvi (Rs 150), Rajkot (Rs 80) and Ahmedabad (Rs 2100). Mahasagar (☎ 2554747) has buses to Bhavnagar (Rs 160, six daily).

Shrinath (☎ 2553333; Town Hall Circle) goes to Ahmedabad (Rs 195, six hours, eight daily), Mt Abu (Rs 250, 12 hours) and Udaipur (Rs 350, sleeper Rs 400, 14 hours).

TRAIN

Trains going to/from Ahmedabad include the 9006 Saurasthra Mail, at 3.40pm (sleeper Rs 166, 6½ hours, 330km), continuing on to Mumbai (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 305/831/1182, 16½ hours, 822km). Trains also run to Dwarka at 12:35pm (sleeper Rs 121, 2¼ hours, 139km) and Rajkot (Rs 32, two hours, 84km).

Getting Around

There's no bus to the airport – it's 10km west and autorickshaw drivers demand at least Rs 120. An autorickshaw from the bus stand to Bedi Gate costs Rs 20. From Teen Batti Chowk to the train station, about 4km north of the centre, it costs around Rs 40.

AROUND JAMNAGAR

Bardar Sanctuary

Sixteen kilometres south of Jamnagar, Bardar Sanctuary is a gentle mountain range filled with crumbling temples and ancient town settlements. It makes for a fabulously isolated, out-of-the-way road trip: follow signs to the barren pinnacle at Kileshwar.

RAJKOT

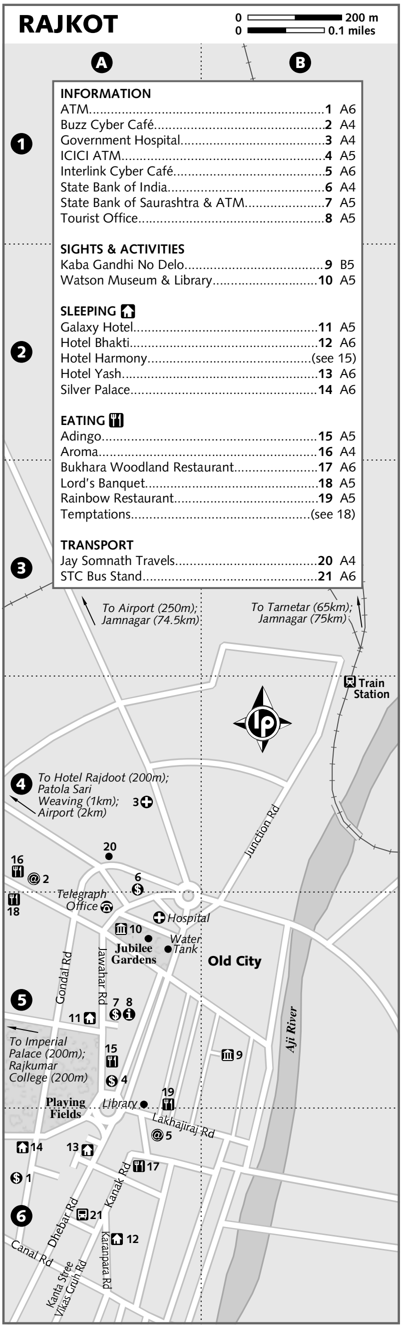
☎ 0281 / pop 1.137 million

This former capital of the princely state of Saraushtra has matured into the second city of Gujarati affairs. Once a base for the Western States British government office, Rajkot rapidly expanded into a prosperous, lively business centre, with an evocative old city. It's also a testament to modern Gujarat, where farmers sell ghee on street corners, and mall-dressed young professionals race to lunch through lanes selling fresh produce.

Mahatma Gandhi lived here; you can visit his family home.

The prestigious Rajkumar College dates back to the 19th century and is regarded as one of India's best private schools. It was set up by the British for the sons of nobility (rajkumar means prince).

Information



State Bank of India, north of Jubilee Gardens, changes money.

Buzz Cyber Café (Alaukik Building, Kasturba Rd; per hr Rs 10) Tucked away opposite Lord's Banquet.

ICICI ATM (Jawahar Rd)

Interlink Cyber Café (off Lakhajiraj Rd, per hr Rs 30; 10am-midnight) Opposite Bapuna Bawala.

Tourist Office (☎ 2234507; Jawahar Rd; 10.30am-1.30pm & 2-6pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd & 4th Sat of month) Behind the State Bank of Saurashtra building, opposite the Galaxy Hotel.

Sights

WATSON MUSEUM & LIBRARY

The Watson Museum & Library (Jubilee Gardens; Indian/foreigner Rs 2/50; 9am-1pm & 2-6pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd & 4th Sat of month) commemorates the work of Colonel John Watson, political agent (administrator) from 1886 to 1889.

It's a jumbled attic of a collection, with 3rd-century inscriptions and delicate ivory work overseen by an unamused marble statue of Queen Victoria.

KABA GANDHI NO DELO

This is the house (Ghee Kanta Rd; admission free; 9am-noon & 3-5.30pm Mon-Sat) where Gandhi lived from the age of six, and it contains lots of interesting information on his life. The Mahatma's passion for the hand loom is preserved in the form of a small weaving school. The narrow surrounding streets of the old city reward a wander.

PATOLA SARI WEAVING

Rajkot has quickly developed a patola-weaving industry. This skill comes from Patan, and is a torturous process that involves dyeing each thread. However, in Patan both the warp and weft threads are dyed (double ikat), while in Rajkot only the weft is dyed (single ikat), so the product is more affordable. You can visit workshops in people's houses in the Sarvoday Society area, including Mayur Patola Art (2464519; 10am-1pm & 3-6pm), behind Virani High School.

Sleeping

BUDGET

Hotel Yash (2223574; Dhebar Rd; s/d Rs 175/275, with AC Rs 500;) On a busy street, this is friendly and clean with small, pleasant rooms – those at the back are quieter; however, some have no window. There are two small singles here and a range of other rooms.

Hotel Bhakti (2227744; 28 Karanpara Cnr; s/d Rs 400/500, Rs with AC 650/900) This excellent semi-cheapie has a bustling reception that opens onto the street. Rooms are neat and comfortable, and the showers are golden. It's behind the bus station.

MIDRANGE & TOP END

Galaxy Hotel (222904; www.thegalaxyhotelrajkot.com; 3rd fl, Galaxy Commercial Centre, Jawahar Rd; s/d Rs 440/660, with AC s Rs 675-990, d Rs 1010-1485;) This hotel is a classy choice with spacious, spotless rooms and helpful staff. There's 24-hour room service, and food provided from local restaurant Spices, and you can eat dinner on the pleasant rooftop terrace.

Hotel Rajdoot (☎ 2468991; Dr Yagnik Rd; s/d Rs 550/850, with AC Rs 850/1050; ❄) In an area with numerous restaurants and shops, this has appealing rooms, where the décor gets progressively more camp (red carpet, mirrored headboards) the more expensive they are.

Hotel Harmony (☎ 2240950; www.hotelharmonyrajkot.com; Limda Chowk; s/d from Rs 1095/1695) A modern establishment with a business-like feel. Rooms are comfortable, if overpriced, and come in various shades of brown.

Silver Palace (☎ 2480008; www.silverpalace.com; s/d with AC from Rs 1320/1895; dishes Rs 47-105; ❄ 💻) This is one of Rajkot's swishest, and the haunt of visiting cricket and other stars, with neutrally decorated rooms and smart bathrooms. The buzzing restaurant, Flavours, is excellent.

Imperial Palace (☎ 2480000; www.theimperialpalace.biz; Dr. Yagnik Rd; s/d from Rs 1600/2100) The new high roller in town, with a masterful lobby and lavish rooms spiralling upwards to penthouse bliss. The glass elevator is worth the ride, and the hung artwork is decidedly decadent.

Eating

Adingo (☎ 2227073; Toran, Limda Chowk; thali Rs 65) This sophisticated two-storey place does tremendous thalis for the professional set. Downstairs is dark and leather clad; upstairs is red-tiled and raging.

Bukhara Woodland Restaurant (Hotel Kavery, Kanak Rd; dishes Rs 35-80; ⏰ 11.30am-3pm & 7-11pm) Bukhara is smart, despite the Formica, cool and calm with good service and quality food, including inviting snacks and one of the biggest paneer menus ever.

Aroma (dishes around Rs 30; ⏰ 9am-midnight) A café-style, snappy little place, run by the Spices crowd, this has snacky meals such as puri and chaat, stuffed parathas and South Indian dishes, as well as pretty good pizzas. There's an adjoining pool hall.

Rainbow Restaurant (Lakhajiraj Rd; dishes Rs 14-45; ⏰ 11am-3.30pm & 7-11pm; ❄) Rainbow is popular and serves tasty and cheap South Indian cuisine in the open-fronted downstairs, and Punjabi and Chinese dishes upstairs in AC comfort. There's a tantalising ice-cream selection.

Lord's Banquet (Kasturba Rd; dishes Rs 49-125; ⏰ 12.30-3.30pm & 7.30-11.30pm) is a long-established place, popular for pure-veg Punjabi, Continental and Chinese cuisine. The same management runs snacky Temptations (dishes Rs 35-90; ⏰ 11am-12.30am) a few doors down, serving Mexican, pizzas, sandwiches and paratha in a brightly decorated, clean café.

Getting There & Away

AIR

There are daily flights to Mumbai (US$95) with Indian Airlines (☎ 2222295).

BUS

Regular STC buses connect Rajkot with Jamnagar (Rs 42, 2½ hours, every 30 minutes), Junagadh (Rs 45, two hours), Porbandar (Rs 70, five hours), Veraval (Rs 70, five hours), Ahmedabad (Rs 80, 3½ hours) and Bhuj (Rs 90, seven hours, every 30 minutes) – the road to Bhuj is now excellent.

More comfortable private buses operate to Ahmedabad, Bhavnagar, Una (for Diu), Mt Abu, Udaipur and Mumbai. Several offices are on Kanak Rd, by the bus stand. Head to Jay Somnath Travels (☎ 2433315; Umesh Complex; ⏰ 5.30am-midnight) for buses to Bhuj (Rs 110, six hours, four daily).

TRAIN

There are at least four trains daily to/from Ahmedabad (2nd class Rs 86, five hours, 246km). Trains also go to/from Jamnagar (Rs 51, two hours, 84km) and Porbandar (Rs 77, five hours, 216km). The 9006 Saurashtra Mail leaves at 5.40pm and arrives in Mumbai at 8.10am (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 286/777/1104, 738km). There's also the 9119 to Veraval (2nd class Rs 75, four hours, 186km) which leaves at 1.10pm.

Getting Around

An autorickshaw to the airport from the centre costs Rs 60; to the train station, expect to pay Rs 30.

KUTCH (KACHCHH)

Kutch, India's wild west, is a geographic phenomenon, full of rugged, fiery beauty. What appears an endless desert plain running dead straight for the horizon, is in fact a seasonal island. The tortoise-shaped land (kachbo means tortoise in Gujarati) is flat and dry, but the villages dotted throughout the dramatic, inhospitable landscape feel like pre-partition

Pakistan, and the tribal villagers produce some of India's finest folk textiles, glittering with exquisite embroidery and mirrorwork.

It's edged by the Gulf of Kutch – a dangerous, swirling sea – and Great and Little Ranns. During the dry season, the Ranns are vast expanses of hard, dried mud. Then, with the start of the monsoon, they're flooded first by seawater, then by fresh river water. The salt in the soil makes the low-lying marsh area almost completely barren. Only on scattered 'islands' above the salt level is there vegetation – coarse grass – which provides fodder for the region's rich wildlife. These grasslands are under threat from the gando baval (crazy thorn tree), which is spreading across the Rann at an alarming rate, threatening to destroy fragile ecosystems.

The Indus River once flowed through Kutch – and along the route once inhabited by the 5000-year-old Indus Civilisation – until a massive earthquake in 1819 altered its course, leaving behind this salt desert. A mammoth earthquake in January 2001 again altered the landscape, taking some 30,000 lives, and destroying many villages completely. Although the effects of the tragedy will resonate for generations, the residents have determinedly rebuilt their lives and are amazingly welcoming to visitors.

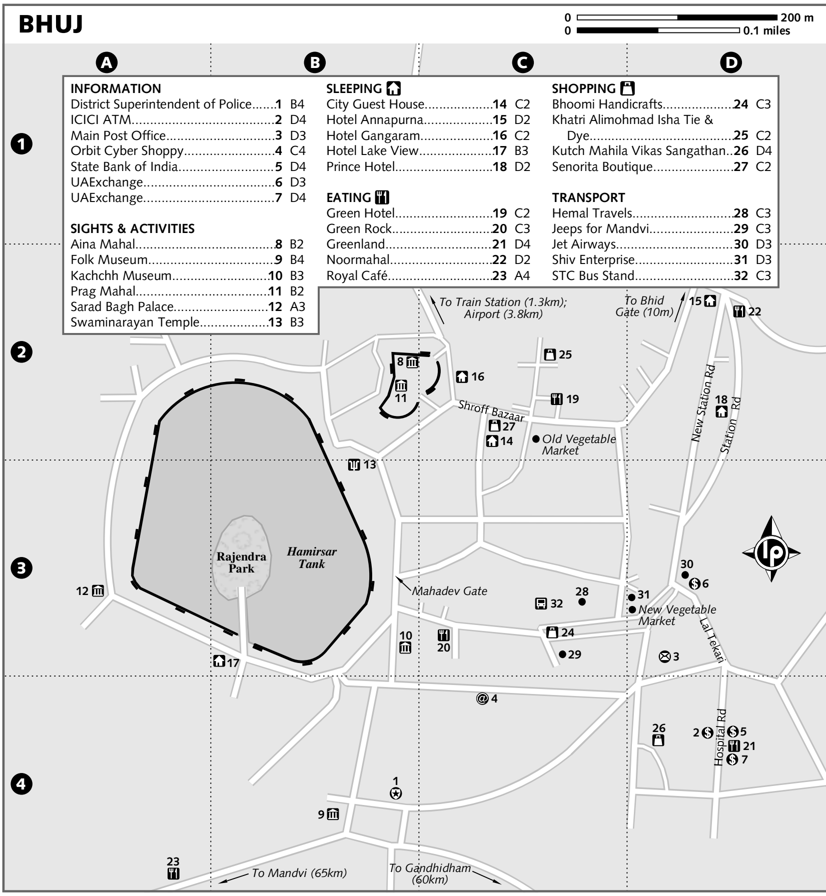
The capital of Kutch is an interesting outback city resurrected from the 2001 earthquake that killed 10% of the city's 150,000 people, and devastated its rich cultural heritage. But the city's physical and psychological scars are healing, and much of interest still remains. The beguiling bazaars sell amazing Kutch handicrafts, and some historic buildings, such as the Aina Mahal and Prag Mahal, have an eerie beauty that makes Bhuj more than just a springboard for visits to the surrounding tribal villages.

The reconstruction of Bhuj has been an expectedly slow process – settlements of itinerant workers still line the roads in and out of the city – and to encourage economic growth, the government has opened up the surrounding salt plains on a cheap lease, with 10-year tax-free incentives. The industries that came forward though were largely salt or chemical plants – many from outside the region – so it remains to be seen what impact this will have on local flora and fauna.

Orientation & Information

The town surrounds the dry Hamirsar Kund, with the palaces just to the northeast. East of the palaces is Shroff Bazaar, the main shopping street. The STC bus stand is to the south, and the train station is about 2.5km north.

PJ Jethi, the helpful, knowledgeable curator of the Aina Mahal (see below) knows all there is to know about the city and surrounding villages, and runs a very helpful Tourist Information Office (🕑 10.30am-6pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd & 4th Sat) at the Aina Mahal. He's also written a very useful Kutch guidebook (Rs 50), published in both English and French.



You can change travellers cheques or currency at UAExchange (☎ 227580; Hospital Rd) or at the State Bank of India (☎ 256100; NRI Branch, Hospital Rd; 🕑 11am-5pm Mon-Fri, to 2pm Sat), with an ATM, opposite which is an ICICI ATM. Surf the internet at Orbit Cyber Shoppy (Ganshyam Nagar; per hr Rs 20; 🕑 9.30am-11pm).

Sights & Activities

Prag Mahal (New Palace; admission Rs 10, camera/video Rs 30/100; 🕑 9am-noon & 3-6pm) is in a forlorn state, damaged by the earthquake and dusty, but is worth visiting for its ghostly, exuberant Durbar Hall, with broken chandeliers and gold-skirted classical statues that wouldn't look out of place on podiums in a gay nightclub. Several scenes from Lagaan, the much-acclaimed Bollywood cricket blockbuster, were filmed here.

Next door is the beautiful Aina Mahal (Old Palace; ☎ 260094; admission Rs 10, camera/video Rs 30/100; 🕑 10.30am-6pm Mon-Sat, closed 2nd & 4th Sat of month), built in 1752 at a cost of Rs 2 million. It lost its top storey in the earthquake, but the lower floor is open, with a fantastic 15.2m scroll showing a Kutch state procession. The 18th-century elaborately mirrored interior is a demonstration of the fascination with all things European – an inverted mirror of European Orientalism – with blue-and-white Delphi-style tiling and the Hogarth lithograph series The Rake's Progress. The beautiful inlaid ivory door cost Rs 20,000 in labour alone. In the bedroom is a bed with solid gold legs (the king apparently auctioned his bed annually).

Much of the oldest palace, the Durbar Gadh, collapsed, but many of its latticed windows and elaborate carvings remain. It's estimated that the Aina Mahal will cost Rs 2.5 million to repair. Donations are gratefully received – contact PJ Jethi at the museum for details (a fund has been set up through the V&A Museum in London).

Nearby is Swaminarayan Temple. This has brilliant paintings covering its carved wooden exterior; however, it's no longer being used – a new temple has been constructed to the south of town.

Kachchh Museum (College Rd; admission free) Gujarat's oldest museum, housing many ancient artefacts – has just been re-opened since the earthquake. The passionate curator, Umesh Jadia (☎ 220541; jadia_umesh@yahoo.co.in) has also overseen the reconstruction of a whale skeleton – the largest in Asia – now hanging at the Hill Garden on Mandvi Rd. If you're interested in traditional music, Mr Jadia has a wealth of resources and knowledge.

Folk Museum (Bhartiya Sanscruti Darshan Kachchh; admission Rs 10, camera Rs 50; 9am-noon & 3-6pm Mon-Sat) displays embroidery, children's toys, beautiful paintings and traditional Kutch mud huts.

Sarad Bagh Palace (admission Rs 10, camera/video Rs 20/100; 9am-noon & 3-6pm) is a graceful Italianate palace, built in 1867, in the midst of beautiful, restful and shady gardens. It lost most of the 3rd floor in the earthquake, but retains the lower floors.

Outside Bhuj is its 18th-century fort, an impressive edifice built at the same time as the town walls, but it's occupied by the military and off limits to visitors.

KUTCH CREATIVITY

The crafts of Kutch are beautiful and intricate, with a diversity that reflects the differing traditions of different tribes. Numerous local cooperatives invest in social projects and preserve the area's artistic heritage by ensuring work is not merely market driven.

Kutch Mahila Vikas Sangathan (☎ 256281; 11 Noolan Colony, Bhuj) is a grass-roots organisation, comprising 8000 rural women (2000 artisans), that pays members a dividend of the profits and invests money to meet social needs. The embroidery and appliqué are exquisite, employing the distinctive styles of eight different communities. Visit the head office in Bhuj, the 'Qasab' outlet at the Prince Hotel in Bhuj, or Khavda, a village north of Bhuj.

Kala Raksha Trust (☎ 253697; www.kala-raksha.org; 10am-2pm & 3-6pm), based at Sumrasar Sheikh, 25km north of Bhuj, also aims to preserve and promote Kutch arts, and specialises in Suf, Rabari and Garasia Jat embroidery. The trust has a small museum, works with nearly 600 artisans from seven different communities and can arrange visits to villages to meet artisans and see them at work. There are some beautiful items on sale; 30% goes to the artisans, who also help price the goods.

Shrujan (☎ 240272; Hasta Shilp Kendra; 9am-5.30pm), in Bhujodi, 12km from Bhuj, works with a network of 80 villages, benefiting nearly 3000 women and artisans. The chi-chi store has some beautiful, upmarket pieces of the finest quality.

Parmath (☎ 273453; Ramkrushn Nagar, New Dhaneti; 8.30-9pm), run by a delightful family, specialises in Ahir embroidery and wallpieces. It's in New Dhaneti, 15km north of Bhuj.

Chamunda Leather Embroidery (☎ 277718; 9am-6pm) in tiny Nakhatrana village, 50km northwest of Bhuj, is a leading manufacturer in camel leatherwork, including items such as mirrors and belts.

The prestigious Dr Ismail Mohammad Khatri in Ajrakhpur, near Bhujodi, heads a blockprinting business of real quality. You can stay with the family to learn the craft, or pick up unique naturally dyed pieces on a passing visit.

In Bhuj, textile dealers line the Shroff Bazaar, and it's packed with fine work. Be prepared to bargain, though. A good shop is Señorita Boutique (☎ 226773; Main Bazaar; 8.30am-9pm), which sells Harijan, Islamic and Jatt embroidery and tie-dyeing. Bhoomi Handicrafts (☎ 225808; 9am-9pm), opposite the bus station, is popular with locals.

If you're interested in antique embroidery, get in touch with Mr AA Wazir (☎ 224187). He has a stunning collection of more than 3000 pieces. Prices range from Rs 200 to 20,000.

Other recommended shops:

Kutch Rabari Art (☎ 240005; 9am-9pm) In Bhujodi, this Rabari family sell fine old Rabari pieces from their home.

Vankar Vishram (☎ 240723; 8am-8pm) Also Bhujodi-based; sells excellent woven products, with some beautiful woollen shawls.

Sleeping

Hotel Annapurna (☎ 220831; hotelannapurna@yahoo.com; Bhid Gate; s/d with shared bathroom Rs 70/100, with private bathroom Rs 150/200, dishes Rs 6-45) Annapurna has a nice atmosphere, and friendly staff, but is situated on a frenetically busy junction. Rooms are clean and some have balconies so you can overlook the mayhem. The dining hall serves tasty thalis.

City Guest House (☎ 221067; Langa St; s/d with shared bathroom Rs 70/150, r with private bathroom Rs 180) Just off the main bazaar, this is unusually bright, clean and cheery for a budget guesthouse, with neat basic rooms set along walkways.

Hotel Gangaram (☎ 224231; Darbargarh Chowk; r Rs 300) In the old city, near Aina Mahal, this is a great place, where nothing is too much trouble, run by kindly Mr Jethi. Spic-and-span rooms centre on an internal courtyard, and there's a communal balcony overlooking the ruined palaces. The meals here are delicious.

Hotel Lake View (☎ 253422; opposite Rajendra Park, Sanskar Nagar Rd; r Rs 500, with AC 1050/1150) This haphazard hotel has the premium lakeside location, and generous, though run down rooms.

Prince Hotel (Station Rd; s/d Rs 600/800, with AC from Rs 1400/1800;) Acknowledged as Bhuj's best, Prince Hotel has slick service and smart rooms – a haven though situated on a busy, dusty road. It offers free airport transfers. You can get an alcohol permit at its alcohol shop.

Eating

Noormahal (dishes Rs 20-50; noon-3pm & 7-10.30pm) This popular nonveg place gets packed out with mostly men eating chicken.

Royal Café (Mandvi Rd; dishes Rs 40; 10am-3pm & 6-10.30pm) An excellent choice, this garden restaurant has a lovely setting and good food served in small huts.

Jesal (Prince Hotel, Station Rd; dishes Rs 25-100; 7am-3pm & 7-11pm) This smart, nicely decorated little multicuisine restaurant offers good breakfast options.

Opposite the STC bus stand is Green Rock Hotel (Bus Stand Rd; thalis Rs 35; 11am-3pm & 7-10.30pm), a popular, 1st-floor place with lunchtime thalis; it's a sister restaurant to Greenland (Hospital Rd; dishes Rs 23-65; 11am-3pm & 7-10.30pm), a buzzing family restaurant with a groovy water-wall feature, and the also-good Green Hotel (Shroff Bazaar; dishes Rs 15-55; 9am-10.30pm), a small, cheery restaurant.

Getting There & Away

AIR

Jet Airways (☎ 253671; Station Rd; 9am-6pm Mon-Sat, to 2pm Sun) has regular flights to Mumbai (US$126).

BUS

STC buses run to/from Mandvi (Rs 22, 1½ hours, every 30 minutes), Ahmedabad (Rs 112, eight hours, five daily), Rajkot (Rs 97, six hours, five daily) and Jamnagar (Rs 120, 7½ hours, three daily). Book private buses at Hemal Travels (☎ 252 491; STC bus stand; 8am-9pm), which has buses to Ahmedabad (ordinary/sleeper Rs 160/225, nine hours), Rajkot (Rs 100) and Jamnagar (Rs 110).

TRAIN

Bhuj station is 2.5km north of the centre and has a reservations office (8am-2pm & 2.15-8pm Mon-Sat, 8am-2pm Sun). The 9032 Kutch Express (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 172/454/703) leaves at 6.30pm, arriving in Ahmedabad at 2.15am. The 9116 Bhuj-Bandra Express leaves at 8.30pm and hits Ahmedabad at 4.05am. Going the other way, the most convenient is the 9115 Bandra-Bhuj Exp at 11.59pm from Ahmedabad.

Getting Around

It's 5km to the airport – a taxi will cost Rs 150, an autorickshaw Rs 50. Autorickshaws to the train station costs Rs 30. You can hire mopeds and motorbikes at Shiv Enterprise (☎ 251329; Waniayawad; per day Rs 100-300; 9.30am-9pm Mon-Sat, to 2pm Sun).

AROUND BHUJ

Kutch is one of India's richest areas for handicrafts, particularly famed for its beautiful embroidery work, but also with many villages specialising in pottery or block printing. The local Jat, Ahir, Harijan and nomadic Rabari communities have distinct, colourful traditions that make their villages fascinating to visit.

The village of Hodka – 50km north of Bhuj – is home to a fascinating project in 'endogenous tourism'. In partnership with hospitality professionals from around India, and various NGOs, Shaam-e-Sarhad Rural Resort (☎ 574124; www.hodka.in; Hodka; tents s/d Rs 1600/1800, bhunga s/d Rs 2600/2800) is a successful exponent of this burgeoning self-help tourism trend, and a welcome addition to the Kutch countryside. Set in the beautiful Banni grasslands, 'Sunset at the Border' as it's known, consists of three traditional mud huts (bhungas) with sloping roofs and neat interiors, and six luxurious tents, all with private bathroom. Owned and operated by the Halepotra people, it's a fascinating opportunity to witness the daily life of an indigenous community, and to witness first-hand the positive impact of thoughtful tourism.

Other interesting villages north of Bhuj include the Jat Sumrasar Sheikh (see the boxed text opposite), Khavda for pottery, the Ahiri Danati and Ludiya (mudwork). You can head towards the edge of the Great Rann, with its snow-glare of salt.

Little-visited Lakphat, an ancient port city with some interesting monuments, including a Muslim tomb and Sikh shrine, is about 140km from Bhuj.

Northeast of Bhuj is the Harappan site (pre-2500 BC) of Dholavira, which is both fascinating and remote. Excavations are ongoing but demonstrate a complex town. You'll need your own transport as there's no nearby accommodation and the journey's at least seven hours.

You need a permit to visit some villages north of Bhuj, but this is easy to obtain. You have to take a copy of your passport and visa (and the originals) to the District Superintendent's Office (11am-2pm & 3-6pm Mon-Sat), 200m south of Hamirsar Tank, and complete a form listing the villages you want to visit – you should get the permit (free of charge; maximum 10 days) straightaway.

About 60km northwest of Bhuj is Than, an eerie monastery set in the hills. The holy man Dhoramnath, as a penance for a curse he had made, stood on his head for 12 years. The gods pleaded with him to stop, and he agreed, provided the first place he looked at became barren – hence Little Rann. He then established the Kanphata's (Slit Ears) monastic order at Than. There's one bus daily to Than from Bhuj (Rs 28, two hours). This is a laid-back place to explore the hills around, and the architecture ranges from crumbling mud brick to Portuguese style stucco, blue whitewash and bell towers, with a hint of basil and marigold in the air.

Towns to the east of Bhuj were hardest hit by the earthquake, but many, including Anjar and Rahpar, have been rebuilt and are handy bases for trips to see artisans at work. To the south, Bada village is the base for the Kutch Vipassana Centre (☎ 02832-221437, 02834-73303), which runs free 10-day meditation courses.

Bhujodi is a large village about 12km south of Bhuj that specialises in weaving, with many outlets specialising in shawls and blankets. Take a bus towards Ahmedabad and ask the driver to drop you at the turn-off for Bhujodi (Rs 4). It's a 2km walk or autorickshaw ride from the highway. A return rickshaw costs Rs 150.

Getting Around

Riding around the barren landscape in an old Ambassador taxi is a classic India experience. PJ Jethi (see p760) arranges tours for Rs 1100 per day (historical tours with a guide are available on Saturday), or you could explore using local buses: for example, there are hourly buses to Sumrasar Sheikh (Rs 10, one hour). Otherwise you can pick up jeeps from Bhuj, which cost the same as buses and can be quicker – leave in time to get back to town though, as they thin out after 4pm.

MANDVI

Mandvi is a minor miracle. Forty-five minutes down the road from dustbowl Bhuj lies this dash of cheerful tropical cheek. It's a busy little place too, with an amazing shipbuilding yard where hundreds of men construct, by hand, wooden beauties for faraway Arab merchants. There are also some respectably fine and sweeping beaches (though water quality can vary). The best are the empty, long, clean private beach (Rs 30) near Vijay Vilas Palace and another, just east of town, by the Toran Beach Resort.

Sights

Vijay Vilas Palace (admission Rs 15, camera/video Rs 50/250; 9am-6pm), a grand 19th-century palace, is 5km west of town in the centre of a palm plantation and set by a magnificent private beach. The palace was used as a setting for smash-hit Lagaan and many other Bollywood hits.

Sleeping & Eating

Rukmavati Guest House (☎ 223557; rukmavati@rediffmail.com; dm Rs 100, s/d Rs 175/300, with AC Rs 200/350;) The best Indian hospital to spend the night in, this eccentric but pleasant former medical centre doesn't feel too institutional. It's light and bright, with solar-water heaters and self-catering facilities. Check-out is 24 hours. Owner Vinod is a gentleman.

Jitendra Guest House (☎ 222841; behind Taluka Panchayat, ST Rd; r Rs 350; with AC Rs 650) An excellent new choice run by a pair of cruisy brothers. Rooms are tidy and spacious, and room service is available.

Hotel Sea View (☎ 224481; ST Rd; r Rs 400-600, with AC Rs 800-1200; thalis Rs 50;) A new, small hotel on the waterfront, this has rooms with big windows that make the most of the views over the wooden shipbuilding along the water's edge. Room 3 has windows on two sides. There's an excellent handicrafts showroom downstairs.

Vijay Vilas Beach Resort (☎ 9873013118, in Ahmedabad 079-28218551; www.palacesofindia.com; d B&B US$125, dishes Rs 40-200) A tented resort on the private beach stretching down from Vijay Vilas Palace, this is overpriced but has a fantastic location. The large, luxurious tents have big wooden beds, white-tiled bathrooms and small verandas. The Dolphin restaurant is open to nonguests and is a pavilion with a wonderful beachside setting.

Zorba the Buddha (meals Rs 40; 11am-3pm & 7-10pm) In the heart of the city, Zorba's is a massively popular place for cheap veggie thalis.

Getting There & Away

Regular buses to/from Bhuj (Rs 25) take two hours. Or you can take faster jeeps for the same price, which leave from the road opposite Bhuj bus station and drop off at Mandvi port.

LITTLE RANN SANCTUARY

This is not a region for the faint-hearted. The barren, blindingly white land of Little Rann is nature at its most harsh and compelling, and home to India's last remaining population of khur (Asiatic wild ass). There's also a huge bird population, and the area is one of the few places in India where flamingos are known to breed naturally. Khurs and flamingos are protected in the 4953-sq-km Little Rann Sanctuary (admission Indian/foreigner Rs 5/US$5, camera Rs 20/US$5, video Rs 2500/US$200; dawn-dusk). The area is punctuated by desolate salt farms, where people eke out a living by pumping up ground water and extracting the salt. Heat mirages disturb the vast horizon – bushes and trees seem to hover above the surface.

The approximately 3000 Khurs in the sanctuary survive off the flat, grass-covered expanses or islands, known as bets, which rise up to around 3m. These remarkable creatures are capable of running at an average speed of 50km/h for long distances.

Rain turns the desert into a sea of mud, and even during the dry season the solid-looking crust is often deceptive, so it's essential you take a local guide when exploring the area, or when running the gauntlet to distant Dholavira – a white-knuckled, white-hot jeep ride.

The small town of Zainabad, 105km northwest of Ahmedabad, is very close to the Little Rann. Desert Coursers (☎ 02757-241333) is a family-run tour company that organises interesting safaris and village tours in the Little Rann. It runs Camp Zainabad (full-board incl unlimited safaris d Rs 3800; Sep-Apr), offering comfortable and attractive kooba (traditional thatch-roofed huts) in a peaceful, remote setting. Advance booking is advised.

To get to Zainabad by road from Ahmedabad, you can take a bus to Dasada, 12km away (Rs 50, 2½ hours). From here Desert Coursers does free pick-ups, or there are local buses. There are direct buses to Zainabad from Patan (Rs 48, 2½ hours, three daily) via Modhera (Rs 22, 1½ hours). Desert Coursers can arrange taxis around the area for Rs 4.5 per kilometre.

Rann Riders (www.rannriders.com), near Dasada, 10km from the sanctuary, is also family-run and offers luxurious cottage accommodation and jeep safaris. Book through North West Safaris (☎ 079-26302019) in Ahmedabad.

You may also approach from Dhrangadhra. The town itself is worth visiting, if only to break up the Bhuj–Ahmedabad hike. The streets and alleys wind around each other, and almost every turn is a mosaic of whitewashed and coloured buildings of all periods, description and type. Temple bells ring out, and the locals aren't used to tourists, making for some refreshing dialogue, and even a flute concert if you're lucky.

The personable Devji Bhai Dhamecha (☎ 9825548090) is a wildlife photographer who makes a wonderful guide. He is passionate about the sanctuary and welcomes travellers with a special interest in wildlife. You can stay at his appealing house (per person incl meals Rs 450), and visit the sanctuary in his jeep (maximum five) for Rs 750/1500 per half/full day. He is planning two camp sites within the sanctuary as well, for those who want to get even closer to nature, with similar accommodation prices. If you can't get Devji, try his son Ajai (☎ 985548104).

Permission from the Deputy Conservator of Forests (☎ 02754-260716) in Dhrangadhra is required to enter the sanctuary; the guides mentioned will arrange this.

An hour south of Dhrangadhra is Sayla, a peaceful, pastoral town that swells during the Tarnetar Fair. The surrounding countryside is lush, tourist-free yet rich with princely states and skilled artisans (Sayla itself is noted for ikkat silk weaving). The nomadic Bharwad shepherds are known for their intricate beadwork, Somasar village for silk and cotton weaving, and Sejathpur is a Kathi village famed for its beadwork. A little further away at Wadhwan you'll find exquisite bandhani tie-and-dye and brassware.

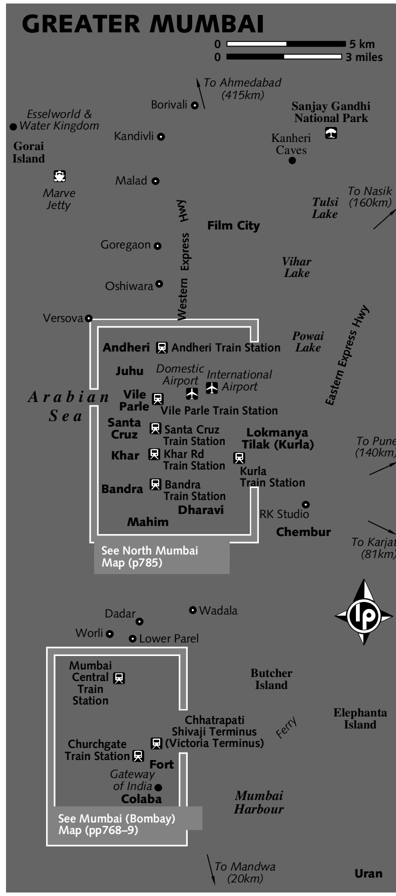
Old Bell Guest House (☎ 280017; www.ahmedabadcity.com/sayla; Sayla Circle, Rajkot Highway; d from Rs 1800), presided over by the erstwhile ruling family of Sayla, is a wonderful retreat set in flowery gardens. All rooms have spacious ensuites; the upstairs corner rooms have two balconies.

Sayla is conveniently located on the Ahmedabad–Rajkot highway, while Dhrangadhra is on the New Bhuj–Ahmedabad rail route 230km (5¼ hours) from New Bhuj (2nd class Rs 64) and 130km (three hours) from Ahmedabad (2nd class Rs 42). It's well served by buses, for example to and from Ahmedabad (Rs 43, 3½ hours) and Bhuj (Rs 78, six hours).

Mumbai (Bombay)

Measure out: one part Hollywood; six parts traffic; a bunch of rich power-moguls; stir in half a dozen colonial relics (use big ones); pour in six heaped cups of poverty; add a smattering of swish bars and restaurants (don't skimp on quality here for best results); equal parts of mayhem and order; as many ancient bazaars as you have lying around; a handful of Hinduism; a dash of Islam; fold in your mixture with equal parts India; throw it all in a blender on high (adding generous helpings of pollution to taste) and presto: Mumbai.



An inebriating mix of all the above and more, this mass of humanity is a frantic melange of India's extremes. It is the country's financial powerhouse and its vogue centre of fashion, film and after-dark frolics. Glistening skyscrapers and malls mushroom amid slums and grinding poverty, and Mumbai slowly marches towards a brave new (air-conditioned) world. But not everyone made the guest list: more than half of the population lives in slums, and religious-based social unrest tugs at the skirt of Mumbai's financial excess.

Only once the initial shell shock of Mumbai's chaos subsides, can one start to appreciate the city's allure: a wealth of Art Deco and grand colonial relics; cacophonic temples; warrens of bazaars; and the odd spiritual bastion of tranquillity. In Mumbai you can dine at some of the finest restaurants in the country, and work off the appetite gyrating at ultrachic bars alongside Bollywood starlets and wannabes. With a pinch of gumption, a dash of adventure, an open wallet and a running start, there's no excuse not to dive into the Mumbai madness head-first.

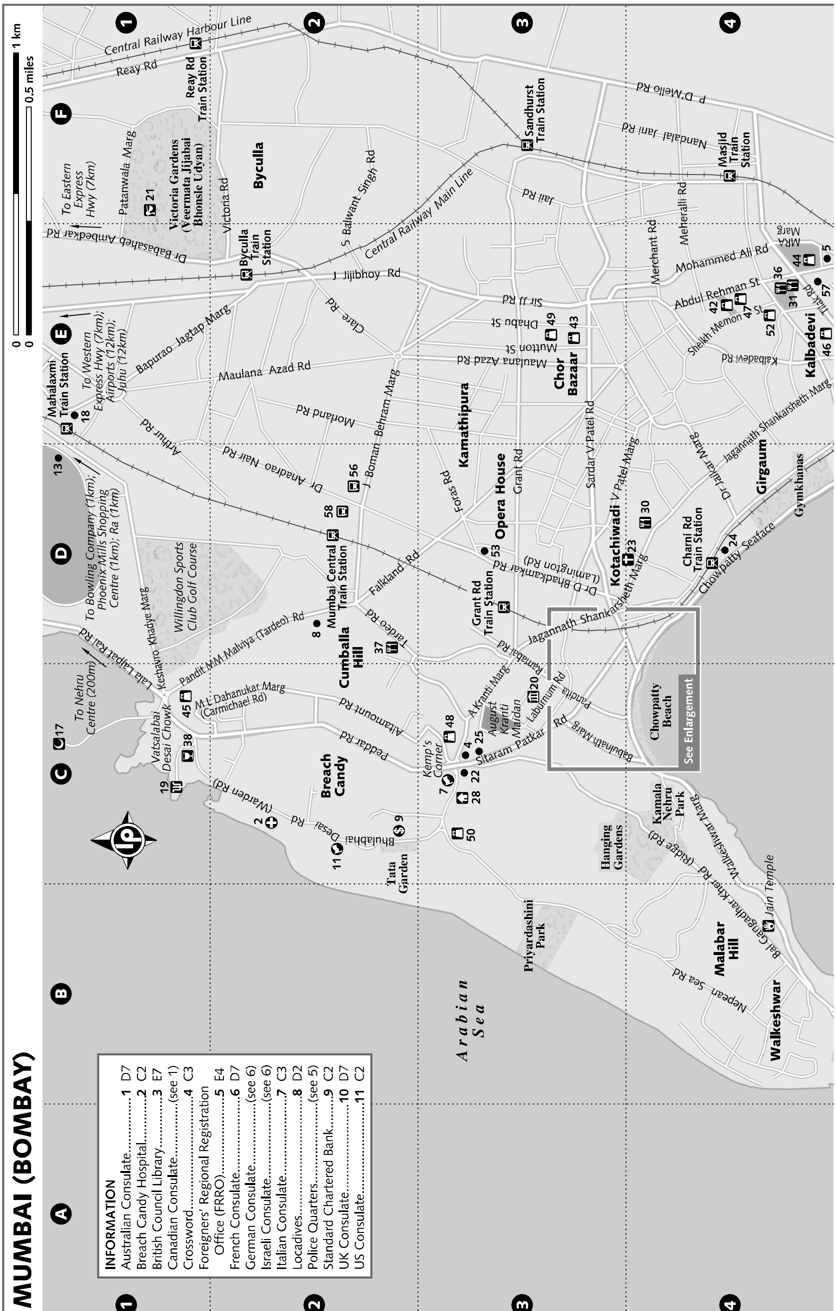
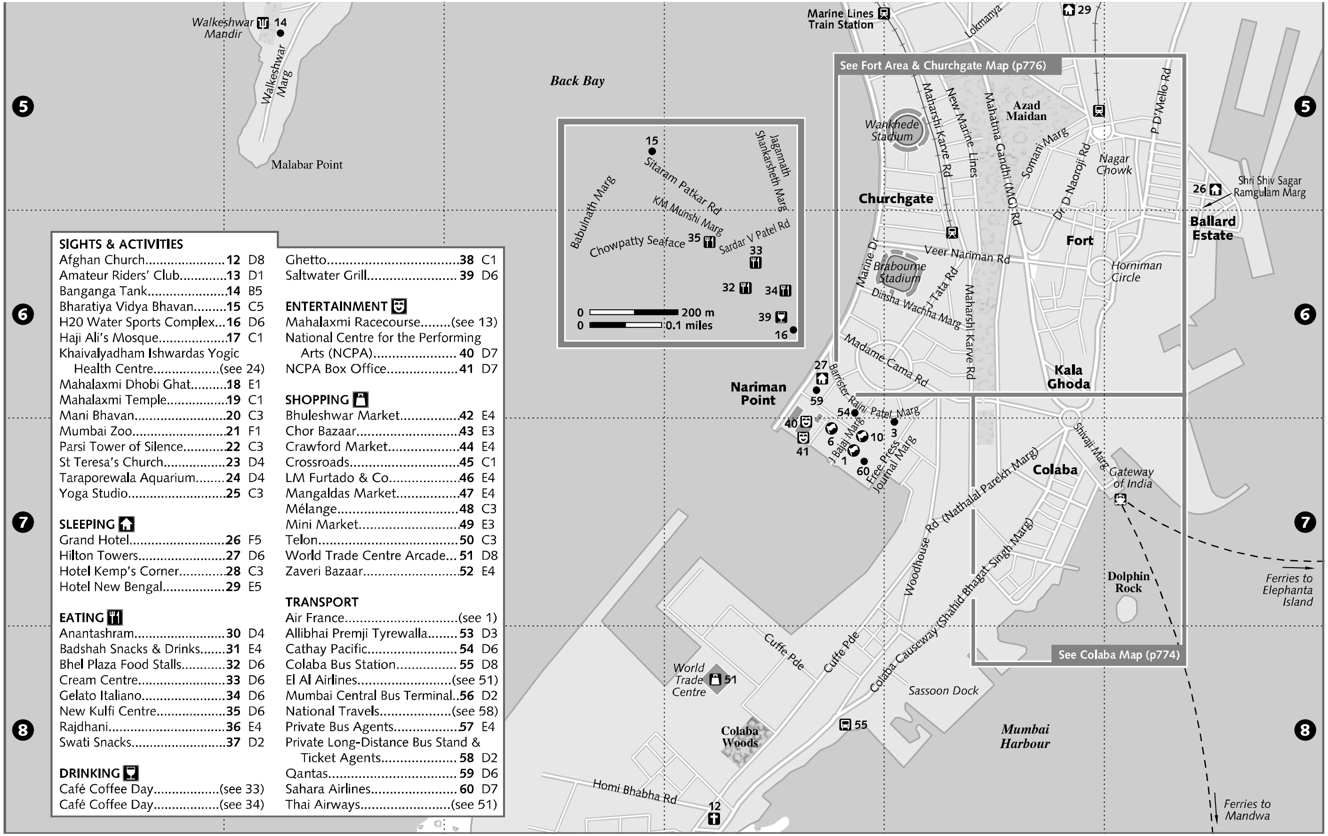
HISTORY



Koli fisherfolk inhabited the seven islands that form Mumbai from the 2nd century BC. Hindu dynasties held sway from the 6th century AD until the Muslim Sultans of Gujarat annexed the area in the 14th century, eventually ceding it to Portugal in 1534. The only memorable contribution the Portuguese made to the area was christening it Bom Bahai. The British government took possession of the islands in 1665, but leased them to the East India Company.



Then called Bombay, the area flourished as a trading port. So much so that the presidency of the East India Company was transferred to Bombay from Surat. Bombay's fort was completed in the 1720s, and a century later ambitious land reclamation projects joined the islands into today's single landmass. Although Bombay grew steadily during the 18th century, it remained isolated from its hinterland until the British defeated the Marathas and annexed substantial portions of western India in 1818.

The fort walls were dismantled in 1864 and massive building works transformed the city in grand colonial style. When Bombay took over as the principal supplier of cotton to Britain during the American Civil War, the population soared and trade boomed.

Bombay hosted the first Indian National Congress in 1885, and the Quit India campaign was launched here in 1942 by frequent visitor Mahatma Gandhi. The city became capital of the Bombay presidency after Independence, but in 1960 Maharashtra and Gujarat were divided along linguistic lines – and Bombay became the capital of Maharashtra.

The rise of the pro-Maratha regionalist movement, spearheaded by the Shiv Sena (Hindu Party; literally 'Shivaji's Army'), shattered the city's multicultural mould by actively discriminating against Muslims and non-Maharashtrans. The Shiv Sena won the city's municipal elections in 1985. Communalist tensions increased and the city's cosmopolitan image took a battering when nearly 800 people died in riots that followed the destruction of the Babri Masjid in Ayodhya in December 1992. They were followed by a dozen bombings on 12 March 1993, which killed more than 300 people and damaged the Bombay Stock Exchange and Air India Building. The more recent train bombings of July 2006, which killed more than 200 people, are a reminder that religious tensions are never far from the surface.

In 1996 the city's name was officially changed to Mumbai, the original Marathi name derived from the goddess Mumba who was worshipped by the early Koli residents. The Shiv Sena's influence has since seen the names of many streets and public buildings changed from their colonial names. The airports, Victoria Terminus and Prince of Wales Museum have all been renamed after Chhatrapati Shivaji, the great Maratha leader, although the British names of these and many major streets are still in popular local use.

ORIENTATION

Mumbai, the capital of Maharashtra, is an island connected by bridges to the mainland. The principal part of the city is concentrated at the southern, claw-shaped end of the island known as South Mumbai. The southernmost peninsula is Colaba, traditionally the travellers' nerve-centre, and directly north of Colaba is the busy commercial area known as the Fort, where the old British fort once stood. It's bordered on the west by a series of interconnected, fenced grass areas known as maidans. The main languages spoken in Mumbai are Hindi, Marathi and Gujarati.

The island's eastern seaboard is dominated by the city's naval docks, which are off limits. Further north, across Mahim Creek are the suburbs of Greater Mumbai and the international and domestic airports (p793). Many of Mumbai's best restaurants and night spots can be found here, particularly in the upmarket suburbs of Bandra and Juhu.

Maps

Eicher City Map Mumbai (Rs 250) is the most comprehensive and up-to-date street atlas and is well worth picking up if you're going to be spending any lengthy time in town.

FESTIVALS IN MUMBAI

Festivals in Mumbai (Bombay) are nearly as numerous and varied as its inhabitants. Read on for the best of these celebrations:

Banganga Festival (Jan) A classical music festival held early in the month over two days at the Banganga Tank (p778).

Mumbai Festival (Jan) Started in 2004 and based at several stages around the city, it showcases the food, dance and culture of Mumbai.

Elephanta Festival (Feb) Head out to Elephanta Island (p797) for more classical music and dance.

Indian Derby (Feb) Staged since 1942 this is India's richest and most popular horserace. It's run at Mahalaxmi Racecourse (p792).

Kala Ghoda Festival (Feb) Getting bigger and more sophisticated each year, this two-week-long offering has a packed programme of arts performances and exhibitions.

Nariyal Poornima (Aug) Festivals in the tourist hub of Colaba kick off with this celebration of the start of the fishing season after the monsoon.

Ganesh Chaturthi (Aug/Sep) Mumbai's biggest annual festival – a 10- to 11-day event in celebration of the elephant-headed deity Ganesh – sweeps up the entire city. On the first, third, fifth, seventh and 10th days of the festival families and communities take their Ganesh statues to the seashore and auspiciously drown them: the 10th day, which sees millions descending on Chowpatty Beach to submerge the largest statues, is particularly chaotic.

Colaba Festival (Oct) A small arts festival in Colaba that can merge with the general festivities of Diwali, depending on the year.

Prithvi Theatre Festival (Nov) A showcase of what's going on in contemporary Indian theatre; also includes performances by international troupes and artists.

READING MUMBAI

Containing all the beauty and ugliness of the human condition it's little wonder that Mumbai has inspired a host of the best writers on the subcontinent as well as international scribes such as VS Naipaul and Pico Iyer. Leading the field are Booker Prize–winner Salman Rushdie (Midnight's Children, The Moor's Last Sigh and The Ground Beneath Her Feet) and Rohinton Mistry (A Fine Balance and Family Matters), who have both set many of their novels in the city.

Making a credible grab to be the ultimate chronicle of the modern city is Suketu Mehta's Maximum City: Bombay Lost and Found. This incisively researched and elegantly written epic – equal parts memoir, travelogue and journalism – covers Mumbai's riots, gang warfare, Bollywood, bar girls and everything in between. Another doorstopper is Gregory David Robert's factional saga Shantaram, about the Australian prison escapee's life on the run in Mumbai's slums and jails. Also well worth dipping into is the anthology Bombay, Meri Jaan, edited by Jerry Pinto and Naresh Fernandes, a heady mix of politics, pop culture, literature and history.

ATMS

The number of 24-hour ATMs linked to international networks in Mumbai has exploded in recent years and you're rarely far from one.

CURRENCY EXCHANGE

There's no shortage of foreign-exchange offices in Colaba that will change cash and travellers cheques. There are 24-hour exchange bureaus at both airports.

Post

The main post office (Map p776; ☎ 22621671; 9am-8pm Mon-Sat, 10am-5pm Sun) is an imposing building behind Chhatrapatri Shiraji Terminus (CST, Victoria Terminus). Poste restante (9am-6pm Mon-Sat) is at Counter 1. Letters sent there should be addressed c/o Poste Restante, Mumbai GPO, Mumbai 400 001. You'll need to bring your passport to collect mail. There's an EMS Speedpost parcel counter (11am-1pm & 1.30-4pm Mon-Sat) to the left of the stamp counters. Regular parcels can be sent from the parcel office behind the main post office building. Directly opposite the post office is a group of parcel-wallahs who will stitch up your parcel for around Rs 40. The Colaba post office (☎ 22023549; Henry Rd, Colaba) is convenient.

To send air-freight parcels domestically or internationally (a 10kg box to the UK or USA costs about Rs 6360), try the following:

MUMBAI IN…

One Day

Start at the granddaddy of Mumbai's colonial giants, Chhatrapati Shivaji Terminus (CST, the old Victoria Terminus; p776). Stroll up to Crawford Market (p793) and into the maze of other, smaller bazaars here. Exhausted, rest and grab a bite at Rajdhani (p787), finishing off with a juice shake from Badshah Snacks & Drinks (p787).

Next, taxi it over to Malabar Hill's Banganga Tank (p778). Soak in the serenity, and cab it back to Chowpatty Beach (p777) for an ice cream at Cream Centre (p788). Be sure to pop into the wonderful Mani Bhavan (p778) museum dedicated to Gandhi while here.

Spend the late afternoon at the Oval Maidan (p775) for a spot of impromptu cricket. Don't forget to glance over at the grand edifices of the High Court (p775) and the University of Mumbai (p775). Next up is jumpin' Colaba and the Gateway of India (opposite), the Taj Mahal Palace & Tower (p774) and the colourful Colaba Market (opposite). You must be starving by now, so grab some tasty, street-side barbecue at Bade Miya (p786) or spoil yourself rotten at Indigo (p786). Finally, swap tall tales with fellow travellers over a beer at Leopold Café & Bar (p789).

Three Days

Make the trip out to Elephanta Island (p797), and spend the afternoon visiting the museums and galleries of Kala Ghoda (p775). In the evening, get up to Bandra district for a Goan feast at Goa Portuguesa (p788), followed by some seriously hip bar action at Zenzi (p790).

Another day could be spent visiting the Dhobi Ghat (p779) and the nearby Mahalaxmi Temple and Haji Ali's Mosque (p779). Spend the afternoon lazing at the Mumbai Zoo (p779) or pop into the inner-city enclave of Kotachiwadi (p777).

This busy but efficient office opposite Churchgate train station cheerfully provides tourist information for the entire country. Guides can be organised here, and it's the place to find out about the paying guest accommodation scheme (rooms cost around Rs 700 to 1500).

Government of India tourist office booths domestic airport (Map p785; ☎ 26156920; 7am-11pm); international airport (Map p785; ☎ 26829248; Arrival Hall 2A; 24hr)

Maharashtra Tourism Development Corporation booth (MTDC; Map p774; ☎ 22841877; Apollo Bunder; 10am-5pm) Near the Gateway of India. Purchase tickets here for the MTDC bus and boat tours of the city (p782).

MTDC reservation office (Map p776; ☎ 22027762; Madame Cama Rd, Nariman Point; 9.45am-5.30pm Mon-Sat) The head office of the MTDC gives some information on travel in Maharashtra and can book MTDC hotels throughout the state.

Travel Agencies

Agencies in Colaba tend to charge higher prices for flights, so it's best to go to the Fort area.

Akbar Travels (Map p776; 10am-7pm Mon-Sat) Reputable flight-booking agent with an army of computer-armed assistants.Opposite CST.

Magnum International Travel & Tours (Map p774; ☎ 22838628; 10 Henry Rd, Colaba) Handy for Colaba.

Thomas Cook (Map p776; ☎ 22048556; 324 Dr Dadabhai Naoroji Rd, Fort; 9.30am-6pm Mon-Sat) Efficient and reliable.

Visa Extensions

Foreigners' Regional Registration Office (FRRO; Map pp768-9; ☎ 22620111 ext 266; Annexe Bldg No 2, CID, 3rd fl, Sayed Badruddin Rd) Does not officially issue extensions on six-month tourist visas – even in emergencies they will direct you to Delhi (p1154). However, some travellers have managed to procure an emergency extension here after a lot of waiting and persuasion.

SIGHTS

Most of the major tourist attractions are based in South Mumbai, though North Mumbai is an alternative accommodation base and home to several trendy bars and restaurants, particularly in the Juhu Beach and Bandra districts.

Colaba

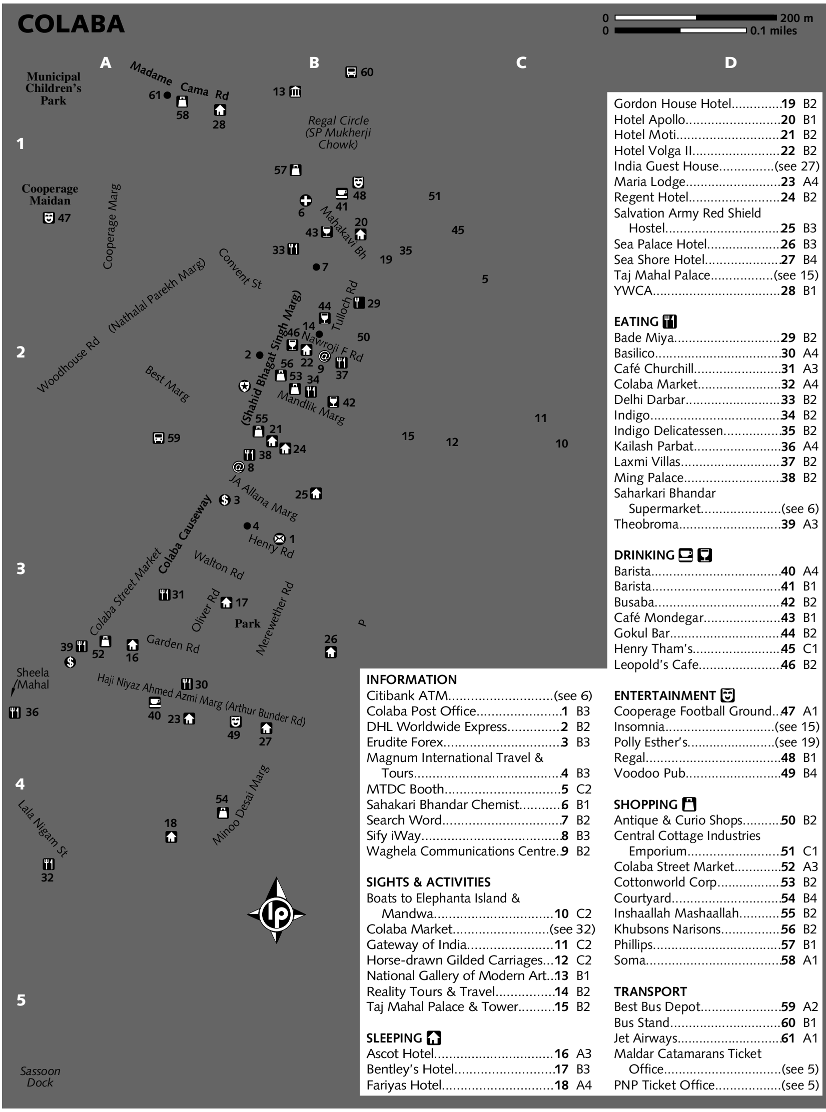
For mapped locations of all the following sights, see Map p774.

The unofficial headquarters of Mumbai's tourist scene, Colaba sprawls down the city's southernmost peninsula. It's a bustling district packed with street stalls, markets, bars and budget to midrange lodgings. Colaba Causeway (Shahid Bhagat Singh Marg) dissects the promontory and is the traffic-filled artery connecting Colaba's jumble of side streets and gently crumbling mansions.

MUMBAI BY NUMBERS

- Number of black taxis: about 40,000
- Population density: 29,000 people per square kilometre
- Average daily income: Rs 134 (US$2.90, or three times national average)
- Daily traffic passing through Chhattapati Shiraji Terminus (CST Victoria Terminus): 2.5 million people
- Percentage of people living in slums: 55%
- Number of Bollywood movies made since 1931: 67,000
- Proportion of Mumbai built on reclaimed land: 60%

Sassoon Dock, south of the main tourist action, is a scene of intense and pungent activity at dawn (around 5am) when colourfully clad Koli fisherwomen sort the catch unloaded from fishing boats at the quay. The fish drying in the sun are bombil, the fish used in the dish Bombay duck. Photography at the dock is forbidden without permission from the Mumbai Port Trust (☎ 56565656; www.mumbaiporttrust.com). While you're here, it's worth popping into the 1847 Church of St John the Evangelist, known as the Afghan Church (Map pp768–9, dedicated to British forces killed in the bloody 1838–43 First Afghan War.



During the more reasonable hours of the day, nearby Colaba Market (Lala Nigam St) has plenty of activity and colour and is lined with jewellery shops and fruit-and-veg stalls.

GATEWAY OF INDIA

This bold basalt arch of colonial triumph faces out to Mumbai Harbour at the tip of Apollo Bunder. Derived from the Islamic styles of 16th-century Gujarat, it was built to commemorate the 1911 royal visit of King George V. It was completed in 1924: ironically, the gateway's British architects used it just 24 years later to parade off their last British regiment, as India marched towards Independence.

These days, the gateway is a favourite gathering spot for locals and a top spot for people-watching. Giant-balloon sellers, photographers, beggars and touts rub shoulders with Indian and foreign tourists, creating all the hubbub of a bazaar. Boats depart from the gateway's wharfs for Elephanta Island and Mandwa.

You can ride in a Victoria – one of the horse-drawn gilded carriages that ply their trade along Apollo Bunder. Get them to go around the Oval Maidan at night so you can admire the illuminated buildings – it should cost Rs 300 if you bargain. Hard.

TAJ MAHAL PALACE & TOWER

This sumptuous hotel (see p786) is a fairy-tale blend of Islamic and Renaissance styles jostling for prime position among Mumbai's famous landmarks. Facing the harbour, it was built in 1903 by the Parsi industrialist JN Tata, supposedly after he was refused entry to one of the European hotels on account of being 'a native'. The Palace side has a magnificent grand stairway that's well worth a quick peek, even if you can't afford to stay or enjoy a drink or meal at one of its several restaurants and bars.

Kala Ghoda

Kala Ghoda, the area wedged between Colaba and the Fort, contains most of Mumbai's main galleries and museums alongside a wealth of colonial buildings. The best way to see these buildings is on a guided (p781) or self-guided (p780) walking tour.

CHHATRAPATI SHIVAJI MAHARAJ VASTU SANGRAHALAYA (PRINCE OF WALES MUSEUM)

Mumbai's biggest and best museum (Map p776; ☎ 22844519; K Dubash Marg; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/300, camera/video Rs 30/200; ⏰ 10.15am-6pm Tue-Sun), this domed behemoth is an intriguing hodgepodge of Islamic, Hindu and British architecture displaying a mix of dusty exhibits from all over India. Opened in 1923 to commemorate King George V's first visit to India (back in 1905, while he was Prince of Wales), its flamboyant Indo-Saracenic style was designed by George Wittet – who also did the Gateway of India.

The vast collection inside includes impressive Hindu and Buddhist sculpture, terracotta figurines from the Indus Valley, miniature paintings, porcelain and some particularly vicious weaponry. There's also a natural-history section with suitably stuffed animals. Take advantage of the free, multilanguage audioguides as not everything is labelled.

Foreign students with a valid International Student Identity Card (ISIC) can get in for a bargain Rs 6.

GALLERIES

The National Gallery Of Modern Art (Map p774; ☎ 22881969-70; MG Rd; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/150; ⏰ 11am-6pm Tue-Sun) has a bright, spacious and modern exhibition space showcasing changing exhibitions by Indian and international artists. Nearby, Jehangir Art Gallery (Map p776; ☎ 22048212; 161B MG Rd; admission free; ⏰ 11am-7pm) is one of Mumbai's principal commercial galleries, hosting interesting weekly shows by Indian artists; most works are for sale. Rows of hopeful local artists often display their work on the pavement outside.

KENESETH ELIYAHOO SYNAGOGUE

Built in 1884, this impossibly sky-blue synagogue (Map p776; ☎ 2283 1502; Dr VB Gandhi Marg) still functions and is tenderly maintained by the city's dwindling Jewish community. One of two built in the city by the Sassoon family (the other is in Byculla), the interior is wonderfully adorned with colourful pillars, chandeliers and stained-glass windows – best viewed in the afternoons when rainbows of light shaft through.

For mapped locations of the following sights see Map p776.

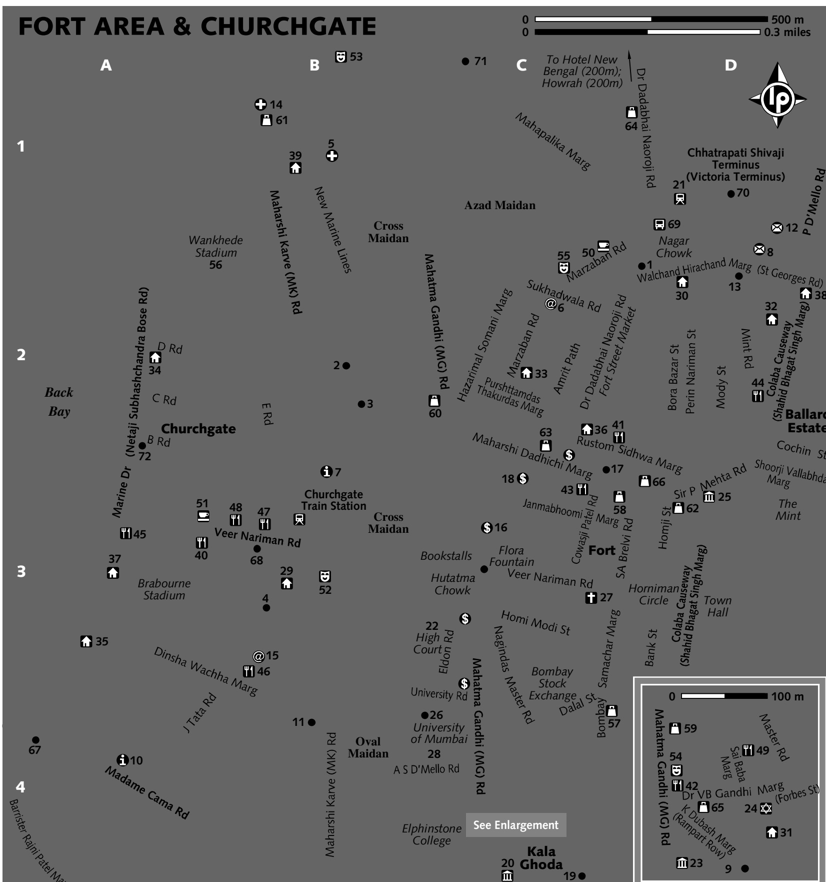
Lined up in a row and vying for your attention with aristocratic pomp, many of Mumbai's majestic Victorian buildings pose on the edge of Oval Maidan. This land, and the Cross and Azad Maidans immediately to the north, was on the seafront in those days, and this series of grandiose structures faced west directly onto the Arabian Sea. The reclaimed land along the western edge of the maidans is now lined with a remarkable collection of Art Deco apartment blocks. Spend some time in the Oval Maidan admiring these structures and enjoying the casual cricket matches.

HIGH COURT

A hive of daily activity, packed with judges, barristers and other cogs in the Indian justice system, the High Court (Eldon Rd) is an elegant 1848 neogothic building. The design was inspired by a German castle and was obviously intended to dispel any doubts about the authority of the justice dispensed inside, though local stone carvers presumably saw things differently: they carved a one-eyed monkey fiddling with the scales of justice on one pillar. It's permitted (and highly recommended) to walk around inside and check out the pandemonium and pageantry of public cases in progress.

UNIVERSITY OF MUMBAI

Looking like a 15th-century French-Gothic masterpiece plopped incongruously among Mumbai's palm trees, this university on Bhaurao Patil Marg, still commonly known as Bombay University, was designed by Gilbert Scott of London's St Pancras Station fame.



It's possible to take a peek inside both the exquisite University Library and Convocation Hall but the 80m-high Rajabai Clock Tower, decorated with detailed carvings, is off limits.

ST THOMAS' CATHEDRAL

Recently restored to its former glory, this charming cathedral on Veer Nariman Rd is the oldest English building standing in Mumbai (construction began in 1672, though it remained unfinished until 1718). The cathedral is an interracial marriage of Byzantine and colonial architecture and it's airy, whitewashed interior is full of exhibitionist colonial memorials. A look at some of the gravestones reveals many colonists died very young of malaria.

CHHATRAPATI SHIVAJI TERMINUS (VICTORIA TERMINUS)

Imposing, exuberant and overflowing with people, this is the city's most extravagant Gothic building, the beating heart of its railway network, and an aphorism for colonial India. Historian Christopher London uttered 'the Victoria Terminus is to the British Raj, what the Taj Mahal is to the Mughal empire.' It's a meringue of Victorian, Hindu and Islamic styles whipped into an imposing, Dalíesque structure of buttresses, domes, turrets, spires and stained-glass windows. Be sure to get close to the jungle-themed façade, particularly around the reservation office: it's adorned with peacocks, gargoyles, cheeky monkeys and lions.

Designed by Frederick Stevens, it was completed in 1887, 34 years after the first train in India left this site. Today it's the busiest train station in Asia. Officially renamed Chhatrapati Shivaji Terminus (CST) in 1998, it's still better known locally as VT. It was added to the Unesco World Heritage list in 2004.

MONETARY MUSEUM

While you're in the area, it's worth popping into this tiny and thoughtfully-presented museum (☎ 22614043; www.museum.rbi.in; Amar Bldg, Sir P Metha Marg; admission Rs 10; ⏰ 11am-5pm), run by the Reserve Bank of India. It's an engrossing historical tour of India through coinage: from early concepts of cash, to the first coins of 600 BC, through Indo-European influences, right up to today's Gandhi-covered notes. Also on display is the world's smallest coin, probably found in the crack of an ancient couch.

Marine Drive & Chowpatty Beach

For mapped locations of the following sights see Map pp768–9.

Built on land reclaimed from Back Bay in 1920, Marine Drive (Netaji Subhashchandra Bose Rd) arcs along the shore of the Arabian Sea from Nariman Point past Chowpatty Beach (where it's called Chowpatty Seaface) to the foot of Malabar Hill. Lined with flaking Art Deco apartments, this is one Mumbai's most popular promenades and sunset-watching spots. It's twinkling night-time lights earned it the nickname 'the Queen's Necklace'.

Chowpatty Beach remains a favourite evening spot for courting couples, families, political rallies and anyone out to enjoy what passes for fresh air. Eating an evening time bhelpuri (crisp fried thin rounds of dough mixed with puffed rice, lentils, lemon juice, onions, herbs and chutney) at the throng of stalls found here is an essential part of the Mumbai experience. Forget about visiting during the day for a dip: the water is toxic.

Kotachiwadi

For mapped locations of the following sights see Mappp768–9.

This wadi (hamlet) is a bastion clinging onto Mumbai life as it was before cement trucks and high-rises. A Christian enclave of 30-odd elegant, two-storey wooden mansions, it's 500m northeast of Chowpatty, lying amid Mumbai's predominantly Hindu and Muslim neighbourhoods. These winding laneways allow a wonderful glimpse into a quiet life free of rickshaws and taxis. To find it, aim for St Teresa's Church on the corner of Jagannath Shankarsheth Marg and RR Roy Marg (Charni Rd) then duck into the warren of streets directly opposite. Guided walks of the area are occasionally organised by Bombay Heritage Walks (p781).

Malabar Hill

For mapped locations of the following sights see Map pp768–9.

Mumbai's most exclusive neighbourhood of sky-scratchers and private palaces, Malabar Hill is at the northern promontory of Back Bay and signifies the top rung for the city's social and economic climbers.

Surprisingly, one of Mumbai's most sacred and tranquil oases lies concealed among apartment blocks at its southern tip. Banganga Tank is a precinct of serene temples, bathing pilgrims, meandering, traffic-free streets and picturesque old dharamsalas (pilgrims rest houses). The wooden pole in the centre of the tank is the centre of the earth – according to legend Lord Ram created the tank by piercing the earth with his arrow. The classical music Banganga Festival is held here in January.

The lush and well-tended Hanging Gardens (Pherozeshah Mehta Gardens) on top of the hill are a pleasant but often crowded place for a stroll. For some of the best views of the Chowpatty Beach and the graceful arc of Marine Dr, be sure to visit the smaller Kamala Nehru Park, opposite. It's popular with coy courting couples and there's a two storey 'boot house' and colourful animal decorations that the kiddies might like.

Kemp's Corner & Mahalaxmi

BOLLYWOOD

History

Mumbai is the glittering epicentre of India's gargantuan Hindi-language film industry. From silent beginnings with a cast of all-male actors (some in drag) in the 1913 epic Raja Haishchandra, to the first talkie in 1931 Lama Ara, today the industry churns out more than 900 films a year – more than any other city in the world (yes, Hollywood included). Not surprising considering they have one-sixth of the world's population as a captive audience, as well as a sizable NonResident Indian (NRI) following.

Regional film industries exist in other parts of India, but Bollywood continues to entrance the nation with its winning, escapist formula of masala entertainment – where all-singing, all-dancing good-guys battle evil protagonists (moustache optional) in a never-ending quest for true love. These days, Hollywood-inspired thrillers and over-the-top action extravaganzas vie for moviegoer attentions alongside the more family-orientated saccharine formulas.

Bollywood stars have been known to attain near godlike status in the minds of Indian moviegoers. Their faces plaster advertisement boards the length of the country, and Bollywood star-spotting is a favourite pastime in Mumbai's posher establishments (see boxed text, p790).

Extra, Extra!

Studios often look for extras for background scenes and sometimes need Westerners to add that extra whiff of international flair to a film. Getting a part, though, is a matter of luck. When extras are required the studios usually send scouts down to Colaba, often around the Gateway of India, to conscript travellers for the following day's shooting. You receive between Rs 500 and 1000 for a day's work, but it's clearly not something you do for the money. It can be a long, hot day standing around on the set, without promised food and water; others have described the behind-the-scenes peek as a fascinating experience. Before agreeing to be an extra, always ask for identification from the person who has approached you.

Tours

Though overpriced, Bollywood Tourism (☎ 26609909; www.bollywoodtourism.com; child/adult US$75/100) is the only agency so far that offers Bollywood tours. Tours visit the BollywooDrome (a special set showcasing dance sequences and stunts) and take a peek behind the scenes at the shooting of a live Bollywood film – there's always one on somewhere. Lunch is included.

Gandhi stayed during his visits to Bombay from 1917 to 1934. Dedicated to this amazingly insightful leader, the museum showcases the simple room where Gandhi formulated his philosophy of satyagraha (truth, nonviolence and self sacrifice) and launched the 1932 Civil Disobedience campaign that led to the end of British rule. There are rooms showcasing a photographic record of his life, along with dioramas and original documents such as letters he wrote to Adolf Hitler and Franklin D Roosevelt. Nearby August Kranti Maidan is where the campaign to persuade the British to 'Quit India' was launched in 1942.

MAHALAXMI DHOBI GHAT

If you've had washing done in Mumbai, chances are your clothes have already paid a visit to this 136-year-old dhobi ghat (place where clothes are washed). The whole hamlet is Mumbai's oldest and biggest human-powered washing machine: every day hundreds of people beat the dirt out of thousands of kilograms of soiled Mumbai clothes in 1026 open-air troughs. The best view, and photo opportunity, is from the bridge across the railway tracks near Mahalaxmi train station (Map pp768–9).

MAHALAXMI TEMPLE

It's only fitting that in money-mad Mumbai one of the busiest and most colourful temples is dedicated to Mahalaxmi, the goddess of wealth. Perched on a headland, it's the focus for Mumbai's Navratri (Festival of Nine Nights) celebrations in September/October. After paying your respects to the goddess, climb down the steps towards the shore and snack on tasty gota bhaji (fried lentil balls) at the cliffside Laxmi Bhajiya House.

HAJI ALI'S MOSQUE

Floating like a sacred mirage off the coast, this mosque is one of Mumbai's most striking shrines. Built in the 19th century, it contains the tomb of the Muslim saint Haji – legend has it that Haji Ali died while on a pilgrimage to Mecca and his casket miraculously floated back to this spot. A long concrete causeway reaches into the Arabian Sea, providing access to the mosque. Thousands of pilgrims cross it to make their visit, many donating to the beggars who line the way; but at high tide, water covers the causeway and the mosque becomes an island.

MUMBAI ZOO

Mumbai's zoo (Map pp768-9; ☎ 23725799; Victoria Gardens; adult/child Rs 5/2; ⏰ 9am-6pm Thu-Tue) is remarkably well-maintained. Set in the sprawling and lush grounds of Victoria Gardens, it's worth visiting not least for its green hillocks, shady grassy bits and soundtrack of birds chirping in place of cars honking. The animals are a little few and far between, with the few local species in large cages including crocs, elephants, rhinos and a few bored lions. There's a small playground, and it's generally a popular place for families and couples to meander.

North Mumbai

NEHRU CENTRE & NEHRU PLANETARIUM

The most striking thing about this cultural complex (Dr Annie Besant Rd, Worli), which includes a decent planetarium (☎ 24920510; adult/child Rs 40/20; ⏰ English show 3pm Tue-Sun) and the serpentine-but-interesting history exhibition Discovery of India (admission free; ⏰ 11am-5pm) is the bold modern architecture of the buildings. The tower looks like a giant cylindrical pineapple, the planetarium a UFO. There's a theatre here too (see p791).

ACTIVITIES

Horse Riding

The Amateur Riders' Club (Map pp768-9; ☎ 5600 5204-5; Mahalaxmi Racecourse) has horse rides for Rs 500 per 30 minutes; escorts cost Rs 250 extra.

Swimming

Despite the heat don't be tempted by the lure of Back Bay, or even the open sea at Chowpatty; the water is filthy. If you want to swim and aren't staying at a luxury hotel, Fariyas Hotel (p784) in Colaba has a tiny terrace pool (Rs 500 for nonguests).

Water Sports

H2O Water Sports Complex (Map pp768-9; ☎ 236 77546; info@h2osports.biz; Marine Dr, Mafatlal Beach; ⏰ 10am-10pm Oct-Apr) on the southeast side of Chowpatty Beach rents out jet skis (Rs 950 per 10 minutes) and speed boats (per person per hour Rs 175, minimum four people) or kayaks (per hour Rs 300). It also holds sailing and windsurfing classes and rents fresh-water (river) kayaks.

Outbound Adventure (☎ 26315019, www.outboundadventure.com) runs one-day rafting trips on the Ullas River near Karjat, 88km southeast of Mumbai, from the end of June to early September (Rs 1000 per person). After a good rain rapids can get up to Grade III+, though usually the rafting is much calmer.

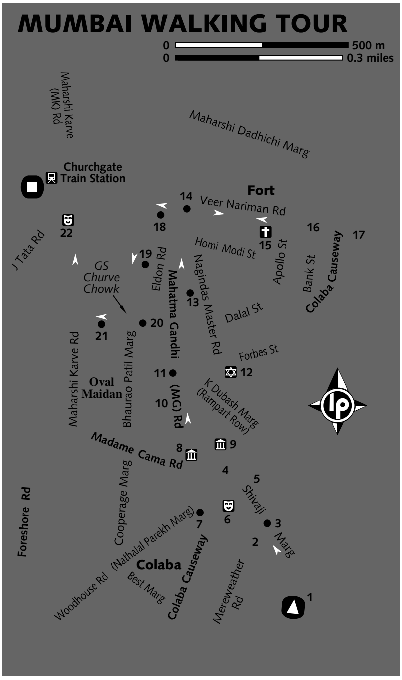
WALKING TOUR



Mumbai's distinctive mix of colonial and Art Deco architecture is one of its defining features. This walk takes you past many of the city's key buildings and is a great way to spend anything from a few hours to a whole day. Pick up the guidebook Fort Walks at most major bookshops if you wish to explore further.

Starting from the Gateway of India (1; p773) walk up Shavaji Marg past the members-only colonial relic Royal Bombay Yacht Club (2) on one side and the Art Deco residential-commercial complex Dhunraj Mahal (3) on the other towards Regal Circle (4; SP Mukherji Chowk). Dodge the traffic to reach the car park in the middle of the circle for the best view of the surrounding buildings, including the old Sailors Home (5), which dates from 1876 and is now the Maharashtra Police Headquarters, the Art Deco cinema Regal (6; p791) and the old Majestic Hotel (7), now the Sahakari Bhandar cooperative store.

Continue up MG Rd, past the beautifully restored façade of the Institute of Science (8). Opposite is the Chhatrapati Shivaji Maharaj Vastu Sangrahalaya (9; Prince of Wales Museum; p775); step into the front gardens to admire this grand building. Back across the road is the 'Romanesque Transitional' Elphinstone College (10) and the inviting David Sassoon Library (11), a good place to escape the heat of the day lazing on planters' chairs on the upper balcony.

Cross back over to Forbes St to visit the Keneseth Eliyahoo Synagogue (12; p775) before returning to MG Rd and continuing north along the left-hand side so you can admire the vertical Art Deco stylings of the New India Assurance Company Building (13). In a traffic island ahead lies the pretty Flora Fountain (14), named after the Roman goddess of abundance, and erected in 1869 in honour of Sir Bartle Frere, the Bombay governor responsible for dismantling the fort.

Turn east down Veer Nariman Rd walking towards St Thomas' Cathedral (15; p776). Ahead lies the stately Horniman Circle (16), an arcaded ring of buildings laid out in the 1860s around a circular and beautifully kept botanical garden. The circle is overlooked from the east by the neoclassical Town Hall (17), which contains the regally decorated members-only Asiatic Society of Bombay Library and Mumbai's State Central Library.

Retrace your steps back to Flora Fountain and continue west past the Venetian Gothic-style State Public Works Department (18). Turn south onto Bhaurao Patil Marg to see the august High Court (19; p775) and the equally venerable and ornately decorated University of Mumbai (20; p775). The façades of both buildings are best observed from within the Oval Maidan (21). Turn around to compare the colonial edifices with the row of Art Deco beauties lining Maharshi Karve (MK) Rd, culminating in the wedding cake tower of the Eros Cinema (22). End your walk at Churchgate station.

COURSES

Yoga

For serious students, yoga courses are held at the Kaivalyadhama Ishwardas Yogic Health Centre

(Map pp768-9; ☎ 22818417; www.kdham.com; 43 Marine Dr, Chowpatty; ⏰ 6.30-10am & 3.30-7pm Mon-Sat). Fees are a minimum Rs 300 (students Rs 220), plus Rs 400 extra for a monthly membership, and you are expected to attend a one-hour class, six days a week for at least three months.

The Yoga Institute (Map p785; ☎ 26122185; www.yogainstitute.org; Prabhat Colony, Shri Yogendra Marg, Santa Cruz) offers classes, some free, others from Rs 300/200 during your first/second month. The Yoga Studio (Map pp768-9; ☎ 24538852; 1st fl Delstar Bldg, 9-9A Patkar Marg, Kemp's Corner), recently opened by director Neetu Watamull, also has drop-in classes (Rs 150) in varying yoga styles with knowledgeable instructors. Monthly rates are Rs 1200.

Language

Professor Shukla is based at Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan (Map pp768-9; ☎ 23871860, 24968466; Dr KM Munshi Chowk, Sitaram Patkar Rd, Chowpatty), behind Wilson College, and offers private Hindi, Marathi and Sanskrit classes (Rs 500 per hour). Contact this worldly octogenarian directly to arrange a syllabus and class schedule to suit your needs.

MUMBAI FOR CHILDREN

Here are a few sure-fire recommendations on how to entertain the little darlings while in Mumbai.

For little tykes with energy to burn, visit Esselworld (Map p767; ☎ 28452222; Gorai Island, Borivali; admission adult/child Rs 325/260; ⏰ 11am-7pm) amusement park and Water Kingdom (☎ 28452310; admission Rs 340/270) next door. Both are well-maintained and clean, offer lots of rides, slides and have plenty of shade. It's a Rs 20 ferry ride from Marve Jetty near Malad.

Knock off a few pins at the Bowling Company (☎ 24914000; www.thebowlingcompany.com; High Street Phoenix, S B Marg, Lower Parel West; games Rs 59-199; ⏰ 11am-11pm daily) or take a trip in one of the horse-drawn gilded carriages (p774) that ply their trade along Apollo Bunder.

For a little more education with their recreation, several museums have kid-friendly exhibits, including Prince of Wales Museum (p775) with lots of stuffed animals, and Mani Bhavan (p778) with fascinating dioramas of Gandhi's life.

The Mumbai Zoo (p779) may be a little low on animals, but has lots of tidy and lush grounds as well as several kids' play areas. The Taraporewala Aquarium (Map pp768-9; ☎ 22082061; Chowpatty Beach; adult/child Rs 15/10; ⏰ 10am-7pm Tue-Sun) is a little sadder, with mostly unsigned, murky tanks. Kids still seem to dig it anyway.

TOURS

The best city tours are offered by Bombay Heritage Walks (☎ 23690992, 26835856; www.bombayheritagewalks.com), which is run by two enthusiastic female architects. There's often a monthly public Sunday walk (adult/student Rs 100/50) lasting no more than a couple of hours; otherwise private guided tours are Rs 2500 for up to five people.

Transway International (☎ 26146854; transintl@vsnl.com; ⏰ 8am-8pm) runs a Bombay by night tour (US$25) which includes the major sites, an

THE PARSI CONNECTION

Mumbai has a strong – but diminishing – Parsi community. The Parsis (descendants of Persian Zoroastrians who first migrated to India after persecution by the Muslims in the 7th century) settled in Bombay in the 17th and 18th centuries. They proved astute businesspeople, enjoyed a privileged relationship with the British colonial powers, and became a very powerful community in their own right while managing to remain aloof from politics.

With the departure of the British, the influence of the Parsis waned in Mumbai, although they continued to own land and established trusts and estates, or colonies, built around their temples, where many of the city's 60,000-plus Parsis still live.

Perhaps the most famous aspect of the Zoroastrian religion is its funerary methods. Parsis hold fire, earth and water sacred and do not cremate or bury their dead. Instead, the corpses are laid out within towers – known as Towers of Silence – to be picked clean by vultures. In Mumbai the Parsi Tower of Silence is on Malabar Hill (although it's strictly off limits to sightseers). But traditions are being eroded by a shortage of vultures around the city, due mainly to urban growth and pollution which has driven the birds away. This has meant that the Parsis have sometimes had to resort to artificially speeding up the natural decomposition of their dead with solar-powered heaters or chemical methods.

arts performance and a drop-off at the night club of your choice.

MTDC (p772) runs uninspiring bus tours of the city (Rs 150; Tuesday to Sunday) and one-hour open-deck bus tours of illuminated heritage buildings (Rs 90, weekdays/weekends 7pm/8:30pm). All depart from and can be booked near Apollo Bunder. More enjoyable are the 45-minute boat tours of the bay by night (Rs 60 to 75, between 5:30pm and 9pm) that also run from here. H20 (see p779) also arranges 45-minute day (Rs 180 per person, minimum six people) and night (Rs 280, between 7pm and 10pm) cruises.

The Government of India tourist office (p772) can arrange multilingual guides (per half-/full day Rs 350/500). Guides using a foreign language other than English are an extra Rs 180.

Cruises on Mumbai Harbour are a good way to escape the city and offer the chance to see the Gateway of India as it was intended. Short ferry rides (one hour) cost Rs 30 and depart from the Gateway of India.

If you want to do a cruise in luxury, hire the Taj Yacht (up to 12 people per hour Rs 12,000); contact the Taj Mahal Palace & Tower (p786) for details.

SLEEPING

You may need to recalibrate your budget upon arrival; Mumbai has the most expensive accommodation in India. Anything under Rs 1000 a double is considered budget here, while midrange options go up to Rs 7000. During the hectic Christmas and Diwali season you may be hard pressed to find a room.

Colaba is compact, has the liveliest foreigner scene and many of the budget and midrange options. The fort area is more spread-out and convenient to sights and the main train stations (CST and Churchgate). Most of the top-end places are dotted around the international and domestic airports, with a smattering of up-market hotels in the Juhu Beach area, convenient for visits to the trendy Bandra district.

To stay with a local family in the city, contact the Government of India tourist office (p772) for a list of homes participating in Mumbai's paying guest scheme. There's a hotel reservation desk (☎ 26164790; 24hr) in the arrivals hall of the domestic and international airports which can book hotels and arrange transfers.

Budget

Apart from Colaba and Fort there are some budget hotels in Vile Parle, a middle-class suburb adjoining the domestic airport, but they are fairly grotty and you'd be better off camping out at the airport for the night if needs be.

COLABA

For mapped locations of the following venues see Map p774.

Salvation Army Red Shield Hostel (☎ 22841824; 30 Mereweather Rd; dm with breakfast Rs 150, d/tr with full board Rs 600/897) This rock-bottom-priced hostel is a Mumbai institution popular with budget travellers counting every rupee. The large, ascetic dorms are reasonably clean, though bed bugs make the odd cameo appearance. It can fill up fast – come just after the 9am kick-out to ensure a spot as there are no reservations. Lockers are available for Rs 15 a day.

Sea Shore Hotel (☎ 22874237; 4th fl, Kamal Mansion, 1 Arthur Bunder Rd; s/d with shared bathroom Rs 375/400, s/d Rs 450/500) At the top of a building housing several budget guesthouses, the neat, intimate and friendly atmosphere makes up for shoe-box-sized rooms. It's worth paying that bit extra for a windowed room with harbour views. On the floor below, India Guest House (☎ 22833769; doubles with shared bathroom Rs 350 to 400) is an OK backup option, but a little low on charm.

Maria Lodge (☎ 22854081, 5/2 Grand Bldg, Arthur Bunder Rd; d without/with AC Rs 400/600;) A sprightly contender in the Colaba budget accommodation race, Maria's rooms may be Lilliputian, but each comes with it's own tiny bathroom and is kept ridiculously clean. The staff gets the thumbs up from travellers for big smiles and helpful advice.

Hotel Volga II (☎ 22885341; 1st fl, Rustam Manzil, Nawroji F Rd; s/d with shared bathroom Rs 500/600, d Rs 700, d AC & TV Rs 1000;) Someone went on a white-tile rampage in this small, ramshackle establishment. It's clean enough and will do the job if other cheapies are full.

YWCA (☎ 22025053; www.ywcaic.info; 18 Madame Cama Rd; dm/s Rs 652/750, s/d with AC Rs 871/1655;) This well-run place has spacious four-bed dorm rooms, which are a good deal considering rates include buffet breakfast and dinner. Other rooms are small but tidy, and they accept both men and women.

our pick Bentley's Hotel (☎ 22841474; www.bentleyshotel.com; 17 Oliver Rd; d incl breakfast & tax Rs 865-1600;) Bentley's wins the accolade for 'most charming budget option' yet another year running. Spread out over several buildings on Oliver St and nearby Henry Rd, all rooms are spotless and come with TV and optional AC (Rs 220 extra). Look at a few rooms as they come in dozens of sizes and flavours: the most expensive have colonial furniture and sweeping balconies overlooking a garden (rooms 31 and 21), while the cheaper options on Henry Rd are a bit noisier. Reservations recommended.

FORT AREA

For mapped locations of the following venues see Map p776.

Hotel New Bengal (☎ 23401951; Sitaram Bldg, Dr Dadabhai Naoroji Rd; s/d with shared bathroom from Rs 285/425, s/d with bathroom from Rs 650/700; ❄) This Bengali-run hotel occupies a rambling, maze-like building perennially buzzing with Indian businessmen. Rooms, slightly aged but tidy, are an excellent deal. Look at a few, as some have lots of natural light while others flirt with pokiness. It's right in the CST/Crawford Market area.

Hotel Lawrence (☎ 22843618; 3rd fl, ITTS House, 33 Sai Baba Marg; s/d/tr with shared bathroom incl breakfast & tax Rs 400/500/700) Once you get past the ominous-looking, red paan (mixture of betel but and leaves for chewing)–stained stairwell (à la B-grade slasher flick), be ready to be pleasantly surprised by basic, clean rooms and affable management. The foyer has fun, original '70s styling and the location can't be beat.

Hotel Outram (☎ 22094937; Marzaban Rd; small s/d with shared bathroom Rs 468/572, d with AC & bathroom Rs 1195; ❄) This plain but superfriendly place is in a quiet spot between CST and the maidans. Rooms with private bathroom are fairly clean but low on natural light.

Welcome Hotel (☎ 66314488; welcome_hotel@vsnl.com; 257 Colaba Causeway; s/d with shared bathroom from Rs 650/900, s/d from Rs 1000/1400; ❄) With a boggling array of single/double/bathroom/AC combinations, this fastidiously cared-for, marble-coated budget hotel boasts a foyer that adds some much-needed class to the budget category. The top floor rooms are very bright and have awesome views of CST.

Hotel City Palace (☎ 22615515; www.hotelcitypalace.net; 121 City Tce, W Hirachand Marg; economy s/d from Rs 675/875, larger s/d Rs 750/950; ❄) The rather cramped rooms are spotlessly clean and quiet, surprising given its location opposite rowdy CST. A do-able option if you're only in Mumbai for a night or two.

Hotel Oasis (☎ 22697887; www.hoteloasisindia.com; 276 Colaba Causeway; r Rs 780, with AC Rs 1065; ❄) This modern and fun-coloured skinny little hotel is a stone's throw from CST and has spick-and-span rooms, all with TV. Beware that

DHARAVI SLUM

An astonishing 55% of Mumbai's population live in shantytowns and slums, and the largest slum in Mumbai, and in all of Asia, is Dharavi.

Established in 1933 atop reclaimed marshland, it incorporates 1.7 sq km sandwiched between Mumbai's two major railway lines and is home to more than one million people. While it may look a bit shambled from the outside, the maze of dusty alleys and sewer-lined streets of this city-within-a-city are actually a collection of abutting settlements. In each part of the slum inhabitants from different parts of India, and with different trades, have set up homes and tiny factories. Potters from Saurasthra live in one area, Muslim tanners in another, embroidery workers from Uttar Pradesh work alongside metal-smiths, while other workers recycle plastics as women dry pappadams in the searing sun. Some of these thriving industries even export their wares: the annual turnover of business from Dharavi is thought to top US$650 million.

Up close, life in the slums seems strikingly normal. Residents pay rent, most houses have kitchens and electricity, and building materials range from flimsy corrugated-iron shacks to permanent, multistorey concrete structures.

Insightful tours of Dharavi are run by Reality Tours & Travel (Map p774; ☎ 9820822253; www.realitytoursandtravel.com; Unique Business Centre; 1st fl, Nawroji F Rd, Colaba), allowing you to gain a glimpse into this microcosm of Mumbai life. Tours cost Rs 300/600 by train/car and last 2½ to 4½ hours, photography is strictly forbidden and a significant part of the profits go to a Dharavi-based NGO.

Visits to such economically depressed areas can be a sensitive issue, and as a visitor you will need to make up your own mind whether to go at all. If you decide to use a tour company, do your research beforehand and make sure they adhere to ethically sound principles.

the singles are so small you can touch all four walls lying in bed.

Midrange

COLABA

For mapped locations of the following venues see Map p774.

Hotel Moti (☎ 22025714; hotelmotiinternational@yahoo.co.in; 10 Best Marg; s/d from Rs 1500/2000;) Occupying the ground floor of a gracefully crumbling colonial building, the rooms are a tad plain and shadowy, but absolutely huge and have some nice surprises – such as the ornate stucco ceilings. This place gets positive reports for friendliness.

Hotel Apollo (☎ 22873312; h.apollo@gmail.com; cnr Battery St & Mahakavi Bhushan Marg; s Rs 1850, d Rs 2300-2900;) Fresh from a trendy modern facelift, the rooms are simple and modestly sized but kept in mint condition and have 'party' showers big enough for two. Some doubles come with a bathtub.

Regent Hotel (☎ 22871853-4; www.regenthotelcolaba.com; 8 Best Marg; s/d incl breakfast & tax Rs 2600/2750;) This stylish, Arabian-flavoured hotel has marble surfaces a-plenty and an attractive 1st-floor café serving Middle Eastern–style tea. Rooms are comfortable with enclosed balconies.

Sea Palace Hotel (☎ 22841828; www.seapalacehotel.com; 26 PJ Ramchandani Marg; s/d from Rs 1700/3000;) This freshly renovated property has lots of modern rooms that are heavy on glitz but light on personality. The pricier rooms with sea-views are worth splurging on, and there's an enjoyable patio seating area downstairs looking out onto the sea.

Ascot Hotel (☎ 66385566; www.ascothotel.com; 38 Garden Rd; d incl breakfast & tax Rs 3500-3900;) The Ascot soothes you upon entry with contemporary blue-and-yellow tones and a fresh, uncluttered design. The rooms continue the tasteful scheme and are spacious, comfortable and boast decadent bathrooms with bathtubs.

Gordon House Hotel (☎ 22871122; www.ghhotel.com; 5 Battery St; incl breakfast s/d Rs 5500/6000, ste Rs 10,000;) This white, mausoleum-like boutique hotel has elegant rooms decorated in Mediterranean, Scandinavian or country styles. Just this side of kitsch, it's fun and has gizmos such as CD players and flat-screen TVs in all rooms. Rooms above its Poly Esther's nightclub (see p791) are noisy but available at a discount if you ask.

Fariyas Hotel (☎ 22042911; www.fariyas.com; 25 Off Arthur Bunder Rd; s/d from Rs 6000/7000;) Straddling the high-end category, this efficient and friendly hotel has dated furnishings, but the rooms are otherwise good. There's a small swimming pool on the 1st-floor terrace, a gym, a restaurant, nail-bar, wi-fi and the Tavern & Beyond pub.

FORT AREA

Residency Hotel (Map p776; ☎ 22625525; residencyhotel@vsnl.com; 26 Rustom Sidhwa Marg; s/d from Rs 1600/1700;) This is one of the few comfortable options in the heart of the Fort. It has a marble-clad lobby with friendly staff and speckless rooms decorated with Indian-themed paintings and bright curtains.

Grand Hotel (Map pp768-9; ☎ 22618211; www.grandhotelbombay.com; 17 Shri Shiv Sagar Ramgulam Marg, Ballard Estate; s/d from Rs 2000/2300;) The quiet but central location is the big draw, and while it fails to live up to its name, it's not too bad with tidy, dowdily furnished rooms.

West End Hotel (Map p776; ☎ 22039121; www.westendhotelmumbai.com; 45 New Marine Lines; s/d Rs 2800/3200;) You'd half expect Austin Powers to be swinging in this Hotel's grey-velour-lined bar, Chez Nous. The hotel has a funky but unintentionally retro feel, and the old-fashioned rooms are plain but roomy, with soft beds. There's wi-fi downstairs.

CHURCHGATE, MARINE DRIVE & KEMP'S CORNER

Hotel Kemp's Corner (Map pp768-9; ☎ 23634646; 131 August Kranti Marg; s/d from Rs 1200/1700;) With a great spot close to the multitude of fashion stores at Kemp's corner, you might forgive the curt staff and occasional carpet bald-spot of this old-fashioned place. It's worth forking out a bit more for the deluxe double rooms.

Astoria Hotel (Map p776; ☎ 22852626; astoria@hathway.com; Churchgate Reclamation, J Tata Rd, Churchgate; s/d from Rs 2500/3000;) This conveniently located, smartly refurbished hotel has immaculate rooms that almost live up to the promise of the sleek, modern lobby. Some of the abodes have room enough to swing two cats in and there's a restaurant with wi-fi.

Sea Green Hotel (Map p776; ☎ 22822294; www.seagreenhotel.com; 145 Marine Dr; s/d Rs 2000/2450;) and Sea Green South Hotel (Map p776; ☎ 22821613; www.seagreensouth.com; 145A Marine Dr; s/d Rs 2000/2450;) are identical Art Deco–styled hotels offering spacious but spartan AC rooms, originally built in the 1940s to house British soldiers. Ask for one of the sea-view rooms as they're the same price. A 20% tax is added to room rates.

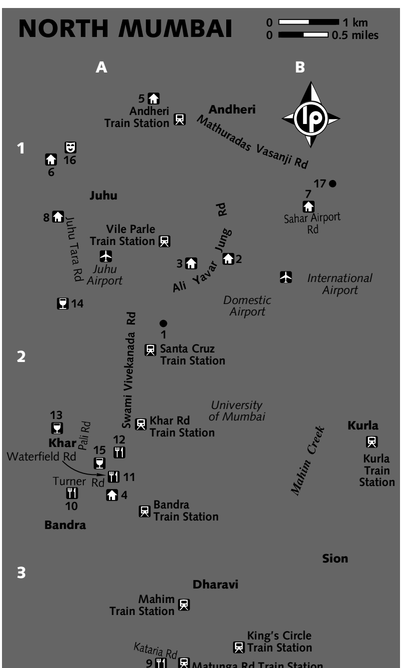
JUHU BEACH, BANDRA & AIRPORT AREA

There are half a dozen midrange hotels clustered on Nehru Rd Extension near the domestic airport, though rooms are overpriced and only useful for early or late flights. Juhu's beach area is more convenient for clubbing/culinary excursions to the suburb of Bandra. For mapped locations of the following venues see Map p785.



Iskcon (☎ 26206860; guesthouse.mumbai@pamho.net; 111 Hare Krishna Lane, Juhu; s/d incl tax Rs 1320/1584; with AC incl tax Rs 1452/1971;) This unique, flamingo-pink building, with undulating exterior walls, is part of a lively Hare Krishna complex. The high-rise is very efficiently managed and rooms are a fairly big and spick-and-span, with large balconies, but no TV or fridge. A good vegetarian buffet restaurant, Govinda's, is on site.

Hotel Columbus (☎ 26182029; hotel_columbus@rediffmail.com; 344 Nanda Patkar Rd, Vile Parle; s Rs 1650-2000, d Rs 2000-3000;) This is one of the few midrange hotels in the airport area we'd happily send our grandmother to. Be sure to avoid the slightly skanky budget rooms and opt for the gussied-up deluxe options with simple, bright furniture and fun colour highlights.

Hotel Metro Palace (☎ 26427311; www.uniquehotelsindia.com; Ramdas Nayak Rd, Bandra; s/d from Rs 2200/2600;) One of the only options in the modish Bandra area that doesn't quote it's prices in US dollars, the rooms are very comfortable, have balconies and lovingly conserved flourishes of '80s décor. There is a small army of a superefficient staff on call.

Hotel Airport International (☎ 26182222; www.hotelairport.net; Nehru Rd, Vile Parle; s/d from Rs 2700/3700;) The pick of the bunch among cheaper airport hotels, it's so close to the domestic airport you can see the runway from most rooms. The decent rooms are clean but decorated in dowdy colours.

Hotel Suba Galaxy (☎ 26831188; www.hotelsubagalaxy.com; NS Phadke Rd, Andheri; s/d Rs 2500/3600;) This brand new, efficient and business-focused tower is 4km from the airport and offers ultramodern rooms, all nicely finished in dark wood and glass. It's got all the mod cons, with flat-screen TVs and broadband in each room. Oh, and lots of fluffy pillows.

COLABA

our pick Taj Mahal Palace & Tower (Map p774; ☎ 66653366; www.tajhotels.com; Apollo Bunder, Colaba; tower rooms s/d from US$325/350, palace rooms from US$475/500;) A Mumbai landmark since 1903, this distinguished hotel is a world of sweeping arches, staircases and domes, all very far away from the flurry of Colaba life. Every conceivable facility is found within, including superb restaurants, miles of luxury shops, a large outdoor pool, spa, gymnasium, the nightclub Insomnia (p791), even a resident fortune-teller. The plush, heritage-themed rooms in the palace complex are the ones to go for if you want real decadence, although the rooms in the newer tower have better views.

MARINE DRIVE

Marine Plaza (Map p776; ☎ 22851212; hotelmarineplaza@vsnl.com; 29 Marine Dr, Nariman Point; d from US$250;) An appealing and showy boutique five-star hotel with Art Deco flourishes and stylish rooms. The rooftop swimming pool has a glass bottom that looks down on the foyer five floors below! The hotel also has a gym, wi-fi, two restaurants and the popular Boston-style Geoffrey's Bar.

Intercontinental (Map p776; ☎ 39879999; www.intercontinental.com; 135 Marine Dr, Churchgate; d incl breakfast from US$315;) You'll want to pay a little extra for the splendid sea views at this sophisticated boutique-style hotel. With equally stylish rooms, the cherry on the cake is the smart bar Dome (p789), which elegantly crowns the rooftop.

Hilton Towers (Map pp768-9; ☎ 66324343; www.hilton.com; Marine Dr, Nariman Point; s/d from US$259/279;) The Hilton Towers (once the Oberoi Towers) wins out over its neighbour, the Oberoi, both on price and the spiffy design of its restaurants, bars and pool area. Although managed separately, both hotels still share facilities so you can wander happily between the two.

BANDRA, JUHU BEACH & AIRPORT AREA

ITC Hotel Grand Maratha Sheraton & Towers (Map p785; ☎ 28303030; www.itcwelcomgroup.in; Sahar Airport Rd, Andheri; s/d incl breakfast & tax from US$250/275;) Easily the hotel in this area with the most luxurious Indian character, from the Jaipur-style lattice windows around the atrium to the silk pillows on the beds and the embalmed palms in the lobby. It's right outside the international airport and has an excellent spa and the celebrated restaurant Peshawri (p789).

JW Marriott (Map p785; ☎ 66933000; mail@jwmarriottmumbai.com; Juhu Tara Rd, Juhu; d incl tax from US$269;) Smack in the middle of Juhu Beach is this monument to luxury hotels, sporting no fewer than three pools, one of them filled with heavily filtered sea water. There's a bright foyer encasing a lily pond and the rooms leave little to be desired.

EATING

Munching in Mumbai is a treat. Food options in the metropolis are as diverse as the squillion inhabitants – go on a cultural history tour by sampling Parsi dhansak (meat with curried lentils and rice), Gujarati or Keralan thalis ('all-you-can-eat' meals) and everything from Muslim kebabs to Goan vindaloo to Mangalorean seafood. If you find Bombay duck on a menu, remember it's actually bombil fish dried in the sun and deep-fried.

Don't miss Mumbai's famous bhelpuri; readily available at Chowpatty Beach or at the excellent Swati Snacks (p788). During the Islamic holy month of Ramadan, fantastic night food markets line Mohammed Ali and Merchant Rds in Kalbadevi. Street stalls offering rice plates, samosas and pav bhaji (spiced vegetables and bread) for around Rs 15 do a brisk trade around the city.

If you're self-catering try the Colaba market (Map p774; Lala Nigam St) for fresh fruit and vegetables. The Saharkari Bhandar Supermarket (Map p774; cnr Colaba Causeway & Wodehouse Rd) and Suryodaya (Map p776; Veer Nariman Rd; 7.30am-8.30pm), are well-stocked supermarkets.

For mapped locations of the following venues see Map p774.

Laxmi Villas (19A Ram Mansion, Nawroji F Rd; mains Rs 12-70) A budget eatery that serves great southern specialities in comfortable, modern, AC surrounds? Stranger things have happened. Dosas are the speciality, one reader even wrote in 'we still dream of the meals we ate there.'

Theobroma (Colaba Causeway, Colaba; cakes Rs 40-60) There are dozens of perfectly executed cakes to choose from at this top-notch bakery, as well as pastries and breads to be washed down with coffee. All the cakes are supposedly great, we can't know for sure – we could never go past the lavish chocolate truffle (Rs 50).

our pick Bade Miya (Tulloch Rd; meals Rs 40-60; dinner) As Mumbai as traffic jams, this street-stall-on-steroids buzzes nightly with punters from all walks of Mumbai life lining up for spicy, fresh grilled treats. Grab a chicken tikka roll to go, or snap up one of makeshift street-side tables to sample the boti kebab (lamb kebab) or paneer masala (cheese and tomato curry).

Kailash Parbat (5 Sheela Mahal, 1st Pasta Lane; mains Rs 50-80) Nothing fancy, but a Mumbai legend nonetheless thanks to its inexpensive Sindhi-influenced vegetarian snacks, mouth-watering sweets and extra-spicy masala chai.

Café Churchill (103B Colaba Causeway; sandwiches Rs 50-90) This tiny, packed place with booth seating does Western comfort food better than most, all served in fiercely-arctic AC. Grab a sandwich or a pasta and finish up with one of its 'happy endings.' Um, dessert that is.

Indigo Delicatessen (Pheroze Bldg, Shivaji Marg; mains Rs 235-350) This new place near Indigo has breakfast anytime (Rs 115 to 185), more casual meals and a selection of imported cheeses (at imported prices), breads and desserts.

Basilico (☎ 67039999; Sentinel House, Arthur Bunder Rd; mains Rs 265-320) A modish, Euro-style bistro, deli and bakery, this place whips up creative fresh pastas, salads and risottos almost as good as mamma used to make. There's lots of veggie options too, such as the yummy conchiglie pasta, with roast zucchini, peppers and garlic (Rs 255).

our pick Indigo (☎ 66368980; 4 Mandlik Marg; mains Rs 485-685; lunch & dinner) The finest eating option in Colaba, and possibly Mumbai, Indigo offers inventive European cuisine, a long wine list and a sleek ambience including a roof deck lit with fairy lights. The appetizer of lobster brusque with Cajun shrimp crackling appetizer (Rs 345) is a long-time favourite. Bookings are essential, but if the restaurant is full you can always hang out with the in crowd at the bar.

Also recommended:

Delhi Darbar (Holland House, Colaba Causeway; mains Rs 80-180; lunch & dinner) Excellent Mughlai and tandoori restaurant.

Ming Palace (Colaba Causeway; mains Rs 150-305; lunch & dinner) Quality Chinese, Korean and Japanese food with gargantuan portions.

Kala Ghoda & Fort Area

Rajdhani (Map pp768-9; 361 Sheikh Memon St, Kalbadevthali; thali Rs 25) This smart place, opposite Mangaldaas Market, is a great spot to refuel on a tasty thali while shopping in the Crawford Market area.

National Hindu Hotel (Map p776; 1st flr, cnr Colaba Causeway & Mint Rd; thali Rs 25; lunch & dinner) Keralan run, this concealed, no-frills and grittily authentic working-man's eatery serves nothing but finger-licking (there are no utensils), all-you-can-eat thalis. Expect a fast-moving line out the door and rows of benches inside. Just find a spare seat, say hello to your neighbour, and wait for wandering staff to fill your banana leaf to the brim.

Mocambo Café & Bar (Map p776; 23A Sir P Mehta Rd, Fort; mains Rs 50-170) A modern, convivial and convenient spot for breakfast, sandwiches, a main meal or a cold beer. It has a huge Indian and Western menu, but the breakfast egg-and-brain fry (with fries! Rs 75) may only be for culinary adrenalin junkies.

Mahesh Lunch Home (Map p776; 8B Cowasji Patel St, Fort; mains Rs 70-180; lunch & dinner) A modern version of a hole-in-the-wall come good, this is the place to try Mangalorean seafood at budget prices. It's renowned for its ladyfish, pomfret, lobster and crabs, and its rawas tikka (marinated white salmon) and tandoori pomfret are outstanding.

DHABA-WALLAS

A small miracle of logistics, Mumbai's 5000 dhaba (snack bars)–wallahs (also called tiffin-wallahs) work tirelessly to deliver hot lunches to hungry office workers throughout the city.

Lunch boxes are picked up each day from restaurants, homes, doting mothers and wives and carried in their hundreds on heads, bicycles and trains. Taken to a centralised sorting station, a sophisticated system of numbers and colours (many wallahs are illiterate) is then used to determine where every lunch must end up. More than 200,000 meals are delivered in Mumbai in this way – always on time, come (monsoon) rain or (searing) shine.

This same intricate supply-chain system has been used for centuries, and wallahs are known to take immense pride in their work. Considering that on average only about one mistake is made every six-million deliveries, they have certainly earned our pat on the back.

Trishna (Map p776; ☎ 22614991; Sai Baba Marg, Kala Ghoda; mains Rs 300-500; ⏲ lunch & dinner) We have it on good authority that this might just be the best seafood in town. Specialising in Mangalorean preparations, the crab with butter, pepper and garlic and various shrimp dishes, all brought to your table for inspection, are excellent.

Khyber (Map p776; ⏲ 22673227; 145 MG Rd, Fort; mains Rs 330-600; ⏲ lunch & dinner) Khyber serves up Punjabi and other North Indian dishes in moody, burnt-orange, Afghan-inspired interiors to a who's who of Mumbai's elite. The food is some of the best the city has to offer, with the meat-centric menu wandering from kebabs, to biryanis, to it's pièce de résistance, raan (a whole leg of slow-cooked lamb).

Also recommended are the following:

Badshah Snacks & Drinks (Map pp768-9; snacks Rs 15-70) Serving snacks and fruit juices (Rs 29 to 85) to hungry bargain-hunters for more than 100 years; opposite Crawford Market.

Ideal Corner (Map p776; Gunbow St, Fort; mains Rs 30-65; ⏲ breakfast & lunch Mon-Fri) A classic Parsi café serving a different menu daily.

Churchgate

For mapped locations of the following venues see Map p776.

Tea Centre (78 Veer Nariman Rd; mains Rs 60-130, set lunch Rs 200) A great place to try out some of India's premium teas, as well as sample some excellent light meals and snacks, this is a serene, colonial-meets-contemporary place with severe AC.

Samrat (Prem Ct, J Tata Rd; mains Rs 80-200; ⏲ lunch & dinner) A busy traditional Indian vegetarian restaurant; one of three premises at the same location run by the same company. Relish (mains Rs 65 to 130) is the funkier cousin (open lunch and dinner) with dishes ranging from Lebanese platters to Mexican, while 210° C is an outdoor café and bakery (pastries from Rs 10; open noon to 11pm).

Pizzeria (Soona Mahal, 143 Marine Dr; pizzas Rs 110-350; ⏲ lunch & dinner) Serves up passable pizza-pies with ocean views the main draw.

Gaylord (☎ 22821259; Veer Nariman Rd; meals Rs 125-550; ⏲ lunch & dinner) Great North Indian dishes served with over-the-top, Raj-era styles dining replete with tuxedo-wearing waiters hanging on your every gesture. It also serves domestic and imported wines (Rs 125 to 550 per glass).

Chowpatty Beach & Around

For mapped locations of the following venues see Map pp768–9.

The evening stalls at Bhel Plaza on Chowpatty Beach are the most atmospheric spots to snack on bhelpuri (Rs 10) or panipuri (small crisp puffs of dough filled with spicy tamarind water and sprouted gram; Rs 20).

Swati Snacks (248 Karai Estate, Tardeo Rd, Tardeo; mains Rs 35-70; ⏲ lunch & dinner) This bustling old-timer has been revamped as a modern cafeteria for discerning grown-ups (all stainless steel and smooth wood). Try out the delicious bhelpuri, panki chatni (savoury pancake steamed in a banana leaf) and homemade ice cream in delectable flavour combinations such as rose-coconut-pineapple (Rs 40). Don't leave Mumbai without snacking here.

Anantashram (46 Kotachiwadi, Girgaum; ⏲ lunch & dinner Mon-Sat) This no-frills restaurant is as renowned for its spartan décor and surliness of its staff as for its supremely delicious cooking and thali meals. Look for it down a small maze of laneways.

Cream Centre (☎ 23679222; 25B Chowpatty Seaface; mains Rs 85-139; ⏲ lunch & dinner) With a slick, modern-art-adorned interior, it's only fitting that the fusion menu is equally original. Enjoy pure veg dishes and such hybrids as Indian Mexican cuisine, and of course there's an excellent ice-cream parlour.

Speaking of ice cream, try out these two places to cool off after a Chowpatty stroll:

New Kulfi Centre (cnr Chowpatty Seaface & Sardar V Patel Rd; kulfi per 100gm Rs 17-35; ⏲ lunch & dinner) Serves kulfi, a pistachio-flavoured sweet similar to ice cream.

Gelato Italiano (Chowpatty Seaface; scoop Rs 29-49; ⏲ lunch & dinner) Flavours such as custard apple sorbetto or limoncello, yum.

North Mumbai

North Mumbai's centres of gravity as far as trendy dining and drinking are concerned lie in Bandra West and Juhu. For mapped locations of the following venues see Map p785.

Culture Curry (Kataria Rd; dishes Rs 70-200; ⏲ lunch & dinner) Next door to Goa Potuguesa (below) and run by the same folk, this restaurant offers curries from around India. Guitar-strumming musicians and singers wander between the two connected spaces.

Goa Portuguesa (www.goaportuguesa.com; Kataria Rd, Mahim; dishes Rs 90-200; ⏲ lunch & dinner) As good as making a trip to Goa is a visit to this fun restaurant, which specialises in the fiery dishes of the former Portuguese colony.

Pot Pourri (Carlton Ct, cnr of Turner & Pali Rds, Bandra West; mains Rs 100-260; lunch & dinner) In a great corner from which to peruse Bandra streetlife, decent Western-style cuisine is dished up here – everything from Highland Scotch broth to its famed chicken stroganoff (Rs 190). The reasonable prices scoff at much spendier Bandra establishments.

Sheesha (7th flr, Shoppers Stop, Linking Rd; dishes around Rs 120-230; lunch & dinner) This funky, roof-top place pays token homage to the Middle East, and is strewn with curvy concrete lounges and cushions ideal for elegant slumming. The food is good but almost secondary to the ambience, with Indian fare mixed alongside Arabic dishes such as kebabs (Rs 120 to 240).

Seíjo & the Soul Dish (☎ 26405555; 206 Patkar Marg, Bandra; mains Rs 235-885; dinner) Serving some of the best pan-Asian fusion dishes around, it's worth coming to this über-hip joint just for the Bladerunner-meets-Sushi-bar design concept alone. The surreal, freestanding, egg-shaped loos inside the main dining room will leave you with lots to talk about over sushi, noodles or a Thai curry.

Peshawri (☎ 28303030; ITC Hotel Grand Maratha Sheraton & Towers, Sahar Airport Rd; mains Rs 400-1000; dinner) Make this Indian North-West Frontier restaurant, conveniently located just outside the international airport, your first or last stop in Mumbai. You will not regret forking out for the sublime leg of spring lamb and amazing dhal Bukhara (a thick black dhal cooked for more than a day!).

DRINKING

Mumbai's lax attitude to alcohol offers up loads of places to get nicely inebriated – from hole-in-the-wall beer bars to brash, multilevel superclubs. Expect to pay around Rs 80 to 130 for a bottle of Kingfisher in a bar or restaurant, a lot more in a club or fashionable watering-hole.

Cafés

Mocha Bar (Map p776; 82 Veer Nariman Rd, Churchgate; 9am-12:30am) This atmospheric, Arabian-styled café is often filled to the brim with bohemians and students deep in esoteric conversation, or maybe just the latest Bollywood gossip. Cosy, low-cushioned seating, hookah pipes, exotic coffee varieties and world music add up to longer stays than you expected.

Samovar Café (Map p776; Jehangir Art Gallery, 161B MG Rd, Kala Ghoda; 11am-7pm Mon-Sat) This intimate place inside the art gallery overlooks the gardens of the Prince of Wales Museum and is a great spot to chill out over a beer, mango lassi (Rs 50) or light meal.

The Rs 5 chai-wallahs are still out there, but fancy 'espresso-bars' are where Mumbaikers head for their caffeine jolt these days. Barista and Café Coffee Day vie for dominance across the city in a race to out-Starbucks each other. Barista (Colaba Map p774; Colaba Causeway; Colaba Map p774; Arthur Bunder Rd; near CST Map p776; Marzaban Rd) seems to be winning, with slightly more stylish pristine orange- and cream-coloured surroundings, but Café Coffee Day (Map pp768-9; Chowpatty Seaface) is not far behind.

The spiffy Cha Bar (Map p776; 66354477; Apeejay House, 3 Dinsha Wachha Marg, Churchgate; 10am-10pm) at Oxford Bookstore also serves an inspiring range of teas and tasty snacks.

Bars

COLABA & AROUND

For mapped locations of the following venues see Map p774.

Leopold's Café (cnr Colaba Causeway & Nawroji F Rd; 7.30am-12:30am) Drawn like moths to a Kingfisher flame, most tourists end up at this Mumbai travellers' institution at one time or another. Around since 1871, Leopold's has wobbly ceiling fans, open-plan seating and a rambunctious atmosphere conducive to swapping tales with random strangers. Although there's a huge menu, it's the lazy evening beers that are the real draw.

Busaba (☎ 22043779; 4 Mandlik Marg; noon-3pm & 7pm-12.30am;) Red walls, framed postcards and old photos give this loungey restaurant-bar a bohemian feel. It's next to Indigo so gets the same trendy crowd, but serves cheaper, more potent cocktails.

Café Mondegar (Metro House, 5A Colaba Causeway; 8:30am-11:30pm) Mondegar's nightly traveller-based crowd is as 'colourful' as the wall caricatures by a famous Goan artist, but that could be our beer-goggles talking. Expect to shout your draught beer orders over the popular, nonstop CD jukebox.

Henry Tham's (☎ 22023186; Apollo Bunder; 7pm-1:30am) This superswanky bar-cum-restaurant features towering ceilings, gratuitous use of space and strategically placed minimalist décor. It's the currently darling of the Mumbai jet set and therefore the place to see and be seen. To

STAR STRUCK

Mumbai (Bombay) is home of the glitz and glamour of Bollywood (see p778); be sure to study up on some of the industry's A-list players:

- Saif Ali Khan: Dashing son of the Nawab (Prince) of Pataudi, this debonair actor is India's latest homegrown heart-throb.
- Amitabh Bachchan: Now in his 60s, the face of this white-bearded action-film legend graces half the movie-posters and billboards in the country.
- Raj Kapoor: Actor, producer, director and all-round, old-school megastar.
- Salman Khan: An infamous Bolly-bad-boy who plays the quintessential romantic hero onscreen.
- Rani Mukerji: A starlet with classic looks and a real passion for her roles.
- Aishwarya Rai: A former Miss World who has since become one of Bollywood's brightest stars.
- Shah Rukh Khan: Classically trained in theatre, he's a versatile actor with chiselled good looks.

And if you hang out long enough at any of these swanky establishments, you too can rub shoulders with India's celluloid jet-set:

- Henry Tham's (p789)
- Dome (below)
- Vie Lounge (below)
- Zenzi (below)
- Insomnia (opposite)

find it, look for the monolithic door – thankfully opened by a doorman.

Gokul Bar (Tulloch Rd; 11am-1.30am) This classic, workin' man's Indian drinking den can get pretty lively and the beer is cheap (starting at Rs 60). There's an AC section upstairs where the real boozers hang out.

MARINE DRIVE, BREACH CANDY & LOWER PAREL

Ghetto (Map pp768-9; 23538418; 30B Bhulabhai Desai Marg, Mahalaxmi; 7pm-1.30am) Mumbai's best and only real dive bar, this smoke-filled, graffiti-covered rocker's hang-out blares rock nightly to a dedicated set of regulars. International movies are screened (for free) every Monday night.

Saltwater Grill (Map pp768-9; Chowpatty Seaface, Chowpatty; 7:30pm-1:30am) As close as you can get to Mumbai's ocean without swimming in it, this beach bar sits cocooned by it's own palm-frond jungle. Right next to H20, it's a prime contender for the title of 'ultimate sundowner cocktail venue.'

Dome (Map p776; 39879999, ext 8872; Hotel Intercontinental, 135 Marine Dr, Churchgate; 6pm-1:30am) What may be the swishest hotel bar in town, this white-on-white rooftop drinking lounge has awesome views of Mumbai's curving seafront. Cocktails beckon the hip young things of Mumbai nightly – get out your Bollywood star-spotting logbook.

BANDRA & JUHU

Vie Lounge (Map p785; 26603003; Juhu Tara Rd, Juhu; 7pm-1.30am) Right on Juhu Beach is this glamorous party spot (opposite Little Italy restaurant). Call before dragging yourself all the way out here to check there isn't a private Bollywood bash on.

Zenzi (Map p785; 56430670; 183 Waterfield Rd, Bandra West; 11:30am-1.30am) This superstylin' hang-out pad is a favourite among starlet wannabes and well-heeled expats. Comfy lounges are frequently visited by efficient and chatty service and the burnt orange décor is warmly bathed in soft lighting. It's at its best when the canopy is open to the stars after the monsoon season.

Olive Bar & Kitchen (Map p785; 26058228; Pali Hill Tourist Hotel, 14 Union Park, Khar; 7.30pm-12.30am) Hip and snooty, this Mediterranean-style restaurant and bar has light and delicious food, soothing DJ sounds and pure Ibiza décor. Thursday is packed: it's the new Saturday, though Saturday hasn't heard the news.

ENTERTAINMENT

The daily English-language tabloid Mid-Day incorporates the List, a guide to Mumbai entertainment. Newspapers have information on mainstream events and film screenings as does Time Out Mumbai (p771). You should also check out www.gigpad.com for live music listings in Mumbai.

Nightclubs

The big nights in clubs are Wednesday, Friday and Saturday when there's usually a cover charge. Dress codes apply so don't rock up in shorts and sandals.

Insomnia (Map p774; ☎ 66666653; Taj Mahal Palace & Tower, Apollo Bunder, Colaba; 🕑 8pm-3am) For Bollywood star-spotting, ultrachic Insomnia remains the place to be seen dropping some serious dough. It doesn't get going till after midnight and the minimum drinks spend is a hefty Rs 600 (Rs 1600 on Friday and Saturday).

Ra (☎ 66614343; Phoenix Mills, 462 Senapati Bapat Marg, Lower Parel; minimum bar tab Rs 1500; 🕑 9pm-1.30am Wed-Sat) If you were wondering where the city's beautiful people come to shake their money-makers, wonder no more. Ra's glass roof opens wide to the stars, and your wallet will open even wider to pay for it's top-notch cocktails. It's in the Phoenix Mills shopping complex, 1km north of Mahalaxmi Racecourse.

Polly Esther's (Map p774; ☎ 22871122; Gordon House Hotel, 5 Battery St, Colaba; cover per couple Rs 600-1000; 🕑 8.30am-1am Tue-Sat) Wallowing in a cheesy time-warp of retro pop, rock and disco, the Gordon House Hotel's mirror-plated, groovy nightclub still manages to pull a crowd. It comes complete with a Saturday Night Fever illuminated dance floor and waiters in Afro wigs.

Red Light (Map p776; ☎ 56346249; 145 MG Rd, Fort; cover Rs 300; 🕑 7pm-midnight) This very trendy bar is a huge hit with Mumbai's student scene, particularly on Wednesday when its thumping hip-hop sessions are on. The fun-house-mirror trip to the loos is not for the faint hearted.

Voodoo Pub (Map p774; ☎ 22841959; 2/5 Kamal Mansion, Arthur Bunder Rd, Colaba; cover Rs 200; 🕑 8pm-1.30am) Famous for hosting Mumbai's only regular gay night (Saturday), this dark and sweaty bar has little going for it on other nights of the week.

Cinema

Going to see a movie in India's film capital is practically mandatory; with well over 100 cinemas around the city there's no excuse not to. Try the following:

Eros (Map p776; ☎ 22822335; MK Rd, Churchgate; tickets Rs 40-100) For Bollywood blockbusters.

Metro (Map p776; ☎ 22030303; MG Rd, New Marine Lines, Fort; tickets Rs 40-100) Also for Bollywood blockbusters.

Regal (Map p774; ☎ 22021017; Colaba Causeway, Colaba; tickets Rs 70-150) Art Deco cinema showing brash Bollywood hits and the occasional Hollywood tripe.

Sterling (Map p776; ☎ 22075187; Marzaban Rd, Fort; tickets Rs 60-87) First-run English-language movies.

Music, Dance & Theatre

Not Just Jazz By the Bay (Map p776; ☎ 22851876; 143 Marine Dr; admission singles/couple Rs 200/300; 🕑 6pm-2am) This is the best, and frankly the only, jazz club in South Mumbai. True to its name, there are also live pop, blues and rock performers most nights, though Sunday- or Monday-night karaoke might be best avoided.

National Centre for the Performing Arts (NCPA; Map pp768-9; ☎ 22833737; www.tata.com/ncpa; cnr Marine Dr & Sri V Saha Rd, Nariman Point; tickets Rs 40-280) This is the hub of Mumbai's music, theatre and dance scene. In any given week, it might host Marathi theatre, dance troupes from Bihar, ensembles from Europe and Indian classical music. The Tata Theatre here occasionally has English-language plays. Many performances are free. The box office (☎ 22824567; open 9am to 1.30pm and 4.30pm to 6.30pm) is at the end of NCPA Marg.

Nehru Centre (☎ 24964676-80; www.nehrucentre mumbai.com; Dr Annie Besant Rd, Worli) Stages occasional dance, music and English-language theatre performances.

Prithvi Theatre (Map p785; ☎ 26149546; www.prithvitheatre.org; Juhu Church Rd, Vile Parle) At Juhu Beach, this is a good place to see both English-language and Hindi theatre. It hosts an annual international theatre festival.

Sport

CRICKET

The cricket season runs from October to April. Test matches and One Day Internationals are played a handful of times a year at Wankhede Stadium (Map p776; ☎ 22811795; mcacrick@vsnl.com; D Rd, Churchgate). To buy tickets apply in writing well in advance. One-day match tickets start at Rs 150, for a test match you'll have to pay for the full five days – around Rs 700 for general admission, up to Rs 10,000 for the members stand (replete with lunch and afternoon tea). State match tickets (Rs 25) are available at the gate.

HORSE RACING

Mumbai's horse-racing season runs from November to the end of April.

Mahalaxmi Racecourse (Map pp768-9; ☎ 23071401) Races are held on Sunday and Thursday afternoons (Saturday and Sunday towards the end of the season). Big races, such as the Indian Derby in February, are major social occasions. Entry to the public enclosure costs Rs 30.

FOOTBALL

The Cooperage Football Ground (Map p774; ☎ 220 24020; MK Rd, Colaba; tickets Rs 50) is home to the Mumbai Football Association and hosts national- and state-league soccer matches between November and February. Tickets are available at the gate.

SHOPPING

Mumbai is India's great marketplace, with some of the best shopping in the country. Colaba Street Market lines Colaba Causeway with hawkers' stalls and shops selling garments, perfumes and knick-knacks. Electronic gear, pirated CDs and DVDs, leather goods and mass-produced gizmos are for sale at stalls on Dr Dadabhai Naoroji Rd between CST and Flora Fountain, and along MG Rd from Flora Fountain to Kala Ghoda.

Antiques & Curios

Small antique and curio shops line Merewether Rd behind the Taj Mahal Palace & Tower (see Map p774). Prices aren't cheap, but the quality is definitely a step up from government emporiums.

If you prefer Raj-era bric-a-brac, head to Chor Bazaar (Map pp768–9; opposite); the main area of activity is Mutton St where you'll find a row of shops specialising in antiques (many ingenious reproductions, so beware) and miscellaneous junk.

Mini Market (Map pp768-9; ☎ 23472427; 33/31 Mutton St; 🕑 11am-8pm Sat-Thu) Sells original vintage Bollywood posters and other movie ephemera as well as many trinkets.

Phillips (Map p774; ☎ 22020564; www.phillipsantiques.com; Woodhouse Rd, Colaba; 🕑 10am-1.30pm & 2.30-7pm Mon-Sat) Opposite the Regal cinema, this long-running antique shop is known for its quality prints, silver, brassware and glass lamps – all late Victorian.

Fashion

Snap up a bargain backpacking wardrobe at Fashion Street Market, the cheap stalls lining MG Rd between Cross and Azad maidans (Map p776). Hone your bargaining skills.

Designer clobber can be bought at boutiques near Kemp's Corner. Pieces by Indian designers sell for half the price of off-the-shelf gear back home.

Courtyard (Map p774; SP Centre, 41/44 Minoo Desai Marg; 🕑 11am-7.30pm) This collection of boutiques is Mumbai's fashion nexus, with appealing, keenly priced couture clothes, shoes and interior goods by top local designers such as Narendra Kumar and the Gaultier-goes-to-Bollywood look of Manish Arora.

Fabindia (Map p776; Jeroo Bldg, 137 MG Rd, Kala Ghoda; 🕑 10am-7.45pm Tue-Sun) All the vibrant colours of the country are represented in the top-quality, keenly priced cotton and silk fashions, materials and homewares of this modern Indian shop.

Kala Niketan (Map p776; ☎ 22005001; www.kalaniketangroup.com; 95 MK Rd; 🕑 12:30pm-11:30pm) The pick of the bunch of Sari shops lining this part of Queens Rd, the helpful staff will help you sort through the sari-madness. Prices range from Rs 500 all the way to Rs 80,000.

Also recommended are the following:

Kashmir Government Arts Emporium (Map p776; ☎ 22663822; Sir P Mehta Rd, Fort; ⏰ 10am-7pm Mon-Sat)

Uttar Pradesh Handicrafts Emporium (Map p776; ☎ 22662702; Sir P Mehta Rd, Fort; ⏰ 10.30am-7.30pm Mon-Sat)

Markets

You can buy just about anything in the dense bazaars north of the Fort (see Map pp768–9). The main areas are Crawford Market (fruit and veg), Mangaldas Market (silk and cloth), Zaveri Bazaar (jewellery), Bhuleshwar Market (fruit and veg) and Chor Bazaar (antiques and furniture), where Dhabu St is worth a peek for leather goods, and Mutton St specialises in antiques, reproductions and junk.

Colourful Crawford Market (officially called Mahatma Phule Market) is the last outpost of British Bombay before the tumult of the central bazaars begins. Bas-reliefs by Rudyard Kipling's father, Lockwood Kipling, adorn the Norman-Gothic exterior. The meat market is strictly for the brave; it's one of the few places you can expect to be accosted and asked to buy a bloody goat's head.

THIEVES BAZAAR

Nobody is sure exactly how Mumbai's Chor Bazaar (literally 'thieves market') earned its moniker. One popular explanation has it that Queen Victoria, upon arrival to Mumbai in her steam ship, discovered that her violin/purse/jewellery went missing while being unloaded off the ship. Having scoured the city, the missing item was supposedly found hanging in Chor Bazaar's Mutton St, and hence the name.

Music

LM Furtado & Co (Map pp768-9; ☎ 22013163; 540-544 Kalbadevi Rd, Kalbadevi; ⏰ 10am-8pm Mon-Sat) The best place in Mumbai for musical instruments – sitars, tablas, accordions and local and imported guitars. It also has a branch around the corner on Lokmanya Tilak Rd.

Poor-quality pirated CDs and DVDs are available on the street for around Rs 200. If you want quality discs, drop by at either Planet M (Map p776; ☎ 66353872; Dr Dadabhai Naoroji Rd, Fort; ⏰ 11am-9pm Mon-Sat, noon-8pm Sun) or Rhythm House (Map p776; ⏰ 22842835; 40 K Dubash Marg, Fort; ⏰ 10am-8.30pm Mon-Sat, 11am-8.30pm Sun).

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Air

AIRPORTS

Mumbai is the main international gateway to South India and has the busiest network of domestic flights. The international airport (☎ 26829000; www.mumbaiairport.com), officially renamed Chhatrapati Shivaji but still known as Sahar, is 4km away from the domestic airport, also called Chhatrapati Shivaji but known as Santa Cruz. A free shuttle bus runs between the airports, which are 30km and 26km north of Nariman Point in downtown Mumbai.

The international airport has two arrivals halls which have foreign-exchange counters offering reasonable rates, a Government of India tourist office booth (☎ 2615660, ext 4700; Arrival Hall 2A), a hotel reservation desk (☎ 66048772) and a prepaid taxi booth – all open 24 hours.

The domestic airport (☎ 26156600) has two terminals with foreign-exchange bureaus, ticketing counters and a restaurant-bar. The Government of India tourist office booth is in terminal B. Note that flights on domestic sectors of Air India routes depart from the international airport.

INTERNATIONAL AIRLINES

Travel agencies are often a better bet than airline offices for booking international flights, and will reconfirm your flight for a small fee.

Air France (Map pp768-9; ☎ 22024818; Maker Chamber VI, Nariman Point)

Spice Jet (☎ 9871803333; www.spicejet.com; domestic airport)

There are flights to more than 30 Indian cities from Mumbai. See right for details of major flights. The boxed table above shows rough prices for tickets booked in person a few days in advance – expect discounts if booking earlier or online. Kingfisher and Air Deccan offer flights to most of these destinations at the much cheaper Indian fares (up to 70% less).

MAJOR DOMESTIC FLIGHTS FROM MUMBAI

Destination	Fare (US$)	Duration (hr)	Flights per day
Bengaluru	187	1½	18
Chennai	207	1¾	19
Delhi	237	2	34
Goa	127	1	16
Hyderabad	162	1¼	14
Jaipur	202	1¾	14
Kochi	232	1¼	20
Kolkata	287	2¼	21

Bus

Numerous private operators and state governments run long-distance buses to and from Mumbai. Private operators provide faster service, more comfort and simpler booking procedures.

Private long-distance buses depart from Dr Anadrao Nair Rd near Mumbai Central train station (Map pp768–9). Fares for non-AC deluxe buses include:

Destination	Fare (Rs)	Duration (hr)
Ahmedabad	300	13
Aurangabad	250	10
Bengaluru	550	24
Mahabaleshwar	300	7
Panaji	300	14-18
Pune	150	7
Udaipur	450	16

There are also sleeper buses to Goa for Rs 350 to 450. Fares to popular destinations (such as Goa) are up to 75% higher during holiday periods such as Diwali and Christmas. To check on departure times and current prices, try National Travels (Map pp768-9; ☎ 23015652; Dr Anadrao Nair Rd; 🕑 6am-10pm).

More convenient for Goa and southern destinations are the private buses that depart twice a day from in front of Azad Maidan, just south of the Metro cinema. Purchase tickets directly from agents located near the bus departure point.

Long-distance state-run buses depart from Mumbai Central bus terminal (Map pp768-9; ☎ 23074272) by Mumbai Central train station. Buses service major towns in Maharashtra and neighbouring states. They're marginally cheaper and more frequent than the private services, but they're also decrepit and crowded. Destinations include Pune (Rs 160, four hours), Aurangabad (Rs 200, eight to nine hours) and Mahabaleshwar (Rs 180, seven hours).

Train

Three train systems operate out of Mumbai, but the two most relevant for overseas visitors are Central Railways and Western Railways. See the boxed table (below) for information on key long-distance services.

Central Railways (☎ 134),handling services to the east, south, plus a few trains to the north, operate from CST. The reservation centre (Map p776; ☎ 22625959; 8am-8pm Mon-Sat, 8am-2pm Sun) is around the side of CST where the taxis gather. Foreign tourist-quota tickets (Counter 52, 8am-8pm) can be bought up to 60 days before travel, but must be paid in foreign currency or with rupees backed by an encashment certificate or ATM receipt. Indrail passes (p1180) can also be bought at Counter 52. You can buy nonquota tickets with a Visa or MasterCard at the much faster credit-card counters (10 and 11) for a Rs 30 fee.

A few Central Railways trains depart from Dadar (D), a few stations north of CST. Others leave from Churchgate/Lokmanya Tilak (T), 16km north of CST. One these is the Chennai Express, the fastest train to Chennai (Madras). Book tickets for all these trains at CST.

Note: Fares are for sleeper/3AC/2AC sleeper on overnight trips except for: *2nd class/AC seat, 3AC/2AC and sleeper.

Western Railways (☎ 131) has services to the north (including Rajasthan and Delhi) from Mumbai Central (MC) train station (often still called Bombay Central). Make these bookings at the crowded reservation centre (Map p776; ☎ 22620079; 8am-8pm Mon-Sun) opposite Churchgate train station. The foreign tourist-quota counter (Counter 28) is upstairs next to the Government of India tourist office, same rules apply as at CST station. The credit-card counter is No 20. There's a reservation centre adjacent to Mumbai Central train station for nonquota tickets.

GETTING AROUND

To/From the Airports

INTERNATIONAL

Taxis operate 24 hours a day from the airport. The trip is much faster by night, though a night surcharge is added.

The prepaid-taxi booth at the international airport has set daytime fares to Colaba, the Fort and Marine Dr (Rs 350; Rs 440 for AC), as well as to Juhu (Rs 190), Chowpatty (Rs 320) and to Mumbai Central train station (Rs 270). There's a 25% surcharge between midnight and 5am and a charge of Rs 5 to 10 per bag. The journey to Colaba takes about 45 minutes at night and 1½ to two hours during the day. You could try to negotiate a lower fare with a private taxi, but it's hardly worth the hassle. A tip of 5% to 10% is appreciated. Don't catch an autorickshaw from the airport to the city: they're prohibited from entering downtown Mumbai and can take you only as far as Mahim Creek.

The cheap alternative is to catch an autorickshaw (around Rs 30) to Andheri train station and catch a suburban train (Rs 9, 45 minutes) to Churchgate or CST. You can only do this if you arrive during the day; don't attempt it during rush hours (particularly the manic 7am to 10am morning rush), or if you're weighed down with luggage. At the very least, buy a 1st-class ticket (Rs 76).

Minibuses outside the arrival hall offer free shuttle services to the domestic airport and Juhu hotels.

A taxi from the city centre (eg CST station) to the international airport costs around Rs 300 with a bit of bargaining, plus extra for baggage; taxi drivers in Colaba ask for a fixed Rs 350. It's 30% more between midnight and 5am.

DOMESTIC

Taxis and autorickshaws queue up outside both domestic terminals. There's no prepaid-taxi counter, but the taxi queue outside is controlled by the police – make sure your driver uses the meter and conversion card. A taxi takes one to 1½ hours to reach the city centre and costs around Rs 300.

If you don't have too much luggage, bus 195 stops on nearby Nehru Rd and passes through Colaba Causeway (Rs 16). Coming from the city, it stops on the highway opposite the airport.

A better alternative is to catch an autorickshaw between the airport and Vile Parle train station (Rs 15), and catch a suburban train between Vile Parle and Churchgate (Rs 9, 45 minutes). Don't attempt this during rush hour.

Boat

Both PNP (☎ 22885220) and Maldar Catamarans (☎ 22829695) run regular ferries to Mandwa (Rs 100 one-way), useful for access to Murud-Janjira and other parts of the Konkan Coast (p819), avoiding the long bus trip out of Mumbai. Their ticket offices are at Apollo Bunder (near the Gateway of India; Map p774).

Bus

Mumbai's single- and double-decker buses are good for travelling short distances. Fares around South Mumbai cost around Rs 3 for a section, pay the conductor once you're aboard. The service is run by BEST (☎ 28227006; www.bestundertaking.com), which has its main depot in Colaba (the website has a useful search facility for bus routes across the city). Just jumping on a double-decker bus (such as No 103) is an inexpensive way to have a look around South Mumbai.

Following are some useful bus routes; all of these buses depart from the bus stand at the southern end of Colaba Causeway and pass Flora Fountain:

Destination	Bus No
Breach Candy	132, 133
Chowpatty	103, 106, 107, 123
Churchgate	70, 106, 123, 132
Haji Ali	83, 124, 132, 133
Hanging Gardens	103, 106
Mani Bhavan	123
Mohammed Ali Rd	1, 3, 21
Mumbai Central train station	124, 125
CST & Crawford Market	1, 3, 21, 103, 124

Car

Cars are generally hired for an eight-hour day and with a maximum of 80km travel allowed; additional charges rack up if you exceed these limits.

Agents at the Apollo Bunder ticket booths near the Gateway of India can arrange a non-AC Maruti with driver for a half-day of sight-seeing for Rs 600 (going as far as Mahalaxmi and Malabar Hill). Regular taxi drivers often accept a similar price.

Motorcycle

Allibhai Premji Tyrewalla (Map pp768-9; ☎ 23099313; www.premjis.com; 205/207 Dr D Bhadkamkar Rd, Opera House; ⌚ 10am-7pm Mon-Sat) is the place to purchase a new or used motorcycle with a guaranteed buy-back option. For two- to three-week 'rental' periods you'll still have to pay the full cost of the bike upfront. The company prefers to deal with longer-term schemes of two months or more, which work out cheaper anyway. A used 350cc or 500cc Enfield costs Rs 35,000 to 60,000, with a buy-back price of around 60% after three months. A smaller bike (100cc to 180cc) starts at Rs 25,000. It can also arrange shipment of bikes overseas (Rs 18,000 to the UK).

Taxi & Autorickshaw

Every second car on Mumbai's streets seems to be a black-and-yellow Premier taxi (India's version of a 1950s Fiat). They are the most convenient way to get around the city and in South Mumbai drivers almost always use the meter without prompting. Autorickshaws are confined to the suburbs north of Mahim Creek.

Drivers don't always know the names of Mumbai's streets – the best way to find something is by using nearby landmarks. The taxi meters are out of date, so the fare is calculated using a conversion chart, which all drivers must carry. The rate during the day is around 13 times the meter reading, with a minimum fare of Rs 13 for the first 1.6km (flag fall) and Rs 7 per kilometre after this. Costs are around 25% more expensive between midnight and 6am.

Cool Cabs (☎ 28227006) operates correctly metered, blue AC taxis. They're about a third more expensive than regular cabs and can be booked by telephone.

If you're north of Mahim Creek and not heading into the city, it's best to catch autorickshaws. They're metered but also use a conversion chart: the fare is roughly 10 times the meter reading.

Train

Mumbai has an efficient but overcrowded suburban train network.

There are three main lines, making it easy to navigate. The most useful service operates from Churchgate heading north to stations such as Charni Rd (for Chowpatty Beach), Mumbai Central, Mahalaxmi (for the dhobi ghat; p779), Vile Parle (for the domestic airport), Andheri (for the international airport) and Borivali (for Sanjay Gandhi National Park). Other suburban lines operate from CST to Byculla (for Victoria Gardens), Dadar, and as far as Neral (for Matheran). Trains run from 4am till 1am. From Churchgate, 2nd-/1st-class fares are Rs 5/41 to Mumbai Central, Rs 9/76 to Vile Parle or Andheri and Rs 11/102 to Borivali.

Avoid rush hours when trains are jam-packed, even in 1st class – watch your valuables. Women should take advantage of the ladies-only carriages.

GREATER MUMBAI

ELEPHANTA ISLAND

In the middle of Mumbai Harbour, 9km north-east of the Gateway of India, the rock-cut temples on Elephanta Island (Map p767; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/250; ⌚ caves 9am-5.30pm Tue-Sun) are a spectacle worth crossing the waters for. Home to a labyrinth of cave-temples carved into the basalt rock of the island, the artwork represents some of the most impressive temple carving in all India. The main Shiva-dedicated temple is an intriguing latticework of courtyards, halls, pillars and shrines, with the magnum opus a 6m tall statue of Sadhashiva – depicting a three-faced Shiva as the destroyer, creator and preserver of the universe. The enormous central bust of Shiva, its eyes closed in eternal contemplation, may be the most serene sight you witness in India.

The temples are thought to have been created between AD 450 and 750, when the island was known as Gharapuri (Place of Caves). The Portuguese renamed it Elephanta because of a large stone elephant near the shore, which collapsed in 1814 and was moved by the British to Mumbai's Victoria Gardens.

The English-language guide service (free with deluxe boat tickets) is worthwhile, tours depart every hour on the half-hour from the ticket booth. If you prefer to explore independently, pick up Pramod Chandra's A Guide to the Elephanta Caves from the stalls lining the stairway. There's also a small museum on site, which has some informative pictorial panels on the origin of the caves.

Getting There & Away

Launches head to Elephanta Island from the Gateway of India every half-hour from around 9am to 3pm Tuesday to Sunday. Economy boats cost Rs 100 return while more spacious 'deluxe' launches are Rs 120; buy tickets at the booths lining Apollo Bunder. The voyage takes just over an hour.

The ferries dock at the end of a concrete pier, from where you can walk (around three minutes) or take the miniature train (Rs 8) to the stairway leading up to the caves. It's lined with handicraft stalls and patrolled by pesky monkeys. Maharajas-in-training can be carried there by palanquins (one-way/return Rs 150/250).

SANJAY GANDHI NATIONAL PARK

It's hard to believe that within 90 minutes of the teeming metropolis you can be surrounded by the jungle of this 104-sq-km protected area (Map p767; ☎ 28866449; adult/child Rs 10/5; ⏰ 7.30am-7pm Tue-Sun). Here, bright flora, birds, butterflies and elusive wild leopards replace traffic and crowds, all surrounded by forested hills on the city's northern edge. Urban development and shantytowns are starting to muscle in on the edges of this wild region, but for now much of it remains a refuge of green and calm.

One of the main attractions is the lion & tiger safari (Rs 30; ⏰ every 20min 9am-12.40pm & 2-5.20pm Tue-Sun), departing from the tiger orientation centre (about 1km in from the main entrance). Expect a whirlwind 20-minute jaunt by bus through the two separate areas of the park housing the tigers and lions.

Inside the main northern entrance is an information centre with a small exhibition on the park's wildlife. The best time to see birds is October to April and butterflies August to November.

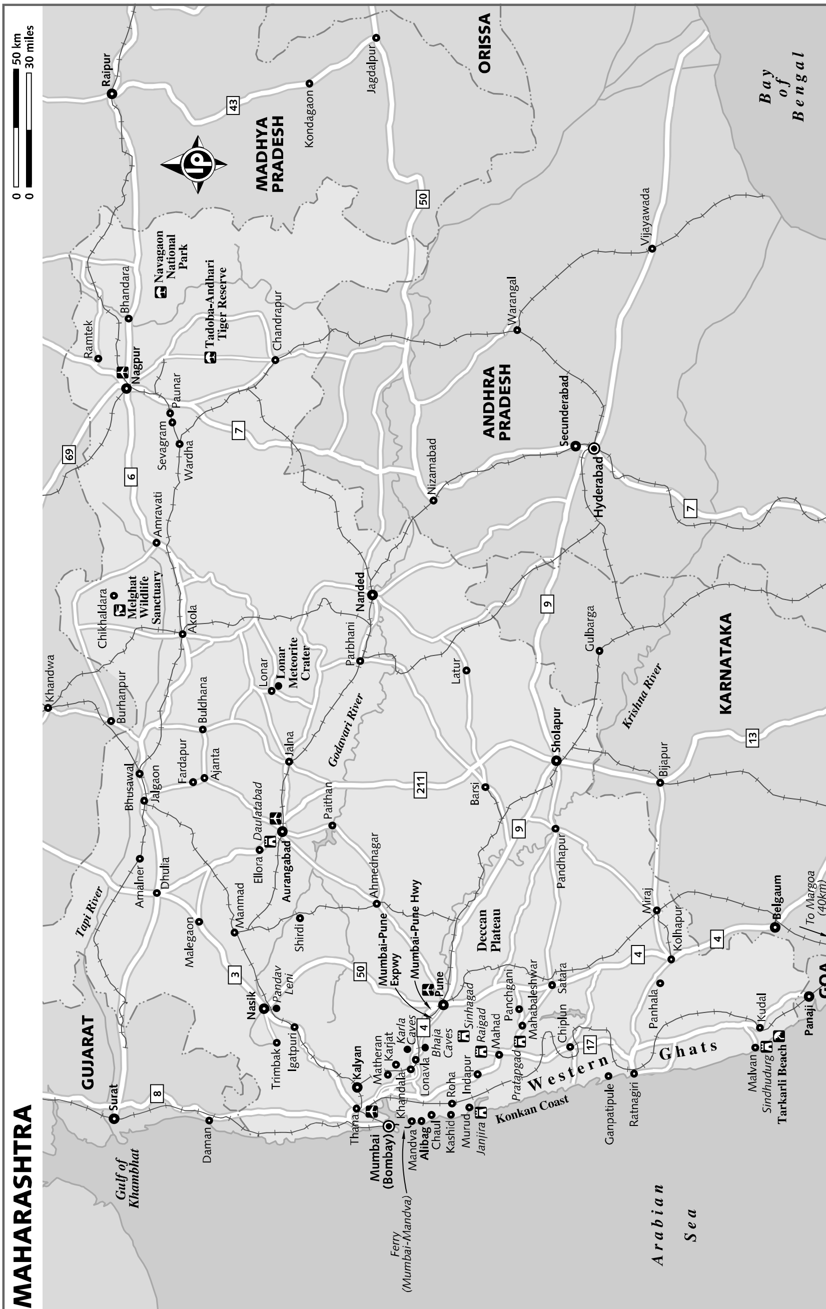
Another big draw are the 109 Kanheri Caves (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; ⏰ 9.30am-5.30pm Tue-Sun) lining the side of a rocky ravine 5km from the northern park entrance. They were used by Buddhist monks between the 2nd and 9th centuries as viharas (monasteries) and chaityas (temples), but don't compare to the caves at Ajanta (p812), Ellora (p809) or even Lonavla (p822).

For information on the park, contact Mumbai's main conservation organisation, the Bombay Natural History Society (Map p776; ☎ 22821811; www.bnhs.org; Colaba Causeway) in Kala Ghoda.

Getting There & Away

Take the train from Churchgate to Borivali train station (Rs 11, one hour). From there take an autorickshaw (Rs 15) or catch any bus to the park entrance. It's a further 10-minute walk from the entrance to the safari park.

Maharashtra



Sprawling Maharashtra, India's second most populous state, stretches from the gorgeous greens of the little-known Konkan Coast right into the parched innards of India's beating heart. Within this massive framework are all the sights, sounds, tastes, and experiences of India.

In the north there's Nasik, a city of crashing colours, timeless ritual and Hindu legend. In the south you can come face to face with modern India at its very best in Pune, a city as famous for its sex guru as its bars and restaurants. Further south still, the old maharaja's palaces, wrestling pits and overwhelming temples of Kolhapur make for one of the best introductions to India anyone could want. Out in the far east of the state towards Nagpur, the adventurous can set out in search of tigers hidden in a clump of national parks. On the coast a rash of little-trodden beaches and collapsing forts give Goa's tropical dreams a run for their money and in the hills of the Western Ghats, morning mists lift to reveal stupendous views and colonial-flavoured hill stations. But it's the centre, with its treasure house of architectural and artistic wonders (topped by the World Heritage–listed cave temples of Ellora and Ajanta), that really steals the show. Whatever way you look at it, Maharashtra is one of the most vibrant and rewarding corners of India, yet despite this, most travellers make only a brief artistic pause at Ellora and Ajanta before scurrying away to other corners of India, leaving much of this diverse state to the explorers.

HIGHLIGHTS

- Feel dwarfed by the monumental Kailasa Temple, the shining jewel of the cave temples at Ellora (p809)
- Follow in the footsteps of pilgrims heading to Nasik (p801), and its colourful riverside ghats
- Ponder the reasons for hiding a gallery of Buddhist art in the jungle at Ajanta (p812)
- Hunt out serene beaches, elephant temples and tumbling fortresses on the Konkan Coast (p818)
- Gallop on a horse to Echo Point in Matheran (p820) and then chug back home on a toy train
- Search for snakes and 'zennis' (Zen tennis) courts in Pune (p825).

History

With a relatively small army, Maratha leader Shivaji (1627–80) established a base at Pune and later Raigad, from where he controlled the Deccan and conquered more than 300 forts during his reign. Shivaji, still highly respected, is credited for instilling a strong, independent spirit among the region's people.

From the early 18th century the Maratha empire came under the control of the Peshwas, who retained power until 1819 when, after much tussling, the British barged them aside.

After Independence, western Maharashtra and Gujarat were joined to form Bombay state. Today's state has Mumbai (Bombay) as its capital and was formed in 1960 when the Marathi- and Gujarati-speaking areas were once again separated. The state is currently controlled by a Congress-NCP coalition.

Climate

The monsoon hits most of Maharashtra hard from May through to September. The rest of the year you can expect the coastal and interior regions to be hot; for some respite head to the hill stations of the Western Ghats.

Information

The head office of Maharashtra Tourism Development Corporation (MTDC; Map p776; ☎ 22026713; Madame Cama Rd, Nariman Point; 9.45am-5.30pm Mon-Sat) is in Mumbai. Most major towns throughout the state have offices, too, but they're generally only useful for booking MTDC accommodation and tours.

ACCOMMODATION

In Maharashtra rooms costing Rs 1199 or less are charged a 4% tax, while those that are Rs 1200 and up are hit with a 10% tax. Some hotels also levy an extra expenditure tax (up to 10%). Rates in this chapter do not include tax unless otherwise indicated. High-season rates are quoted but prices might rise higher still during holidays such as Diwali.

Getting There & Away

Maharashtra's main transport hub is Mumbai (p793), although Pune, Nasik and Nagpur are also players.

Getting Around

Because the state is so large you might want to consider taking a few internal flights (eg Mumbai to Nagpur) to speed up your explorations. Otherwise there are plenty of trains and private long-distance buses, with rickety state transport buses connecting up the more remote places.

FAST FACTS

NORTHERN MAHARASHTRA

NASIK

☎ 0253 / pop 1.2 million / elev 565m

Standing on the Godavari, one of India's holiest rivers, Nasik (also known as Nashik) is the kind of town where you can't walk more than a couple of steps without tripping over yet another exotic temple or colourful bathing ghat. It's an absorbing and exciting place and has many associations with the Hindu epic Ramayana. Lord Rama and his wife Sita were exiled here and it's where Lakshmana hacked off the nasika (nose) of Ravana's sister, thus giving the city its name.

Nasik also serves as a base for pilgrims visiting Trimbak (p804) and Shirdi (79km southeast), birthplace of the original Sai Baba. Every 12 years Nasik plays host to the Kumbh Mela, the largest religious gathering on earth. The next one is due in 2019, but a smaller gathering, Ardha Mela (Half Mela), is held every six years; see the boxed text, p1136.

Orientation

Mahatma Gandhi Rd, better known as MG Rd, a couple of blocks north of the Old Central bus stand, is Nasik's commercial hub. The temple-strewn Godavari River flows through town just east of here.

Information

Cyber Café (8 Twin Centre, Vakil Wadi Rd; per hr Rs 20; 10am-10pm Mon-Sat, 10am-3pm Sun) Near Hotel Panchavati.

HDFC Bank (MG Rd) Has a 24-hour ATM.

MTDC tourist office (☎ 2570059; Paryatan Bhavan, Old Agra Rd; 🕓 10.30am-5.30pm Mon-Sat) About 700m south of the Old Central bus stand. Has a pretty useless city map (Rs 5).

State Bank of India (☎ 2502436; Old Agra Rd; 🕓 10.30am-4pm Mon-Fri, 10.30am-1.30pm Sat) Across from the Old Central bus stand. Changes cash and travellers cheques and has an ATM.

Sights

RAMKUND

This bathing tank is the centre of the Nasik world and sees hundreds of colourful pilgrims arriving daily to bathe, pray and, because the waters of the Ramkund provide moksha (liberation of the soul), even to die. For a tourist it all promises one of the most intense experiences in Maharashtra. The scene is further enhanced by the colourful market just down river.

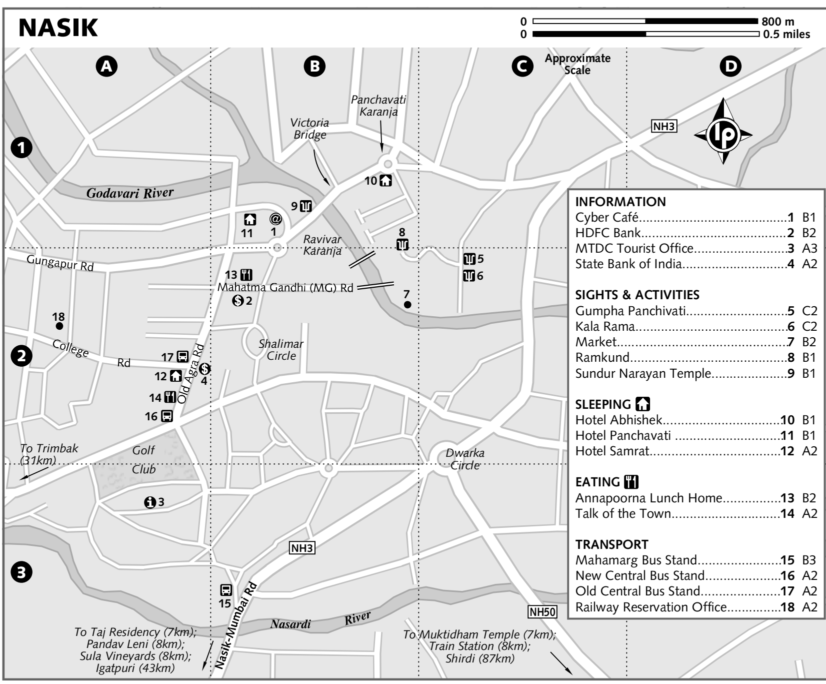
TEMPLES

A short walk uphill east of the Ramkund, the Kala Rama (Black Rama), is the city's holiest temple. Dating to 1794 and containing unusual black-stone representations of Rama, Sita and Lakshmana, the temple stands on the site where Lakshmana sliced off Ravana's sisters nose. Nearby is the Gumpha Panchivati, where Sita hid from the evil Ravana.

The ramshackle Sundar Narayan Temple, at the western end of Victoria Bridge, contains three black Vishnu deities, and the modern Muktidham Temple, about 7km southeast of the city and near the train station, has the 18 chapters of the Bhagavad Gita lining its interior walls.



All of the temples listed here are open from 6am to 9pm.

Tours

An all-day tour of Nasik, conducted in Marathi and including Trimbak and Pandav Leni, departs daily at 7.30am from the Old Central bus stand (Rs 94) and returns at 5.30pm.

Sleeping & Eating

Hotel Abhishek (☎ 2514201; hotabhi_nsk@sancharnet.in; Panchavati Karanja; s/d from Rs 215/290) A couple of minutes' walk uphill from the Godavari River, this is the best budget base from which to be totally overwhelmed by sacred India at its best (and nosiest). Rooms are good value with hot showers and TV.

FESTIVALS IN MAHARASHTRA

Sarai Gandarvar (Feb; Pune, p825) Classical Indian music and dance performances that last all night.
Matharaj Naag Panchami (Aug; Pune, p825 & Kolhapur, p835) A slithery snake-worshipping festival.
Ganesh Chaturthi (Aug & Sep; Pune, p825) Ganesh Chaturthi is celebrated with fervour across Maharashtra, but one of the best places to be is Pune, 163km southeast of Mumbai, where special arts and cultural events accompany the general mayhem for the elephant-headed deity.
Dussehra Festival (Sep/Oct; Nagpur, p816) Thousands of Buddhists celebrate the anniversary of Dr Ambedkar's conversion to Buddhism.
Kalidas Festival (Nov; Nagpur, p816) A music and dance festival dedicated to the Sanskrit poet Mahakavi Kalidas.
Ellora Dance & Music Festival (Dec/Jan; Aurangabad, p805) Classical music and dance festival held at the Soneri Mahal.

Hotel Samrat (☎ 2577211; fax 2306100; Old Agra Rd; s/d from Rs 450/625, with AC from Rs 775/925;) Its position close to the bus stands means you don't have far to stumble with your bags, and the rooms, which come with balconies and cable TV, are clean and comfortable enough to make for a pleasant stay. Its spick-and-span restaurant is open 24 hours and makes delectable Gujarati thalis (Rs 70).

Hotel Panchavati (430 Chandak Wadi) You can save yourself some time and effort by heading straight for this excellent complex – the four hotels cover every pocket from budget to top-end. Kicking off at the cheaper end of the market is the Panchavati Guesthouse (☎ 2578771; dorms/singles/doubles Rs 250/400/500), which has clean, cramped rooms and very few foreign guests. Brilliant-value midrange rooms with piping-hot showers and spot-on service are on offer at the Panchavati Yatri (☎ 2578782; singles/doubles from Rs 710/910, with AC Rs 920/1040). The Hotel Panchavati (☎ 2575771; singles/doubles from Rs 950/1190, with AC from Rs 1140/1340) is a pricier option for midrange travellers but the rooms are classier. Last of all is the sumptuous Panchavati Millionaire (☎ 2312318; singles/doubles from Rs 1350/1650).

Taj Residency (☎ 2536604499; www.tajhotels.com; MIDC, Ambad; d from US$95;) Nasik's most luxurious hotel is on the Nasik–Mumbai Rd, close to Pandav Leni and well away from all the noise and excitement of the town centre. It's a lovely and calm modern business-class hotel, which also has a regarded restaurant.

Annapoorna Lunch Home (MG Rd; snacks & meals Rs 10-80) There might not be any surprises on the menu but it would be hard to find fault with the cheap eats dished out by the friendly waiters here. The list of dosas on offer is almost as long as the dosa itself!

Talk of the Town (Old Agra Rd; dishes Rs 60-150) Set inside a glass-plated building next to the New Central bus stand, Talk of the Town has a long menu of Indian and Chinese favourites, smartly suited waiters and a tranquil atmosphere.

Getting There & Around

BUS

Nasik is a major player on the road-transport scene, with frequent state buses operating at nearly all hours from three different stands.

The Old Central bus stand (CBS; ☎ 2309310) is useful mainly for those going to Trimbak (Rs 17, 45 minutes). A block south the New Central bus station (☎ 2309308) has services to Aurangabad (semideluxe Rs 153, five hours) and Pune (ordinary/semideluxe Rs 110/170, 4½ hours). The Mahamarg bus stand (☎ 2309309), has services hourly to Mumbai (semideluxe Rs 140, 4½ hours) and twice-hourly to Shirdi (Rs 60, 2½ hours).

Many private bus agents are based near the CBS and most buses depart from Old Agra Rd. Destinations include Pune (with/without AC Rs 220/150, 4½ hours), Mumbai (with/without AC Rs 320/150, 4½ hours), Aurangabad (without AC Rs 130, 11.30pm only) and Ahmedabad (with/without AC Rs 500/280, 12 hours). Note that most of the Mumbai-bound buses terminate at Dadar.

TRAIN

The Nasik Rd train station is 8km southeast of the town centre, but a useful railway reservation office (☎ 134; 8am-8pm Mon-Sat, 8am-2pm Sun) is on the 1st floor of the Commissioner's Office, Canada Corner, 500m west of the CBS. The 7am Panchavati Express is the fastest train to Mumbai (2nd class/chair Rs 56/211, four hours) and the 9.50am Tapovan Express is the only convenient direct train to Aurangabad (2nd class/chair Rs 56/211, 3½ hours). Local buses leave frequently from Shalimar Circle, a few minutes' walk northeast of the CBS, to the train station (Rs 6). An autorickshaw costs about Rs 70.

AROUND NASIK

Pandav Leni

The 24 Early Buddhist caves of Pandav Leni (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/US$2; 8am-6pm), about 8km south of Nasik along the Mumbai road, date from the 1st century BC to the 2nd century AD. Caves 19 and 23 have some interesting carvings; the rest are virtually empty and of limited interest to the lay-person.

Below the caves is the Dadasaheb Phalke Memorial (admission Rs 10; 10am-9pm), dedicated to the pioneering Indian movie producer of the same name.

Local buses (Rs 7) run past the caves from Shalimar Circle, near the CBS, in Nasik, but the easiest way there is by autorickshaw; a return journey including waiting time costs around Rs 200.

Trimbak

Trimbakeshwar Temple, stands in the centre of Trimbak, 33km west of Nasik, and is one of India's most sacred temples, containing a jyoti linga, one of the 12 most important shrines of Shiva. It's open to Hindus only, but it's possible to see into the courtyard. Even with this restriction Trimbak is a fascinating town, whose narrow streets and explosive markets fit every idea of exotic India. Nearby, the waters of the Godavari River tumble into the Gangadwar bathing tank, where pilgrims gather to wash away their sins. Non-Hindus are welcome. The real highlight of a visit to Trimbak is to make the four-hour-return hike up the sheer Brahmagiri Hill behind the town to the source of the Godavari. Pilgrims from across the nation clamber up to the flower encrusted summit where the Godavari dribbles forth from a spring and into a couple of temples soaked in incense. On the route up to the top you will pass a number of other temples, shrines and even some caves in which sadhus have made a home. Don't attempt the ascent if rain looks imminent, as the trail can quickly become a dangerous raging torrent.

If you want to stay the night, the MTDC Resort (☎ 02594-233143; d Rs 300, tr ste Rs 800) is a modern building housing spacious suites with creature comforts such as cable TV.

Regular buses run from the New Central bus station in Nasik to Trimbak (Rs 17, 45 minutes).

Igatpuri

About 44km south of Nasik on the rail line to Mumbai, the village of Igatpuri is home to

WINE COUNTRY

India makes chai, not wine – but wait, what's this? A vineyard near Nasik? As it turns out, the fertile soils and cooler climate of Nasik (at around 600m above sea level) aren't that different from Bordeaux at all, making this town the Grand Crux of India's fledgling wine-growing industry. One winery welcoming visitors is Sula Vineyards (☎ 9970-090010; www.sulawines.com; Govardhan, Gangapur-Savargaon Rd; 11.00am-10.00pm, tastings 11.30am-5.30pm), 8km southwest of Nasik. This pioneer of the Indian wine industry has produced decently drinkable drops since 1998. A tasting room has recently been added; call in advance if you're planning on visiting to try out a drop or two.

THE GOD WHO CAME TO STAY

His calm, smiling face is seen on posters throughout India and many regard him as a living god, but who exactly was Sai Baba? Well his real name, date of birth and knowledge of his childhood are unknown, but at around the age of 16 he appeared in the small town of Shirdi, not far from Nasik, where he spent the rest of his life sleeping alternately in an old Mosque or a Hindu temple and praying in them both equally. His message of tolerance between the faiths and the many miracles attributed to him meant that by the time he died in 1918, he had established a large following. Today, his temple complex in Shirdi draws an average of 40,000 pilgrims a day. However, like Elvis, he is possibly not even dead – in Andhra Pradesh another famous holy man who also commands huge respect, Sathya Sai Baba, claims to be the reincarnation of the original Sai Baba (see p959).

MAHARASHTRA

the world's largest vipassana (a type of meditation) centre, Vipassana International Academy (☎ 02553-244076; www.vri.dhamma.org).

Ten-day residential courses in this strict form of Theravada Buddhist meditation are held throughout the year. Vipassana was first taught by Gautama Buddha in the 6th century BC, but was reintroduced to India by teacher SN Goenka in the 1960s.

They say that every dog has its day and for dog-eared Aurangabad that day came when the last Mughal emperor, Aurangzeb, made the city his capital from 1653 to 1707. Though its claim to fame was only brief, the city retains a number of worthwhile historical relics, including a tempting Taj wannabe and some grandly carved caves, but the real reason for traipsing all the way out here is because the city makes an excellent base from which to explore the World Heritage site of Ellora.

Silk fabrics are Aurangabad's traditional trade but the city is now a major industrial centre with beer and bikes being the big earners.

Orientation

The train station, cheap hotels and restaurants are clumped together in the south of the town. The Maharashtra State Road Transport Corporation bus stand (MSRTC; Station Rd West) is 1.5km to the north. Northeast of the bus stand is the buzzing Old Town with its narrow streets and distinct Muslim quarter.

Sights

BIBI-QA-MAQBARA

Built in 1679 as a mausoleum for Aurangzeb's wife, Rabia-ud-Daurani, the Bibi-qa-Maqbara (☎ 2400620; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/US$2; ⏰ dawn-10pm) is known as the 'Poor mans Taj'. This is a slightly ironic comparison considering it was Aurangzeb's father who built the original shortly before being overthrown and imprisoned by his son on account of his extravagance! The comparison is also a little unfair because, despite the obvious weathering, it's still a damn sight more impressive than the average gravestone.

AURANGABAD CAVES

With goats more numerous than tourists, the Aurangabad caves (☎ 2400620; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/US$2; ⏰ dawn-dusk) might not be a patch on Ellora or Ajanta, but they are very quiet and peaceful. Carved out of the hillside in the 6th or 7th century AD, the 10 caves – consisting of two groups 1km apart (retain your ticket for entry into both sets) – are all Buddhist. Cave 7 with its sculptures of scantily clad lovers in suggestive positions is everyone's favourite. A rickshaw from the Bibi-qa-Maqbara shouldn't cost more than Rs 100 including waiting time.

PANCHAKKI

Panchakki (Water Wheel) takes its name from the mill which in its day was considered a marvel of engineering. Driven by water carried through earthen pipes from the river 6km away, it once ground grain for pilgrims. You can still see the humble machine at work.

Baba Shah Muzaffar, a Sufi saint and spiritual guide to Aurangzeb, is buried here. His memorial garden (admission Rs 5; 6am-8pm) has a series of fish-filled tanks, near a large shade-giving banyan tree.

SHIVAJI MUSEUM

This dull museum (2334087; Dr Ambedkar Rd; admission Rs 5; 10.30am-1.30pm & 3-6pm Wed-Mon), dedicated to the life of the Maratha hero Shivaji, includes a 500-year-old chain-mail suit and a copy of the Quran handwritten by Aurangzeb.

Tours

Classic Tours (2335598; www.aurangabadtours.com) run daily tours to the Ajanta (Rs 270; 8am-5.30pm) and Ellora (Rs 170; 9.30am-5.30pm) caves, which include a guide but no admission fees. The Ellora tour also includes all the other major Aurangabad sites, which is a lot to swallow in a day. Tours start and end at the MTDC Holiday Resort.

Sleeping

BUDGET

YHA Hostel (2334892; Station Rd West; dm/d Rs 60/160) The woman who runs this decrepit old hostel is a real gem, but you really do have to be counting your pennies to stay here. Breakfast is available for Rs 17 and a thali dinner costs Rs 25.

Tourist's Home (2337212; Station Rd West; s/d Rs 150/200) As basic as basic gets and with a truly memorable aroma (think long-dead roadkill), but at least it's cheap and the staff are cool.

Hotel Panchavati (2328755; www.hotelpanchavati.com; Station Rd West; s/d Rs 300/400, with AC Rs 550/650;) We've received mixed reports about this establishment over the years but it seems that its bad patch has passed and it now offers immaculate rooms that have actually had a bit of love shown to them. The managers are efficient and friendly and it sits easily at the top of the value-for-money class.

Hotel Shree Maya (2333093; shrimaya_agd@sancharnet.in; Bharuka Complex; d with/without AC Rs 495/345;) Presentable and welcoming budget accommodation close to the train station. The plain rooms have TVs and hot showers in the morning, but the real plus is the outdoor terrace where breakfast and other meals are served. It's a good spot to tap into the travellers' grapevine.

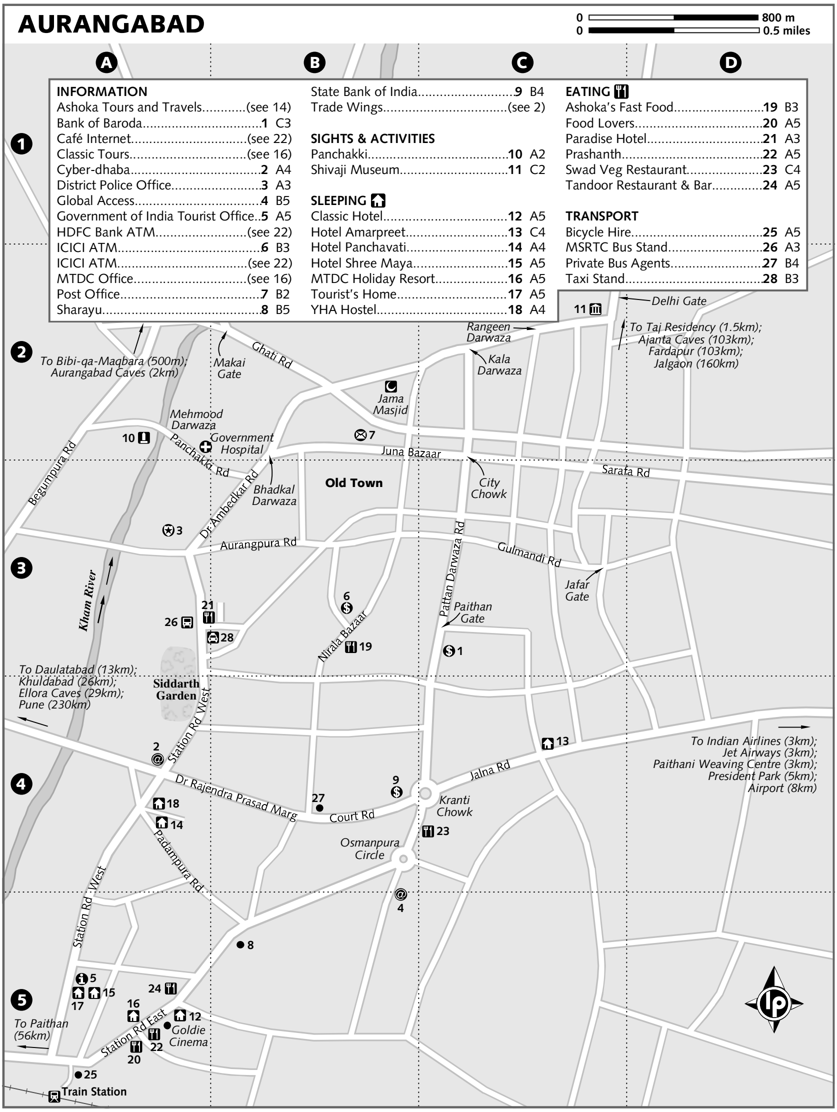
MIDRANGE

MTDC Holiday Resort (2331513; Station Rd East; d low/high season Rs 650/750, with AC Rs 800/900;) Set in its own shady grounds, this slightly disorganised (in the nicest possible way) hotel is one of the better MTDC operations, offering spruce, spacious rooms. Some rooms suffer a bit from road noise. A restaurant, bar and travel agency are on site.

Classic Hotel (5624314; www.aurangabadhotel.com; Railway Station Rd; s/d from Rs 1000/1200;) This sparkling new hotel next to the Goldie Cinema has very clean rooms, but is let down by pushy staff.

Hotel Amarpreet (6621133; www.amarpreethotel.com; Jalna Rd; s/d from Rs 1410/2100;) A chintzy, glitzy lobby leads to slightly less impressive rooms, but it's much cleaner and more professional than any other hotel in its class.

TOP END



President Park (2486201; www.presidenthotels.com; R-7/2, Chikalthana, Airport Rd; s/d from Rs 2300/2800;) On the road to the airport, this classy hotel needs a bit of a polish but the setting around the half-moon pool makes this a good top-end option. Nonguests can use the pool for Rs 175 per hour.

Taj Residency (2381106; www.tajhotels.com; Ajanta Rd; s/d from US$75/85;) Set in 2 hectares of pleasantly landscaped gardens, the Taj is an oasis of well-appointed rooms on the northern fringes of Aurangabad. Most rooms have romantic Mughal-style swings on the balconies.

Eating

Swad Veg Restaurant (Kanchan Chamber, Station Rd East; mains Rs 20-55) As well as a pile of cheap-eat Indian staples there are pizzas (Rs 30 to 40) and lots of ice creams and shakes – all of which is gobbled up under the benevolent gaze of swami Yogiraj Hansthirth. It's quite hard to find – look for an orange circular sign (in Marathi) pointing the way down to the entrance just below the Saraswat Bank.

Ashoka's Fast Food (Nirala Bazaar; mains Rs 20-60) Offering both indoor seating and an outdoor terrace that is all the rage at night, Ashoka's Punjabi staples, piles of sweet Indian cakes and Western-style burgers make the trek out here well worthwhile.

Prashanth (Siddharth Arcade, Station Rd East; mains Rs 25-90) Prashanth wins trophies from travellers for its delightful vegetarian-only dishes, epic fruit juices and enjoyable patio setting.

Paradise Hotel (Station Rd West; mains Rs 40-60; 11am-3pm) Directly opposite the MSRTC bus stand the Paradise Hotel is a reliable lunchtime bet with quick curries and endless thalis.

Food Lovers (Station Rd East; mains Rs 50-200) This restaurant is full of aquariums stuffed with catfish. Oh and the Punjabi and Chinese food isn't bad either.

Tandoor Restaurant & Bar (☎ 2328481; Shyam Chambers, Station Rd East; mains Rs 60-200) Offering fine tandoori dishes and flavoursome North Indian and Chinese vegetarian options in a weirdly Pharaonic atmosphere, this is one of Aurangabad's top restaurants.

Shopping

Hand-woven Himroo material is an Aurangabad speciality. Made from cotton, silk and silver threads, it was developed as a cheaper alternative to Kam Khab, the more lavish brocades of silk and gold thread woven for royalty in the 14th century. Most of today's Himroo shawls and saris are mass-produced using power looms, but there are a couple of showrooms in the city which still run traditional workshops. Traditionally the craft was passed from father to son but today this is a dying art. One of the best places to come and watch the masters at work is the Paithani Weaving Centre (☎ 2482811, Jalna Rd; 11am-8.30pm), behind the Indian Airlines office. It's worth a visit even if you're not buying.

Himroo saris start at Rs 1000 (cotton and silk blend). Paithani saris range from Rs 5000 to Rs 300,000, but before you baulk at the price bear in mind that they take more than a year to make!

Getting There & Away

AIR

The airport (☎ 2483392) is 10km east of town. En route you'll find the offices of Indian Airlines (☎ 2485241; Jalna Rd) and Jet Airways (☎ 2441392; Jalna Rd). Indian Airlines has daily flights to Mumbai (US$54, 45 minutes) and Delhi (US$129, 3½ hours). Jet Airways flies daily to Mumbai (US$116, 45 minutes). Air Deccan offers dirt-cheap daily flights to Mumbai.

BUS

Local buses head half-hourly to Ellora (Rs 17, 45 minutes) and hourly to Jalgaon (Rs 90, four hours) via Fardapur (Rs 74, two hours). The T-junction near Fardapur is the drop-off point for Ajanta (see p814 for more details).

Buses leave regularly from the MSRTC bus stand (☎ 2242165; Station Rd West) to Pune (Rs 140, five hours) and Nasik (Rs 110, five hours). For longer-distance journeys, private luxury buses are more comfortable and better value. The private bus agents congregate around the corner where Dr Rajendra Prasad Marg becomes Court Rd, and a few sit closer to the bus stand on Station Rd West. Deluxe overnight bus destinations include Mumbai (Rs 180, with AC Rs 250, sleeper Rs 550, eight hours), Ahmedabad (Rs 350, 15 hours) and Nagpur (Rs 320, 12 hours).

TRAIN

On the southern edge of town is Aurangabad train station (☎ 131). It's not on a main line, but two direct trains daily (often heavily booked) run to/from Mumbai. The 2.30pm Tapovan Express (2nd class/chair Rs 94/344, eight hours), from Mumbai, leaves at 6.10am, and there's also the 11.25pm Devagiri Express (sleeper/2AC Rs 158/641, nine hours).

To Hyderabad (Secunderabad), the Manmad Express departs daily at 7.20pm (sleeper/2AC Rs 236/954, 10 hours). To reach northern or eastern India by train, take a bus up to Jalgaon and board one of the major trains from there.

Getting Around

Autorickshaws are as common as mosquitoes in a summer swamp. The taxi stand is next to the bus stand; share jeeps also depart from here for destinations around Aurangabad, including Ellora and Daulatabad.

Hiring a bicycle from a stall near the train station (Rs 4 per hour) is an option for a pollution-filled day's sightseeing around the city.

Ashok T Kadam (☎ 9890340816; a_t_kadam@yahoo.co.in) is a recommended and trustworthy rickshaw driver who won't try and wrangle every rupee he can from you. He can normally be found around the train/bus stand. He owes the fact that he owns his own rickshaw to a Lonely Planet reader!

AROUND AURANGABAD

Daulatabad

Halfway (13km) between Aurangabad and the Ellora caves is the ruined but truly magnificent hilltop fortress of Daulatabad. The fort (☎ 2615777; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/US$2; 6am-6pm) is surrounded by 5km of sturdy walls, while the central bastion tops a 200m-high hill – originally known as Devagiri, the Hill of the Gods. It's a peaceful spot, with numerous monkeys and squirrels playing on the battlements and pompous peacocks strutting their stuff on the lawns.

In the 14th century it was renamed Daulatabad, the City of Fortune, by sultan Mohammed Tughlaq, who came up with the crazy scheme of not only building himself a new capital here, but marching the entire population of Delhi 1100km south to populate it. Those who didn't die on the way sloped back to Delhi a couple of years later when Daulatabad proved untenable as a capital.

The climb to the summit takes at least 45 minutes and the rewards are the superb views over the surrounding countryside. On the way up you'll pass through an ingenious series of defences, including multiple doorways with spike-studded doors to prevent elephant charges. A tower of victory, known as the Chand Minar (Tower of the Moon), built in 1435, soars 60m above the ground, but unfortunately it's not possible to climb it.

Higher up is the Chini Mahal, where Abul Hasan Tana Shah, king of Golconda, died after being imprisoned for 12 years from 1687. It was once coated in blue-and-white tiles but now only a few fractured fragments remain. You will also find a 6m cannon, cast from five different metals and engraved with Aurangzeb's name.

Part of the ascent to the top goes through a pitch-black spiralling tunnel – down which the fort's defenders hurled burning coals, arrows or even boiling water at invaders. (Allegedly the fort was once successfully conquered, despite all these elaborate precautions, by simply bribing the guard at the gate.) There's normally a guide waiting near the tunnel to light the way with a flame for a small tip, but on the way down you'll be left to your devices. Note that the crumbling staircases and sheer drops can make life difficult for the elderly, children and vertigo sufferers.

If you take an organised tour from Aurangabad to Daulatabad and Ellora, you won't have time to climb to the summit.

Khuldabad

The scruffy walled town of Khuldabad, the Heavenly Abode, is a cheerful little Muslim pilgrimage town just 3km from Ellora. A number of historical figures are buried here, including Aurangzeb, the last great Mughal emperor. Despite being the Sultan of Brunei of his era, Aurangzeb left instructions that he should be buried in a simple tomb constructed only with the money he had made from sewing together Muslim skullcaps – and an unfussy affair of bare earth in a courtyard of the Alamgir Dargah (7am-8pm) is exactly what he got. The contrast with that of his wife's fantastical mausoleum, the Bibi-qa-Maqbara, in Aurangabad couldn't be greater. Heads must be covered when visiting the tomb and women are not allowed into the inner sanctum.

Generally a calm place, Khuldabad is swamped with millions of pilgrims every April when a robe said to have been worn by the Prophet Mohammed, and kept within the dargah (shrine), is shown to the public. The shrine across the road from the Alamgir Dargah contains hairs of the Prophet's beard and lumps of silver from a tree of solid silver, which miraculously grew at this site after a saint's death.

ELLORA

The World Heritage–listed Ellora cave temples (244440; Kailasa Temple; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/US$5; dawn-dusk Wed-Mon), about 30km from Aurangabad, are the pinnacle of Deccan rock-cut architecture.

Over five centuries, generations of monks (Buddhist, Hindu and Jain) carved monasteries, chapels and temples from a 2km-long escarpment and decorated them with a profusion of remarkably detailed sculptures. Because of the escarpment's gentle slope, in contrast with the sheer drop at Ajanta (p812), many of the caves have elaborate courtyards in front of the main shrines. The masterpiece is the breathtaking Kailasa Temple (Cave 16). Dedicated to Shiva, it is the world's largest monolithic sculpture, hewn from the rock by 7000 labourers over a 150-year period.

Altogether Ellora has 34 caves: 12 Buddhist (AD 600–800), 17 Hindu (AD 600–900) and five Jain (AD 800–1000). The site represents the renaissance of Hinduism under the Chalukya and Rashtrakuta dynasties, the subsequent decline of Indian Buddhism and a brief resurgence of Jainism under official patronage. The sculptures show the increasing influence of Tantric elements in India's three great religions and their coexistence at one site indicates a lengthy period of religious tolerance.

Official guides can be hired at the ticket office in front of the Kailasa Temple for Rs 280 for up to four hours. Most relay an extensive knowledge of the cave architecture. Touts offer a selection of pictorial guidebooks. If you only have time to visit either Ellora or Ajanta then make it Ellora.

KAILASA TEMPLE

Neither a simple cave, nor a plain religious monument, this rock-cut temple, built by King Krishna I of the Rashtrakuta dynasty in AD 760, was built to represent Mt Kailasa (Kailash), Shiva's home in the Himalaya. Three huge trenches were cut into the cliff face and then the shape was 'released' with tools – an undertaking that entailed removing 200,000 tonnes of rock! Kailasa covers twice the area of the Parthenon in Athens and is 1½ times as high.

Size aside, the Kailasa Temple is remarkable for its prodigious sculptural decoration. Around the temple are dramatic carved panels, depicting scenes from the Ramayana, the Mahabharata and the adventures of Krishna. The most superb depicts the demon king Ravana flaunting his strength by shaking Mt Kailasa. Unimpressed, Shiva crushes Ravana's pride by simply flexing a toe. This is still a functioning temple and many people come to pray in the main shrine.

Don't forget to explore the dank, bat-filled corners of the complex with their numerous forgotten carvings. Afterwards take a hike up the path to the south of the complex and walk right around the top perimeter of the 'cave', from where you can appreciate its grand scale.

BUDDHIST CAVES

The southernmost 12 caves are Buddhist viharas (resting places), except Cave 10, which is a chaitya (assembly hall). While the earliest caves are simple, Caves 11 and 12 are more ambitious, probably in an attempt to compete with the more impressive Hindu temples.

Cave 1, the simplest vihara, may have been a granary. Cave 2 is notable for its ornate pillars and its imposing seated Buddha figure facing the setting sun. Cave 3 and Cave 4 are unfinished and not as well preserved.

Cave 5 is the largest vihara in this group, at 18m wide and 36m long; the rows of stone benches hint that it may have once been an assembly hall.

Cave 6 is an ornate vihara with wonderful images of Tara, consort of the Bodhisattva Avalokiteshvara, and of the Buddhist goddess of learning, Mahamayuri, looking remarkably similar to Saraswati, her Hindu equivalent. Cave 7 is an unadorned hall, but from here you can pass through a doorway to Cave 8, the first cave in which the sanctum is detached from the rear wall. Cave 9 is notable for its wonderfully carved façade.

Cave 10, the Viswakarma (Carpenter's) Cave, is the only chaitya in the Buddhist group and one of the finest in India. It takes its name from the ribs carved into the roof, in imitation of wooden beams; the balcony and upper gallery offer a closer view of the ceiling and a frieze depicting amorous couples. A decorative window gently illuminates an enormous figure of the teaching Buddha.

Cave 11, the Do Thal (Two Storey) Cave, is entered through its third, basement level, not discovered until 1876. Like Cave 12 it probably owes its size to competition with the more impressive Hindu caves of the same period.

Cave 12, the huge Tin Thal (Three Storey) Cave, is entered through a courtyard. The (locked) shrine on the top floor contains a large Buddha figure flanked by his seven previous incarnations. The walls are carved with relief pictures, like those in the Hindu caves.

HINDU CAVES

Where calm and contemplation infuse the Buddhist caves, drama and excitement characterise the Hindu group (Caves 13 to 29). In terms of scale, creative vision and skill of execution, these caves are in a league of their own.

All these temples were cut from the top down so that it was never necessary to use scaffolding – the builders began with the roof and moved down to the floor.

Cave 13 is a simple cave, most likely a granary. Cave 14, the Ravana-ki-Khai, is a Buddhist vihara converted to a temple dedicated to Shiva sometime in the 7th century.

Cave 15, the Das Avatara (Ten Incarnations of Vishnu) Cave, is one of the finest at Ellora. The two-storey temple contains a mesmerising Shiva Nataraja, and Shiva emerging from a lingam (phallic image) while Vishnu and Brahma pay homage.

Caves 17 to 20 and numbers 22 to 28 are simple monasteries.

Cave 21, known as the Ramesvara, features interesting interpretations of the familiar Shaivite scenes depicted in the earlier temples. The figure of goddess Ganga, standing on her makara (crocodile), is particularly notable.

The large Cave 29, the Dumar Lena, is thought to be a transitional model between the simpler hollowed-out caves and the fully developed temples exemplified by the Kailasa. It has views over the nearby waterfall.

JAIN CAVES

The five Jain caves may lack the artistic vigour and ambitious size of the best Hindu temples, but they are exceptionally detailed. The caves are 1km north of the last Hindu temple (Cave 29) at the end of the bitumen road.

Cave 30, the Chota Kailasa (Little Kailasa), is a poor imitation of the great Kailasa Temple and stands by itself some distance from the other Jain temples.

In contrast, Cave 32, the Indra Sabha (Assembly Hall of Indra), is the finest of the Jain temples. Its ground-floor plan is similar to that of the Kailasa, but the upstairs area is as ornate and richly decorated as the downstairs is plain. There are images of the Jain tirthankars (great teachers) Parasnath and Gomateshvara, the latter surrounded by wildlife. Inside the shrine is a seated figure of Mahavira, the last tirthankar and founder of the Jain religion.

Cave 31 is really an extension of Cave 32. Cave 33, the Jagannath Sabha, is similar in plan to 32 and has some well-preserved sculptures. The final temple, the small Cave 34, also has interesting sculptures. On the hilltop over the Jain temples, a 5m-high image of Parasnath looks down on Ellora.

Sleeping & Eating

Hotel Kailas (☎ 244446; www.hotelkailas.com; d from Rs 300, cottages from Rs 900) A mixed bag of rooms that range from cheap budget cells that get very hot to clean, stone cottages with warm showers and inviting views over the caves. There's a good restaurant and a lush lawn where you can sit and have a drink.

Locals say the best food emerges from the kitchens of the Milan Hotel (dishes Rs 20-50), across the road. Also reliable is the spotless MTDC Ellora Restaurant & Bar (dishes Rs 30-150), which will also provide lunch boxes for you so you can have a picnic beside the caves.

Getting There & Away

Buses travel regularly between Aurangabad and Ellora (Rs 17); the last bus returns from Ellora at around 7pm. Share jeeps leave when they're full and drop off outside the bus stand in Aurangabad (Rs 12). A full-day rickshaw tour to Ellora with stops en route costs around Rs 350 and a taxi will be somewhere between Rs 500 and 600.

AJANTA

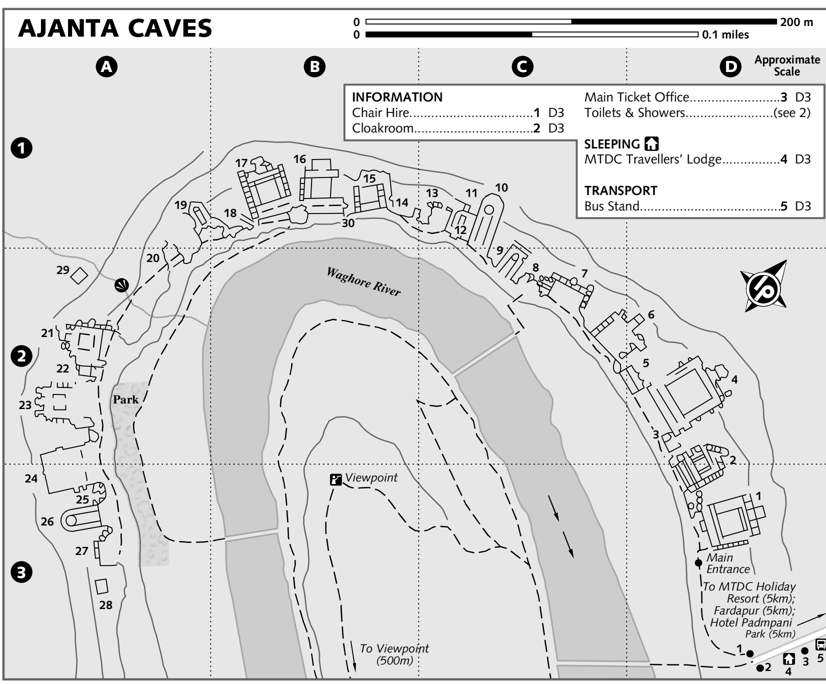
☎ 02438

A World Heritage site, the Buddhist caves of Ajanta (☎ 244226; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/US$5; 9am-5.30pm Tue-Sun) – 105km northeast of Aurangabad, and about 60km south of Jalgaon – are the Louvre of central India. The caves date from around 200 BC to AD 650 and, as Ellora developed and Buddhism gradually waned, the glorious Ajanta caves were abandoned and forgotten until 1819, when a British hunting party stumbled upon them. Their isolation contributed to the fine state of preservation in which some of their paintings remain to this day.

Information

Flash photography is banned in the caves; a video-camera permit costs Rs 25. Many of the caves are too dark to see much without a torch, so bring your own if you really want to glimpse any detail. Avoid visiting on weekends or holidays when everybody and their second cousin turns up.

A cloakroom near the main ticket office is a safe place to leave gear (Rs 4 per bag for four hours), so you could even arrive in the morning from Jalgaon, check out the caves and continue to Aurangabad in the evening. There's a short, steep climb to the first cave from the entrance; if you're not up to the hike, a chair carried by four bearers (Rs 400) can be hired at the foot of these steps.



Government of India tourist office guides can be hired at Cave 1 for up to four people for an approximately two-hour tour (Rs 350). They have extensive knowledge and bring the frescoes to life with their stories.

Sights & Activities

THE CAVES

The 30 caves are cut into the steep face of a horseshoe-shaped rock gorge on the Waghore River. Apart from Caves 29 and 30, they are sequentially numbered from one end of the gorge to the other. They do not follow a chronological order; the oldest are mainly in the middle and the newer ones are close to each end. At busy times viewers are allotted 15 minutes within each cave.

Five of the caves are chaityas while the other 25 are viharas. Caves 8, 9, 10, 12, 13 and part of 15 are older early Buddhist caves, while the others are Mahayana (dated from around the 5th century AD). In the simpler, more austere early Buddhist school, the Buddha was never represented directly – his presence was always alluded to by a symbol such as the footprint or wheel of law.

Of special note are the Ajanta 'frescoes', which are technically not frescoes at all. A fresco is a painting done on a wet surface that absorbs the colour; the Ajanta paintings are more correctly tempera, since the artists used animal glue and vegetable gum mixed with the paint pigments to bind them to the dry surface.

Caves 3, 5, 8, 22 and 28 to 30 are closed and/or inaccessible; Cave 14 is sometimes closed.

Cave 1, a Mahayana vihara, was one of the latest to be excavated and is the most beautifully decorated. A veranda at the front leads to a large congregation hall, with elaborate sculptures and narrative murals. Perspective in the paintings, details of dress and daily life, and many of the facial expressions are all wonderfully executed. The colours in the paintings were created from local minerals, with the exception of the vibrant blue made from Central Asian lapis lazuli. Look up to the ceiling to see the carving of four deer sharing a common head.

Cave 2 is also a late Mahayana vihara with deliriously ornamented columns and capitals, and some fine paintings. The ceiling is decorated with geometric and floral patterns. Mural scenes include a number of jatakas surrounding the Buddha's birth, including his mother's dream of a six-tusked elephant, which heralded the Buddha's conception.

Cave 4 is the largest vihara at Ajanta and is supported by 28 pillars. Although never completed, the cave has some impressive sculptures, including scenes of people fleeing from the 'eight great dangers' to the protection of the Buddha's disciple Avalokiteshvara.

Cave 6 is the only two-storey vihara at Ajanta, but parts of the lower storey have collapsed. Inside is a seated Buddha figure and an intricately carved door to the shrine. Upstairs the hall is surrounded by cells with fine paintings on the doorways.

Cave 7 has an atypical design, with porches before the veranda, leading directly to the four cells and the elaborately sculptured shrine.

Cave 9 is one of the earliest chaityas at Ajanta. Although it dates from the early Buddhist period, the two figures flanking the entrance door were probably later Mahayana additions. Columns run down both sides of the cave and around the 3m-high dagoba at the far end. The vaulted roof has traces of wooden ribs.

Cave 10 is thought to be the oldest cave (200 BC) and was the one first spotted by the British soldiers who rediscovered Ajanta. Similar in design to Cave 9, it is the largest chaitya. The façade has collapsed and the paintings inside have been damaged, in some cases by graffiti dating from soon after the rediscovery.

Cave 16, a vihara, contains some of Ajanta's finest paintings and is thought to have

WHEN WAS AJANTA'S GOLDEN AGE?

Theories on major archaeological sites continuously undergo review and there's no exception with the Ajanta caves.

American professor Dr Walter M Spink (who has studied the caves for more than 40 years) suggests that the splendour of the later Mahayana group may have been accomplished in less than 20 years – rather than over centuries as previously thought.

Scholars agree that the caves had two periods of patronage: an early group was crafted around the 1st and 2nd centuries BC and a second wave of work began centuries later. Spink pinpoints the Vakataka emperor Harisena as a reigning sponsor in the incredible renaissance of activity. Soon after his rise to the throne in AD 460 the caves began to realise their present forms, until Harisena's unexpected death in AD 477. The site was probably deserted in the AD 480s.

The silver lining to the tragedy is, according to Spink, that the sudden downfall of the eminent Vakataka empire at the pinnacle of the caves' energetic crafting is solely responsible for their phenomenally preserved state today.

If you're interested, Spink's book Ajanta: A Brief History and Guide (1994) can be bought from touts near the site.

been the original entrance to the entire complex. The best known of these paintings is the 'dying princess' – Sundari, wife of the Buddha's half-brother Nanda, who is said to have fainted at the news that her husband was renouncing the material life (and her) in order to become a monk. Carved figures appear to support the ceiling in imitation of wooden architectural details, and there's a statue of the Buddha seated on a lion throne teaching the Noble Eightfold Path.

Cave 17, with carved dwarfs supporting the pillars, has Ajanta's best-preserved and most varied paintings. Famous images include a princess applying make-up, a horny prince using the old trick of plying his lover with wine and the Buddha returning home from his enlightenment to beg from his wife and astonished son. A detailed panel tells of Prince Simhala's expedition to Sri Lanka. With his 500 companions he is shipwrecked on an island where ogresses appear as enchanting women, only to seize and devour their victims. Simhala escapes on a flying horse and returns to conquer the island.

Cave 19, a magnificent chaitya, has a remarkably detailed façade; its dominant feature is an impressive horseshoe-shaped window. Two fine standing Buddha figures flank the entrance. Inside is a three-tiered dagoba with a figure of the Buddha on the front. Outside the cave to the west sits a striking image of the Naga king with seven cobra hoods around his head. His wife, hooded by a single cobra, sits at his side.

Cave 24, if it had been finished, would be the largest vihara at Ajanta. You can see how the caves were constructed – long galleries were cut into the rock and then the rock between them was broken through.

Cave 26, a largely ruined chaitya, contains some fine sculptures. On the left wall is a huge figure of the 'reclining Buddha', lying back in preparation for nirvana. Other scenes include a lengthy depiction of the Buddha's temptation by Mara.

Cave 27 is virtually a vihara connected to the Cave 26 chaitya.

VIEWPOINTS

Two lookouts offer picture-perfect views of the whole horseshoe-shaped gorge. The first is a short walk beyond the river, crossed via one of the concrete bridges below Caves 8 and 27. A further 20-minute uphill walk leads to the lookout from where the British party first saw the caves. It's also possible to take a taxi up to the latter viewpoint from Fardapur.

Sleeping & Eating

Accommodation options close to the caves are limited and you're better off using Jalgaon as a base. However, during the lifetime of this book a luxury holiday complex, just beside the T-junction, is due for completion. In the meantime, if you wish to stay within spitting distance of the caves choose from one of the following.

Hotel Padmpani Park (☎ 244280; padmpanipark@yahoo.co.in; Aurangabad-Jalgaon Rd; d with/without AC Rs 350/450). Small and clean rooms come with a hospitable welcome.

MTDC Holiday Resort (☎ 244230; Aurangabad-Jalgaon Rd; d with/without AC from Rs 700/600; ❄) At Fardapur, 1km from the T-junction, there are rumours that the prices of rooms here are going to drop to just Rs 650/450, which makes these adequate and spacious rooms a good deal, but the staff are a bit sleepy.

The MTDC Travellers' Lodge, just beside the ticket office, was closed for much-needed renovations at the time of research. It's expected to reopen sometime during 2007.

As far as filling your stomach goes there is a string of cheap (but not very appetising) restaurants in the 'shopping plaza' – our advice is to pack a picnic and enjoy it in the shady park below Caves 22 to 27.

Getting There & Away

Buses from Aurangabad (p808) or Jalgaon (opposite) will drop you off at the T-junction (where the Aurangabad–Jalgaon Rd meets the road to the caves), 4km from the caves. From here, after paying an 'amenities' fee (Rs 5), race through the 'shopping plaza' to the departure point for the green-coloured Euro I buses (Rs 6, with AC Rs 10), which zoom down to the caves. Buses return on a regular basis (half-hourly, last bus at 6.15pm) to the T-junction.

During the day all MSRTC buses passing through Fardapur stop at the T-junction. After the caves close you can board buses to either Aurangabad or Jalgaon outside the MTDC Holiday Resort in Fardapur, 1km down the main road towards Jalgaon. Taxis are available in Fardapur; Rs 500 should get you to Jalgaon.

JALGAON

☎ 0257 / elev 208m

Built on the passing rail trade, you might be forgiven for thinking of Jalgaon as nothing more than a dreary transit town – which, in fact, it is. However, it's not all bad news because the town keeps a couple of alluring aces stuffed up its sleeve. Firstly, despite a population of some half a million, Jalgaon feels like a small country town full of happy people. Secondly, and much more practically, Jalgaon makes a great base for the Ajanta Caves, 60km to the south.

Information

You can find a couple of banks, ATMs and internet cafés along Nerhu Rd, which is the road running along the top of Station Rd.

Sleeping & Eating

Most of the hotels in Jalgaon have 24-hour checkout.

our pick Hotel Plaza (☎ 2227354; hotelplaza_jal@yahoo.com; Station Rd; dm/s/d from Rs 150/200/250;) Hotel owners throughout Maharashtra take note. With just a little love, care and a few licks of paint you too could create an establishment like Hotel Plaza. The snow-white rooms are simple and efficient and come in a pick-and-mix range of styles and sizes. The effusive owner is a mine of useful information.

Anjali Guest House (☎ 2225079; Khandesh Mill Complex, Station Rd; s/d from Rs 250/300) Just past the autorickshaw stand. The tiny beds in this guesthouse certainly aren't designed for fat or tall people, but for anyone else it will just about pass for a night. Much better than the rooms is the downstairs vegetarian restaurant which has Kashmiri pilau and malai kofta (veggie balls) to die for.

Hotel Kewal (☎ 2223949; shreekewal@ip.eth.net; Station Rd; d with/without AC from Rs 775/525;) Another in India's legion of drab hotels. Despite this, after the Hotel Plaza, this is the best bet in town and the eccentric mix of Pharaonic Egyptian, Hindu Indian and European Romantic wall decorations are certainly memorable.

Hotel Arya (Navi Peth; mains Rs 20-60) Opposite Kelkar Marke, near the clock tower. Serving colourful Indian food that won't set your taste buds aflame. It's so popular you may have to queue for a table.

Silver Palace (mains Rs 45-150) Next door to the Hotel Plaza this restaurant's claims of luxury might be overstating things a tad – you wouldn't come for here for tea with the Queen, but the food is good, so if she can't make it then it'll do just fine.

Getting There & Away

Several express trains between Mumbai and Delhi or Kolkata (Calcutta) stop briefly at Jalgaon train station (☎ 131). Expresses to Mumbai (sleeper/2AC Rs 170/691, eight hours) are readily available. The Sewagram Express, leaving from Jalgaon at 10.10pm, goes to Nagpur (sleeper/2AC Rs 170/691, eight hours).

The first run from the bus stand (☎ 2229774) to Fardapur (Rs 38, 1½ hours) is at 6am; buses depart every half hour thereafter. The same bus continues to Aurangabad (Rs 77, four hours).

Jalgaon's train station and bus stand are about 2km apart (Rs 12 by autorickshaw). Luxury bus offices on Railway Station Rd offer services to Aurangabad (Rs 120, 3½ hours), Mumbai (Rs 250, nine hours), Pune (Rs 250, nine hours) and Nagpur (normal/sleeper Rs 300/350, 10 hours).

LONAR METEORITE CRATER

Around 50,000 years ago a meteorite slammed into the earth leaving behind this massive crater, which measures some 2km across and 170m deep. It's the only hypervelocity natural impact crater in basaltic rock in the world – impressive stuff, hey! Assuming this means nothing to you then take faith in the fact that, with a shallow green lake in its base, it's as tranquil and relaxing a spot as you could hope to find. The lake itself is highly alkaline and, apparently, taking a dip in its waters is excellent for the skin. Scientists suspect that the meteorite is still embedded about 600m below the southeastern rim of the crater.

In addition to being an all-natural beauty treatment, the crater's edge is home to several Hindu temples as well as wildlife, including langur monkeys, peacocks, gazelles and an array of birds. The Government Rest House, which is the starting point for the trail down to the bottom, is about 15 minutes' walk from the bus stand.

MTDC Tourist Complex (☎ 07260-221602; dm/d Rs 100/450), has a prime location just across the road from the crater, but don't expect much electricity. There's also a basic restaurant here.

Getting There & Away

There are a couple of buses a day between Lonar and Aurangabad (Rs 110, five hours).

Lonar can also be reached by bus from Fardapur with a change at Buldhana.

It's possible to visit Lonar on a day trip from Aurangabad or Jalgaon if you hire a car and driver. A full day there and back from either town will cost at least Rs 1800.

NAGPUR

☎ 0712 / pop 2.1 million / elev 305m

Nagpur, the geographic centre and orange-growing capital of India, is a clean and affluent city which makes a good jumping-off point for a series of trips into the far eastern corner of Maharashtra. In addition to its proximity to Ramtek (opposite) and the ashrams around Sevagram (opposite), Nagpur is a convenient stop for those heading to the isolated Navagaon National Park, 135km east, and Tadoba-Andhari Tiger Reserve, 150km south of Nagpur. The former has bears, wild dogs and elusive leopards, while the latter hosts gaurs, chitals, nilgais and seldom-spotted tigers.

The countryside around Nagpur might be interesting but the city itself has such a dearth of attractions that locals list a shiny shopping mall and a less shiny prison in the towns' roll call of sites. What is worth prodding about in is the colourful central market – the star buys are the near-fluorescent clay pots. The one time Nagpur is worth visiting for its own sake is during the Dussehra Festival (September or October); see the boxed text, below.

Information

Computrek (18 Central Ave; per hr Rs 20) Internet access on the main drag.

Cyber Zoo (54 Central Ave; per hr Rs 15; 10am-10pm Mon-Sun) Another central internet café.

MTDC office (☎ 2533325; Sanskrutik Bachat Bhavan, Sitabuldi; 10am-5.45pm Mon-Sat) In the compound opposite Hotel Hardeo.

Sleeping & Eating

The majority of the budget and midrange hotels are clustered along noisy Central Ave, a 10-minute walk east of the train station. An autorickshaw to Central Ave from the bus stand costs around Rs 20. The accommodation here is more focused on Indian businessmen than tourists.

Hotel Blue Diamond (☎ 2727461; fax 2727460; www.hotelbluediamondnagpur.com; 113 Central Ave; s/d with shared bathroom from Rs 150/200, with private bathroom Rs 250/350, with AC Rs 550/650;) The mirrored ceiling in the reception is straight out of a bad '70s nightclub and the rooms are pretty much the type you'd expect to find above a seedy '70s nightclub. However, it has the cheapest beds in town.

Hotel Blue Moon (☎ 2726061; ktcbaja_ngp@sancharnet.in; Central Ave; s/d with TV from Rs 350/500) One of the closest hotels to the train station with large, plain and clean rooms that don't win any awards for imagination.

Hotel Skylark (☎ 2724654; fax 2726193; 119 Central Ave; s/d Rs 450/575, with AC Rs 775/850;) This is the best budget hotel, but it's nothing to rave about. Rooms are drab, dreary and none too clean. The receptionist is very helpful and the restaurant, which has regular live music, has a diverse range of Indian and Chinese food (meals Rs 50 to 120).

Hotel Hardeo (☎ 2529116; hardeo_ngp@sancharnet.in; s/d Rs 1700/2200;) Around 1km east of

UNTOUCHABLE CHAMPION

One of the most highly respected humanitarians in Maharashtra's history was Dr Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar, a low-caste Hindu who became Law Minister and Scheduled Castes leader. He was born into a Dalit household in the district of Ratnagiri in 1891. After studying in the West, he returned to India to encounter discrimination with even his workmates refusing to hand him anything for fear of ritual pollution. Thus began a lifelong campaign for Dalit rights, in which he unrelentingly sought equality for the depressed classes.

Despite his victories for the people, Dr Ambedkar lost faith that Hindu prejudice against Dalits would ever be eradicated and, on 14 October 1956, he converted to Buddhism in Nagpur, an act that was repeated by an estimated three million low-caste Hindus. Along with vows embracing tenets of the Buddha, he stated, 'I shall believe in the equality of man'.

Every year thousands come to Nagpur during the Hindu Dussehra Festival to commemorate his life. For more information on Dr Ambedkar, Buddhism and the fight for Dalit parity, see www.ambedkar.org.

the train station. You only have to look at the drooping moustache and tail coats of the doorman to know that this business-class hotel is the best of the bunch. Even so the large, clean rooms are past their sell-by date. There's a good restaurant.

Krishnum (Central Ave) This is one of the better eating choices on the main road and once you sample its thalis (Rs 30 to 60), great upma (spicy South Indian semolina pancake), fruit juices and other South Indian snacks you'll understand why.

Shivraj (Central Ave; mains Rs 25-80) Directly opposite the Krishnum, the Shivraj has similar South Indian tastes and a mean dosa.

The dozens of dhabas (snack bars), food stalls and fruit stands opposite the train station rouse in the evening. Summer is the best time to sample the famed oranges.

AIR

Indian Airlines (☎ 2533962) has flights to Hyderabad (US$75, one hour, twice weekly), Mumbai (US$93, 1¼ hours, twice daily), Delhi (US$108, 1½ hours, daily) and Kolkata (US$93, 1½ hours, three weekly). Jet Airways (☎ 5617888) has flights to Mumbai (US$126, twice daily). Air Deccan has cheap daily flights to Mumbai and Hyderabad. Kingfisher hooks Nagpur up with Ahmedabad, Bengaluru, Chennai (Madras), Hyderabad and Pune, and IndiGo zooms to Mumbai and Kolkata. Taxis/autorickshaws from the airport to the city centre cost Rs 300/150.

BUS

The main MSRTC bus stand (☎ 2726221) is 2km south of the train station and hotel area. Buses head regularly for Wardha (Rs 40, two hours) and Ramtek (Rs 24, 1½ hours). Two buses roar off daily to Jalgaon (semideluxe/deluxe Rs 300/350, 10 hours), and a semideluxe bus to Hyderabad (Rs 350, 12 hours) leaves at 6pm.

TRAIN

Nagpur Junction train station (☎ 131), on the Mumbai–Howrah line, is an impressive edifice in the centre of town. The overnight Vidarbha Express originates in Nagpur and departs for Mumbai CST (sleeper/2AC Rs 288/1165, 14 hours) at 6.10pm. The same train departs Mumbai at 7.40pm for Nagpur. Heading north to Kolkata the Mumbai Howrah Mail departs from Nagpur at 11.05am and arrives at Howrah at 5.50am (sleeper/2AC Rs 345/1398, 1138km). Five Mumbai-bound expresses stop at Jalgaon (for Ajanta caves; sleeper/2AC Rs 170/691, seven hours). There are also connections between Nagar and Bengaluru, Delhi and Hyderabad.

AROUND NAGPUR

Ramtek

About 40km northeast of Nagpur, the interesting 600-year-old temples (⏰ 6am-9pm) of Ramtek squat happily atop the Hill of Rama and are positively bubbling with playful monkeys. It's said in the epic Ramayana that Rama spent time here with Sita and Lakshmi. Autorickshaws will cart you the 5km from the bus stand to the main temple complex for Rs 25 and you can walk back down to the town via the 700 steps at the back of the complex.

On the road to the temples you'll pass the delightful Ambala Tank, which is lined with small temples most of which appear to be slowly dissolving back into the lake waters or disappearing into the undergrowth. An hour or so spent poking your nose into nooks and crannies here can make you feel like a real explorer. Boat rides around the lake are available for Rs 20 per person.

The Kalidas Memorial (admission Rs 5; ⏰ 8am-8.30pm), on the top of the hill beside the main temple complex, is dedicated to the famous classical Sanskrit dramatist Kalidas (also spelled Kalidasa). There is a number of other temples in the area, including a Jain temple at the base of the hill and a mosque on the opposite hill.

On the hilltop and not far from the temples, Rajkamal Resort (☎ 07114-255620; d with/without AC Rs 900/700; ❄) has large but overpriced rooms that come with TVs. The hotel has a basic restaurant-bar.

Buses run half-hourly between Ramtek and the MSRTC bus stand in Nagpur (Rs 24, 1½ hours). The last bus back to Nagpur is at 8.30pm.

SEVAGRAM

Sevagram, the Village of Service, is where Mahatma Gandhi set up base in the long run to Independence and established the Sevagram Ashram (☎ 284753; ⏰ 6.30am-6.30pm).

The peaceful ashram, encompassing 40 hectares of farmland, as well as residences and research centres, is a long way from anywhere and, with very little to see, it's only to be recommended to die-hard Gandhi fans. The highlights of a visit are the original huts that Gandhi lived in, one of which contains the great man's toilet (Western style!), as well as some of his personal effects, including his famous walking stick.

Across the road from the ashram, the Gandhi Picture Exhibition (admission free; 10am-6pm Wed-Mon), traces his life through old photographs. For such an important figure, it's unfortunate the exhibition is so dull and poorly presented.

Very basic lodging is available in Yatri Nivas (d Rs 80), across the road from the entry gate – book in advance through the ashram. Vegetarian meals are served in the ashram's dining hall.

Getting There & Away

The ashram can be reached from Wardha or Sevagram train stations, both of which are on the Central Railway. There are around five express trains from Nagpur to Sevagram (Rs 16 on the slow country trains or Rs 42 on the faster, one-hour expresses). Express MSRTC buses run more frequently between Nagpur and Wardha (Rs 40, two hours).

Local buses go regularly to the ashram from Wardha (Rs 5, 20 minutes), or an autorickshaw will cost Rs 60 for the 8km trip.

AROUND SEVAGRAM

Just 3km from Sevagram on the road to Nagpur at Paunar is the Brahmavidya Mandir Ashram (☎ 07152-288388; 6am-10am, 11am-noon & 2-6pm), the ashram of Gandhi's disciple Vinoba Bhave. This persistent soul walked through India asking rich landlords to hand over land for redistribution to the poor – he managed to persuade them to fork out a total of 1.6 million hectares.

With just 33 members, the ashram is run almost entirely by women. Dedicated to swarajya (rural self-sufficiency), it's operated on a social system of consensus with no central management. Basic accommodation and board (about Rs 75) in two rooms sharing a bathroom is available; call ahead. The bus from Nagpur runs past the ashram; otherwise it's Rs 50 in an autorickshaw to Paunar from Wardha or Sevagram. There's little for the casual visitor to see.

SOUTHERN MAHARASHTRA

KONKAN COAST

Maharashtra's Konkan Coast – the narrow strip between the Western Ghats and Arabian Sea – will suit those travellers really wishing to deviate from the beaten track. It's a remote, little-explored fringe of superlative beaches, disco-green paddy fields, heaped-up hills and collapsing clifftop forts. It's not the easiest region to travel through; accommodation is scarce, the food monotonous, transport painfully slow and the locals completely unaccustomed to foreigners. However, the Konkan Railway provides access to some of the bigger towns while local buses help connect up the dots. If you want to gain the most from this area then rent a car and driver in Mumbai and drift slowly down the coast to Goa. You may have to spend some nights sleeping in villagers' houses – be generous with how much you give. The rewards for your efforts are beaches of which the Maldives would be jealous!

Murud

About 165km south of Mumbai, the sleepy fishing town of Murud is the most obvious first port of call. With a striking beach (though suffering from a little pollution carried down from Mumbai) and the commanding island fortress of Janjira, 5km south of the village, you'll be happy you came.

Standing a little way offshore, the fortress was built in 1140 by Siddi Jahor and became the 16th-century capital of the Siddis of Janjira, descendants of sailor-traders from the Horn of Africa. Although constructed on an island, its 12m-high walls seem to emerge straight from the sea. This made the fort utterly impregnable, even to the mighty Marathas – Shivaji tried to conquer it by sea and his son, Sambhaji, attempted to tunnel to it. Today the fort has finally been conquered by none other than Mother Nature: its walls are slowly turning to rubble and its interior back into forest.

The only way to reach Janjira is by local boat (Rs 12 return, 10 minutes) from Rajpuri Port, about 5km south of Murud. Boats depart from 7am to 6pm daily, but require a minimum of 20 passengers. On weekends and holidays you won't have to wait long.

To get to Rajpuri from Murud, either take an autorickshaw (Rs 45) or hire a bicycle (Rs 4 per hour) from the small shop opposite the midroad shrine on Darbar Rd, Murud's main beach road.

Back in Murud you can waste away the days on the beach, peer through the gates of the off-limits Ahmedganj Palace, estate of the Siddi Nawab of Murud, or scramble around the decaying mosque and tombs on the south side of town. If you want a quieter spot to swim, there's a near-pristine beach a couple of kilometres to the north.

SLEEPING & EATING

Several accommodation options are strung out along Murud's beach road.

Mirage Holiday Homes (☎ 276744; opposite Kumar Talkies, Darbar Rd; d with/without AC Rs 1500/600; ❄) A small and friendly hotel with a pretty garden and clean, simple rooms – so simple that not all the bathrooms have a roof!

Golden Swan Beach Resort (☎ 274078; www.goldenswan.com; Darbar Rd; d with/without AC from Rs 1800/1000, cottages Rs 4000; ❄) The first place you come to as the bus enters town and also the plushest. The rooms are clean and brightly decorated.

If you want to be right on the sand, the beach to the north of Murud has a number of places to stay either in people's homes or in simple guesthouses.

Both the above serve food, but the Golden Swan Beach Resort offers the best selection. Otherwise, in the town centre, try Patel Inn (☎ 274153; mains Rs 40-60), serving fresh fish dishes that make you drool.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

In Mumbai regular ferries (Rs 60, one hour) or hydrofoils (Rs 110, 45 minutes) from the Gateway of India cruise to Mandva. If you take the hydrofoil the ticket includes a free shuttle bus to Alibag (30 minutes), otherwise an autorickshaw will be about Rs 120. Rickety local buses from Alibag head down the coast to Murud (Rs 27, two hours). Alternatively, buses from Mumbai Central bus stand take almost six hours to Murud (Rs 130).

The nearest railhead on the Konkan Railway is about two hours away in Roha.

Ganpatipule

☎ 02357

Ganpatipule, on the coast 375km south of Mumbai, has several kilometres of almost perfect beaches and clean waters that leave those of Goa for dead. For much of the year life plods along very slowly but woe betide anyone coming here for a bit of peace and quiet during the Indian holidays (Diwali is especially busy). These tourists haven't come for the hedonism of sun and sand though, but rather for the town's seaside temple (☎ 235223; 🕐 5am-9pm) with its Swayambhu Ganpati, or 'naturally formed' monolithic Ganesh (painted a lurid orange), allegedly discovered 1600 years ago.

Foreign tourists do not frequent Ganpatipule often and you are likely to be an object of considerable curiosity. For a quieter patch of sand, head towards the beach in front of the MTDC Tent Resort.

There are several places to stay in and around the town but a kilometre or so from the beach is the unforgettable Hotel Shiv Sagar Palace (☎ 25147163; shivsagarpalace@yahoo.com; d with/without AC from Rs 1000/1500; ❄). This massive pink structure, full of colonnades, domes and arches looks like a tacky Las Vegas hotel on LSD. The sweeping driveway is big enough to park a 747 on and, once inside the hallowed halls, you'll discover a kitsch world of orange plastic palm trees, towering chandeliers, gold tables and mirrors. It's worth staying for the novelty factor alone. The stunning sea views, good vegetarian restaurant and a professional attitude bring an unexpected class to the place.

The MTDC Resort (☎ 235248; fax 235328; d with/without AC from Rs 1400/1200; ❄) is nicely ensconced among the palms and has the prime beachside spot. Its Tent Resort (☎ 235248; 2-/4-bed tents Rs 300/500), might be a cheaper option but the tents have no security and can get very hot. The resort offers a variety of water sports, has a Bank of Maharashtra (☎ 235304), which can change travellers cheques but not currency, and the Tarang Restaurant (mains Rs 40-90), serving local specialities such as Malvani fish curry. MTDC can also organise tours (Rs 1200 day tour, Rs 500 evening tour) of the region that include a boat cruise and village visits.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

One MSRTC bus heads daily to Ganpatipule (semideluxe Rs 250, 10 hours) from Mumbai, leaving the state road transport terminal near Mumbai Central bus stand at 7.30pm. The bus rumbles back to Mumbai from Ganpatipule at 6.00am. Frequent ordinary buses head down to Ratnagiri (Rs 30, one hour).

Ratnagiri

☎ 02352 / pop 70,335

Around 50km south of Ganpatipule, Ratnagiri is the largest town on the south coast and the main transport hub (it's on the Konkan Railway), but for a tourist that's about all that can be said for it. It's a hot, sticky workaday town with little to see and do aside from visiting the former home of freedom fighter Lokmanya Tilak, which is now a small museum (Tilak Alley; admission free; ⏲ 9am-7pm), and the remnants of the Thibaw Palace (Thibaw Palace Rd), where the last Burmese king, Thibaw, was interned under the British from 1886 until his death in 1916. A more exciting option is to take an evening stroll along Bhatya Beach, but you certainly wouldn't want to swim or sunbathe here.

There is no shortage of ATMs or internet cafés along the main road into town.

Just west of the bus stands, Hotel Landmark (☎ 220120; fax 220124; Thibaw Palace Rd; s/d Rs 495/695, d with AC Rs 995; ❄) has clean rooms and a restaurant serving good Indian food.

Ratnagiri train station (☎ 131) is 10km east of town; all express trains stop here, including the 10.33am Jan Shatabdi south to Margao (2nd class/chair Rs 122/390, 3½ hours, Thursday to Tuesday) and north to Mumbai (Rs 137/455, five hours, Friday to Wednesday). The old bus stand (☎ 222340), in the town centre, has state buses to Kolhapur (Rs 97, four hours) and Ganpatipule (Rs 30, one hour). The new bus stand (☎ 227882), 1km further west, has two buses daily to both Malvan (Rs 110, five hours) and Panaji (Panjim) in Goa (Rs 200, seven hours).

Tarkarli & Malvan

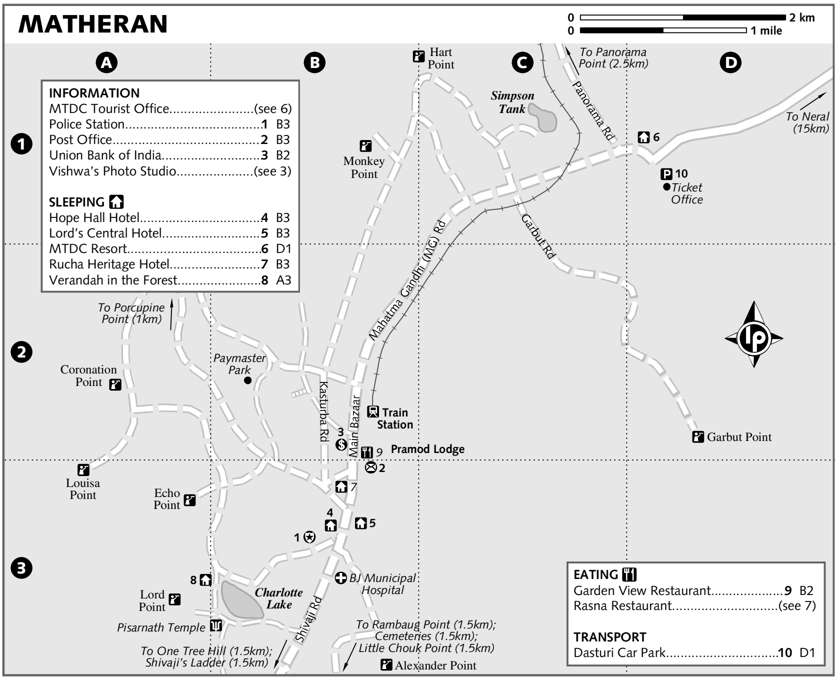
Two hundred kilometres south of Ratnagiri and within striking distance of Goa, Tarkarli has the compulsory white sand and sparkling blue waters that every tropical beach should have. In fact it's actually considerably nicer and a good deal cleaner than many of the Goan beaches. The only thing it's really lacking is a tourist industry kitted out for foreigners. There are a few places to stay on the bumpy 7km road in from Malvan, the nearest town, the MTDC Holiday Resort (☎ 252390; d from Rs 1200) being only the most obvious. Here you will find an array of simple but sturdy (and a little overpriced) chalets and an excellent restaurant. Get up early and you may see turtles on the beach or a school of dolphins playing in the waters. Also inquire at the resort about backwater tours on its houseboat.

The monstrous Sindhudurg Fort, dating from 1664, is easily visible floating on its offshore island and it can be reached by frequent ferry (Rs 27) from Malvan. It's said that the great Chhatrapati Shivaji helped build this almost impregnable island citadel; his hand- and footprints can be found in one of the turrets above the entrance. A village and several temples lie within the 3km of fort walls.

The closest train station is Kudal, 38km west of the coast. Reasonably frequent buses (Rs 35, one hour) run between here and Malvan bus stand (☎ 252034). Otherwise an autorickshaw from Kudal to Malvan or Tarkali is Rs 300. Malvan has several buses daily to Panaji, Goa (Rs 85, five hours) and a couple of services to Ratnagiri (Rs 100, six hours). An autorickshaw between Malvan and Tarkarli costs Rs 60.

MATHERAN



☎ 02148 / pop 5139 / elev 803m

Matheran (Jungle Topped), resting atop the Sahyadris Mountains amid a shady forest crisscrossed with walking tracks and breathtaking lookouts, is easily the most gorgeous of Maharashtra's hill stations.

Hugh Malet, collector for the Thane district, 'discovered' Matheran in 1850 while climbing the path known as Shivaji's Ladder; thereafter it quickly became a popular hill station. The place owes its tranquillity to a ban on motor vehicles and bicycles, making it an ideal place to rest the ears and lungs. It's a very friendly town, well geared up for Indian tourists, but less sure of foreigners.

From around mid-June to early October the monsoon-mudded village practically hibernates. Otherwise weekends generally see Matheran clogged with day-trippers, while during the true high season – the peak holiday periods of May to June, Diwali and Christmas – it's packed to the gills and hotel prices get ludicrous.

Getting to Matheran always used to be half the fun; from Neral Junction a narrow-gauge toy train (mini train) chugged along a scenic 21km route to the heart of the village, but the devastating monsoon of 2005, which left hundreds across the state dead and Mumbai crippled, also put a temporary end to such shenanigans thanks to track damage. At the time of research repair work was ongoing and it's hoped that the train will once again be chugging through 'One Kiss Tunnel' by the time this book hits the shelves.

Information

Entry to Matheran costs Rs 25 (Rs 15 for children), which you pay on arrival at the train station or the car park.

Vishwa's Photo Studio (☎ 230354), on Mahatma Gandhi (MG) Rd, sells useful miniguides (Rs 25) and is actually a far better source of information than the so-called tourist office (☎ 230540) inside the MTDC Resort next to the car park. The Union Bank of India (☎ 230282; MG Rd; 10am-2pm Mon-Fri, to noon Sat) changes travellers cheques only.

Sights and Activities

You can walk along shady forest paths to most of Matheran's viewpoints in a matter of hours and it's a place suited to stress-free ambling. If you've got the early morning energy then Panorama Point is the most dramatic place to glimpse the sunrise, while Porcupine Point (also known as Sunset Point) is the most popular (read: packed) as the sun drops. Louisa Point and Little Chouk Point also have stunning views and if you're visiting Echo Point, be sure to give it a yell. Stop at Charlotte Lake on the way back from Echo Point, but don't go for a swim – this is the town's main water supply. You can reach the valley below One Tree Hill down the path known as Shivaji's Ladder, allegedly trod upon by the Maratha leader himself.

Horses can be hired from people along MG Rd – you will certainly be approached – for rides to lookout points; they cost about Rs 200 per hour.

Sleeping & Eating

A few budget places sit near the train station, but most of the midrange and upscale 'resort' accommodation is between 10 and 20 minutes' walk away (1½ hours from the Dasturi car park). Checkout times vary wildly in Matheran – they can be as early as 7am. Rates quoted here are standard high-season prices, but if it's a very busy weekend then most hotels will do their best to push prices even higher. Regardless, all the accommodation is highly overpriced and standards are some of the lowest in Maharashtra.

Rucha Heritage Hotel (☎ 230072; MG Rd; d from Rs 500) This grand and formal white-pillared building is in the thick of the action. First impressions don't last long and the rooms don't match up, but at this price who's complaining?

MTDC Resort (☎ 230540; fax 230566; d with TV from Rs 650) Next to Dasturi car park and good for those who are too lazy to walk all the way into town with their gear. A peaceful, wooded location and the tidy rooms are good value.

Hope Hall Hotel (☎ 230253; MG Rd; d from Rs 1500) This lovely ramshackle building has overpriced rooms with squat toilets and hot bucket showers. Junior, the Iron Maiden–adoring brother of the woman who runs this joint, is quite a character. Checkout is 24 hours.

Lord's Central Hotel (☎ 230228; www.matheran.com; MG Rd; s/d Rs 800/1600, valley view Rs 1700/3400; 💻 🏊) The Lord's Central wins the award for most stunning view. It also deserves to win another award for having the cleanest and most inviting swimming pool as well as the largest chess set. The owners are a wealth of information and the rooms are decent. Be warned that when they quote prices they mean per person rather than per room.

Verandah in the Forest (☎ 230296; www.neemranahotels.com; d weekdays/weekends from Rs 2000/2500) Set amid the forest close to Charlotte Lake, the 19th-century aura and period furniture of creaky Barr house will send Raj-lovers' hearts racing. The hotel is completely without modern distractions and the electricity can be a bit hit and miss. It's let down by lousy service and a reception that certainly wouldn't amuse Queen Vic. The set meals (Indian lunch, continental breakfast and dinner) are very good.

Garden View Restaurant (☎ 230550; MG Rd; mains Rs 60-100) Locals insist that the tastiest meals in Matheran come with a garden view. Thalis are the star attraction.

Attached to Rucha Heritage Hotel, Rasna Restaurant (☎ 230072; MG Rd; mains Rs 70-110) is good value and includes a few Matheran surprises such as milk shakes and burgers.

Matheran is famed for its locally produced honey and for chikki, a rock-hard workout for the jaws made of gur (unrefined sugar made from cane juice) and nuts. Find it at the numerous 'chikki marts' and shops on MG Rd.

Getting There & Away

TAXI

From Neral to Matheran taxis cost around Rs 250 and take 20 to 30 minutes. A seat in a shared taxi is Rs 50. Taxis stop at the Dasturi car park, an hour's hike from Matheran's bazaar area. Horses and rickshaws are waiting here in abundance to whisk you in a cloud of dust to your hotel of choice – bargain hard and expect to pay Rs 200 per horse or cart.

TRAIN

The toy train was put out of action by the monsoon of 2005 and repair work to the tracks is expected to continue until late 2007. Prior to the closure of the train there were three departures daily from Neral Junction train station and an equal number of return journeys. During the monsoon period trains were far less frequent. When the repair work is completed, you can expect a similar number of trains per day. If possible, make reservations in advance from any computerised reservation office.

From Mumbai Chhatrapati Shivaji Terminus (CST) the most convenient express train to Neral Junction is the Deccan Express (2nd class/chair Rs 34/142, 7.10am). The Koyna Express (9am) doesn't arrive at Neral Junction until 10.31am. Most expresses from Mumbai stop at Karjat, down the line from Neral Junction, from where you can backtrack on one of the frequent local trains. Alternatively, take a suburban Karjat-bound train from Mumbai CST and get off at Neral (2nd/1st class Rs 20/120, 2½ hours).

From Pune the 7am Sahyadri Express (sleeper/2 AC Rs 101/280, two hours) is the only express stopping at Neral Junction, arriving at 10.09am. Alternatively, take an express that stops at Karjat and get a local train from there.

Getting Around

Matheran is one of the few places left in India where you'll find hand-pulled rickshaws (though even these are more barrow cart than rickshaw); they charge Rs 200 to haul you up from the Dasturi car park to the town. Apart from the rickshaws the only other transport options are your own feet, or a horse. For some reason nobody appears to have thought of attaching a cart to a horse.

LONAVLA

Lonavla, 106km southeast of Mumbai, caters to weekenders and conference groups coming from the big city and is promoted by the local tourist board as a 'hill resort'. This is a bit of a misnomer – there are certainly no soaring peaks in the background or precipitous drops to peer fearfully over, but the surrounding countryside is relatively pretty, if a little overdeveloped, and the air cooler and less humid than Mumbai. Lonavla is a long way off being an attractive town – its main drag consists almost exclusively of garishly lit shops flogging chikki, the rock-hard nut brittle sweet that is made in the area. But Lonavla does have one very worthwhile calling card – the nearby Karla and Bhaja Cave Temples, which after those of Ellora and Ajanta, are the best in Maharashtra.

Hotels, restaurants and the main road to the caves are a short walk north of the train station (exit from platform 1). Most of Lonavla town, which includes a busy market, is south of the station.

Change money in Mumbai or Pune as none of the banks here deal in foreign exchange. Internet access is available at Balaji Cyber Café (1st fl, Khandelwal Bldg, New Bazaar; per hr Rs 20; 12.30-10.30pm), immediately south of the train station.

Activities

Set in neatly kept grounds about 2km from Lonavla just off the Mumbai–Pune Hwy on the way to the Karla and Bhaja Caves, the Kaivalyadhama Yoga Hospital (☎ 273039; www.kdham.com; s/d Indian Rs 400/600, foreigner from US$15/24;) is favoured by those seeking yogic healing. It was founded in 1924 by Swami Kuvalayanandji and combines yoga courses with naturopathic therapies. Room rates cover full board and yoga sessions as well as programmes and lectures. The minimum course is seven days. Book in advance.

Mumbai-based Nirvana Adventures (☎ 022-26493110; www.nirvanaadventures.com) offers paragliding courses (three-day learner course from €250) or short tandem flights at Kamshet, 25km from Lonavla.

Sleeping & Eating

Lonavla's hotels suffer from inflated prices and low standards. Most places are packed out during weekends and holidays (except through the monsoon). All hotels listed here have a 10am checkout time.

Hotel Lonavla (☎ 272914; Mumbai-Pune Hwy; d Rs 795;) Small fan-only rooms that are comfortable, clean and, after the MTDC Resort (opposite), the best bet in town.

Hotel Chandralok (☎ 272294; fax 272921; Shivaji Rd; d with/without AC from Rs 1200/900;) Set back from the traffic, this is a friendly hotel with dreary rooms and a fascinating collection of stains on the walls and sheets. Rates are negotiable outside of high season and the in-house restaurant makes a remarkable Gujarati thali.

Hotel Gurukripa (Mumbai-Pune Hwy; mains Rs 40-80) Cheap, cheerful and ever reliable Punjabi and Chinese dishes are served in this cool and dark restaurant.

Hotel Rama Krishna (☎ 273600; Mumbai-Pune Hwy; dishes Rs 45-120) The sleekest place in town with spiffy waiters serving tasty Punjabi fare.

If you've got a sweet tooth, search out Coopers (☎ 272564; Jaychand Chowk; 11am-1pm & 3-5pm, closed Wed), on the southern side of the railway tracks. It's been in business for more than 50 years and is justly renowned for its gooey chocolate fudges.

The bazaar, south of the train station, includes a large fruit market.

Getting There & Away

State buses set to ply the smooth-moving Mumbai–Pune Expressway depart continuously from the bus stand (☎ 273842) to Mumbai (ordinary/deluxe Rs 56/70, three/two hours), while their AC siblings (Rs 100) rev up just a few times daily. The many buses for Pune (ordinary/deluxe Rs 44/60, two hours) use the old highway.

All express trains from Mumbai to Pune stop at Lonavla train station (☎ 273725). Travelling from Mumbai trains take three hours and cost Rs 35/122 in 2nd class/chair. To Pune there are express trains (2nd class/chair Rs 27/122, one hour, 64km) and hourly shuttle trains (Rs 14, two hours).

Bicycles can be hired from Famous Cycles (Mumbai-Pune Hwy; per hr Rs 5).

KARLA & BHAJA CAVES

Dating from around the 2nd century BC, these rock-cut caves are among the oldest and finest examples of early Buddhist rock temple art in India. They may not be on the same scale as Ellora or Ajanta, but the lack of visitors, pretty countryside and zero commercialisation make them worthy of a visit.

It's possible to visit the caves in a day from either Mumbai or Pune if you hire an autorickshaw from Lonavla. Karla has the most impressive single cave, but Bhaja is a quieter, more enjoyable site to explore.

Karla Cave

A 20-minute climb brings you to the spectacular Karla Cave (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/US$2; 9am-5pm), the largest early Buddhist chaitya in India. Completed in 80 BC, the chaitya is around 40m long and 15m high, and was carved by monks and artisans from the rock in imitation of more familiar wooden architecture. Aside from Ellora's Kailasa Temple this is probably the most impressive cave temple in the state.

A semicircular 'sun window' filters light in towards the cave's representation of the Buddha – a dagoba, or stupa, protected by a carved wooden umbrella. The cave's roof is ribbed with teak beams said to be original. The 37 pillars forming the aisles are topped by kneeling elephants. The carved elephant heads on the sides of the vestibule once had ivory tusks.

The beauty of this cave is somewhat marred by the modern Hindu temple built in front of the cave mouth. However the temple is a big draw for the pilgrims you'll meet in the area and their presence adds some colour to the scene.

Bhaja Caves

Crossing over the expressway, it's a 3km walk or ride from the main road to the Bhaja Caves (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/US$2; 8am-6pm), where the setting is lusher, greener and quieter than at Karla Cave. Thought to date from around 200 BC, 10 of the 18 caves here are viharas, while Cave 12 is an open chaitya, earlier than Karla, containing a simple dagoba. Beyond this is a strange huddle of 14 stupas, five inside and nine outside a cave. If you avoid weekends and holidays then there's a good chance you'll be the only visitor here, which helps to lend an air of Indiana Jones–style discovery to your wanderings. From Bhaja Caves you'll see the ruins of the Lohagad and Visapur Forts, which local kids will happily lead you to for a tip.

Sleeping & Eating

MTDC Karla Resort (☎ 02114-282230; fax 282370; d cottages with/without AC from Rs 1000/600, executive cottage Rs 2500;) The tidy and spacious rooms on offer here are much better than anything Lonavla can throw at you. Set under the trees, the complex is very peaceful – there's even a little lake where you can go boating. Frequently passing buses and rickshaws can take you either to the caves or back to Lonavla. The resort has a restaurant, and is just off the Mumbai–Pune Hwy.

Getting There & Away

If you don't mind some walking, you can get around the sites within a day by public transport. Frequent local buses run between Lonavla and Karla Cave (Rs 9, 12km); the first leaves Lonavla at 6am. From Karla, walk to Bhaja Caves (minium two hours, 10km), then follow your feet back to Malavli train station (one hour, 3km) to catch a local train to Lonavla. You can trim some walking time by taking an autorickshaw from Karla to Bhaja village (around Rs 70). The last bus from Karla to Lonavla leaves at 7pm.

Autorickshaws are plentiful, but they drive a hard bargain. The price should include waiting time at the sites (about three hours all up), and a return trip from Lonavla to the Karla and Bhaja Caves will cost Rs 400.

PUNE

☎ 020 / pop 3.8 million / elev 457m

A place where old and new India interweave without a second thought, Pune (pronounced Poona) is a thriving centre of academia and business as well as a historic centre and home to the Osho Meditation Resort.

The great Maratha leader Shivaji would be astonished to see how his city has changed in 500 years. He was raised here after the city was granted to his grandfather in 1599. The town fell to the British in 1817 and became their alternative capital during the monsoon. Many maharajas had palaces here, too, taking advantage of its cooler climate.

Despite the pollution and clogged traffic that typically go with Indian cities, Pune is an interesting place to hang out for a day or two and a great place to glimpse the much touted, but sometimes hard to find, 'New India'.

Orientation

The city sits at the confluence of the Mutha and Mula Rivers. Mahatma Gandhi (MG) Rd, about 1km south of Pune train station, is the main street and is lined with banks, restaurants and shops. Southwest of here, the streets narrow and take on the atmosphere of a traditional bazaar town. Northeast of the train station, Koregaon Park, home of the Osho ashram and ground zero for the Pune backpacker scene, is where the more upmarket restaurants and bars are to be found.

Sights & Activities

OSHO MEDITATION RESORT

The Bhagwan Rajneesh's ashram (☎ 2066019999; www.osho.com; 17 Koregaon Park) is located in a desirable northern suburb of Pune. Since the Bhagwan's death in 1990, the meditation resort has continued to draw in manifold sanyasins (seekers), many of them Westerners. Facilities include a swimming pool, sauna, 'zennis' (Zen tennis) and basketball courts, a massage and beauty parlour, a bookshop and a boutique guesthouse (p829). The main centre for meditation and the nightly white-robed spiritual dance is the Osho Auditorium (a 'cough-free and sneeze-free zone'!). The Osho Samadhi, where the guru's ashes are kept, is also open for silent or music-accompanied meditation.

The commune is big business. Its 'Multiversity' runs a plethora of courses in meditation as well as New Age techniques. If you wish to take part in any of the courses, or even just to visit for the day to meditate you'll have to pay Rs 1280. This covers registration, a mandatory on-the-spot HIV test (sterile needles are used), introductory sessions and your first day's meditation pass. You'll also need two robes (one maroon and one white, from Rs 300 per robe). Meditation is Rs 450/150 (foreigner/Indian) per day and you can come and go as you please. If you want to contribute further, there's the resort's 'Work-as-Meditation' programme.

The curious can watch a video presentation at the visitor centre and take a 10-minute silent tour of the facilities (Rs 10; no children) at 9am and 2pm daily. Even if you decide not to enter the resort, it's worth checking out the placid 5-hectare gardens, Osho Teerth (admission free; ⏰ 6-9am & 3-6pm), behind the commune; the gardens are accessible all day for those with a meditation pass.

RAJA DINKAR KELKAR MUSEUM

This quirky museum (☎ 24461556; www.rajakelkarmuseum.com; 1377-78 Natu Baug, Bajirao Rd; adult/child Rs 200/50; ⏰ 9.30am-6pm) is one of Pune's true delights. The exhibits are the personal collection of Sri Dinkar Gangadhar, who died in 1990. Among the 17,000 or so artworks and curios he collected are a suit of armour made of fish scales and crocodile skin, hundreds of hookah pipes and a superb collection of betel-nut cutters.

KATRAJ SNAKE PARK & ZOO

There is a good representation of Indian wildlife on show at the Katraj Snake Park & Zoo (☎ 24367712; Pune-Satara Hwy; adult/child Rs 3/2; ⏰ 10.30am-6pm Jul-Mar, to 7pm Apr-Jun, closed Wed). Located on the southern outskirts of the city, the large, natural-looking enclosures of the zoo are built with the requirements and breeding needs of the inmates in mind. It provides a home to tigers, leopards, bears and monkeys, but it's the reptiles that are the real passion here. The zoo curator is renowned as one of India's most respected herpetologists.

SHANIWAR WADA

The ruins of this fortresslike palace (Shivaji Rd; admission US$2; ⏰ 8am-6.30pm) stand in the old part of the city. Built in 1732, the palace of the Peshwa rulers burnt down in 1828, but the massive walls remain, as do the sturdy palace doors with their angry spikes. In the evenings there is an hour-long sound & light show (Rs 25; ⏰ 8.15pm Thu-Tue).

PATALESHVARA CAVE TEMPLE

Set across the river is the curious rock-cut Pataleshvara Cave Temple (☎ 25535941; Jangali Maharaj Rd; ⏰ 6am-9.30pm), a small, unfinished 8th-century temple similar in style to the grander Elephanta Island one near Mumbai. It's an active temple, with people coming here for worship or simply to relax in the gardens. In front of the excavation is a circular Nandi mandapa (pillared pavilion). Adjacent is the Jangali Maharaj Temple (⏰ 6am-10pm), dedicated to a Hindu ascetic who died here in 1818.

THE ARMANI OF ASHRAMS

Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh (1931–90), or Osho as he preferred to be called, was one of India's most flamboyant 'export gurus' and undoubtedly the most controversial. He followed no particular religion or philosophy and outraged many Indians (and others) with his advocacy of sex as a path to enlightenment, earning him the epithet 'sex guru'. In 1981 Rajneesh took his curious blend of Californian pop psychology and Indian mysticism to the USA, where he set up an agricultural commune and ashram in Oregon. There, his ashram's notoriety as well as its fleet of Rolls Royces (bought to prove that material processions had no meaning!) grew like weeds. Eventually, with rumours and local paranoia about the ashram's activities running amok, the Bhagwan was charged with immigration fraud, fined US$400,000 and deported. An epic journey began during which he and his followers, in their search for a new base, were deported from or denied entry to 21 countries. By 1987 he was back at the Pune ashram, where thousands of foreigners soon flocked for his nightly discourses and meditation courses.

They still come in droves. The unveiling of the capacious Osho Auditorium in 2002 also marked the alteration of the centre's name from 'Osho Commune International' to 'Osho Meditation Resort'. Prices for the 'resort' privileges are continually on the rise, facilities become ever more luxurious and, just in case you were wondering, despite Osho's comments on how nobody should be poor, none of the money generated by the resort goes into helping the poor or disadvantaged of the local community. That, resort authorities claim, is up to someone else.

TRIBAL CULTURAL MUSEUM

About 1.5km east of the Pune train station, this excellent museum (☎ 2636207; 28 Queens Garden, Richardson Rd; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/10; ⏰ 10.30am-5.30pm) opens up a whole new side of India that most visitors are completely unaware of. The ornate papier-mâché festival masks are like something from the Rio carnival.

GANDHI NATIONAL MEMORIAL

Set in 6.5 hectares of gardens across the Mula River in Yerwada is the grand Aga Khan Palace and Gandhi National Memorial (☎ 26680250; Ahmednagar Rd; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; ⏰ 9am-5.45pm). After the Mahatma delivered his momentous Quit India resolution in 1942, the British interned him and other leaders of India's Independence movement here for nearly two years. Both Kasturba Gandhi, the Mahatma's wife, and Mahadoebhai Desai, his secretary for 35 years, died while imprisoned here. Their ashes are kept in memorial samadhis (shrines) in the gardens.

Photos and paintings exhibit moments in Gandhi's extraordinary career, but it's all very poorly presented.

GARDENS

At the Empress Botanical Gardens (admission Rs 5; ⏰ 6.30am-7pm) cosy couples on park benches enjoy the spots of shade under the trees. In the evening, dozens of food stalls and kiddie carnival rides are set up outside Peshwa Park (admission Rs 2; ⏰ 9.30am-5.30pm).

RAMAMANI IYENGAR MEMORIAL YOGA INSTITUTE

To attended classes at this famous institute (☎ 25656134; www.bksiyengar.com; 1107 B/1 Hare Krishna Mandir Rd, Model Colony), around 7km northwest of the train station, you need to have been practising yoga for at least eight years.

Courses

Kuk@ease (☎ 30938999/09371207599; antimaa@rediffmail.com; C-8, Sapphire Apts, Lane 6, Koregaon Park) offers one-day cookery courses (single person/per person in group of four Rs 1600/600), with equipment and ingredients supplied.

Tours

Good bus tours of Pune leave the Pune Municipal Transport depot (PMT; Sasson Rd; ⏰ bookings 8am-noon & 3-6pm), near the train station, at 9am daily, returning around 6pm (Rs 128). They quickly cover all of Pune's major sights.

Sleeping

There's no shortage of accommodation all over Pune but the main hubs are around the train station and Koregaon Park, which, with its proximity to the Osho Meditation Resort, has become the main backpackers' hang-out. Many families rent rooms out to passing travellers and, with prices starting at Rs 150 for a room with a shared bathroom and Rs 250 for private bathrooms, this is the cheapest way to grab a good night's sleep. Quality varies widely, so check out a few before deciding. For longer-term stays you can negotiate a room in one of these places from Rs 3000 to 10,000 per month. Rickshaw drivers will know where to look.

BUDGET

Grand Hotel (☎ 26360728; MG Rd; s with shared bathroom/d with private bathroom Rs 250/575) Excluding its private rooms in family homes, the Grand has the cheapest beds in Pune, but it's not a place you would chose for a luxurious break. On the positive side the patio bar is a good place for a beer.

National Hotel (☎ 26125054; 14 Sasson Rd; d/tr Rs 450/550, cottages from Rs 500) Located opposite the train station is this charmingly run-down colonial mansion with verandas and high ceilings set in a pleasing garden. While the rooms are basic, they are clean, and the cottages have little porches.

Homeland (☎ 26127659; homeland@satyam.net.in; 18 Wilson Garden; s/d Rs 450/550, with AC Rs 750/850; ❄) Dirty and run down but if everything else is full it will pass for a night.

Hotel Surya Villa (☎ 26124501; www.hotelsuryavilla.com; 294/1 Koregaon Park; s/d Rs 1000/1200, d with AC Rs 1300; ❄) With light and airy rooms this could have been one of the better Koregaon Park hotels, but sadly you'll be having threesomes (or even twelvesomes) with the numerous cockroaches that have infested the bedrooms. The downstairs café seems to be cockroach-free and is good value.

MIDRANGE

All hotels listed have a noon checkout and accept credit cards.

Hotel Sunderban (☎ 26124949; www.tghotels.com; 19 Koregaon Park; d with shared bathroom from Rs 800, with private bathroom with/without AC from Rs 1300/1000; ❄) Next to the Osho Resort this was a popular, but increasingly neglected, heritage property that at the time of research was about to close for renovations. When it reopens (no date scheduled) it's likely to remain just as popular. The prices listed are pre-renovations.

Samrat Hotel (☎ 26137964; thesamrathotel@vsnl.net; 17 Wilson Garden; s/d Rs 1190/1400, with AC Rs 1600/1800; ❄) Every Indian town has one hotel that shines above all the others and in Pune that honour falls to the Samrat Hotel. This sparkling modern hotel is in a class of its own and represents superb value for money. It's often full so book in advance.

Hotel Ritz (☎ 26122995; fax 26136644; 6 Sadhu Vaswani Path; d with/without AC Rs 2550/1950; ❄) A ramshackle old building with unharnessed potential. It's friendly and certainly one of Pune's better bets. All rooms have TVs and the cheaper ones are at the back next to the garden restaurant, which serves good Gujarati thalis.

Hotel Ashirwad (☎ 26128585; hotelash@vsnl.com; 16 Cannaught Rd; s/d from Rs 2200/2500; ❄) The smug management don't exactly warm you to this place but the rooms are very clean and it sits nicely near the top of the midrange class. The Akshaya restaurant is a worthy choice that serves Punjabi, Mughlai and Chinese vegetarian fare.

Hotel Srimaan (☎ 26133535; srimaan@vsnl.com; 361/5A Bund Gdn Rd; s/d Rs 2300/2800; ❄) Clean and functional but lacking any real spark. It's popular with passing Indian businessmen and is good value.

our pick Osho Meditation Resort guesthouse (☎ 2066019999; www.osho.com; Koregaon Park; s/d Rs 2400/2900; ❄) If your visit to Pune is to attend the Osho Meditation Resort (p827), then its stylish guesthouse, with minimalist rooms, offers the unique opportunity to breathe in deep lungfuls of specially cleaned air! Book in advance and note that you have to be attending courses at the resort to stay.

TOP END

Taj Blue Diamond (☎ 6025555; bdresv.pune@tajhotels.com; 11 Koregaon Rd; d from US$180; ❄ 💻 🏊) An elegant, top-class business hotel with all the trimmings from courteous staff in saris to pleasantly decorated rooms and a stylish selection of restaurants.

Le Meridien (☎ 26050505; www.lemeridien-pune.com; RBM Rd; d from US$235; ❄ 💻 🏊) Styled on a Mughal palace and full of marble pillars and high ceilings, this is the most sumptuous hotel in Pune. Rooms are compact and comfortable. Other assets include three restaurants, two bars, a nightclub, gym and a small rooftop pool (open to nonguests for Rs 450 per day).

Eating

The opportunity to eat, drink and make merry is one of the highlights of Pune. The biggest concentration of well-priced, high-quality eateries are be found around the Lanes in Koregaon Park. Unless otherwise mentioned the following are open noon to 3pm and 7pm to 11pm daily.

RESTAURANTS

Vaishali (☎ 25672676; FC Rd; mains Rs 70) A long established Pune institution on account of its delicious South Indian dishes.

Shabree Restaurant (Hotel Parichay, 1199/1A FC Rd; mains Rs 70-120) Some of the best, cheap Maharashtran thalis you could hope to find.

Flags (☎ 26141617; G2 Metropole, Bund Garden Rd; mains Rs 75-200) With possibly Pune's longest menu, running the global gamut from Mongolian cauliflower to yakisoba (fried Japanese noodles), the highly popular Flags has something to please practically everyone, all wrapped up in a comfy contemporary interior.

Prems (North Main Rd, Koregaon Park; mains Rs 80-150) In a quiet, leafy courtyard tucked away from the main road, Prems is a relaxing and very popular place for a decent mixture of Indian and Continental food. It's as popular with Indians as Westerners.

The Place: Touche the Sizzler (☎ 26134632; 7 Moledina Rd; mains Rs 120-200) As the name suggests, this long-running place specialises in sizzlers, but it also offers Indian, tandoori, seafood and Continental dishes.

Third on the Seventh (☎ 26140715; Lane 7, North Main Rd; mains Rs 120-250) In something of a reversal of trends, this classy joint is run by a British-Indian couple who have returned to Pune from the UK bringing with them a bulging recipe book of 'British-style' curries and Continental food.

our pick Malaka Spice (☎ 26136293; Lane 6, North Main Rd; mains Rs 110-300, 11am-11pm) A supertrendy little restaurant with excellent Southeast Asian food and a menu that is part artwork, part travel diary. It's very popular with the young and beautiful of Pune.

Arthur's Theme (☎ 26132710; Lane 6, North Main Rd, mains Rs 120-300) This is a stylish place offering decent French cuisine in a slightly formal atmosphere.

The ABC Farms is a complex of midrange restaurants in Koregaon Park, where healthy, organic food is the order of the day. One of the best restaurants is the Swiss Cheese Garden (☎ 26817413; mains Rs 100-400), which, alongside delicious pastas, offers good old-fashioned cheese fondues. Almost next door is the equally enjoyable Shisha Café (☎ 26818885; mains Rs 100-180; 10.30am-1.30pm), which is a combination of a jazz bar and an Iranian restaurant, complete with bubbling hookah pipes (Rs 125).

CAFÉS

Juice World (2436/B East St Camp; 8am-1am) As well as producing delicious fresh fruit juices and shakes, this casual café with outdoor seating serves inexpensive snacks such as pizza and pav bhaji (spiced vegetables and bread) for around Rs 40.

German Bakery (North Main Rd, Koregaon Park; dishes Rs 50-150, cakes Rs 25-50; 6am-11.30pm) A compulsory halt on the Koregaon Park backpacker scene, but also appreciated by locals. This long-running café, with light and healthy snacks and great cakes makes a brilliant lunch stop. Fruit and vegetables are sterilised and water used for beverages is purified.

Café Barista (Sterling Centre, 12 MG Rd; meals Rs 40-80) A branch of the Western-style coffee chain, which dishes up plain sandwiches and cakes with good coffee.

The family-run Kayani Bakery on East St is famous for its homemade Shrewsbury biscuits, but the sweet attractions run to all manner of cakes.

Drinking & Entertainment

With its massive student population, Pune puts a great deal of effort into nocturnal activities and has a large array of ever-changing bars and clubs. Ask around Koregaon Park for the latest. The bar scene in Pune can be a little cliquey and it really helps if you know some locals.

High Spirits (Koregaon Park) Brand new bar that's caught the attention of the student population. Has a nice open terrace. It's next to the ABC Farms.

Lush (Boat Club Rd) It's cool. It's super trendy. It's the place to be seen. It's Lush, Pune's sleekest new lounge bar.

Thousand Oaks (☎ 26343194; thousandoaks@vsnl.com; 2417 East St; admission Fri & Sat Rs 200) This cosy pub-style bar is an old favourite but its DJs can't decide what kind of music they are into.

Gold Ad Labs (☎ 26050101; Queen's Garden Rd; adult Rs 130) New state-of-the-art cinema complex surrounded by modern shopping malls, bright lights and about as much Eastern exotica as McDonalds on a Saturday night – which happens to be almost next door.

Shopping

Pune has some good shopping options.

Bombay Store (322 MG Rd; 10.30am-8.30pm Mon-Sat, 11am-8pm Sun) This place is the best spot for general souvenirs.

Celebrate Shopping Mall (Bund Garden Rd, Koregaon Park) This glass-fronted mall is full of Western high-street labels.

Pune is a good spot to buy modern Indian clothing; try Either Or (24/25 Sohrab Hall, 21 Sasson Rd; 10.30am-8pm, closed Thu) or Fabindia (Sakar 10, Sasson Rd; 10am-7.45pm).

Jet Airways (☎ 26123268; 243 Century Arcade, Narangi Bung Rd)

Indian Airlines flies daily to Delhi (US$153, two hours), and to Bengaluru (US$102, 2½ hours), Goa (US$60 45 minutes) and Mumbai (US$102, 30 minutes). Jet Airways flies twice daily to Mumbai (US$81, 30 minutes), Bengaluru (US$146, 1½ hours), Delhi (US$186, two hours), and daily to Chennai (US$169, 2½ hours) and Kolkata US$336, 2½ hours). Air Sahara flies twice daily to Delhi (US$115, two hours). Of the budget airlines Spice Jet flies to Delhi and Bengaluru, while Kingfisher flies to Ahmedabad, Bengaluru, Coimbatore, Chennai, Delhi, Hyderabad, Jammu and Nagpur. Air Deccan links Pune up with Ahmedabad, Bengaluru, Delhi and Hyderabad, and IndiGo flies to Bengaluru and Delhi.

BUS

Pune has three bus stands: Pune train station stand (☎ 26126218), for Mumbai and destinations to the south and west, including Goa, Belgaum, Kolhapur, Mahabaleshwar and Lonavla; Shivaji Nagar bus stand (☎ 25536970), for points north and northeast, including Ahmednagar, Aurangabad, Ahmedabad and Nasik; and Swargate bus stand (☎ 24441591), for Sinhagad, Bengaluru and Mangalore. Deluxe buses shuttle from the train station bus stand to Dadar (Mumbai) every 30 minutes (semideluxe/deluxe Rs 117/240, four hours).

Plenty of private deluxe buses head to most centres, including Panaji in Goa (ordinary/sleeper Rs 300/400, 12 hours – though high season prices sometimes rise to Rs 600!), Nasik (semideluxe/deluxe Rs 200/250, five hours) and Aurangabad (Rs 160, six hours). Make sure you know where the bus will drop you off (going to Mumbai, for instance, some private buses get no further than Borivali). Try Bright Travels (☎ 26114222; Connaught Rd); its buses depart from the service station near the roundabout.

For Mumbai the train is the safest option.

TAXI

Long-distance shared taxis (four passengers) link up Pune with Dadar in Mumbai round the clock. They leave from the taxi stand (☎ 26121090) in front of Pune train station (per seat Rs 260, AC Rs 320, three hours). Share-taxi services to Nasik and Aurangabad have been discontinued.

TRAIN

Pune is an important rail hub with connections to many parts of the state. The swarming computerised booking hall (☎ 131) is in the building to the left of the station as you face the entrance – take a deep breath before crossing the threshold.

The Deccan Queen, Sinhagad Express and Pragati Express are fast commuter trains to Mumbai, taking three to four hours.

MAHARASHTRA

Getting Around

The airport is 8km northeast of the city. An autorickshaw there costs about Rs 50, a taxi is Rs 150.

City buses gather at the PMT depot across from Pune train station, but journeys are slower than a wet Sunday. Useful buses include bus 4 to Swargate, bus 5 to Shivaji Nagar bus terminal, and bus 159 to Koregaon Park.

Autorickshaws can be found everywhere. A ride from the Pune train station to Koregaon Park costs about Rs 30 in the daytime and Rs 50 at night.

AROUND PUNE

Sinhagad

Scene of a victory by Shivaji's forces over those of Bijapur in 1670, Sinhagad (Lion Fort), 24km southwest of Pune, is a fun day out. The ruined fort stands on top of a steep hill cluttered with telecommunications towers and tourist stalls; the real attractions are the sweeping views and the chance for a healthy workout on the hike up from the bus stop in Sinhagad village.

If you don't want to walk, jeeps (Rs 25) are usually around to cart you to within a short stroll of the summit. The Pune city bus 50 runs frequently to Sinhagad village from 7am until evening, leaving from either Swargate or the Architect College bus stop opposite Nehru Stadium (Rs 17, 45 minutes). At the time of research the fort was closed and the access road out of action thanks to damage inflicted by heavy monsoon rains.

MAHABALESHWAR

High up in the Western Ghats, the hill station of Mahabaleshwar was founded in 1828 by Sir John 'Boy' Malcolm, after which it quickly became the summer capital of the Bombay presidency during the days of the Raj. Today few traces of those times remain, save for a couple of dilapidated buildings. In fact Rudyard Kipling would positively turn in his grave if he could see how down-at-heel the old girl had become and good gosh, you can't even get a properly brewed cup of tea. While the tea and summer balls are long gone what hasn't changed one jot are the delightful views and equally delightful temperatures and it's for these two reasons that Mahabaleshwar attracts hordes of holidaymakers who fill the main street with loud exuberance. If you are after just a hint of peace and quiet then avoid the peak periods during the summer school holidays (April to June), Christmas and Diwali.

The hill station virtually shuts up shop during the monsoon (from late June to mid-September), when an unbelievable 6m of rain falls. Buildings are clad with kulum grass to stave off damage from the torrential downpours. After things calm down, the reward is abundantly green landscapes.

Orientation

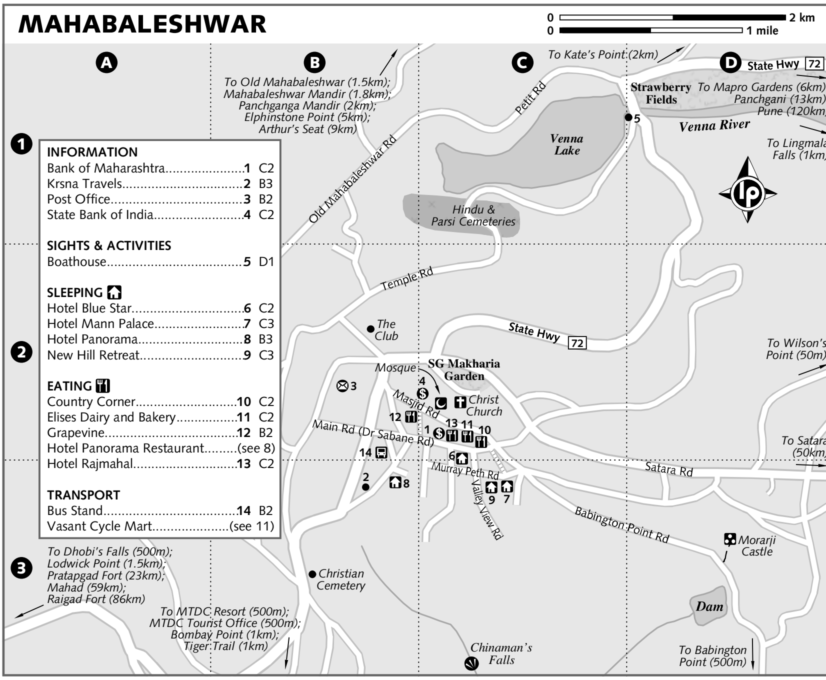
Most of the action is in the main bazaar (Main Rd, also called Dr Sabane Rd) – a 200m strip of holiday tack. The bus stand is at the western end. A Rs 15 'tourist tax' is payable on arrival.

Information

Mahabaleshwar has no internet facilities.

Bank of Maharashtra (☎ 260290; Main Rd) Changes cash and travellers cheques.

MTDC tourist office (☎ 260318; Bombay Point Rd) At the MTDC Resort south of town, has crude maps but helpful staff.



State Bank of India (Masjid St) Has a 24-hour ATM.

Krsna Travels (☎ 261035; Subhash Chowk, Main Rd, 🕑 9am-8pm) Reliable onward travel information, a variety of local tours and all manner of bus tickets.

Sights & Activities

The hills are alive with the sound of music, though it's usually being blasted out of car windows as people race by in an effort to tick off all the towns viewpoints as quickly as possible. If you can ignore this then fine views can be savoured from Wilson's Point (also known as Sunrise Point), which is within easy walking distance of town, as well as Elphinstone, Babington, Kate's and Lodwick Points. The latter is dedicated to Peter Lodwick, the first European to set foot in Mahabaleshwar in 1824.

The sunset views at Bombay Point are stunning; but you won't be the only one who thinks so. Much quieter, thanks no doubt to being 9km from town, is Arthur's Seat, which, should Arthur have ever fallen out of it, would have resulted in him tumbling down a sheer drop of 600m – at least the view would have been good. Attractive waterfalls around Mahabaleshwar include Chinaman's, Dhobi's and Lingmala Falls. On the edge of Venna Lake, a boathouse (Temple Rd; 🕑 8am-8pm) rents out rowboats (Rs 160 per hour) and pedal boats (Rs 200 per hour).

By far the most enjoyable way of seeing a couple of the viewpoints is to follow the forest tracks that run between them. This means you probably won't rub shoulders with anyone but the odd troupe of monkeys. One highly recommended two-hour walk is to stroll down to Bombay Point and then follow the very inappropriately named Tiger Trail back into town (maps are available from the MTDC tourist office).

The village of Old Mahabaleshwar has two ancient temples. The Panchganga Mandir (⌚ 7am-9pm), said to contain the springs of five rivers, including the sacred Krishna River, and the Mahabaleshwar Mandir (⌚ 6am-9pm), which has a naturally formed lingam.

Tours

The MSRTC conducts sightseeing tours (high season only) for the very rushed. The Mahabaleshwar round (Rs 45, 4½ hours) takes in nine viewpoints plus Old Mahabaleshwar; it leaves the bus stand at 2.30pm. Alternatively, taxi drivers will fall over themselves to get you on their three-hour tour for Rs 300. This amounts to a ride out to Arthur's Seat and back with a stop at Old Mahabaleshwar along the way. Tours are also available to the lookout points south of town (Rs 280, 2½ hours), Panchgani (Rs 300, three hours) and Pratapgad Fort (Rs 450, three hours).

Sleeping & Eating

Hotel prices are all about supply and demand in Mahabaleshwar – rates soar during peak holiday times; at other times the budget and midrange hotels can be good value. Most of the budget places are around the main bazaar near the bus stand, but dozens of resort-style lodges (most offering full board) are scattered around the village. During the monsoon the vast majority of places shut up shop. Note that many of the midrange and top-end establishments refuse single travellers – men in particular.

Hotel Mann Palace (☎ 261778; Murray Perth Rd; d from Rs 500) One of the towns' better budget options, with great-value, refreshingly well-cared-for rooms.

Hotel Blue Star (☎ 260678; 114 Main Rd; d low/high season Rs 250/1000) During the low season the cheapest beds in town can be found here, but you certainly know it! High season prices are completely ludicrous.

MTDC Resort (☎ 260318; fax 260300; d low/high season from Rs 450/650) Assuming you have come to Mahabaleshwar in order to escape the noise and bustle of the nearby cities then the MTDC Resort, a couple of kilometres southwest of the town centre, should fit the bill perfectly. It's blissfully quiet and excellent value. A taxi from the town centre is Rs 40.

New Hill Retreat (☎ 261361; hillsretreat@yahoo.co.in; 187 School Mohalla, Murray Peth Rd; d low/high season Rs 500/1100) A short walk from the heart of the main bazaar, this small hotel boasts dim but otherwise spotless rooms and eager-to-please staff.

Hotel Panorama (☎ 260404; fax 261234; 28 MG Rd; r low/high season from Rs 1500/2800;) The rooms are past their prime but who cares when you can take a plastic swan-shaped paddle boat for a spin around the pool. The staff are friendly, and its vegetarian restaurant (meals Rs 60 to 100) is one of the best in town.

Elises Dairy & Bakery (Main Rd; Rs 25-60) The big question here is which is better – the carrot cake or the ginger cake?

Hotel Rajmahal (80 Main Rd; meals Rs 30-60) This is a buzzing vegetarian pad frequented by locals for its satisfying thalis and other South Indian and Punjabi eats.

Country Corner (Imperial Stores; Main Rd; snacks & dishes Rs 40-120) So what if they're greasy and unhealthy – the burgers, pizzas and other snacks here are undeniably tasty.

Grapevine (Masjid Rd; dishes Rs 60-160) It's almost worth coming to Mahabaleshwar just to eat at this Mediterranean-flavoured restaurant. The service is superb as are the Asian and Continental dishes. Wash your meal down with one of its Indian or European wines.

Mahabaleshwar is famous for its berries, which you can buy fresh (in season) or as juice, ice cream and jams (see Berry Delicious, left).

BERRY DELICIOUS

Mahabaleshwar is ripe with some of India's finest strawberries, as well as raspberries, mulberries and gooseberries.

Fruits are harvested from late November to June, with the best crops coming around February. You can visit the farms and buy direct, or get them from the many vendors in Mahabaleshwar's bazaar. The industry also dips into fruit drinks, sweets, fudge and jam. Free factory tours and the chance to tuck into some samples are offered at Mapro Gardens (☎ 02168-240112; 10am-1pm & 2pm-6.30pm Wed-Mon), between Mahabaleshwar and Panchgani.

Getting There & Away

From the bus stand (☎ 260254) state buses leave every hour or so for Pune (semideluxe/deluxe Rs 70/105, 3½ hours) with less frequent buses rolling to Satara (Rs 31, two hours), Panchgani (Rs 10, 30 minutes) and Mahad (for Raigad Fort; Rs 31, two hours), and several services making the long run to Kolhapur (Rs 110, five hours). Outside of the monsoon, one deluxe bus heads to Mumbai Central Station (Rs 180, seven hours), while semideluxe buses (Rs 139) leave at 9am, 1pm and 2.45pm.

Private agents in the bazaar book luxury buses to destinations within Maharashtra or to Goa (seat/sleeper Rs 550/750, 12 hours via Surur where you must change bus). They all quote similar prices and times, but inquire where they intend to drop you off. None of the luxury buses to Mumbai (low/high season Rs 350/550, 6½ hours) go into the city – the furthest you'll get is Borivali. Private buses to Pune (Rs 190) will bid you adieu at Swargate.

Getting Around

There are heaps of taxis and Maruti vans near the bus stand to take you to the main viewpoints or to Panchgani. For trips around town, the minimum charge is Rs 30 (for up to 2km).

The light traffic makes cycling a sensible option, though take care along the narrow lanes with their blind corners if you ride to the viewpoints. Bikes can be hired from Vasant Cycle Mart (Main Rd; 8am-9pm) for Rs 10 per hour or Rs 50 for the day.

AROUND MAHABALESHWAR

Pratapgad Fort

Built in 1656, the impressive Pratapgad Fort (admission free; 7am-7pm) dominates a high ridge 24km west of Mahabaleshwar and was the setting for one of the most enduring legends involving the Maratha leader. In 1659 Shivaji agreed to meet the Bijapuri general, Afzal Khan, below the fort walls in an attempt to end a stalemate. However, the two men arrived armed and Shivaji disembowelled his enemy with a set of iron waghnakh (tiger's claws). Khan's tomb marks the site of this painful encounter.

The fort is reached by a 500-step climb, which affords brilliant views. Guides are available from outside the fort for a negotiable fee. To get here from Mahabaleshwar, you can take the 9.30am state bus (Rs 50 return, one hour). It waits at the site for an hour before returning. A taxi to Pratapgad and back costs Rs 450.

Raigad Fort

Over 80km northwest of Mahabaleshwar, all alone on a hilltop, Raigad Fort (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/US$5; 8am-5.30pm) has stunning views. This was Shivaji's capital, where he was crowned in 1648 and where he died and was cremated in 1680.

You can hike to the top – it's a 2½-hour steep haul up 1475 steps. Or if that sounds like too much hard work then you can glide up the hill via a ropeway (02145-274831; 8.30am-6.30pm). The return ticket (Rs 130) includes a guide, entry into a small museum and the opportunity to view a short film about the site's past.

Raigad is best reached from Mahad (Rs 13, 45 minutes) or you can take a taxi tour direct from Mahabaleshwar (Rs 1100).

KOLHAPUR

0231 / pop 485,183 / elev 550m

Kolhapur was once the capital of an important Maratha state, but today it's just a forgotten backwood receiving no more than a handful of foreign visitors each month. This is a shame because, with its proximity to Goa, a friendly population and an intriguing temple complex, Kolhapur is one of the best introductions to the splendours of India that you could hope to find.

In August the Matharaj Naag Panchami, a snake-worshipping festival, is held here and in Pune.

Orientation

The old town around the Mahalaxmi Temple is around 3km southwest of the bus and train stations, while the 'new' palace is a similar distance to the north. Rankala Lake, a popular spot for evening strolls and the location of the Hotel Shalini Palace, is 5km southwest of the stations.

Information

Internet Zone (Kedar Complex, Station Rd; per hr Rs 20; 8am-midnight) Internet access.

MTDC tourist office (2652935; Assembly Rd; 10am-5.45pm Mon-Sat) On the way to the maharaja's palace, opposite the Collector's Office.

State Bank of India (2660735; Udyamnagar) A short autorickshaw ride southwest of the train station near Hutatma Park. Deals in foreign exchange.

UTI Bank (Station Rd) Has a 24-hour ATM just west of Hotel International.

Sights

SHREE CHHATRAPATI SHAHU MUSEUM

If you think your house is full of old junk then just wait till you get a load of this place. The maharaja's 'new' palace, completed in 1881, houses an extraordinary museum (2538060; admission Rs 24; 9.15am-12.30pm & 2.15-6pm), with one of the most bizarre collections of memorabilia in the country. The building, worthy of a visit in its own right, was designed by 'Mad' Charles Mant, the British architect who fashioned the Indo-Saracenic style of colonial architecture, and is a cross between a Victorian train station and the Addams Family mansion.

The maharaja was a bit of an animal lover and he was particularly fond of fluffy wild animals after they'd been shot, stuffed and hung on his wall – the building is a giant horror-house zoo with the stuffed pangolin (a scaly nocturnal anteater) being probably the oddest animal anyone has ever gone hunting for.

Other Mant-designed buildings in Kolhapur include the attractive old Town Hall, which now houses a dull museum.

OLD TOWN

Don't fail to devote a few hours to Kolhapur's atmospheric old town. Dominating this compact area is the lively and colourful Mahalaxmi Temple (5am-10.30pm) dedicated to Amba Bai, or the Mother Goddess. The temple's origins date back to AD 10, but much of what you see is from the 18th Century. It's one of the most important Amba Bai temples in India and therefore attracts an unceasing tide of humanity who flood across the temple and its courtyard. Non-Hindus are welcome and it's a fantastic place for a spot of people-watching.

In the grounds of the nearby Old Palace the Bhavani Mandap (Shivaji Rd; 6am-8pm) is dedicated to the goddess Bhavani. It also contains a few more of the maharaja's hunting souvenirs.

Kolhapur is famed for the calibre of its wrestlers and at the Motibag Thalim, a courtyard beside the entrance to the Bhavani Mandap, you can watch young athletes train in a muddy pit. Tourists aren't exactly encouraged and single women travellers may find the sensation of being surrounded by dozens of testosterone filled, sweaty, seminaked men a little uncomfortable. Either way it's certainly a slice of grimy India at its best.

Professional matches are held between June and December in the Kasbagh Maidan, a red-earth arena in a natural sunken stadium a short walk south of Motibag Thalim. Events are announced in local papers. Finally, if you're a shopoholic, then the old town streets are rammed with gold jewellery shops where the hard sale of some Indian tourist cities is unheard of.

CHANDRAKANT MANDARE MUSEUM

Dedicated to actor and artist Chandrakant Mandare (1913–2001), this well-maintained gallery (☎ 2525256; Rajarampuri, 7th Lane; admission Rs 3; 10.30am-1pm & 1.30-5.30pm Tue-Sun), houses stills of his movies as well as his fine paintings and sketches.

Sleeping & Eating

Most of the better hotels and restaurants can be found along Station Rd, which appropriately enough is the busy main street running west of the train station.

Hotel Tourist (☎ 2650421; tourist@epages.webindia.com; Station Rd; s/d/tr Rs 375/475/550, s/d with AC from Rs 600/650;) Exceptionally friendly hotel offering the neatest budget beds in town. The only drawback is a little road noise so ask for a room facing away from all the commotion.

Hotel Radha Swami (☎ 6682485; Station Rd; s/d Rs 450/550, with AC Rs 650/750) A useful standby if the next-door Hotel Tourist is full. The rooms are clean but squat toilets and communication difficulties mean that it cannot quite compete with its neighbour.

Hotel International (☎ 2536641; fax 2536644; 517 A1 Shivaji Park; s/d from Rs 600/700, with AC Rs 800/950;) You'd be hard pushed to find any hotel in Maharashtra with bathrooms as immaculately polished as those of the Hotel International. It's a shame the cleanliness levels haven't extended to the bedrooms, but even so this one's a good bet. Meals are Rs 60 to 100.

Hotel Pearl (☎ 6684451; hotelpearl@hotmail.com; 517 A2 Shivaji Park; s/d Rs 1050/1200, with AC Rs 1350/1500) The manageress of this classy business hotel should be commended for creating such a beacon of calm. The rooms are large and well-equipped and the staff have a very professional attitude.

Hotel Shalini Palace (☎ 2630401; fax 2630407; Rankala Lake; d from Rs 1800;) Without doubt one of the saddest hotels in India. This wonderful old British-influenced pile could, with a bit of TLC, be turned into one of the country's finest hotels. Instead it's a shell of its former self. The dirty rooms, should you really want to stay, are ridiculously overpriced. Still it has a certain romance to it – if you really want to stay in a maharaja's palace…

Surabhi (Hotel Sayhadri Bldg; snacks & mains Rs 20- 45) This eatery is one of those clustered around the bus stand, and almost moves it's so busy. The crowds come for its thalis, Kolhapuri snacks such as misal (a spicy snack not unlike bhelpuri) and lassi.

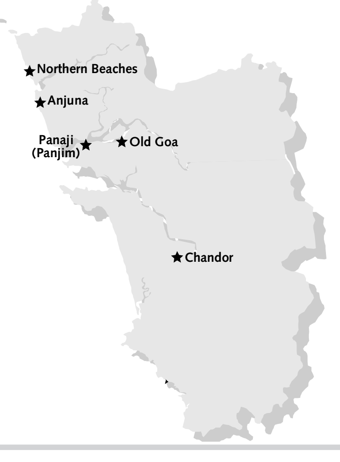
Other than Surabhi, the hotel restaurants are the best places to eat, with the Hotel Pearl having the tastiest Chinese, Indian and Continental dishes at around Rs 140 for a main.

Getting There & Around

Rickshaws are abundant in Kolhapur and most drivers will give you the correct price or even use their meters (though these are outdated and so they'll use a conversion chart to arrive at the real price) without any great fanfare.

From the bus stand (☎ 2650620), services head regularly to Pune (semideluxe Rs 200, 5½ hours), Mahabaleshwar (Rs 110, five hours) and Ratnagiri (Rs 97, four hours), as well as to Belgaum (Rs 60, 2½ hours) and Bijapur (Rs 100, four hours). For popular longer hauls, your body will be happier on a deluxe private bus. Most of the private bus agents are on the western side of the square at Mahalaxmi Chambers, just across from the bus stand. Overnight services with AC head to Mumbai (seat/sleeper Rs 300/550, nine hours) and non-AC overnights go to Panaji (Rs 160, 5½ hours).

The train station (☎ 2654389) is 10 minutes' walk west of the bus stand towards the centre of town. Three daily expresses, including the 2.26am Sahyadri Express, zoom to Mumbai (sleeper/2AC Rs 146/592, 10 hours) via Pune (Rs 101/338, 41½ hours). A variety of express trains embark daily except Wednesday for the long voyage to Bengaluru (sleeper/2AC Rs 298/1208, 21 hours). You can also fly cheaply between Kolhapur and Mumbai on a daily basis with Air Deccan.



Goa

Those who haven't visted Goa tend to imagine it as some kind of Indian Costa Brava but with more cosmic karma and, thanks to this image, many people vow never to set foot there. However, Goa, like everywhere in India, is never quite what you expect. In places the infamous hash-fuelled days of Goa's golden hippy years are still alive and kicking and in others the all-inclusive package holiday is king. But these are two very narrow sides of the Goan experience and anyone who spends much time here will discover that Goa contains more variety and vitality than almost anywhere else in India. Head into Panaji (Panjim), one of India's smallest and most likeable state capitals, and instead of self-contained tourist resorts and trinket-selling dreadlocks you'll discover a Portuguese pantry of flaking architectural delicacies spiced up with Indian exuberance. Inland, you can stand in greener-than-green fields picking vanilla pods or bathing with elephants.

The main draws of Goa are, of course, the beaches, which are every bit as cliché beautiful as they're supposed to be, but just as much of an attraction is Goa's intriguing fusion of colonial Portugal and modern India. There is almost nowhere else in India where the influence of the former colonial overlords remains as strong as it does in Goa and it's not at all unusual to find crucifixes hanging on walls next to posters of Shiva and groups of elderly Goan men conversing in Portuguese. Goa may not be as cool as it once was but it's certainly just as magical.

HIGHLIGHTS

- Explore the old Portuguese quarter of Panaji (Panjim; p843) and savour its rich Mediterranean flavour
- Gaze in awe at the magnificent cathedrals of Old Goa (p849), the fallen city that once rivalled Lisbon
- Make footprints on idyllic beaches (p866) in the far north of Goa
- Get nostalgic in the crumbling ballrooms of colonial mansions in Chandor (p870)
- Barter for souvenirs at the legendary Wednesday flea market and then watch the sunset at Anjuna (p861)
- Hire a moped or motorbike and discover the back lanes of the luminous green countryside (p842)

History

In the 3rd century BC Goa formed part of the Mauryan empire. Later it was ruled by the Satavahanas of Kolhapur and eventually passed to the Chalukyas of Badami from AD 580 to 750.

Goa fell to the Muslims for the first time in 1312, but they weren't fans of the beach and eventually left in 1370 under the forceful persuasion of Harihara I of the Vijayanagar mpire. During the next 100 years Goa's harbours were important landing places for ships carrying Arabian horses for the Vijayanagar cavalry.

Blessed as it is by natural harbours and wide rivers, Goa was the ideal base for the seafaring Portuguese, who arrived in 1510 aiming to control the spice route from the East. Jesuit missionaries led by St Francis Xavier arrived in 1542. For a while, Portuguese control was limited to a small area around Old Goa, but by the middle of the 16th century it had expanded to include the provinces of Bardez and Salcete.

The Marathas (the central Indian people who controlled much of India at various points in time) almost vanquished the Portuguese in the late 18th century, and there was a brief occupation by the British during the Napoleonic Wars in Europe. However, it was not until 1961, when the Indian army marched into Goa, that Portuguese occupation finally came to its end on the subcontinent.

Today Goa has one of India's highest per-capita incomes, with farming, fishing, tourism and iron-ore mining forming the basis of its economy.

Climate

The monsoon hits Goa between June and the end of September; many places close up shop during this time. From late October to February the climate is near perfect after which the humidity starts rising.

Information

The Goa Tourism Development Corporation (GTDC; www.goa-tourism.com), commonly known as Goa Tourism, has branches in Panaji (p843), Margao (p869) and at Dabolim Airport (Goa's airport, 29km south of Panaji). You can also pick up information on the state from the Government of India tourist office in Panaji (p843).

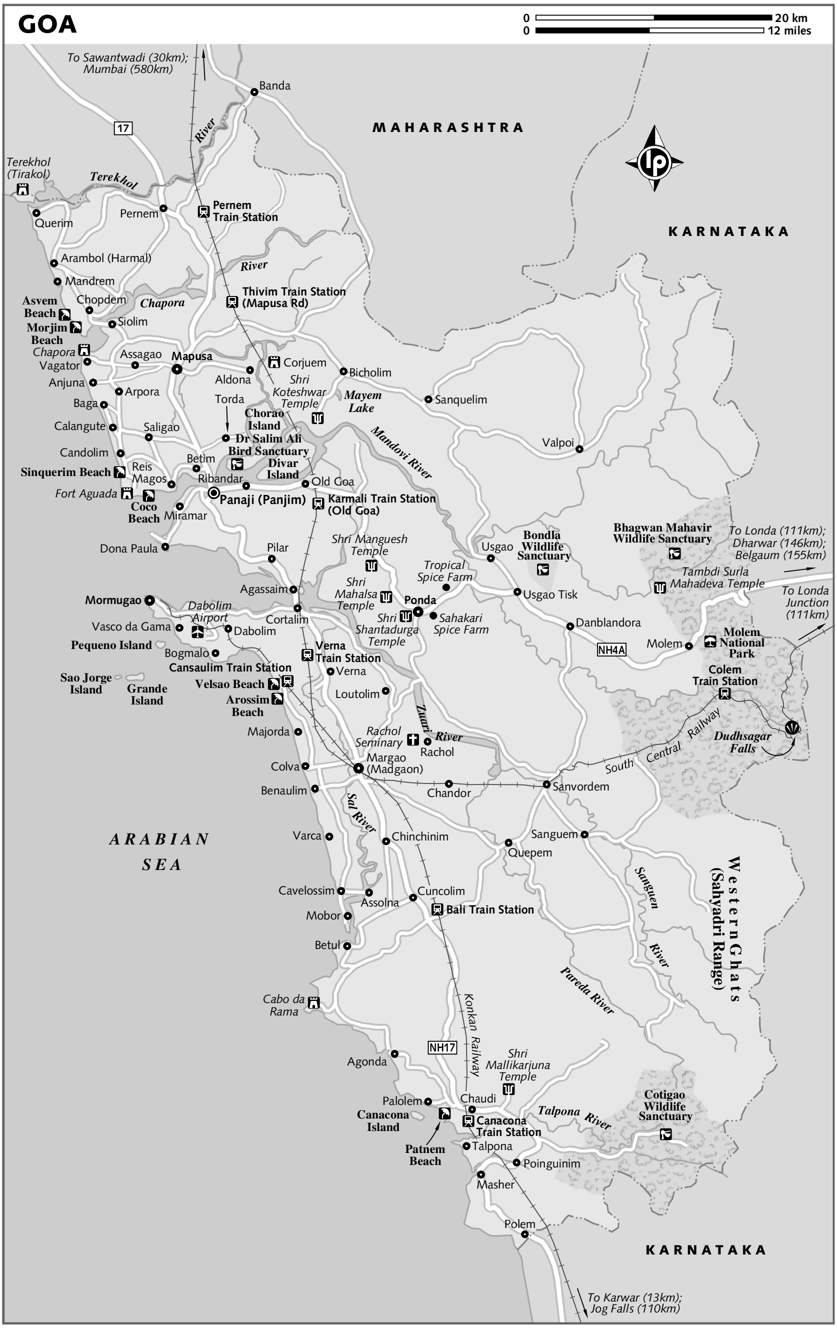
ACCOMMODATION



Accommodation prices in Goa are based on high, middle (shoulder) and low seasons. The high season is December to late January, the middle periods are October to late November and February to June, and the low season is July to September (the monsoon). Unless otherwise stated, prices quoted in this chapter are high-season rates. There's a fourth season, when some hotel prices rise again, sometimes to ludicrous heights, over the peak Christmas period from around 22 December to 3 January.

Most places have noon checkout but some are 9am or 10am.

Activities

Water sports such as parasailing, jet-skiing and windsurfing are available on the beaches at Candolim (p853), Calangute and Baga (p857), and Colva (p872). You can try paragliding at Arambol (p867) and Anjuna (p861). Although the waters off Goa aren't crystal clear, there are three scuba-diving outfits offering boat dives and PADI (Professional Association of Diving Instructors) courses: the very professional Barracuda Diving is based at the Goa Marriott Resort in Miramar (p847); Goa Diving is in Bogmalo (p871); and Goa Dive Center is in Baga (p857).

Boat trips to spot dolphins, go fishing or cruise the backwaters are also available from most beaches, including Arambol (p867) and Palolem (p876) – the boat owners will probably find you. An interesting day trip is to visit one of the spice plantations near Ponda (p877), where you get a tour and lunch for around Rs 300. You can go by yourself but most tour operators offer this trip. One of the best tour operators is Day Tripper (☎ 2276726; www.daytrippergoa.com), based in Calangute; it also offers rafting in Karnataka.

If you're interested in yoga, reiki, Ayurvedic massage, reflexology or any other sort of spiritual health regime, you'll find courses and classes advertised at many beach resorts. An hour-long Ayurvedic massage costs around Rs 650. The courses mentioned in the text only run during the peak tourist season from November to March.

Dangers & Annoyances

Theft from rooms is something to watch out for, particularly on party nights at places such as Anjuna and Vagator, or if you're renting a flimsy beach shack at Palolem or Arambol.

Muggings have been reported in Goa – avoid walking alone at night unless there are plenty of people around.

FESTIVALS IN GOA

Goa's Christian heritage is reflected in the number of feast days and festivals that follow the religious calendar. Panaji (Panjim), in particular, has a bumper crop of nonreligious festivals.

Feast of Three Kings (6 Jan; Chandor, p870) At churches local boys re-enact the story of the three kings bearing gifts for Christ.

Pop, Beat & Jazz Music Festival (Feb; Panaji, p843)

Shigmotsav (Shigmo) of Holi (Feb/Mar; statewide) This is Goa's version of the Hindu spring festival Holi. Coloured water and powders are thrown around at everyone and anyone and parades are held in the main towns.

Sabado Gordo (Fat Saturday; Feb/Mar; Panaji, p843) Part of the statewide Carnival, this festival is held on the Saturday before Lent. It's celebrated by a procession of floats and raucous street partying.

Carnival (Mar; statewide) A three-day party heralding the arrival of spring.

Procession of All Saints (Mar/Apr; Old Goa, p849) On the fifth Monday in Lent, this is the only procession of its sort outside Rome. Thirty statues of saints are brought out from storage and paraded around Old Goa's neighbouring villages.

Feast of Our Lady of Miracles (Apr; Mapusa, p852) A Hindu and Christian feast day held 16 days after Easter.

Beach Bonanza (May; Calangute, p856, Colva p872, & Miramar, p846) Several food and entertainment festivals, known as 'Beach Bonanzas', are held at various beach towns.

Igitun Chalne (May; Bicholim) Held at Sirigao Temple in Bicholim province, this fire-walking festival is one of Goa's most distinctive events. The high point is when devotees of the goddess Lairaya walk across burning coals to prove their devotion.

Feast of St Anthony (13 Jun; statewide) It is said that if the monsoon has not arrived by the time of this feast day, a statue of the saint should be lowered into the family well to hasten the arrival of the rain.

Feast of St John (24 Jun; statewide) A thanksgiving for the arrival of the monsoon.

Feast of St Peter & St Paul (29 Jun; statewide) Another monsoon celebration, this time by the fishing community, particularly in the region of Bardez, between Panaji and Mapusa. Dance, drama and music performances are held on makeshift stages floating on the river.

Feast of St Lawrence (Aug; statewide) The end of the monsoon is marked by this festival, as well as the reopening of the Mandovi to river traffic.

Fama de Menino Jesus (2nd Mon in Oct; Colva, p872) Colva's biggest feast day, this festival is when the Menino Jesus (a statue of the infant Jesus said to perform miracles) is paraded.

Goa Heritage Festival (Nov; Panaji, p843) A two-day cultural event held at Campal, featuring music, dancing and traditional food.

Tiatr Festival (Nov; Panaji, p843) Another drama-arts programme held as a competition at the Kala Academy (p848).

International Film Festival of India (IFFI; www.iffi.nic.in; normally for 10 days from the last week of Nov; Panaji, p843) Based in Goa since 2004, this is the largest film festival in India and features numerous exciting art-house films from across the world.

Konkani Drama Festival (Nov/Dec; Panaji, p843) A programme of Konkani music, dance and theatre held at the Kala Academy (p848) – it's a competition, with prizes awarded to the best performing group at the end.

Feast of St Francis Xavier (3 Dec; Old Goa, p849) Old Goa's biggest bash, this feast is preceded by a 10-day Novena. There are lots of festivities and huge crowds during this period, especially for the Exposition of St Francis Xavier's body, which is held once every 10 years (see boxed text, p851).

Feast of Our Lady of the Immaculate Conception (8 Dec; Margao, p868, & Panaji, p843) A large fair and a church service is held at the Church of Our Lady of the Immaculate Conception (p845) in Panaji. Around the same time, Margao celebrates with a large fair.

Some foreign women find Goa anything but a relaxing beach holiday and reports of harassment are disappointingly common. For many foreign women, beach dress code is dramatically different to that normally preferred by Indian women. This has led to problems with some groups of young Indian men coming to Goa for no other reason than to stare at scantily clad women. It's an unpleasant situation and one that both groups hold a certain amount of responsibility for. Many foreigners do seem to forget that they are no longer at home and that dress standards here are different, and the harassers seem unaware that their behaviour would be considered by foreigners to be unacceptable. The best solution is to aim for the quieter beaches and just give in to the fact that things that might be normal elsewhere, such as topless sunbathing, are taboo in some places and by doing it you are only likely to cause problems for yourself. Though the harassment rarely steps beyond staring or a few comments there have been instances of physical attack.

Note that the monsoonal seas are very dangerous.

DRUGS

Acid, ecstasy, cocaine and hash – the drugs of choice for many party-goers – are illegal (though still very much available) and any attempt to purchase or carry them is fraught with danger. Fort Aguada prison houses some foreigners serving lengthy sentences for drug offences.

Possession of even a small amount of charas (hashish) can mean 10 years in prison. Cases of corrupt policemen approaching hapless tourists and threatening to 'plant' drugs on them, or simply demanding a relatively large baksheesh (bribe) on the spot are becoming less common than in the past, but the possibility of such occurrences does remain.

Getting There & Away

AIR

Goa's airport, Dabolim, is 29km south of Panaji, on the coast near Vasco da Gama. Most of India's domestic airlines operate services here, and several direct charter companies fly into Goa from the UK and Europe. Be aware that it's illegal to fly into India on a scheduled flight and out on a charter flight. If you book an international flight from Goa, it will involve a domestic flight to Mumbai (Bombay), or another international airport, and a connection there; there are numerous flights between Goa and Mumbai. Domestic flights are listed in Domestic Scheduled Flights from Goa (below). Between them the budget carriers of Air Deccan, Spice Jet, Kingfisher and IndiGo link Goa up with virtually every decent-sized town in India for prices that are normally much more competitive than their scheduled brothers.

BUS

Long-distance interstate buses operate to/from Panaji, Margao, Mapusa and Calangute, and you can pick up some buses from Chaudi near Palolem. See those sections for more information.

TRAIN

The Konkan Railway (www.konkanrailway.com) connects Goa with Mumbai and Mangalore. The main station in Goa is Madgaon in Margao, WHERE'S THE PARTY?

Goa has long been renowned among Western visitors as a party place where all-night, open-air raves dominated the scene in places such as Anjuna and Vagator. A central government ban on loud music in open spaces between 10pm and 6am was aimed partly at curbing Goa's intrusive party scene, but with a tourist industry to nurture (and a bit of bribery) the authorities have tended to turn a blind eye to parties during the peak Christmas–New Year period. Rave parties are organised at open-air locations such as Disco Valley at Vagator and Bamboo Forest in Anjuna, and occasionally at Arambol, but they are not advertised so you'll have to ask around to find out what's on and be prepared to ride around aimlessly on a motorcycle looking for the right place. More permanent nightclubs have also become established in the Candolim-Calangute-Baga area over the years.

but expresses and passenger trains stop at most other stations along the line.

There are two daily expresses between Margao's Madgaon train station and Mumbai's Chhatrapati Shivaji Terminus (CST; the old Victoria Terminus), two between Madgaon and Lokmanya Tilak and one between Madgaon and Dadar (both in northern Mumbai). From Mumbai CST the overnight Konkan Kanya Express departs at 11pm (sleeper/3AC Rs 273/771, 12 hours) and the Mandavi Express departs at 6.55am. The fastest train (in theory) is the Shatabdi Express, which departs from Dadar at 5.35am daily except Wednesday (2nd class/AC seat Rs 197/675, six hours). From Margao to Mumbai, the Konkan Kanya Express leaves at 6pm, the Mandavi Express at 9.50am and the Shatabdi Express at 11.40am.

There are 12 direct trains between Margao and Mangalore (sleeper/3AC Rs 207/533, 4½ hours), most stopping at Mangalore's Kankanadi station.

The South Central Railway operates from Vasco da Gama via Margao and Londa, and runs to Pune, Delhi and Bengaluru (Bangalore). The Nizamuddin–Goa Express goes to Delhi (sleeper/3AC Rs 531/1438, 41 hours).

The Delhi–Goa (Margao) Rajdhani Express (3AC/2AC/1st class Rs 1985/2915/5430, 25½ hours) leaves Delhi Nizamuddin station Sunday and Tuesday. It also goes from Delhi to Goa every Wednesday and Friday, leaving Margao at 11.30am.

Bookings can be made at Madgaon (p870) and Vasco da Gama stations, or at the train reservation office at Panaji's Kadamba bus stand (p848). Other useful stations on the Konkan route are Pernem for Arambol, Thivim for Mapusa and the northern beaches, Karmali (Old Goa) for Panaji and Canacona for Palolem.

Getting Around

BOAT

Passenger/vehicle ferries cross the state's many rivers. Foot passengers ride for free, and motorcycles cost Rs 4.

BUS

The state-run Kadamba bus company is the main operator of public buses, although there are also private companies running more comfortable buses to Mumbai, Hampi, Bengaluru and several other interstate destinations. Local buses are cheap, services are frequent and they run to just about everywhere, eventually. Express buses run between Panaji and Mapusa, and Panaji and Margao (see p848 for more details).

CAR

Self-drive car hire is not worth the trouble, especially since it's more expensive than a chauffeur-driven car.

MOTORCYCLE

Goa is one of the few places in India where hiring a motorcycle or scooter is both cheap and easy, and the relatively short distances make travel a breeze, although India is no place to learn to ride a motorcycle, or even a scooter. Every other traveller you meet seems to have been involved in a bike accident of some description. Bikes available include old Enfields, more modern Yamaha 100s and the gearless Kinetic Honda scooters. Rental prices vary according to season, length of hire and quality of the bike. In the peak Christmas season, you're looking at paying up to Rs 300 per day for a scooter, Rs 400 for the small bikes and Rs 500 for an Enfield. Outside this time, when there's a glut of idle bikes, especially at the northern beach resorts, you should only pay Rs 150 per day for a scooter, Rs 250 for the small bikes and Rs 350 for an Enfield if you hire for a week or more. In most cases you don't need to provide a deposit, but you'll probably be asked for your passport details (don't hand over the passport itself) and the name of your hotel. Guesthouses, hotels and places where taxi drivers congregate are good places to hire a bike, but you'll get plenty of offers on the street at beach resorts.

TAXI

If the thought of riding a motorbike in Goa turns your knuckles white then taxis are available everywhere and a full day's sightseeing, depending on the distance, is likely to be around Rs 1000.

Motorcycles are a licensed form of taxi in Goa. They are cheap, easy to find, backpacks are no problem and they can be identified by a yellow front mudguard.

NORTH GOA

PANAJI (PANJIM)

pop 98,915

Panaji (also known as Panjim) is a town of shades; the pastel shades of the buildings, romantic shades of the Mediterranean, excitable shades of Latin America and noisy shades of India. It's a town utterly unique to the subcontinent, yet for most travellers it tends to be a quick after thought to a Goan beach holiday. This is a grave mistake because the narrow winding streets of its old Portuguese quarter, and its fine location at the mouth of the broad Mandovi River, make Panaji one of the indisputable highlights of Goa. To get the most out of Panaji spend a couple of days here and make it a base for explorations of nearby Old Goa (p849) and central Goa (p877).

CHURCH OF OUR LADY OF THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION

The centre piece of the city is the main church, originally consecrated in 1541, which stands above the square in the town centre. Panaji was the first port of call for voyages from Lisbon and newly arrived sailors would visit this strikingly whitewashed church to give thanks for a safe crossing before continuing to Old Goa. Mass is held here daily in English, Konkani and Portuguese.

GOA STATE MUSEUM

An eclectic collection of items awaits visitors to this large museum (☎ 2458006; www.goamuseum.nic.in; EDC Complex, Pato; admission free; 9.30am-5.30pm Mon-Fri), in a rather forlorn area southwest of the Kadamba bus stand. As well as Christian art, Hindu and Jain sculpture and bronzes, and paintings from all over India, exhibits include an elaborately carved table used in the Goa Inquisition, and, just to prove that wasting money on the lottery isn't a recent phenomenon, an antique pair of rotary lottery machines. There is also a small wildlife conservation gallery.

SECRETARIAT BUILDING

Dating from the 16th century, this handsome colonial building was originally the palace of the Muslim ruler Adil Shah before becoming the viceroy's official residence in 1759. Now it's government offices. Immediately to the west, the bizarre statue of a man apparently about to strangle a woman is of Abbé Faria, a famous Goan hypnotist, and his assistant.

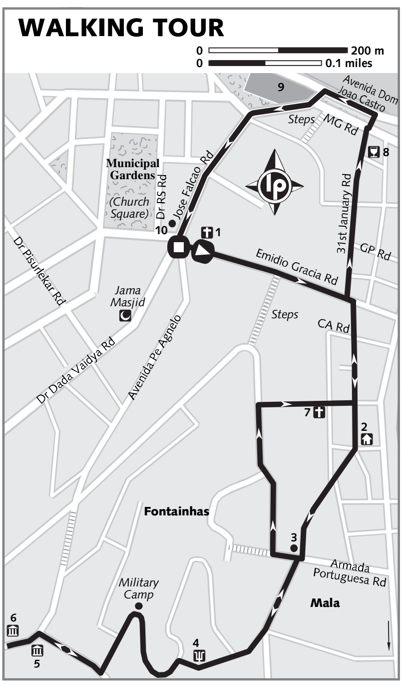
INSTITUTE MENEZES BRAGANZA

On the west side of the Azad Maidan, the institute houses Panaji Central Library (Malaca Rd; 9.30am-1.15pm & 2-5.45pm Mon-Fri) and is worth popping into to see the pretty blue-and-white azulejos (glazed ceramic-tile compositions) in the entrance hall.

PUBLIC OBSERVATORY

Reach for the stars at the observatory (Swami Vivekanand Rd; 7-9pm Nov-May) on the rooftop of Junta House.

GOA



MIRAMAR

The closest beach to Panaji is at Miramar, 3km southwest of the city along Dayanand Bandodkar Marg. It's far from the cream of Goa's beaches but is pleasant enough for a sunset stroll and is a good short bike ride out the city. On the way you'll pass the Goa Marriot Resort (opposite), where you'll find Barracuda Diving (☎ 6656294; www.barracudadiving.com), one of the state's most professional diving operations.

Walking Tour

From the Church of Our Lady of the Immaculate Conception (1; p845) walk east up the hill along Emidio Gracia Rd (Corte de Oiterio). At the four-way junction, where you'll see fruit-seller barrows, turn right into 31st January Rd. Continue down to the heritage hotel Panjim Inn (2; opposite).

> Start & Finish: Church of Our Lady of the Immaculate Conception > Distance: 6km
> Duration: 1½ hours

Take the right fork of the road and continue south past the small fountain (3; not working) from which Fontainhas gets its name. Keep walking in the same direction until you see the steps off to the right leading uphill to the ornate, salmon-pink Maruti Temple (4), dedicated to the monkey god Hanuman. The temple's veranda provides fine views towards the Mandovi River. Nip behind the temple and follow the road up into the Altinho district.

When you reach a junction with a red 'stop and proceed' sign, turn right and continue around to the Bishop's Palace (5), residence of the Archbishop of Goa. This grand white mansion, with a silver painted Jesus statue outside, lords it over the much-humbler Chief Minister's Residence (6) across the road. After gazing through the fence of these two buildings retrace your steps back past the Maruti Temple and back towards the fountain. Turn left at the crossroads just before this and head towards the steps, just before these turn right and head up hill past lots of big old houses. After around 300m you'll see a set of steps on your right descending downhill and marked by a crucifix. Heading down these you'll pass by many colourful houses until you reach the Chapel of St Sebastian (7). Built in the 1880s, its most striking feature is a crucifix that originally stood in the Palace of the Inquisition in Old Goa.

Walk back to 31st January Rd and return to where the road meets up with the fruit stalls. Then, at the junction with Emido Garcia Rd, continue straight over and into the brightly painted streets of Sao Tomé, pausing for a drink at the Hotel Venite (8; p848). Afterwards continue on to the river, turn left and walk down to the Secretariat Building (9), left again at Jose Falcao Rd and, keeping an eye peeled for the strange flower- and star-coated crucifix (10) built into a wall on the right, back to where you started at Church Sq.

Courses

India on the Menu (www.indiaonthemenu.com) is a recommended five-day Indian cookery course offered by London-based On the Go Tours (www.onthegotours.com). The programme is based in Betim, just across the river from Panaji, and covers North and South Indian cuisines, Goan cuisine and a market tour. On the final day you can choose to be taught how to cook your favourite Indian dishes by the course tutor. Each of the cooking sessions lasts half a day (including lunch).

Cruises & Tours

GTDC operates entertaining hour-long cruises (Rs 100; dusk cruise 6pm, sundown cruise 7.15pm) along the Mandovi River aboard the Santa Monica. They include a live band performing Goan folk songs and dances. On full-moon nights there is a two-hour cruise at 8.30pm (Rs 150). Cruises depart from the Santa Monica jetty next to the huge Mandovi Bridge and tickets can be purchased here. Royal Cruises (2435599), has virtually identical trips from Santa Monica jetty starting around 6.15pm (Rs 100), as well as open-sea 'dolphin cruises' (from mid-October to the end of April only; Rs 300) from 10am to 1pm. Its boats are bigger and rowdier (for the boozy Indian party crowd) than the Santa Monica.

GTDC also runs a Goa By Night bus tour (Rs 140; 6.30pm), which leaves from the same spot and includes a river cruise. It also offers a whole bevy of day-long bus tours.

BUDGET

Park Lane Lodge (2227154; pklaldg@sancharnet.in; d without/with AC Rs 475/650;) Stepping through the doors of this rambling 1930s Portuguese house is like going to visit your grandparents, thanks to all the fuss the owners pour over you. There are six small, simply furnished rooms full of character; checkout is 8am and prices more than double at Christmas.

Vaz Residence (2432909; d Rs 500) This decent-value budget hotel off 31st January Rd doesn't extend the warmest of welcomes, but it's in a quiet, friendly neighbourhood and has six basic, clean rooms with midget-sized balconies.

Republica Hotel (2224630; Jose Falcao Rd; d Rs 600) The Republica is an interesting old place with good views from the balcony over to the river and the Secretariat building. But with squat toilets and a general air of neglect it's the least appealing of the budget choices. For some reason it charges Rs 1000 in high season if you book over the phone.

our pick Afonso Guest House (2222359; d Rs 750) Surrounded by pot plants and set in a beautifully restored yellow Portuguese town house that almost whiffs of Lisbon, this superb family-run budget hotel has immaculately clean, well-cared-for rooms that are a bargain.

MIDRANGE

Mayfair Hotel (2223317; mayfair@sancharnet.com; Dr Dada Vaidya Rd; s/d from Rs 840/1040;) Bright red-and-yellow-striped walls lead into tidy rooms that are ideal for those who enjoy the hustle of the city centre.

Panaji Residency (2227103; MG Rd; d without/with AC from Rs 870/990;) This GTDC-run establishment has as much charm and character as a bowl of porridge, but it's a useful standby if all the goodies are taken. Popular with Indian businessmen.

Panjim Inn (2226523; www.panjiminn.com; 31st January Rd; s/d from Rs 1440/1620;) A delightful hotel, the Panjim Inn is a beautiful 200-year-old pastel pink mansion with period furniture and a large 1st-floor veranda with overhanging vines. All rooms have romantic four-poster beds. The attached restaurant is slow and not such good value. Note that there's a modern, new extension, so call ahead to request one of the genuinely old rooms!

Panjim Pousada (2226523; www.panjiminn.com; 31st January Rd; s/d from Rs 1440/1620;) Across from Panjim Inn and under the same management, this is a discreet hotel hidden away inside a lovely old Hindu house. The Gitanjali art gallery around the bright central courtyard and the rooms are full of antique wooden furniture.

Hotel Fidalgo (2226291; www.hotelfidalgo-goa.com; 18 June Rd; s/d from Rs 2000/2500;) Sterile but reliable business-class hotel with huge bedroom windows overlooking the city centre and a whole bevy of 24-hour restaurants. Has an inviting pool.

TOP END

our pick Panjim Peoples (2226523; www.panjiminn.com; 31st January Rd; d high season from Rs 5200;) This is another venture by the Panjim Inn people, and is far and away the most atmospheric hotel in Panaji. The bed heads alone should be in an art gallery and nothing else about the massive, beautifully furnished rooms is likely to disappoint either.

Goa Marriott Resort (2463333; www.marriott.com; Miramar; d from US$250;) Panaji's luxury choice – a relaxed hotel with spacious, soothingly decorated rooms – is at Miramar, 3km from the town centre. The service is perfect, the food in the various restaurants divine, but at the end of the day it lacks the character and sense of place of some of the other Panaji hotels.

Eating

Panaji knows how to relax over a good meal and you'll find plenty of memorable places in which to enjoy Goa's famous food.

New Café Hema (General Bernado Guedes Rd; mains Rs 20-30; 6am-7.30pm Mon-Sat, to 12.30pm Sun) This is a cheap, clean place near the municipal market serving a very good fish curry and rice (Rs 20) and cheap veg snacks for under Rs 10. Entrance is at the rear and up some stairs.

Lourenzos (MG Rd; mains Rs 30-100) Brand new, homy bar and restaurant near old Pato Bridge that's popular with local drivers. The owner is a highly eccentric Maradona lookalike who'll probably do his best to get you drinking. South American atmosphere with old Goan favourites.

Viva Panjim (☎ 2422405; 178 31st January Rd; mains Rs 50-160; 8-10.30am, 11.30am-3pm & 7-11pm Mon-Sat) A compulsory pit stop on the foreigners' Panaji circuit and for good reason – the cheap Goan and Portuguese staples are tasty and the ambience is that of small town in Portugal. There are a couple of outdoor tables and the chicken xacutí (spicy Goan curry made using coconut milk) is delicious.

Sher-E-Punjab (☎ 2227975; 1st fl, Hotel Aroma, Cunha-Rivara Rd; mains Rs 60-150) Simple and quick but reassuringly good, and once bitten no-one is too shy to return. There's also a branch on 18th June Rd.

GOA

Hotel Venite (☎ 2425537; 31st January Rd; mains Rs 65-110; 8.30am-11pm) With colourful graffiti covered walls and half-a-dozen tiny balconies hanging over the street this Latin-flavoured restaurant is the perfect spot to pause for one of its delicious milk shakes and a light snack.

Zen Restaurant (☎ 2420737; 1st fl, Padmavati Towers, 18th June Rd; mains Rs 100-200) The welcoming statement that the Chinese will eat anything with four legs but a table and anything with two wings but a plane does make you ponder what 'delicacy' might emerge from the kitchens next, but rest assured that this stylish new joint avoids anything dodgy and just sticks to praise-winning Chinese and Thai staples.

our pick A Ferradura (Horseshoe; ☎ 2431788; Ourem Rd; mains Rs 150-300) As the only true Portuguese restaurant in Panaji a good meal here can whisk you away to the banks of the Douro River. The main courses aren't for the hungry, but it's a good place for an intimate meal, and serves Portuguese wines and beers.

Drinking

Panaji has a fair smattering of darkened bars full of hard-core feni (liquor distilled from coconut milk or cashews) drinkers, and a few pubs frequented by young Goans rather than foreign tourists. Apart from Hotel Venite (31st January Rd), try Aces Pub (Swami Vivekanand Rd). It's a tiny, two-tier place that's like a little cocktail bar. Gadhino Bar (Dr Dada Vaidya Rd) is a spit-and-sawdust local bar consisting of two tables and a row of drinks bottles.

Entertainment

Kala Academy (☎ 2420451; www.kalaacademy.org; Dayanand Bandodkar Marg) On the west side of the city at Campal is Goa's premier cultural centre, which features a programme of dance, theatre, music and art exhibitions throughout the year. Many shows are in Konkani, but there are occasional English-language productions.

INOX (☎ 2420999; tickets Rs 50-120) This multiplex cinema, which shows English-language and Indian films, is near the Kala Academy.

Casino Goa (☎ 2234044; dusk cruise 5.30-8pm Rs 500, dinner cruise from 7.30pm-6am Rs 1500) Aboard a small luxury ship, the MV Caravela, moored at the Panaji jetty, opposite Hotel Mandovi, is India's only live gaming casino – it's a fun night out, particularly if the Russian belly dancers are putting on a show. There's a smart dress code and a no-children policy.

Getting There & Away

AIR

Big boy airlines with offices in Panaji include the following:

Air India (☎ 2225172) Near Bal Bhavan, Campal.
Indian Airlines (☎ 2237826; ground fl, Dempo Bldg, Dayanand Bandodkar Marg)
Jet Airways (☎ 2438792; Shop 7-9, Sesa Ghor, Patto Plaza, Dr Alvaro Costa Rd) Near GTDC office.
Sahara Airlines (☎ 2237346; General Bernado Guedes Rd)

A prepaid taxi from the airport to Panaji is Rs 500.

BUS

State-run bus services operate out of Panaji's Kadamba bus stand (☎ 2438034). Fares vary depend on the type of bus and include the following:

Destination	Fare (Rs)	Duration (hr)
Bengaluru	400	14
Hospet	177	9
Mangalore	190	10
Mumbai	900 (deluxe)	12-15
Mysore	345	17
Pune	400	12

There are also services to Londa (Rs 70, three hours), where you can get a daily direct train connection to Mysore and Bengaluru, as well as services to Hubli (Rs 103, six hours) and Belgaum (Rs 85, five hours).

Many private operators have offices outside the entrance to the bus stand, with luxury and AC buses to Mumbai, Bengaluru, Hampi and other destinations. Most private interstate buses arrive and depart from a separate bus stand next to the Mandovi Bridge. Paulo Travels (☎ 2438531; www.paulotravels.com; ⌚ 8am-9.30pm), just north of the bus stand, has nightly AC sleeper coaches to Mumbai (Rs 650, 14 to 18 hours) and Bengaluru (Rs 650, 14 hours), though these prices fluctuate – they rise from mid-December. Ordinary, non-AC buses cost Rs 350 to Mumbai and Rs 350 to Hampi. Luxury buses can also be booked through agents in Margao, Mapusa and the beach resorts, but they still depart from Panaji.

For journeys within Goa, popular routes from Panaji depart from the Kadamba bus stand and include the following:

Calangute Frequent services throughout the day and evening (Rs 7, 45 minutes).

Mapusa Frequent buses run to Mapusa (Rs 7) or there's a separate ticket booth at the Kadamba bus stand for express services (Rs 10, 25 minutes).

Margao Direct express buses run frequently to Margao (Rs 16, one hour). Change at Margao for the beaches of the south.

Old Goa Direct buses to Old Goa leave constantly (Rs 7, 25 minutes).

TRAIN

The train is a better bet than the bus for getting to/from Mumbai and Mangalore, but it can be difficult getting a seat into Goa around Christmas. The nearest train station to Panaji is Karmali, 12km to the east near Old Goa. There's a very busy reservation office (⌚ 8am-8pm Mon-Sat) upstairs at Panaji's Kadamba bus stand.

Getting Around

Getting taxi and autorickshaw drivers to use their meters is impossible. Agree on the fare before heading off. Short trips around Panaji cost Rs 50; to Old Goa they cost roughly Rs 150.

It's easy enough to rent a motorcycle or scooter in Panaji, though if you intend to spend most of your time at the beach resorts it's more convenient and usually cheaper to hire one there. There are no hire shops as such – ask at your guesthouse or head to the cluster of bikes opposite the main post office on MG Rd. Bicycles can be hired from Daud M Aga Cycle Store (☎ 2222670; per day Rs 40; ⌚ 8am-8pm Mon-Sat, to noon Sun), opposite Cine Nacional.

OLD GOA

Gazing at Old Goa today it's hard to believe that this fallen city was once able to stand up to Lisbon and demand, 'Who's the man?'. But back in the 1500s and with a population exceeding that of Lisbon and London, that's exactly what Old Goa was able to do. However the good times didn't last long and both the Inquisition and a major epidemic did their best to decimate this decadent and immoral dollop of Portugal. Finally, in 1843, the capital was shifted to the far more prim and proper Panaji.

All that's now left of Golden Goa are half-a-dozen imposing churches and cathedrals (among the largest in Asia) and an awful lot of atmosphere.

Old Goa can get crowded on weekends and in the 10 days leading up to the Feast of St Francis Xavier on 3 December. The Archaeological Survey of India publishes the useful guide Old Goa (Rs 10), available from the archaeological museum (p850).

Sights

SE CATHEDRAL

Construction of the Sé de Santa Catarina, the largest church in Old Goa, began in 1562 and though the building was completed by 1619, the altars were not finished until 1652.

The building's style is Portuguese-Gothic with a Tuscan exterior and Corinthian interior. The remaining tower houses a famous bell, often called the Golden Bell because of its rich sound. The main altar is dedicated to St Catherine of Alexandria, and paintings on either side of it depict scenes from her life and martyrdom.

CONVENT & CHURCH OF ST FRANCIS OF ASSISI

One of the most interesting buildings in Old Goa, the church interior contains gilded and carved woodwork, a stunning reredos (ornamented screen behind the altar), old murals depicting scenes from the life of St Francis and a floor made of carved gravestones – complete with family coats of arms dating back to the early 16th century. The church was built by eight Franciscan friars who arrived here in 1517 and constructed a small chapel, which was later pulled down and the present building was constructed on the same spot in 1661.

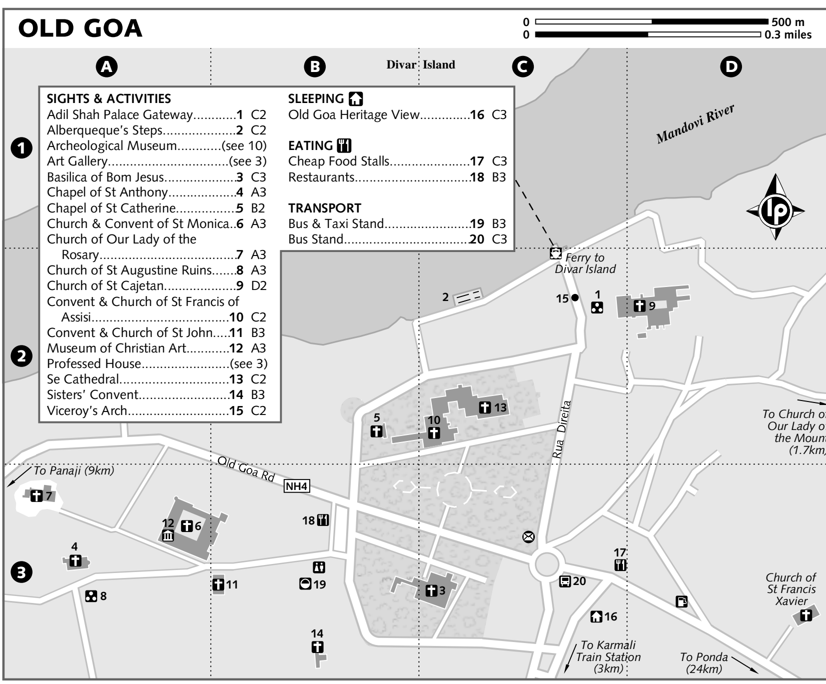
A convent behind this church is now the archaeological museum (admission Rs 5; 10am-5pm Sat-Thu). It houses portraits of the Portuguese viceroys, sculpture fragments from Hindu temple sites, and stone Vetal images from the animist cult that flourished in this part of India centuries ago.

BASILICA OF BOM JESUS

This basilica is famous throughout the Roman Catholic world. It contains the tomb and mortal remains of St Francis Xavier who, in 1541, was given the task of spreading Christianity among the subjects of the Portuguese colonies in the East.



A former pupil of St Ignatius Loyola, the founder of the Jesuit order, St Francis Xavier embarked on missionary voyages that became legendary and, considering the state of transport at the time, were nothing short of miraculous.

Apart from the richly gilded altars, the interior of the church is remarkable for its simplicity. Construction began in 1594 and was completed in 1605. The focus of the church is the three-tiered marble tomb of St Francis – his remains are housed in a silver casket, which at one time was covered in jewels.

The Professed House, next door to the basilica, is a two-storey laterite building covered with lime plaster. Construction was completed in 1585, despite much opposition to the Jesuits from the local Portuguese. There is a modern art gallery attached to the basilica; even if the art isn't to your taste it's worth popping your head in to look through a small window down onto the tomb of St Francis Xavier.

CHURCH OF ST CAJETAN

Modelled on the original design of St Peter's in Rome, this church was built by Italian friars of the Order of Theatines, who were sent by Pope Urban III to preach Christianity in the kingdom of Golconda (near Hyderabad).

THE INCORRUPT BODY OF ST FRANCIS XAVIER

Goa's patron saint, Francis Xavier, spent 10 years as a tireless missionary in Asia but it was his death on 3 December 1552 that gave rise to his greatest influence on the region.

He died on the island of Sancian, off the coast of China. A servant is said to have emptied four sacks of quicklime into his coffin to consume his flesh in case the order came to return the remains to Goa. Two months later the body was still in perfect condition – refusing to rot despite the quicklime. The following year it was returned to Goa, where the people were declaring the preservation a miracle.

The church was slower to acknowledge it, requiring a medical examination to establish that the body had not been embalmed. This was performed in 1556 by the viceroy's physician, who declared that all internal organs were still intact and that no preservative agents had been used. He noticed a small wound in the chest and asked two Jesuits to put their fingers into it. He noted, 'When they withdrew them, they were covered with blood which I smelt and found to be absolutely untainted'.

It was not until 1622 that canonisation took place, but by then holy-relic hunters had started work on the 'incorrupt body'. In 1614 the right arm was removed and divided between Jesuits in Japan and Rome, and by 1636 parts of one shoulder blade and all the internal organs had been scattered through Southeast Asia. By the end of the 17th century the body was in an advanced state of desiccation, and the miracle appeared to be over. The Jesuits decided to enclose the corpse in a glass coffin out of view, and it was not until the mid-19th century that the current cycle of 10-yearly expositions began, the next one being in 2014.

The friars were not permitted to work in Golconda, so settled at Old Goa in 1640. The construction of the church began in 1655.

CHURCH OF ST AUGUSTINE (RUINS)

The church was constructed in 1602 by Augustinian friars and abandoned in 1835 due to the repressive policies of the Portuguese government, which resulted in the eviction of many religious orders from Goa. It quickly fell into neglect and all that really remains is the enormous 46m tower that served as a belfry and formed part of the façade.

CHURCH & CONVENT OF ST MONICA

This huge, three-storey laterite building was completed in 1627, only to burn down nine years later. Reconstruction started the following year, and it's from this time that the buildings date. Once known as the Royal Monastery, due to the royal patronage that it enjoyed, the building is now used by the Mater Dei Institute as a nunnery. It was inaugurated in 1964.

Within the convent, the excellent Museum of Christian Art (adult/child Rs 10/free; 🕑 9.30am-5pm) contains statuary, paintings and sculptures transferred here from the Rachol Seminary. Many of the works of Goan Christian art during the Portuguese era were produced by local Hindu artists.

OTHER HISTORIC SITES

Other monuments of interest are the Viceroy's Arch, Adil Shah's Palace Gateway, Chapel of St Anthony, Chapel of St Catherine, Alburqueque's Steps, the Convent & Church of St John, Sister's Convent and the Church of Our Lady of the Rosary. For a wonderful view of the city head to the hilltop Church of Our Lady of the Mount, 2km east of Se Cathedral.

Sleeping & Eating

Most people visit Old Goa as a day trip and there is little reason to stay out here, but should you want to the GTDC Old Goa Heritage View (☎ 2285013; d with/without AC Rs 450/650; 🅿), has simple rooms and zero enthusiasm.

Outside the basilica there are two restaurants, geared primarily to local tourists, where you can order full meals and cold drinks, including beer. They're raised up from the road and are a good spot to relax and take in the scene. You can also get cheap snacks (less than Rs 120) from the food stalls that line the road just north of the Old Goa Heritage View.

Getting There & Away

Frequent buses to Old Goa depart from the Kadamba bus stand at Panaji (Rs 7, 25 minutes) and stop on the east side of the main roundabout.

TORDA

Just 5km north of Panaji, off the main road to Mapusa, is the village of Torda, where you'll find, on a traffic island, the Houses of Goa Museum (☎ 2410711; www.archgoa.org; admission Rs 25; ⌚ 10am-7.30pm Tue-Sun). This extraordinary ship-like building houses a small but illuminating collection of materials explaining the unique design and intricacies of Goa's traditional architecture. Inquire also about guided walks through the mangroves surrounding the village. The easiest way here is by autorickshaw from Panaji (around Rs 70).

MAPUSA

pop 40,100

The colourful market town of Mapusa (pronounced 'Mapsa') is the main population centre in the northern talukas (districts) of Goa. There's not much to see in Mapusa, aside from a raucous Friday market (⌚ 8am-6.30pm) that attracts hordes of vendors and shoppers from all over Goa. Unlike the Anjuna market it's a local event where people shop for cheap clothing and produce, but you can also find a few souvenirs and textiles here. If your idea of India has yet to extend beyond the beach bubbles then this is a great place to see an authentic slice of small-town India.

Information

Several ATMs can be found around the municipal gardens.

Cyber Zone (per hr Rs 40; ⌚ 9.30am-2pm & 2.30-6.30pm Mon-Sat) Internet access, just around the corner from the Hotel Satyaheera.

Other India Bookstore (☎ 2263306; www.goacom.com/oib; Mapusa Clinic Rd; ⌚ 9am-5pm Mon-Fri, to 1pm Sat) Stocks mainly books published in India, including books on Goa or by Goan authors.

Sleeping & Eating

Accommodation at the nearby beaches of Anjuna, Vagator and Calangute is far preferable to what's on offer in Mapusa.

Hotel Vilena (☎ 2263115; Feira Baixa Rd; d with shared/private bathroom Rs 300/450) Noisy, matchbox-sized rooms that just about suffice for a night. Friendly.

Hotel Satyaheera (☎ 2262849; satya_goa@sancharnet.in; d without/with AC from Rs 490/700; ❄) Near the Maruti Temple on the northern roundabout, this is Mapusa's best choice with all the rooms painted a different colour – ask for one of the garish purple rooms just for the novelty value.

Vrundavan (dishes Rs 15-50) Near the Municipal Gardens, this is a simple place offering good, cheap veg thalis for Rs 40.

Bertsy Bar & Restaurant (Market Rd) Basic chicken and beef curries for Rs 30 to 50.

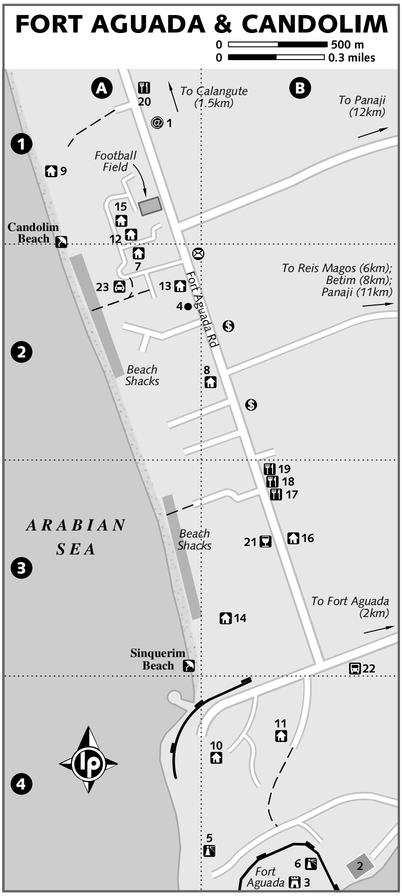
Ruchira Restaurant (mains Rs 30-100) On the rooftop of Hotel Satyaheera, this is one of Mapusa's best restaurants, serving Indian and Continental dishes.

Shopping

Sawant Chapple Shop (⌚ 7am-8pm) For three generations the same family have been churning out handmade leather sandals. Expect to pay between Rs 300 and 600 for a decent pair. It's behind Laxmi Narayan Temple.

Getting There & Away

If you're coming by bus from Mumbai, Mapusa is the jumping-off point for the northern beaches. Private operators such as India Travel (☎ 2262635) congregate around the municipal gardens and the taxi and autorickshaw stand. They have buses to Mumbai (normal/sleeper Rs 450/800, 14 hours) and Bengaluru (Rs 500, 15 hours). From the Kadamba bus stand there are state-run buses to Pune (Rs 230, 15 hours) and Belgaum (Rs 47, five hours).



There are frequent local express buses to Panaji (Rs 7, 25 minutes), and buses every 30 minutes to Calangute and Anjuna (both Rs 6). Other buses go to Chapora, Candolim and Arambol (Rs 12). A motorcycle taxi to Anjuna or Calangute costs Rs 80, an autorickshaw Rs 120.

Thivim, about 12km northeast of town, is the nearest train station on the Konkan Railway. Local buses meet trains (Rs 5); an autorickshaw costs around Rs 80.

FORT AGUADA & CANDOLIM

pop 8600

The beaches of Candolim and Sinquerim (below Fort Aguada) are popular with charter and upmarket tourists. The pace is a little less frenetic than at Calangute and Baga up the coast. Independent travellers are rare here, most of the hotels being favoured by package-tour operations. The beach at Fort Aguada is notable for its rocky and attractive headland, while Candolim has the rusting hulk of a grounded tanker, the River Princess – it's not a very pretty princess. Some of the best-value beach accommodation in Goa lines the quiet back lanes of both villages.

Sights & Activities

Guarding the mouth of the Mandovi River, Fort Aguada was constructed by the Portuguese in 1612. It's worth visiting the moated ruins on the hilltop for the views, which are particularly good from the old lighthouse. Nearby is the new lighthouse (adult/child Rs 5/3; 4-5.30pm). It's a pleasant 2km ride along a hilly, sealed road to the fort, or you can walk via a steep, uphill path past Marbella Guest House. Beneath the fort, facing the Mandovi, is the Aguada Jail. Most of the inmates here (including some tourists on compulsory, extended stays) are in on drug charges. Needless to say, it's not really much of tourist destination.

There are various boat cruises on offer. The best value are John's Boat Tours (2497450), further up behind Candolim Beach. The half-day dolphin trip (Rs 795, with a no-dolphin, no-pay guarantee) includes lunch and beers on the boat; the popular full-day 'Crocodile Dundee' river trip (Rs 995) includes lunch at a spice plantation and free drinks. It also offers an overnight backwater trip on a Kerala-style houseboat (Rs 4000 full board), and a variety of nonwatery trips.

The Taj Holiday Village (p856) organises paragliding and rents jet-skis and windsurfing equipment.

Sleeping

BUDGET

Some of Goa's best-value places to put up for the night can be found in Fort Aguada and Candolim.

Ave Maria (2489074; d incl tax Rs 600;) A hop and a skip from the beach but you need to be skinny to squeeze into the shower. Friendly.

THE BEACH FILES

Goa's biggest attraction is its beaches. The beaches themselves, the associated villages and resorts that have grown up around them, and the people who are drawn to them are all quite different in character. Some have changed beyond recognition in the past 10 years, others are just being discovered and a few pockets remain unspoiled. Here's a brief rundown of Goa's main beaches from north to south.

Arambol (Harmal)

The most northerly of Goa's developed beaches, Arambol (p866) has an attractive rocky headland, a long strip of sand and a chilled-out, but increasingly busy, scene with music bars and some good restaurants; it attracts backpackers and gracefully ageing hippies. It has some of the cheapest accommodation in Goa and lots of long timers.

Mandrem

The next beach south, Mandrem (p866) is one huge palm backed ribbon of clean and uncluttered sand; it's one of Goa's undiscovered gems. It's good for midrange travellers looking to kick back and do absolutely nothing.

Morjim & Asvem

Stretching down to the Chapora River, the sandy beaches here (p866) are some of the least disturbed and most beautiful in the state. The waters at Morjim suffer heavily from river run-off pollution year-round. There are bamboo and palm-thatch huts, an upmarket tent camp and a few beach shacks but essentially it's a quiet place to do nothing.

Vagator

There are three small cove beaches at Vagator (p863 backed by a rocky headland. The attraction of Vagator is the huge party scene, dominated by Europeans and Israelis, rather than beaches, which cannot be described as Goa's prettiest. The water is often murky thanks to river run-off.

Anjuna

Of all the big tourist beaches Anjuna (p861) has, close to the flea market, the most alluring and relaxed stretch of sand. There are also plenty of places to stay and a number of good eating and drinking options. Anjuna retains its popularity with the party crowd but its days as the place to 'see and be seen' are virtually over. Market day (Wednesday), however, should not be missed.

Calangute & Baga

The long sweep of very crowded beach here (p856) is overloaded with beach shacks and sun beds, backed by midrange concrete-block hotels. This is package-tourism central, though many travellers still prefer the upbeat atmosphere here to that further north. The beach can be dirty and women in bikinis won't get a second's peace.

GOA

Tropicano Beach Resort (☎ 2489732; 835B Camotim Vaddo; d Rs 600) Six small freshly painted rooms that are as clean as Goa gets, a garden full of drooping trees and a friendly family welcome make the Tropicano Beach Resort a hard place to top.

Villa Ludovici Tourist Home (☎ 2479684; Fort Aguada Rd; d incl breakfast Rs 650) Nowhere else in Candolim can match the fading glory of this charming old colonial house. There are only four rooms, some of which come with creaking four-posters, so book in advance. In the evenings you can sit yourself in a comfortable chair on the shady verandah and sup on a beer.

D'Mello's (☎ 2489650; dmellos_seaview_home@hotmail.com; d small/large Rs 700/1200) The large ocean-facing rooms are some of the best you will find anywhere and feature enormous sliding wooden shutters instead of glass windows. The result is lots of breezes and sunlight filtering into the room and the sensation that

Candolim & Sinquerim
A continuation of Calangute, Candolim(p852) is a mix of upmarket resorts, package hotels, beach shacks and some good restaurants, culminating in the sprawling Taj complex at Sinquerim. Though still busy this beach is likely to come closer to your Goa ideals.

Miramar
Miramar (p846), Panaji's the town beach of Panaji (Panjim), is no place for swimming but it's a popular spot from which to watch the sunset.

Bogmalo
A small and sheltered beach hemmed in by coconut cliffs that sits just 4km south of Dabolim Airport, Bogmalo (p871) has a feeling of exclusivity and can be used as a base for diving. It's close to the sprawling industrial centre of Vasco da Gama and accessed easily from the airport. Very few people come here.

Majorda & Velsao
Blighted by a petrochemical plant in the distance, these beaches north of Colva have a few upmarket resort hotels but little tourist activity.

Colva & Benaulim
The exposed and endless sandy beach here (p872) is similar to Calangute but it's much quieter and still has a noticeable fishing industry. There's a mix of Indian and foreign package tourists and backpackers, but no party scene. Benaulim village is quieter still and a good place to stay long-term. Neither beach is very clean.

Varca & Cavelossim
Five-star luxury resorts here (p875) front relatively empty, undeveloped beaches that meet all the tropical clichés.

Agonda
North of Palolem, the large beach at Agonda (p875) is the most inviting in south Goa. It attracts travellers who are over the scene at Palolem.

Palolem & Patnem
Palolem (p875) used to be the quietest and most idyllic beach in the state but nowadays it's been well and truly discovered. Even so its palm trees continue to attract bus loads of backpackers attempting to escape the stresses of Indian travel. Patnem, a short distance south, is much cleaner, quieter and has some decent surf.

you're floating out on the ocean in a boat. The cheaper rooms are also good.

MIDRANGE

Sea Shell Inn (☎ 2489131; seashellgoa@hotmail.com; Fort Aguada Rd; d incl breakfast Rs 850) On the main road, this whitewashed grand colonial house has eight rooms situated in a newer annexe round the back. Good value. Skimpy breakfast.

Casa Sea-Shell (☎ 2479879; seashellgoa@hotmail.com; Fort Aguada Rd; d Rs 950;) The larger and more modern sister of the Sea Shell lacks the character of that establishment but does have the plus of a pool.

Moonlight Bar & Restaurant (☎ 2489249; santanatheresa@yahoo.com; d from Rs 1000) Tasteful blue-and-white building with large rooms full of wicker furniture and bathrooms so big you'll need a GPS to navigate around them. Should the tropical sun be making you feel a bit wintry, try the attached restaurant that serves up Sunday roasts.

GOA

our pick Marbella Guest House (☎ 2479551; marbella_goa@yahoo.com; d incl tax from Rs 1500;) This stunningly renovated Portuguese villa, stuffed full of period furniture and with peaceful, shady gardens, might be the most romantic guesthouse in Goa and alone is reason enough to come to Fort Aguada. Each room is full of lots of little touches that hotels many times its price cannot match. Book ahead.

TOP END

The Taj Group (☎ 6645858; www.tajhotels.com) operates a complex of three luxury hotels beside Sinquerim Beach:

Taj Holiday Village (d from US$180;) Terracotta roofed cottages, a small putting green and a wonderful pool, but little character.

Aguada Hermitage (s/d from US$295;) Originally built to house Commonwealth heads of state this is the most alluring of the three hotels.

Fort Aguada Beach Resort (s & d from US$325;) Built into the outer walls of the fort and with epic sea views.

Eating

Viva Goa (Fort Aguada Rd; mains Rs 40-110; 11am-midnight) This cheap, locals-only spot serves seafood so fresh it might just swim away.

Bomra's Restaurant (☎ 2106236; Fort Aguada Rd; mains Rs 80-170) For a change from the soggy pastas and identikit curries that many places slop onto your plate try this small new Burmese restaurant.

Stone House (☎ 2479909; Fort Aguada Rd; mains Rs 90-170) A mellow soundtrack makes you want to linger in the comfy wicker chairs while choosing from an extensive all cast menu.

Flambé (☎ 26114271; Fort Aguada Rd; mains Rs 100-150; 8am-midnight) A melange of French and Indian cuisine and a great range of kebabs make for a real change from the everyday menus of many other establishments. It's also one of the few places that's open for service all day.

Down on the beach are dozens of beach shacks serving the obligatory Western breakfasts, seafood and cold drinks.

Drinking

Riio (☎ 5649504; Fort Aguada Rd; 10.30am-4am) Formerly known as 10 Downing Street, the Riio has jazzed itself up and is now Candolim's hippest bar.

Getting There & Away

Buses run from Panaji (Rs 7, 45 minutes), Mapusa (Rs 6) or Betim to Sinquerim via the Calangute–Candolim road. There are frequent buses travelling between Sinquerim and Calangute (Rs 3). A prepaid taxi from Daoblim Airport to Candolim costs Rs 550.

CALANGUTE & BAGA

Calangute and Baga were the first beaches to attract hippies travelling overland in the '60s, then the first to secure the rampant package- and charter-tourist market in the '90s. Today they are India's 'kiss me quick' hat capital and the most popular beach resorts in the country with holidaying Indians. For many people it's just a busy, noisy and tacky Indian Costa del Sol and the thought of spending a single night here is enough to make them shudder. For others, the very fact that it is so alien to anything else in India is an attraction in itself, there's certainly no denying that the town has a certain character to it and, if you're searching for a glimpse of how the much-hyped 'New India' holidays, then here she is in all her glory.

Calangute is more of a bucket-and-spade family holiday destination while Baga, up near the mouth of the river, is popular with those wanting to drink, dance and get rowdy. For something a bit more chilled out take a room at the southern end of Calangute, towards Candolim, or among the last remaining patches of greenery on the north side of the Baga River.

Orientation & Information

Most services cluster around the main market and bus stand, from where a road leads down to the beach.

There are many currency-exchange offices scattered around the town that will change cash or travellers cheques, and most give cash advances on Visa and MasterCard. There are 24-hour ATMs accepting foreign cards at the ICICI and UTI banks in the market, and Centurion Bank, about 100m south on the main road.

There are plenty of internet cafés and many hotels offer internet access for guests. The standard charge is Rs 30 an hour. In the market area try Edson's Cyber Café; in Baga try the internet café at Angelina Beach Resort (p859).

Book Palace (☎ 2281129; 9am-7pm) Next to the football ground on the road to the beach, Book Palace has a good selection of reading material in all languages sold by a man who loves his products.

Literati Bookshop & Café (☎ 2277740; www.literati-goa.com) Tucked away down a dusty lane leading to the beach at the far southern end of Calangute is this refreshingly different bookshop. Piles of good reads are stacked onto shelves throughout the owners' home, and there are bean bags to relax on and coffee to wake up with.

MGM International Travels (☎ 2276249; 9.30am-6.30pm Mon-Sat) This is a reputable travel agency.

Sights & Activities

Water sports, including parasailing (Rs 700 to 1500), jet-skiing (Rs 900 per 15 minutes), and boat trips are offered about halfway along the beach between Calangute and Baga by Altantis Water Sports (☎ 9890047272) and H2O Tripper (☎ 2277907).

The Ayurvedic Natural Health Centre (☎ 2409275; www.healthandayurveda.com; Chogm Rd, Saligao), 5km inland, offers a range of residential packages (one week single/double US$492/874) that include accommodation and courses, in reflexology, aromatherapy, acupressure and yoga. There's also a range of herbal medicines on offer and a free consultation by a Keralan doctor.

Diving trips and courses are offered by the German-run Goa Dive Center (☎ 9822157094; goadivecenter@rediffmail.com; Tito's Rd, Baga; 4-day PADI beginners course Rs 14,500; 10am-1pm & 4-9pm).

There are two Saturday-night markets in the Baga area that are alternatives to the Anjuna Market; for details p861.

If you're after something a little more laid-back, the Kerkar Art Complex (☎ 2276017; www.subodhkerkar.com; 10am-11pm) showcases the colourful paintings and sculptures of local artist Dr Subodh Kerkar; here you'll also find a restaurant (p860), hotel (p859) and an open-air auditorium where classical Indian music concerts are held.

If you're staying awhile and want to rekindle the hippy days by not just playing a guitar around the fire but actually building one yourself (the guitar that is, not the fire), then you can learn how to do it with a tailormade course from Jungle Guitars (☎ 9823565117; www.jungleguitars.com; Rs 38,000) based on the north side of the Baga River.

It's not really a sight or activity in the standard sense but stopping by Star Magic Shop (☎ 09810483939; Tito's Rd; 9am-11pm) makes for an entertaining half-hour for the child in all of us. The magician owner will dazzle you with an array of magic that extends way beyond the average pub card trick – just don't accept the use of one of his lighters! Pay enough and he'll show you the tricks of the trade.

Tours

Day Tripper (☎ 2276726; www.daytrippergoa.com; 9am-6pm end Oct-end Apr), with its head office in south Calangute, is one of Goa's best tour agencies. It runs a wide variety of trips around Goa, including to Dudhsagar Falls (p878), and also interstate to Hampi and the Kali River (for rafting and bird-watching trips) in Karnataka.

GTDC tours (see p847) can be booked at the Calangute Residency (☎ 2276024) beside the beach.

Sleeping

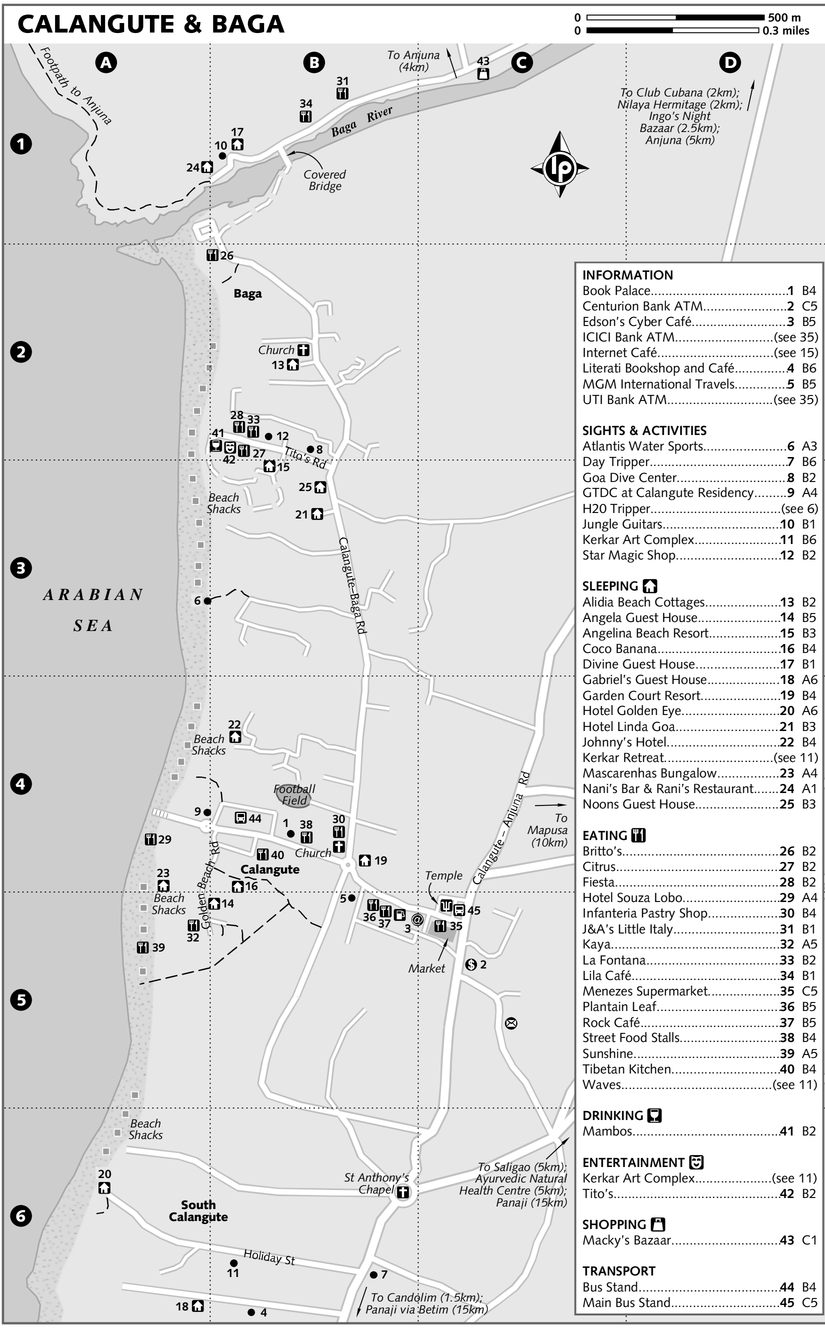
It's a solid line of hotels for about 3km along the main Calangute–Baga road and along lanes between the road and the beach, but few places actually have sea views.

CALANGUTE

Budget

South Calangute is generally quieter and more rustic than further north. In central Calangute there are several good places down Golden Beach Rd, a laneway that runs parallel to the beach.

Johnny's Hotel (☎ 2277458; johnnys_hotel@yahoo.com; d small/large Rs 400/600) Well-established backpackers hotel close to the beach. There's a variety of big, neat rooms, along with rooftop yoga (Rs 250 per hour) and massage (Rs 500 per hour) sessions.



Gabriel's Guest House (☎ 2279486; d from Rs 500;) Halfway down a laneway at the southern end of the beach, Gabriel's is a pleasant family home with crazy mosaic floors and simple, spotless rooms (one with AC) with balconies. There is a simple restaurant.

Angela Guest House (Golden Beach Rd; Rs r 550) It's hard to know which has more character – the Portuguese villa itself or the frail old gentleman who runs it. The four basic rooms are about the cheapest in town. A friendly attached restaurant offers no-fuss meals.

Garden Court Resort (☎ 2276054; r without/with AC Rs 600/1200;) In the thick of things at the roundabout at the start of the Calangute–Baga road is this lovely colonial building full of Catholic religious mementos. The rooms are large and clean and the old couple in charge are very welcoming.

Coco Banana (☎ 2279068; www.cocobananagoa.com; d Rs 1200) Walter and Marina, the Goan-Swiss couple who run this tight ship, will regale you with their life history and stories of how Goa used to be. They'll love having you to stay, but only so long as you obey the (only partially joking) signs not to have sex in the bathrooms! It's often full so book ahead, and the price rises over the Christmas period.

Midrange & Top End

Mascarenhas Bungalow (☎ 2276375, 9822989825; d Rs 800-1500) Superbly situated just a minute's walk from the beach, this earthy Portuguese house (built in 1901) is run by an easygoing mother-and-son team, Venita and Neil. Set amid whispering coconut trees, there are three unpretentious 'cottages', two of which are like apartments (each with small kitchens) – the upstairs one has a glorious sea-view terrace. Weekly/monthly rates are possible. Jerry and Gina, the pet pooches, love a good back scratch.

Hotel Golden Eye (☎ 2277308; www.hotelgoldeneye.com; d without/with AC Rs 1000/1500; ❄) If you can overlook the slightly cold and forlorn atmosphere, this place offers great-value apartment-style rooms just a few sandy footsteps from a quieter patch of beach.

Kerkar Retreat (☎ 2276017; www.subodhkerkar.com; d without/with AC Rs 2000/2500; ❄) If you liked the art then why not live with it for a while? This hotel, located inside the Kerkar Art Complex, could be really memorable but sadly it's a little bit overpriced.

BAGA

Budget

Angelina Beach Resort (☎ 2279145; angelinabeachresort@rediffmail.com; d without/with AC Rs 550/700; ❄ 💻) A large, family-run place with neatly tiled bathrooms and rooms so clean you could eat your dinner off the floor. Well cared for and very welcoming.

Noons Guest House (☎ 2282787; Calungate-Baga Rd; d Rs 600) Set back from the noisy main drag this superb-value guesthouse ran by Maurice is only open in the high season. The nine large rooms come with balconies overlooking the garden. The main house is a century-old Portuguese villa with a guardian soldier statue above the entrance. Guests' rooms are in the modern annexe round the back.

Nani's Bar & Rani's Restaurant (☎ 2276313; r Rs 800-1000) Situated on the tranquil north side of the Baga River, but just a short step from the sandy beach and within sight of all the action Nani's might well have the prime spot in Baga. As if this weren't enough the colonial house is a real gem, with simple and sufficient rooms.

Divine Guest House (☎ 2279546; www.indivinehome.com; d Rs 800, ste Rs 1200) In a beautiful, quiet riverside location this bright red-and-white building with statues of cockerels and herons all over the roof offers clean rooms that are often full. The suites are really good value.

Midrange & Top End

Alidia Beach Cottages (☎ 2279014; alidia@rediffmail.com; d from Rs 800, ste Rs 2500; ❄) Set back behind the whitewashed church, this old-fashioned house has a lost-in-the-jungle feel to it thanks to thousands of enveloping tropical flowers. It's especially good value in the low season.

Hotel Linda Goa (☎ 2276066; www.hotellindagoa.com; d without/with AC Rs 2100/2600; ❄ 🏊) A completely nondescript hotel frequented by package tours. It's overpriced but the pool (nonresidents Rs 50) is good.

Nilaya Hermitage (☎ 2276793; www.nilayahermitage.com; d incl breakfast & dinner from US$375; ❄ 💻 🏊) The last word in Goan luxury and, with only 10 rooms, the best chance you'll ever have of sleeping in the same bed as former guest Kate Moss (or, if you prefer, Richard Gere). This is one of those ever-so-exclusive places that most of us are far too ugly, wrinkled and, yes OK, poor to ever be allowed anywhere near. Rates include Dabolim Airport transfers. Please note – Kate or Richard may not actually be in the bed with you at the time.

Eating

Calangute and Baga boast some of the best dining in Goa. There are literally hundreds of small restaurants bringing the tastes of the world to the streets of Goa. For the cheapest eats check out the string of food stalls selling juices, omelettes and curries that appear each evening beside the football field in Calangute.

In the thick of Calangute is the Menezes supermarket, which is a good bet for self-caterers.

CALANGUTE

Infanteria Pastry Shop (Rs 50-100; 🕒 7.30am-midnight) Next to the Sao Joâo Batista church is this scrummy bakery with homemade cakes just like your mum makes. Also has light snacks and seafood meals. It's normally packed out for breakfast.

Plantain Leaf (mains Rs 50-100) Catering more to the domestic tourism market this is the best Indian vegetarian restaurant around, but it feels a bit like eating in a school canteen.

Kaya (Golden Beach Rd; mains Rs 50-180) The tie-dyed '60s keep rocking in this tiny hippy-flavoured Japanese restaurant. Includes such delights as fried chicken and okonomiyaki (a kind of spicy pancake), all of which are cooked up by chefs who are the real deal.

Rock Café (☎ 2282015; Almita 3; mains Rs 80-150) One of the hot spots of the moment that's very popular with expats on account of its speedy service and endless range of goodies from home. It seems to be something of a magnet to all manner of weird and wonderful characters.

Sunshine (mains Rs 80-200) A cute sand-floored, family-run beachside restaurant with chequer tablecloths and tasty seafood.

Hotel Souza Lobo (☎ 2276463; most mains Rs 80-200) The sunset views, cocktails (Rs 120 to 180) and seafood, including mussels (Rs 90) and oysters (Rs 120), are impossible to beat.

Tibetan Kitchen (☎ 2275744; mains Rs 120) If you've never tried momos (Tibetan dumplings) or Tibetan tea (it's an acquired taste) then now's your chance to sample the food of the mountain kingdom without altitude sickness. Tucked off the main beach road.

Waves (☎ 2276017; mains Rs 120-280) Surrounded by the art of the Kerkar Art Complex, this relaxed restaurant-bar has high-quality Goan and Western dishes at slightly inflated prices.

BAGA

Britto's (mains Rs 50-150; 8am-midnight) Long-running and stylish restaurant that explodes out onto the beach. There's good Goan and Continental foods, appealing cakes and desserts, and live music Monday and Thursday nights.

Lila Café (☎ 2279843; mains Rs 50-180; 8.30am-6.30pm) Run by longtime German residents of Goa, the Lila Café offers superb breakfasts (Rs 20 to 100) that some might be tempted to call the best in the state. This relaxed café ain't a bad spot for lunch either.

La Fontana (☎ 275027; Tito's Rd; 3-course menu Rs 250; 7-11pm) This place has chatty waiters and tasty food with a Euro twist. There are some less common additions to the menu such as stuffed potato skins. The cheesy music selection is truly dire.

Citrus (Tito's Rd; mains Rs 150-250; 6-11pm) Near Tito's, this trendy vegetarian restaurant is one of the best in Baga and features an exciting menu of innovative fusion food. Book a table in advance.

J&A's Little Italy (☎ 2282364; mains Rs 180-285) Sick of botched pastas and pathetic pizzas? J&A's will set your world to right with its authentic Italian cuisine which includes all those little extras, such as decent olive oil and real Parmesan, that get overlooked by more run-of-the-mill establishments.

Fiesta (☎ 2279894; Tito's Rd; mains Rs 200-295; 7pm-midnight Wed-Mon) There's a magical Balearic feel to the alfresco Fiesta, opposite the club Tito's, with its soft lighting, view to the beach and silvery silk-wrapped menus. The food is excellent, but at the end of the day you're here for the glamour as much as the taste.

Drinking & Entertainment

If you thought Calungute and Baga by day weren't what you came to India for, then just wait until the sun goes down. While Calungute, with its early-to-bed attitude, is pretty sedate after dark, Baga is something else altogether – money talks here and Baga is loud, brash, pretentious and undeniably fascinating.

Tito's (☎ 2275028; www.titosgoa.com; Tito's Rd; club cover charge men/man with a woman Rs 500/300, women free; 6pm-3am) Possibly the most famous club in India, but since it has reached middle age it has lost a lot of its coolness and, though the hard-drinking Kingfisher lads from Mumbai aren't as welcome now, it's still got a testosterone atmosphere: single women will be harassed mercilessly.

Club Cubana (☎ 2279799; www.clubcubana.net; women/men Rs free/499; 9pm-4am Fri-Sun;) Aiming for a more cosmopolitan crowd than Tito's this stylish out-of-town club likes hip-hop and R&B and has an open-air pool.

Mambos (☎ 2279895; before/after 10pm free/Rs 200) Under the same management as Tito's and right beside the beach, this is the hottest ticket of the moment with the beautiful of Bollywood. A busy night in season is the polar opposite of many people's idea of India.

Getting There & Away

There are frequent buses to Panaji (Rs 7, 45 minutes) and Mapusa (Rs 6) from the bus stand near the beach. Some services also stop at the bus stop near the temple. A taxi from Calangute or Baga to Panaji costs Rs 150 to 200 and takes about 30 minutes. A prepaid taxi from Dabolim Airport to Calangute will set you back Rs 550.

ANJUNA

Famous throughout Goa for its Wednesday flea market (see the boxed text, below), Anjuna's name still pulls in backpackers, European ravers, long-term hippies and, increasingly, midrange tourists taking advantage of comfy new hotels. Of all the more developed beaches in Goa Anjuna's is the best.

Orientation & Information

There are three distinct areas: the main crossroads and bus stand, where paths lead down to the beach; the back part of the village, where you'll find the post office and convenience stores; and the flea market area a couple of kilometres to the south.

Internet access is available at a number of places, including the Manali Guest House (right) and Villa Anjuna (p862), both Rs 40 per hour.

The Bank of Baroda (9.30am-2.30pm) gives cash advances on Visa and MasterCard. There are no ATMs; the closest are in Baga.

Travel agencies where you can make onward travel bookings, get flights confirmed and change foreign currency include MGM Travels (☎ 2274317; Anjuna-Mapusa Rd; 9.30am-6pm Mon-Sat) and Kwick Travels (☎ 2273477; Manali Guest House; 9am-9pm).

Activities

The long-established Purple Valley Yoga Centre (www.yogagoa.com; Hotel Bougainvillea) offers a variety of drop-in classes in Asthanga, hatha and pranayama yoga, as well as meditation, from November to April. It also runs longer residential courses at its retreat in Assagao, 3km east towards Margao.

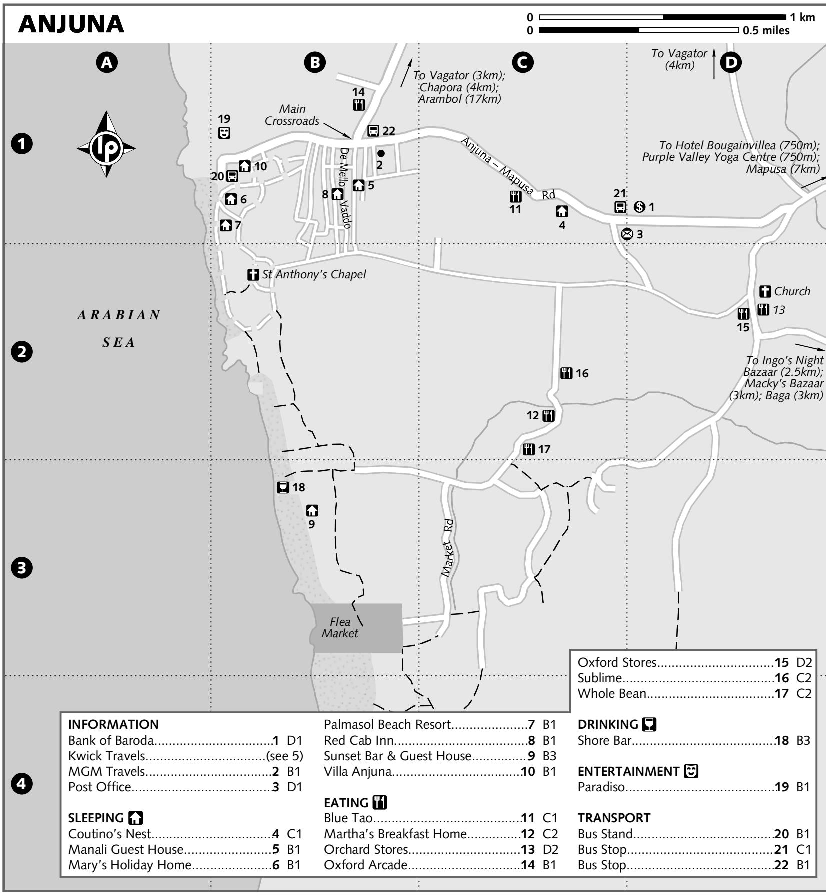
Paragliding takes place off the headland at the southern end of the beach, but usually only on market day.

Sleeping

Many restaurants and family homes have a few rooms out the back, so ask around and look for 'To Let' signs – there are plenty along the back lanes leading to the flea market. If you arrive before about 15 December you should easily be able to find a place for long-term rent.

BUDGET

Manali Guest House (☎ 2274421; manalionline@siffy.com; s/d Rs 150/200;) A classic backpackers hotel with simple, good-value rooms (often full), a bookshop and a travel agency. The disadvantage is the distance form the beach.



Coutino's Nest (☎ 2274386; shaldon_555@yahoo.co.in; d Rs 300;) Jungle green with a garden to match, this place features six clean rooms and a pleasant rooftop restaurant hidden well away from the bustle.

THE GOA MARKET EXPERIENCE

The ever-expanding Wednesday flea market at Anjuna is not just a place to browse for souvenirs – it's an essential part of the Goa experience! The famous market is a wonderful blend of Tibetan and Kashmiri traders, colourful Gujarati and Lamani tribal women, blissed-out hippies and travellers from all over the world. Whatever you need, from a used paperback novel to a tattoo you'll find it here – along with an endless jumble of stalls selling jewellery, carvings, T-shirts, sarongs, chillums and spices. Bargain hard to get a reasonable deal as the traders are wise to unsavvy tourists and start high with their prices.

There's lots of good Indian and Western food, as well as a couple of bars, and when it all gets too much you can wander down to the beach. The best time to visit is early morning (it starts about 8am) or late afternoon (from about 4pm); the latter is good if you plan to stay on for the sunset and party at the Shore Bar (p863).

Anjuna's market can be a bit overwhelming and very hot. For something more relaxing try one of the Saturday-night markets near Baga, where the emphasis is as much on entertainment and food stalls as it is on the usual collection of handicraft, jewellery and clothing stalls. Ingo's Night Bazaar, on Arpora Hill, halfway between Baga and Anjuna, is well organised and has a good mix of Indian and Western stalls. Macky's Bazaar, on the Baga River, is a smaller Goan-run affair. Both run from around 6pm to midnight.

Red Cab Inn (☎ 2274427; redcabinn@rediffmail.com; De Mello Vaddo; d Rs 400-700) It's a bit gloomy, but the split level mezzanine rooms offer top value for your rupees if travelling in a family group. Meanwhile couples wishing to start a family might find the romantic domed room studded with a galaxy of blue lights helpful!

Sunset Bar & Guesthouse (☎ 2273917; d Rs 500) The rooms here are nothing special, but the location certainly is. Well away from the noise of town and sitting right on the most relaxing of Goa's major tourist beaches, this is the perfect place for beach bums.

Mary's Holiday Home (☎ 5613118; junjim@sify.com; d Rs 600) Standing proudly on the cliffs above the sea this is an excellent and therefore frequently full backpackers hotel with helpful management who know everyone and everything.

Palmasol Beach Resort (☎ 273258; d Rs 600) Some of the tidiest budget rooms in town with friendly owners and plenty of opportunities to kick back in a hammock.

MIDRANGE & TOP END

Villa Anjuna (☎ 2273443; www.anjunavilla.com; d Rs 650-1000; ❄ 💻 🏊) In a prime location on the main road to the beach is this friendly hotel which has comfortable rooms arranged around a pool (open to nonguests for Rs 200). One of the better-value midrange hotels, it's often full.

Hotel Bougainvillea (☎ 273270; granpas@hotmail.com; d/ste incl breakfast & tax from Rs 1400/1800; ) Also known as Granpa's Inn, this could be described as a 'budget heritage hotel' and it certainly offers value for money. An old-fashioned hotel with comfortable rooms, billiard tables in the bar and hidden tables for apéritifs in the garden. Home of the Purple Valley Yoga Centre (p861).

Eating

Anjuna has some great places to eat that range from the cheap and cheerful beach shacks at the southern end (near the flea-market site) to a handful of seafood restaurants overlooking the beach, and, best of all, some refreshingly unusual places back in the village.

Whole Bean (☎ 273952; Rs 50-100) Simple, tasty health-food café that focuses on tofu-based meals.

Martha's Breakfast Home (breakfast Rs 50-120) This is a great place to start the day, with delicious pancakes, omelettes, fresh bread and various juices, served in a pleasant, shady garden or on the veranda. There are also rooms to rent.

Blue Tao (mains Rs 60-160) Organic delights emerge from the spick-and-span kitchen of a restaurant that's highly regarded by locals.

Sublime (☎ 982248405; mains Rs 150) One of the most appropriately named restaurants in Anjuna; the food in this newly opened garden restaurant is prepared by a New York–trained chef, Chris, and includes such rare finds as blue-cheese burgers.

The retail needs of the expat community are served by Oxford Stores and Orchard Stores, opposite each other back in the village, and the Oxford Arcade, closer to the beach. Here you can get everything from a loaf of bread to Vegemite and imported cheese.

Drinking & Entertainment

Shore Bar (7.30am-midnight) Not as popular as it once was, but market day brings in the crowds and spectacular sunsets still work their magic.

Paradiso (men/women from Rs 200/free); 10pm-4am Wed, Fri & Sat) The stunning sea views go unnoticed in this lurid temple to trance, which in season attracts all the top DJs, including old-timer Goa Gil.

Getting There & Away

There are buses every half-hour or so from Mapusa to Anjuna (Rs 6). They park at the end of the road to the beach and continue on to Vagator and Chapora. Some go up to Arambol. The two other bus stops inland from the beach are pick-up and drop-off points. Plenty of motorcycle taxis gather at the main crossroads and you can also hire scooters and motorcycles easily from here.

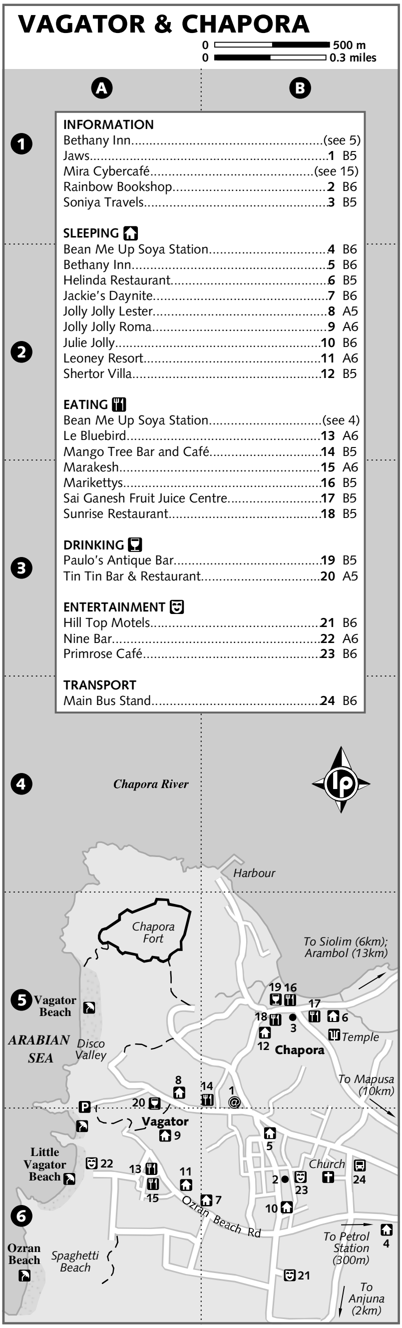
VAGATOR & CHAPORA

A series of rusty cliffs and headlands bursting out of thickets of greenery help to give Vagator and charming Chapora one of the prettiest settings on the north Goan coast. It's this back drop, rather than the beaches (which are largely forgettable) that have made these two little villages the centre for the wild, outdoor parties that made Goa (in)famous. Large contingents of long-stay backpackers and party people religiously set up camp here for months on end every season.

Information

There are PCO/STD/ISD places in the main street of Chapora. Soniya Travels (☎ 2273344; Chapora; 9am-11pm) is a good agency for transport bookings, foreign exchange and internet access (Rs 50 per hour).

In Vagator, the Rainbow Bookshop (9am-2am), opposite Primrose Café, stocks a good range of second-hand and new books and has internet access. Web access is available at several places; check out Jaws, Mira Cybercafé and Bethany Inn, all open from around 9am to midnight daily and charging Rs 50 per hour.



Sights

On the rocky headland separating Vagator from Chapora sits a ruined Portuguese fort dating from 1617. Its worth climbing up here

EL SHADDAI

Lounging around on Goa's beaches, it's easy to forget that the state shares most of India's social problems. The charitable trust El Shaddai (☎ 226650; www.elshaddaigoa.com; 2nd fl, St Anthony Apartments, Mapusa Clinic Rd, Mapusa) has established five homes – three in Assagao, between Vagator and Mapusa, and two in Saligao – where local children live and receive schooling. It also runs a night shelter in Panaji (Panjim).

You can visit the homes and the children daily between 4pm and 6pm. Donations of spare clothing or cash are welcome.

(access is easiest from the Vagator side) for the coastal views.

Sleeping

If you're planning to stay long term it's possible to find a basic room (with shared bathroom) in a private house for around Rs 50 per night; ask around at the budget hotels for recommendations.

VAGATOR

Jolly Jolly Lester (☎ 2273620; www.hoteljollygoa.com; s/d Rs 300/400, d with AC Rs 800;) Jolly nice rooms are on offer at this tongue-twisting family-run backpacker hotel. The superclean rooms come in a weird array of shapes and sizes, but demand is always heavy. The same family run the equally good and similarly priced Jolly Jolly Roma (☎ 2273001), along the path leading to Little Vagator, and the Julie Jolly (☎ 2273386), near the Primrose Café.

Jackie's Daynite (☎ 2274320; melfordsouza@hotmail.com; Ozran Beach Rd; r Rs 350, cottages Rs 650) Day and night this backpackers hotel offers consistently tidy rooms set around a small garden, promising a quiet retreat from the chaos of the beach.

Bean Me Up Soya Station (☎ 2273479; d with shared/private bathroom Rs 450/650) Upmarket hippies will find the groovy rooms at this exceptionally well-run hotel perfectly blissful, man. It's certainly the best midrange hotel in Vagator and its acclaimed restaurant (opposite), won't disappoint either.

Bethany Inn (☎ 2273731; www.bethanyinn.com; d from Rs 600, ste with AC Rs 2000;) The basic rooms aren't earth-shatteringly exciting but the swish AC rooms, in a separate daffodil-yellow building set back from the road, are pretty good. They'll happily negotiate the price on slow days. There's also a travel agency on site.

Leoney Resort (☎ 2273634; fax 2274914; Ozran Beach Rd; d/cottages Rs 1700/2500;) This resort complex has less personality than a dead dab, but if dead dabs are your thing then the rooms here actually offer some of Vagator's best bang for your buck. The pool (Rs 200 nonresidents) is in tip-top shape. They don't accept charter groups or hippies – though god knows how they class who's a hippy and who isn't.

CHAPORA

Lovely Chapora is generally more popular with long-staying hardcore hippies and tranceheads than Vagator and only has a couple of official hotels, both of which are highly basic.

Helinda Restaurant (☎ 2274345; s/d from Rs 250/350) Clean and relaxed, Helinda has the best rooms in Chapora and is often full.

Shertor Villa (☎ 9822158154; d from Rs 350) Down a quiet side street, the 20 plain rooms here are presided over by a friendly guy who can normally be found over the road at the Noble Nest restaurant.

Eating

VAGATOR

The area's best eating places are situated in Vagator.

Mango Tree Bar & Café (mains Rs 70-120) The food at this flavour-of-the-month restaurant covers all corners of the culinary world and the breakfasts are quickly gaining legendary status. Has regular film screenings but be warned – some of these are near enough pornographic!

Bean Me Up Soya Station (☎ 2273479; main Rs 120-150) On the road towards the Anjuna petrol station, everyone's green and beautifully in touch with nature at this bizarrely named, but very good, vegetarian restaurant. Hosts frequent events that range from gigs to magic shows.

Marrakesh (mains Rs 120-160) Tajines, couscous and other Saharan splendours in Goa's only Moroccan restaurant.

Le Bluebird (☎ 2273695; mains Rs 150-300) Gallic culinary know-how under the palms of Goa make this one of Vagator's finest dining experiences. All the French favourites are here, even bottles of heart-warming Bordeaux.

CHAPORA

There are several small restaurants along the main street of Chapora, including Sunrise Restaurant (mains Rs 40-80), which does a decent breakfast and lunch and Marikettys (Rs 100; 6pm-2am), where a Greek expat makes kebabs that you certainly don't need to be stumbling drunk out of a club to enjoy. A local institution is the Sai Ganesh Fruit Juice Centre (Rs 15-30), which could well have Goa's best juices and lassis.

Drinking & Entertainment

Vagator is the centre of Goa's dying party scene. If you're coming here expecting the massive full-moon pilgrimages that brought thousands of the faithful to Vagator's Disco Valley back in the '90s heyday then you're going to be disappointed. Since those times things have become increasingly staid, partially due to a general slump in the dance-music market but, more importantly, it's thanks to a government crackdown on the drugs scene and a ban on amplified music after 10pm. However, hardcore, mainly Israeli, fans are still partying here at more organised venues such as the legendary, open-air, Nine Bar, overlooking Little Vagator Beach, where trance and house music plays to a packed floor until 10pm. Depending on restrictions, the party then moves up to Primrose Café, towards the back of Vagator village, where music continues till 2am or 3am under a canopy of psychedelically painted trees.

Hill Top Motels is another venue with a huge garden of rainbow coloured palms that occasionally hosts outdoor parties past the 10pm music restrictions.

If incessant techno beats aren't your thing then you might get lucky at the Tin Tin Bar & Restaurant (9am-midnight) in Vagator, which has occasional live music and if not, then at least there's a pool table. Paulo's Antique Bar (8.30am-midnight) in Chapora is a tiny, brightly painted local bar with a cracking atmosphere and cold beers.

Getting There & Away

Fairly frequent buses run to both Chapora and Vagator from Mapusa (Rs 12) throughout the

GOA

INTERNATIONAL ANIMAL RESCUE

The International Animal Rescue (IAR; ☎ 2268328; iargoa@satyam.net.in; Madungo Vaddo, Assagoa), based near Vagator, does a sterling job tending to the army of stray cats, dogs, cows and other animals in Goa. They are involved in a state-wide sterilisation and rabies immunisation programme and also treat sick and injured animals of all descriptions. If you find a sick or injured animal or befriend a stray cat, dog or any other furry, feathered or scaly friend then take it to them so it can be properly cared for. They are in constant need of financial and physical assistance (dog walkers etc), but even just going on one of the guided tours (11am and 3.30pm) of their centre helps spread the message.

day. Many of these go via Anjuna. The bus stand is near the road junction in Chapora village. Most people hire a motorcycle to get around; inquire at hotels and restaurants.

CHAPORA TO ARAMBOL

The Chapora River, spanned by the Siolim Bridge, is a magical ribbon dividing the mainly devastated beaches of charter and techno Goa from the gorgeous greens and tropical blues of a more undisturbed Goa of old to the north.

Public buses in this region of Goa are few and far between; to fully explore it you'd be advised to rent your own transport, preferably a scooter or motorbike.

Morjim & Asvem

Crossing the bridge to Chopdem, you can head east to Morjim Beach, an exposed strip of empty sand with a handful of low-key beach shacks at the southern end and several places to stay at the northern end. Rare olive ridley turtles nest at the southern end of Morjim Beach from September to February, so this is a protected area, which, in theory at least, means no development and no rubbish. Morjim is one of the very few beaches where sitting on the sand doesn't attract hordes of hawkers, dogs and onlookers, but the water does suffer from a bit of river run-off pollution and cannot ever be described as crystal clear.

A short walk down the beach from Montego Bay (see below) is the Goan Café (☎ 2244394; anthonylobo2015@yahoo.co.uk; huts/tree houses Rs 600/1000). The three brothers who run this beachside property might well be the friendliest and most helpful hotel owners in Goa! The rooms are basic, but for sheer romance the tree houses are impossible to beat. There's also a great restaurant and they can sort out taxi and bike hire.

Montego Bay (☎ 2244222; www.montegobaygoa.com; tent/hut/cottage with AC Rs 1650/1650/3000;) is for the camper who hates camping: the luxurious 'tents' found here come complete with bathrooms and are nothing like those you used at Scout camp. The huts and cottages are equally good. The restaurant, where you can relax in sunken lounge pits or a hammock, is overpriced.

For a change of scenery, the food at Britto's (☎ 2244245), also at the northern end of the beach, is worthy of praise.

our pick Siolim House (☎ 2272138; www.siolimhouse.com; standard/superior d incl breakfast, dinner & tax Rs 6000/7000;) is tucked away in the leafy lanes between Chapora and Morjim, and it's a truly special place to stay. Its seven large rooms are all individually designed to an exacting standard and contain more antiques than the British Museum. The service is of a calibre appropriate to such a grand old building and the pool and gardens perfectly maintained. Yes, it's expensive, but it sits near the top of the best hotels in Goa.

Mandrem

The very fact that Mandrem has been ignored for so long is probably the reason why, the moment you step out onto its sands, a tingle will roll down your spine and you'll finally feel as if you've arrived in the Goa of tourist brochure clichés. For the moment there is little to mar the green backdrop and anyone brave enough to step out of the travellers circuit is going to be handsomely rewarded with the finest beach in Goa. Of the few groups of beach shacks, the Riva Resorts (☎ 2247088; www.rivaresorts.com; huts/cottages Rs 1000/1600), formerly known as Dunes, is the largest and most comfortable. It's popular with Indian tourists in the know.

On the bank of the Mandrem River, and with much more character, is the River Cat Villa (☎ 2247928; villarivercat@hotmail.com; d from Rs 2400), which is rammed full of sculptures and paintings and feels like an artists retreat. The rooms are beautifully maintained and many have large balconies overlooking the trees. It's one of the most interesting guesthouses north of Calangute and there's a good restaurant serving Continental dishes, too.

ARAMBOL (HARMAL)

Shoved aside by the consumer age, the hippy '60s needed somewhere to hide; San Francisco wouldn't do, Carnaby Street couldn't cope and the Marrakesh Express was suddenly cancelled in a cost-saving exercise. Eventually reaching Arambol's sickle of sand and rash of beautiful, rocky bays the '60s knew it had finally found its never-never land. Ever since then travellers, attracted by the hippy atmosphere, have been drifting up to this blissed-out corner of Goa, setting up camp and, in some cases, never leaving again. In turn, a mushrooming (probably magic) industry of low-key accommodation and facilities has sprung up to cater to these visitors, and in the high season the beach and the road leading down to it gets pretty crowded. For the moment the flower-power guys and girls hold the upper hand, but with all the beaches to the south full up, Arambol is starting to turn developers' hands sweaty with excitement and it can't be long until the sweet '60s are forced off in search of the next Kathmandu.

GOA

Information

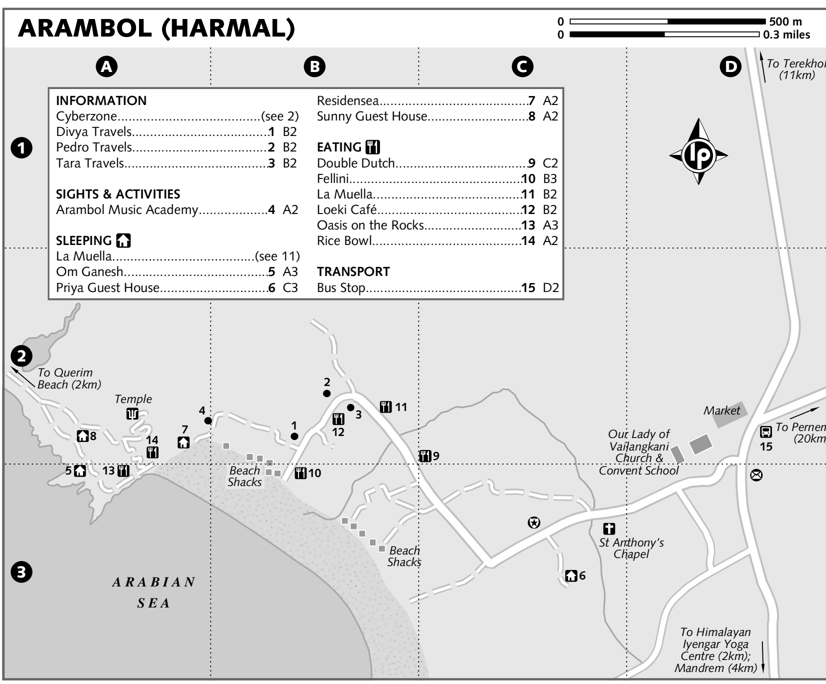
Arambol village has dozens of travel agencies (handling foreign exchange), including Divya Travels, Pedro Travels and Tara Travels. Internet access is available from several places, such as the reliable Cyberzone, and motorbike hire and other services are also widely available. Most of this is concentrated on the road leading to the northern end of the beach. A word of warning: theft is a big problem in the high season; most of the cheaper beach shacks have minimal security and leaving bags unguarded on the beach is just asking for trouble.

Activities

From November to March it's possible to take boat trips to go fishing and dolphin spotting – operators will find you as you hang out on the beach. So-called extreme sports have taken off in a big way in Arambol with plenty of people offering paragliding and kite-surfing lessons.

Courses

About 2km south of Arambol is the Himalayan Iyengar Yoga Centre (www.hiyogacentre.com; 5-day course Rs 1800), which runs hatha yoga courses on the beach between November and March. This is the winter centre of the Dharamsala school.



Arambol Music Academy (☎ 9326131795) offers lessons in classical Indian singing and tabla playing.

Sleeping

Priya Guest House (☎ 2292661; d with shared/private bathroom Rs 200/250) Basic and a fair hike from the action, but it's gained a devoted fan club of repeat visitors. The attached restaurant is something of a social centre.

Residensea (☎ 2292413; pkresidensea_37@hotmail.com; huts Rs 350) Large bamboo huts with shared bathrooms arranged around a simple restaurant with a perfect beachfront location.

La Muella (☎ 9822486314; d Rs 600) New Israeli-run hotel and restaurant venture with six dingy rooms that are nevertheless the flavour of the month, no doubt thanks to the yoga classes held up on the roof. Rates are open to negation out of season.

The prime accommodation is the jumble of cliffside huts (d small/large Rs 450/600) on the next bay to the north of the main beach. Many remain very basic, but an increasing number now have private bathrooms and running water, and all have breathtaking sea views. Outside high season you can normally negotiate cheaper rates, especially for long stays. Two of the better places are the Om Ganesh (☎ 2297675) and Sunny Guest House (☎ 2297602) with the Sunny having the edge.

Eating

There's a string of shacks lining the main beach, serving seafood and beer and offering similar menus and prices. Otherwise most places to eat (and drink) are on the busy lane leading down to the beach. All are open from breakfast until around 11pm.

Rice Bowl (mains Rs 30-100) It could equally be called Noodle Bowl or in fact any other kind of bowl, because anything they choose to put in their bowls turns out tasty. It has a prime location, legions of followers and a pool table.

Loeki Café (mains Rs 40-120) This very relaxed place is a big name on the town's hippy circuit and dishes up all the usual Goan favourites. Frequent jam nights.

Fellini (mains Rs 60-150) Fighting with the Rice Bowl for top-dog status, this Italian restaurant serves a memorable pizza and pastas that aren't lacking either.

La Muella (mains Rs 80-150) The new star of the Arambol restaurant scene, with healthy food cooked to delicious perfection. Vanilla and cinnamon shakes, homemade pastas, quiches and authentic hummus made by a real Middle Eastern.

Double Dutch (mains Rs 130) OK, so it doesn't have the sea views of some of the other places, but it does have mouth-watering steaks and apple pies that you simply won't be able to resist.

Oasis on the Rocks (mains Rs 60-250) A seafood specialist with wonderful views over your dinner's former watery home. It's a good one for couples looking for somewhere to get romantic.

Getting There & Away

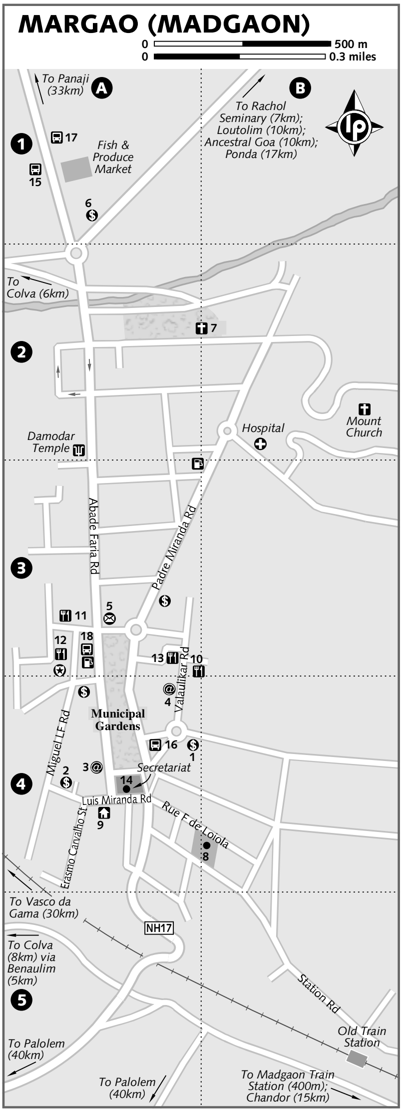
Buses from Mapusa stop on the main road at Arambol (Rs 12), where there's a church, a school and a few shops. From here, follow the road about 1.5km through the village to get to the main road down to the beach.

TEREKHOL (TIRACOL) FORT

How many times in your life have you woken up in a fairy-tale castle overlooking the Arabian Sea? Well at Terekhol, the northernmost outpost of Goa, you finally have that chance.

our pick Fort Tiracol Heritage Hotel (☎ 02366-227631; nilaya@sancharnet.in; d/suite incl breakfast & dinner Rs 5500/7500) has seven stylish rooms that come with antique shields on the bedroom walls, studded doors to prevent elephant charges, a whitewashed chapel with a coat of colourful flowers and views that make you want to propose to whoever your with (so don't take your sister). Superb Goan dinners and Continental breakfasts are included in the price. Book ahead. Between 11am and 5pm nonguests can stop by for lunch or a drink.

A trip to the fort makes a good outing on a motorcycle. The winding 11.5km road from Arambol passes through villages and rice paddies and rises up to provide good views over the countryside and Terekhol River. You can also stop for a swim on near-deserted Querim Beach, though even this remote outpost suffers from the curse of uncaring visitors dropping rubbish, a little river-induced water pollution and a surfeit of drug dealers.



There are occasional buses from Mapusa to Querim (Rs 14, 1¾ hours), on the south bank of the river, opposite Terekhol, and also between Arambol and Querim (Rs 8, 30 minutes), but without your own transport you'll have to walk a couple of kilometres to reach the fort. The ferry between Querim and Terekhol runs every hour in each direction from 6.15am to 9.45pm, but the service is suspended for three hours at low tide. The trip takes five minutes, is free for pedestrians and Rs 4 for a car or motorbike.

SOUTH GOA

MARGAO (MADGAON)

pop 94,400

The capital of Salcete province, Margao (also known as Madgaon) is the main population centre of south Goa and is probably the busiest town in the state. If you've just arrived from the cities of 'real' India then the first thing that will strike you is how clean and tidy Margao is. Even though there is little to see or

Information

Visa or MasterCard cash advances are available at the Bank of Baroda. HDFC Bank has a 24-hour ATM accepting international cards on the ground floor of the Caro Centre; Centurion Bank has an ATM just off Luis Miranda Rd; and UTI Bank has an ATM near the roundabout just south of the main bus stand.

Cyberlink (Caro Centre, Abade Faria Rd; per hr Rs 25; 8.30am-7pm Mon-Sat) Internet access.

GTDC tourist office (☎ 2715204; Margao Residency; 9.30am-1.15pm & 2-5.45pm Mon-Fri) At the south end of the Municipal Gardens and not very helpful.

Hindnet (Valaulikar Rd; per hr Rs 20; 8.30am-11pm) Internet access, just east of the municipal gardens.

Main post office (9am-1.30pm & 2-4pm) On the north side of the municipal gardens.

Sights

Long-term visitors will want to visit Margao for its markets – the covered market in the town's centre is one of the largest and most raucous in Goa, and there's a fish and produce market in a vast complex near the Kadamba bus stand. The richly decorated Church of the Holy Spirit is worth a look and can be positively exciting when a big service is taking place.

Sleeping

With the beaches of Colva and Benaulim less than 10km away there's no pressing reason to stay in Margao.

Margao Residency (☎ 2715528; Luis Miranda Rd; s/d Rs 550/650, d with AC Rs 780;) This GTDC hotel is centrally positioned and has large clean rooms with little balconies.

Eating

Tato (Apna Bazaar Complex, Valualikar Rd; dosas from Rs 14, mains Rs 70; ⌚ Mon-Sat) This is a favourite lunch spot with workers from the nearby businesses and it also attracts many passing backpackers.

Banjara (☎ 3222000; D'Souza Chambers, Valaulikar Rd; mains Rs 50-110) This dark and cool place with polar AC is Margao's best North Indian restaurant.

Café Coffee Day (Vasaith Arcade; Rs 50-150; ⌚ 9am-midnight;) This snack bar–coffee shop chain is ideal for homesick Westerners, with lots of healthy (and some decidedly less healthy) goodies that are a struggle to find out in the sticks. Popular with local students.

Raissa'a Herbs & Spices (☎ 2731699; Priyadarshini Apartments, Rafael Pereira Rd; mains Rs 80-150) One of Margao's most highly regarded restaurants with an excellent selection of Chinese and Indian staples as well as some less common items such as delicious Afghani kebabs.

Getting There & Around

BUS

All local buses operate from the busy Kadamba bus stand 2km north of the town centre, but many also stop at the old bus stand opposite the municipal gardens. Catch buses to Colva, Benaulim and Palolem from Kadamba or from the bus stop on the east side of the municipal gardens.

There are hourly buses from both bus stops to Colva from around 7am to 7pm (Rs 7, 20 minutes). Some go via Benaulim. Buses to Panaji run from the Kadamba bus stand every 15 minutes (ordinary/express Rs 20/25, one hour). There are around eight buses a day direct to Palolem (Rs 30, one hour) and many others heading from either bus stand south to Karwar (Rs 65), stopping in nearby Chaudi. There are also local buses to Vasco de Gama (for the airport), Ponda, Chandor and Rachol.

Services to Mumbai (semideluxe/deluxe Rs 500/700, 14 hours), Bengaluru (Rs 450, 14 hours) and Pune (Rs 400, 10 hours) can be booked at the advance reservation office in the Secretariat Building. Long-distance government buses leave form the Kadamba bus stand. For most interstate trips it's best to use a long-distance private bus. There are private booking offices clustered near the Margao Residency on Luis Miranda Rd and costs are the same or marginally higher than the more expensive government buses. To reach Hampi go first to Hubli (Rs 75), where you can find buses direct to Hampi.

TAXI

Taxis (approximately Rs 100), autorickshaws (Rs 80) and motorcycle taxis (Rs 50, backpacks fine) to Colva or Benaulim gather around the municipal gardens and at the Kadamba bus stand.

TRAIN

Margao's train station, Madgaon, is about 1.5km southeast of the town centre; vehicle access is via the road south of the train line but if you're walking there you can cross the tracks at the footbridge past the old station. There's a reservation hall (☎ 2721841) on the 2nd floor of the main building, a tourist information counter (☎ 2702298) and retiring rooms. See p841 for details of trains running from Margao to Mumbai.

Taxis between the train and bus stations cost Rs 70. There's a prepaid taxi booth out front (Rs 150 to Colva, Rs 500 to Panaji), as well as autorickshaws and motorcycle taxis.

CHANDOR

The lush village of Chandor, 15km east of Margao, is one of the best respites from the beach in south Goa. Here, more than anywhere else in the state, the opulent lifestyle of Goa's former Portuguese overlords is visible in a couple of decaying colonial mansions.

Braganza House takes up one whole side of Chandor village square and dates back to the 17th century. It's now divided into east and west wings, which stretch outwards from a common front entrance. Ongoing restoration is slowly taking place but, wandering through the ballrooms with their Italian marble floors, Belgian glass chandeliers and carved rosewood furniture, it's hard not to feel a little sad for the lost world they represent.

The east wing (☎ 2784227; ⌚ 10am-5pm) is owned by the Pereira-Braganza family, and includes a small family chapel containing a carefully hidden fingernail of St Francis Xavier. This side of the house shows its age much more than the other side and the old caretaker who shows you around seems almost on the point of tears when he passes through the ballroom with its sagging ceiling and damaged chandeliers. The old family photos, cheap souvenirs from friends abroad and tacky knick-knacks all add to an overall sense of melancholy.

The west wing (☎ 2784201; ⌚ 10am-5pm) belonging to the Menezes-Braganza family has clearly had more money invested in its restoration and is crammed with beautiful furniture and a whole museum's worth of Chinese porcelain. The two large rooms behind the entrance halls contain the largest private library in Goa. The elderly and formidable Mrs Menezes-Braganza lives here alone and, once she's waved her maids aside, will act as your guide. She doesn't take nonsense gladly, but is an entertaining host who represents the last of the old Goan-Portuguese families. In general there appears to be a lack of concern about these old houses and, without urgently needed funds for their restoration, you can only wonder what will become of them once the current custodians are gone.

Both homes are open daily, but you may want to call ahead to ensure the owners will be around. There is no official entry fee, but the owners rely on contributions for maintenance and restoration – Rs 100 to 200 per house is reasonable.

A kilometre east past the church is the Fernandes House (☎ 2784245; ⌚ 10am-5pm Mon-Sat). It's smaller and less grand than the Braganza House, but older and with an interesting history. The original Indian house here dates back more than 500 years, while the Portuguese section was tacked on by the Fernandes family in 1821. The secret basement hideaway, full of gun holes and with an escape tunnel to the river, was used by the family to flee attackers.

South of Chandor, in the village of Quepem, the immaculately renovated Palacio do Deao (☎ 2664029; www.palaciododeao.com; ⌚ 10am-6pm Mon-Sat) has recently opened to visitors. The beautiful gardens are as much an attraction as the 200-year-old mansion. Evening meals are available with advance notice (mains Rs 250).

The best way to reach Chandor is by taxi from Margao (around Rs 150 round trip) or by motorcycle.

LOUTOLIM

Further relics of a bygone age can be found in the unhurried village of Loutolim, 10km northeast of Margao. There are a number of impressive Portuguese mansions here but the only one officially open to the public is the 250-year-old Casa Arajao Alvarez (admission Rs 100; ⌚ 9am-6.30pm), though it lacks much of the atmosphere of the houses of Chandor. It's also possible to visit the wonderful Figueiredo House (☎ 2777028) if you call ahead. This house, and its sister owners, were memorably featured in William Dalrymple's brilliant book, The Age of Kali, where, over tea and mango juice, Mrs Donna Georgina Figueiredo gets all uppity about the 'botheration' that was the Indian 'invasion' of Goa in 1961. It's fascinating reading and a visit to this house makes for an interesting hour or so. It's also possible to stay in one of the dark rooms (doubles from Rs 2500). Anywhere else such a room would be overpriced but here the experience is worth every rupee. Traditional Goan meals are also available if you book in advance.

Also in the village, and set up purely for tourists, Ancestral Goa (☎ 2777034; admission Rs 20; ⌚ 9am-6.30pm) is a re-creation of Goan village life under the Portuguese a century ago.

Loutolim is best visited by motorcycle or taxi (around Rs 120 round trip) from Margao.

BOGMALO & AROSSIM

Hidden between the airport and a sprawl of industry the forgotten village of Bogmalo, 4km from the airport, has a pleasant, sandy cove dominated by the ugly five-star Bogmalo Beach Resort. Aside from the beach, which is popular with Indian tourists looking for a quiet break, there isn't a great deal to do here. Goa Diving (☎ 2555117; www.goadiving.com) is a reputable dive school that offers PADI courses. Guided dives start at Rs 1430, courses at Rs 15,000.

Regular buses run between Bogmalo and Vasco da Gama (Rs 5), from where you can pick up buses to Margao and Panaji.

Accommodation in Bogmalo is more expensive than elsewhere in Goa.

Friendly, family-run William's Inn (☎ 2538004; d from Rs 900) has bright yellow rooms that are perfectly clean and represent great value for money. Auntie is certain to fuss over you.

Saritas Guest House (☎ 2538965; www.saritasguesthouse.com; Rs 900) has a great seaside location but it comes second best to Williams Inn.

Coconut Creek (☎ 2538090; joets@sancharnet.in; cottages incl breakfast from Rs 9500; ❄ 💻 🏊) is a stylish resort set back from the beach in the coconut groves with modern, minimalist rooms and lots of bamboo furniture. The swimming pool is hard to resist and there's a good restaurant serving Italian and Goan cuisine. Prices drop considerably out of season.

Around the headland, beyond the eyesore petrochemical plant, is Arossim village and beach. Here you'll find the stylish Park Hyatt Goa Resort & Spa (☎ 2721234; www.goa.park.hyatt.com; d from US$200;). The overriding feature of this sterile top-end resort is the maze of interconnecting pools. Prices vary by the day depending on availability but US$200 should be seen as a ball-park high-season figure.

The best places to eat are John Seagull, where great views come with equally great seafood or, back in the village, Claudis Corner, which is recommended by all the locals.

COLVA & BENAULIM

pop 10,200

It wasn't that long ago that Colva was nothing more than a peaceful little fishing village that attracted a handful of hippies bored of the sex, drugs and rock-and-roll lifestyle of Calangute. However, where hippies go, charter flights follow and in just the blinking of a stoned hippie's eye package tourism had changed paradise forever. Fortunately, the scale of development here is nowhere near that of Calangute – you can still see the fish being brought ashore in the morning.

Colva is popular with Indian families and a middle-aged European crowd, while Benaulim, 2km south, is still a very peaceful village with most of the accommodation in family guesthouses. It's a good place to rent long-term if you're after a relaxing Goan experience, but in both places the beaches are far from immaculate.

Bikes can be hired near the bus stand in Colva and on the beach in Benaulim. With fewer people than the northern beaches and quiet back lanes, occasional robberies do occur in Benaulim. Avoid walking from the beach alone at night.

GOA

Information

There are branches of the Bank of Baroda both in Colva (next to the church, on Colva Beach Rd) and Benaulim, near the intersection of Colva and Vasvaddo Beach Rds. You'll find several travel agencies in both Colva and Benaulim that will change cash and travellers cheques and give cash advances on Visa and MasterCard. There's a Centurion Bank ATM accepting foreign cards on the main road in Colva, near Club Margarita.

Amin Crystal Point by the main junction in Benaulim rents out bikes and scooters.
GK Tourist Centre (☎ 2771221; per hr Rs 40; 9am-10pm) In Benaulim. Internet access and money exchange.
Hello Mae Communication (Colva Beach Rd; per hr Rs 40; 8am-10pm) Internet access.
Ida Online (Colva Beach Rd; 10am-1am) Internet access. Above Baskin Robbins.
Meeting Point Travel (☎ 2788626; Colva Beach Rd; 9am-10pm) Changes cash and travellers cheques.

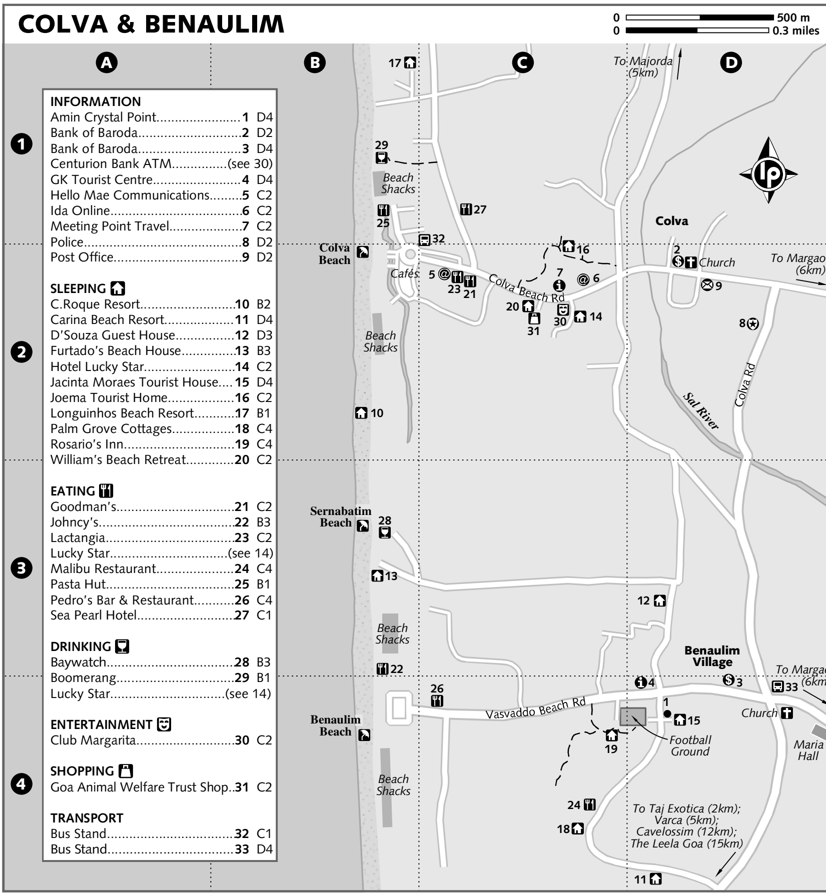
Activities

Water sports and dolphin tours have arrived at Colva, with parasailing and jet-skiing available in the high season for around Rs 500 per person and dolphin tours for around Rs 300. Just daring to pause on the beach for a second should guarantee touts approaching you with offers of tours. Be warned – we have received some serious complaints, involving intimadation, about some of the touts selling dolphin tours on the seafront.

Sleeping

It's easy to rent houses long-term in Colva, particularly if you arrive early in the season (before December), and Benaulim is probably the best place in Goa for a long-term stay – just ask around in the restaurants and shops. Most houses are a 20-minute walk from the beach.

COLVA



Budget

Joema Tourist Home (☎ 2888782; d Rs 350) One of the few guesthouses with any character, this quiet, flower-scented family home on a dusty side street has four clean, basic but superb-value rooms. The candle-lit garden café is very enjoyable. There are several similar places nearby.

Hotel Lucky Star (☎ 2788071; d Rs 400) A tightly run ship with brightly painted cottages and clean beachfront rooms make this an excellent choice. The attached restaurant (p874) is as good as the rooms.

Midrange

William's Beach Retreat (☎ 2788153; www.goagetaway.com; Colva Beach Rd; d without/with AC Rs from 1800/2500;) The AC rooms look like something from a '70s porn film and, perhaps because of this, it's a popular hotel with charter groups. The pool, massage centre, restaurant and even the rooms aren't actually bad but it might not be quite how your travel agent described it.

Longuinhos Beach Resort (☎ 2788068; www.longuinhos.net; s/d with AC Rs 2000/2400; ❄ 🏊) At the north end of the beach, this upmarket place has tidy rooms, spot-on service and a pool.

BENAULIM

Less than 2km south of Colva, Benaulim is much more peaceful and rustic, with numerous guesthouses and small hotels spread over a wide area.

Budget

Jacinta Moraes Tourist House (☎ 2770187; d Rs 150-250) With chickens squawking about the house and garden and a bubbly woman in charge you're guaranteed a memorable stay. The clean rooms are a bargain at twice the price.

Rosario's Inn (☎ 2770636; d from Rs 250) Rosario's, next to the football ground, is a huge, good-value backpackers inn just a couple of minutes' stroll from the beach. It lacks the character of some of the Benaulim guesthouses.

D'Souza Guest House (☎ 2770583; d Rs 400) As you'd guess from the name this traditional blue house is run by a real Goan-Portuguese family and comes with bundles of homy atmosphere, a lovely garden and three spacious, clean rooms. Book ahead.

Furtado's Beach House (☎ 2770396; d without/with AC from Rs 1000/1500; ❄) Prime beachfront location, spacious rooms set around a courtyard and not much idea about customer service.

GOA

Midrange & Top End

Palm Grove Cottages (☎ 2770059; www.palmgrovegoa.com; d Rs 600-1200; ❄) From the hibiscus- and palm-lined driveway to the frog-filled ponds and old-fashioned rooms, the Palm Grove Cottages ooze class and character. It's a world away from the hubbub of the main strip and the beachfront.

Carina Beach Resort (☎ 2770413; bookings@carina-beachresort.com; d without/with AC Rs 950/1250; ❄ 🏊) A large and somewhat run-down hotel set in peaceful gardens. The management are friendly, the pool is good and breakfast is included. It also has Ayurvedic massage during the high season.

Taj Exotica (☎ 2771234; www.tajhotels.com; d from US$300; ❄ 💻 🏊) One of Goa's most stylish resorts, with an appealing contemporary design to the rooms (which include DVD players) and public areas. As with all resorts down the coast, Dabolim Airport transfers are included in the rates.

Also recommended by many readers is the C Roque Resort (☎ 738199; d Rs 350), which is a 15-minute walk up the beach towards Colva from Furtado's.

Eating

COLVA

The most popular places to eat in Colva are the open-sided wooden shacks lining the beach either side of where the road ends. These restaurants are a good place to watch the sunset with a cold beer, and they also serve breakfast. Among the beach shacks, Dominick's has been around a long time and is consistently good.

Lactangia (mains Rs 50-100) In case you've forgotten where you are this place has cheap and cheerful wholesome Indian food.

Lucky Star (mains Rs 50-200) An army of waiters tend to your every whim as you sedately flick through a menu of Goan specialities.

Pasta Hut (mains Rs 60-120) In front of the Hotel Colmar, and a good spot to sit with a happy-hour cocktail and watch the sun go down. The Italian dishes keep all the punters happy.

Goodman's (mains Rs 65-150) Fish and chips and north English accents are the order of the day at this home-away-from-home restaurant for the Brits. The big screen TV is the best place in town to catch up with the footy. It has a good atmosphere.

Sea Pearl Hotel (☎ 2780176; mains Rs 80-200) Sit among a jungle of potted plants in this highly recommended seafood restaurant. The kitchen is spotlessly clean and the impressive menu includes lots of daily specials.

BENAULIM

Most of the hotels and guesthouses have their own restaurants, which is lucky because Benaulim village has far fewer eating options than Colva. Johncy's, at the end of the main road from Benaulim village, is a perennial favourite and a popular meeting place.

Pedro's Bar & Restaurant (mains Rs 60-120) Beside the beach, this airy place doesn't believe in an imaginative menu, but even so the traditional Goan dishes and steak sizzlers are tasty.

Malibu Restaurant (mains Rs 90-150) With a pleasant alfresco setting, this place, a short walk back from the beach, is one of the more sophisticated dining experiences in Benaulim and has good Indian and Italian food. The breakfast is worthy of a mention, too.

Drinking & Entertainment

Compared with the northern beaches, Colva and Benaulim are very quiet at night, with most people content to eat out and enjoy a few drinks near the beach.

Club Margarita (☎ 2789745; Colva Beach Rd; cover charge Rs 250; 🕑 7pm-3am) The only nightclub in the area is on the main road into Colva. Formerly known as Gatsby's the name change has brought little real change to this small club playing a wide range of dance music.

Baywatch (☎ 2772795) Over on Sernabatim Beach, this is a little isolated but has a good bar and a disco with occasional party nights. In high season it also has accommodation.

Lucky Star and beachside Boomerang (🕑 24 hr) are among the more popular bars.

Shopping

Goa Animal Welfare Trust Shop (☎ 2759849; www.gawt.org; 🕑 9.30am-12.30pm & 5-8pm Mon-Sat) On the main junction in Benaulim village this shop, one of the only charity shops in Goa, is run by the deserving Goa Animal Welfare Trust, who does a sterling job dishing out some love to all the stray animals in south Goa.

Getting There & Away

Buses run from Colva to Margao roughly every 15 minutes (Rs 10, 20 minutes) from 7.30am to about 7pm, departing from the parking area at the end of the beach road. Buses from Margao to Benaulim are also frequent (Rs 6, 15 minutes); some continue south to Varca and Cavelossim. Buses stop at the crossroads known as Maria Hall.

BENAULIM TO PALOLEM

Immediately south of Benaulim are the upmarket beach resorts of Varca and Cavelossim. Boasting an uninterrupted, 10km strip of pristine sand, this is where you'll find a cluster of five-star resorts, all luxurious, self-contained bubbles with pools, extensive private grounds and practically every whim catered for. One of the best is the Leela Goa (☎ 2871234; www.ghmhotels.com; d from US$200;) at Mobor, 3km south of Cavelossim. Some of the rooms go up to a not very cheap US$3600 per night, but then again if it was good enough for Bill Clinton, it's good enough for you.

On the unlikely chance that you're not a former US President then don't fret – it's still possible to access the beaches, and the coastal road makes a more interesting and enjoyable route towards Palolem than the faster National Hwy. To cross the Sal River estuary, take the ferry from Cavelossim to Assolna – turn left at the sign saying 'Village Panchayat Cavelossim' before you get to Mobor, then continue on for 2km to the river. From there you can ride on to the fishing village of Betul.

The road from Betul to Agonda winds over hills and is a little rough in places. You can detour to the old Portuguese fort of Cabo da Rama, which has a small church within the fort walls, stupendous views and several old buildings rapidly becoming one with the trees.

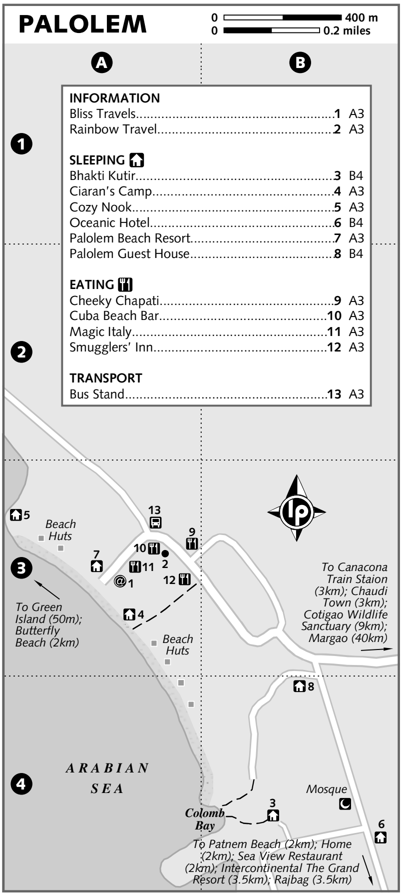
Back on the main road there's a turn-off to Agonda, a small village with an empty beach that might well be the gem of south Goa. This clean and uncluttered beach actually lives up to expectations and is an idyllic retreat for travellers wanting to escape the tourist resorts. Heading south along the beach road you'll find Dersy Beach Resort (☎ 2647503; huts Rs 200, d Rs 300-800), which has spotless doubles, control-freak management and a highly popular restaurant.

Dunhill Resort (☎ 2647328; d Rs 400) has 12 tatty rooms with private bathrooms in which you almost have to stand in the toilet to use the shower. There's also a shady bar and restaurant.

Sunset Bar (☎ 2647381; r Rs 600), at the southern end of the beach, has a spectacular setting on a pile of granite boulders that would be the envy of any five-star resort. The rooms though are far from five-star and the atmosphere is a little strange.

At the even quieter north end of the beach, Forget Me Not (☎ 2647611; cottages Rs 500, r with private bathroom Rs 1500) has a mixture of cheap bamboo huts and a whitewashed mud-brick house.

Another recommended spot is Madhu Hotel (☎ 9423813442; r Rs 800), close to the church. It has 10 seasonal huts with bathrooms.



PALOLEM & AROUND

Palolem is the most southerly of Goa's developed beaches and was once the state's most idyllic. Nowadays its beauty is very much dependent on your point of view. For those who believe a beach cannot be paradise without a decent selection of cheap restaurants and hotels, a dose of nightlife and plenty of like-minded people then Palolem is still top of the pops. For those who prefer their paradise to be a little less claustrophobic then Palolem will make you feel queasy. Whatever your opinion one indisputable fact is that Palolem is far from undiscovered – the sheer number of ramshackle camps protruding out of what was once almost pristine jungle has turned Palolem into a kind of tropical Glastonbury – with all the associated good and bad points. In September 2006 the government destroyed all unlicensed businesses and buildings and, for a short time afterwards, Palolem was very much down in the dumps. However it hasn't taken long for the village to get back on its feet and Palolem is once again back in the driving seat and sitting pretty at number one. The following listings feature hotels and restaurants that were fully licensed and unaffected by the bulldozers, but be warned that the situation may change and it is advisable to check ahead.

If Palolem is all too much for you then further north, and reachable by boat, is pretty Butterfly Beach, while around the southern headland is a small, rocky cove called Colomb Bay, with a couple of basic places to stay, and beyond that is another fine stretch of sand, Patnem Beach, with a handful of beach huts and something approaching surf.

Information

Motorcycle hire and foreign exchange is available through several travel agencies, including Rainbow Travel (☎ 2643912; 9am-11pm). Bliss Travels (☎ 2643456; 9am-midnight), near the main entrance to the beach, is a good travel agent with internet access at Rs 40 per hour.

Sights & Activities

About 9km southeast of Palolem, and a good day trip, is the rewarding Cotigao Wildlife Sanctuary (☎ 2229701; admission/camera/video camera Rs 5/25/100; ⏲ 7am-5.30pm). If you go there expecting to see some of its larger inhabitants (including gaurs, sambars, leopards and spotted deer) then you're going to leave empty handed. Instead keep your eyes peeled for the smaller creatures – frogs, snakes, insects, and birds are all easy to see. Early morning is the best time to visit. Cottages (d Rs 250/500) are available at the park entrance.

Boat tours to see dolphins or to visit tiny Butterfly Beach are easy to arrange through most travel agents and hotels – a one-hour trip costs around Rs 150 per person. Three-hour mountain bike tours (Rs 300) out to Patnem and Rajbag run on demand; ask at Ciaran's Camp (below).

Sleeping

Prior to the bulldozing, the edge of the beach at Palolem was thick with palm-thatch or bamboo huts grouped together in about 30 little 'villages'. Prices for the most basic huts cost from Rs 100 a double (Rs 150 in peak season), rising to Rs 150 or even Rs 300 for the swankier ones. Whether all of these will return is anyone's guess – most likely they will but in reduced numbers and with higher prices. The following are all places that remain standing.

Cozy Nook (☎ 2643550; huts & tree houses Rs 500-1500) Superbly located blue-and-white huts at the northern end of the beach near the river mouth. Prices vary widely depending on room type, of which there are many kinds. We have received a few reports of indifferent service.

Palolem Beach Resort (☎ 2643054; yogishwer@sancharnet.com; tents Rs 350, d Rs 700) Just a little drunken stumble from the bars and restaurants, this complex is a good one if you want to be in the thick of it all. The large rooms are better than most and the pleasant gardens offer plenty of quiet, shady patches.

Palolem Guest House (☎ 2644880; palolemguesthouse@hotmail.com; d from Rs 600) If flimsy beach huts aren't for you then this place, five minutes' walk from the beach, offers tidy, tiled rooms with luxuries such as solid brick walls and glass windows! The owners are friendly and there's a good in-house restaurant.

Home (☎ 2643916; home.patnem@yahoo.com; d Rs 1000) This European-run hotel has sparkling white rooms with nice little terraces, and a perfect location on mellow Patnem beach. The atmosphere is very laid-back and friendly.

our pick Bhakti Kutir (☎ 2643472; www.bhaktikutir.com; huts Rs 2000, stone house Rs 2500; ✂) Ensconced in a coconut grove between Palolem and Patnem Beaches and surrounded by a thousand luminous birds, butterflies and flowers, the well-equipped jungle huts here offer something truly different. Refreshingly, almost all waste products are recycled and there are frequent dance, massage and yoga courses. The predominantly vegetarian restaurant is excellent.

Ciaran's Camp (☎ 2643477; johnciaran@hotmail.com; huts Rs 2500) By far the best of the beachside options, with a handful of luxurious, clean and airy huts set in nicely landscaped grounds.

Oceanic Hotel (☎ 2643059; www.hotel-oceanic.com; d standard/deluxe Rs 2000/3500;) On the road to Patnem Beach, this British-run hotel is in a class above most other places. The rooms, which are full of little luxurious extras, are so sparkling you'll need to put sunglasses on and the pool, oh boy, the pool…

Intercontinental The Grand Resort (☎ 2644777; goaresv@thegrandhotels.net; d incl breakfast from Rs 20,000;) A little further down the coast at Rajbag is Goa's largest resort. This highly desirable hotel is something of a Goan prince's palace – and it even comes with its very own golf course. Nonguests can use the pool for Rs 500 per day.

Eating & Drinking

Apart from the shacks on its beach, Palolem has plenty to offer in the way of restaurants and bars.

Cheeky Chapati (mains Rs 100-200) Has good seafood and a few less-common species such as blue cheese and broccoli quiche. One of the towns better music collections.

Seaview Restaurant (mains Rs 100-200) Located on Patnam Beach, this Canadian-run place receives warm reports and its king prawns are considered worthy of royalty.

Magic Italy (mains Rs 120-160; 5pm-midnight) Run by an Italian couple, this is one of the best places for authentic wood-fired pizzas and pasta in Goa. There's free filtered water, wine by the glass and candle-lit tables.

Smugglers' Inn (mains Rs 120-200) With full English breakfasts, sausage and mash, and beef and ale pies that could be straight from Yorkshire, this is an unashamedly British place and after weeks of sloppy curries elsewhere in India, few people can resist. The bar area is comfy and there's a nook where you can watch all the latest DVDs and big football matches.

Cuba Beach Bar (mains Rs 100-300) It's not on the beach, nor is it in Cuba, but it's certainly the moment's drinking hole of choice. The food isn't bad either.

Getting There & Away

There are hourly buses to Margao (Rs 25, one hour) from the bus stand on the main road down to the beach. There are also regular buses to Chaudi (Rs 5), the nearest town, from where you can get frequent buses to Margao or south to Karwar and Mangalore. The closest train station is Canacona.

CENTRAL GOA

PONDA & AROUND

The busy inland town of Ponda, 29km southeast of Panaji, is home to a number of unique Hindu temples and several spice plantations that make for an interesting day out.

The Hindu temples were rebuilt from originals destroyed by the Portuguese and their lamp towers are a distinctive Goan feature. The Shiva temple of Shri Manguesh at Priol-Ponda Taluka, 5km northwest of Ponda, is one of the best. This tiny 18th-century hilltop temple, with its white tower, is a local landmark. Close by is Shri Mahalsa, a Vishnu temple.

Among the other temples, the most architecturally interesting is the Shri Shantadurga Temple, 1km southwest of the town centre. Dedicated to Shantadurga, the goddess of peace, this temple sports an unusual, almost pagoda-like structure with a roof made from long slabs of stone.

One of the best spice plantations to visit is the Tropical Spice Farm (☎ 2340329; admission Rs 300; 9am-5pm) You'll be taken on an informative and entertaining 45-minute tour of the spice plantation, learning, among other things, how to pollinate vanilla and how to burn your taste buds out with the world's hottest chillies! An excellent buffet lunch is included in the price and elephant rides are available. The farm is about 6km northeast of Ponda and a taxi/rickshaw will cost Rs 250/170 with waiting time. The Sahakari Spice Farm, (☎ 2312394; www.sahakarifarms.com; 8am-6pm) is closer to Ponda and offers an almost identical tour.

There are regular buses to Ponda from Panaji (Rs 15, 45 minutes), but to visit the temples and a spice plantation you're better off with your own transport.

BONDLA WILDLIFE SANCTUARY

In the foothills of the Western Ghats, 52km from Panaji, lies Bondla (admission Rs 5, motorcycle/car Rs 10/50, camera/video Rs 25/100; 9am-5pm Fri-Wed), the smallest of the Goan wildlife sanctuaries (8 sq km) and the easiest to reach.

For the benefit of tourists expecting to see some animals, there's a botanical garden and a zoo. Large wild fauna includes gaurs and sambars, but you'll have more luck spotting the little, but no less impressive creatures.

GREEN GOA

Increased tourism, overuse of water, and mining are all posing a threat to the environment in Goa – you can do your bit by conserving water when showering and frequenting the few restaurants that have installed water filters. Mining and water overuse aside, for many tourists the biggest and most obvious environmental problem concerns litter and the general lack of care that Goa's most prized possession – its beaches – receive. Come in the low season or even in the early and late high season and at a few beaches you will find an astonishing level of rubbish strewn across the sands. It seems very strange that a state so dependent on its beaches hasn't taken any real efforts to keep their most precious assets in tip-top condition. True, during the high season the major beaches are given a daily sweep, but this is only for a few weeks of the year. As a visitor, you can and should do your part to help keep the beaches clean (you might even help to change attitudes) by visibly picking up the rubbish (preferably in sight of the culprit) and taking it away with you to dispose of properly. It also doesn't hurt to complain to your hotel about the rubbish levels and suggest that if the local government won't do anything then the tourist industry itself needs to come together and take action to clean the beaches. After all, it would only need a tiny increase in accommodation and restaurant bills to generate enough money to pay for a small army of dedicated year-round beach cleaners.

The Goa Foundation (☎ 2263306; www.goacom.com/goafoundation) in Mapusa is the state's main environmental pressure group and has been responsible for a number of conservation projects since its inauguration in 1986. It also produces numerous conservation publications, such as the excellent Fish Curry & Rice, which is available from the Other India Bookstore (p852) in Mapusa, other Goan bookshops and on the website.

There's chalet accommodation (☎ 2229701; dm/s/d Rs 75/250/350) at the park entrance.

Getting to Bondla is easiest if you have your own transport. By public transport there are buses from Ponda to Usgao village (Rs 5), from where you'll need to take a taxi (Rs 150) the remaining 5km to the park entrance.

MOLEM & BHAGWAN MAHAVIR WILDLIFE SANCTUARY

The forlorn village of Molem is the gateway to the much more rewarding Bhagwan Mahavir Wildlife Sanctuary. The largest of Goa's protected wildlife areas covers 240 sq km, incorporating the 107-sq-km Molem National Park; there's an observation platform a few kilometres into the park from where you may catch a glimpse of animals such as jungle cats, deer and Malayan giant squirrels. Accommodation is available at Molem in the GTDC Dhudhsagar Resort (☎ 2612238; dm Rs 100, d without/with AC Rs 450/600;).

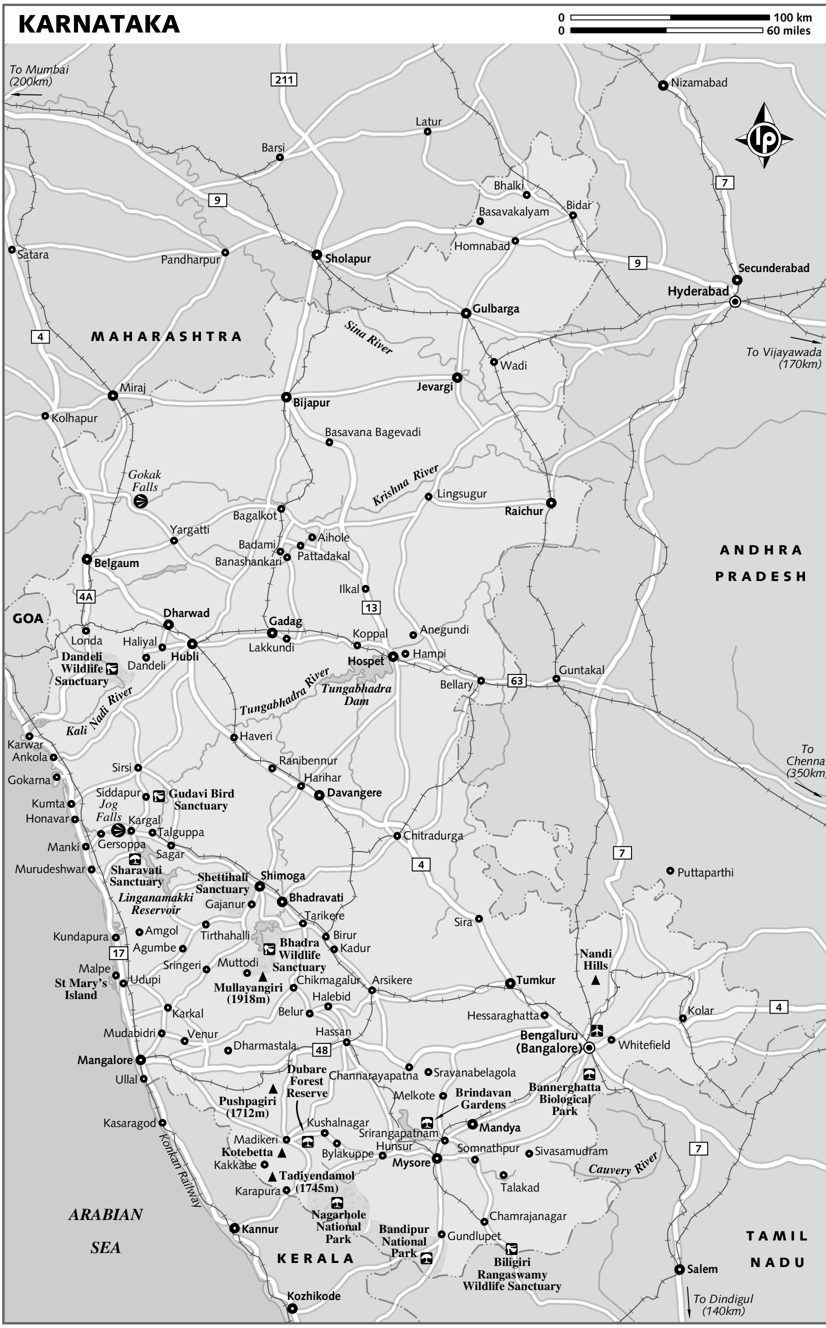
The sanctuary is east of Panaji (54km from Margao), with its main entrance on NH4A. To reach it by public transport, take any bus to Ponda, then change to a bus to Belgaum or Londa, getting off in Molem.

DUDHSAGAR FALLS

On the eastern border with Karnataka, Dudhsagar Falls (603m) are Goa's most impressive waterfalls – and the second highest in India. However, reaching them is expensive and time-consuming, and they are really only at their best during the monsoon – when they're inaccessible – and immediately after. To get here take an infrequent local train or taxi to Colem station, then a jeep for Rs 1800 (up to five people). The simpler option is to go on a full-day tour from Panaji (p843) or Calangute (p857).

Karnataka

If you're looking for variety in your Indian travel experience, Karnataka fits the bill nicely. The state's capital and international entry point is the IT powerhouse of Bengaluru (Bangalore), a modern, energetic city best savoured for its restaurants and shops. Ancient architectural gems are abundant, including the World Heritage–listed monuments of Hampi and Pattadakal. Practically untouched beaches and devout temple towns dot Karnataka's quiet tropical coast, while in the cool highlands of Kodagu (Coog) you can trek between lush coffee and spice plantations along paths trampled by migrating elephants.



Bedecked in dazzling finery, elephants are also the stars of the show in Mysore's justly famous Dussarah celebrations. The royal city is the jewel in Karnataka's crown, home to a spectacular palace and an atmospheric fresh produce and spice market, as well an internationally renowned centre for yoga. Nearby are superbly crafted Hoysala temples dating from the 12th century and enormous Jain sculptures of Gomateshvara, not to mention the wildlife havens of Bandipur and Nagarhole National Parks, both part of the Nilgiri Biosphere Reserve and home to elusive tigers.

The best time for touring is October to March, when the monsoon ceases lashing the coast and baking temperatures ease in far-northern interior towns such as Bijapur, with its beautiful South Indian Islamic architecture. And although the only thing that Karnataka lacks is snow-covered mountains, you'd still be wise to pack some warm clothes to beat off the winter chill in Bengaluru.

HIGHLIGHTS

- Be dazzled by the Maharaja's Palace and the technicolour Devaraja Market in Mysore (p894)
- Recharge your spirit in the lush, cool highlands of the Kodagu region (p905)

KARNATAKA

History

Religions, cultures and kingdoms galore have sashayed through Karnataka, from India's first great emperor, Chandragupta Maurya, who in the 3rd century BC retreated to Sravanabelagola after embracing Jainism, to Tipu Sultan who stood up against the encroaching British empire.

In the 6th century the Chalukyas built some of the earliest Hindu temples near Badami. Dynasties such as the Cholas and Gangas played important roles in the region's history, but it was the Hoysalas (11th to 14th centuries), who have left a lasting mark with their architecturally stunning temples at Somnathpur, Halebid and Belur.

In 1327, Mohammed Tughlaq's Muslim army sacked the Hoysala capital at Halebid, but in 1346 the Hindu empire of Vijayanagar annexed it. This dynasty, with its capital at Hampi, peaked in the early 1550s, then fell in 1565 to the Deccan sultanates. Bijapur then became the prime city of the region.

With Vijayanagar's demise, the Hindu Wodeyars (former rulers of Mysore state) quickly grew in stature. With their capital at Srirangapatnam, they extended their rule over a large part of southern India. Their power remained largely unchallenged until 1761 when Hyder Ali (one of their generals) deposed them. The French helped Hyder Ali and his son, Tipu Sultan, to consolidate their rule in return for support in fighting the British. However, in 1799, the British defeated Tipu Sultan, annexed part of his kingdom and put the Wodeyars back on Mysore's throne. This was the real kick off for British territorial expansion in southern India.

The Wodeyars ruled Mysore until Independence. They were enlightened rulers, and the maharaja became the first governor of the post-Independence state. The state boundaries were redrawn along linguistic lines in 1956 and thus the extended Kannada-speaking state of Mysore was born. This was renamed Karnataka in 1972, with Bangalore (now Bengaluru) as the capital. About 66% of the state's population speak Kannada as the main language; other significant languages are Urdu (10%) and Telugu (7.4%).

Information

The website of Karnataka Tourism (www.karnatakatourism.org) is generally more useful than the government tourist information centres around the state.

FAST FACTS

- Population: 52.7 million
- Area: 191,791 sq km
- Capital: Bengaluru (Bangalore)
- Main languages: Kannada, Urdu and Telugu
- When to go: October to March

If you're planning a visit to one of the state's several wildlife parks and reserves, it's worth contacting Jungle Lodges & Resorts Ltd (Map p885; ☎ 080-25597021; www.junglelodges.com; 2nd fl, Shrungar Shopping Complex, MG Rd, Bengaluru; ⏰ 10am-5.30pm), who organise safari and accommodation packages for Nagarhole and Bandipur National Parks, and several other reserves.

ACCOMMODATION

In Karnataka luxury tax is 4% on rooms costing Rs 151 to 400, 8% on those between Rs 401 and 1000, and 12% on anything over Rs 1000. Some midrange and top-end hotels may add a further service charge. Rates quoted in this chapter do not include taxes unless otherwise indicated.

BENGALURU (BANGALORE)

☎ 080 / pop 5.7 million / elev 920m

Rebranded Bengaluru in November 2006, the city more commonly known as Bangalore is not an obvious charmer. The crazy traffic, associated pollution and creaking infrastructure of this IT boom town will fast drive you demented. However, even though locals rarely sing Bengaluru's praises as a tourist destination, it's not a dead loss. There are a handful of interesting sights, the climate is benevolent, the city's reputation for green spaces is well deserved, and the youthful energy and imagination (not to mention disposable income) of the ITocracy fuels a progressive dining, drinking and shopping scene – one of the best in India, in fact.

History

Legend has it that Bengaluru (meaning 'Town of Boiled Beans') got its name after an old woman served cooked pulses to a lost and hungry Hoysala king. In 1537 the feudal lord

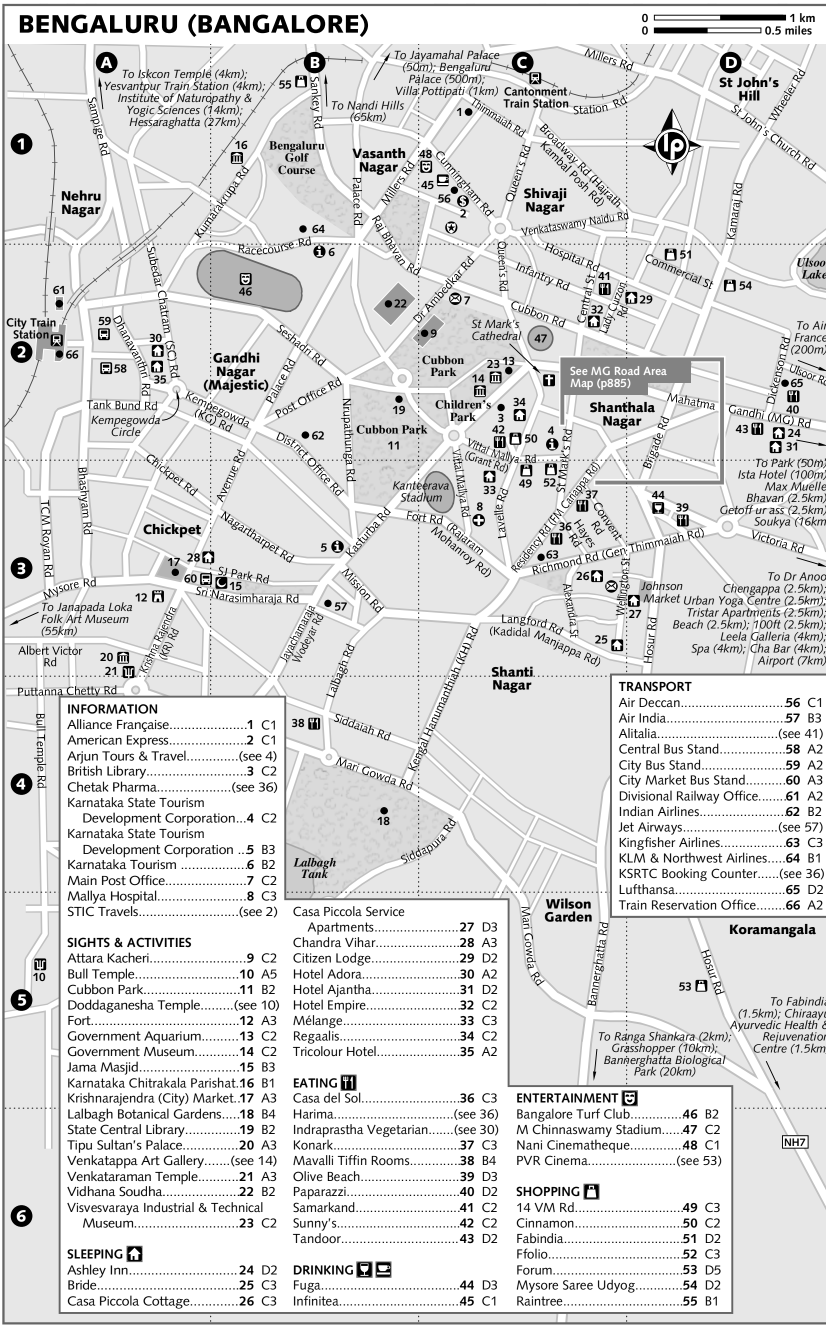
FESTIVALS IN KARNATAKA

Udupi Paryaya (17 Jan; Udupi, p915) Held in even-numbered years, much procession and ritual marks the handover of swamis at the town's Krishna Temple.
Classical Dance Festival (Jan; Pattadakal, p929) Has some of Indian's best classical dance, without the crowds of Vasantahabba.
Tibetan New Year (Jan/Feb; Bylekuppe, p907) Lamas in the Tibetan refugee settlements, near Kushalnagar, take shifts leading the nonstop pujas (prayers) that span the week of Tibetan New Year celebrations, which also include special dances and a fire ceremony.
Vasantahabba (Feb; Nrityagram dance village, p894) The dance village of Nrityagram hosts this free festival featuring traditional and contemporary Indian dance and music.
Shivaratri Festival (Feb/Mar; Gokarna, p916) Two gargantuan chariots barrel down Gokarana's main street on 'Shiva power' as bananas are tossed at them for luck.
Muharram (Feb/Mar; Hospet, p925)This Shi'ia Muslim festival features fire walkers to the accompaniment of mass hoopla.
Vairamudi Festival (Mar/Apr; Melkote, p903) Lord Vishnu is adorned with jewels at Cheluvanarayana Temple, including a diamond-studded crown belonging to Mysore's former maharajas.
Karaga (Apr; Bengaluru, p881) Nine-day festival honouring the goddess Draupadi held at Dharmaraya Swamy Temple in Bengaluru (Bangalore). The highlight is a colourful procession led by a cross-dressed priest and accompanied by half-naked swordsmen.
Ganesh Chaturthi (Aug/Sep; Gokarna, p916) Families quietly march their Ganeshes to the sea at sunset.
Dussehra (Sep/Oct; Mysore, p897) One of India's great Dussehra festivals.
Kadalekayi Parishe (Nov; Bengaluru, p881) Groundnut farmers come from all over the region to the Bull Temple, seeking blessings for their harvests.
Vijaya Utsav (Nov; Hampi, p919) Traditional music and dance re-creates Vijayanagar's glory among Hampi's temples and boulders.
Manjunatheshwara (Nov; Dharmastala, p915) The Jain pilgrimage town has a lively festival season beginning with Diwali and including this three-day event.
Huthri (Nov/Dec; Madikeri, p906) The Kodavas celebrate the start of the season's rice harvests with ceremony, music, traditional dances and much feasting for a week, beginning on a full-moon night.
Laksha Deepotsava (Nov/Dec; Dharmastala, p915) Lakhs of lanterns light up this pilgrimage town in a fitting climax to its festival season.

Kempegowda built a mud fort here, but it remained something of a backwater until 1759, when the city was gifted to Hyder Ali by the Mysore maharaja.

In 1809 the British Cantonment was established, and in 1831 the British moved their regional administrative base from Srirangapatnam to Bengaluru, renaming the city Bangalore in the process. Winston Churchill enjoyed life as a junior officer here, famously leaving a debt (still on the books) of Rs 13 at the Bangalore Club.

Bengaluru's reputation as a science and technology centre was established early in the 20th century; in 1905 it became the first city in India to have electric street lights. Since the 1940s it has been home to Hindustan Aeronautics Ltd (HAL), India's first aircraft manufacturing company. Today the city is best known as a hub for software and electronics development, and business process outsourcing.



Bengaluru's prosperity is changing the city in more ways than just its name. A new international airport is under construction and a new city centre is rising in a clutch of skyscrapers on the old United Breweries site at the Cubbon Park end of Vittal Mallya Rd (Grant Rd).

Orientation

Bengaluru is vast, but the two central areas of particular interest to travellers are Gandhi Nagar (the old part of town) and Mahatma Gandhi (MG) Rd (the heart of British-era Bangalore).

The Central bus stand and the City train station are on the edge of Gandhi Nagar. The crowded streets in this lively, gritty area – known locally as Majestic – teem with shops, cinemas and budget hotels. The Krishnarajendra (City) Market is here and a few remaining historical relics are to the south, including Lalbagh Botanical Gardens.

Some 4km east, the area bounded by MG, Brigade, St Mark's and Residency (FM Cariappa) Rds is Bengaluru's retail and entertainment hub. Here are parks, tree-lined streets, churches, grand houses and the army compounds that are integral to this military town. Between the two areas you'll find the golf club and racecourse, close to which are several top-end hotels.

Some Bengaluru streets are known better by the roads they intersect; 3rd Cross, Residency Rd, for example, refers to the third cross street on Residency Rd.

MAPS

The tourist offices (right) give out decent city maps. The excellent Eicher City Atlas is sold at Bengaluru's many bookshops (below).

Information

BOOKSHOPS

Crossword (Map p885; ACR Tower, Residency Rd; 10.30am-9pm Mon-Sat) Great selection of books, magazines, CDs and DVDs in modern surroundings.

LALBAGH BOTANICAL GARDENS

Named for its profusion of red roses (Lalbagh means 'Red Garden'), Lalbagh (Map p883; ☎ 26579231; admission Rs 5; dawn-dusk) rivals England's Kew Gardens. Laid out in 1760 by Hyder Ali, this 96-hectare park is a great place to reconnect with nature; take one of Bangalore Walk's (p887) tours of the garden to discover more about the centuries-old trees and collections of plants from around the world. The main entrance is at the southern end of Kengal Hanumanthiah (KH) Rd; near here is the three-billion-year-old rock on which Kempegowda built one of Bengaluru's original watchtowers.

A beautiful glasshouse, modelled on the original Crystal Palace in London, is the venue for flower shows in the week preceding Republic Day (26 January) and the week before Independence Day (15 August).

BENGALURU PALACE

For an insight into the homelife of the Wodeyars (the current raja still lives here), take a

CENTRE OF THE FLAT WORLD

You won't spend long in Bengaluru (Bangalore) before someone tells you that this is the centre of the world. The city's reputation as the silicon-coated heart of IT India was cemented in 2005, when Pulitzer Prize–winning writer Thomas L Friedman got the inspiration for The World Is Flat after visiting Infosys' campus on Bengaluru's southern edge.

Infosys is one of Bengaluru's biggest success stories. Established by seven software engineers in 1981, the company today has over 66,000 employees and revenues of over US$2100 million. Enter the Bengaluru campus (not open to the public) and it's as if you've slipped through a wormhole into an alternative India, where neatly trimmed lawns sprout shiny glass and steel structures. The workforce (average age 26) cycle or use electric golf carts to get around the 32-hectare campus, passing five food courts (serving 14 types of cuisine), banks, a supermarket, basketball court, putting green and state-of-the-art gyms. There's even a hotel!

The point of all this is to prove that Infosys (and by extension India) can compete on equal terms with the developed world – the level playing field of Friedman's 'flat world'. And with bumper-to-bumper traffic crawling along the highway outside, nowhere in Bengaluru seems to sum up the contradictions of modern India so succinctly.

peek inside Bengaluru Palace (☎ 23315789; Palace Rd; Indian/foreigner Rs 100/200, camera Rs 500; ⏲ 10am-6pm). An aged retainer will guide you around the palace, which was designed to resemble Windsor Castle. Alongside many family photos, the sometimes lavish interiors are hung with a collection of nude portraits, adding a saucy note to the tour. The guards get touchy about photos being taken of the exterior.

KARNATAKA CHITRAKALA PARISHAT

This visual-arts gallery (Map p883; ☎ 22261816; www.chitrakalaparishath.com; Kumarakrupa Rd; admission Rs 10; ⏲ 10am-6pm Mon-Sat) is Bengaluru's best. You'll see a wide range of Indian and international contemporary art, as well as the lavish gold-leaf work of Mysore-style paintings, and folk and tribal art from across the continent. There are also galleries devoted to Russian master Nicholas Roerich, whose vividly colourful paintings of the Himalayas are outstanding, and his son Svetoslav, who settled in India.

CUBBON PARK

Named after the former British commissioner Sir Mark Cubbon, the 120-hectare Cubbon Park (Map p883) is where the city breathes. Inside and on its fringes you'll find the red-painted Gothic-style State Central Library, two municipal museums, an art gallery and a bleak Government Aquarium (☎ 22867440; adult/child Rs 5/2; ⏲ 10am-5.30pm Tue-Sun).

The mechanically minded will find plenty of interest at the quirky Visvesvaraya Industrial & Technical Museum (☎ 22864009; Kasturba Rd; admission Rs 15; ⏲ 10am-6pm), which includes all manner of electrical and engineering displays, from a replica of the Wright brothers' 1903 flyer to 21st-century virtual-reality games.

Next door, the Government Museum (☎ 22864483; Kasturba Rd; admission Rs 4; ⏲ 10am-5pm Tue-Sun) houses a drably presented collection of stone carvings and relics, as well as some good pieces from Halebid. Your ticket is also valid for the attached Venkatappa Art Gallery (⏲ 10am-5pm Tue-Sun), home to the surreal watercolour landscapes of Sri K Venkatappa (1887–1962), court painter to the Wodeyars.

At the northwestern end of Cubbon Park, the colossal neo-Dravidian-style Vidhana Soudha, built in 1954, houses the secretariat and the state legislature, and is floodlit on Sunday evenings. It's closed to the public, as is the neoclassical Attara Kacheri, opposite, which houses the High Court.

KRISHNARAJENDRA (CITY) MARKET & TIPU'S PALACE

For a pungent taste of traditional urban India, dive into this bustling wholesale fresh-produce market (Map p883; ⏲ 6am-7pm) and the dense grid of commercial streets that surround it. This is the main Muslim area of the city and you'll also find several mosques here, including the impressively massive lilac-painted Jama Masjid (Map p883; Silver Jubilee Park Rd; admission free).

Head south along Krishna Rajandra (KR) Rd, under the elevated highway, and you'll pass the remains of the fort (Map p883) originally built by Kempegowda and rebuilt in stone in the 18th century by Hyder Ali. It's not open to the public. On the next block south is Tipu Sultan's elegant and modest palace (Map p883; Albert Victor Rd; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/US$2; 8am-6pm), notable for its teak pillars and frescoes – although it's not in as good condition as Tipu's beautiful palace in Srirangapatnam (p902).

Next to the palace is the ornate Venkataraman Temple (Map p883; KR Rd; 8.30am-6pm, closed alternate Sat).

BULL TEMPLE & DODDA GANESHA TEMPLE

Built by Kempegowda in the Dravidian style of the 16th century, the Bull Temple (Map p883; Bull Temple Rd, Basavangudi; 6am-1pm & 4-9pm) contains a huge granite monolith of Nandi and is one of Bengaluru's liveliest and most atmospheric. Nearby is the Dodda Ganesha Temple (Map p883; Bull Temple Rd, Basavangudi; 6am-1pm & 4-9pm), with an equally enormous Ganesh idol. Take bus 31, 31E, 35 or 49 to get there.

ISKCON TEMPLE

Built by the wealthy International Society of Krishna Consciousness (Iskcon), better known as the Hare Krishnas, this shiny temple (Hare Krishna Hill, Chord Rd; 7am-1pm & 4-8.30pm), 8km northwest of the town centre, is lavishly decorated in a mix of ultracontemporary and traditional styles. The Sri Radha Krishna Mandir blends souvenir selling with a stunning shrine to Krishna and Radha.

Activities & Courses

AYURVEDA & YOGA

Chiraayu Ayurvedic Health & Rejuvenation Centre (25500855; 6th block, 17th D Main, Koramangala; 8.30am-6pm) provides longer-term therapies, as well as a day spa for walk-in relaxation. An hour-long massage costs Rs 700.

People come from around the world for the yoga and naturopathy programmes at the Institute of Naturopathy & Yogic Sciences (INYS; 23717777; Tumkur Rd, Jindal Nagar; per person per day from Rs 600). It's 20km northwest of Bengaluru.

Set on a 30-acre organic farm, Soukya (7945001; www.soukya.com; Soukya Rd, Samethanahalli, Whitefield; 6am-8.30pm) is an internationally renowned place offering a variety of holistic health programmes, including Ayurvedic treatments and yoga. Packages for two days and one night start at Rs 8900/13,800 for a single/double.

Ayurvedic therapists from Kerala staff Spa (5217239; www.theleela.com; Airport Rd 6.30am-9pm), a sleek centre with a wide variety of rejuvenation and detox treatments. Prices kick off at Rs 1600 for an hour's massage.

Stylish Urban Yoga Centre (32005720; www.urbanyoga.in; 100ft Rd, Indiranagar; 6.30am-9pm) has a smart yoga studio offering a range of classes, and sells yoga clothes, accessories and books.

OUTDOOR ADVENTURE

Getoff ur ass (51161600; www.getoffurass.com; 472, Sri Krishna Temple St; Indiranagar 1st Stage; 10am-8pm Mon-Sat) sells and rents out all you need for an outdoor-adventure expedition. It also runs a variety of reasonably priced hiking, rafting and kayaking trips in Karnataka and elsewhere in India.

Tours

Bangalore Walks (9845523660; www.bangalorewalks.com) Not to be missed! Sign up for one of the highly informative history or nature walks (Rs 495 including breakfast) and learn to love Bengaluru in a way that many locals have forgotten. Walks run from 7am to 11am every Saturday and Sunday.

City Swaps (Map p885; 65715056; www.cityswaps.in; 902 Barton Centre, 84 MG Rd; 10am-8pm Wed-Mon) Guides give a running commentary on open-top double-decker buses, which follow a 14km route around central Bengaluru. A two-hour tour is Rs 200; a day-long hop-on, hop-off ticket is Rs 300.

Karnataka State Tourism Development Corporation (KSTDC; Map p883); Badami House (22275883; Badami House, Kasturba Rd; 6.30am-10pm); Karnataka Tourism House (Karnataka Tourism House, 8 Papanna Lane, St Mark's Rd; 6.30am-10pm) Runs a couple of city tours, all of which begin at Badami House. The basic city tour runs twice daily at 7.30am and 2pm (ordinary/deluxe bus Rs 140/160), and a 16-hour tour to Srirangapatnam, Mysore and Brindavan Gardens departs daily at 7.15am (ordinary/deluxe bus Rs 435/560). KSTDC also has offices at the City train station and the airport.

Sleeping

As a major business destination, Bengaluru's accommodation is generally pricey and in short supply. The cheapest options (anything under Rs 500 a night) are near the bus stand and fill up quickly. Serviced apartments are frequently a better deal than many midrange (Rs 500 to 15,500) and top-end hotels. Wherever you stay, book as far ahead as possible.

BUDGET

Stacks of hotels line Subedar Chatram (SC) Rd, east of the bus stands and City train station. This neighbourhood is loud and seedy – women may not like it – but convenient if you're in transit. If you're in Bengaluru longer than one night, consider staying closer to MG Rd. All hotels listed here have hot water, at least in the mornings.

Chandra Vihar (Map p883; ☎ 22224146; Avenue Rd; s/d from Rs 255/400;) Convenient for the bazaar, which buzzes outside. Rooms are clean and spacious with TV and telephone; some have market views and balconies.

Hotel Adora (Map p883; ☎ 22872280; 47 SC Rd; s/d from Rs 280/380) One of the best of the SC Rd budget options. Downstairs is a good veg restaurant, Indraprastha Vegetarian.

Brindavan Hotel (Map p885; ☎ 25584000; 108 MG Rd; s/d from Rs 390/570;) Book well in advance for this popular cheapie offering large decent rooms with balconies, and an astro-palmist to fulfil other needs. Rates include taxes.

Hotel Ajantha (Map p883; ☎ 25584321; fax 25584780; 22A MG Rd; s/d from Rs 400/600;) Old Indian tourism posters decorate the halls of this simple hotel, with a range of well-taken-care-of rooms in a semiquiet compound off MG Rd (ask for a room away from the parking lot).

Citizen Lodge (Map p883; ☎ 25591793; fax 25596811; 3/4 Lady Curzon Rd; r from Rs 450;) The best rooms here are those facing on to the pretty garden at the back of the compound; they include rooms with AC and all the trimmings.

MIDRANGE

Hotel Empire (Map p883; ☎ 25592821; www.hotelempireinternational.com; 78 Central St; s/d from Rs 695/920;) Not too big a step up from the budget category, this appealing place offers bright rooms, friendly staff and constant hot water. Note the street – and the crowds who flock to the famous restaurant downstairs – can be noisy, as they are at the hotel's ritzier sister property, Hotel Empire International (Map p885; ☎ 25593743; 36 Church St), which is closer to MG Rd; prices at the Hotel Empire International start at Rs 1250/1650 for a single/double (including breakfast), and the hotel has internet access and AC.

Casa Piccola Serviced Apartments (Map p883; ☎ 22270754; www.casacottage.in; Wellington Park Apartments, Wellington St; r from Rs 1350;) The Oberoi family, who also run the Casa Piccola Cottage, offer a range of equally pleasant one-, two- and three-bedroom apartments in this building and opposite the cottage on nearby Clapham Rd.

Ashley Inn (Map p883; ☎ 25352020; www.aranhahomes.com; 11 Ashley Park Rd; r from Rs 1400;) This sweet guesthouse is seconds away from MG Rd, and has eight pleasantly furnished rooms and a homy atmosphere. There's free wi-fi access. The management company also offers a range of serviced apartments.

Tricolour Hotel (Map p883; ☎ 41279090; www.newindiahotels.com; 15 Tank Bund Rd; s/d incl breakfast Rs 2000/2500;) Part of a shopping mall and convenient for both bus and train stations, this new hotel brings a surprising touch of contemporary class to the area. Rates include breakfast.

our pick Casa Piccola Cottage & Service Apartments (Map p883; ☎ 22270754; www.casacottage.in; 2 Clapham Rd; r from Rs 2000;) This beautifully renovated 1915 cottage is a tranquil sanctuary from the madness of the city. Some of the studio rooms have kitchenettes for self-catering. Wi-fi access is available, and rates include breakfast served under a gazebo in the garden.

Ballal Residency (Map p885; ☎ 25597277; www.ballalgrouphotels.com; 74/4 3rd Cross, Residency Rd; s/d Rs 2000/2600;) Set back from the chaos, the Ballal offers big, sparkling clean rooms with all the mod cons, including wi-fi. Downstairs is a popular pure-veg restaurant and sweet shop.

Mélange (Map p883; ☎ 22129700; www.melangebangalore.com; 21 Vittal Mallya Rd; apt from Rs 2500;) Occupying part of an apartment block just off Bengaluru's chicest shopping street, you can choose between economy apartments or upgraded ones with guaranteed electricity supply and lots of mod cons.

Villa Pottipati (☎ 23360777; www.neemranahotels.com; 142 8th Cross, 4th Main, Malleswaram; r from Rs 3000;) An inconvenient location away from the centre is the only downside of this small colonial charmer. Raj era–style rooms come with antique furnishings, the gardens include a dunk-sized pool and service is very friendly.

Tristar Apartments (☎ 51185900; www.tristarapt.com; 1216 100ft Rd, HAL 2nd Stage, Indiranagar; apt studio/deluxe incl breakfast Rs 3750/4500;) Handy for the business parks on this side of town, and the restaurants and bars of 100ft Rd, these appealing apartments are dressed in IKEA-style furnishings and have a Jacuzzi on the roof.

Bride (Map p883; ☎ 41144408; www.bridesuites.com; 5 Bride St, Langford Town; r incl breakfast from US$99;) Designed by a US architect and tastefully furnished, these suites are spacious and come with big lounges and kitchens that are shared between the rooms on each floor. There's a roof garden with a small gym.

Jayamahal Palace (☎ 23331321; www.jayamahalpalace.com; 1 Jayamahal Rd; s/d from US$100/112;) Originally built by Bangalore's British Resident, this cute palace is set in placid, green gardens. The cheapest rooms are in a new block; they're small but quite good. Some of the suites dazzle but the bathrooms can leave something to be desired.

Regaalis (Map p883; ☎ 411133111; www.regaalis.net; 40/2 Lavelle Rd; r from US$115;) Slick business hotels like this are sprouting like mushrooms in central Bengaluru. The Regaalis scores with a great location and pleasant decorative touches in the rooms (including massage chairs).

TOP END

Bengaluru has its Tajs (three of them!), its Oberoi and a host of other luxe hotels with matching price tags.

Ista Hotel (☎ 25558888; www.istahotels.com; 1/1 Swami Vivekananda Rd, Ulsoor; s/d from US$350/370;) Meaning 'Bliss', Ista delivers accommodation happiness in a cool, minimalist style. Smallish rooms offer sweeping vistas across Ulsoor lake and the city, and the bar and restaurant opening on to the rooftop pool are heavenly.

Park (Map p883; ☎ 25594666; www.theparkhotels.com; 14/7 MG Rd; r from US$350;) This Terence Conran–styled hotel is as swish as the vibrantly colourful raw silk curtains coddling the lobby. Rooms are a little cramped but very fashionable. The hotel's i-bar and magnifico Italian restaurant i-t.alia are among the places to be seen in Bengaluru.

Eating

Bengaluru's delicious dining scene keeps pace with the whims and rising standards of its hungry, moneyed masses. Unless mentioned otherwise all restaurants are open from noon to 3pm, and 7pm to 11pm. If there's a telephone number, it's advisable to book.

MG ROAD AREA

All the following venues appear on Map p885.

Ulla's Refreshments (1st fl, Public Utility Bldg, MG Rd; mains Rs 40-70; 9am-10pm) Rise above the MG Rd crowds on Ulla's convivial terrace, where you can dig into simple, tasty North and South Indian fare. Thalis (traditional South Indian and Gujerati 'all-you-can-eat' meal) kick off at Rs 65.

Queen's Restaurant (Church St; mains Rs 50-120) The rustic, tribal décor gives this cosy restaurant the atmosphere of an upmarket mud hut. The delicious Indian food draws in the customers.

Nagarjuna (44/1 Residency Rd; mains Rs 60-125) Not a place to linger, this fast-moving, constantly packed-out joint dishes up spicy-as-hell Andhra specialities on banana leaves.

Only Place (☎ 30618989; 13 Museum Rd; mains Rs 70-200) The burgers, steaks and yummy apple pie couldn't be tastier at this delightful semi-alfresco restaurant with a relaxed vibe.

Ebony (13th fl, Barton Centre, 84 MG Rd; mains Rs 90-275) Worth visiting for its terrace tables overlooking the city and its savoury mains of the Thai, French and Parsi varieties.

Legend of Sikandar (☎ 51252333; 4th fl, Garuda Mall, Magrath Rd; mains Rs 100-300) Serves Lucknowi, Hyderabadi and North Indian cuisine to general applause.

ELSEWHERE

Mavalli Tiffin Rooms (MTR; Map p883; Lalbagh Rd; dishes Rs 16-80; 6.30-11am, 12.30-2.45pm, 3.30-7.30pm & 8-9pm) MTR dishes up legendary masala dosas (curried vegetables inside a crisp pancake) for breakfast and tiffin (snacks). Be prepared to stand in line, especially for the thalis – a feast of 12 dishes for lunch and dinner.

Konark (Map p883; 50 Residency Rd; mains Rs 30-70) This place serves tasty Indian food in colourful, comfy surroundings. The lunchtime South Indian thali (Rs 75) is a gut buster; for something less filling, opt for the snack dishes, or eggless cakes and pastries.

Paparazzi (Map p883; ☎ 25584242; 10th fl, Royal Orchid Central Hotel, 47/1 Dickenson Rd; mains Rs 200-300) Spicy chicken kebabs (served on a flaming skewer) and decent caesar salads are served with sweeping city views at this supertrendy place. The Rs 200 set lunch is a good option.

Harima (Map p883; ☎ 41325757; 4th fl, Devatha Plaza, 131 Residency Rd; mains Rs 200-300) Practically a home-away-from-home for Bengaluru's expat Japanese, Harima is pretty much on the mark for its atmosphere and Japanese food, including sushi, noodles, tempura and more obscure dishes, such as natto (fermented bean sprouts).

Sunny's (Map p883; ☎ 22243642; 34 Vittal Mallya Rd; mains Rs 200-500) Beloved by the expat and well-to-do Indian set, Sunny's is like a little piece of California transplanted to downtown Bengaluru. The salads, pizzas and pastas are impressive, and the desserts downright sinful.

Casa del Sol (Map p883; ☎ 51510101; 3rd fl, Devatha Plaza, 131 Residency Rd; mains Rs 250; 11am-11pm) This is a relaxed Mediterranean-style bistro with a semialfresco area. Wednesday is disco night, Thursday has free salsa classes and Sunday has a good brunch (Rs 524) with lots of activities for kids.

Olive Beach (Map p883; ☎ 41128400; 16 Wood St, Ashoknagar; mains Rs 425-600) This spot duplicates the groovy Mediterranean style and deliciously authentic food of its Delhi and Mumbai (Bombay) sisters. Book ahead for the great Sunday brunch (Rs 1500) with free-flowing booze.

our pick Grasshopper (☎ 26593999; 45 Kalena Agrahara, Bannerghatta Rd; 5-/7-course meals Rs 700/1000) You won't regret schlepping 15km south of the city centre to enjoy a delicious, relaxed meal at this restaurant-cum-fashion-boutique in a leafy residential setting. Husband and wife team Sonali and Himanshu design clothes, and fantastic fusion menus of five or seven set courses. Bookings are essential, with weekends being the busiest.

Also recommended:

Samarkand (Map p883; ☎ 41113364; Gem Plaza, Infantry Rd; mains Rs 100-250) For Peshawari cuisine and theatrical décor.

Tandoor (Map p883; ☎ 25584620; Centenary Bldg, 28 MG Rd; mains Rs 100-300) Consistently good tandoori, biryani (steamed rice with meat or vegetables) and kebab dishes.

KARNATAKA

Drinking

BARS & LOUNGES

For all its reputation as a 'pub city', Bengaluru is also an early-to-bed city with strict last orders at 11.30pm (unless mentioned opening time is 7.30pm). This said, the city does a nice line in plush lounge-type spaces for cocktails and nibbles. Typically the trendiest spots will have a cover charge on Friday or Saturday of around Rs 500 for a couple or a single guy and Rs 300 for women; the cover charge is often refundable against drinks or food.

Beach (1211 100ft Rd, HAL 2nd Stage, Indiranagar) Feel the sand between your toes – literally – at this fun beach-bums' bar in the happening Indiranagar area. Women drink for free on Wednesday.

Cosmo Village (Map p885; 29 Magrath Rd) Setting the Bengaluru lounge-bar standard, this place goes through more make-overs than Paris Hilton, yet still manages to remain popular with both locals and expats.

Fuga (Map p883; 1 Castle St, Ashoknagar) This eye-poppingly slick bar-club-lounge wouldn't look out of place in New York or London. DJ Sasha works the decks and absinthe is the mixer of choice in the cocktail lounge.

Koshy's Bar & Restaurant (Map p885; 39 St Mark's Rd; 9am-11.30pm) Locals love the British-school-dinner-style meals (mains Rs 50 to 250) dished up at this Bengaluru institution. Skip that and indulge in an unrushed beer in its buzzy, non-AC dining room.

NASA (Map p885; 1A Church St; 11am-11pm) The antithesis of hip, this old favourite is decked out like a spaceship. It's a trip, especially when those laser shows spark up.

1912 (Map p885; 40 St Mark's Rd) An older crowd hang out at this elegant option with a small courtyard. It's a good spot for a quiet drink, until the DJ – or sometimes a live band – gets things moving later on.

Taika (Map p885; 206-209 The Pavilion, 62-63 MG Rd; 12.30-3pm & 7.30-11.30pm) This so-called spa lounge offers Ayurvedic food, although it wasn't available when we visited. Really it's just a cool place to twizzle your cocktail stick in a slick rooftop setting. There's a disco at the back.

13th Floor (Map p885; 13th fl, Barton Centre, 84 MG Rd) Come early to grab a spot on the balcony, with all of Bengaluru glittering at your feet. The atmosphere is that of a relaxed cocktail party.

CAFÉS & TEAHOUSES

Bengaluru is liberally sprinkled with good chain cafés, such as Café Coffee Day (Map p885; MG Rd; 8am-11.30pm) and Barista (Map p885; 40 St Mark's Rd; 8am-11.30pm). For something a bit different try one of the following.

Indian Coffee House (Map p885; 78 MG Rd; 8.30am-8.30pm) Waiters in turbans and fabulous buckled belts dish out South India's best java at this charming old-timer with yellowing formica table tops.

Infinitea (Map p883; www.infini-tea.com; 2 Shah Sultan Complex, Cunningham Rd; 10.45am-11pm) Infinitea is an amiable modern teahouse that offers a great range of infusions from across the subcontinent. It's also an ideal spot for lunch and snacks.

Cha Bar (Oxford Bookstore, Leela Galleria, Airport Rd; 10am-10pm) Offering more than 20 different types of tea, Cha Bar allows you to hunker down with a book or magazine from the attached bookshop.

Entertainment

BOWLING

Amoeba (Map p885; ☎ 25594631; 22 Church St; ⏰ 11am-11pm) A date with the lanes at this state-of-the-art bowling alley costs Rs 80 to 125 per person, depending on the time of day.

CINEMA

English-language films are popular; tickets are around Rs 60, rising to Rs 220 at the multiplexes.

INOX (Map p885; ☎ 41128888; www.inox.com; 5th fl; Garuda Mall, Magrath Rd)

Nani Cinematheque (Map p883; ☎ 22356262; www.collectivechaos.org/nani.html; 5th fl, Sona Tower, 71 Millers Rd) Classic Indian and European films are screened Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

PVR Cinema (Map p883; ☎ 22067511; www.pvrcinemas.com; Forum, 21 Hosur Rd) Megacinema with 11 theatres.

Rex (Map p885; ☎ 25587350; 12/13 Brigade Rd) Has regional films, too.

SPORT

Bengaluru's winter horse-racing season runs from November to February, and its summer season is from May to July. Races are generally held on Friday and Saturday afternoons. Contact the Bangalore Turf Club (Map p883; ☎ 22262391; www.bangaloreraces.com; Racecourse Rd) for details.

For a taste of India's sporting passion up close, attend one of the regular cricket matches at M Chinnaswamy Stadium (Map p883; ☎ 22869970; MG Rd). A range of tickets (Rs 50 to 500) is sold on the day, though there are inevitably queues. A good seat in a not-too-crowded area costs about Rs 250. The Karnataka Cricket Association (☎ 22869631) has the spin.

THEATRE

Ranga Shankara (☎ 26592777; www.rangashankara.org; 36/2 8th Cross, JP Nagar) All kinds of interesting theatre (in a variety of languages) and dance are held at this cultural centre.

Shopping

Bengaluru's shopping options are abundant, ranging from teeming bazaars (see p886) to glitzy malls. Some good shopping areas include Commercial St (Map p883), Vittal Malya Rd (Map p883) and MG Rd (Map p885) between St Mark's and Brigade Rds.

Cinnamon (Map p883; 11 Walton Rd; ⏰ 10.30am-8.15pm) Just off Lavelle Rd, Cinnamon is a chic boutique for clothes, homewares and gifts – perfect for stylish souvenirs.

Fabindia (☎ 25532070; 54 17th Main; ⏰ 10am-8pm) This flagship shop contains Fabindia's full range of stylish clothes and homewares in traditional cotton prints and silks. There's a also a small café. From Hosur Rd, make a left at the mosque about 1km past the Forum; Fabindia is on the right. There are also branches on Commerical St (Map p883) and in the Garuda mall (Map p885; McGrath Rd).

100ft (☎ 25277752; 777/1, 100ft Rd, HAL 2nd Stage, Indiranagar; ⏰ 11am-11pm) An appealing boutique for colourful clothes, interior design and handicrafts; it also has a restaurant and bar.

Raintree (Map p883; 4 Sankey Rd; ⏰ 10am-7pm Mon-Sat, 11am-6pm Sun) This early-20th-century villa has been turned into a stylish gift shop, fashion shop and café; it includes a branch of fab clothes shop Anokhi, which is also found at the Leela Galleria (23 Airport Rd, Kodihalli).

14 VM Rd (Map p883; 14 Vittal Mallya Rd) This classy boutique complex showcases top Indian designers, including Abraham & Thakore, Manish Arora and Neeru Kumar.

Ffolio (Map p883; 5 Vittal Mallya Rd) Head to this shop for high Indian fashion. Ffolio also has a branch at Leela Galleria (23 Airport Rd, Kodihalli).

Bombay Store (Map p885; 99 MG Rd; ⏰ 10.30am-8.30pm) This is a one-stop option for gifts ranging from ecobeauty products to linens.

Planet M (Map p885; 9 Brigade Rd; ⏰ 10.30am-9pm) Try this shop for all kinds of recorded music and movies.

Mysore Saree Udyog (Map p883; 1st fl, 294 Kamaraj Rd; ⏰ 10.30am-8.30pm Mon-Sat) Located near Commercial St, Mysore Saree Udyog is great for top-quality silks and saris.

Bengaluru's malls include Garuda (Map p885; McGrath Rd), Forum (Map p883; Hosur Rd, Koramangala) and Leela Galleria (23 Airport Rd, Kodihalli).

BUS

Bengaluru's huge, well-organised Central bus stand (Map p883; Gubbi Thotadappa Rd) is directly in front of the City train station. Karnataka State Road Transport Corporation (KSRTC; ☎ 22870099) buses run throughout Karnataka and to neighbouring states; the Rajahamsa is its comfortable deluxe model. Other interstate bus operators:

Andhra Pradesh State Road Transport Corporation (APSRTC; ☎ 22873915)
Kadamba Transport Corporation (☎ 22351958) Goa.
State Express Transport Corporation (SETC; ☎ 22876974) Tamil Nadu.

Computerised advance booking is available for most buses at the station; KSRTC (Map p883; Devantha Plaza, Residency Rd) also has convenient booking counters around town, including one at Devantha Plaza. It's wise to book long-distance journeys in advance.

Numerous private bus companies offer comfier and only slightly more expensive services. Private bus operators (Map p883) line the street facing the Central bus stand, or you can book through an agency (see p885).

Major KSRTC bus services from Bengaluru are listed on below.

TRAIN

Bengaluru's City train station (Map p883; Gubbi Thotadappa Rd) is the main train hub and the place to make reservations. Cantonment train station (Map p883; Station Rd) is a sensible spot to disembark if you're arriving and headed for the MG Rd area, while Yesvantpur train station (Rahman Khan Rd), 8km northwest of downtown, is the starting point for Goa trains.

Rail reservations in Bengaluru are computerised. If your train is fully booked, it's usually possible to get into the emergency quota; first, buy a wait-listed ticket, then fill out a form at the Divisional Railway Office (Map p883; Gubbi Thotadappa Rd) building immediately north of the City train station. You find out about 10 hours before departure whether you've got a seat (a good chance); if not, the ticket is refunded. The train reservation office (☎ 139; 8am-8pm Mon-Sat, 8am-2pm Sun), on the left as you face the station, has separate counters for credit-card purchases (Rs 30 fee), women and foreigners. Luggage can be left at the 24-hour cloakroom on Platform 1 at the City train station (from Rs 10 per bag per day).

See above for information on major train services.

Getting Around

TO/FROM THE AIRPORT

The airport is about 9km east of the MG Rd area. Prepaid taxis can take you from the airport to the city (Rs 190), but in the other direction you'll probably have to haggle for a price. An autorickshaw will set you back about Rs 60. Bus 333 goes from the City bus stand to the airport (Rs 15, 45 minutes).

A new international airport (www.bialairport.com) is scheduled to open in April 2008.

AUTORICKSHAW

The city's autorickshaw drivers are legally required to use their meters. After 10pm, 50% is added onto the metered rate, but you'll usually have to negotiate a fare. Flag fall is Rs 10 and then Rs 5 for each extra kilometre. There's a prepaid autorickshaw stand outside the City train station, as well as a couple along MG Rd and outside the Garuda Mall. From the City train station to MG Rd costs Rs 30.

BUS

Bengaluru has a thorough but often crowded local bus network. Pickpockets abound and locals warn that solo women should think twice about taking buses after dark. Most local buses (light blue) run from the City bus stand (Map p883), next to the Central bus stand; a few operate from the City Market bus stand (Map p883) to the south.

To get from the City train station to the MG Rd area, catch any bus from Platform 17 or 18 at the City bus stand. For the City market, take bus 31, 31E, 35 or 49 from Platform 8.

CAR

Plenty of places around Bengaluru offer car rental with driver or (if you're fearless) self-drive. Standard rates for a Hindustan Motors Ambassador car are Rs 5.5 per kilometre for a minimum of 250km, plus an allowance of Rs 125 for the driver (a total of Rs 1375 per day). For an eight-hour rental of a Tata Indicar with a driver you're looking at around Rs 850.

AROUND BENGALURU

Bannerghatta Biological Park

The attached zoo is a little grim, but it's well worth making the 25km trek south of Bengaluru to this nature reserve (☎ 080-27828425; 9am-5.30pm Wed-Mon) to take its hour-long grand safari (weekday/weekend Rs 85/110; 11am to 4pm) in a minibus through an 11,330-hectare enclosure. Here the Karnataka Forest Department is rehabilitating 34 tigers (including two white ones) and 11 lions rescued from circuses.

It's an easy half-day trip from Bengaluru, but if you want to stay over, Jungle Lodges & Resorts Ltd (Map p885; ☎ 080-25597021; www.junglelodges.com; 2nd fl, Shrungar Shopping Complex, MG Rd, Bengaluru; 10am-5.30pm) has some log huts here. On the way out or back you could also visit the excellent restaurant and boutique Grasshopper (p890). Bus 366A from City Market runs here (Rs 20, one hour).

Wonder La

Wonder La is a brand-new water park (www.wonderla.com; adult/child/senior/disabled Mon-Fri Rs 430/330/280/320, Sat, Sun & hols 540/400/350/400; 11am-7pm Mon-Fri, 11am-8pm Sat, Sun & hols) located just under 30km from Bengaluru along the Bengaluru–Mysore highway. The massive park offers dozens of water and 'dry' rides.

KARNATAKA

Hessaraghatta

Located 30km northwest of Bengaluru, Hessaraghatta is home to Nrityagram (☎ 080-28466313; www.nrityagram.org; 10am-5.30pm Tue-Sat, 10am-3pm Sun), the living legacy of celebrated dancer Protima Gauri Bedi, who died in a Himalayan avalanche in 1998. Protima established this dance academy in 1989 to revive and popularise Indian classical dance.

Designed in the form of a village by Goa-based architect Gerard da Cunha, the attractive complex offers the long-term study of classical dance within a holistic curriculum. Local children are taught for free on Sunday. Self-guided tours cost Rs 20 or you can call ahead to book a tour, lecture-cum-demonstration and vegetarian meal (Rs 850, minimum 10 people). A month-long beginners' workshop is held in July for US$1000. Earmark the first Saturday in February for the free dance festival Vasantahabba (p882).

Opposite the dance village, Taj Kuteeram (☎ 080-22252846; www.tajhotels.com; r from Rs 4300;) combines comfort with rustic charm. It offers Ayurveda and yoga sessions.

Learn how to drive a bullock cart and how to milk a cow at Our Native Village (☎ 9880999924; www.ournativevillage.com; Survey 72, Kodihalli, Madurai Hobli; s/d incl full board Rs 3750/4500;), an ecofriendly organic farm and resort. The resort generates its own power, harvests rainwater, and processes and reuses all its waste.

From Bengaluru's City Market, buses 253, 253D, 253E run to Hessaraghatta (Rs 20, one hour), with bus 266 continuing on to Nrityagram.

Nandi Hills

Rising to 1455m the Nandi Hills (admission Rs 5; 6am-10pm), 60km north of Bengaluru, were once the summer retreat of Tipu Sultan. It's a good place for hiking with stellar views and two notable Chola temples. Avoid weekends if you like your nature quiet. A recommended retreat out here is Silver Oak Farm (☎ 9342510445; www.silveroakfarm.com; Sultanpet Village; s/d incl full board from Rs 2250/3250), which has a beautiful hillside position. Buses head to Nandi Hills (Rs 40, two hours) from Bengaluru's Central bus stand.

Janapada Loka Folk Arts Museum

HL Nage Gowda spent decades researching the folk arts and native cultures of the region. The fruits of his labours are on display at this engaging museum (☎ 08113-72701143; admission Rs 10; 9am-1.30pm & 2.30-5.30pm Wed-Mon), 53km southwest of Bengaluru, which is worth a brief pause if you're driving towards Mysore. Displayed items include 500-year-old shadow puppets, festival costumes and instruments. There's an attached restaurant. Mysore-bound buses (one hour) will get you here; ask to be dropped 3km after Ramanagaram.

MYSORE

It's not difficult to divine Mysore's charismatic appeal. The historic seat of the Wodeyar maharajas is easy to get around, has a good climate and works hard to promotes its regal heritage. Famous for its traditional painting and its silk, sandalwood and incense production, Mysore is now promoting itself as an international centre for Ashtanga yoga. Whether you choose to stretch your body in a traditional yoga pose or take more gentle exercise strolling through the city's magnificent palace and colourful market, Mysore is one Indian city that rewards a slower pace.

History

Mysore was named after the mythical Mahisuru, where the goddess Chamundi slew the demon Mahishasura. The Mysore dynasty was founded in 1399, but up until the mid-16th century its rulers, the Wodeyars, were in the service of the Vijayanagar emperor. With the fall of the empire in 1565, the Mysore rulers were among the first to declare their independence.

Apart from a brief period in the late 18th century when Hyder Ali and Tipu Sultan usurped the throne, the Wodeyars continued to rule until Independence in 1947. In 1956 when the new state was formed, the former maharaja was elected governor.

Orientation

The train station is northwest of the city centre, about 1km from the main shopping street, Sayyaji Rao Rd. The Central bus stand is on Bengaluru–Mysore (BM) Rd, on the northeastern edge of the city centre. The Maharaja's Palace occupies the entire southeastern sector of the city centre. Chamundi Hill is an ever-visible landmark to the south.

Sights

MAHARAJA'S PALACE

The fantastic profile of this walled Indo-Saracenic palace (Mysore Palace; 2434425; www.mysorepalace.org; admission Rs 20, camera Rs 5; 10am-5.30pm), the seat of the maharajas of Mysore, graces the city's skyline. An earlier palace burnt down in 1897 and the present one, designed by English architect Henry Irwin, was completed in 1912 at a cost of Rs 4.5 million.

The palace's interior – a kaleidoscope of stained glass, mirrors and gaudy colours – is undoubtedly over the top, but it includes awe-inspiring carved wooden doors and mosaic floors, as well as a series of historically interesting paintings depicting life in Mysore during the Edwardian Raj. Hindu temples within the palace grounds include the Sri Shweta Varahaswamy Temple; its gopuram (gateway tower) influenced the style of the later Sri Chamundeswari Temple on Chamundi Hill. There's also the Royal House of Mysore shop selling exclusive designs of saris and dupattas (scarves worn by Punjabi women).

The entry fee is paid at the southern gate of the grounds; keep your ticket to enter the palace building itself. Cameras must be deposited at the entrance gate – you can only take photos of the outside of the buildings. Some books on historical sites are sold near the exit of the main rooms, though the state

DUSSEHRA

Mysore puts on quite a show for the 10-day Dussehra festival. The Maharaja's Palace and much of the city is illuminated every night (7pm to 9pm), and there are concerts, dance performances and other cultural events. The last day sees a dazzling procession (kicking off around 1pm) of richly costumed elephants, a garlanded idol, liveried retainers and cavalry marching through the streets to the rhythms of brass bands, travelling from the palace to the Bannimantap parade ground. In the evening, a torchlight parade at Bannimantap and fireworks closes the festival.

Mysore is packed during the festival, especially on the final day. The city has been promoting the Dussehra Gold Card (Rs 5000 for two people) as a way of avoiding the crowds. It's pricey, but it assures you good seats at both the final day's main events and includes entry to all Mysore's attractions and performances during the festival, as well as providing discounts on accommodation, dining and shopping. It's also possible to buy tickets (starting at Rs 200) just for access into the palace and Bannimantap for the parades. Contact the local KSTDC office or the Dussehra Information Centre (☎ 3203888; www.mysoredasara.com) for more details.

archaeology office, in the southwest part of the grounds, has a more complete collection.

Incorporating some of the palace's living quarters and personal effects belonging to the maharaja's family, the Residential Museum (admission Rs 20; 10.30am-6.30pm) is rather dull next to the lustre of the state rooms.

Ninety-six thousand light bulbs illuminate the building during Dussehra (above) and every Sunday from 7pm to 8pm.

DEVARAJA MARKET

Built during Tipu Sultan's time, the spellbinding Devaraja Market (Sayyaji Rao Rd; 6am-8.30pm) is one of India's most colourful and lively bazaars. Stalls selling all manner of fruits, vegetables, flower garlands and spices, and conical piles of kumkum (coloured powder used for bindi dots on heads of married women as well as other religious rituals) make ideal photographic subjects. Be prepared to bargain when shopping.

CHAMUNDI HILL

Overlooking Mysore from the 1062m-high summit of Chamundi Hill, the Sri Chamundeswari Temple (☎ 2590027; 7am-2pm & 3.30-9pm), dominated by a towering seven-storey, 40m-high gopuram, makes a fine half-day excursion. Pilgrims are supposed to climb the 1000-plus steps to the top; those not needing a karmic boost will find descending easier. A road goes to the top; bus 201 departs from the City bus stand in Mysore for the summit every 40 minutes (Rs 6, 30 minutes). A taxi will cost about Rs 200.

A path that starts near the stalls behind the statue will lead you down the hill, a 45-minute descent taking in 1000 steps and reenergising views. One-third of the way down is a 5m-high Nandi (Shiva's bull vehicle) that was carved out of solid rock in 1659. It's one of the largest in India and is visited by hordes of pilgrims. The garlanded statue has a flaky black coating of coconut-husk charcoal mixed with ghee.

You may have rubbery legs by the time you reach the bottom of the hill and it's still about 2km back to Mysore's centre. Fortunately, there are usually autorickshaws nearby, which charge Rs 40 or so for the trip back to town.

JAYACHAMARAJENDRA ART GALLERY

The Jaganmohan Palace, just west of the Maharaja's Palace, houses the Jayachamarajendra Art Gallery (☎ 2423693; Jaganmohan Palace Rd; adult/child Rs 15/8; 8.30am-5pm), which has a collection of kitsch objects and memorabilia from the Wodeyars, including weird and wonderful musical machines, rare instruments, Japanese art, and paintings by Raja Ravi Varma. Built in 1861, the palace served as a royal auditorium.

INDIRA GANDHI RASHTRIYA MANAV SANGRAHALAYA

The Bophal-based Indira Gandhi Rashtriya Manav Sangrahalaya (National Museum of Mankind; ☎ 2448231; www.museumofmankindindia.org; Wellington House, Irwin Rd; admission free; 10am-5.30pm Tue-Sun) is dedicated to preserving and promoting traditional Indian arts and culture. The Mysore branch functions primarily as a cultural centre and exhibition space showcasing arts from rural India. Monthly demonstrations and lectures are open to the public, as are workshops, which are usually two-week courses in a traditional art form. The museum has excellent rotating exhibitions and a good souvenir shop.

JAYALAKSHMI VILAS COMPLEX MUSEUM

Inside the Mysore University Campus, 3km west of the city centre, this museum (☎ 2419348; admission free; ⌚ 10am-5.30pm Mon-Sat, closed alternate Sat) housed in a grand mansion specialises in folklore. Displays include a wooden puppet of the 10-headed demon Ravana, leather shadow puppets, rural costumes, a 300-year-old temple cart and a stuffed tiger bearing a portrait of a past maharaja framed with elephant tusks!

RAIL MUSEUM

To see how Indian royals travelled in days past, pop into this museum (☎ 9844060012; KRS Rd; adult/child Rs 10/5; ⌚ 9.30am-6.30pm Tue-Sun) behind the train station, where you can inspect the Mysore maharani's saloon, a wood-panelled beauty dating from 1899. There are also five steam engines, each with its own story.

OTHER SIGHTS

Mysore is an architectural vaudeville of fine buildings and monuments. Dating from 1805, Government House (Irwin Rd), formerly the British Residency, is a Tuscan Doric building set in 20 hectares of gardens (admission free; ⌚ 5am-9pm).

In front of the north gate of the Maharaja's Palace is the 1920 statue of Maharaja Chamarajendar Wodeyar (New Statue Circle), facing the 1927 Silver Jubilee Clock Tower (Ashoka Rd). Nearby is the imposing Rangacharlu Memorial Hall, built in 1884. The next circle west is the 1950s Krishnaraja Circle, better known as KR Circle, graced by a statue of Maharaja Krishnaraja Wodeyar.

Towering St Philomena's Cathedral (☎ 2563148; St Philomena St; ⌚ 5am-6pm, English mass 7am), built between 1933 and 1941 in neo-Gothic style, is one of the largest in India and has beautiful stained-glass windows.

Mysore's zoo (☎ 2440752; Indiranagar; adult/child Rs 25/5, camera Rs 10; ⌚ 8.30am-5.30pm Wed-Mon), set in pretty gardens on the eastern edge of the city, dates from 1892. A range of primates, tigers, elephants, bears, birds and rhinos live here.

Activities & Courses

BIRD-WATCHING

Karanji Lake Nature Park (Indiranagar; admission Rs 10, camera/video Rs 10/25; ⌚ 8.30am-5.30pm), next to the zoo, is home to a large number of bird species, including great and little cormorants, purple and grey herons, various egrets, black ibises, rose-ringed parakeets, green bee-eaters and painted storks, as well as several kinds of butterfly. The aviary here is sad but fascinating; its enormous great pied hornbill is a sight to see.

AYURVEDA

Emerge Spa (☎ 2522500; www.emergespa.co.in; Windflower Spa & Resort, Maharanapratap Rd, Nazarbad), Mysore's slickest spa operation, offers an hour's Ayurvedic massage starting at Rs 690, as well as a range of Balinese massage, hydrotherapy and beauty treatments.

Classy Indus Valley Ayurvedic Centre (☎ 2473437; www.ayurindus.com; Lalithadripura) is set on 16 hectares of gardens, 7km east of Mysore at the foot of Chamundi Hill. Its academic approach to the science of Ayurveda is based strictly on the Vedas (Hindu sacred books), and it offers training programmes for those interested in learning the technique. A whole body massage and steam is Rs 860. Vikram-style yoga classes are held at 7am and 4pm (Rs 210). The best deals are the overnight-stay packages (single/double from Rs 5040/7980).

More of a clinic than a spa, Kerala Ayurvedic Health Centre (☎ 5269111; www.keralaayurhealth.com; 10/1 Jhansi Lakshmi Bhai Cross Rd) offers four-hour sessions for around US$20. Training courses and yoga classes are also given.

The outpatient operation of Swaasthya Ayurveda Village (p902), Swaasthya Ayurveda Centre (☎ 5557557; www.swaasthya.com; Vijayanagar) offers similar keenly priced, expertly performed treatments. It's 5km west of Mysore's centre, just past the Green Hotel and behind Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan.

YOGA

The following places have put Mysore on the international yoga map. Most courses require at least a month's commitment, and you'll need to book far in advance for Ashtanga Yoga Research Institute and the Atma Vikasa Centre; call or write to the centres for details.

Ashtanga Yoga Research Institute (AYRI; ☎ 2516756; www.ayri.org; 3rd Stage, 235 8th Cross, Gokulam) Ninety-two-year-old K Pattabhi Jois is famous in Ashtanga circles the world over. He taught Madonna her yoga moves.

Atma Vikasa Centre (☎ 2341978; www.atmavikasa.com; Bharathi Mahila Samaja, Kuvempunagar Double Rd) 'Backbending expert' Yogacharya Venkatesh offers courses in yoga, Sanskrit and meditation.

Sri Patanjala Yogashala (Yoga Research Institute; Sri Bramatantra Swatantra Parakala Mutt, Jaganmohan Palace Circle; 6-8am & 5-7pm) The well-respected Ashtanga practitioner BNS Iyengar (not to be confused with BKS Iyengar, famed exponent of Iyengar yoga) teaches here.

MUSIC

The folks at Shruthi Musical Works (2529551; 1189 3rd Cross, Irwin Rd; 10.30am-9pm Mon-Sat, 10.30am-2pm Sun) get good reviews for their tabla instruction (Rs 200 per hour).

Tours

The KSTDC's comprehensive Mysore city tour (Rs 125) takes in city sights plus Chamundi Hill, Srirangapatnam and Brindavan Gardens. It starts daily at 8.30am, ends at 8.30pm and is likely to leave you breathless.

Other KSTDC tours include one to Belur, Halebid and Sravanabelagola (Rs 325) every Tuesday, Wednesday, Friday and Sunday at 7.30am, ending at 9pm; and Ooty (Udhagamandalam) every Monday, Thursday and Saturday (Rs 350) leaving at 7am and returning at 9pm. Both these tours run daily in the high season.

All tours leave from the KSTDC Hotel Mayura Hoysala (2 Jhansi Lakshmi Bai Rd). Bookings can be made at the KSTDC Transport Office (p895) or at travel agencies around town.

Sleeping

Rooms fill up during Dussehra, so book ahead if you're arriving during the festival. Also check with the tourist office about the local homestay programme, which offers rooms from around Rs 400 per person.

BUDGET

The following have hot water (at least in the morning) and 24-hour checkout.

Mysore Youth Hostel (2544704; www.yhmysore.com; Gangothri Layout; dm from Rs 40;) All the usual rules and regs, including a 10.30pm curfew, are in place at this well-run, friendly hostel set in quiet, green grounds about 4km from the city centre.

Hotel Dasaprakash (2442444; www.mysoredasaprakashgroup.com; Gandhi Sq; s/d from Rs 215/420;) This long-time favourite has efficient service, and old wooden furniture in some rooms. Within the complex there's an inexpensive veg restaurant, an ice-cream parlour, a travel agency and an astro-palmist.

Chamundi Vasathi Gruha (5266162; Chandragupta Rd; s/d Rs 250/550;) This family-run place has a smattering of colonial charm, pumpkin-coloured walls and internet access.

Hotel Maurya (2426677; Hanumantha Rao St; s/d from Rs 400/600) In the process of upgrading all its well-kept rooms, this justly popular place has obliging staff and a great location among Mysore's winding alleys.

Ritz Hotel (2422668; hotelritz@rediffmail.com; BM Rd; d/q Rs 450/700) The Ritz's glory days are long gone but its four old-fashioned rooms have charm. The shaded restaurant-bar is a good place for a quiet drink or snack.

MIDRANGE

KSTDC Hotel Mayura Hoysala (2425349; www.nic.in/kstdc; 2 Jhansi Lakshmi Bai Rd; s/d incl breakfast from Rs 500/650;) This government hotel with clean, good sized rooms is convenient for the train station, but it's also on a busy street, so don't bargain on a quiet night's sleep.

Hotel Maurya Palace (2435912; www.sangroupofhotels.com; 2716 Sri Harsha Rd; r from Rs 575;) Along with its sister property next door, Maurya Residency (2523375; room with AC from Rs 745), this is the best of the Sri Harsha Rd hotel gang. The staff are helpful, the tidy rooms well presented and its nonveg restaurant Jewel Rock is beloved by carnivores.

Hotel Palace Plaza (2430034; www.hotelpalaceplaza.com; Sri Harsha Rd; s/d from Rs 600/750;) Not the most palatial of places, but the rooms here are modern, tastefully decorated and comfortable.

Hotel Vyshak International (2421777; vyshakinternational@yahoo.com; 19 Seebaiah Rd; d from Rs 800;) Clean, efficiently run and welcoming – what more could you want? The management also runs the Vyshak Residency (double from Rs 800) across the road.

Ginger (6633333; www.gingerhotels.com; Nazarbad Mohalla; s/d Rs 999/1199;) This ultramodern business hotel is painted in warm orange tones. The sleek rooms are good value and come with lots of features, including wi-fi and LCD TVs.

our pick Green Hotel (2512536; www.greenhotelindia.com; 2270 Vinoba Rd, Jayalakshmipuram; s/d garden from Rs 1250/1650, palace from Rs 2250/2500) Partly housed in a century-old palace once used as a country retreat for Wodeyar princesses, the award-winning Green Hotel, 5km west of town, is a gem. Not only is it run on ecological principles, it also donates all profits to charity.

The palace's elegant atmosphere, complete with beautiful gardens, is impressively intact, and the guest rooms are imaginatively themed. The modern garden wing has fresh (but themeless) rooms.

TOP END

Lalitha Mahal Palace Hotel (☎ 2470470; www.lalithamahalpalace.com; s/d/ste from US$60/70/230; ❄ 💻 🏊) Only consider staying at this former palace, 5km east of the city centre, if you're prepared to splash out on the suites, which offer a taste of Raj-era life, with canopied beds, period furniture and lots of froufrou. The elevator is similarly precious, with carpeting and a tapestry-upholstered ottoman. As a government-run operation, the hotel's service can be lax.

Windflower Spa & Resort (☎ 2522500; www.thewindflower.com; Maharanapratap Rd, Nazarbad; s/d incl breakfast from Rs 3200/3600; ❄ 💻 🏊) Bali comes to Mysore at this stylish, relaxing resort next to the racecourse. Rooms are huge and come with outdoor showers and private plunge pools. Rates include taxes.

Royal Orchid Metropole (☎ 5255566; www.baljeehotels.com; 5 Jhansi Lakshmi Bai Rd; s/d from Rs 4000/4600; ❄ 💻 🏊) This recently renovated hotel was originally built by the Wodeyars and has bona fide old-world charm. The heritage rooms are particularly nice.

KARNATAKA

Eating

Mysore is well served by Indian restaurants, but for Western food you're best sticking with the major hotels. Unless otherwise mentioned, restaurants are open from noon to 3pm and 7pm to 11pm.

Bombay Tiffanys (Sayyaji Rao Rd; sweets Rs 2-40; ⏰ 7.30am-10pm) For traditional Indian sweets, Bombay Tiffanys has a solid reputation. Try the local delicacy Mysore pak (a sweet made from chickpea flour, sugar and ghee).

Vinayaka Mylari (769 Nazarbad Main Rd; snacks Rs 6-22; ⏰ 7.30-11.30am & 4-8pm) Locals line up for the dosas (paper-thin, lentil-flour pancakes) and soft Mysore-style idlis (rice dumplings) served with delicious coconut chutney at this decades-old operation. A masala dosa and coffee make a great breakfast or lunch.

Indra Café's Paras (1740 Sayyaji Rao Rd; mains Rs 30-60; ⏰ 7.30am-10pm) Take your pick from South (Rs 30) or North (Rs 60) Indian–style thalis at this popular joint opposite the market, with chaat (snack) central (Rs 8 to 20) downstairs.

Parklane Hotel (☎ 2430400; www.parklanemysore.com; 2720 Sri Harsha Rd; mains Rs 35-100) At the time of research the hotel was being upgraded, with plans to add a rooftop pool, but the popular restaurant-bar was still in full swing; by now the famous hanging gardens courtyard should be fully restored, with a new upper terrace for families. Enjoy Chinese, continental and Indian dinners by candlelight at night, and occasional live music.

Hotel RRR (Gandhi Sq; mains Rs 40-70) The speciality at this reliable and usually packed place is spicy Andhra-style veg thalis (Rs 36) served on banana leaves. Some meaty options are available, too. There's a second branch on Sri Harsha Rd.

Om Shanthi (Hotel Siddharta, Guest House Rd; mains Rs 40-80) Om Shanthi is a byword for excellent veg food in Mysore. Its special South Indian thali (Rs 75) is really quite special. Pay first at the counter before sitting down.

Dynasty (Hotel Palace Plaza, Sri Harsha Rd; mains Rs 40-85) There's a touch of class to this ground-floor restaurant, with its check tablecloths, intimate booths and low lighting. The same menu of reliable Indian and continental standards is also served on the rooftop, with views of the palace and Chamundi Hill.

La Gardenia (☎ 2426426; Regaalis Mysore, 3-14 Vinoba Rd; mains Rs 120-150) This place serves tasty and well-presented food in a sophisticated environment, with a good assortment of dishes if you're tired of the Indian options.

our pick Tiger Trail (☎ 5255566; Royal Orchid Metropole; 5 Jhansi Lakshmi Bai Rd; mains Rs 80-200) This delightful restaurant specialising in tandoori dishes serves delicious food in a courtyard that twinkles with torches and fairy lights at night. There's often live classical Indian music performances, and it's a nice spot for high tea, too.

Lalitha Mahal Palace Hotel (☎ 2470470; mains Rs 200-350) Feel like you're dining at Versailles in the Wedgewood-coloured restaurant at the hotel of the same name (left).

Shopping

Mysore is famous for its carved sandalwood, inlay work, silk saris and wooden toys. It is also one of India's major incense-manufacturing centres, peppered with scores of little family-owned agarbathi (incense) factories.

Souvenir and handicraft shops are dotted around Jaganmohan Palace and Dhanvanthri Rd, while silk shops line Devaraj Urs Rd.

Cauvery Arts & Crafts Emporium (Sayyaji Rao Rd; ⏰ 10am-7.30pm) Not the cheapest place, but the selection is extensive and there's no pressure to buy.

Government Silk Factory (☎ 2481803; Mananthody Rd, Ashokapuram; ⏰ 10am-noon & 2-4pm Mon-Sat) You can see weavers at work here, and buy silks at an on-site shop; there's also a factory showroom on KR Circle, open from 10.30am to 7.30pm.

Sandalwood Oil Factory (☎ 2483345; Ashokapuram; ⏰ 9am-1pm & 2-5pm Mon-Sat) Buy authentic incense sticks and oil (from Rs 650 for 5ml) at this factory, located about 2km southeast of the Maharaja's Palace, off Mananthody Rd.

Datta Enterprises (355 KR Hospital Rd; ⏰ 10am-9pm) Get custom-made Ganesh stickers here, starting at Rs 25 each.

Fabindia (☎ 4259009; 451JLB Rd, Chamrajpuram; ⏰ 10am-8pm) There's a branch of the ever reliable clothing and homewares shop on the way to the silk and sandalwood factories.

Shruthi Musical Works (☎ 2529551; 1189 3rd Cross, Irwin Rd; ⏰ 10.30am-9pm Mon-Sat, 10.30am-2pm Sun) and Veena Musical Works (Kalamma Temple Bldg, Irwin Rd; ⏰ 10am-8.30pm Mon-Sat, 10am-1.30pm Sun) both sell a variety of traditional musical instruments; you can view the workshop of the latter across the road from the shop.

Getting There & Away

AIR

There are no flights to Mysore (although an airport is in the offing). Indian Airlines (☎ 2421846; Jhansi Lakshmi Bai Rd; ⏰ 10am-1.30pm & 2.15-5pm) has an office next to KSTDC Hotel Mayura Hoysala.

BUS

The Central bus stand (☎ 2520853; Bangalore–Mysore Rd) handles all KSRTC long-distance buses. The City bus stand (☎ 2425819; Sayaji Rao Rd) is for city, Srirangapatnam and Chamundi Hill buses.

KSRTC bus services from Mysore include those listed on below.

For Belur, Halebid or Sravanabelagola, the usual gateway is Hassan. There's one bus to Sravanabelagola; otherwise you can transfer at Channarayapatna. For Hampi, the best transfer point is Hospet.

The Private bus stand (Sayyaji Rao Rd) has services to Hubli, Bijapur, Mangalore, Ooty and Ernakulum. Book tickets with Kiran Tours & Travel (☎ 5559404; 21/2 Chandragupta Rd).

TRAIN

At the railway booking office (☎ 131; ⏰ 8am-8pm Mon-Sat, 8am-2pm Sun), located within the train station, you can reserve a seat on one of six daily expresses to Bengaluru (2nd/chair Rs 70/228, three hours), or on the high-speed Shatabdi (chair/executive Rs 275/550, two hours), departing at 2.20pm daily except Tuesday. The Shatabdi continues to Chennai (chair/executive Rs 690/1315, seven hours). Several passenger trains also go daily to Bengaluru (Rs 28, 3½ hours), stopping at Srirangapatnam (Rs 9, 20 minutes).

Two passenger and three express trains go daily to Arsikere and Hassan. One express sets off to Mumbai on Thursday at 6.50am (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 369/1009/1583).

Getting Around

Agencies at hotels and around town rent cars from Rs 5 per kilometre for an Ambassador, with a minimum of 250km per day, plus Rs 125 for the driver.

Flag fall on autorickshaws is Rs 12, and Rs 5 per kilometre is charged thereafter. Taxis are meterless, so fares must be negotiated.

AROUND MYSORE

Srirangapatnam

☎ 08236

From this fort, built on a long island in the Cauvery River only 16km from Mysore, Hyder Ali and his son Tipu Sultan ruled much of southern India during the 18th century. In ruins since the British came through like a whirlwind in 1799, the ramparts, battlements and some of the gates of the fort still stand.

Close to the bus station is a handsome twin tower mosque built by Tipu Sultan, and within the fort walls you can also find the dungeon where Tipu held British officers captive, and the handsome Sri Ranganathaswamy Temple (7.30am-1pm & 4-8pm).

Srirangapatnam's star attraction is Tipu's summer palace, the Daria Daulat Bagh (☎ 252023; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/US$2; 9am-5pm), which lies 1km east of the fort. Set in ornamental gardens, the palace is notable for its beautiful interior decoration. Not one inch has been left unadorned, with fascinating floor-to-ceiling murals depicting courtly life and Tipu's campaigns against the British. The man himself can be glimpsed in a portrait by John Zoffony, which was painted in 1780 when Tipu was 30.

About 2km further east the remains of Hyder Ali, his wife and Tipu are housed in the impressive onion-domed Gumbaz (☎ 252007; 8am-8pm). Again it's the tiger-striped interior of this mausoleum that dazzles most.

Head 500m east of Gumbaz for the river banks. A short coracle ride runs for Rs 25 per person. Resist dangling your hand in the water; a crocodile could have it for lunch.

Three kilometres upstream from Srirangapatnam, the Ranganathittu Bird Sanctuary (☎ 0821-2481159; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/60, camera/video Rs 20/100; 8.30am-6pm) is on one of three islands in the Cauvery River. The storks, ibises, egrets, spoonbills and cormorants here are best seen in the early morning or late afternoon on a short boat ride (per person Rs 25). There's also a maze made from herbal plants and a restaurant on site.

SLEEPING & EATING

Royal Retreat New Amblee Holiday Resort (☎ 0821-3292475; www.ambleeresort.com; r from Rs 1200;) A menagerie of rabbits and ducks, and the owner's Rolls-Royce greets you at the Amblee, which offers relatively good accommodation, a pleasant riverside setting and a reasonably priced restaurant.

Swaasthya Ayurveda Village (☎ 217476; www.swaasthya.com; 69 Bommuru Agrahara; r incl full board Rs 960) Set amid lush riverside greenery, this is an idyllic place to stay whether or not you choose to avail yourself of the various reasonably priced Ayurvedic treatments on offer. Rooms are clean and simple, and rates include delicious vegetarian meals, yoga and spoken Sanskrit classes. It's located off Bengaluru–Mysore Rd.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Take the frequent buses 313 or 316 (Rs 10, one hour) from Mysore's City bus stand. Passenger trains travelling from Mysore to Bengaluru (Rs 9, 20 minutes) also stop here. The stand for private buses heading to Brindavan Gardens (Rs 12, 30 minutes) is just across from Srirangapatnam's main bus stand.

GETTING AROUND

The sights are a little spread out, but walking isn't out of the question. For a quicker look round, tongas (two-wheeled horse carriages) cost about Rs 100 for three hours, and an autorickshaw is about Rs 150 (also for three hours).

Brindavan Gardens

If you think these ornamental gardens (☎ 08236-290019; adult/child Rs 10/5, camera Rs 25; 10am-10pm) laid out below the River Cauvery dam look like the set from a Bollywood movie, then you're on the money – they've been the backdrop to many a shimmying musical number. Locals flock here, particularly on weekends and holidays, and at 7pm, when the illuminated fountains are switched on (to the accompaniment of film tunes).

Within the gardens are two hotels: the no-frills Hotel Mayura Cauvery (☎ 08236-257252; s/d Rs 200/350) and the swanky Royal Orchid Brindavan Garden (☎ 080-25584242; www.baljeehotels.com), still under construction at the time of research. Its bar promises to be the best spot from which to view the gardens.

The gardens are 19km northwest of Mysore. One of the KSTDC tours stops here, and buses 301, 304, 305, 306 and 365 depart from Mysore's City bus stand hourly (Rs 7, 45 minutes).

Melkote

Life in the devout Hindu town of Melkote, about 50km north of Mysore, revolves around the 12th-century Cheluvanarayana Temple (☎ 08236-298739; Raja St; 8am-1pm & 5-8pm), with its rose-coloured gopuram and ornately carved pillars. Get a work-out on the hike up to the hilltop Yoganarasimha Temple (admission free), which offers fine views of the surrounding hills and valleys. The town comes alive for the Vairamudi Festival in March or April (p882).

Three KSRTC buses a day shuttle between Mysore and Melkote (Rs 40, 1½ hours).

Somnathpur

The astonishingly beautiful Keshava Temple (☎ 08227-270059; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/US$2; 9am-5.30pm) stands at the edge of the tranquil village of Somnathpur, approximately 33km east of Mysore. Built in 1268, this star-shaped temple is a masterpiece of Hoysala architecture (see p910), covered with superb stone sculptures depicting various scenes from the Ramayana, Mahabharata and Bhagavad Gita, and the life and times of the Hoysala kings. Unlike the larger Hoysala temples at Belur and Halebid, it's also remarkably complete.

On a tree in the temple grounds there's a red postbox where you can drop your stamped mail to get it postmarked with a temple image.

Somnathpur is 7km south of Bannur and 10km north of Tirumakudal Narsipur. Take one of the half-hourly buses from Mysore to either village (Rs 12, 30 minutes) and change there.

Sivasamudram

About 60km southeast of Mysore, near the twin waterfalls of Barachukki and Gaganachukki, is the relaxing Georgia Sunshine Village (☎ 9845754661; www.georgiasunshine.com; Malavalli; d incl full board from Rs 1372;). Accommodation is in bungalows (the open-air bathrooms have small gardens) and the home-made food is delicious. The dog-loving hosts can arrange treks to the waterfalls (best viewed in June and July), which are around 5km away.

Frequent buses run from Mysore (Rs 22, one hour) and Bengaluru (Rs 50, three hours) to Malavalli, 14km away. Call ahead and they'll arrange an autorickshaw to bring you the rest of the way for Rs 100.

BANDIPUR NATIONAL PARK

About 80km south of Mysore on the Ooty road, the Bandipur National Park (Indian/foreigner Rs 50/150) covers 880 sq km and is part of the Nilgiri Biosphere Reserve, which includes the sanctuaries of Nagarhole, Mudumalai in Tamil Nadu and Wayanad in Kerala. It was once the Mysore maharajas' private wildlife reserve and is home to over 5000 Asiatic elephants – a fifth of the world's population.

Bandipur is also noted for herds of gaurs (Indian bison), chitals (spotted deer), sambars, panthers, sloth bears and langurs. More than 80 tigers reportedly roam here, but they're rarely seen. The vegetation is a hodgepodge of deciduous and evergreen forest and scrubland. The best time to see wildlife is March to April, but November to February has the most temperate climate.

Brief elephant rides (per person Rs 50) are available for a minimum of four people. Private cars – with the exception of resort vehicles – are not allowed to tour the park so you're stuck with the Forest Department's diesel-minibus safari (per person Rs 25; 6am, 7am, 8am, 4pm & 5pm), which lasts one hour. The wildlife seen will be limited, as a bus lumbering through the forest doesn't exactly entice creatures out into the open. On Sundays tourists can outnumber the chitals.

Sleeping & Eating

Forest Department Bungalows (r Rs 500) It's all pretty basic, and at night the grounds are shared with sleeping chitals. Meals are available with advance notice. Reservations should be made at least two weeks in advance with Project Tiger (☎ 0821-2480901; fdptrm@sancharnet.in; Aranya Bhavan, Ashokapuram) in Mysore.

Bandipur Safari Lodge (Mysore-Ooty Rd; s/d incl full board US$65/100) The 12 animal-themed rooms at this government-run operation, 3km outside the park, are comfy. Rates include a jeep safari, an elephant ride and all park fees. Book with Jungle Lodges & Resorts Ltd (Map p885; ☎ 080-25597021; www.junglelodges.com; 2nd floor, Shrungar Shopping Complex, MG Rd, Bengaluru; open 10am to 5.30pm).

Tusker Trails (☎ 080-23618024; www.nivalink.com/tuskertrails/index.html; s/d incl full board US$90/150;) Rates at this small, simple resort on the eastern edge of the park near Mangala village include two daily safaris.

Getting There & Away

Buses between Mysore (2½ hours) and Ooty (three hours) will drop you at Bandipur National Park or Bandipur Safari Lodge.

NAGARHOLE NATIONAL PARK

West of the Kabini River is the 643-sq-km wildlife sanctuary of Nagarhole National Park (Rajiv Gandhi National Park; Indian/foreigner Rs 50/150, camera Rs 50), pronounced nag-ar-hole-eh. The lush forests here are home to around 60 tigers, as well as leopards, elephants, gaurs, muntjacs (barking deer), wild dogs, bonnet macaques and common langurs; animal sightings are more common here than in Bandipur.

The park's main entrance is 93km southwest of Mysore. However, the best accommodation and the most beautiful views are at the Kabini Lake side of the reserve, near the village of Karapura, around 80km south of Mysore. Orange County (www.orangecounty.in) are building a resort on the far bank of the lake here. If heading to the park by taxi, make sure that your driver knows exactly which side of the park you're staying, as it's quite a distance between the two locations.

If you're not staying at a lodge, the only way to see the park is on the bus tour (per person Rs 25; 6-8am & 4-5pm); the best time to view wildlife is the hot months (April to May), but the winter air (November to February) is kinder. Bookings can be made in advance with the Forest Department in Mysore, or you can just turn up.

Sleeping & Eating

As there's less accommodation at the park's main entrance (and subsequently less noise to scare away the wildlife), this is the place to be if you want to up your chances of spotting a tiger. However, the places to stay here are not nearly as nice as those on Kabini Lake. Unless otherwise mentioned, rates quoted cover accommodation, three meals, and early morning and late afternoon safari tours into the park, either by jeep or boat.

PARK GATE

Forest Department rooms (☎ 0821-2480901; fdptrm@sancharnet.in; r Indian/foreigner Rs 750/1500) These rooms are within the park, close to the main gate. They're overpriced for what you get and you'd be advised to bring mosquito coils. Meals and tours are extra. Book at least two weeks in advance with Project Tiger (☎ 0821-2480901; fdptrm@sancharnet.in; Aranya Bhavan, Ashokapuram) in Mysore.

Jungle Inn (☎ 08222-246022; www.jungleinnnagarhole.com; Km 19 Hunsur–Nagarhole Rd; s/d 1st night US$110/170, additional nights US$60/100) This place is by no means luxurious, but there's a welcoming atmosphere, evening campfires and simple, clean rooms. Many of the organic vegetables and fruit used in the meals are grown on site. The resort is 35km from park reception on the Hunsur road.

Kings Sanctuary (☎ 08222-246444; www.vivekhotels; Km 19 Hunsur–Nagarhole Rd; s/d Indian Rs 7000/8500, foreigner US$190/280;) This large resort is only a few years old but it's already looking worn. It's the only upmarket option at this end of the park. The rates for Indians include only one safari, while foreigners get two.

KABINI LAKE

Kabini Lake View (☎ 9880175605; kabinilakeview@yahoo.co.in; Sogahalli, Antrasanthe; Indian/foreigner Rs 2000/US$85) This place offers eight rooms in simple concrete cabins using solar power for lights and water heating. There's little shade on the site, 63km south of Mysore, but it has splendid view of the backwaters and the package includes boat trips to an island for bird-watching.

Kabini River Lodge (☎ 08228-264402; Indian tents/r/cottages Rs 2750/3000/3500, foreigner s/d US$120/240) On the grounds of the former maharaja's hunting lodge beside Kabini Lake is this efficient, government-run resort. For accommodation there's a choice of large canvas tents sheltering beneath corrugated roofs, regular rooms and cottages. Book through Jungle Lodges & Resorts Ltd (Map p885; ☎ 080-25597021; www.junglelodges.com; 2nd floor, Shrungar Shopping Complex, MG Rd, Bengaluru; open 10am to 5.30pm).

Cicada Kabini (☎ 080-41152200, 9945602305; www.cicadaresorts.com; s/d Rs 5000/7000;) This well-thought-out luxury ecoresort brings a dash of contemporary chic to the lakeside. The rates are for accommodation and meals only; safaris (R750) and the use of kayaks and pedal boats (R250) are extra.

Water Woods (☎ 08228-264421; www.waterwoods.net; s/d US$225/325;) Next to Kabini River Lodge, Water Woods offers just five rooms set in a large and pleasantly furnished lakeside house with tranquil gardens, a multigym and a six-hole golf course. A canoe is available for guests' use.

Getting There & Away

Direct buses depart from Mysore twice daily and can drop you at Jungle Inn. For transport to the lodges around Kabiri Lake, enquire when making a booking.

KODAGU (COORG) REGION

The mountainous Kodagu (or Coorg) region is home to the Kodava people and refugee Tibetans. The geography and cool climate make it a fantastic area for trekking, bird-watching and generally refreshing the soul. Winding roads ramble over forested hills and past spice and coffee plantations, which burst into fragrant white blossoms in March and April.

The best season for trekking is October to March. You should hire a guide who will arrange food, transport and accommodation; see right for recommendations. Most treks last two to three days, but longer treks are possible; the most popular treks are to the peaks of Tadiyendamol (1745m) and Pushpagiri (1712m), and to smaller Kotebetta.

Kodagu was a state in its own right until 1956, when it merged with Karnataka. Local politicians, tired of seeing little financial assistance from Bengaluru for infrastructure and social services, are pushing for statehood to be restored, or at least for more local autonomy.

The region's capital and transport hub is Madikeri, but for the authentic Kodagu experience it's best to base yourself on one the many estates that take in guests. Owners can arrange plantation tours and guides for hiking routes. Avoid weekends, when places get booked up by Bengaluru's IT and call-centre crowd.

Madikeri (Mercara)

☎ 08272 / pop 32,286 / elev 1525m

Also known as Mercara, this bustling market town is spread out along a series of ridges. The main reason for coming here is to organise treks and sort out the practicalities of travel.

ORIENTATION & INFORMATION

In the chaotic centre around the KSRTC and private-bus stands, you'll find most of the hotels and restaurants as well as several ATMs.

If you need to change money, cash travellers cheques or get a credit-card advance, try Canara Bank (☎ 229302; Main Rd, Gandhi Chowk; 10.30am-2.30pm Mon-Fri). Internet cafés are plentiful.

SIGHTS

Madikeri's fort, now the municipal headquarters, was built in 1812 by Raja Lingarajendra II. Cows graze around the old church here, home to a quirky museum (admission free; 10am-5.30pm Tue-Sun) displaying dusty, poorly labelled statues and the like.

East of the fort is the Indo-Saracenic-style Omkareshwara Temple (6.30am-noon & 5-8pm), built by the raja in 1820, which is surrounded by a small lake. Reach it via the steps descending past the police station.

The panoramic view from Raja's Seat (admission free; MG Rd; 5.30am-7.30pm) is breathtaking. Behind are gardens, a toy train line for kids and a tiny Kodava-style temple.

On the way to Abbi Falls, a pleasant 7km hike from the town centre, visit the quietly beautiful Raja's Tombs, better known as Gaddige. An autorickshaw costs about Rs 150 return.

ACTIVITIES

A trekking guide is essential for navigating the labyrinth of forest tracks. Most of the estates in Kodagu also offer trekking programmes.

Raja Shekar at Friends Tours & Travels (☎ 225672; v_trak@rediffmail.com; College Rd; 10am-2pm & 4.30-8pm Mon-Sat, 6-7.30pm Sun) works in conjunction with Rao Ganesh at Sri Ganesh Automobile (☎ 229102; Hill Rd), just up from the private bus stand. It arranges one- to 10-day treks for Rs 500 per person per day (Rs 700 if you're solo), including guide, accommodation and food. Short walks take only a day or two to prepare. For long treks, trips on obscure routes or big groups, it's best to give a week's notice.

Coorg Trails (☎ 594061; coorgtrails@yahoo.co.in; Main Rd; 9am-8.30pm) can also arrange day treks for R300 per person and a 22km trek to Kotebetta, including an overnight stay in a village, for Rs 600 per person. The office is near the town hall.

Anoop Chinnappa at the Dawn (☎ 223388; outdoorindia@sancharnet.in; Powerhouse Rd) offers guided day walks up on the ridges for Rs 500 per person, and can also arrange longer camping trips to a wildlife sanctuary that has an elephant migratory path running through it.

One-hour sessions at the tiny Shri Akhila Ravi Ayurshala Ayurvedic clinic (☎ 594288; Powerhouse Rd; 9am-6pm), a short walk from the fort, cost Rs 175; a normal course runs seven days.

SLEEPING

Many hotels reduce their rates in the off season (January to March and June to September); all of those listed below have hot water, at least in the morning, and 24-hour checkout.

Dawn (☎ 223388; outdoorindia@sancharnet.in; Powerhouse Rd; dm Rs 125) This is the home of enthusiastic ecowarrior Anoop Chinnappa, who can also organise treks. It's 1km from the bus stand, and although the rooms are basic, they have personality.

Hotel Cauvery (☎ 225492; School Rd; s/d/tr Rs 200/450/550) This ageing hotel, tucked behind Hotel Capitol opposite the private bus stand, is scheduled for a make-over. It has some character, and the amiable owner Ganesh Aiyanna can arrange treks up to Tadiyendamol and elsewhere.

Hilltown Hotel (☎ 223801; www.madikeri.com/hilltown; Hill Town Rd; s/d from Rs 250/600) Down the lane running past Hotel Chitra, the Hilltown is a generally spruce place with fish tanks on the stairs and a pretty garden opposite. Singles are small and some rooms have damp walls. It also has a restaurant (mains Rs 30 to 60).

Hotel Mayura Valley View (☎ 228387; r from Rs 999) The overpriced rooms here fail to match up to the stunning valley view from the windows. Staff are pretty laid back, and the restaurant-bar (meals Rs 30 to 85; open 6.30am to 10.30pm) with a terrace is certainly the best place in town for a drink. It's near Raja's Seat.

Hotel Coorg International (☎ 228071; www.coorginternational.com; Convent Rd; s/d incl half-board from Rs 2400/2900;) Madikeri's classiest option isn't such a bad deal considering rates include breakfast and dinner, snacks through the day, and facilities such as cable TV, a small pool, a gym and an Ayurvedic massage room.

EATING

East End Hotel (GT Circle; mains Rs 35-80; 7am-10.30pm) Some veg dishes are available among the mutton offerings, but the special masala dosas (Rs 15) are the real reason to come; they're only available from 7.30am to 10.30am and 4pm to 10.30pm.

Udupi Hotel Vegland (Chickpet, Main Rd; meals Rs 15-20; 7am-9pm) This standard pure-veg joint near the fort is a friendly local place with cheap, reliable thalis.

Popular Guru Prasad (Main Rd; meals Rs 20; 6.30am-10pm) The aptly named Popular Guru Prasad serves perfectly steamed idlis (Rs 3.50 each) and other veggie options.

Hotel Capitol (School Rd; meals Rs 15-40; 6am-9.30pm) Head to the nonveg-room-cum-drinking-den at the rear for bacon-and-eggs breakfasts and the local speciality, pandhi (pork curry; Rs 35), made from porkers raised on the owner's estate.

KARNATAKA

THE KODAVAS

The native people of Kodagu are known as Kodavas. Numbering no more than 100,000, they are believed to be descendants of migrating Persians and Kurds or Greeks left behind from Alexander the Great's armies, although no-one's exactly sure. The word 'Kodava' apparently comes from the local words for 'Blessed by Mother Cauvery'.

Kodavas are divided into about 1000 clans. Each clan has its own aine mane (clan house), at which the entire clan gathers once a year to pay respects to their ancestors. Although nominally Hindu, Kodavas refuse to recognise any head of religion and are mainly nonvegetarian (their signature dish is pork curry served with rice dumplings). They also worship unique deities, including the Cauvery River. Wedding ceremonies (which rarely involve dowries) include complex dances, mock fighting with sticks, and such symbolic exploits as chopping off a banana leaf with a sword.

The best time to see Kodavas celebrating their unique culture is during their various festivals. Apart from the lively November/December Huthri festival (p882), there's Keilpodhu, the end of rice-planting season (held in the first week of September), when men show off their marksmanship by shooting coconuts strung up in tall trees. The Tula Sankramana festival, when the goddess Cauvery appears in the form of a gush of water at the river's source, is celebrated in mid-October with a dip in the Cauvery at the Talacauvery Temple.

At these festivals and other special occasions, Kodavas will don their distinctive traditional costumes; the men wear sashes, daggers, black gowns, colourful turbans and plenty of jewellery, while the women are wrapped in bright scarves and saris that are draped with even more complexity than normal.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Five deluxe buses a day depart from the KSRTC bus stand (☎ 229134) for Bengaluru (Rs 135, seven hours), stopping in Mysore (Rs 70, 3½ hours) on the way. Deluxe buses also go to Mangalore (Rs 110, four hours, three daily), and frequent ordinary buses head to Hassan (Rs 60, three hours) and Shimoga (Rs 140, eight hours).

Around Madikeri

Many estates in Kodagu offer homestay-style accommodation, ranging in quality from basic to quite luxurious. The following are our pick of places within easy reach of Madikeri; for more options, see p908. Unless otherwise mentioned, rates include meals and trekking guides. Advance bookings should be made.

About 8km southeast of Madikeri is Capitol Village Resort (☎ 08272-225492; fax 229455; Chettali-Siddapur Rd; r from Rs 1250), a pleasant lodge nestled among coffee, cardamom and pepper plantations. Superclean rooms have balconies with great views. Meals (breakfast Rs 100, buffet lunch or dinner Rs 150) are extra, as are trekking guides.

our pick Rainforest Retreat (☎ /fax 08272-265636; www.rainforestours.com; s/d from Rs 1500/2500; ⏰ Oct-end of May) is hard to beat for nature immersion. These ecochic cottages are located on an organic plantation surrounded by forest, and the friendly owners Sujata (a botanist) and Anurag (a molecular biologist) are a fount of knowledge about the region. The trekking is excellent, or you can just lie in a hammock and watch the birds. All proceeds go to the couple's NGO, which promotes environmental awareness and sustainable agriculture. It's 10km west of Madikeri near Gallibedu; call to arrange transport.

Alath-Cad Estate Bungalow (☎ 08274-252190, 9449617665; www.alathcadcoorg.com; Ammathi; r incl breakfast from Rs 1650) is set on a 26-hectare coffee plantation about 28km southeast of Madikeri, 1.5km from the town of Ammathi. Its rooms have solar-heated water and the owners are very friendly. Lunch and dinner are Rs 150 each.

A German-owned organic tea plantation, Golden Mist (☎ 08272-265629; www.goldenmist.4t.com; s/d Rs 2000/3000) has rooms for up to four people. It's a lovely place, similar in atmosphere to Rainforest Retreat.

On the way to Gallibedu, Club Mahindra (☎ 08272-221790; www.clubmahindra.com; Galibeedu Rd; d from Rs 2500; ❄ 🏊) is an upmarket time-share resort. It's a good place if you're travelling with kids, since it offers plenty of activities, two pools and self-catering suites. Rates are room only.

Luxury tents (far nicer than many hotel rooms!) are the latest addition to Orange County Resort (☎ 08274-258481; www.orangecounty.in; Siddapur; d cottages/tents Rs 8500/10,500; ❄ 🏊), a fine resort on a 120-hectare plantation, 32km south of Madikeri. Some of the villas have private swimming pools. Rates include taxes; guided treks, boating and Ayurvedic massages are available for extra cost. Make bookings through Trails India (☎ 080-25325302; www.trailsindia.com; 2nd floor, St Patrick's Business Complex, Museum Rd) in Bengaluru.

Dubare Forest Reserve

Head to Kushalnagar, Kodagu's second-largest town, and you'll pass the Dubare Forest Reserve. Here, on the banks of the Cauvery River, a camp has been established for 12 elephants retired from working in the jungles. Cross the river (Rs 20) and you can watch the elephants being washed and fed daily at 9.30am. To take part in the full programme (Indian/foreigner Rs 100/250), including an elephant ride, you need to be there by 8.30am.

Bookings can be made through Jungle Lodges & Resorts Ltd (Map p885; ☎ 080-25597021; www.junglelodges.com; 2nd fl, Shrungar Shopping Complex, MG Rd, Bengaluru; ⏰ 10am-5.30pm), which also runs the reserve's rustic but good Dubare Elephant Camp (☎ 9449599755; Indian/foreigner incl full board Rs 1900/US$75). Rates include the elephant-interaction programme.

White-water rafting (per person from Rs 600) is also organised from here for groups of six people or more. The rapids go up to grade 4 and are at their most powerful in August.

Opposite the reserve, next to where the boat leaves, Dubare Inn (☎ 08276-267855; Nanjarayapatna; cottages Rs 1400) offers simple, clean brick cottages with river views and an inexpensive café (⏰ 6am-9pm).

Bylakuppe

☎ 08223

In the exodus from Tibet that followed the 1959 Chinese invasion, thousands of Tibetan refugees settled around Bylakuppe, 5km southeast of Kushalnagar, where the Karnataka government gifted them 1200 hectares of land. The area has since sprouted several villages centred around monasteries where maroon-and-yellow-robed monks are a common sight and Tibetan arts and crafts are practised. The atmosphere in the villages is heart-warmingly welcoming.

Contact Namdroling Monastery (below) or the Sera Jey Choeling Centre (☎ 258723; www.serajeymonastery.org) if you're interested in visiting the settlements for more than a few days, as you will first need to apply for a Protected Area Permit (PAP) from the Ministry of Home Affairs in Delhi.

The area's highlight is the Namdroling Monastery (☎ 254036; www.palyul.org), home to the jaw-droppingly spectacular Golden Temple (Padmasambhava Buddhist Vihara; 7am-8pm), presided over by an 18m-high gold-plated Buddha. The temple is in particularly good form when school is in session and it rings out with the gongs, drums and chanting of hundreds of young novices. You're welcome to sit and meditate on it all; look for the small blue guest cushions lying around. The Zangdogpalri Temple (7am-8pm), a similarly ornate affair, is next door.

Opposite the Golden Temple is a shopping centre; on its top floor you'll find the simple Paljor Dhargey Ling Guest House (☎ 258686; p_dhargeyling@yahoo.com; r Rs 250). Add Rs 100 if you'd prefer a room with a TV.

Shanti Family Restaurant (Paljor Dhargey Ling Shopping Centre; mains Rs 30-50; 7am-9.30pm) is a lively place for fresh juices, milk shakes, a good range of Indian meals and Tibetan dishes, such as momos (dumpings) and thukpa (noodle soup).

Autorickshaws (shared/alone Rs 10/30) ply the route to Sera from Kushalanagar. Buses run frequently to Kushalnagar from Madikeri (Rs 18, 1½ hour) and Hassan (Rs 50, four hours); most buses on the Mysore–Madikeri route stop at Kushalnagar.

Kakkabe

The region around the village of Kakkabe is an ideal base if you're planning an assault on Kodagu's highest peak, Tadiyendamol. The small and picturesque Nalakunad Palace (admission free; 9am-5pm), 3km from Kakkabe, is the recently restored hunting lodge of a Kodagu king and dates from 1794. Within walking distance of here you'll find several excellent places to stay.

our pick Honey Valley Estate (☎ 238339; huts & r with shared bathroom from Rs 200, d with private bathroom from Rs 700) is a wonderful place 1250m above sea level where you can wake to the forest's dawn chorus. The owners' friendliness, environmental mindfulness and scrumptious food (with organic veggies from the farm) fully deserve enthusiastic applause. The estate is only accessible by jeep or by a one-hour uphill walk. Bookings are essential.

Old cannonballs border the garden at Palace Estate (☎ 238446, 9880447702; www.palaceestate.co.in; s with shared bathroom Rs 250, d with private bathroom Rs 1200), a beautiful homestay run by a hospitable Kodagu family. The rooms, view and home-cooked meals (breakfast Rs 75, lunch or dinner Rs 110) are all excellent. It's just above the Nalakunad Palace.

Also neighbouring Nalakunad Palace is King's Cottage (☎ 238464; d Rs 700), a picturesque place offering seven simply furnished rooms and, again, beautiful views. Breakfast is Rs 50, home-cooked Kodava lunch or dinner Rs 100.

The name of tiny Misty Woods (☎ 238561; www.coorgmisty.com; cottages incl full board from Rs 4000), immediately uphill from Nalakunand Palace, aptly sums up the landscape surrounding it. The vastu sasthra–style cottages made from hollow bricks are roomy enough to sleep three.

Regular buses run to Kakkabe from Madikeri (Rs 20, 1½ hours) and from Virarajendrapet (also called Virajpet, Rs 14, one hour).

HASSAN

☎ 08172 / pop 117,386

With a reasonable range of hotels, a railhead and other conveniences, Hassan is a handy base for exploring Belur (38km), Halebid (33km) and Sravanabelagola (48km). When we passed through, the town centre was looking like Beirut on a bad day; hopefully the road widening project will have been completed by the time you arrive.

Orientation & Information

The train station is 2km east of the town centre on busy Bengaluru–Mangalore (BM) Rd. The Central bus stand is on the corner of AVK College and Bus Stand Rds. The tourist office (☎ 268862; AVK College Rd; 10am-5.30pm Mon-Fri & alternate Sat), 100m east of the bus stand, is one of Karnataka's more helpful. There are plenty of ATMs and internet cafés; try Cyber Park (☎ Harsha Mahal Rd; per hr Rs 30). Banks, however, don't offer foreign exchange. The Southern Star (☎ 251816; BM Rd) will change dollars at a bad rate.

Sleeping

Vaishnavi Lodging (☎ 263885; Harsha Mahal Rd; s/d Rs 170/235) Steps away from the bus stand, it's cheap, tidy and the sheets are clean. Ask for a room at the back to keep street noise to a minimum.

Hotel Sri Krishna (☎ 263240; fax 233904; BM Rd; s/d from Rs 325/600; ❄) Not far from the train station, this place has agreeable rooms and a quality pure-veg eatery (mains Rs 30 to 60).

Hotel Suvarna Regency (☎ 266774; www.hotelsuvarnaregency.com; BM Rd; s/d from Rs 350/605; ❄) This city-centre hotel, just south of Gandhi Sq, offers standard nonflash rooms. Its small swimming pool was out of commission when we dropped by. There's a internet café in the same building.

Southern Star (☎ 251816; www.ushalexushotelsandresorts.com; BM Rd; s/d from Rs 1000/1200; 💻 ❄) Reasonably good rooms and pleasant service make up for the street noise at this smartish hotel across from Hotel Sri Krishna. Its Karwar Restaurant (mains Rs 40 to 100; open 6am to 11pm) is as posh as it gets for Hassan.

Hoysala Village Resort (☎ 256764; www.trailsindia.com; Belur Rd; d incl breakfast from Rs 2960; ❄ 🏊) This rustic and relaxing place is set in pretty gardens (with a tree house), 6km from Hassan on the road to Belur. Rooms are very spacious and comfortable.

Hotel Hassan Ashhok (☎ 268731) Back in the centre of town, Hotel Hassan Ashhok was undergoing major renovations at the time of research; it looks like it might be quite stylish when finished.

Eating

Hotel Sanman (Municipal Office Rd; meals Rs 12-15; ⏰ 6am-10pm) Pay upfront and take your pick from masala dosas or a rice plate at this busy joint located a block south of the bus station.

Hotel GRR (Bus Stand Rd; meals Rs 15-35; ⏰ 11am-11pm) Top-of-the-line Andhra-style thalis (Rs 15) on banana leaves are on offer at this friendly place opposite the bus station.

Suvarna Gate (Hotel Suvarna Regency, BM Rd; mains Rs 40-100; ⏰ noon-3.30pm & 6.30-11.30pm) You'll wait a while for your food but it's worth it. The chicken tandoori masala is delicious and the terrace dining room overlooking neatly trimmed hedges has some ambience. Head to the back of the Hotel Suvarna Regency to find it.

Getting There & Away

BUS

Buses leave from the Central bus stand, situated on the corner of AVK College and Bus Stand Rds. If you're planning to visit Belur and Halebid on the same day from Hassan, go to Halebid first as there are more buses from Belur to Hassan and they run until much later.

Buses to Halebid (Rs 15, one hour, every half hour) start running at 6am, with the last bus back leaving Halebid at 7.30pm. Frequent buses go between Hassan and Belur (Rs 20, one hour); the first leaves Hassan at 6am, and the last bus from Belur is at 10pm.

To get to Sravanabelagola, you must take one of the many buses to Channarayapatna (Rs 20, 45 minutes) and change there.

There are frequent services to Mysore (Rs 65, three hours) Bengaluru (ordinary/deluxe Rs 95/160, four hours), and Mangalore (ordinary/deluxe Rs 95/165, four hours).

TAXI

Taxi drivers hang out on AVK College Rd, north of the bus stand. A tour of Belur and Halebid will cost you about Rs 700 for the day. A return taxi to Sravanabelagola will cost the same. Firmly set the price before departure.

TRAIN

The well-organised train station (☎ 268222) is about 2km east of town (Rs 10 by autorickshaw); it has a cloakroom (Rs 10) and retiring rooms (Rs 100). Three passenger trains head to Mysore daily (2nd class Rs 22, three hours); the one at 2.20pm is a fast passenger train (two hours). For Bengaluru, take one of the four daily trains to Arsikere (Rs 11, one hour) and change there. Services to Mangalore (2nd class Rs 38, five hours) are expected to be running now.

BELUR & HALEBID

☎ 08177 / elev 968m

The Hoysala temples at Halebid (also known as Halebeed, Halebidu and Halebeedu) and Belur, along with the temple at Somnathpur (p903), are the apex of one of the most artistically exuberant periods of Hindu cultural development. Their sculptural decoration rivals that of Khajuraho (Madhya Pradesh; p673) and Konark (Orissa; p648).

If you're staying overnight (although it's not really necessary), Belur is a better bet than Halebid.

Belur and Halebid are only 16km apart. Buses shuttle between the two towns every 30 minutes or so from 6.30am to 7pm (Rs 11, 30 minutes). See p909 for details of buses to/from Hassan. Belur also has direct buses to Bengaluru (Rs 120, five hours). To get to Hampi, catch a bus from Belur to Kadur (Rs 14, one hour), then take a bus to Shimoga. Buses leave Shimoga frequently for Hospet, the access town for Hampi.

Belur

The Channekeshava Temple (Temple Rd; admission free; dawn-dusk) is the only one at the three major Hoysala sites still in daily use – try to be there for the puja ceremonies at 9am, 3pm and 7.30pm. Begun in 1116 to commemorate the Hoysalas' victory over the Cholas at Talakad, work on the temple continued for over a century. Although its exterior lower friezes are not as extensively sculpted as those of the other Hoysala temples, the work higher up is unsurpassed in detail and artistry. Particularly intriguing are the angled bracket figures depicting women in ritual dancing poses. Note that the front of the temple is reserved for images of dancers and characters from the Kamasutra; the back is strictly for gods. Plentiful decorative work also lines the internal supporting pillars (no two of which are identical) and lintels. Allegedly every major Hindu deity is represented here.

The temple grounds are worth a wander, with their smaller, ageing temples and 14th-century seven-storey gopuram, which has some sensual sculptures explicitly portraying the après-temple activities of dancing girls.

Guides can be hired for Rs 125; they help to bring some of the sculptural detail to life.

The other, lesser, Hoysala temples at Belur are the Chennigaraya and the Viranarayana temples.

Vishnu Regency (☎ 223011; www.hoysalatourism.com; Kempegowda Rd; d/tr from Rs 400/500;) is clearly the best of Belur's none-too-salubrious hotels. Its simple rooms are clean and fresh smelling, there's a resident astrologer on hand and it has a pleasant restaurant (mains Rs 20-65; 11.30am-10.30pm) serving North Indian and Chinese food. From the bus stand, walk up Temple Rd and turn left at the statue of Kempegowda.

Near Kempegowda's statue is Shankar Hotel (Temple Rd; meals Rs 20; 7am-9.30pm), a busy place serving fine South Indian thalis, masala dosas, Indian sweets, snacks and drinks.

Halebid

Construction began on Halebid's Hoysaleswara Temple (dawn-dusk) around 1121. Despite more than 80 years of labour it was never completed, but it's still the most outstanding example of Hoysala architecture. The entire outside and some of the interior is covered with a riot of Hindu deities, sages, stylised animals and friezes depicting the life of the Hoysala rulers.

The temple is set in large well-tended gardens, adjacent to which is a small museum (admission Rs 2; 10am-5pm Sat-Thu) housing a collection of sculptures.

Halebid also has a smaller temple known as Kedareswara and a little-visited enclosure containing three Jain temples, which also have fine carvings. These are peacefully tout free.

HOYSALA ARCHITECTURE

The Hoysalas, who ruled this part of the Deccan between the 11th and 13th centuries, originated in the hill tribes of the Western Ghats and for a long time were feudatories of the Chalukyas. They didn't become fully independent until about 1190, though they first rose to prominence under their leader Tinayaditya (1047–78), who took advantage of the waning power of the Gangas and Rashtrakutas. Under Bittiga (1110–52), later named Vishnuvardhana, they began to take off on a course of their own; it was during his reign that the distinctive temples at Belur and Halebid were built.

Typically, these temples are squat, star-shaped structures set on a platform. They are more human in scale than the soaring temples found elsewhere in India, but what they lack in size they make up for in sheer intricacy.

It's quickly apparent from a study of these sculptures that the arts of music and dance were highly regarded during the Hoysala period. It also seems that these were times of a relatively high degree of sexual freedom and prominent female participation in public affairs.

The Hoysalas converted to Jainism in the 10th century, but took up Hinduism in the 11th century. This is why images of Shaivite, Vaishnavite and Jain sects coexist in their temples.

The saving grace of the otherwise shoddy KSTDC Mayura Shantala (☎ 273224; d/q with shared bathroom Rs 250/350) is its reasonably quiet garden compound, which is about the nicest place to grab refreshments in town. Four plain rooms offer shelter if you're really stuck.

SRAVANABELAGOLA

☎ 08176

Atop the bald rock of Vindhyagiri Hill, the 17.5m-high statue of the Jain deity Gomateshvara (Bahubali), said to be the world's tallest monolithic statue, is visible long before you reach the pilgrimage town of Sravanabelagola. Viewing the statue close up is the main reason for heading to this sedate town, whose name means 'the Monk of the White Pond'. The statue's simplicity and serenity is in complete contrast to the complexity and energy of the sculptural work at the Belur and Halebid temples.

In the 3rd century BC, Chandragupta Maurya came here with his guru, Bhagwan Bhadrabahu Swami, after renouncing his kingdom. Bhadrabahu's disciples spread his teachings all over the region, firmly planting Jainism in southern soils. The religion found powerful patrons in the Gangas, who ruled southern Karnataka between the 4th and 10th centuries, the zenith of Jainism's influence.

Information

The helpful tourist office (☎ 257254; ⏰ 10am-5.30pm) is in a new complex at the foot of Vindhyagiri Hill. There are plans for the complex to include an audiovisual interpretation display, a café and a gift store. Though there are no entry fees to the sites in Sravanabelagola, donations are encouraged.

Sights

GOMATESHVARA STATUE

The naked statue of Gomateshvara (Bahubali; ⏰ 6am-6.15pm), reached via 614 rock-cut steps up Vindhyagiri Hill, was commissioned by a military commander in the service of the Ganga king Rachamalla and carved out of granite by the sculptor Aristenemi in AD 981.

Bahubali's father was the great Emperor Vrishabhadeva, who became the first Jain tirthankar (revered Jain teacher), Adinath. Bahubali and his brother Bharatha competed fiercely for the right to succeed their father but, on the point of victory, Bahubali realised the futility of the struggle and renounced his kingdom. He withdrew from the material world, entered the forest and meditated in complete stillness until he attained enlightenment. The statue has vines curling around his legs and an ant hill at his feet, signs of his utter detachment. The gallery around his statue has many smaller images of Jain tirthankars.

You must leave your shoes at the foot of the hill; if the rocks are hot it's OK to wear socks. Those who prefer not to tackle the steps can hire a dholi (man-carried portable chair) with bearers for Rs 150; the dholi can be hired from 7am to 12.30pm and 3pm to 5.30pm.

Every 12 years, millions flock here to attend the Mahamastakabhisheka ceremony, which involves the statue being dowsed in all manner of fluids, pastes, powders, precious metals and stones. The next ceremony will be around January 2018.

TEMPLES

In addition to the Bahubali statue, there are several interesting Jain temples in the town and on Chandragiri Hill, the smaller of the two hills between which Sravanabelagola is nestled.

The Chandragupta Basti (Chandragupta Community; ⏰ 6am-6pm), on Chandragiri Hill, is believed to have been built by Emperor Ashoka. The Hoysala-style Bhandari Basti (Bhandari Community; ⏰ 6am-6pm), in the southeast corner of town, is Sravanabelagola's largest temple. Nearby, Chandranatha Basti (Chandranatha Community; ⏰ 6am-6pm) has well-preserved paintings resembling a 650-year-old comic strip of Jain stories.

Sleeping & Eating

The local Jain organisation SDJMI (☎ 257258) handles bookings for its 15 guesthouses; the office is behind the Vidyananda Nilaya Dharamsala, past the post office and before the bus stand on the way into town. Most foreigners find themselves bunked at the simple and well-maintained Yathri Nivas (d/tr Rs 135/160).

Hotel Raghu (☎ 257238; d from Rs 200; ❄), Sravanabelagola's only privately owned hotel, offers a range of dingy rooms, some with TV and AC; it's just at the foot of Vindhyagiri Hill. It also has a busy vegetarian restaurant (mains Rs 20-40; ⏰ 6am-9pm).

Getting There & Away

No buses go direct from Sravanabelagola to Hassan or Belur – you must go to Channarayapatna (Rs 8, 20 minutes) and catch an onward connection there. Three direct buses a day run to both Bengaluru (Rs 74, 3½ hours) and Mysore (Rs 45, 2½ hours). Nearly all long-distance buses leave before 3pm; if you miss these, catch a local bus to Channarayapatna, 10km northwest, which is on the main Bengaluru–Mangalore road and has lots of connections.

KARNATAKA COAST

MANGALORE

Situated at the point where the Netravati and Gurupur Rivers flow into the Arabian Sea, Managlore has been a pit stop on international trade routes since the 6th century AD. It was the major port of Hyder Ali's kingdom, and today the region's coffee and cashew crops are still shipped out from the modern port, which is 10km north of the city.

Not an especially picturesque place, Mangalore is the largest city on Karnataka's coast, and therefore is a useful place to stop for amenities. It's not without its tourist charms, however, chief of which is quiet Ullal Beach, 12km south of the city.

Orientation

Mangalore is hilly, with winding, disorienting streets. Luckily most hotels and restaurants, the bus stand and the train station are in or around the frenzied city centre, and are easy to find. Less handily, the KSRTC long-distance bus stand is 3km to the north.

Information

ATMs and internet cafés are everywhere, and several banks in town also have foreign-exchange facilities.

Athree Book Centre (Balmatta Rd; 8.30am-1pm & 2.30-8pm Mon-Sat)

Higginbothams (Lighthouse Hill Rd; 9.30am-1.30pm & 3.30-7.30pm Mon-Sat) Bookshop.

KSTDC tourist office (☎ 2442926; Lighthouse Hill Rd; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) Mostly useless.

Trade Wings (☎ 2427225; Lighthouse Hill Rd; 9.30am-5.30pm Mon-Sat) Travel agency that's the best place to change travellers cheques.

Sights

Catholicism's roots in Mangalore date back to the arrival of the Portuguese in the 1520s, and today the city is liberally dotted with churches. One of the most impressive is the Sistine Chapel–like St Aloysius College Chapel (Lighthouse Hill; 8.30am-6pm Mon-Sat, 10am-noon & 2-6pm Sun), with its walls and ceilings painted with brilliant frescoes. Nearby are the restful gardens of Tagore Park.

Sultan's Battery (Sultan Battery Rd; admission free; 6am-6pm), the only remnant of Tipu Sultan's fort, is 4km from the centre on the headland of the old port; bus 16 will get you there. Take bus 19 to Shreemanthi Bai Memorial Government Museum (☎ 2211106; admission Rs 2; 9am-5pm Tue-Sun), which has a motley collection that's worth a browse; check out the leather shadow puppets.

The attractive Keralan-style Kadri Manjunatha Temple (Kadri; 6am-1pm & 4-8pm) houses a 1000-year-old bronze statue of Lokeshwara. Puja (prayers) at the temple is at 8am, noon and 8pm; take bus 3, 4 or 6.

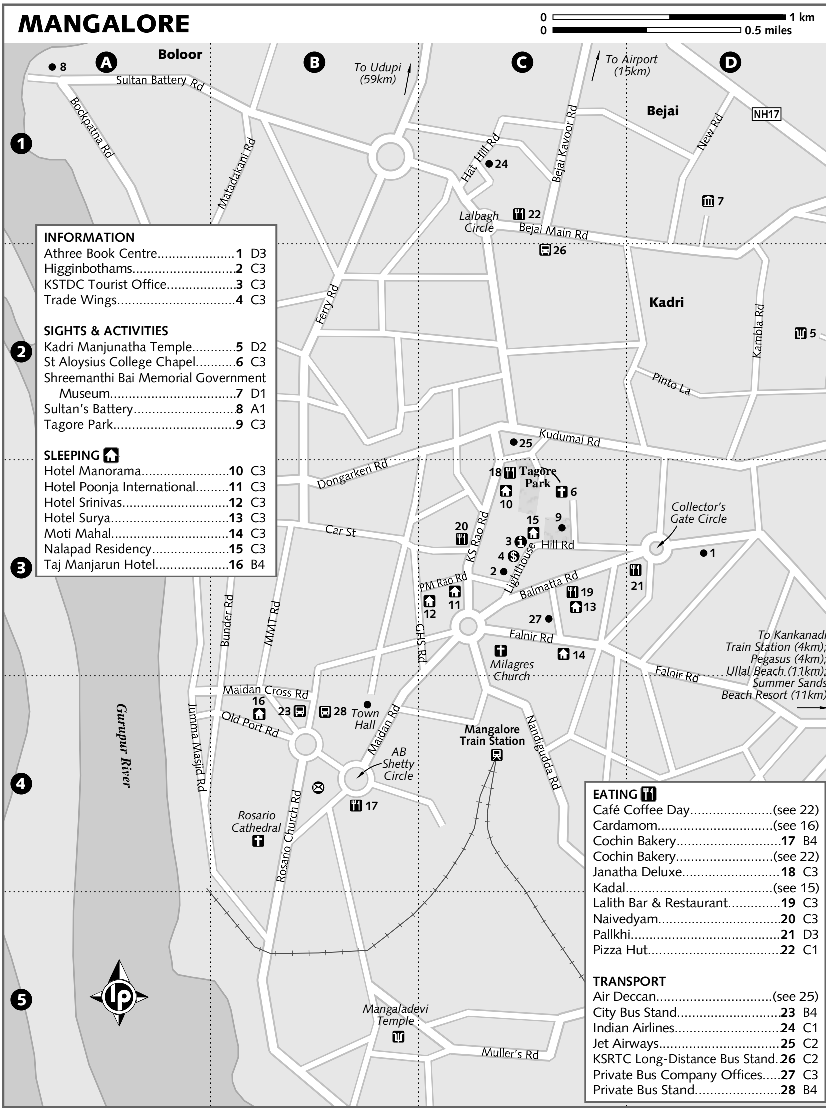
Serene Ullal Beach is best enjoyed at Summer Sands Beach Resort (opposite), which costs Rs 25 to enter (redeemable against food or drink at its restaurant) and Rs 60 to use the pool. An autorickshaw is Rs 150 one way, or the frequent bus 44A (Rs 7) from the City bus stand will drop you right outside the gate. Buses 44C or 44D also go to Ullal.

Sleeping

The humidity means few hotels are free from damp.

BUDGET

Hotel Surya (☎ 2425736; Balmatta Rd; s/d/tr from Rs 175/225/275;) Set back from the road near Lalith Restaurant, Hotel Surya has simple rooms with tiled floors and walls that could do with a lick of paint. The staff are friendly.



Hotel Manorama (☎ 2440306; KS Rao Rd; s/d from Rs 250/360;) This cheapie is a clear cut above other budget options. The superclean rooms have a sparse 1940s feel to them; the bathrooms have squat toilets.

Hotel Srinivas (☎ 2440061; www.hotelsrinivas.com; GHS Rd; s/d from Rs 400/525;) Central and reasonably clean, but really nothing to write home about.

MIDRANGE & TOP END

Hotel Poonja International (☎ 2440171; www.hotelpoonjainternational.com; KS Rao Rd; s/d from Rs 600/800;) Offers a good location, professional staff and reasonably comfortable no-frills rooms at decent prices.

Nalapad Residency (☎ 2424757; www.nalapad.com; Lighthouse Hill Rd; s/d from Rs 650/750;) Ask for a room with a sea view at the hilltop Nalapad.

Nice touches such as terracotta-tile ceilings in the lobby are, sadly, not replicated in the plain rooms.

Moti Mahal (☎ 2441411; www.motimahalmangalore.com; Falnir Rd; s/d incl breakfast from Rs 950/1250;) The selling point of this average hotel is its big outdoor pool and gym. There are also three restaurants.

Summer Sands Beach Resort (☎ 2467690; www.summer-sands.com; d from Rs 970;) Set amid leafy grounds beside Ullal Beach, Summer Sands' rustic bungalows are the ideal place for a quiet retreat. The Summer Place Restaurant (mains Rs 40 to 90) has plenty of fresh fish, as well as the sound of the ocean nearby.

Taj Manjarun Hotel (☎ 2420420; www.tajhotels.com; Old Port Rd; s/d Indian from Rs 1800/2300, foreigner from US$70/80;) This business-level Taj is head and shoulders above the rest of Mangalore's hotels. It has all the services you'd expect at one of its five-star sisters.

Eating

While in town sample some Mangalorean-style seafood, including local specialities such as kane (ladyfish) either served in a spicy coconut-based curry or fried in crumbs of rawa (semolina). Unless mentioned, places are open 6.30am to 11pm.

Janatha Deluxe (Hotel Shaan Plaza, KS Rao Rd; mains Rs 20-45) This local favourite serves good thalis (Rs 23) and a range of North and South Indian veg dishes.

Lalith Bar & Restaurant (Balmatta Rd; mains Rs 30-100; 9am-3pm & 5.30-11pm) Unwind in the Lalith's cool, dark interior while enjoying a cocktail or seafood (prawns, crab, kingfish) from its extensive menu.

Naivedyam (1st fl, Hotel Mangalore International, KS Rao Rd; mains Rs 40-80) As well as an extensive selection of veg cuisine, Naivedyam has an interesting range of tandoori dishes.

Pallkhi (☎ 2444929; 3rd fl, Tej Towers, Balmatta Rd; mains Rs 85-125; 12.30-3pm & 7-11.30pm) This relatively smart place has a good reputation for its seafood.

Pegasus (☎ 2240120; Sutej Baug, NH17, Jeppina Mogaru; mains Rs 80-200; 11.30am-3pm & 6.30-11.30pm) All manner of tasty seafood dishes are served in the octagonal dining room at Pegasus. It's about 1.5 km south of Pumpwell Circle on the Kerala road.

Kadal (7th fl, Nalapad Residency, Lighthouse Hill Rd; mains Rs 120; 11.30am-3.30pm & 7.30pm-midnight) This high-rise restaurant has the best city views. Try the spicy chicken varval (a coastal Karnataka style of curry) or one of the fish dishes.

Cardamom (Taj Manjarun Hotel, Old Port Rd; mains Rs 100-300) The Taj's main restaurant is a slick affair. The daily buffet lunch (Rs 295) offers a delicious spread, and there's live music in the evening from Wednesday to Saturday.

If you're hungering for Western food, head to Bharath Mall (Bejai Main Rd; 10am-10pm) close to Lalbagh Circle where you'll find branches of Pizza Hut and Café Coffee Day. For desserts, try Cochin Bakery (AB Shetty Circle; cakes Rs 5-10; 9.15am-9pm Mon-Fri, 9.15am-1.30pm Sat) for its paneer puffs, pineapple lardy cake and other baked goods.

Getting There & Away

AIR

About 3.5km out of town, Indian Airlines (☎ 2254254; Hathill Rd) flies daily to Mumbai (Rs 2965, 1¼ hours). Jet Airways (☎ 2441181; Ram Bhavan Complex, KS Rao Rd) has two daily flights to Mumbai (US$175) and one to Bengaluru (US$102, 45 minutes). In the same complex you'll find Air Deccan (☎ 2496948), which also flies twice daily to Bengaluru (Rs 1474).

torickshaw there costs about Rs 20. It's quite orderly, with bus services to the destinations listed on opposite.

Private buses heading to destinations including Udupi, Sringeri, Mudabidri and Jog Falls run from opposite the City bus stand. Tickets can be purchased at offices near Falnir Rd.

Be warned that the roads to Managlore from the Deccan plateau (and parts of the coastal highway) are pot-hole hell during the monsoon and usually for several months after.

TRAIN

The main train station (☎ 2423137) is south of the city centre. The 12.10pm Matsyagandha Express stops at Margao (sleeper/2AC Rs 217/843, five hours) in Goa, and continues to Mumbai (sleeper/2AC Rs 393/1631, 16 hours). The 5.50pm Malabar Express heads to Thiruvananthapuram (Trivandrum; sleeper/2AC Rs 261/1096, 15½ hours). Express trains to Chennai (sleeper/2AC Rs 338/1384, 17 hours) depart at 1.15pm and 9.15pm.

Several Konkan Railway trains (to Mumbai, Margao, Ernakulam or Trivandrum) use Kankanadi train station (☎ 2437824), 5km east of the city.

Getting Around

The airport is about 22km north of the city. Take bus 47B or 47C from the City bus stand or catch a taxi (Rs 300). Indian Airlines has a free airport shuttle for its passengers.

The City bus stand is opposite the State Bank of India, close to the Taj Manjarun Hotel. Flag fall for autorickshaws is Rs 11, and they cost Rs 11 per kilometre thereafter. For late-night travel, add on 50%. An autorickshaw to Kankanadi station costs around Rs 40, or take bus 9 or 11B.

DHARMASTALA

Inland from Mangalore are a string of Jain temple towns, including Venur, Mudabidri and Karkal. The most interesting is Dharmastala, 75km east of Mangalore on the banks of the Nethravathi River. In a remarkable show of organisation, the town hosts an average 10,000 pilgrims a day, and 10 times as many on major holidays and during the town's festival season (see p882).

Three elephants are on hand to bless pilgrims outside the nondenominational Manjunatha Temple (🕒 6.30am-2pm & 6.30-8.30pm); men entering the temple should do so bare chested and, preferably, wearing long trousers. Simple free meals are available in the temple's kitchen (🕒 11.30am-2.15pm & 7.30-10pm), which is attached to a hall that can seat up to 3000. It gets through around 2500kg of rice a day!

Elsewhere in this lively town there's a 12m-high statue of Bahubali; the Manjusha Museum (Rs 2; 🕒 10am-1pm & 4.30-9pm) housing a collection of Indian stone and metal sculptures, jewellery and local craft products; and, best of all, the Car Museum (admission Rs 3; 🕒 8.30am-1pm & 2-7pm), home to 48 vintage autos, including a 1903 Renault, a monster of a Cadillac from 1954 and a 1983 Datsun!

Should you wish to stay in Dharmastala, contact the helpful temple office (☎ 08256-277121; www.shridharmasthala.org), which can arrange accommodation for Rs 50 per person in one of its pilgrim lodges.

There are frequent buses to Dharmastala from Mangalore (Rs 30, two hours).

UDUPI (UDIPI)

☎ 0820

Vaishnavite pilgrims come to Udupi to visit its Krishna Temple (☎ 2520598; Car St; 🕒 5.30am-8.30pm), dating from the 13th century. Surrounded by eight maths (monasteries), the atmospheric temple is a hive of activity, with musicians playing at the entrance, elephants on hand for puja, and pilgrims constantly coming and going. Darshan (viewing of a deity) is available to non-Hindus; men must enter the main shrine bare chested.

Near the temple, above the Corp Bank ATM, the tourist office (☎ 2529718; Krishna Bldg, Car St; 🕒 10am-1.30pm & 2.30-5.30pm Mon-Sat) is a useful source of advice on Udupi and the surrounding area.

Udupi is famed for its vegetarian food – it's particularly well known for creating the masala dosa. A good place to sample the local fair is Woodlands (Dr UR Rao Complex; 🕒 8am-9.30pm), a short walk south of the temple. It serves dosas before 11.30pm and after 3.30pm. In between you can get a pretty good thali (Rs 30 to 43).

Udupi is 58km north of Mangalore along the coast; regular buses run here from Mangalore (Rs 29, 1½ hours).

MALPE

☎ 0820

The fishing harbour of Malpe is set on the coast, 4km from Udupi. From Malpe it's possible to take a boat (Rs 70 per person) out to tiny St Mary's Island, where Vasco da Gama is said to have landed in 1498. At weekends the island is busy with groups of locals inspecting the curious hexagonal basalt rock formations that jut out of the sand; during the week you might just have it to yourself.

Paradise Isle Beach Resort (☎ 2537300; www.theparadiseisle.com; s/d Rs 3000/3500;) is right on Malpe Beach, about 2km north of the harbour, with a clear view of St Mary's Island. It lacks atmosphere but the rooms are comfortable and clean. Students from the nearby university at Manipal converge here on Saturdays to drink and dance at the hotel's disco. The neighbouring food court is the only spot to grab a meal.

An autorickshaw from Udupi to Malpe is Rs 50.

AMGOL

Head inland for 6km from Kundapura on National Highway 17 to the sleepy village of Basrur on the banks of the Varahi River. A punted boat will then transport you the 200m across to the slender private island of Amgol (r per person incl full board Rs 1500), which is no more than 750m long and is home to just five rustic rooms. To stay at this tranquil spot book through Soans Holidays (☎ 08254-231683; www.soans.com). On the way to the village is one of the racing areas for Kambla (see Buffalo Surfing, opposite).

MURUDESHWAR

There are pleasant beaches at this sacred site where the pretty little Shiva temple is overshadowed by a 40m-high idol of the deity (the tallest in the world) and a stupendous 83m-tall gopuram. If you think the Shiva statue looks lopsided, it's because one of his four arms blew off in a storm.

Accommodation is no problem, with the RNS Residency (☎ 260060, 268901; www.naveenhotels.com; r from Rs 900;) and the Naveen Beach Resort (☎ 260415, 260428; www.naveenhotels.com; r from Rs 1400;) offering decent rooms with sea views. Perched over the waves, the Naveen Beach Restaurant does excellent Punjabi or South Indian thalis (Rs 25 to 45), as well as ice-cream sundaes.

Murudeshwar is just off the coastal highway, 163km north of Mangalore and 70km south of Gokarana. Trains on the Konkan Railway (www.konkanrailway.com), which connects Goa with Mumbai and Mangalore, stop here.

KARNATAKA

JOG FALLS

☎ 08186

Jog Falls might be the highest waterfalls in India, but unless you visit during the monsoon they're not that exciting; the Linganamakki Dam further up the Sharavati River limits the water flow. The longest of the four falls is the Raja, which drops 293m.

The viewing area close to the bus stand is scrappy. The best thing you can do if you come here is to hike to the foot of the falls, accessible by a 1200-plus step path – it will take around one hour to get down and two to get up. Watch out for leeches in the wet season.

The friendly tourist office (☎ 244732; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) is above the food stalls close to the bus stand.

Jog Falls has two inspection bungalows, usually reserved for VIPs. The British Bungalow (☎ 08389-230134; r Rs 100) sits atop the falls about 3km from the bus stand. The PW Guesthouse (☎ 08183-226213; per person Rs 250), across from the KSTDC hotel, is pretty fancy.

The KSTDC Hotel Mayura Gerusoppa (☎ 244732; s/d Rs 300/400), about 150m from the car park, has enormous, musty rooms.

Stalls near the bus stand serve omelettes, thalis, noodles and rice dishes, plus hot and cold drinks. KSTDC's mediocre restaurant (meals Rs 20-40) is just next door.

Jog Falls has buses roughly every hour to Shimoga (Rs 45, three hours) and to Sagar (Rs 13, one hour), two a day to Siddapur (Rs 10, one hour) and three daily to Karwar via Kumta (Rs 38, three hours), where you can change for Gokarna (Rs 12, 45 minutes). There are two painfully slow daily buses to/from Mangalore (Rs 112, eight hours); you may be better off going via Shimoga.

GOKARNA

☎ 08386

Sun worshippers and Hindu pilgrims rub shoulders in the low-key village of Gokarna (Cow's Ear), 50km south of Karwar. The quaint village is a holy place, which you should bear in mind if sunbaking is your objective. Modesty is your best policy; keep shoulders and knees covered, and take your parties to the out-of-town beaches.

Information

There are lots of places to access the internet, including many of the guesthouses.

BUFFALO SURFING

Kambla, the Canarese sport of buffalo racing, first became popular in the early part of the 20th century, when farmers would race their buffaloes home after a day in the fields. Today the best of the races have hit the big time, with thousands of spectators attending. The valuable racing buffaloes are pampered and prepared like thoroughbreds – a good animal can cost more than Rs 300,000.

The events are held in the Dakshina Kannada region between November and March, usually on a weekend. Parallel tracks (120m long) are laid out in a paddy field, and the fastest pairs of buffaloes can cover the distance through water and mud in around 14 seconds. There are two versions: in one, the man runs alongside the buffalo; in the other, he rides on a board fixed to a ploughshare, literally surfing his way down the track behind the beasts. And if you don't think these lumbering beasts can really move, look out!

Shree Radhakrishna Bookstore (Car St; 10am-6pm) Good selection of new and second-hand books.
Pai STD Shop (Main St; 9am-9pm) Changes cash and travellers cheques and gives advances on Visa.

Sights & Activities

TEMPLES

Foreigners are not allowed inside Gokarna's temples, but you'll certainly bear witness to religious rituals around town. At the western end of Car St is the Mahabaleshwara Temple, home to a revered lingam (phallic image of Shiva). Nearby is the Ganapati Temple, which honours the role Ganesh played in rescuing the lingam. At the other end of the street is the Venkataraman Temple, and 100m south of this is Koorti Teertha, the large temple tank (reservoir), where locals, pilgrims and immaculately dressed Brahmins perform their ablutions next to dhobi-wallahs (people who wash clothes) on the ghats (steps or landings).

BEACHES

Gokarna's 'town beach' suffers from litter: the best sands are reached via a footpath that begins on the southern side of the Ganapati Temple and heads southward (if you reach the bathing tank – or find yourself clawing up rocks – you're on the wrong path).

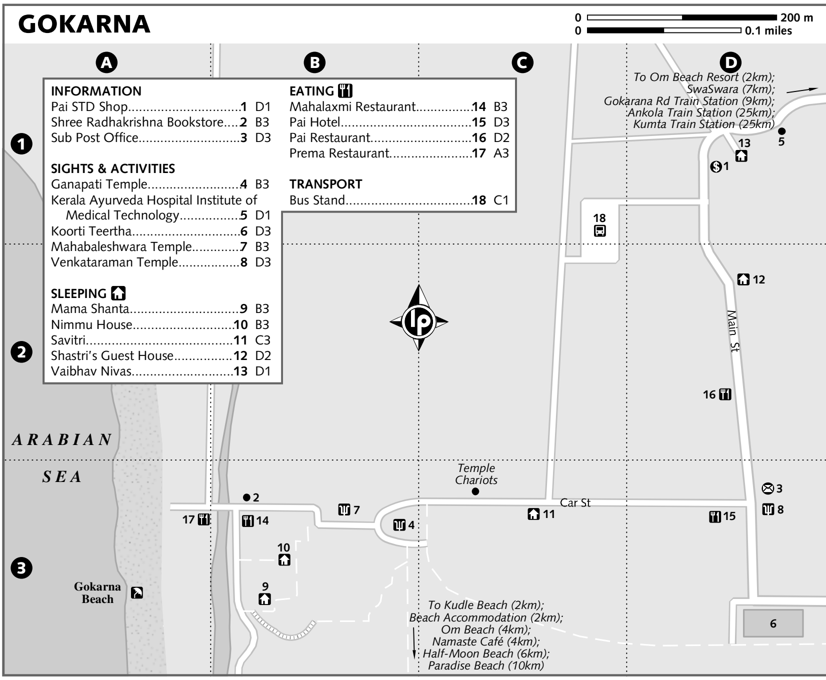
Twenty minutes on the path will bring you to the top of a barren headland with expansive sea views. On the southern side is Kudle (kood-lee), the first in a series of four lovely beaches. Basic snacks, drinks and accommodation are available here.

At the southern end of Kudle Beach, a track climbs over the next headland, and a further 20-minute walk brings you to Om Beach, with a handful of chai (tea) shops and shacks. A sealed road provides vehicle access to Om, but it's generally deserted except on holidays and weekends, when day-trippers come by the carload. To the south, the more isolated Half-Moon Beach and Paradise Beach are a 30-minute and one-hour walk, respectively.

Depending on demand, boats run from Gokarna Beach (look for the fishermen) to Kudle (Rs 100) and Om (Rs 200). An autorickshaw from town costs Rs 200 to Om Beach.

Don't walk between the beaches and Gokarna after dark, and don't walk alone at any time – it's easy to slip on the paths or get lost, and muggings have occurred. For a small fee, most lodges in Gokarana will safely stow valuables and baggage while you chill out in the beach huts.

AYURVEDA



Apart from Ayurveda centres at SwaSwara (p918) and Om Beach Resort (p919), a good range of Ayurvedic treatments are available at the Kerala Ayurveda Hospital Institute of Medical Technology (☎ 9945702596; www.keralaayurvedagokarn.com; Kamat Complex, Main St; 8am-8pm). Prices kick off with a general massage for Rs 400.

Sleeping

With a few exceptions the choice here is between a rudimentary shack on the beach or a basic but more comfortable room in town.

BEACHES

Both Kudle and Om Beaches have several budget options in the form of huts and rooms – shop around. Huts and basic restaurants open up on Half-Moon and Paradise Beaches from late November to March. Most places provide at least a bedroll, but you will want to bring your own sleeping sheet or sleeping bag. Padlocks are provided and huts are secure. Communal washing and toilet facilities are simple.

Spanish Place (257311; Kudle Beach; huts with shared bathroom Rs 70, d Rs 250;) This chilled spot in the middle stretch of Kudle Beach has palm-thatch huts, and two lovely garden rooms with private shower but common 'toilet' (ie the bushes).

Namaste (257141; Om Beach; s with shared bathroom Rs 100, deluxe hut with private bathroom Rs 400;) In and out of season, Namaste is the place to hang. Its spacious restaurant-bar does good food and is the premier Om chill-out spot. In season it also offers basic huts (Rs 50) at Paradise Beach and cottages at Namaste Farm (from Rs 300) on Kudle Beach.

SwaSwara (0484-2668221; www.swaswara.com; Om Beach; r incl breakfast from US$300;) Using the red laterite stone, this beautifully designed and unobtrusive resort provides a luxurious base for a holiday based around yoga and Ayurvedic treatments. Rates include taxes and yoga sessions. Guests are encouraged to pop into the kitchens to learn from the cooks and exchange culinary tips.

GOKARNA

Most guesthouses in town offer discounts in the low season.

Vaibhav Nivas (256714; off Main St; r with shared bathroom Rs 80, s/d/tr with private bathroom from Rs 75/100/200;) The cell-like rooms at this place tucked away from the main drag come with mosquito nets and hot water in the morning. There's also a rooftop restaurant.

Mama Shanta (256213; r with shared/private bathroom Rs 100/200; Oct-May) Just past Nimmu House, you'll find this homestay run by a kindly old soul who rents out very basic rooms a hop away from the beach.

Shastri's Guest House (256220; dr_murti@rediffmail.com; Main St; r Rs 125-150) The singles are claustrophobic, but the doubles out the back are big and sunny; some have balconies and palm-tree views. New rooms were being added at the time of research.

Nimmu House (256730; nimmuhouse@yahoo.com; s/d from Rs 150/300;) The best of the budget brigade, Nimmu House has recently renovated a block to provide pleasant tiled-floor rooms with balconies. The management are very friendly.

Savitri (☎ 256720; Car St; d from Rs 200) In the middle of town, this new place offers spotless, simply furnished rooms.

Om Beach Resort (☎ 257052; www.ombeachresort.com; Bangle Gudde; d incl full board US$40;) This small resort is, confusingly, not at Om Beach but on the headland, about 2km out of Gokarna off the Om Beach road. Accommodation is in nicely decorated rooms in brick cottages with views out to the coast. Rates include taxes. There's a professional Ayurvedic centre on site with various treatment packages available.

Eating

The chai shops on all of the beaches rustle up basic snacks and meals.

Prema Restaurant (meals Rs 20-60; 8am-9pm) Closest place to the town beach, Prema whips up a decent masala dosa (Rs 15) and thali (Rs 30), along with traveller treats, such as coffee milk shakes, and yogurt with muesli and honey.

Mahalaxmi Restaurant (meals Rs 30-70) This popular traveller hang-out promises 'all types of world famous dishes' (ie banana pancakes and cornflakes) in myriad ways. It also has a handful of simple rooms to rent (Rs 150).

Namaste Café (meals Rs 30-80; 7am-11pm) Om Beach's social centre serves OK Western stand-bys – pizzas and burgers – and some Israeli specials.

A couple of decent vegetarian places in Gokarana:

Pai Hotel (Car St; mains Rs 15-30; 6am-9.30pm)
Pai Restaurant (Main St; mains Rs 20-40; 6.30am-9.30pm)

Getting There & Away

BUS

From Gokarna's bus stand (☎ 279487), one bus daily heads to Margao (Rs 65, four hours); alternatively you can go to Karwar (Rs 29, 1½ hours, three daily), which has connections to Goa. Direct buses run to Hubli (Rs 86, four hours, five daily), and a daily 6.45am bus goes direct to Mangalore (Rs 129, six hours), continuing on to Mysore (Rs 328, 14 hours). If you miss this, get an hourly local bus to Kumta, 25km south, then one of the frequent Mangalore buses from there. Daily buses set off to Hospet (Rs 165, nine hours) for Hampi at 7am and 2.30pm. There's an ordinary bus to Bengaluru (Rs 257, 12 hours) at 5pm and a deluxe one (Rs 432) at 7pm.

TRAIN

The Konkan Railway is the best way to reach Goa and Mangalore, among other destinations, though only slow passenger trains stop at Gokarna Rd train station (☎ 279487), 9km from town. A noon train heads to Margao (Rs 23, two hours); another leaves at 4.25pm (Rs 54, 1½ hours). For Mangalore (Rs 44, five hours), trains depart at 5pm and 3am. Trains head to Kochi (Cochin; sleeper Rs 281, 15 hours) on Saturday and Sunday; you must buy a sleeper ticket and upgrade, if you like, upon boarding. Many of the hotels and small travel agencies in Gokarna can book tickets.

Autorickshaws charge Rs 100 to take you out to the station, but buses go hourly (Rs 7) and also meet arriving passenger trains.

Several express trains stop at Ankola and Kumta stations, both about 25km from Gokarna and accessible by local bus.

CENTRAL KARNATAKA

☎ 08394

The fascinating ruins of the 15th-century city of Vijayanagar, near the village of Hampi, are set in an extraordinary landscape of giant granite boulders, lush paddies and banana plantations. The clock seems to have stopped at this World Heritage site, and you can spend a surprisingly large amount of time gazing at the weirdly balanced rocks, wondering how millions of years of erosion could achieve such formations.

Given its magical atmosphere, Hampi is a major pit stop on the traveller circuit, with November to March (the cooler months) being the peak season. The ruins cover a wide area, but it's possible to see the main sites in a day or two. However, this goes against Hampi's relaxed grain, so plan on lingering for a while.

History

In the Hindu legends of Ramayana, this area was Kishkinda, the realm of the monkey gods. In 1336 the Telugu princes Harihara and Bukka founded the city of Vijayanagar, which over the next couple of centuries grew into one of the largest Hindu empires in Indian history (see the Struggle for the Soul of India, p44).

By the 16th century, the greater metropolitan region of Vijayanagar, surrounded by seven lines of fortification, covered 650 sq km and had a population of about 500,000. Vijayanagar's busy bazaars were centres of international commerce, brimming with precious stones and merchants from faraway lands. This all came to a sudden end in 1565 when the city was ransacked by a confederacy of Deccan sultanates; it subsequently went into terminal decline.

Today's battles are being waged between those who want to protect what's left of Hampi's ruins and the people who now live there. Although it was declared a World Heritage site in 1986, only 58 of the 550 monuments in the area hold heritage-protection status. The businesses occupying Hampi Bazaar have been given their marching orders and a new complex for the area's modern-day needs is under slow construction away from the monuments. Global Heritage Fund (www.globalheritagefund.org/where/hampi.html) have more details about Hampi's endangered monuments.

Orientation

Hampi Bazaar and the village of Kamalapuram to the south are the two main points of entry to the ruins. The KSTDC Hotel and the archaeological museum are in Kamalapuram. The main travellers' scene is Hampi Bazaar, a village crammed with budget lodges, shops and restaurants, all dominated by the Virupaksha Temple. The ruins themselves are divided into two main areas: the Sacred Centre, around Hampi Bazaar; and the Royal Centre, to the south around Kamalapuram. To the northeast across the Tungabhadra River is the village of Anegundi. Signposting in some parts of the site is inadequate, but you can't really get lost.

Information

Aspiration Stores (Map p922; 10am-1pm & 4-8pm) For books on the area. Recommended is Hampi by John M Fritz and George Michell – a good architectural study.
Canara Bank (Map p922; ☎ 241243; 11am-2pm Mon-Tue & Thu-Sat) Changes travellers cheques and gives cash advances on credit cards. The numerous authorised moneychangers around offer slightly worse rates.
Hampi Heritage Gallery (Map p922; 10am-2pm & 3-6pm) Sells books and offers half-day walking or cycling tours for Rs 200.
Sree Rama Cyber Café (Map p922; per hr Rs 50; 7am-11pm) Hampi is brimming with internet cafés – this is a good one. It also burns CDs of digital snaps for Rs 60.
Tourist Office (Map p922; ☎ 241339; 10am-5.30pm Sat-Thu) Can arrange guides for Rs 300/500 for a half-/full day.

Dangers & Annoyances

Hampi is a safe place, generally free of any aggression. That said, don't wander around the ruins after dark or alone, as muggings and violent attacks are not unknown.

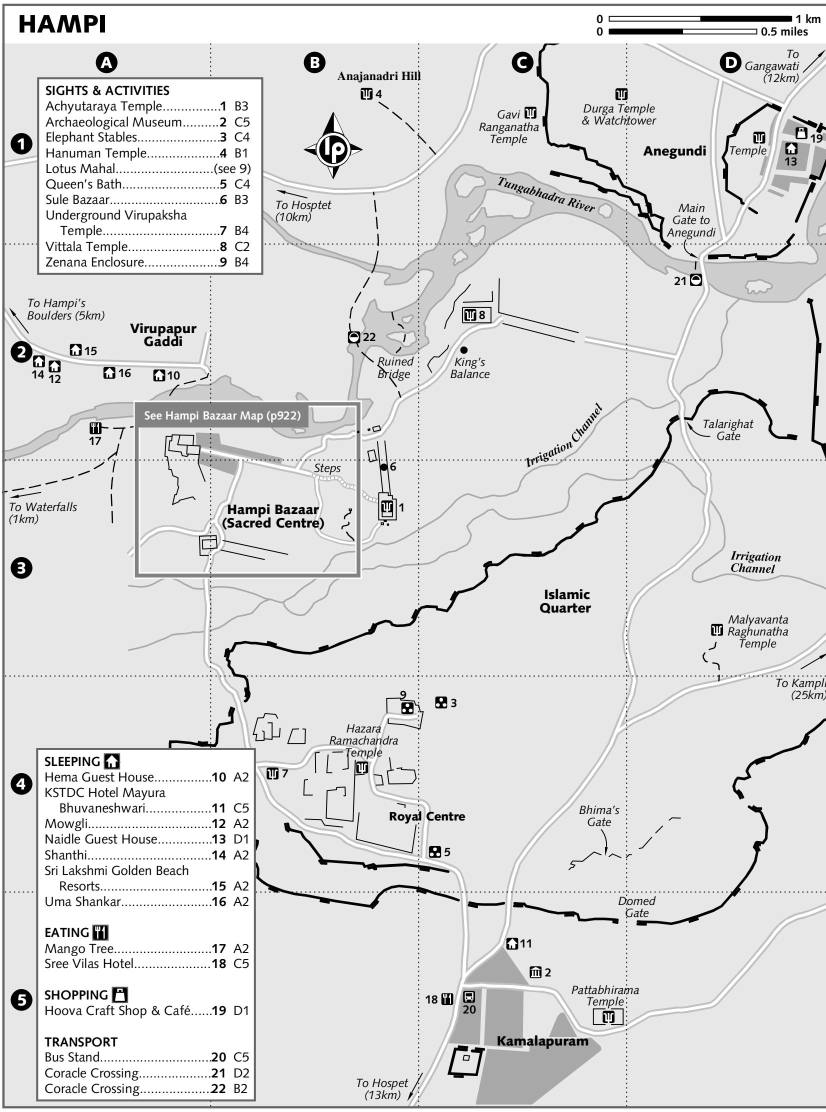
Keep your wits about you with the auto-rickshaw drivers; some will overcharge outrageously for short trips around the village (you shouldn't have to pay more than Rs 10 for a ride from bus station to any of the lodges) and take commission from some of the lodge owners they recommend.

Sights & Activities

VIRUPAKSHA TEMPLE

The focal point of Hampi Bazaar is the Virupaksha Temple (Map p922; ☎ 2441241; admission Rs 2; dawn-dusk), one of the city's oldest structures. The main gopuram, almost 50m high, was built in 1442, with a smaller one added in 1510. The main shrine is dedicated to Virupaksha, a form of Shiva.

If Lakshmi (the temple elephant) and her attendant are around, you can get a smooch (blessing) from her for a Rs 1 coin. The adorable Lakshmi gets her morning bath at 7.30am, just down the way by the river ghats.



To the south, overlooking Virupaksha Temple, Hemakuta Hill (Map p922) has a scattering of early ruins, including Jain temples and a monolithic sculpture of Narasimha (Vishnu in his man-lion incarnation). It's worth the short walk up for the view over the bazaar.

At the east end of Hampi Bazaar is a monolithic Nandi statue (Map p922) and shrine. This is the main location for Vijaya Utsav, the Hampi arts festival held in November (see p882).

VITTALA TEMPLE

From the eastern end of Hampi Bazaar, a track, best covered on foot, leads left to the Vittala Temple (Map p921; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/US$5; 8.30am-5.30pm), about 2km away. The undisputed highlight of the Hampi ruins, the 16th-century temple is in a good state of preservation, though purists may gasp at the cement-block columns erected to keep the main structure from collapsing.

Work likely started on the temple during the reign of Krishnadevaraya (1509–29) and, despite the fact that it was never finished or consecrated, the temple's incredible sculptural work is the pinnacle of Vijayanagar art. The outer 'musical' pillars reverberate when tapped, although this is discouraged to avoid further damage. There's an ornate stone chariot in the temple courtyard containing an image of Garuda. Its wheels were once capable of turning.

Keep your temple entry ticket for same-day admission into the Zenana Enclosure and Elephant Stables in the Royal Centre (see p922).

SULE BAZAAR & ACHYUTARAYA TEMPLE

Halfway along the path from Hampi Bazaar to the Vittala Temple, a track to the right leads to deserted Sule Bazaar (Map p921), which gives you some idea of what Hampi Bazaar might have looked like if it hadn't been re-populated. At the southern end of this area is the Achyutaraya Temple (Map p921). Its isolated location at the foot of Matanga Hill makes it quietly atmospheric.

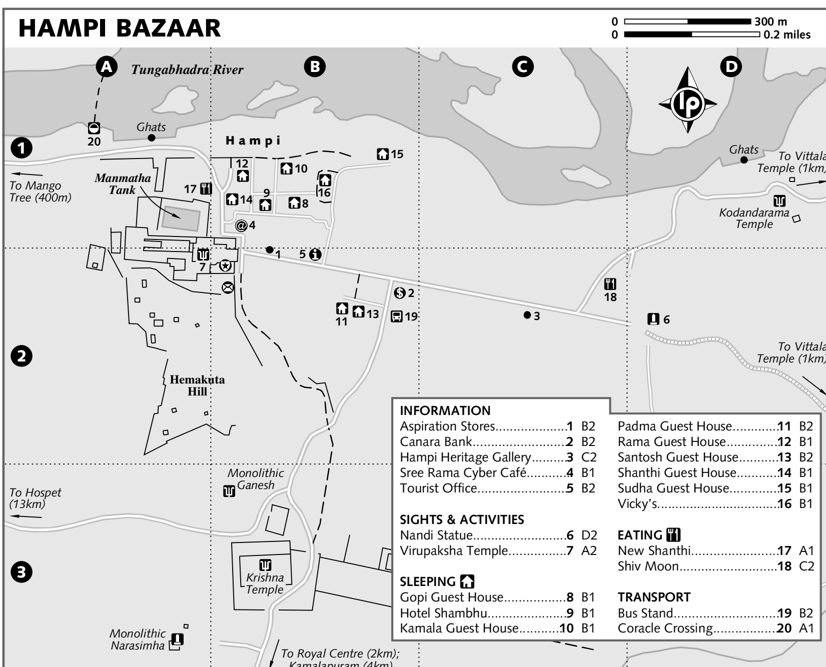
ROYAL CENTRE

This area of Hampi is quite different from the area around Hampi Bazaar, since most of the rounded boulders that once littered the site have been used to create beautiful stone walls. It's a 2km walk on a track from the Achyutaraya Temple, but most people get to it from the Hampi Bazaar–Kamalapuram road. This area is easily explored by bicycle since a decent dirt road runs through its heart.

Within various enclosures here are the rest of Hampi's major attractions, including the walled compound known as the Zenana Enclosure (Map p921; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/US$5; 8.30am-5.30pm), and the Elephant Stables (Map p921; admission incl ticket to Zenana Enclosure; 8.30am-5.30pm). The former holds the Lotus Mahal, a delicately designed pavilion. It's an amazing synthesis of Hindu and Islamic styles, and gets its name from the lotus bud carved in the centre of the domed and vaulted ceiling. The Elephant Stables is a grand building with domed chambers where the state elephants once resided. Your entry ticket to the Zenana Enclosure and the stables is also valid for same-day admission to the Vittala Temple (p920).



Further south, you'll find various temples and elaborate waterworks, including the Underground Virupaksha Temple (Map p921; 8.30am-5.30pm) and the Queen's Bath (Map p921; 8.30am-5.30pm), which is deceptively plain on the outside but quite lovely inside.

ARCHAEOLOGICAL MUSEUM

The archaeological museum (Map p921; ☎ 241561; Kamalapuram; admission Rs 5; 10am-5pm Sat-Thu) has well-displayed collections of sculptures from local ruins, Neolithic tools, 16th-century weaponry and a large floor model of the Vijayanagar ruins.

ANEGUNDI

North of the river is the ruined fortified stronghold of Anegundi (Map p921), an older

THE KISHKINDA TRUST

The Kishkinda Trust (TKT; ☎ 08533-267777; wwwthekishkindatrust.org) runs programmes and builds business opportunities in Anegundi that benefit both the local community and help preserve the village's heritage and culture. The first project in 1997 created a cottage industry of crafts using locally produced cloth, banana fibres and river grasses. It now employs over 500 women and the attractive crafts are sold across India; you can view the range at the Hoova Craft Shop & Café (9.30am-5pm Mon-Sat, 10am-2.30pm Sun) in the village centre. Internet access and bicycle rental are also available here.

With international support, one of the village's traditional houses has been rehabilitated and turned into an interpretation centre. TKT's latest project is a series of homestays and guesthouses around the village; rates start at Rs 250 per person. The Naidle Guesthouse (d Rs 500) sleeps up to seven people. Meals (from Rs 30 to 150) are extra.

structure than those at Hampi; within it you'll find a charming village. Free of the rampant commercialism that blights Hampi Bazaar, this is a wonderful place to stay thanks to a heritage-conservation project (see the Kishkinda Trust, above).

Much of the old defensive wall is intact and there are numerous small temples worth a visit, including the whitewashed Hanuman Temple (Map p921; dawn-dusk), perched on top of the prominent Anjanadri Hill. Fittingly, lots of cheeky monkeys roam about, so don't walk up wearing bananas.

It takes less than an hour to walk to Anegundi from Hampi Bazaar. At the time of research a new bridge across the Tungabhadra River was nearing completion; until then coracle rides cost Rs 10. Alternatively there's a road to Anegundi from Hospet.

ROCK-CLIMBING

Some of the best low-altitude climbing in India can be had near Hampi. For more information, see p924.

Sleeping

There's little to choose between many of the quaint but basic rooms in Hampi Bazaar and Virupapur Gaddi. If you need AC and cable TV, stay in Hospet (p925), or if you're looking for something quieter then consider staying in Anegundi (see the Kishkinda Trust, above). The prices listed can shoot up by 50% or more during the manic fortnight around New Year's Day, and drop just as dramatically in the low season (from April to September).

HAMPI BAZAAR

All of the following places are shown on Map p922.

Shanthi Guest House (☎ 241568; s/d with shared bathroom Rs 100/150) An oldie but a goodie, Shanthi offers a peaceful courtyard, bicycle rental (Rs 40), a morning bakery delivery and a small shop that operates on an honour system.

Gopi Guest House (☎ 241695; kirangopi2002@yahoo.com; d Rs 200-400;) The Gopi empire keeps on expanding – apart from the rooftop garden and restaurant, it has recently renovated a block across the road, which contains four pleasant en suite rooms. Management plans to offer free yoga lessons up on the roof.

Vicky's (☎ 241694; vikkyhampi@yahoo.co.in; r Rs 250;) One of the village's larger operations, with 10 brightly painted rooms, a swing chair on the front porch, internet access and the requisite rooftop café.

Hotel Shambhu (☎ 241383; angadiparamesh1@hotmail.com; r Rs 300) Rooms painted in lavender, and a hallway with plants and an opalescent chandelier add a distinctive note to this pleasing place.

Padma Guest House (☎ 241331; s/d Rs 300/400) A range of good rooms are offered by the astute Padma, including some with lovely views of Virupaksha Temple.

Other good options:

Sudha Guest House (☎ 652752; d from Rs 250) Has a good family vibe, and some doubles fit three people.

Kamala Guest House (☎ 592662; ganeshashanker@yahoo.com; r Rs 300) New place with four well-presented rooms.

Rama Guest House (☎ 241962; d Rs 300) Has kept up good standards and added a few more rooms since we last checked.

Santosh Guest House (☎ 241460; hampisachin@yahoo.com; r Rs 350-500) Spotlessly clean; TV available in the most expensive room.

VIRUPAPUR GADDI

Many travellers prefer the tranquil atmosphere of Virupapur Gaddi, immediately across the river from Hampi Bazaar. A small boat (Rs 10) shuttles frequently across the river from 7am, although out of high season the last one leaves at 6pm. When the river is running high during the monsoon, boats may not be able to cross.

Shanthi (Map p921; ☎ 325352; r with shared bathroom Rs 100, bungalows with private bathroom from Rs 250) Shanthi's bungalows have ricefield, river and sunset views, and front porches with couch swings. The restaurant does good thalis (Rs 45) and pizzas (Rs 70 to 85).

Mowgli (Map p921; ☎ 9448217588; mowgli96@hotmail.com; r with shared bathroom Rs 100, bungalows with private bathroom from Rs 250;) With prime views across the rice fields, shady gardens sheltering hammocks, and thatched-roof bungalows, this is a top-class chill-out spot.

Hema Guest House (Map p921; ☎ 9449103008; dm/bungalows Rs 100/300) Justifiably one of Virupapur Gaddi's more popular spots, the Hema offers a friendly welcome, simple accommodation and a relaxing restaurant in a beautiful wooden belvedere.

Sri Lakshmi Golden Beach Resorts (Map p921; ☎ 08533-287008; d Rs 150-1500;) With a traditional resort feel, this place has a wide range of rooms, some in circular cottages with circular beds. At the time of research the large pool was out of commission; once it's up and running nonguests can use it for Rs 50 per hour.

Hampi's Boulders (☎ 08539-265939, 9448034202; Narayanpet; s/d incl full board from Rs 4000/6000;) To really get away from it all, head for this very discreet, small-scale wilderness resort, 5km west of Virupapur Gaddi. Inventively designed cottages blend almost seamlessly into the landscape, and the food is excellent.

KAMALAPURAM

KSTDC Hotel Mayura Bhuvaneshwari (Map p921; ☎ 08394-241574; d/tr from Rs 400/500;) This soulless, government-run place is really only worth it if you can't live without AC (and these rooms kick off at Rs 900). One slender point in its favour is its bar – the only legal one close to Hampi.

Eating

With one exception, Hampi is not renowned for its restaurants. Due to Hampi's religious significance, meat is scarce (if you want a chicken dish, for example, you generally have to order it a day in advance) and alcohol is banned – though travellers have been known to (discreetly) bend the rules. Places are open from 7am to 10pm.

our pick Mango Tree (Map p921; mains Rs 25-70) No visit to Hampi is complete until you've spent a lazy few hours at the Mango Tree. The walk out here through a banana plantation is delicious, the thalis (Rs 45) are a treat, and it does dosas for breakfast and dinner. Hop on the swing that hangs from the eponymous mango tree or lie back on the terraced seating with a book for the afternoon.

CLIMBING IN KARNATAKA

Magnificent bluffs and rounded boulders poke up all over Karnataka, offering some of India's best rock-climbing. However, bolting is limited, so you'll need to bring a decent bouldering mat and plenty of gear from home – see p95.

Hampi is the undisputed bouldering capital of India. The entire landscape is made of granite crags and boulders, some bearing the marks of ancient stonemasons. Also interesting is nearby Badami (p926), a perfect horseshoe of red sandstone cliffs containing rock-carved temples and some magnificent bolted and traditional routes looking out over an ancient medieval city.

About 40km from Bengaluru, accessible by bus on the Mysore road, is Ramnagar, a cluster of towering granite boulders with some of the most popular routes in Karnataka. Other top spots include the granite massif at Savandurga, 50km west of Bengaluru near Magadi, and the boulder field at Turalli, 12km south of Bengaluru towards Kanakapura, both accessible by bus or taxi from Bengaluru.

Routes and grades are only just being assigned, so this is old-fashioned adventure climbing. Dreamroutes (www.dreamroutes.org/etc/allclimbs.html) has more tips on climbing in Karnataka.

away from the hubbub of Hampi Bazaar. It gets good reviews for its ambience and the quality of its food, which includes thalis (Rs 35) and quiche (Rs 90).

Waterfalls (Map p921; mains Rs 50) Around a 2km walk west of Hampi Bazaar, this simple, appealing operation is tucked away beside shady banana plantations on the path towards some interesting rock pools and small waterfalls.

New Shanthi (Map p922; mains Rs 20-45) A hippy vibe hangs over this popular option with an impressive selection of juices, lassis (yogurt and ice-water drinks) and shakes, as well as a good bakery.

Several of Hampi's lodges sport rooftop restaurants; good ones include those at Gopi Guest House (p923), Vicky's (p923) and Rama Guest House (p923). Kamalapuram has a few simple eateries, such as Sree Vilas Hotel (Map p921; meals Rs 20; 5am-8.30pm), opposite the bus stand.

Getting There & Away

While some buses from Goa and Bengaluru will drop you at the bus stand in Hampi Bazaar, you have to go to Hospet to catch most buses out. The first bus from Hospet (Rs 10, 30 minutes, half-hourly) is at 6.30am; the last one back leaves Hampi Bazaar at 8.30pm. An autorickshaw costs Rs 80. See right for transport information for Hospet.

KSRTC has a daily Rajahamsa bus service between Hampi Bazaar and Bengaluru (Rs 280, nine hours) leaving at 8pm. The overnight sleeper bus to/from Goa (Rs 500), which runs November to March, is a popular option – but don't expect a deep sleep. Numerous travel agents in Hampi Bazaar are eager to book onward bus, train and plane tickets, or arrange a car and driver.

Getting Around

Once you've seen the Vittala and Achyutaraya Temples, and Sule Bazaar, exploring the rest of the ruins by bicycle is the thing to do. There are key monuments haphazardly signposted along the road from Hampi Bazaar to Kamalapuram. Bicycles cost Rs 30 to 40 per day in Hampi Bazaar; mopeds can be hired for around Rs 200, plus petrol. You can take your bicycle or motorbike (extra Rs 10) across the river on the boat.

Walking is the only way to see all the nooks and crannies, but expect to cover at least 7km just to see the major ruins. Autorickshaws and taxis are available for sightseeing, and will drop you as close to each of the major ruins as they can. A five-hour autorickshaw tour costs Rs 300.

Organised tours depart from Hospet; see below for details.

HOSPET

This busy regional centre is the transport hub for Hampi. There's no reason to linger unless you desire an air-conditioned hotel room and cable TV.

Information

Internet joints are common, with connections costing Rs 40 per hour. The bus-stand cloakroom holds bags for Rs 10 per day.

KSTDC tourist office (228537; Shanbhag Circle; 7.30am-8.30pm) Offers a Hampi tour (Rs 140), which runs daily October to March and on demand the rest of the year; it departs from the tourist office at 9.30am and returns at 5.30pm. The quality of guides varies enormously. Call ahead as tours won't run with fewer than 10 people.

State Bank of India (228576; Station Rd; 10.30am-4pm Mon-Sat) Changes currency; also has a 24-hour ATM that accepts Visa and MasterCard.

Sleeping & Eating

Hotel Malligi (228101; www.malligihotels.com; Jabunatha Rd; r from Rs 300-3000) This is only worth it if you opt for the more expensive AC rooms, some of which are decorated in a vaguely contemporary style. Amenities including a couple of decent restaurants, a pool (Rs 35 for nonguests and guests in the cheapest rooms; closed Monday), a gym and Ayurvedic masseurs.

Hotel Priyadarshini (228838; www.priyainnhampi.com; Station Rd; s/d from Rs 900/950) Handily located between the bus and train stations, all the fresh, tidy rooms here have balconies and come with TV. Its outdoor nonveg restaurant-bar Manasa (mains Rs 60 to 110) has a good menu, and is shaded by trees with a lovely view of the fields.

Udupi Sri Krishna Bhavan (meals Rs 15-45; 6am-11pm) Opposite the bus stand, this clean, no-nonsense spot dishes out North and South Indian fare, including thalis for Rs 23.

BUS

The chaotic bus stand (228802) has services to Hampi from Bay 10 every half-hour (Rs 7 to 10, 30 minutes). Several express buses run to Bengaluru (ordinary/deluxe Rs 175/300, nine hours) in morning and evening batches, and three overnight buses head to Panaji (Panjim; Rs 180, 11 hours) via Margao. Two buses a day go to Badami (Rs 150, six hours), or you can catch one of the many buses to Gadag (Rs 52, 2½ hours) and transfer. There are frequent buses to Hubli (Rs 82, 4½ hours) and Bijapur (Rs 130, six hours), three overnight services to Hyderabad (deluxe Rs 300, 10 hours) and one direct bus, at 9am, to Gokarna (Rs 200, 10 hours). For Mangalore or Hassan, take one of the many morning buses to Shimoga (Rs 160, five hours) and change there.

TRAIN

Hospet's train station (☎ 228360) is a 20-minute walk or Rs 10 autorickshaw ride from the centre of town. The daily Hampi Express heads to Hubli at 7.45am (2nd class Rs 46, 3½ hours) and Bengaluru at 8pm (sleeper/2AC Rs 212/881, 10 hours), or you can go to Guntakal (Rs 42, 2½ hours) and catch a Bengaluru-bound express there. Every Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, an 8.45am express heads to Vasco da Gama (sleeper/2AC Rs 169/690, 9½ hours).

To get to Badami, catch a Hubli train to Gadag and change there.

HUBLI

NORTHERN KARNATAKA

BADAMI

☎ 08357 / pop 25,851

Looking at the scuffy village today, it's difficult to believe that Badami was once the capital of the Chalukya empire, which covered much of the central Deccan between the 4th and 8th centuries AD. However, climb up into the red sandstone ridge and explore the magnificent rock-cut cave temples surrounding the village, and you'll find ample evidence of Badami's former status.

Nearby Aihole hosted the earliest Chalukya capital; later the site was moved to Badami, with a secondary capital in Pattadakal. The result of this relocation is that the whole area around Badami is liberally scattered with ancient temples. Badami is the best base for taking in all these sites; a day or two should cover it.

History

Badami was the Chalukyan capital from about AD 540 to 757. At its height the empire was enormous, stretching from Kanchipuram in Tamil Nadu to the Narmada River in Gujarat. The surrounding hills are dotted with temples, fortifications, carvings and inscriptions dating not just from the Chalukyan period, but also from other times when the site was occupied as a fortress. After Badami fell to the Rashtrakutas, it was occupied successively by the Chalukyas of Kalyan (a separate branch of the Western Chalukyas), the Kalachuryas, the Yadavas of Devagiri, the Vijayanagar empire, the Adil Shahi kings of Bijapur and the Marathas.

The sculptural legacy left by the Chalukya artisans includes some of the earliest and finest examples of Dravidian temples and rock-cut caves, as well as the earliest free-standing temple in India. Aihole was a sort of trial ground for new temple architecture, which was further developed at Pattadakal, now a World Heritage site. The forms and sculptural work at these sites inspired the later South Indian Hindu empires that rose and fell before the arrival of the Muslims.

Orientation & Information

Station Rd, Badami's busy main street, has several hotels and restaurants; the more tranquil Badami village is between this road and the hilltop caves. The tourist office (☎ 220414; Ramdurg Rd; ⏰ 10am-5.30pm), in the KSTDC Hotel Mayura Chalukya, is next to useless.

Mookambika Deluxe hotel changes currency for guests, but at a lousy rate; bring enough cash with you.

Internet (Ramdurg Rd; per hr Rs 60; ⏰ 7am-10pm) is available in a house at the back of the KSTDC Hotel Mayura Chalukya compound. You can also try Hotel Rajsangam (Station Rd; per hr Rs 100) in the town centre.

Sights

CAVES

Badami's highlight is its beautiful cave temples (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/US$2; ⏰ dawn-dusk). Nonpushy guides ask Rs 200 for a tour of the caves, or Rs 300 for the whole site.

Cave One

This cave, just above the entrance to the complex, is dedicated to Shiva. It's the oldest of the four caves, probably carved in the latter half of the 6th century. On the cliff wall to the right of the porch is a captivating image of Nataraja striking 81 dance poses (one for every combination of his 18 arms). He holds, among other things, a snake, a musical instrument and a trishula (trident).

On the right of the porch area is a huge figure of Ardhanarishvara. The right half of the figure shows features of Shiva, such as matted hair and a third eye, while the left half of the image has aspects of Parvati. On the opposite wall is a large image of Harihara; the right half represents Shiva and the left half Vishnu.

Cave Two

Dedicated to Vishnu, this cave is simpler in design. As with Caves One and Three, the front edge of the platform is decorated with images of pot-bellied dwarfs in various poses. Four pillars support the veranda, and the top of each pillar is carved with a bracket in the shape of a yali (mythical lion creature). On the left wall of the porch is the bull-headed figure of Varaha, an incarnation of Vishnu and the emblem of the Chalukya empire. To his left is Naga, a snake with a human face. On the right wall is a large sculpture of Trivikrama, another incarnation of Vishnu, booting out a demon while he holds various weapons in his eight hands. The ceiling panels contain images of Vishnu riding Garuda, gandharva (demigod) couples, swastikas and 16 fish arranged in a wheel (yet another incarnation of Vishnu).

Between the second and third caves are two sets of steps to the right. The first leads to a natural cave. The eastern wall of this cave contains a small image of Padmapani (an incarnation of the Buddha). The second set of steps – sadly, barred by a gate – leads to the hilltop South Fort.

Cave Three

This cave, carved in AD 578 under the orders of Mangalesha, the brother of King Kirtivarma, contains some sculptural highlights.

On the left-hand wall is a large carving of Vishnu, to whom the cave is dedicated, sitting on the coils of the snake. Nearby is an image of Varaha with four hands. The pillars have carved brackets in the shape of yalis and the sides of the pillars are also carved. The ceiling panels contain images, including Indra riding an elephant, Shiva on a bull and Brahma on a swan.

Cave Four

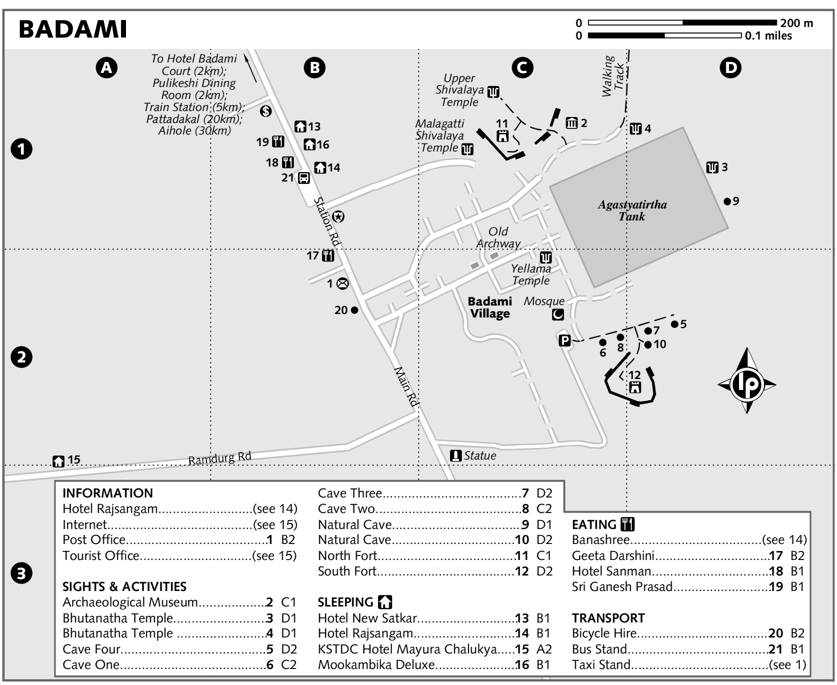
Dedicated to Jainism, Cave Four is the smallest of the set and was carved between the 7th and 8th centuries. The pillars, with their roaring yalis, are of a similar design to the other caves. The right wall of the cave has an image of Suparshvanatha (the seventh Jain tirthankar) surrounded by 24 Jain tirthankars. The sanctum contains an image of Adinath, the first Jain tirthankar.

OTHER SIGHTS

The caves overlook the 5th-century Agastyatirtha Tank and the waterside Bhutanatha temples (admission free). On the other side of the tank is an archaeological museum (☎ 220157; admission Rs 2; ⏰ 10am-5pm Sat-Thu), which houses superb examples of local sculpture, including a remarkably explicit Lajja-Gauri image of a fertility cult that flourished in the area. The stairway just behind the museum climbs through a dramatic sandstone chasm and fortified gateways to reach the various temples and ruins of the north fort (admission free). The fort has expansive views and overlooks the rooftops of Badami.

It's worth exploring Badami's laneways, where you'll find old houses with brightly painted carved wooden doorways, the occasional Chalukyan ruin and, of course, flocks of curious children.

Activities



Badami offers some great low-altitude climbing. For more information, see p924.

Sleeping

Many of Badami's hotels offer discounts in the low season.

Mookambika Deluxe (☎ 220067; fax 220106; Station Rd; s/d from Rs 150/300; ❄) The helpful staff at Badami's de facto tourist office can arrange taxis and guides. There's a range of rooms, including pricier ones with AC, but all suffer from street noise.

Hotel New Satkar (☎ 220417; Station Rd; s/d from Rs 275/450; ❄) Rooms at this friendly budget place are painted in beiges and creams; the best are on the 1st floor.

KSTDC Hotel Mayura Chalukya (☎ 220046; Ramdurg Rd; d/tr Rs 400/550; 💻) The rooms are large and reasonably pleasant at this government-run place in a quiet compound away from the perpetual bustle of the town centre.

Hotel Rajsangam (☎ 221991; www.hotelrajsangam.com; Station Rd; d from Rs 800; ❄ 💻 🏊) This mid-range place with good rooms (the best are the deluxe ones at the back where it's a bit quieter) is a useful addition to Badami's hotel scene. There's also a plunge pool on the roof for a cooling dip with a brilliant view.

Hotel Badami Court (☎ 220230; rafiqmht@blr.vsnl.net.in; Station Rd; s/d incl breakfast from Rs 1975/2500; ❄ 🏊) As good as it gets for Badami, this pleasant place sits in pastoral countryside 2km from the noisy town centre. Rooms are more functional than plush. Nonguests can use the pool for Rs 100.

Eating

Geeta Darshini (Station Rd; snacks Rs 6-10; 🕒 6.30am-9pm) The idlis and masala dosas come out thick and fast at this popular town-centre joint, and they're all washed down with tiny cups of chai. Perfect for a snack or quick meal.

Sri Ganesh Prasad (Station Rd; meals Rs 15; 🕒 5.30am-10.30pm) Beneath the Hotel Anand Deluxe, this is a cheap and cheery standby for excellent South Indian thalis (Rs 17) and masala dosas (Rs 10).

Hotel Sanman (Station Rd; mains Rs 30-50; 🕒 10am-11.30pm) If you need a cold beer with your meal, this is the place to get it. Tables behind curtained booths make it an intimate affair.

Banashree (Station Rd; mains Rs 40-60; 🕒 7am-10.30pm) In front of the Hotel Rajsangam, this bright and welcoming pure-veg restaurant offers everything from a variety of dosas to quasi-Chinese dishes. A better bet than the hotel's nonveg restaurant at the rear, which is more of a smoky bar.

Pulikeshi Dining Room (mains Rs 55-125; 🕒 24hr) People rave about the good range of continental and Indian dishes at this silver-service restaurant in Hotel Badami Court.

Getting There & Away

Buses shuffle off from Badami to Bijapur (Rs 69, 3½ hours, seven daily), Hubli (Rs 54, three hours, seven daily) and Bengaluru (ordinary/deluxe Rs 260/387, 12 hours, five daily). Three buses go direct to Hospet (Rs 84, six hours), or you can catch any of the buses to Gadag (Rs 30, two hours) and go from there. Note that this route is particularly hard on the bum.

Trains only run to Gadag (Rs 15, two hours, three daily), where you can get a connecting train to Hospet or Hubli. They're all 2nd-class passenger trains – but they're still more comfortable than the buses.

Getting Around

Badami's train station (☎ 220040) is 5km from town. Tongas (Rs 30), taxis (Rs 55), autorickshaws (Rs 30), and shared vans or large autorickshaws (Rs 4) ply the route. You can hire bicycles in Badami for Rs 5 per hour.

Exploring the surrounding area by local bus is easy, since they're moderately frequent and usually run on time. You can visit both Aihole and Pattadakal in a day from Badami if you get moving early; it's best to start with the morning bus to Aihole (Rs 15, one hour). Frequent buses then run between Aihole and Pattadakal (Rs 8, 30 minutes), and from Pattadakal to Badami (Rs 8, one hour). The last bus from Pattadakal to Badami is at 8pm. Take food and water with you.

Taxis cost at least Rs 650 for a day trip to Pattadakal, Aihole and Mahakuta. Badami's hotels can arrange taxis; alternatively, go to the taxi stand in front of the post office.

AROUND BADAMI

Pattadakal

This riverside village 20km from Badami was the second capital of the Badami Chalukyas; most of its temples (☎ 08357-243118; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/US$5; 🕒 6am-6pm) were built during the 7th and 8th centuries AD, but the earliest remains date from the 3rd and 4th centuries AD and the latest structure, a Jain temple, dates from the Rashtrakuta period (9th century). The group of temples is a World Heritage site.

Pattadakal, like Aihole, was a significant site in the development of South Indian temple architecture. In particular, two main types of temple towers were tried out here: curvilinear towers top the Kadasiddeshwra, Jambulinga and Galaganatha temples; and square roofs and receding tiers are used in the Mallikarjuna, Sangameshwara and Virupaksha temples.

The main Virupaksha Temple is a huge structure. The massive columns are covered with intricate carvings depicting episodes from the Ramayana and Mahabharata; they show battle scenes, lovers and decorative motifs. Around the roof of the inner hall are sculptures of elephants' and lions' heads. To the east, and facing the temple, is a pavilion containing a massive Nandi. The Mallikarjuna Temple, next to the Virupaksha Temple, is almost identical in design but slightly more worn. About 500m south of the main enclosure is the Jain Papanatha Temple, with its entrance flanked by elephant sculptures.

See p929 for transport details to/from Badami and Aihole.

Aihole

The Chalukyan regional capital between the 4th and 6th centuries, Aihole (ay-ho-leh) teems with at least 100 temples, although many are in ruins and engulfed by the modern village. Here you can see Hindu architecture in its embryonic stage, from the earliest simple shrines, such as those in the Kontigudi Group and the most ancient Lad Khan Temple, to the later and more complex buildings, such as the Meguti Temple.

The most impressive building in Aihole is the Durga Temple (☎ 08351-284533; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/US$2; 8am-6pm), which dates from the 7th century. It's notable for its semicircular apse, which was copied from Buddhist architecture, and for the remains of the curvilinear sikhara (Hindu temple spire). Intricate carvings adorn the colonnaded passageway around the sanctuary. The small museum (admission Rs 2; 10am-5pm Sat-Thu) behind the Durga Temple contains further examples of the Chalukyan sculptors' work.

To the south of the Durga Temple are several other collections of buildings, including some of the earliest structures in Aihole – the Gandar, Ladkhan, Kontigudi and Hucchapaya groups, which are of the pavilion type, with slightly sloping roofs. About 600m to the southeast, up a series of steps on a low hilltop, is the Jain Meguti Temple. Watch out for snakes!

The unappealing KSTDC Tourist Home (☎ 08351-284541; Amingad Rd; d/tr Rs 200/300), 1km from the village centre, is the only accommodation in town. You're better off staying in Badami.

See p929 for transport information.

BIJAPUR

☎ 08352 / pop 245,946 / elev 593m

Ruins and still-intact gems of 15th- to 17th-century Islamic architecture embellish old, dusty Bijapur like so many tatters of faded sultans' finery. It's a fascinating place to explore, blessed by a wealth of mosques, mausoleums, palaces and fortifications, whose austere grace is in complete contrast to the sculptural extravagance of the Chalukyan and Hoysala temples further south.

Bijapur was the capital of the Adil Shahi kings from 1489 to 1686, and was one of the splinter states formed when the Bahmani Muslim kingdom broke up in 1482. The town has a strong Islamic character but is also a centre for the Lingayat brand of Shaivism, which emphasises a single personalised god. The Lingayat Siddeshwara Festival runs for eight days in January/February.

Orientation

The two main attractions, the Golgumbaz and the Ibrahim Rouza, are at opposite ends of the town. Between them runs Station Rd (also known as Mahatma Gandhi Rd, or MG Rd), along which you'll find most of the major hotels and restaurants. The bus stand is a five-minute walk from Station Rd; the train station is 2km east of the centre.

GOLGUMBAZ

Set in tranquil gardens, the ill-proportioned but magnificent Golgumbaz (☎ 240737; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/US$2; 6am-5.40pm) is Bijapur's largest monument – both in size and reputation. Dating from 1659, the building is the mausoleum of Mohammed Adil Shah (1626–56), his two wives, his mistress (Rambha), one of his daughters and a grandson. Their caskets stand on a raised platform in the centre of the immense hall, though their actual graves are in the crypt, accessible by a flight of steps under the western doorway.

Octagonal seven-storey towers stand at each of corner of the hall, which is capped by an enormous dome, 38m in diameter; it's said to be the largest dome in the world after St Peter's Basilica in Rome. Climb the steep, narrow stairs up one of the towers to reach the 'whispering gallery'; the acoustics are such that if you whisper into the wall a person on the opposite side of the gallery can hear you clearly, and any sound made is said to be repeated 10 times over. Unfortunately people like to test this out with their shouting, so come in the early morning before any school groups arrive.

The gardens house a missable archaeological museum (admission Rs 2; 10am-5pm Sat-Thu).

IBRAHIM ROUZA

The beautiful Ibrahim Rouza (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/US$2, video Rs 25; 6am-6pm) is considered to be one of the most finely proportioned Islamic monuments in India. It was built at the height of Bijapur's prosperity by Ibrahim Adil Shah II (r 1580–1626) for his queen, Taj Sultana. As it happens, he died before her, so he was laid to rest here as well. Unlike the Golgumbaz, which is impressive for its immensity, the emphasis here is on elegance and detail. Its 24m-high minarets are said to have inspired those of the Taj Mahal. It's also one of the few monuments in Bijapur with substantial stone filigree and other decorative sculptural work.

Interred here with Ibrahim Adil Shah and his queen are his daughter, his two sons, and his mother, Haji Badi Sahiba.

CITADEL

Surrounded by fortified walls and a wide moat, the citadel once contained the palaces, pleasure gardens and durbar (royal court) of the Adil Shahi kings. Now mainly in ruins, the most impressive of the remaining fragments is the Gagan Mahal, built by Ali Adil Shah I around 1561 as a dual-purpose royal residency and durbar hall.

The ruins of Mohammed Adil Shah's seven-storey palace, the Sat Manzil, are nearby. Across the road stands the delicate Jala Manzil, once a water pavilion surrounded by secluded courts and gardens. On the other side of Station Rd are the graceful arches of Bara Kaman, the ruined mausoleum of Ali Roza.

JAMA MASJID

The finely proportioned Jama Masjid (Jama Masjid Rd; 9am-5.30pm) has graceful arches, a fine dome and a vast inner courtyard with room for 2250 worshippers. Spaces for the worshippers are marked out in black on the mosque's floor. Jama Masjid was constructed by Ali Adil Shah I (r 1557–80), who was also responsible for erecting the fortified city walls and the Gagan Mahal.

OTHER SIGHTS

On the eastern side of the citadel is the tiny, walled Mecca Masjid (admission free), thought to have been built in the early 17th century. Some speculate that this mosque, with its high surrounding walls and cloistered feel, may have been for women. Further east, the Asar Mahal (admission free), built by Mohammed Adil Shah in about 1646 to serve as a Hall of Justice, once housed two hairs from the Prophet's beard. The rooms on the upper storey are decorated with frescoes and a square tank graces the front. A sign states that it's out of bounds for women. The stained but richly decorated Mihtar Mahal (admission free) to the south serves as an ornamental gateway to a small mosque.

Upli Buruj (admission free) is a 16th-century, 24m-high watchtower near the western walls of the city. An external flight of stairs leads to the top, where there are a couple of hefty cannons and good views. A short walk west brings you to the Malik-e-Maidan (Monarch of the Plains), a huge cannon over 4m long, almost 1.5m in diameter and estimated to weigh 55 tonnes. Cast in 1549, it was brought to Bijapur as a war trophy thanks to the effort of 10 elephants, 400 oxen and hundreds of men. Legend has it that the gunners would jump into the moat after lighting the fuse rather than be deafened. The mouth of the cannon is shaped like a lion (representing Islam), and its razor-sharp jaws are closing on a cartoonish bug-eyed elephant (Hinduism) that's trying to flee.

In the southwest of the city, off Bagalkot Rd, stand the twin Jod Gumbad tombs with handsome bulbous domes; an Adil Shahi general and his spiritual adviser, Abdul Razzaq Qadiri, are buried here. The surrounding gardens are a popular picnic spot.

Bijapur's central market, just north of MG Rd, is also worth exploring; it's packed with spice merchants, flower sellers, tailors and other traders.

Sleeping

Hotel Tourist (☎ 250655; MG Rd; s/d from Rs 80/150, deluxe Rs 150/250) The very ordinary doubles here are acceptable; a better option is the clean, freshly painted deluxe rooms.

Hotel Megharaj (☎ 254458; Station Rd; r from Rs 150; ❄) The Megharaj continues to make an effort to keep things nice, and it's a little out of the downtown jumble.

Hotel Navaratna International (☎ 222771; fax 222772; Station Rd; r from Rs 400; ❄) Colourful paintings in the style of Kandinsky and Chagal are a pleasant surprise in the lobby of the Navaratna. The sparkling clean rooms with big shiny floor tiles are also very welcome.

Hotel Kanishka International (☎ 223788; www.kanishka_bijapur.com; Station Rd; d from Rs 450; ❄) The spacious rooms here have big comfy beds and marble floors, and there's a small gym for guests' use. Rates include tax.

Hotel Pearl (☎ 256002; fax 243606; Station Rd; d from Rs 500; ❄) Across the road from the Golgumbaz, this business hotel has some class with its central atrium and brightly painted rooms. Ask for one at the rear to avoid street noise.

Hotel Madhuvan International (☎ 255571; fax 256201; Station Rd; r from Rs 950; ❄) Although it's clearly on the slide, this is still one of the nicer places in town – it's just overpriced. A major plus that it's set well enough away from Station Rd to be quiet. The restaurant (below) is excellent.

Hotel Shashinag Residency (☎ 260344; www.hotelshashinag.com; Solapur-Chitradurga Bypass Rd; s/d incl breakfast from US$30/45; ❄ 💻 🏊) The rooms are large but the housekeeping standards need improvement at what is supposed to be Bijapur's most upmarket choice. Bonuses are a small pool (Rs 30 per hour for nonguests), a playground and a gym. Rates include taxes.

Eating

Unless otherwise mentioned, all places are open from around 6pm to 10pm.

Bangalore Restaurant (MG Rd; meals Rs 18) This modest little pink-painted place does good South Indian veg thalis.

Mysore Restaurant (New Market; meals Rs 20) Locals swear by this place for good-value South Indian veg dishes.

Hotel Madhuvan International (mains Rs 25-50) Delicious food is served either in the garden or inside in AC relief. Try the yummy masala dosa or the never-ending North Indian thalis dished out by waiters in red turbans.

Hotel Siddharth (New Market; mains Rs 35-80; ⏰ 8am-11pm) On top of the market, the Siddharth offers curtained booths and rooftop seating.

It has a huge selection of vegetarian and meaty dishes, plus booze.

Swapna Lodge Restaurant (MG Rd; mains Rs 30-100; 9am-11pm) On the 2nd floor of the building next to Hotel Tourist, Swapna Lodge has good grub, cold beer and a 1970s lounge feel. Its open-air terrace is perfect for evening dining.

Getting There & Away

BUS

From the bus stand (☎ 251344), buses run direct to Badami (Rs 60, 4½ hours, seven daily) and Bidar (Rs 150, seven hours, four daily). Buses head every half-hour to Gulbarga (Rs 70, four hours), Hubli (Rs 80, six hours) and Sholapur (Rs 61, two hours). Eight evening buses go to Bengaluru (deluxe Rs 292, 12 hours) via Hospet, and a few buses a day go to Hyderabad (deluxe Rs 312, 10 hours) and Pune (Rs 172, eight hours).

The plentiful private bus agencies near the bus stand run services to Bengaluru (Rs 350) and Mumbai (Rs 380), as well as to Hubli (Rs 140), Mangalore (Rs 370) and other destinations.

TRAIN

From Bijapur train station (☎ 244888), there are four daily trains to Sholapur (Rs 21, 2½ hours), which has connections to Mumbai, Hyderabad and Bengaluru. An express to Bengaluru (sleeper/3AC Rs 310/550, 12 hours, three weekly) also passes through, as do 'fast passenger' trains to Mumbai (chair/sleeper Rs 70/151, 12 hours, three weekly) and Hyderabad (sleeper Rs 123, 15½ hours, daily).

Getting Around

Autorickshaws are oddly expensive in Bijapur; Rs 30 (plus haggling) should get you between the train station and the town centre. Between the Golgumbaz and Ibrahim Rouza they cost about Rs 30. Tonga drivers are eager for business but charge around the same. Autorickshaw drivers ask for Rs 200 for four hours around town.

BIDAR

☎ 08482 / pop 172,298 / elev 664m

Tucked away in Karnataka's far northeastern corner, Bidar is an afterthought on most travellers' itineraries. This is a great shame since the old walled town has some amazing ruins and monuments dating from its time as the capital of the Bahmani kingdom (1428–87), and later the capital of the Barid Shahi dynasty.

Orientation & Information

The modern town centre is strung along Udgir Rd, along which you'll also find the bus station. Fast internet access is available at Arien Computers (per hr Rs 20; 9.30am-10.30pm) around the corner from the Krishna Regency.

Sights

BIDAR FORT

You can wander peacefully for hours around the magnificent 15th-century Bidar Fort (admission free; dawn-dusk), sprawled across rolling hills, 2km east of Udgir Rd. Surrounded by a triple moat hewn out of solid red rock and 5.5km of defensive wall (the second longest in India), the fort has a fairy-tale entrance on a roadway that twists in an elaborate chicane through three gateways.

Inside the fort are many evocative ruins, including the Rangin Mahal (Painted Palace) which sports elaborate tilework, woodwork and panels with mother-of-pearl inlay, and the Solah Kambah Mosque (Sixteen-Pillared Mosque). There's also a small museum (admission free; 9am-6pm) in the former royal bath. If you're looking for a guide, call the archaeological office (☎ 230418) and ask for Abdul Mumaf.

BAHMANI TOMBS

The huge domed tombs (admission free) of the Bahmani kings, in Ashtur, 2km east of Bidar, have a desolate, moody beauty that strikes a strange harmony with the sunny hills around them. These impressive mausoleums were built to house the remains of the sultans – their graves are still regularly draped with fresh satin and flowers – and are arranged in a long line along the edge of the road. The painted interior of Ahmad Shah I's tomb is the most impressive.

OTHER SIGHTS

Dominating the heart of the old town are the remains of Khwaja Mahmud Gawan Madrasa (admission free), a college built in 1492. The remnants of coloured tiles on the front gate and one of the minarets gives an idea of how grand the building once was.

Bidri artists (see p934) still tap away at their craft in the back streets on and around Chowbara Rd, near Basveshwar Circle.

BIDRI: THE ART OF BIDAR

Around the 14th century, the Persian craftsmen of Bidar came up with an art form known as bidriware by moulding metals together to create imaginative blends of blackened zinc, copper, lead and tin. Embossed and overlaid or inlaid with pure silver, bidriware designs are heavily influenced by the typically Islamic decorative motifs and features of the time. Finely crafted pieces, such as hookahs, goblets, and jewellery boxes, are exquisitely embellished with interwoven creepers and flowing floral patterns, occasionally framed by strict geometric lines.

Sleeping & Eating

Don't expect much in the way of pampering – the best you can hope for is a clean room with AC and a hot-water shower. Places listed below are all within a few minutes' walk of the bus stand.

Hotel Mayura (☎ 228142; Udgir Rd; r from Rs 150) Across from the bus station and set back from the road is this standard-issue government-run hotel with rooms that have clearly seen better days. The best thing about it is the non-veg restaurant-bar (mains Rs 30 to 80) with a beer garden where you can guzzle in the privacy of a privet-hedge booth.

Krishna Regency (☎ 221991; fax 228388; Udgir Rd; s/d/tr from Rs 275/325/550;) This friendly, efficiently run hotel with a glass elevator running up the outside of the building is the best option in Bidar. There's a good range of rooms, but some lack natural light and there's no food available.

Sapna International (☎ 220991; fax 240095; Udgir Rd; s/d from Rs 300/350;) On a par with the Krisha in terms of rooms – it's just not as friendly. In its favour are its two restaurants: the pure-veg Kamat and the Atithi, which offers meat dishes and booze. Mains cost Rs 23 to 50.

Jyothi Udupi (Udgir Rd; meals Rs 20-45; 6am-11pm) This place opposite the bus stand has 21 kinds of dosa, filling South Indian thalis (Rs 20) and an ice-cream sundae named beauty ripples.

Getting There & Away

From the bus stand (☎ 228508), frequent services run to Gulbarga (Rs 50, three hours), which has good express-train connections to Mumbai and Bengaluru, as well as to Hyderabad (Rs 69, 3½ hours), Bijapur (Rs 131, eight hours) and Bengaluru (deluxe/AC Rs 380/707, 12 hours).

The train station, around 1km southwest of the bus stand, has daily services to Hyderabad (chair Rs 27, 4½ hours) and Bengaluru (sleeper/2AC Rs 295/801, 17 hours).

Getting Around

Rent a bike at Diamond Cycle Taxi (Basveshwar Circle; per day Rs 12; 7am-10pm) or arrange a tour in an autorickshaw for around Rs 250.

Andhra Pradesh

Aside from tens of millions of pilgrims, not many people make the trip to Andhra Pradesh. But Andhra's a place with subtle charms, quiet traditions and a long history of spiritual scholarship and religious harmony. The state is 95% Hindu, but you wouldn't know it in the capital's Old City, where Islamic monuments and the call of the muezzin are more ubiquitous than the garlanded, twinkling tableaux of Ganesh. The city's rich Islamic history announces itself in Hyderabad's huge, lavish mosques, its opulent palaces and the stately Qutb Shahi tombs – but also, more softly, in a tiny spiral staircase in the Charminar and in the sounds of Urdu floating through the air.

Meanwhile, in the city's north, a 17.5m-high statue of the Buddha announces another Andhran history: the region was an international centre of Buddhist thought for several hundred years from the 3rd century BC. Andhras were practising the dharma from the time of the Buddha (rumour has it that he even once visited). Today ruins of stupas and monasteries defy impermanence around the state, especially at Amaravathi and Nagarjunakonda.

Travelling here is like a treasure hunt: the jewels have to be earned. The stunning Eastern Ghats near Visakhapatnam only emerge after hours on a broad-gauge line. A family workshop filled with exquisite traditional paintings appears after a meander through Sri Kalahasti. And the most famous wait of all, through a long, holy maze filled with pilgrims at Tirumala, is rewarded with a glimpse of Lord Venkateshwara, who, if you're lucky, will grant you a wish.

HIGHLIGHTS

- Buy an old drum and more bangles than you need while soaking up centuries-old ambience at Hyderabad's colourful Laad Bazaar (p940)
- Receive loving kindness from Buddha statues in Hyderabad (p943), Nagarjunakonda (p949) and Amaravathi (p955)
- Enjoy the beauty of the spectacular Eastern Ghats as your train chugs through the mountains to the Araku Valley (p954)
- Find devotion you didn't know you had for Lord Venkateshwara and mingle with the pilgrims at Tirumala (p956) as they shed their hair for their deity
- Picnic atop the ruins of the 16th-century Golconda Fort (p942) and then wander in and out of the royal tombs of the Qutb Shahi kings (p942) in Hyderbad

History

From the 2nd century BC, the Satavahana empire, also known as the Andhras, reigned throughout the Deccan plateau. It evolved from the Andhra people, whose presence in southern India may date back to 1000 BC. The Buddha's teaching took root here early on, and in the 3rd century BC the Andhras fully embraced it, building huge edifices in its honour. In the coming centuries, the Andhras would develop a flourishing civilisation that extended from the west to the east coasts of South India.

From the 7th to the 10th century the Chalukyas ruled the area, establishing their Dravidian style of architecture, especially along the coast. The Chalukya and Chola dynasties merged in the 11th century to be overthrown by the Kakatiyas, who introduced pillared temples into South Indian religious architecture. The Vijayanagars then rose to become one of the most powerful empires in India.

- Capital: Hyderabad
- Main languages: Telugu, Urdu, Hindi
- When to go: October to February

By the 16th century the Islamic Qutb Shahi dynasty held the city of Hyderabad, but in 1687 was supplanted by Aurangzeb's Mughal empire. In the 18th century the post-Mughal rulers in Hyderabad, known as nizams, retained relative control as the British and French vied for trade, though their power gradually weakened. The region became part of independent India in 1947, and in 1956 the state of Andhra Pradesh, an amalgamation of Telugu-speaking areas, plus the predominantly Urdu-speaking capital, was created.

Hyderabad and Secunderabad, City of Pearls, was once the seat of the powerful Qutb Shahi and Asaf Jahi dynasties. Today Hyderabad's west side is, with Bengaluru (Bangalore), the seat of India's mighty software dynasty; 'Cyberabad' generates jobs, wealth and posh lounges like she was born to do it. Opulence, it would seem, is in this city's genes.

Across town from all this sheen is Cyberabad's gorgeous and aged grandmother, the old Muslim quarter, with centuries-old Islamic monuments and even older charms. In fact, the whole city is laced with architectural gems (just like the garments of Asaf Jahi princesses threaded with gold): ornate tombs, mosques, palaces and homes from the past are tucked away, faded and

FESTIVALS IN ANDHRA PRADESH

Sankranti (Jan; statewide) This important Telugu festival marks the end of harvest season. Kite-flying competitions are held, women decorate their doorsteps with colourful kolams (or rangolis – rice-flour designs), and men decorate cattle with bells and fresh horn paint.

Industrial Exhibition (Jan/Feb; Hyderabad, above) A huge exhibition with traders from around India displaying their wares, accompanied by a colourful, bustling fair.

Deccan Festival (Feb; Hyderabad, above) Pays tribute to Deccan culture. Urdu mushairas (poetry readings) are held, along with Qawwali (Sufi devotional music) and other local music and dance performances.

Shivaratri (Feb/Mar; statewide) During a blue moon, this festival celebrates Shiva with all-night chanting, prayers and fasting. Hordes of pilgrims descend on the auspicious Shiva temples at Sri Kalahasti, Amaravathi and Lepakshi.

Muharram (Feb/Mar; Hyderabad, above) Muharram commemorates the martyrdom of Mohammed's grandson for 14 days in Hyderabad. Shiites wear black in mourning, and throngs gather at Mecca Masjid.

Ugadi (Mar; statewide) Telugu new year is celebrated with pujas (offerings or prayers), mango-leaf toranas (architraves) over doorways, and sweets and special foods.

Mahankali Jatra (Jun/Jul; statewide) A festival honouring Kali, with colourful processions in which devotees convey bonalu (pots of food offerings) to the deity. Secunderabad's Mahankali Temple goes wild.

Mrigasira (Jun/Jul; Hyderabad, above) Also known as Mrugam, this event marks the start of the monsoon with a feast of local fish and a fascinating medical treatment administered to thousands of asthma sufferers. The treatment, more than 150 years old, involves swallowing live fish that have consumed a herbal remedy. It's believed that the remedy was revealed by a sage to the ancestors of the physicians who now dispense it.

Batakamma (Sep/Oct; Hyderabad, above & Warangal, p951) Women and girls in the north of the state participate in this celebration of womanhood. There's dancing and feasting, and the goddess Batakamma is worshipped in the form of elaborate flower arrangements that women make and set adrift on rivers.

Brahmotsavam (Sep/Oct; Tirumala, p956) Initiated by Brahma himself, the nine-day festival sees the Venkateshwara temple adorned in decorations. Special pujas and colourful chariot processions are a feature of the festivities, and it's considered an auspicious time for darshan (deity viewing).

Pandit Motiram-Maniram Sangeet Samaroh (Nov; Hyderabad, above) This four-day music festival, named for two renowned classical musicians, celebrates Hindustani music.

Lumbini Festival (2nd Fri in Dec; Hyderabad, above & Nagarjunakonda, p949) The three-day Lumbini Festival honours Andhra's Buddhist heritage.

Visakha Utsav (Dec/Jan; Visakhapatnam, p952) A celebration of all things Visakhapatnam, with classical and folk dance and music performances; some events are staged on the beach.

enchanting, in corners all over town. Keep your eyes open.

Once an important centre of Islamic culture, Hyderabad is southern India's counterpart to the Mughal splendour of Delhi, Agra and Fatehpur Sikri, and a sizeable percentage of Hyderabad's population is Muslim. The city gracefully combines Hindu and Islamic traditions – while a strategically placed 17.5m-high Buddha looks on.

You're likely to be taken aback by the chilled-out kindness of Hyderabadis, and many find the city delightful: lots to see and do with almost no hassle.

History

Hyderabad owes its existence to a water shortage at Golconda in the late 16th century. The reigning Qutb Shahis were forced to relocate, and so Mohammed Quli and the royal family abandoned Golconda Fort for the banks of the Musi River. The new city of Hyderabad was established, with the brand-new Charminar as its centrepiece.

In 1687 the city was overrun by the Mughal emperor Aurangzeb, and subsequent rulers of Hyderabad were viceroys installed by the Mughal administration in Delhi.

In 1724 the Hyderabad viceroy, Asaf Jah, took advantage of waning Mughal power and declared Hyderabad an independent state with himself as leader. The dynasty of the nizams of Hyderabad began, and the traditions of Islam flourished. Hyderabad became a focus for the arts, culture and learning, and the centre of Islamic India. Its abundance of rare gems and minerals – the world-famous Kohinoor diamond is from here – furnished the nizams with enormous wealth. (Get a copy of William Dalrymple's White Mughals for a fascinating portrait of the city at this time.)

When Independence came in 1947, the then nizam of Hyderabad, Osman Ali Khan, considered amalgamation with Pakistan – and then opted for sovereignty. Tensions between Muslims and Hindus increased, however, and military intervention saw Hyderabad join the Indian union in 1948.

Orientation

Hyderabad has four distinct areas. The Old Town by the Musi River has bustling bazaars and important landmarks, including the Charminar.

North of the river is Mahatma Gandhi (Imlibun) bus station, Hyderabad (Nampally) station and the main post office. Abid Rd runs through the Abids district, a good budget-accommodation area.

Further north, beyond the Hussain Sagar, lies Secunderabad, with its Jubilee bus station and huge train station, an important stop for many regional trains.

Jubilee Hills and Banjara Hills, west of Hussain Sagar, are where the well heeled – and their restaurants, shops and lounges – reside, and further west is Cyberabad's capital, Hitec (Hyderabad Information Technology Engineering Consulting) City.

CHARMINAR & BAZAARS

Hyderabad's principal landmark, the Charminar (Four Towers; Map p939; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; 9am-5.30pm) was built by Mohammed Quli Qutb Shah in 1591 to commemorate the founding of Hyderabad and the end of epidemics caused by Golconda's water shortage. Standing 56m high and 30m wide, the dramatic four-column structure has four arches facing the cardinal points. Minarets sit atop each column. The 2nd floor, home to Hyderabad's oldest mosque, and upper columns are not usually open to the public, but you can try your luck with the man with the key. The structure is illuminated from 7pm to 9pm.

West of the Charminar, the incredible Laad Bazaar (Map p939) is the perfect place to get lost. It has everything from the finest perfumes, fabrics and jewels to musical instruments, second-hand saris and kitchen implements. You can see artisans creating everything from jewellery and scented oils to large pots and musical instruments. The lanes around the Charminar also form the centre of India's pearl trade. Some great deals can be had – if you know your stuff.

SALAR JUNG MUSEUM

The huge collection of the Salar Jung Museum (Map p939; ☎ 24523211; Salar Jung Marg; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/150; 10am-5pm Sat-Thu), dating back to the 1st century, was put together by Mir Yusaf Ali Khan (Salar Jung III), the grand vizier of the seventh nizam, Osman Ali Khan (r 1910–49). The 35,000 exhibits from every corner of the world include sculptures, wood carvings, devotional objects, Persian miniature paintings, illuminated manuscripts, weaponry and more than 50,000 books. The impressive nizams' jewellery collection is sometimes on special exhibit. Cameras are not allowed.

Avoid visiting the museum on Sunday when it's bedlam. From any of the bus stands in the Abids area, take bus 7, which stops at the nearby Musi River bridge.

Not far west of the bridge, facing each other across the river, are the spectacular High Court (Map p939) and Osmania General Hospital (Map p939) buildings, built by the seventh nizam in the Indo-Saracenic style.

CHOWMAHALLA PALACE

In their latest act of architectural showmanship, the nizam family has sponsored a restoration of this dazzling palace (Khilwat; Map p939; ☎ 24522032; www.chowmahalla.com; Indian/foreigner Rs 25/150; 11am-5pm Sat-Thu) – or, technically, four (char) palaces (mahalla). Begun in the late 18th century, it was expanded over the next 100 years, absorbing Persian, Indo-Sarocenic, Rajasthani and European styles. The Khilwat Mubarak compound includes the magnificent durbar hall, where nizams held ceremonies under 19 enormous chandeliers of Belgian crystal. Today the hall houses exhibitions of photos, arms and clothing. Hung with curtains, the balcony over the main hall once served as seating for the family's women, who attended all durbars in purdah.

HEH THE NIZAM'S MUSEUM

The 16th-century Purani Haveli was home of the sixth nizam, Fath Jang Mahbub Ali Khan (r 1869–1911), rumoured to have never worn the same thing twice. His 72m-long, two-storey wardrobe of Burmese teak is on display at this museum (Purani Haveli; Map p939; adult/student Rs 65/15; 10am-5pm Sat-Thu). Also on exhibit, in the palace's former servants' quarters, are personal effects of the seventh nizam and gifts from the Silver Jubilee celebration of his reign. The pieces are unbelievably lavish and include some exquisite artwork. The museum's guides do an excellent job putting it all in context.

The rest of Purani Haveli is now a school, but you can wander around the grounds and peek in the administrative building, the nizam's former residence.

GOLCONDA FORT

Although most of this 16th-century fortress (Map p942; 23513984; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; 10am-6pm) dates from the time of the Qutb Shah kings, its origins, as a mud fort, have been traced to the earlier reigns of the Yadavas and Kakatiyas.

Golconda had been the capital of the independent state of Telangana for nearly 80 years when Sultan Quli Qutb Shah abandoned the fort in 1590 and moved to the new city of Hyderabad.

In the 17th century, Mughal armies from Delhi were sent to the Golconda kingdom to enforce payment of tribute. Abul Hasan, last of the Qutb Shahi kings, held out at Golconda for eight months against Emperor Aurangzeb's massive army. The emperor finally succeeded with the aid of a treacherous insider.

It's easy to see how the Mughal army was nearly defeated. The citadel is built on a granite hill 120m high and surrounded by crenellated ramparts constructed from large masonry blocks. Outside the citadel there stands another crenellated rampart, with a perimeter of 11km, and yet another wall beyond this. The massive gates were studded with iron spikes to obstruct war elephants.

Survival within the fort was also attributable to water and sound. A series of concealed glazed earthen pipes ensured a reliable water supply, while the acoustics guaranteed that even the smallest sound from the Grand Portico would echo across the fort complex.

Knowledgeable guides around the entrance will ask Rs 250 for a 1½-hour tour and lose interest in any offer below Rs 150. You can usually find the Guide to Golconda Fort & Qutb Shahi Tombs (Rs 20) on sale here.

An autorickshaw from Abids costs around Rs 200 return, including waiting time. Mornings are best for peace and quiet.

A trippy sound-and-light show (admission Rs 50; English version 6.30pm Nov-Feb, 7pm Mar-Oct) is also held here.

TOMBS OF QUTB SHAHI KINGS

These graceful domed tombs (admission Rs 10, camera/video Rs 20/100; 9.30am-6pm) sit serenely in landscaped gardens about 1.5km northwest of Golconda Fort's Balahisar Gate. You could easily spend half a day here taking photos and wandering in and out of the mausoleums and various other structures. The upper level of Mohammed Quli's tomb, reached via a narrow staircase, has good views of the area. The Qutb Shahi Tombs (Rs 20) is sold at the ticket counter.

The tombs are an easy walk from the fort, but an autorickshaw ride shouldn't be more than Rs 20. Bus 80S also stops right outside.

MECCA MASJID

Adjacent to the Charminar is the Mecca Masjid (Map p939; Shah Ali Banda Rd, Patthargatti; 9am-5pm), one of the world's largest mosques, with space for 10,000 worshippers. Women are not allowed inside.

Construction began in 1614, during Mohammed Quli Qutb Shah's reign, but the mosque wasn't finished until 1687, by which time the Mughal emperor Aurangzeb had annexed the Golconda kingdom. Several bricks embedded above the gate are made with soil from Mecca – hence the name. The colonnades and door arches, with their inscriptions from the Quran, are made from single slabs of granite that were quarried 11km away and dragged here by a team of 1400 bullocks.

To the left of the mosque, an enclosure contains the tombs of Nizam Ali Khan and his successors. Guides here offer tours for around Rs 50.

BUDDHA STATUE & HUSSAIN SAGAR

Hyderabad boasts one of the world's largest freestanding stone Buddha statues (Map p939), completed in 1990 after five years of work. However, when the 17.5m-high, 350-tonne monolith was being ferried to its place in the Hussain Sagar (Map p939), the barge sank. The statue languished underwater until being raised – undamaged – in 1992. It's now on a plinth in the middle of the lake.

Frequent boats (☎ 23455315; Rs 30; ⏰ 9am-9pm) make the 30-minute return trip to the statue from Lumbini Park (Map p941; admission Rs 5; ⏰ 9am-9pm), a pleasant place to enjoy Hyderabad's spectacular sunsets and the popular musical fountain. The Tankbund Rd promenade, which skirts the eastern shore of Hussain Sagar, has great views of the Buddha statue.

AP STATE & HEALTH MUSEUMS

The recently renovated AP State Museum (Map p941; ☎ 23232267; Public Gardens Rd, Nampally; admission Rs 10, camera/video Rs 20/100; ⏰ 10.30am-4.30pm Sat-Thu) hosts a collection of important archaeological finds from the area, as well as a Buddhist sculpture gallery, with some relics of the Buddha and an exhibit on the Andhra's fascinating Buddhist history. The ever-expanding museum also has a Jain sculpture gallery, an exhibition of paintings by Pakistani painter AR Chughtai and an Egyptian mummy. The museum, like the gorgeous Legislative Assembly building down the road (both built by the seventh nizam), is floodlit at night.

Well worth a visit is the nearby Health Museum (admission free; ⏰ 10.30am-5pm Sat-Thu), where you'll see a bizarre collection of medical and public-health paraphernalia.

NEHRU CENTENARY TRIBAL MUSEUM

Andhra Pradesh's 33 tribal groups, based mostly in the northeastern part of the state, comprise several million people. This museum (Map p939; ☎ 23391486, ext 306; Mahavir Marg, Masab Tank; admission free; ⏰ 10.30am-5pm Mon-Sat), run by the government's Tribal Welfare Department, exhibits photographs, dioramas of village life, musical instruments and some exquisite Naikpod masks. It's basic, but you'll get a glimpse into the cultures of these fringe peoples. The library here has books on Indian anthropology, traditional medicine and sociology. The museum is across from Chacha Nehru Park.

BIRLA MANDIR TEMPLE & PLANETARIUM

The Birla Mandir Temple (Map p941; ⏰ 7am-noon & 2-9pm), constructed of white Rajasthani marble in 1976, graces Kalabahad (Black Mountain), one of two rocky hills overlooking the southern end of Hussain Sagar. Dedicated to Lord Venkateshwara, the temple is a popular Hindu pilgrimage centre and affords excellent views over the city, especially at sunset. The religious library here is worth a visit (open 4pm to 8pm).

The Birla Planetarium & Science Museum (Map p941; ☎ 23235081; museum/planetarium Rs 17/20; ⏰ museum 10.30am-8pm, till 3pm Fri, planetarium shows 11.30am, 4pm, 6pm), as well as the Birla Modern Art Gallery (Map p941; admission Rs 10; ⏰ 10.30am-6pm), are on the hill adjacent to the temple.

RAMOJI FILM CITY

Movie fans can't miss the four-hour tour of Ramoji Film City (☎ 23235678; www.ramojifilmcity.com; admission Rs 250; ⏰ 9.30am-5.30pm), an 800-hectare movie-making complex for Telugu, Tamil and Hindi films. This place has everything – dance routines, gaudy fountains, flimsy film sets – and the whole thing wraps up with a Wild West song-and-dance number. The 'Royal Package' (Rs 750) includes AC transport and lunch at a five-star hotel. Buses 205 and 206 from Koti Women's College, 100m northeast of Koti station, take an hour to get here.

Activities

The Theravada Ananda Buddha Vihara (Map p939; ☎ 27733161; www.buddhavihara.in; Mahendra Hills; ⏰ 5.30am-12.30pm & 4-8.30pm) will eventually include a museum of Buddhist art and a library. At the time of writing, only the temple – on a hill with incredible views – was complete. Meditation sessions are held at 6am and 6pm, but monks and nuns are available anytime to give instruction or just chat about the tradition. Call to inquire about special programmes.

The centre is near the Amrita ashram; take East Maredpally Main Rd through Trimurthy Colony. An autorickshaw from Abids will cost around Rs 75.

Courses

The Vipassana International Meditation Centre (Dhamma Khetta; ☎ 24240290; www.dhamma.org; Nagarjuna Sagar Rd, Kusumnagar) has intensive 10-day meditation courses at its peaceful grounds 20km outside the city. Apply by email or at the Hyderabad office (☎ 24732569). A shuttle runs to/from Hyderabad on the first and last day of courses.

Tours

APTDC (see p940) conducts tours of the city (full day, Rs 230), Ramoji Film City (Rs 415), Nagarjuna Sagar (weekends only, Rs 360) and Tirupathi (two days, Rs 1600 AC). The evening city tour (Rs 155) takes in Hitec City, the botanic gardens and Golconda Fort's sound-and-light show, though you may spend much of it in traffic. All tours start from the Secunderabad office.

The Department of Tourism (p940) has daytime (Rs 125) and night-time (Rs 175) city tours by AC bus.

Save the Rocks Society (☎ 23552923; www.saverocks.org; 1236 Rd No 60, Jubilee Hills) organises monthly walks through the Andhran landscape and its surreal-looking boulders.

Rooms tend to fill up, so call ahead.

BUDGET

The best cheap hotels are in the Abids area between Abids Circle and Hyderabad train station. Many of the cheaper places seem to be filled with curious gents.

Hotel Suhail (Map p941; ☎ 24610299; Troop Bazaar; s/d/tr from Rs 200/375/395) Tucked away on an alley behind the main post office and the Grand Hotel, the Suhail is an excellent deal. Rooms are large and quiet and have balconies and constant hot water. Troop Bazaar is unlit at night, though; some readers find it sketchy.

Hotel Sri Brindavan (Map p941; ☎ 23203970; fax 23200204; Nampally Station Rd; s/d from Rs 350/450;) The curved balcony and fresh lemon-yellow paint give this well-ordered place a slight Art Deco feel. Few staff speak English, but rooms are tidy and compact, and AC rooms in the back are surprisingly peaceful. The parking lot even has trees.

Atithi Residency Delux Lodge (Map p941; ☎ 66848491; Mahaprabhu House, JN Rd; s/d from Rs 350/525;) The Atithi gets an A for effort. Rooms have soothing peach walls, door mouldings and 24-hour hot water. There's also a travel 'desk', which is really just reception, but staff can help with train booking and car rental. Request a room at the back to avoid street noise.

Hotel Saptagiri Deluxe (Map p941; ☎ 24610333; Nampally Station Rd; r from Rs 450;) Women guests were spotted here – always a good sign. Set back from Nampally Station Rd, it's quiet, clean, bright and almost tasteful – a step up from the joints you usually find at this price. Rooms come with clean towels!

Hotel Jaya International (Map p941; ☎ 24752929; hoteljaya@sancharnet.in; Hanuman Tekdi Rd; s/d from Rs 495/595;) There's a reason that the Jaya always seems to be full of student groups: it's the best deal in town. Capacious, sunny rooms have arched balconies with good views, stained-glass lamps and scrubbed bathrooms. It's centrally located, too. But there definitely won't be a room for you if you don't book ahead.

APTDC's paying-guest programme (☎ 23450444) can help find you rooms in private homes for Rs 250 to Rs 600.

If you arrive late at Secunderabad train station, try the clean but noisy retiring rooms (dm from Rs 50, s/d from Rs 250/450;).

MIDRANGE

Taj Mahal Hotel (Map p941; ☎ 40048484; fax 55827373; King Kothi Rd; s/d from Rs 550/750;) Taj number two is just east of – and second fiddle to – the original (see below). Big, spotless rooms always seem to have a fresh coat of paint. Reception is at the back of the parking lot, past the reception for Taj No 3.

Hotel Rajmata (Map p941; ☎ 66665555; fax 23204133; Public Gardens Rd; s/d Rs 590/690) The Rajmata is very professionally run – the folks at reception are great – and has a helpful travel desk. Rooms here vary; the better ones are big and bright, and since the place is set back from busy Public Gardens Rd, they're not too noisy. It's popular with families.

Taj Mahal Hotel (Map p941; ☎ 24758250; sundartaj@satyam.net.in; cnr Abid & King Kothi Rds; s/d with AC from Rs 800/1150;) This rambling heritage building has a magnificent exterior, plants peppered about, and some exceedingly charming rooms. Each is different so ask to see a few: the better ones have boudoirs, crystal-knobbed armoires and wood-beam ceilings. All are peaceful. Service is good, too.

Athidhi Guesthouse (Map p939; ☎ 9246544051; www.athidhiguesthouse.com; Rd No 13A, Happy Valley Rd, Banjara Hills; s/d with AC incl breakfast Rs 1000/1500;) If you're more interested in the conveniences of home than being close to the action, take a room in one of Athidhi's three-bedroom serviced apartments, set on a tranquil lane in chichi Banjara Hills. Nearby food shops provide all you need to cook in the kitchen.

Also recommended:

Yatri Nivas Hotel (Map p939; ☎ 23461847; www.amogh-india.com; SP Rd, Secunderabad; s/d with AC incl breakfast Rs 1000/1200;) Indian families mill about the YN compound, which has two restaurants, a bar and trees strung with lights.

Hotel Saiprakash (Map p941; ☎ 24611726; www.hotelsaiprakash.com; Nampally Station Rd; s/d with AC from Rs 1200/1400;)

Hotel Harsha (Map p941; ☎ 23201188; www.hotelharsha.net; Public Gardens Rd; s/d with AC from US$30/40;)

TOP END

All the following have central AC, and rates include breakfast.

Golkonda (Map p939; ☎ 66110101; www.thegolkondahyd.com; Masab Tank; r from US$185;) Recently completely overhauled, the Golkonda is growing into its new and improved self: staff are still learning. But rooms are elegant and contemporary, with sumptuous upholstery on chairs and clever touches like a curved glass wall separating the bathroom. Maybe Hyderabad's most chic.

Taj Krishna (Map p939; ☎ 66664242; www.tajhotels.com; Rd No 1, Banjara Hills; s/d from US$350/375;) The sort of opulence you expect for the price: a lobby resembling a mahal (palace), marble-inlaid hallway floors, and rooms with elegant furniture and piles of taffeta pillows.

Other recommendations:

Central Court Hotel (Map p941; ☎ 23232323; www.thecentralcourt.com; Lakdi-ka-pul; s/d from Rs 2595/3495;) Ever-so-slightly overpriced, but central, spotless and very efficiently run.

Best Western Amrutha Castle (Map p941; ☎ 66633888; www.amruthacastle.com; Saifabad; s/d from US$85/98;) Chains suck, but it looks like a castle!

Eating

Andhra Pradesh's cuisine has two major influences. The Mughals brought tasty biryanis, haleem (pounded, spiced wheat with mutton – see the boxed text, p946) and kebabs. The Andhra style is vegetarian and famous for its spiciness. We use the term 'meals' instead of 'thali' in this chapter; the word 'thali' is not used in this part of India, but they mean the same thing.

CITY CENTRE

Mozamjahi Market (Map p939; cnr Mukarramjahi & Jawaharlal Nehru Rds; 6am-6pm) A great place to buy fruit and veggies (or ice cream), while enjoying the alluring architecture.

Karachi's (Map p941; Mahaprabhu House, JN Rd; snacks Rs 20-40; 11am-11pm) A tacky, fun fast-food joint with good chaat (snacks), veggie burgers, pizza and the enigmatic 'Chinese dosa'.

Kamat Hotel (Map p939; SD Rd, Secunderabad; mains Rs 45-75; 7.30am-10pm) Each Kamat (other branches are on AG's Office Rd and Nampally Station Rd – see Map p941) is slightly different, but they're all cheap and good. Meals (traditional South Indian all-you-can-eat meals; Rs 25 to Rs 37) are reliably delish.

Kamat Andhra Meals (Map p941; Troop Bazaar; meals Rs 45; lunch & dinner) Excellent authentic Andhra meals on banana leaves. Its sister restaurants in the same compound – Kamat Jowar Bhakri (Maharashtran), Kamat Restaurant (North and South Indian) and Kamat Coffee Shop – are likewise friendly family joints full of happy diners. No relation to Kamat Hotel.

Sagar Papaji Ka Dhaba (Map p941; Hanuman Tekdi Rd; mains Rs 35-90; lunch & dinner) Always busy, Papaji's has profoundly delicious veg and nonveg biryanis, curries and tikkas. You can watch the guys making naan and throwing it in the tandoor while you wait for a table.

our pick Hotel Shadab (Map p939; High Court Rd, Patthargatti; mains Rs 40-130; 5am-11pm) One meal at Shadab and you'll be forever under its spell. The hopping restaurant is the place to get biryani and, during Ramadan, haleem (see p946). It has even mastered veg biryani (!) and hundreds of other veg and nonveg delights (if you try the chocolate chicken or pineapple mutton, let us know how it goes). Packed with Old Town families and good vibes.

Minerva Coffee Shop (Map p939; Salar Jung Marg; mains Rs 55-85; 7.30am-11pm) The North Indian meal (Rs 85) in this old-school coffee shop is a delight – five delicious curries, topped off with fruit salad and ice cream. All with a river view. There's a Minerva in Somajiguda, too.

Gufaa (Map p941; ☎ 23298811; Ohri's Cuisine Court, Bashirbagh Rd; mains Rs 130-200; lunch & dinner) The eccentric Gufaa has faux-rock walls with African masks, leopard-print upholstery, twinkling stars on the ceiling and red roses on the tables. And it serves Peshawari food. But somehow it works, and even 'dhal with roti' (black dhal stewed with fresh cream and tomatoes, and roti made with chillies) is extraordinary here.

Palace Heights Restaurant & Bar (Map p941; ☎ 24754483; 8th fl, Triveni Complex; mains Rs 130-225; ⌚ 11am-11pm) This pearl in the dirty shell of an old city-centre building has a palatial interior and incredible views. The service is excellent, the wine list endless and the nonveg menu – Andhran, Goan, Chinese, Italian, Filipino – extensive.

Also recommended:

Sukha Sagara (Map p941; AG's Office Rd; mains Rs 40-80; ⌚ 7am-10pm)

Paradise Persis Restaurant (Map p939; ☎ 55313723; cnr SD & MG Rds, Secunderabad; mains Rs 60-195; ⌚ 11am-midnight) Ask any Hyderabadi about biryani, and they'll mention Paradise.

Ming's Court (Map p941; ☎ 23298811; Ohri's Cuisine Court, Bashirbagh Rd; mains Rs 120-250; ⌚ lunch & dinner)

BANJARA HILLS

Restaurants

Angeethi (Map p939; ☎ 66255550; 7th fl, Reliance Classic Bldg, Rd No 1; mains Rs 100-285; ⌚ lunch & dinner) The setting, designed to resemble an old Punjabi dhaba (snack bar), is over the top. But Angeethi does truly outstanding North Indian and Punjabi dishes, such as corn methi malai (sweet-corn stew with fenugreek leaves; Rs 105). The lunchtime buffet (Rs 140; Monday to Saturday) is a good deal.

Fusion 9 (Map p941; ☎ 65577722; Rd No 1; mains Rs 235-550; ⌚ lunch & dinner) Soft lighting and cosy décor set off pan-fried Norwegian salmon (Rs 550) or Australian pork chops (Rs 800). There's also (less expensive) Mexican, Thai and pizzas, and lots of imported liquor. The Grill Room upstairs serves grilled goods (dinner only) in a tasteful lounge atmosphere.

Other recommendations:

Southern Spice (Map p939; ☎ 23353802; Rd No 2; mains Rs 75-160; ⌚ lunch & dinner) Spicy goodness.

Ohri's Far East (Map p939; ☎ 23302200; Rd No 12; mains Rs 120-250; ⌚ lunch & dinner) Pan-Asian.

Cafés

Ofen (Map p939; ☎ 23372205; Rd No 10; desserts Rs 12-95; ⌚ 8am-10.30pm) Cheesecake, chocolate cinnamon roulade and chocolate gugel hopf bread.

Le Café d'Art (Map p939; ☎ 66506661; Rd No 1; light meals Rs 115-185; ⌚ 9am-11pm) Most of the beautiful young people here come to smoke hookahs (Rs 250) while lounging in antique fauteuils and wooden furniture. We recommend it for the art exhibitions, among the best in town.

> BEATING THE BHATTIS
> If you're travelling around Andhra Pradesh during Ramadan (known locally as Ramazan), look out for the clay ovens called bhattis. You'll probably hear them before you see them. Men gather around, taking turns to vigorously pound haleem (a mixture of meat and wheat) inside purpose-built structures. Come nightfall, the serious business of eating begins. The taste is worth the wait.

Drinking

CAFÉS

Barista (Map p939; Ground floor,Reliance Classic Bldg, Rd No 1, Banjara Hills; coffees Rs 20-50; ⌚ 8am-10pm)

Café Coffee Day (Map p939; Rd No 1, Banjara Hills; coffees Rs 20-50; ⌚ 9am-10pm)

Mocha (Map p939; ☎ 23350133; Rd No 7, Banjara Hills; coffees Rs 20-180; ⌚ 9am-11pm) Full of 20-somethings smoking hookahs, but the décor, the garden and the coffee are fabulous.

BARS & LOUNGES

Hyderabad's nightlife has gained momentum in recent years, but drinking establishments are limited by a midnight-curfew law. The following are all open from noon to midnight (but don't get going till 9pm). All serve food and charge covers (Rs 500 to 1000) on certain nights – for couples, that is: guys will need a gal to enter. Beer starts at Rs 140, cocktails at Rs 250.

Liquids (Map p939; ☎ 66259907; Bhaskar Plaza, Rd No 1, Banjara Hills) Regularly featured in the papers' Society pages, Liquids is reigning queen of Hyderabad nightlife.

Touch (Map p939; ☎ 23542422; Trendset Towers, Rd No 2, Banjara Hills) Sporting a sort of feminine Star Wars look, with futuristic white furniture and chiffon screens, Touch is all about image. It's a stylish, comfy place to watch the beautiful people.

Begumpet bars/clubs on weekends:

10 Downing Street (Map p939; ☎ 55629323; My Home Tycoon Bldg) Looking British.

Bottles & Chimney (Map p939; ☎ 27766464; SP Rd)

Entertainment

ARTS

Ravindra Bharati Theatre (Map p941; ☎ 23233672; www.artistap.com; Public Gardens Rd) Regular music, dance and dramaperformances. Check local papers.

Hyderabad has a burgeoning contemporary-art scene, centred mostly in the Hills:

ICCR Art Gallery (Map p941; ☎ 23236398; Ravindra Bharati Theatre, Public Gardens Rd; 11am-8pm)

Kalakriti (Map p939; ☎ 55564466; Rd No 10, Banjara Hills; 11am-7pm)

Shishtri (☎ 23540023; Rd No 15, Jubilee Hills; 11am-7pm)

CINEMA

Hyderabad Film Club (Map p939; ☎ 9391020243; Ameerpet Rd) Shows foreign films, sometimes in conjunction with the Alliance Française.

Cinemas showing English-language movies:

Prasad's Multiplex (Map p939; ☎ 23448989; NTR Marg) A monstrous IMAX theatre.

PVR (Map p939; ☎ 66467876; Hyderabad Central, Panjagutta Rd)

Skyline/Sterling Complex (Map p941; ☎ 23222633; Bashirbagh)

Shopping

The bazaars near the Charminar (see p940) are the most exciting places to shop: you'll find exquisite pearls, silks, gold and fabrics alongside billions of bangles.

Hyderabad Perfumers (Map p939; ☎ 24577294; Patthargatti; 10am-8.30pm Mon-Sat) The family-run Hyderabad Perfumers, which has been in business for four generations, can whip something up for you on the spot.

Meena Bazar (Map p941; ☎ 24753566; Tilak Rd; 11am-9.30pm Mon-Sat) Gorgeous saris, salwar (trouser) suits and fabrics at fixed prices. Even if you're not in the market, come here to sightsee.

Kalanjali (Map p941; ☎ 23423440; Public Gardens Rd; 10am-8pm Mon-Sat) With a huge range of arts, crafts, fabrics and clothing, Kalanjali is a good place to prepare for the bazaar: the prices are higher, but you'll get a feel for what things are worth in a relaxed environment.

Afreen Suits & Saris (Map p939; ☎ 55711802; Patthargatti; 10.30am-10.30pm) A wide range of silks and fabrics are sold here for fixed prices; credit cards accepted.

BUS

Hyderabad's long-distance bus stations are mind-bogglingly efficient. Mahatma Gandhi bus station (Map p939; ☎ 24614406), better known as Imlibun, has an advance booking office (🕑 8am-9pm). For Nagarjunakonda, take one of the frequent morning buses to Vinukonda or Macherla and get off en route. For trips to Karnataka, better go with KSRTC (☎ 24656430).

Secunderabad's Jubilee bus station (Map p939; ☎ 27802203) is less convenient, but does operate Volvo AC buses to Bengaluru (Rs 620, 10 hours, three daily), Chennai (Rs 670, 12 hours, one daily) and Visakhapatnam (Rs 675, 13 hours, one daily).

Private bus companies with super-deluxe services are on Nampally High Rd, near the train station entrance.

TRAIN

Secunderabad (Map p939), Hyderabad (Map p939) – also known as Nampally – and Kacheguda (Map p939) are the three major train stations. Most through trains stop at Secunderabad and Kacheguda, which is more convenient for Abids. See the boxed text, opposite, for key routes. Bookings can be made at Hyderabad and Secunderabad stations from 8am to 8pm Monday to Saturday (to 2pm Sunday). Both stations have a tourist counter. For general inquiries, phone ☎ 131; for reservation status, ☎ 135.

Getting Around

TO/FROM THE AIRPORT

Hyderabad Airport (Map p939) is in Begumpet, 8km north of Abids. Take an autorickshaw from Abids (Rs 60) or a taxi (Rs 150). A prepaid autorickshaw from the airport costs Rs 95.

AUTORICKSHAW

Except in the Old Town, drivers generally use their meters. Flag fall is Rs 10 for the first kilometre, then Rs 5 for each additional

CAR

There are places around Nampally station where you can rent a car and driver; City Cabs (☎ 27760000; Begumpet) is reliable for local taxis. For local and longer trips, try Banjara Travels (☎ 23394368; Rd No 12, Banjara Hills).

TRAIN

The MMTS trains are a convenient way to get around, particularly between the three main train stations. There are two main lines. Hyderabad (Nampally) to Lingampalli (northwest of Banjara Hills) has 11 stops, including Lakdikapul, Khairatabad, Necklace Rd, Begumpet and Hitec City. The Falaknuma (south of Old Town) to Begumpet line passes by Yakutupura, Dabirpura, Malakpet, Kacheguda and Secunderabad, among others. Trains will be labelled with their start and end point: so, HL is Hyderabad–Lingampalli, FS is Falaknuma–Secunderabad and so on. Trains are new and efficient, but they only run about every 45 minutes. Tickets are Rs 5 to 10.

NAGARJUNAKONDA

☎ 08680

The ancient remains at this site, 150km southeast of Hyderabad, were discovered in 1926 by archaeologist AR Saraswathi. In 1953, when it became known that a massive hydroelectric project would soon create the Nagarjuna Sagar reservoir, which would flood the area, a major six-year excavation was undertaken to unearth the area's many Buddhist ruins: stupas, viharas, chaityas (temples) and mandapas (pillared pavilions), as well as some outstanding examples of white-marble depictions of the Buddha's life. The finds were reassembled

STATE OF GOOD KARMA

In its typically understated way, Andhra Pradesh doesn't make a big deal of its vast archeological – and karmic – wealth. But in fact, the ruins of Andhra Pradesh's rich Buddhist history sprinkle the state like so many forgotten pearls of the Buddha's wisdom. Only a few of Andhra's 150 stupas, viharas (monastery complexes), caves and other sites have been excavated, turning up rare relics of the Buddha (usually pearl-like pieces of bone, found with offerings like golden flowers). They speak of a time when Andhra Pradesh – or Andhradesa – was a hotbed of Buddhist activity, when monks came from around the world to learn from some of the tradition's most renowned teachers, and when Indian monks set off for Sri Lanka and Southeast Asia via the Krishna and Godavari Rivers and the Bay of Bengal to spread the teaching of the Buddha.

Andhradesa's Buddhist culture, in which sangha (community of monks and nuns), laity and statespeople all took part, lasted around 1500 years from the 6th century BC. There's no historical evidence for it, but some even say that the Master himself visited the area.

Andhradesa's first practitioners were likely the disciples of Bavari, an ascetic who lived on the banks of the Godavari River and sent his followers north to bring back the Buddha's teaching. But the dharma really took off in the 3rd century BC under Ashoka (see p41), who dispatched monks out across his empire to teach and construct stupas enshrined with relics of the Buddha. (Being near these was thought to help people progress on the path to enlightenment.)

Succeeding Ashoka, the Satavahanas and then Ikshvakus were also supportive. At their capital at Amaravathi, the Satavahanas adorned Ashoka's modest stupa with elegant decoration. They built monasteries across the Krishna Valley and exported the dharma through their sophisticated maritime network.

It was also during the Satavahana reign that Nagarjuna lived. Considered by many to be the progenitor of Mahayana Buddhism, the eminent monk was equal parts logician, philosopher and meditator, and he wrote several groundbreaking works (with evocative titles like Seventy Verses on Emptiness) that shaped contemporary Buddhist thought. Other important monk-philosophers would emerge from the area in the centuries to follow, making Andhradesa a sort of Buddhist motherland of the South.

Those interested in Buddhist history will find these excavated sites ripe for exploring, but most are out of the way, infrastructure is nil and you may have trouble finding them. If you're game, head to the area around Vijayawada for Chandavaram, Guntupalli or Bhattiprolu, and near Visakhapatnam for Thotlakonda, Sankaram, Ramatirtham and Bavikonda.

on Nagarjunakonda, an island in the middle of the dam.

Prehistoric remnants suggest human activity began here around 200,000 years ago. From the 3rd century BC until the 4th century AD, the Krishna River valley was home to powerful empires that supported the sangha (community of monks and nuns), including the Ikshvakus, whose capital was Nagarjunakonda. It's estimated that this area alone had 30 monasteries.

Nagarjunakonda is named after Nagarjuna, a 2nd-century-AD monk and philosopher. He founded the Madhyamika school, which developed into Mahayana Buddhism (see above).

Sights

NAGARJUNAKONDA MUSEUM

This thoughtfully laid-out museum (Indian/foreigner Rs 2/US$2; 9.30am-3.45pm Sat-Thu) has Stone Age picks, hoes and spears on exhibit, but more impressive are its Buddha statues and the carved stone slabs that once adorned stupas. Most of them are from the 3rd century AD and depict scenes from the Buddha's life, interspersed with mithuna (paired male and female) figures languorously looking on.

Launches (Rs 45, one hour) depart for the island from Vijayapuri, on the banks of Nagarjuna Sagar, at 8.30am and 1.30pm, and stay for 30 minutes. To do the place justice, take the morning launch out and the afternoon one back. Extra express launches (Rs 60) may run on weekends and holidays. Bring food and water.

Sleeping & Eating

Nagarjunakonda is popular, and accommodation can be tight during weekends and holidays.

Project House (Punnami; ☎ 276540; r from Rs 300; ❄) This place is 5km from the jetty, opposite the main bus stand in Hill Colony. Rooms are basic but clean enough, and the veg restaurant is OK.

Nagarjuna Resort (☎ 08642-242471; r from Rs 450; ❄) The most convenient place to stay, right across the road from the boat launch, has spacious rooms with geysers. Those in front have good views, and there's a multicuisine restaurant.

Vijay Vihar Complex (☎ 277362; fax 276633; r with AC from Rs 1060; ❄) Two kilometres up the hill from Project House is this fancy place overlooking the lake. Rooms have balconies with excellent views. The restaurant has a range of veg and nonveg dishes.

Getting There & Away

The easiest way to visit Nagarjunakonda is with APTDC (☎ 040-2789310). Tours (Rs 360) depart from Hyderabad on weekends at 7.30am from Yatri Nivas Hotel (see p945), returning at 9.30pm.

You can also make your own way there from Hyderabad or Vijayawada. From Hyderabad, take a bus to Macherla or Vinukonda, which will stop at Nagarjuna Sagar. The nearest train station is 22km away at Macherla, where buses leave regularly for Nagarjuna Sagar.

WARANGAL

☎ 0870 / pop 528,570

Warangal was the capital of the Kakatiya kingdom, which covered the greater part of present-day Andhra Pradesh from the late 12th to early 14th centuries until it was conquered by the Tughlaqs of Delhi. The Hindu Kakatiyas were great builders and patrons of Telugu literature and arts, and it was during their reign that the Chalukyan style of temple architecture reached its pinnacle.

If you're interested in Hindu temple development, then it's worth the trip to Warangal, which is also a friendly town, and Palampet (see p952). It's possible – but not leisurely – to visit both places on a long day trip from Hyderabad, 157km away.

Most buses and trains will stop en route at Bhongir, about 60km from Hyderabad. It's well worth jumping down for a couple of hours to climb the fantastical-looking 12th-century Chalukyan hill fort (Rs 3) from which the town gets its name. Looking like a gargantuan stone egg, the hill is mostly ringed by stairs.

Orientation & Information

Warangal, Hanamkonda and Kazhipet are sister towns. The Warangal train station and bus stand are opposite each other, and the post office and police station are on Station Rd. Main Rd connects Warangal and Hanamkonda.

There are some internet cafés (MG Rd; per hr Rs 20) near Hotel Ratna. The State Bank of Hyderabad (Station Rd) has an ATM. The Department of Tourism (☎ 2459201; Hanamkonda-Kazhipet Rd, opposite REC; ⏲ 10.30am-5pm Sun-Fri & holidays) is helpful and can advise on trips in Warangal and beyond.

Sights

FORT

Warangal's fort (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/US$2; ⏲ dawn-dusk) was a massive construction with three distinct circular strongholds surrounded by a moat. Four paths with decorative gateways, set according to the cardinal points, led to the Swayambhava, a huge Shiva temple. The gateways are still obvious, but most of the fort is in ruins.

The fort is easily reached from Warangal by bus, bike or autorickshaw (Rs 75 return, including waiting time).

HANAMKONDA

Built in 1163, the 1000-Pillared Temple (⏲ 6am-6pm) on the slopes of Hanamkonda Hill, 400m from the Hanamkonda crossroads, is a fine example of Chalukyan architecture in a peaceful, leafy setting. Dedicated to three deities – Shiva, Vishnu and Surya – it has been carefully restored with intricately carved pillars and a central, very impressive Nandi of black basalt.

Down the hill and 3km to the right is the small Siddheshwara Temple. The Bhadrakali Temple, featuring a stone statue of Kali, seated with a weapon in each of her eight hands, is high on a hill between Hanamkonda and Warangal.

Sleeping

Warangal has a range of good budget hotels.

Vijaya Lodge (☎ 2501222; fax 2446864; Station Rd; s/d from Rs 130/200) About 100m from the train station, the Vijaya is a great deal, with tidy, compact rooms, layers of fresh, pastel paint on the walls and an almost domestic touch.

Hotel Ratna (☎ 2500645; fax 2500096; MG Rd; s/d from Rs 299/400; ❄) The Ratna has shiny floors and professional staff – including friendly, English-speaking houseboys – and it accepts credit cards. Its veg restaurant, Kavya, gets good reviews (mains Rs 40 to 85).

Hotel Surya (☎ 2441834; fax 2441836; Station Rd; s/d incl breakfast from Rs 390/450; ❄) Near the stations, this modern and well-run hotel has smart rooms, which are only just beginning to fade, constant hot water and a good restaurant downstairs.

Eating

Warangal has several meals places (we use the term 'meals' instead of thali in this chapter), some of which have seen better days. The hotel restaurants are good bets.

Sri Raghavendra Bhavan (Station Rd; meals Rs 22; 🕒 5.30am-10.30pm) A little neighbourhood joint with the best meals in Warangal. It's close to Hotel Surya.

Kanishka (☎ 2578491; Main Rd, Hanamkonda; mains Rs 30-80; 🕒 6.30am-10.30pm) The Hotel Ashoka, a Hanamkonda institution, has a busy compound with this excellent veg restaurant, a non-veg restaurant, a bar-restaurant and a pub.

Surabhi (Station Rd; mains Rs 40-75; 🕒 11am-3pm & 7-11pm) Surprisingly good food in somewhat elegant surroundings at the Hotel Surya. The menu includes such wonders as the 'Surabhi special dosa', stuffed with carrots, paneer (unfermented cheese), onions and ghee (Rs 30).

Getting There & Away

Bus services run to Vijayawada (Rs 190, seven hours, seven daily) from Warangal. Frequent buses to Hyderabad (Rs 74, 3½ hours) depart from Hanamkonda bus station, an Rs 6 bus ride away.

Warangal is a major rail junction. Trains go regularly to Hyderabad (2nd/chair Rs 71/232, three hours), Vijayawada (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 125/321/448, four hours) and Chennai (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 281/735/1030, 10 hours). Many trains go to Delhi daily.

Getting Around

Bus 28 goes to the fort and regular buses go to all the other sites. You can rent bicycles at Ramesh Kumar Cycle Taxi (Station Rd; per hr Rs 4; 🕒 8am-10pm). A shared autorickshaw ride costs Rs 6.

AROUND WARANGAL

Palampet

About 65km northeast of Warangal, the stunning Ramappa Temple (🕒 6am-6.30pm), built in 1234, is an attractive example of Kakatiya architecture, although it was clearly influenced by Chalukya and Hoysala styles. Its pillars are ornately carved and its eaves shelter fine statues of female forms.

Just 1km south, the Kakatiyas constructed Ramappa Cheruvu to serve as temple tank. The artificial lake now assumes a natural presence in the landscape.

The easiest way to get here is by private car, but frequent buses also run from Hanamkonda to Mulugu (Rs 25). From Mulugu, you can take a bus (Rs 4, every half-hour) or shared jeep (Rs 5) to the village of Palampet. The temple is about 500m from here.

VISAKHAPATNAM

☎ 0891 / pop 1.3 million

Visakhapatnam – also called Vizag (vie-zag) – is Andhra Pradesh's second-largest city, though it feels more like an ageing beach-resort town. It's famous for shipbuilding and steel manufacturing, and now it's also an up-and-comer in the call-centre, software and film industries. But we love it for its kitschy coasts. The run-down boardwalk along Ramakrishna Beach has lots of spunk, and the beach at nearby Rushikonda is one of Andhra's best. Vizag is also a base for visits to the Araku Valley (see p954).

Orientation

Vizag's train station sits in a hive of shops and hotels on the western edge of town, near the port. Dwarakanagar, Vizag's commercial centre, is 1.5km northeast of the train station, and the bus stand, known as RTC Complex, is 2km due east. Waltair and its Ramakrishna Beach are about 2km southeast of RTC.

Information

ATMs are all around. RTC Complex has several internet cafés, some open 24 hours.

Sights & Activities

The long beaches of Waltair overlook the Bay of Bengal, with its mammoth ships and brightly painted fishing boats. Its coastal Beach

Rd, lined with parks and weird sculptures, is great for long walks.

The best beaches for swimming are at Rushikonda, 8km north. On the way, Kailasagiri Hill has gardens, playgrounds, and a gargantuan Shiva and Parvati. The views from the hill and the Kailasagiri Passenger Ropeway (☎ 6510334; admission Rs 44; ⌚ 11am-1pm & 2-8pm) are awesome. Movies or cricket matches are sometimes shown across Beach Rd, at the festive Tenetti Beach.

At Simhachalam Hill, 10km northwest of town, is a fine 11th-century Vishnu Temple (⌚ 6-10am & 4-6pm) in Orissan style. You can give puja to the deity, who's covered with sandalwood paste. Bus 6 A/H goes here.

Tours

APTDC operates full-day tours of the city (Rs 245) and of Araku Valley (see p954).

Sleeping

VISAKHAPATNAM

Budget and midrange hotels huddle around the train station, which has retiring rooms (r from Rs 200; ❄). Waltair has a much better vibe, but few budget hotels. Prices may rise for Dussehra/Diwali holidays, when Bengalis swarm to Vizag.

Sree Kanya Lodge (☎ 2564881; Bowdara Rd; s/d from Rs 175/350; ❄) Near the train station but out of the bustle, Sree Kanya is mostly characterless but clean and bright, with sheets folded in little squares on the beds, friendly staff, balconies in most rooms and a good restaurant.

Jaabily (☎ 2706468; www.jaabilybeachinn.com; Beach Rd; r from Rs 595; ❄) The Jaabily has an eclectic, overpriced assortment of so-so rooms, an old beach-cabana feel and a colourful but gritty spot near the beach. Checkout is noon.

Taj Residency (☎ 2567756; www.tajhotels.com; Beach Rd; s/d from US$100/110; ❄ 💻 🏊) The usual Taj classiness, with great views. Slightly frayed at the edges, but where else can you stay at a Taj for this price? Checkout is noon.

BOAT

Boats depart every now and then for Port Blair in the Andaman Islands (see p1112). If you want to try your luck, bookings for the 56-hour journey can be made at the Shipping Office (☎ 2565584, 2562661; Av Bhanoji Row; ⌚ 8am-5pm) in the port complex.

BUS

You'll probably take the train to/from Vizag, but its bus stand (☎ 2746400) is well organised, with frequent services to Vijayawada (deluxe/Volvo Rs 225/404, nine hours) and Hyderabad (ordinary/Volvo Rs 382/676, 14/12 hours).

TRAIN

Visakhapatnam Junction station is on the Kolkata–Chennai line. The overnight Coromandel Express (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 338/896/1263, 13½ hours) is the fastest of the five daily trains running to Kolkata. Heading south, it goes to Vijayawada (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 189/476/659, 5½ hours) and Chennai (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 315/831/1170, 13 hours). Many other trains head to Vijayawada daily; seven others go to Chennai.

AROUND VISAKHAPATNAM

Andhra's best train ride is through the magnificent Eastern Ghats to the Araku Valley, 120km north of Vizag. The area is home to isolated tribal communities, and the tiny Museum of Habitat (admission Rs 5; 9am-12.30pm & 1.30-5.30pm) has fascinating exhibits of indigenous life. APTDC runs a tour from Vizag (see p952; Rs 430), which takes in a performance of Dhimsa, a tribal dance, and the million-year-old limestone Borra Caves (Rs 25; 10am-5pm), 30km from Araku.

The Punnami Hill Resort (958936-249204; cottages from Rs 300;), near the museum, has cottages with good views. But it's more fun to stay at the forest retreat of Jungle Bells (Tyda; cottages from Rs 650;), 45km from Araku. It hurts to say the name, true. But its wooden cottages – including the 'igloo hut' – are tucked away in woods. Book at APTDC (see p952).

The Kirandol passenger train (Rs 24, five hours) leaves Vizag at 7.45am and Araku at 3pm. It's a slow, spectacular ride on a broad-gauge line; sit on the right-hand side coming out of Vizag for the best views. For Jungle Bells, get off at Tyda station, 500m from the resort.

VIJAYAWADA

0866 / pop 1 million

Vijayawada, at the head of the delta of the mighty Krishna River, is considered by many to be the heart of Andhra culture and language. It's also an important Hindu site, both for its Durga temple and the Krishna Pushkaram, held every 12 years, when Lord Pushkara is believed to reside in the River Krishna. Nearby Amaravathi, meanwhile, was a centre of Buddhist learning and practise for many centuries.

Vijayawada's a big, bustling city and an important port, but it's also surrounded by hills, intersected by canals, ringed by fields of rice and palm, and imbued with a charm that takes time to emerge.

Orientation

The Krishna River cuts across the southern end of the city. The bus station is just north of the river, and the train station is in the centre of town, near the Governorpet neighbourhood, which has lots of hotels.

CAVE TEMPLES

Four kilometres southwest of Vijayawada, the stunning 7th-century Undavalli cave temples (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/US$2; 9am-6pm) cut a fine silhouette against the palm trees and rice paddies. Shrines are dedicated to the Trimurti – Brahma, Vishnu and Shiva – and one cave on the third level houses a huge, beautiful statue of reclining Vishnu while seated deities and animals stand guard out the front. Bus 301 goes here.

The east side of Vijayawada is also peppered with defunct cave temples, like the very damaged but nonetheless interesting 6th- to 7th-century Mogalarajapuram Caves.

VICTORIA JUBILEE MUSEUM

The best part of this museum (2574299; MG Rd; admission Rs 3; 10.30am-5pm Sat-Thu) is the building itself, built in 1877 to honour Queen Victoria's coronation jubilee. Later, in 1921, it hosted the Congress meeting where a new tricolour flag was introduced. Mahatma Gandhi added a wheel to the design and made it the Indian National Congress's official flag.

The interesting architecture outshines the museum's small collection of art and arms. But the garden, where temple sculpture from around the state lines shady paths, is lovely.

KANAKA DURGA TEMPLE

This temple (Indrakila Hill; 5am-9pm) is dedicated to Kanaka Durga, the goddess and protector of the city. Legend has it that she eradicated powerful demons from the area. She now receives continual gratitude from her followers, who credit her with Vijayawada's prosperity. Avoid mornings and bring lots of change for blessings.

GHATS

Vijayawada's Krishna River has 10 ghats running along its shores. The Krishnaveni ghat, just across from the bus stand, is a fascinating place to sit and watch the world – and its laundry, swimming kids and prayers – go by.

Courses

Dhamma Vijaya (Vipassana Meditation Centre; 08812-225522; www.dhamma.org; Eluru-Chintalapudi Rd, Pedavegi Mandalam) offers intensive 10-day vipassana meditation courses free of charge. Frequent trains run from Vijayawada to Eluru (2nd/chair Rs 52/197, one hour). The centre is 15km from Eluru; call for details.

Sleeping & Eating

The train station's clean and spacious retiring rooms (dm/s/d from Rs 50/120/250;) are a great option. The bus station has dorms (3297809; from Rs 100) for gents.

Sree Lakshmi Vilas Modern Cafe (2572525; Besant Rd, Governorpet; s with shared bathroom Rs 90, s/d with private bathroom from Rs 150/300) With black-and-white check floors and thick wooden banisters, this place has a heavy 1940s vibe. Housekeeping, however, is not its strong suit. The veg restaurant (meals Rs 24) is excellent, with fresh juices (Rs 10) and mismatched wooden chairs.

Hotel Santhi (2577351; Apsara Theatre Junction, Governorpet; s/d from Rs 350/450;) Well-organised Santhi feels like a midrange place despite its prices, with its pastel-pink and mint-green rooms, two-tone cabinets and newish bathrooms.

Hotel Grand Residency (6668505; grandvja@sify.com; Prakasam Rd; s/d with AC from Rs 825/925;) Light, airy rooms that aren't huge but very smart, with some style, eg lacquered furniture. Reserve in advance if you can. The restaurant, Tulips (mains Rs 30 to 95; open for dinner), has good veg and nonveg, and the hotel also has a bar.

Cross Roads (Prakasam Rd; mains Rs 50-95; lunch & dinner) There's sometimes a wait at this popular family place specialising in quality kebabs, biryani and North Indian dishes. Save room for ice cream.

Other recommendations:

Hotel Sree Vasudev (2571345; Mudda Subbaiah St, Governorpet; s/d from Rs 90/130) Just behind Sree Lakshmi. Slightly less character, slightly cleaner toilets.

Jayalakshmi Cool Magic (Prakasam Rd, Governorpet; mains Rs 25-45; 9.30am-10.30pm) Outdoor patio seating and chicken masala dosas.

Getting There & Away

The bus stand has a helpful inquiry desk (2522200). Frequent services run to Hyderabad (deluxe/Volvo Rs 170/280, six hours), Amaravathi (Rs 22, 1½ hours), Warangal (deluxe Rs 120, six hours) and Visakhapatnam (deluxe/Volvo Rs 230/400, 10 hours).

Vijayawada is on the main Chennai–Kolkata and Chennai–Delhi railway lines. The daily Coromandel Express runs to Chennai (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 214/544/758, seven hours) and, the other way, to Kolkata (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 401/1073/1518, 20 hours). Speedy Rajdhani (Thursday and Saturday) and Jan Shatabdi (daily except Tuesday) trains also ply the Chennai–Vijayawada route.

Plenty of trains run to Hyderabad (2nd/chair Rs 115/386, 6½ hours) and Tirupathi (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 181/480/708, seven hours).

The computerised advance booking office (inquiry 133, 2577775; reservations 136, 2578955) is in the station basement.

AROUND VIJAYAWADA

Amaravathi

Amaravathi, 60km west of Vijayawada, was once the Andhran capital and a significant Buddhist centre. India's biggest stupa (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; 8am-6pm), measuring 27m high, was constructed here in the 3rd century BC, when Emperor Ashoka sent the monk Bhikku Mahadeva south to spread the Buddha's teaching. All that remains are a mound and some stones, but the nearby museum (admission Rs 2; 10am-5pm Sat-Thu) has a small replica of the stupa, with its intricately carved pillars, marble-surfaced dome and carvings of the life of the Buddha. It also has the relics once enshrined in the stupa and a reconstruction of part of the surrounding gateway. It's worth the trip, but most of Amaravathi's best sculptures are in London's British Museum and Chennai's Government Museum (p1033).

About 1km down the road is the Dhyana Buddha, a 20m-high seated Buddha built on the site where the Dalai Lama spoke at the 2006 Kalachakra.

Buses run from Vijayawada to Amaravathi every hour or so (Rs 22, 1½ hours), and APTDC organises tours on Sundays for Rs 200, subject to demand.

Kondapalli

Situated strategically on the old Machilipatnam–Golconda trade route, Kondapalli fort (admission Rs 5; 10.30am-5pm) was built in 1360 by the Reddy kings, and was held by the Gajapathis, the Qutb Shahis, the Mughals and the nizams before becoming a British military camp in 1767. Today it's a quiet, lovely ruin. On weekdays, you'll likely have the place to yourself and you can easily spend a few hours hiking around. Kondapalli village, 1km downhill, is famous for its wooden dolls. The fort is 21km from Vijayawada; an autorickshaw costs Rs 300 return.

TIRUMALA & TIRUPATHI

☎ 0877 / pop 302,000

The holy hill of Tirumala is one of the most visited pilgrimage centres in India – and indeed the world: it's said that Venkateshwara Temple eclipses Jerusalem, Rome and Mecca for sheer numbers of pilgrims.

There are never fewer than 5000 pilgrims here at any one time – the daily average is 40,000 and the total often reaches 100,000 – and darshan (deity viewing) runs around the clock. Temple staff alone number 12,000, and the efficient Tirumala Tirupathi Devasthanams (TTD; www.tirumala.org) administers the crowds. It also runs choultries (guesthouses) for pilgrims in Tirumala and Tirupathi, the service town at the bottom of the hill. The private hotels and lodges are in Tirupathi, so a fleet of buses constantly ferries pilgrims the 18km up and down the hill.

Tirumala is an engrossing place, but receives few non-Hindu visitors. The crowds can be overwhelming, but Tirumala somehow has a sense of serenity and ease about it and is worth a visit, even if you're not a pilgrim.

Information

You'll find most of your worldly needs in Tirupathi, conveniently clustered around the bus station and, about 500m away, the train station. G Car St becomes Tilak Rd further from the train station.

VENKATESHWARA TEMPLE

Devotees flock to Tirumala to see Venkateshwara, an avatar of Vishnu. Among the many powers attributed to him is the granting of any wish made before the idol at Tirumala. Many pilgrims also donate their hair to the deity – in gratitude for a wish fulfilled, or to renounce ego – so hundreds of barbers attend to devotees. Tirumala and Tirupathi are filled with tonsured men, women and children.

Legends about the hill itself and the surrounding area appear in the Puranas, and the temple's history may date back 2000 years. The main temple is an atmospheric place, though you'll be pressed between hundreds of devotees when you see it. The inner sanctum itself is dark and magical; it smells of incense, resonates with chanting and may make you religious. There, Venkateshwara sits gloriously on his throne, inspiring bliss and love among his visitors. You'll have a moment to make a wish and then you'll be out again.

'Ordinary darshan' requires a wait of several hours in the claustrophobic metal cages ringing the temple. 'Special darshan' tickets (Rs 50) can be purchased a day in advance in Tirupathi. These come with a darshan time and get you through the queue faster.

Foreigners are advised to have VIP 'cellar' darshan, which involves minimal waiting. Bring your passport, a photocopy and Rs 100 to the Joint Executive Officer's (JEO) office at Tirumala, about 2km from the Tirupathi bus drop-off. The free red buses go here.

Tours

If you're pressed for time, APTDC runs two-day tours (Rs 1550) to Tirumala from Hyderabad. KSTD (see p884) and TNTDC (see p1032) offer the same tours from Bengaluru and Chennai, respectively. APTDC also has a full-day tour (Rs 300) of the many important temples in the Tirupathi area.

Sleeping & Eating

Most non-Hindu visitors stay in Tirupathi, which has a range of good accommodation.

TIRUMALA

Vast dormitories (beds free) and guesthouses (Rs 100-2500) surround the temple, but these are intended for pilgrims. If you want to stay, check in at the Central Reception Office, near the Tirumala bus stand, or reserve online at www.ttdsevaonline.com (reservations not accepted for festivals).

Huge dining halls (meals free) in Tirumala serve thousands of meals daily to pilgrims. There are also veg restaurants serving meals for Rs 10.

TIRUPATHI

Hotels are clustered around the bus stand (TP Area) and train station, which has nice retiring rooms (dm/r from Rs 45/150; ❄).

Hotel Mamata Lodge (☎ 2225873; fax 2225797; 1st fl, 170 TP Area; s/d/tr/q Rs 150/250/300/300) A friendly, spic-and-span cheapie. Some of the sheets are stained, but they're tucked in tight and lovingly patched with white squares. Avoid the downstairs lodge of the same name.

Hotel Woodside (☎ 2284464; 15 G Car St; s/d incl breakfast from Rs 300/350; ❄) The cheerful Woodside has royal-blue walls and plaid curtains (unlike the dreary Woodside Annexe down the road). The restaurant downstairs has great, spicy meals (Rs 23) and lots of windows.

Hotel Annapurna (☎ 2250666; 349 G Car St; d/tr/q from Rs 450/600/800; ❄) Rooms at the reigning best value in town are pink and clean and new. Since the hotel's on a corner (across from the train station), rooms are bright but noisy. AC rooms are at the back and therefore quieter.

Hotel Sindhuri Park (☎ 2256430; www.hotelsindhuri.com; 119 TP Area; s/d from Rs 890/990; ❄ 💻) Rooms at the professional Sindhuri Park are well appointed and have central AC; some have views of the Pushkarna Tank out the front.

Hotel Universal Deluxe (49 G Car St; mains Rs 20-50; 🕒 5.30am-11.30pm) A bustling standby.

Hotel Vikram (☎ 2225433; TP Area; mains Rs 20-65; 🕒 5am-11pm) Excellent meals (Rs 22) and juices and full of happy families.

Punjabi Dhaba (☎ 5560827; G Car St; mains Rs 30-75; 🕒 7am-11pm) North Indian standbys and the delicious Special Punjabi Thali (Rs 60).

Other places to stay:

Hotel Mayura (☎ 2225925; mayura@nettlinx.com; 209 TP Area; r from Rs 750; ❄)

Bhimas Deluxe (☎ 2225521; www.bhimas.com; 34-38 G Car St; r from Rs 850; ❄) Has light-wood furniture, soft lighting and fancy towel racks, but could use a lick of paint.

Getting There & Away

It's possible to visit Tirupathi on a (very) long day trip from Chennai. If travelling by bus or train, you can buy 'link tickets', which include transport from Tirupathi to Tirumala.

AIR

Indian Airlines (☎ 2283992; Tirumala Bypass Rd; 🕒 10am-5.30pm), 2km outside of town, has daily flights to Hyderabad (US$85, one hour). Air Deccan (☎ 2285471) plies the same route daily for less. The easiest way to book either of these is with Mitson Travels (☎ 2225981; 192 Railway Station Rd; 🕒 9am-7.30pm Mon-Sat, to 12.30pm Sun), across from the train station's 'parcel office'.

BUS

Tirupathi's mega bus station (☎ 2289900) has frequent buses to Chennai (Rs 55, four hours) and Hyderabad (deluxe/Volvo Rs 330/560, 12/10 hours). Tonnes of APSRTC and KSTDC buses go to Bengaluru (deluxe/Volvo Rs 178/275, six/five hours), and three buses head to Puttaparthi daily (Rs 132, eight hours).

Private buses depart from the TP Area, opposite the bus stand.

TRAIN

Tirupathi station is well served by express trains. The reservation office (☎ 2225850; 🕒 8am-8pm Mon-Sat, 8am-2pm Sun) is across the street.

Getting Around

BUS

Tirumala Link buses run out of two bus stands in Tirupathi: next to the main bus stand and outside the train station. The scenic 18km trip to Tirumala takes one hour (Rs 44 return); if you don't mind heights, sit on the left side for views. A prepaid taxi is Rs 250.

WALKING

TTD has constructed probably the best footpath in India for pilgrims to walk up to Tirumala. It's about 15km and takes four to six hours. Leave your luggage at the toll gate at Alipiri near the Hanuman statue. It will be transported free to the reception centre. It's

AROUND TIRIMULA & TIRUPATHI

Alamelumangapuram

A visit to Tirumala isn't technically complete until you've paid respect to Venkateshwara's consort, Padmavathi Devi, at her less crowded temple in Tiruchanur, 5km from Tirumala. Legend has it that Padmavathi once appeared on a lotus in the tank here. Prepaid taxis from Tirupathi train station, 30km away, cost Rs 350.

Chandragiri Fort

Only a couple of buildings remain from this 15th-century fort (☎ 2276246; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; ⏰ 8am-6pm), 14km west of Tirupathi. Both the Rani Mahal and the Raja Mahal, which houses a small museum (⏰ 10am-5pm Sat-Thu), were constructed under Vijayanagar rule and resemble structures in Hampi's Royal Centre. There's a nightly sound-and-light show (admission Rs 30; ⏰ 8pm Mar-Oct, 7.30pm Nov-Feb), narrated by Bollywood stars. Buses for Chandragiri (Rs 6) leave from outside Tirupathi train station every 15 minutes. A prepaid taxi is Rs 250 return.

Sri Kalahasti

Around 36km east of Tirupathi, Sri Kalahasti is known for its Sri Kalahasteeswara Temple, which derives its name from the legend of three animals that worshipped Shiva: a snake, spider and elephant.

Sri Kalahasti is also, along with Machilipatnam near Vijayawada, a centre for the ancient art of kalamkari. These paintings are made with natural ingredients: the cotton is primed with myrabalam (resin) and cow's milk; figures are drawn with a pointed bamboo stick dipped in fermented jaggery and water; and the dyes are made from cow dung, ground seeds, plants and flowers. You can see the artists at work in the Agraharam neighbourhood, 2.5km from the bus stand.

Buses leave Tirupathi for Sri Kalahasti every 10 minutes (Rs 20, 45 minutes); a prepaid taxi is Rs 475 return.

THE GOD OF BIG THINGS

Many times a year, the population of Puttaparthi swells to more than 50,000. The drawcard, of course, is Sai Baba. Puttaparthi is his birthplace and where he established his main ashram, Prasanthi Nilayam.

It's difficult to overestimate the pulling power of this man who, aged 14, declared himself to be the reincarnation of Sai Baba, a saintly figure who died in 1918 (p804).

In November 2000 an estimated one million people gathered at the ashram to celebrate Sai Baba's 75th year. The massive gig resembled an Olympics opening ceremony. Sai Baba's elaborately adorned elephant, Sai Gita, led a procession of bands, dancing troupes and flag bearers from 165 countries. Many devotees regard Sai Baba as a true avatar.

Everything about Sai Baba is big: the Afro hairdo; the big name-devotees, including film stars, politicians and cricket superstar Sachin Tendulkar; and the money (millions of dollars) pumped into the nearby hospital, schools and university. And there's the big controversy. Allegations of sexual misconduct have led some devotees to lose faith. Others, however, regard such controversy as simply another terrestrial test for their avatar.

Getting There & Around

Puttaparthi is most easily reached from Bengaluru; eight KSRTC buses (deluxe/Volvo Rs 150/205, four hours) and six trains (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 145/351/478, three hours) head here daily. A Rajdhani train (3AC/2AC Rs 405/545, 2½ hours) runs four days a week. Booking for KSRTC buses is next to the bus station.

Uncomfortable APSRTC buses run to/from Tirupathi (Rs 132, eight hours, three daily) and Chennai (Rs 273, 12 hours, two daily), but for other destinations, the train's the way to go.

The bus station has a train reservation booth (⌚ 8am-11.30pm & 3-5.30pm Mon-Sat, 8am-2pm Sun). For Hyderabad, an overnight train goes daily to Kacheguda (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 230/618/875, 10 hours), and a Rajdhani express goes to Secunderabad four days a week (3AC/2AC Rs 910/1230, 8½ hours). Overnight train 8564 runs to Visakhapatnam (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 33/120/1283, 20 hours), stopping at Vijayawada. The daily Udyan Express (6530) heads to Mumbai (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 330/901/1283, 21 hours).

Indian Airlines flies erratically from Mumbai (US$121).

An autorickshaw to/from the train station is Rs 40.

LEPAKSHI

About 65km from Puttaparthi is Lepakshi, site of the Veerbhadra Temple. The town gets its name from the Ramayana: when demon Ravana kidnapped Rama's wife, Sita, the bird Jatayu fought him but fell, injured, at the site of the temple. Rama called to him to get up: 'Lepakshi' derives from the Sanskrit for 'Get up, bird'.

Look out for the 9m-long monolithic Nandi bull – India's largest – at the town's entrance. From here, you can see the temple's Naga-lingam, a lingam crowned with a spectacular seven-headed cobra. The temple is known for its unfinished Kalyana Mandapam (Marriage Hall), which depicts the wedding of Parvati and Shiva, and its Natyamandapa (Dance Hall), with its carvings of dancing gods. The temple's most stunning feature, though, are the Natyamandapa's ceiling paintings.

Ramana, an excellent guide, brings the temple to life (Rs 100 is an appreciated offering). Bring plenty of small change for the inner sanctum.

To get here, take a Puttaparthi–Bengaluru bus and alight at Kodakonda Checkpost. From there, take a Gorantla–Hindupur bus (Rs 6) or an autorickshaw (Rs 250 return) to Lepakshi. The local Puttaparthi–Gorantla bus also stops at Lepakshi. A private car from Puttaparthi is Rs 900.

Tamil Nadu

If thoughts of temples and tigers appeal, then Tamil Nadu – land of the Tamils and heartland of southern India – is the place to be. Long coastlines and forested mountains form stunning backdrops to this, the cradle of Dravidian civilisation. Manifestations of its ancient culture are everywhere, from vast temple compounds with steeply stepped, riotously coloured gopurams (gateway towers) to beautifully detailed rock carvings, and classical music and dance that are both complex and compelling. Pilgrims pour into the ancient sites of Kanchipuram, Chidambaram, Kumbakonam, Trichy (Tiruchirappalli), Thanjavur (Tanjore), Madurai, Kanyakumari and Rameswaram – far outnumbering tourists.

While only the very lucky few will see a tiger, the state's national parks and reserves remain important refuges for much of India's wildlife including elephants, several species of rare monkeys and gaurs (a type of bison). The historic hill stations of Ooty (Udhagamandalam, reached by the famous miniature train, and Kodaikanal are perfect bases for exploring and provide cool, calm, green contrast to the bustle of the cities.

The eastern coast fronting the Bay of Bengal has a few resorts and sleepy fishing villages, but Tamil Nadu isn't a beach destination and only Mamallapuram (Mahabalipuram), south of Chennai (Madras), attracts chilled-out tourists. The 2004 tsunami swept along this coast; rehabilitation was comparatively swift near tourist areas, but many local communities are still recovering.

HIGHLIGHTS

- Gorge on fresh seafood and explore some of South India's finest rock carvings in laid-back Mamallapuram (Mahabalipuram; p1044)
- Ride the toy train, stay in a Raj-era hotel and trek the hills around Ooty (Udhagamandalum; p1098)
- Experience a small corner of France in India and an early morning yoga session in Puducherry (Pondicherry p1057)
- Join the pilgrims and devotees filing into Madurai's Sri Meenakshi Temple (p1082), a riot of Dravidian sculpture and one of South India's finest
- Dust off the binoculars and field guides around Mudumalai National Park (p1104), where Tamil Nadu's best wildlife viewing is on your doorstep
- See local artisans practising their crafts in traditional workshops at DakshinaChitra (p1044), a remarkable cultural centre on the coast road south of Chennai (Madras)
- Watch the sun rise and set over two oceans at Kanyakumari (p1085), on the southernmost tip of the continent

History

It's thought the first Dravidians were part of early Indus civilisations and that they came south to the area about 1500 BC. By 300 BC the region was controlled by three major dynasties – Cholas in the east, Pandyas in the central area and Cheras in the west. This was the classical period of Tamil literature – the Sangam Age – that continued until around AD 300.

The domains of these three dynasties changed many times over the centuries. The Pallava dynasty became influential, particularly in the 7th and 8th centuries, when it constructed many of the monuments at Mamallapuram (p1044). Although all of these dynasties were engaged in continual skirmishes, their steady patronage of the arts served to consolidate and expand Dravidian civilisation.

In 1640 the British negotiated the use of Madraspatnam (now Chennai) as a trading post. Subsequent interest by the French, Dutch and Danes led to continual conflict and, finally, almost total domination by the British, when the region became known as the Madras Presidency. Small pocketed areas, including Puducherry (Pondicherry) and Karaikal, remained under French control.

Many Tamils played a significant part in India's struggle for Independence, which was finally won in 1947. In 1956 the Madras Presidency was disbanded and Tamil Nadu was established as an autonomous state.

Information

The state tourism body is Tamil Nadu Tourism (www.tamilnadutourism.org) with tourist offices of varying uselessness in most cities and large towns around the state. It also runs a fairly average chain of hotels.

ACCOMMODATION

Accommodation over Rs 200 in Tamil Nadu (but not Puducherry) is subject to a government 'luxury' tax – 5% on rooms between Rs 200 and 500, 10% on rooms between Rs 501 and 1000 and 12.5% on rooms over Rs 1000. There's often an additional 'service tax' at upmarket hotels. Prices throughout this chapter do not include tax, unless stated otherwise. There are few surprises with hotels in Tamil Nadu – the exceptions are Puducherry, which has some lovely heritage hotels, and Ooty and Kodaikanal which have everything from forest lodges to Raj-era mansions.

PERMITS

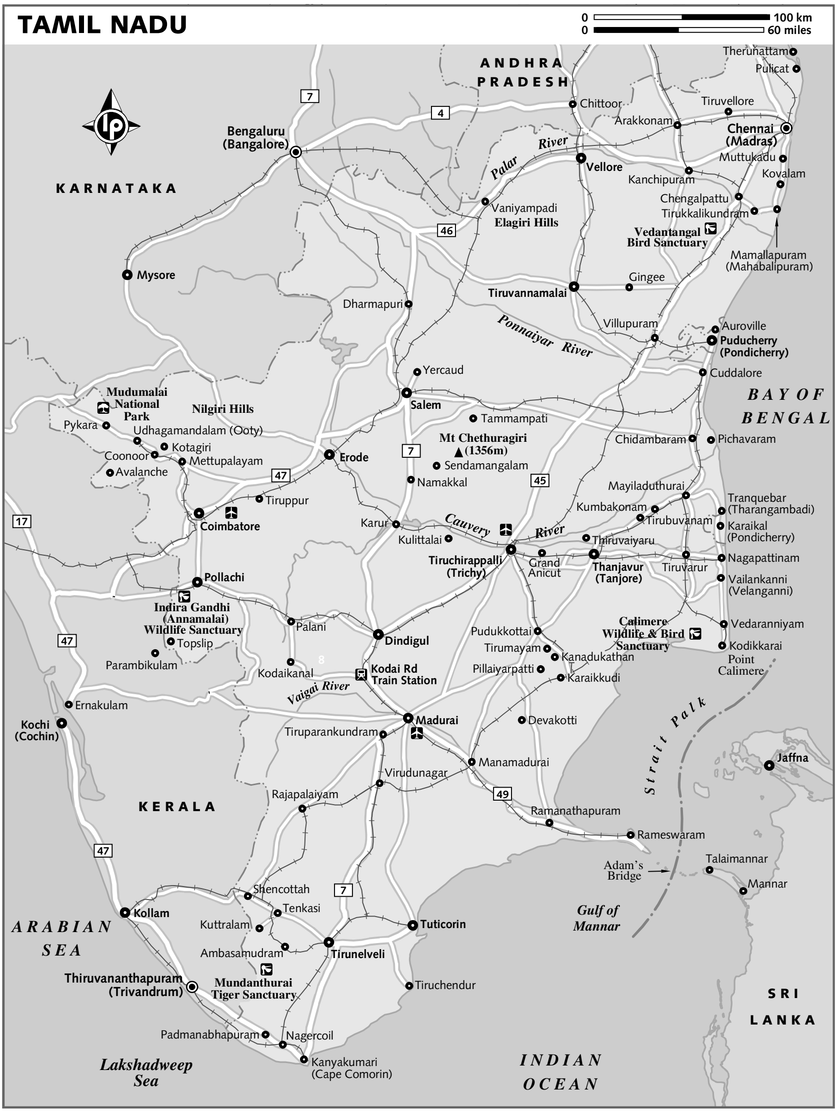
As well as for the areas listed below, permits are required for trekking in some areas of the Nilgiri Hills around Mudumalai National Park (see p1104). Reputable guides should have the required permits for tourist trekking; researchers and academics need to apply separately.

Conservator of Forests (☎ 24321139; 8th fl, Panangal Bldg, Saidapet, Chennai) The Conservator of Forests issues permits for all areas other than the Vedantangal Bird Sanctuary, but will only do so for researchers.

Wildlife Warden's Office (WWO; Map pp1030-1; ☎ 24321471; 4th fl, DMS office, 259 Anna Salai, Teynampet, Chennai) Issues permits in advance for accommodation at Vedantangal Bird Sanctuary.

Dangers & Annoyances

Ambling through temples is clearly a highlight of Tamil Nadu. Dealing with temple touts is not. Genuine guides exist and can greatly enhance your experience – a fair rate for a knowledgeable guide is about Rs 60 per hour – but you'll need to search them out. Many self-appointed guides demand big bucks in exchange for very little, often work as a front for nearby craft or tailor shops and, although they're widespread, Kanchipuram, Trichy and Madurai seem to be their breeding grounds. As always, get recommendations from other travellers, question the knowledge of anyone offering guide services and agree on a price before you set out.



CHENNAI (MADRAS)

☎ 044 / pop 6.4 million

Chennai has neither the cosmopolitan, prosperous air of Mumbai (Bombay), the optimistic buzz of Bengaluru (Bangalore) or the historical drama of Delhi. It's muggy, polluted, hot as hell and difficult to get around. Traditional tourist attractions are few. Even the movie stars are, as one Chennaiker put it, 'not that hot'.

But the locals are a little friendlier than average here, the streets a little wider and, in spite of its booming IT, business-outsourcing and auto industries, the pace much slower than in most Indian cities half its size. Chennai is so modest you wouldn't even know it's an economic powerhouse, much less a queen of showbiz: India's fourth-largest city is also its most humble.

Chennai (formerly Madras) prefers to quietly hold onto tradition, thank you very much. Even its tendency to spread out – the city sprawls over 70 sq km with no real centre – seems like an attachment to the small coastal villages from which it descends. And it remains deeply conservative – the lungi (a type of sarong) is very much in fashion, alcohol

FESTIVALS IN TAMIL NADU

Many of Tamil Nadu's most colourful festivals revolve around temples – there's something going on somewhere in the state all year round.

International Yoga Festival (4-7 Jan; Puducherry (Pondicherry), p1057) Puducherry's ashrams and yoga culture are put on show with workshops, classes and music and dance events. Held throughout the city, the event attracts yoga masters from all over India.

Pongal (mid-Jan; statewide) As the rice boils over the new clay pots, this festival symbolises the prosperity and abundance a fruitful harvest brings. For many, the celebrations begin with temple rituals, followed by family gatherings. Later it's the animals, especially cows, which are honoured for their contribution to the harvest.

Music festival (Jan; Thiruvaiyaru, p1073) Held near Thanjavur, this music festival is held in honour of the saint and composer Thyagaraja.

Teppam Float Festival (Jan/Feb; Madurai, p1080) A popular event held on the full moon of the Tamil month of Thai, when statues of deities are floated on the huge Mariamman Teppakkulam Tank.

Natyanjali Dance Festival (Feb/Mar; Chidambaram, p1065) The five-day festival attracts performers from all over the country to the Nataraja Temple to celebrate Nataraja (Shiva) – the Lord of Dance.

Arubathimoovar Festival (Mar/Apr; Chennai, p1026) A colourful one-day festival when bronze statues of the 63 saints of Shiva are paraded through the streets of Mylapore.

Chithrai Festival (Apr/May; Madurai, p1080) The main event on Madurai's busy festival calendar is this 14-day event that celebrates the marriage of Meenakshi to Sundareshwara (Shiva). The deities are wheeled around the Sri Meenakshi Temple in massive chariots that form part of long, colourful processions.

Summer festivals (May-Jun; Ooty, p1098 & Kodaikanal, p1089) Tamil Nadu's hill stations both hold similar festivals which feature boat races on the lake, horse racing (in Ooty), flower shows and music.

Bastille Day (14 Jul; Puducherry, p1057) Street parades and a bit of French pomp and ceremony are all part of the fun at this celebration.

Avanimoolam (Aug/Sep; Madurai, p1080) Marks the coronation of Sundareshwar, when temple chariots are exuberantly hauled around the city.

Karthikai Deepam Festival (Nov/Dec; statewide) Held during full moon, Tamil Nadu's 'festival of lights' is celebrated throughout the state, with earthenware lamps and firecrackers, but the best place to see it is Tiruvannamalai (see the boxed text, p1056), where the legend began.

Vaikunta Ekadasi (Paradise Festival; mid-Dec; Trichy (Tiruchirappalli), p1073) This 21-day festival brings the Sri Ranganathaswamy Temple to life when the celebrated Vaishnavaite text, Tiruvaimozhi, is recited before an image of Vishnu.

Festival of Carnatic Music & Dance (mid-Dec–mid-Jan; Chennai, p1026) One of the largest of its type in the world, this festival is a celebration of Tamil music and dance.

Mamallapuram Dance Festival (Dec-Jan; Mamallapuram, p1044) A four-week dance festival showcasing dances from all over India, with many performances on an open-air stage against the imposing backdrop of Arjuna's Penance. Dances include the Bharata Natyam (Tamil Nadu), Kuchipudi (Andhra Pradesh) tribal dance, Kathakali (Kerala drama), puppet shows and classical music. Performances are held only from Friday to Sunday.

is frowned upon and religious devotion is going strong.

With only a handful of tourist sights, Chennai doesn't demand too much of your time. But poke around the markets of George Town or Theagaraya Nagar, take a stroll along Marina Beach at sunset, and get a little taste of village life in the city.

HISTORY

The Chennai area has always attracted seafarers, spice traders and cloth merchants. More than 2000 years ago, its residents engaged with Chinese, Greek, Phoenician, Roman and Babylonian traders. The Portuguese would later arrive in the 16th century, followed by the Dutch. The British, initially content to purchase spices and other goods from the Dutch, decided to end their monopoly in 1599, when the Dutch increased the price of pepper. In 1639, the British East India Company established a settlement in the fishing village of Madraspatnam and completed Fort St George in 1653. George Town was granted municipal charter in 1688 by James II, making it India's oldest municipality.

In the 18th century, the supremacy of the British East India Company was challenged by the French. Robert Clive (Clive of India), a key player in the British campaign, recruited an army of 2000 sepoys (Indian soldiers in British service) and launched a series of military expeditions which developed into the Carnatic Wars. In 1756 the French withdrew to Pondicherry (now Puducherry), leaving the relieved British to develop Fort St George.

In the 19th century, the city became the seat of the Madras presidency, one of the four divisions of British Imperial India. After Independence, it continued to grow into what is now a significant southern gateway.

ORIENTATION

Bordered on the east by the Bay of Bengal, Chennai is a combination of many small districts. George Town, a jumble of narrow streets, bazaars and the court buildings, is in the north, near the harbour. To the southwest are the major thoroughfare of Anna Salai (Mount Rd) and the two main train stations: Egmore, for most destinations in Tamil Nadu, and Central, for interstate trains. The area around Egmore station is a budget-hotel district, as is Triplicane, at the north end of Marina Beach.

TOP FIVE TEMPLES

Tamil Nadu is nirvana for anyone wanting to explore South Indian temple culture and architecture. Many are important places of pilgrimage for Hindus, where daily puja (offering or prayer) rituals and colourful festivals will leave a deep impression on even the most temple-weary traveller. Others stand out for the stunning architecture, soaring gopurams (gateway towers) and intricately carved, pillared mandapas (pavilions in front of a temple). Almost all have free admission. There are so many that it pays to be selective, but the choice is subjective. Here's our top five.

- Sri Meenakshi Temple, Madurai (p1082)
- Arunachaleswar Temple, Tiruvannamalai (p1056)
- Brihadishwara Temple, Thanjavur (p1071)
- Rock Fort Temple, Trichy (Tiruchirappalli; p1074)
- Nataraja Temple, Chidambaram (p1065)

STREET NAME CHANGES

It's not only the city that's been renamed. Many streets had official name changes, only some of which stuck. As if that weren't enough, building numbers changed, too. Most addresses have an 'old' and 'new' number, generally written as new/old.

Old name	New name

DANGERS & ANNOYANCES

Getting around is likely to be your biggest problem in Chennai. Autorickshaw drivers are tough to bargain with (meters aren't used) and may dispute an agreed-upon fare on arrival. Avoid giving money up front, even if you've hired the auto for the day.

Drivers may offer Rs 50 one-hour 'sightseeing' rides to anywhere in the city, but usually this means you'll be ferried to craft emporiums: don't fall for it.

If you have a serious problem with a driver, mentioning a call to the traffic police (☎ 103) can defuse the conflict. See p1043 for details on other modes of transport.

SIGHTS

Egmore & Central Chennai

GOVERNMENT MUSEUM

Housed across several British-built buildings known as the Pantheon Complex, this excellent museum (Map p1034; ☎ 28193238; www.chennaimuseum.org; 486 Pantheon Rd; Indian/foreigner/student Rs 15/250/75, camera/video Rs 200/500; 9.30am-5pm Sat-Thu) is Chennai's best.

The main building has a fine archaeological section representing all the major South Indian periods including Chola, Vijayanagar, Hoysala and Chalukya in sculpture and temple art. Further along is a fascinating natural history and zoology section with a motley collection of skeletons (including a blue whale and Indian elephant) and stuffed birds and animals from around the world. Look out for the desiccated cat in a glass case!

In Gallery 3, the bronze gallery has a superb and beautifully presented collection of Chola art. Among the impressive pieces is the bronze of Ardhanariswara, the androgynous incarnation of Shiva and Parvati, and the numerous representations of Natesa or Nataraja, the four-armed dancing Shiva stomping on a demon.

The same ticket gets you into the National Art Gallery, in Building 5 to the left of the main entrance. It features an excellent collection of 10th- to 18th-century Mughal, Rajasthani and Deccan artworks. On either side of the gallery are the children's museum and an interesting modern art gallery.

VIVEKANANDAR ILLAM

The Vivekananda House (Map pp1030-1; ☎ 28446188; Kamarajar Salai, Triplicane; adult/child Rs 2/1; 10am-noon & 3-7pm Thu-Tue) is fascinating not only for the displays on the famous 'wandering monk', but also for the building in which it's housed. The semicircular seafront structure was formerly known as the Ice House and was once used to store massive ice blocks transported by ship from North America. Swami Vivekananda stayed here in 1897 on his return from the USA and preached his ascetic philosophy to adoring crowds. The museum now houses a collection of photographs and memorabilia from the swami's life, a gallery of religious historical paintings and the 'meditation room' where Vivekananda stayed.

VALLUVAR KOTTAM

This memorial (Map pp1030-1; Valluvar Kottam High Rd, Kodambakkam; 9am-7.30pm) honours the Tamil poet Thiruvalluvar and his classic work, the Thirukural. Thiruvalluvar, a weaver by trade, lived around the 1st century BC in present-day Chennai, and apparently wrote the poem when asked to record his eminent verbal teachings. The Thirukural suggests ways to contemplate life's enigmas and strategies for right understanding and conduct. Today, the poem is a moral code for millions, and Thiruvalluvar is considered a saint. The three-level memorial replicates ancient Tamil architecture and contains inscriptions of the Thirukural's 1330 couplets.

South Chennai

The following sights appear on the Chennai (Madras) map, pp1030–1.

Chennai's most active temple, the ancient Shiva Kapaleeshwarar Temple (Kutchery Rd, Mylapore; 4am-noon & 4-8pm) is constructed in the Dravidian style and displays the architectural elements – rainbow-colour gopuram, mandapas (pavilions in front of a temple) and a huge tank – found in the famous temple cities of Tamil Nadu.

The tranquil, leafy grounds of the Ramakrishna Mutt Temple (RK Mutt Rd; 4.30-11.45am & 3-9pm, puja 8am) are a world away from the chaos outside. Orange-clad monks glide around and there's a reverential feel here. The temple itself is a handsome shrine open to followers of any religion for meditation.

Built in 1504, then rebuilt in neogothic style in 1893, San Thome Cathedral (☎ 24985455) is a soaring Roman Catholic church between Kapaleeshwarar Temple and Marina Beach. In the basement is a chapel housing the tomb of St Thomas the Apostle (Doubting Thomas).

During an early morning or evening stroll along the 13km sandy stretch of Marina Beach you'll pass cricket matches, kids flying kites, fortune tellers, fish markets and families enjoying the sea breeze. Don't swim here – strong rips make it dangerous. About 2km further south in Besant Nagar, Elliot's Beach is a more affluent place, popular with young couples.

Between the Adyar River and the coast, the 100 hectares of the Theosophical Society (Adyar Bridge Rd; 8-10am & 2-5pm Mon-Fri, 8-10am Sat) provide a peaceful retreat from the city. The grounds contain a church, mosque, Buddhist shrine and Hindu temple, as well as a huge variety of native and introduced trees, including a 400-year-old banyan tree. The Adyar

Library (⏰ 9am-5pm) here has a huge collection of books on religion and philosophy. If you're interested in the Theosophical Society's philosophy, call into the public relations office and chat with the director.

To the west, near Guindy, is the Periyar Science & Technology Centre (☎ 24416751; admission Rs 15; ⏰ 10am-5.30pm). You can learn your weight on Pluto and other titbits from its kitschy science exhibits. The Birla Planetarium (admission Rs 20; ⏰ shows 10.45am, 1.15pm & 3.45pm) is next door.

George Town

The following sights appear on the Chennai (Madras) map, pp1030–1.

FORT ST GEORGE

Built around 1653 by the British East India Company, the fort (⏰ 10am-5pm) has undergone many alterations over the years. Inside the vast perimeter walls is now a precinct housing the Secretariat & Legislative Assembly, so there's plenty of daily activity here but not much of historical interest. The 46m-high flagstaff at the front is a mast salvaged from a 17th-century shipwreck. The main entrance to the fort is on Kamarajar Salai (near the flagstaff).

The Fort Museum (☎ 25670389; Indian/foreigner Rs 2/100, video Rs 25; ⏰ 10am-5.30pm Sat-Thu), in the old Exchange Building near the fort entrance, has military memorabilia from the British and French East India Companies, as well as the Raj and Muslim administrations. There's a scale model of the fort in Gallery 2 and some fine prints of early colonial Madras upstairs.

St Mary's Church, completed in 1680, was the first English church in Madras and India's oldest surviving British church.

HIGH COURT

This red Indo-Saracenic structure (1892) at Parry's Corner is George Town's main landmark. It's said to be the largest judicial building in the world after the Courts of London. You can wander around the court buildings and sit in on sessions.

Other Sights

LITTLE MOUNT & ST THOMAS MOUNT

It's believed that from around AD 58, St Thomas lived in hiding at Little Mount (Chinnamalai; Saidapet). The cave still bears what some believe to be Thomas' handprint, left when he escaped through an opening that miraculously appeared. Three kilometres on, St Thomas Mount (Parangi Malai) is thought to be the site of Thomas' martyrdom in AD 72. Little Mount and St Thomas Mount are about 1km from the Saidapet and St Thomas Mount Mass Rapid Transport System (MRTS) stations, respectively.

WORKERS IN THE SHADOWS

They leave their slum dwellings early to begin work in the city by 6am. They move swiftly and silently along the city streets, keeping to the shadows and mostly working in pairs. The waste-pickers – mostly women, sometimes children – spend up to 10 hours a day rummaging through domestic and industrial waste and separating it into bags of metal, plastic, paper, cloth and other recyclables. Usually they sell their bundles to middlemen who then sell to recycling companies. For this dangerous and dirty work they earn around Rs 45 a day. With assistance from NGOs, some waste-pickers have formed cooperatives, bypassing the middlemen and boosting their earning potential.

ENFIELD FACTORY

Motorcycle fans will enjoy visiting the famous Enfield factory (☎ 42230245; www.royalenfield.com; Tiruvottiyur), 17km north of Chennai, where bikes have been made since 1955. Half-hour tours run on Saturday at 9.30am and cost Rs 500.

ACTIVITIES

Go for a 45-minute abhyangam (oil treatment; Rs 500) or an extended Ayurvedic programme at Ayush (Map pp1030-1; ☎ 65195195; www.leverayush.com; D Khader Nawaz Khan Rd, Nungambakkam; ⏰ 7am-7pm).

COURSES

Language

Dakshin Barath Hindi Prachar Sabha (Map pp1030-1; ☎ 24341824; Thanikachalam Rd, Theagaraya Nagar) Hindi courses in all levels.

International Institute of Tamil Studies (☎ 22540992; www.ulakaththamizh.org; Central Polytechnic Campus, Adyar) Three-month courses in Tamil. Can recommend teachers for shorter-term study.

Meditation

Dhamma Setu (Vipassana Meditation Centre; ☎ 24780953; info@setu.dhamma.org; www.dhamma.org; Pazhan Thandalam Rd, Thirumudivakkam) Intensive 10-day courses in the SN Goenka tradition of vipassana meditation. See p100 for more details.

Mahabodhi Society of Sri Lanka (Map p1034; ☎ 28192458; 12 Kennet Lane, Egmore) Dhamma talks, meditation and special pujas (offerings or prayers) on full-moon and other days.

Vivekanandar Illam (Map pp1030-1; ☎ 28446188; Kamarajar Salai, Triplicane) Free one-hour classes on Wednesday nights.

Yoga

Ayush (Map pp1030-1; ☎ 65195195; www.leverayush.com; D Khader Nawaz Khan Rd, Nungambakkam; ⏰ 6-11am & 5-8pm) Courses for 21 days (Rs 1200) or one hour (Rs 150).

Vivekanandar Illam (Map pp1030-1; ☎ 28446188; Kamarajar Salai, Triplicane) Eight-week sessions are Rs 500. Call ahead to take a single class.

TOURS

TTDC (p1032) conducts half-day city tours (Rs 120) and day trips to Mamallapuram (Rs 330), Puducherry (Rs 400) and Tirupathi (Rs 640). Book at ITDC (p1032) or TTDC.

SLEEPING

Egmore, on and around Kennet Lane, is good for budget accommodation and all the touts and chaos that go with it. It's also convenient for the train stations. Many prefer the (slightly) less chaotic Triplicane – budget and midrange places huddle around Triplicane High Rd. The top hotels are scattered around the quieter areas south and west of the centre. Places fill up in peak season (December to February), so call ahead.

Budget

EGMORE

Salvation Army Red Shield Guest House (Map p1034; ☎ 25321821; 15 Ritherdon Rd; dm/s/d Rs 80/300/350; ❄) This popular cheapie in a quiet spot north of Egmore Station has helpful staff and ageing but clean bathrooms (with bucket hot water for dorm-dwellers). Entrance is on BKN Ave.

Hotel Regent (Map p1034; ☎ 28191801; 11 Kennet Lane; s/d Rs 200/315) In the centre of Kennet Lane's chaos, but set back from the road, the Regent is almost tranquil. Very clean rooms surround a shady, freshly swept courtyard.

Hotel Impala Continental (Map p1034; ☎ 28191423; 12 Gandhi Irwin Rd; s/d incl tax from Rs 220/372) Impala is one of Egmore's better-value budget places, with clean, spacious double rooms. You'll find it full if you don't book ahead.

Krishna Park (Map p1034; ☎ 28190026; 61 Halls Rd; s/d from Rs 325/550; ❄) Near the station but away from its bustle, it has special touches such as stainless-steel buckets and towel racks in the bathroom, smiling staff, and glow-in-the-dark stars on the ceiling of Room 303.

TRIPLICANE

Broadlands Lodge (Map p1034; ☎ 28545573; broadlandshotel@yahoo.com; 18 Vallabha Agraharam St; s/d with shared bathroom from Rs 200/300, with private bathroom from Rs 300/350) A longtime travellers' hang-out, Broadlands Lodge is falling apart and not very clean, but the old colonial-style place ranks number one for personality. Rooms are set around a leafy central courtyard, and the upper-storey rooms No 43 and 44 are spectacular. The shared bathrooms are dank and hot water is by bucket.

Paradise Guest House (Map p1034; ☎ 28594252; paradisegh@hotmail.com; 17 Vallabha Agraharam St; s/d/tr from Rs 250/300/400;) With gleaming tiles, a breezy (but unfinished) rooftop and friendly staff, we thought this was the best value in Triplicane – even though hot water is by the bucket. Some rooms don't have much view so ask to see a few; those on the upper floors are newer.

Hotel Himalaya (Map p1034; ☎ 28547522; 54 Triplicane High Rd; s/d/tr Rs 350/400/550;) This is a great budget/midrange choice with plain but comfortable rooms, a 24-hour internet café and travel desk. Some effort has been made at aesthetics: cheesy landscape photos pepper the walls, and a blue sky is painted on the elevator interior.

Other recommendations:

Thaj Regency (Map p1034; ☎ 28529524; 300 Triplicane High Rd; s/d from Rs 200/265;)

Hotel Comfort (Map p1034; ☎ 28587661; www.hotelcomfort.com; 22 Vallabha Agraharam; s/d from Rs 400/500;)

EGMORE

Hotel Chandra Park (Map p1034; ☎ 28191177; www.hotelchandrapark.com; 9 Gandhi Irwin Rd; s/d with AC incl breakfast from Rs 550/750;) The new Chandra Park is priced mysteriously low. The lobby is classy, with lotus flowers floating in a pool and a mosaic of a Bharata Natyam dancer. Standard rooms are small but have clean towels and tight white sheets. Wisely set back from the road.

YWCA International Guest House (Map p1034; ☎ 25324234; ywcaigh@indiainfo.com; Poonamallee High Rd; s/d/tr from Rs 650/800/1100;) The YWCAIGH has a monastic feel to it, with off-the-charts cleanliness, a painting of Jesus in the hallway, and no TVs in rooms but, rather, a cosy hallway TV lounge. Geese amble around the leafy compound, which is, unbelievably, just near the train station.

Hotel Ashoka (Map p1034; ☎ 28553377; www.ballalgrouphotels.com; 47 Pantheon Rd; s/d incl breakfast from Rs 800/900;) If 1950s Miami and a spaceship had a baby, it would be the Hotel Ashoka. Rooms are old-school, with a thousand layers of white paint around the windows and dated room-number plaques, while cottages (single/double Rs 1700/2250) have a lounge ambience: lush red carpeting, fridges and cocoonlike tubs. The compound includes an 'ice cream park' with a counter built around a big tree. Chennai's funkiest.

Other recommendations:

New Victoria Hotel (Map p1034; ☎ 28193638; www.newvictoriahotel.com; 3 Kennet Lane; s/d incl breakfast from Rs 975/1250;) Good deluxe rooms.

Hotel New Park Plaza (Map p1034; ☎ 30777777; parkplaza@eth.net; 29 Whannels Rd; s/d incl breakfast from Rs 1500/2000;) Has a rooftop bar-restaurant and just underwent a mega-renovation.

Vestin Park (Map p1034; ☎ 28527171; www.vestinpark.com; 39 Montieth Rd; s/d incl breakfast from Rs 2000/2500;) Fancy for the price; it's a 'business star' hotel.

TRIPLICANE

Hotel Orchid Inn (Map p1034; ☎ 28522555; 19 Woods Rd; s/d from Rs 600/700;) A short walk from Anna Salai, the Orchid has slightly more style than most midrange places. Rooms have interesting details such as ceiling moulding trimmed in lavender or gold, and bathrooms have newish blue tile (and bucket hot water). The 'suite', ambitiously named 'Cloud 9' (singles/doubles Rs 1000/1250), has purple-and-coral walls and tubular furniture.

MYLAPORE & NUNGAMBAKKAM

New Woodlands Hotel (Map pp1030-1; ☎ 28113111; www.newwoodlands.com; 72-75 Dr Radhakrishnan Salai; s/d from Rs 550/1050;) A sprawling complex with 170 rooms and a certain eccentric character, New Woodlands is a Chennai institution. The doubles have seen better days, but singles are a good deal, with balconies overlooking the compound's many trees. Rooms have wi-fi connectivity.

Elements Hostel (Map pp1030-1; ☎ 42142552; www.elementshostel.com; 26A Wallace Garden, 3rd St; dm/s/d incl breakfast from Rs 375/1000/1800;) It's pricey for a hostel, but this is a 'boutique hostel' and you're paying for the amenities: spotless, homy bathrooms with 24-hour hot water, kitchen access, cellphones for rent, an internet centre and a spot in Nungambakkam's chichi shopping area. Plus, it has a swing set. It's a little hard to find; look for the basketball net out front.

Top End

The following hotels have central AC, multicuisine restaurant and bar, and they accept credit cards. Unless stated otherwise, checkout is noon.

Residency Towers (Map pp1030-1; ☎ 28156363; www.theresidency.com; Sir Theagaraya Nagar Rd; s/d from Rs 3700/4200;) At this price, it's like Residency Towers doesn't know what a good thing it has going: five-star elegance with a lot more personality – and 24-hour checkout. Every floor is decorated differently, but rooms all have sliding doors in front of windows to block out light and noise, dark wood furniture and thoughtful touches.

Raintree (Map pp1030-1; ☎ 42252525; www.raintreehotels.com; 120 St Mary's Rd, Mylapore; s/d from US$160/170;) At the eco-friendly Raintree, floors are made of bamboo (which is an annual), wastewater is treated and used for gardening, and electricity conservation holds pride of place. But then the sleek, minimalist rooms are some of the most stylish and comfortable around, and the rooftop pool (which doubles as insulation) has a gorgeous wooden terrace with views of the sea.

Also recommended:

Taj Connemara (Map p1034; ☎ 66000000; www.tajhotels.com; Binny Rd; s & d from US$215-240;) Built in the Raj era, it still retains some regal charm.

ITC Hotel Park Sheraton & Towers (Map pp1030-1; ☎ 24994101; www.itcwelcomgroup.com; TTK Rd, Alwarpet; s/d from US$230/255;)

EATING

Chennai has a good range of 'meals' joints, which serve thalis (traditional South Indian 'all-you-can-eat' meals) for lunch and dinner, and tiffin (snacks) such as idlis (rice dumplings) and dosas (lentil-flour pancakes) the rest of the day. It's tempting – and feasible – to eat every meal at one of Chennai's 17 bustling Saravana Bhavans, which you can count on for quality vegetarian food.

The Mylapore area has many good independent restaurants, so head there if you're looking for something more refined.

Restaurants

EGMORE

Vasanta Bhavan (Map p1034; 33 Gandhi Irwin Rd; mains Rs 40-60; 5am-11pm;) Excellent 'meals' (Rs 30). The older Vasantha Bhavan down the street at No 10 is not as good but has more charm and also sweets.

Ponnusamy Hotel (Map p1034; Wellington Estate, 24 Ethiraj Rd; mains Rs 40-85; lunch & dinner) This well-known nonveg place serves curry, biryani (steamed rice with meat or vegetables) and Chettinad specialities. Unusual dishes include pigeon fry and rabbit masala.

Kitchen K (Map p1034; 10 Montieth Rd; mains Rs 50-95; lunch & dinner) Earth tones, clay pots and wrought-iron chairs make for a soothing ambience at this café serving Hyderabadi and northern dishes. Cake Walk (open 10am to 10pm) next door has tiramisu, apple pie and black forest cake, among other indulgences (Rs 40).

Hotel Saravana Bhavan Egmore (Map p1034; 21 Kennet Lane; 6am-10.30pm); George Town (Map pp1030-1; NSC Bose Rd (Broadway Chandra Rd); Mylapore (Map pp1030-1; 101 Dr Radhakrishnan Salai; 6am-11.30pm); 7am-11pm); Thousand Lights (Map p1034; 293 Peter's Rd; lunch & dinner); Triplicane (Map p1034; Shanthi Theatre Complex, 48 Anna Salai; 7am-11pm) Dependably delish, 'meals' at the Saravana Bhavans run around Rs 50, though the Mylapore locale has some 'special meals' for Rs 95 and up. The Thousand Lights branch is more upscale, with an Rs 160 buffet and silver cutlery.

TRIPLICANE

Maharaja Restaurant (Map p1034; 207 Triplicane High Rd; mains Rs 25-40; 6am-11pm) Maharaja is a popular veg joint for 'meals' (Rs 22) and early morning tea and idlis.

Hotel Comfort (Map p1034; 22 Vallabha Agraharam; mains Rs 30-100; dinner) The menu is typical Indian and Chinese, but the rooftop garden is cosy and relaxed, with lots of plants around and great views. You can get a cold beer here, too.

THOUSAND LIGHTS & GOPALAPURAM

Gyan Vaishnava Punjabi Dhaba (Map p1034; 260 Anna Salai; mains Rs 40-100; lunch & dinner) When asked about his excellent pure-veg Punjabi, Jain and other northern dishes, Mr Vaishnava opened his arms and said, 'I'm giving quality… with love.' And that's the truth.

Gallopin' Gooseberry (Map p1034; ☎ 23450872; 1st fl, 11 Greams Rd; dishes Rs 75-125; 11am-11pm) This American diner–style place does fab Cajun, mushroom and tikka burgers (around Rs 85), as well as pasta and sandwiches. It also delivers. The Fruit Shop next door has exotic juices and shakes (Rs 10 to 70).

Amethyst (Map p1034; ☎ 28353581; Padmavathi Rd; light meals Rs 85-200; ⏲ 10am-9.30pm) Sitting on the patio amid the gardens of this heritage house (see also p1040) will make you feel like someone else entirely. Tea comes with cucumber-and-mint-chutney sandwiches at teatime (Rs 125; 5pm to 7pm).

MYLAPORE

Amaravathi (Map pp1030-1; ☎ 28116416; cnr Cathedral & TTK Rds; mains Rs 50-95; ⏲ 11am-3.30pm & 7-11pm) Amaravathi serves hot Andhran specialities on banana leaves. Try the biryani or mango prawn masala (an Andhran interpretation of a Keralan classic; Rs 85), but we'd stay away from the mutton-bone soup.

Coconut Lagoon (Map pp1030-1; ☎ 42020428; cnr Cathedral & TTK Rds; mains Rs 55-200; ⏲ noon-3pm & 7-11.45pm) Excellent Keralan and Goan fare with a focus on seafood delicacies, such as kari meen polli chathu (fish masala steamed in banana leaf).

Zara's (Map pp1030-1; ☎ 28111462; 74 Cathedral Rd; tapas Rs 65-195; ⏲ 1-3pm & 6.30-11pm) An ultra-cool tapas bar with a genuine Spanish flavour, it has everything from squid and olives to tortilla and sangria. Make reservations on weekends. See also right.

Benjarong (Map pp1030-1; ☎ 24322640; 537 TTK Rd; mains Rs 130-400; ⏲ 12.15-2.45pm & 7.15-11.30pm) From the finely crafted furniture and calming ambience to the attentive service and superbly presented food, this Thai restaurant is an experience. Most mains are around Rs 200, and the three-course special lunch (Rs 158 to 230) will make you feel like royalty.

Other spots:

Romallee (Map pp1030-1; cnr Cathedral & TTK Rds; mains Rs 45-100; ⏲ 6-11pm) Open-air Hyderabadi barbecue.

EcoCafé (Map pp1030-1; Chamiers Rd; mains Rs 100-140; ⏲ 8am-10.30pm) So-so food in an atmospheric garden, under arty lamps hanging from an almond tree.

Don Pepe (Map pp1030-1; ☎ 28110413; 73 Cathedral Rd; mains Rs 120-180; ⏲ noon-3pm & 6-11.30pm) Classy Mexican.

Quick Eats

It's OK to love ghee.

Grand Sweets (Map pp1030-1; 24 Gandhi Nagar 2nd Main Rd, Adyar; ⏲ 9am-7.30pm) Chennai's favourite sweets.

Suriya Sweets (Map pp1030-1; 66 1st Main Rd, RA Puram; ⏲ 6.30am-10.30pm) Chennai's second-favourite sweets, with an organic veggie market.

Self-Catering

Nilgiri Dairy Farm (Map pp1030-1; ☎ 28110049; 103 Dr Radhakrishnan Salai; ⏲ 9.30am-8pm, closed Tue) A great supermarket.

Spencer's Daily (Map p1034; ☎ 42140784; Spencer Plaza, Phase I, Anna Salai; ⏲ 9.30am-9pm)

24-Lettered Mantra (Map pp1030-1; ☎ 24618400; 11 Vishwanathan St, RA Puram; ⏲ 9.30am-1pm & 3-8pm Mon-Sat) It's out of the way, but this little shop has all-organic cooking staples and spices.

Jam Bazaar (Map p1034; cnr Ellis Rd & Bharathi Salai) The colourful way to get fruit, vegetables and spices.

DRINKING

Cafés

Chennai is very much in the throes of India's cappuccino addiction.

Café Coffee Day (coffee Rs 20-50; ⏲ 10am-11pm) Egmore (Map p1034; Alsa Mall, Montieth Rd); Nungambakkam (Map pp1030-1; Nungambakkam High Rd)

Barista (Map pp1030-1; Rosy Towers, Nungambakkam High Rd; D Khader Nawaz Khan Rd; coffee Rs 20-50; ⏲ 7.30am-11.30pm)

Mocha (Map pp1030-1; D Khader Nawaz Khan Rd; coffee Rs 20-180; ⏲ 11am-11pm) The young and beautiful go to Mocha for coffee, hookahs (Rs 150 to 325) and snacks (Rs 50 to 150) in exceedingly arty surrounds. Lovely outdoor garden.

Bars & Nightclubs

Chennai's nightlife scene is on the move but it's no Bengaluru or Mumbai. Bars and clubs are legally supposed to close at midnight (though the clubs occasionally stay open later), and are restricted to hotels. Exceptions are the seedy, government-operated 'wine shops', where men consume cheap local rum.

Some midrange hotels have AC bars with cold beers for Rs 120. Try the rooftop bars at Hotel Comfort (p1037) or New Park Plaza (p1037) and Tropicana Bar at New Victoria Hotel (p1037).

Nightclubs charge a cover of Rs 300 to 500 on weekends (or even weekdays), and gents will require a lady chaperone to enter.

Zara's (Map pp1030-1; ☎ 28111462; 74 Cathedral Rd; cocktails Rs 225-325; ⏲ 1-3pm & 6.30-11pm) Where the cool people come on weekends for tapas (see left), sangria, house-infused vodka (jalapeno, almond, cinnamon) and inventive mocktails. Dress nice, guys: no shorts or sandals allowed.

Bike & Barrel (Map pp1030-1; Residency Towers, Sir Theagaraya Rd; ⏲ 11.30am-11.30pm) Better vibe than most bars; walls full of memorabilia, barrels for tables and a motorcycle hanging from the ceiling. Beer is Rs 140 and pub grub is available.

Dublin (Map pp1030-1; ITC Park Sheraton, 132 TTK Rd; 6pm-midnight, closed Tue) An Irish pub-club with three levels of dancing. Cover charged after 10pm.

Other clubs:

Pasha (Map pp1030-1; 42144000; The Park, 601 Anna Salai; 8-11.45pm Wed-Sat) Egyptian-themed.

Havana (Map pp1030-1; 42252525; Raintree, 120 St Mary's Rd, Mylapore; 7-11.30pm Tue-Sun) Cuban-themed, with cigars and everything.

ENTERTAINMENT

Classical Music & Dance

Music Academy (Map pp1030-1; 28115162; cnr TTK Rd & Dr Radhakrishnan Salai) This is Chennai's most popular public venue for Carnatic classical music and Bharata Natyam dance. Check newspapers for events. Expect to pay Rs 250 for a good seat, although many performances are free.

Kalakshetra Arts Village (24521169; kshetra@vsnl.com; Dr Muthulakshmi Rd, Tiruvanmiyu; 10am-6pm) Founded in 1936, Kalakshetra is committed to reviving classical dance and music. See one of the regular performances, or a class (9am to 11am and 2pm to 4.30pm Monday to Friday). Four-month courses are held in music and dance for Rs 600 per month.

Cinema

Chennai has more than 100 cinemas, a reflection of the vibrant film industry here. Most screen Tamil films, but Sathyam Cinema (Map p1034; 28512425; 8 Thiruvika Rd) often shows English-language films in addition to Tamil and Hindi blockbusters. Tickets cost Rs 55 to 110. Check local papers for show times.

SHOPPING

Chennai's shopping landscape is changing. Traditional stores are extending services to keep up with the spread of the mall epidemic, while new, sophisticated boutiques are responding to both with panache.

Theagaraya Nagar (aka T Nagar; Map pp1030–1) has great shopping, especially at Pondy Bazaar and around Panagal Park. Nungambakkam's shady D Khader Nawaz Khan Rd (Map pp1030–1) is an exceedingly pleasant lane of shops, cafés and galleries.

Most of the finest Kanchipuram silks turn up in Chennai (and Bengaluru), so consider doing your silk shopping here.

Victoria Technical Institute (Map p1034; 2852 3141; 765 Anna Salai; 9.30am-6pm Mon-Fri, 9.30am-1.30pm Sat) Most of the revenue from the quality crafts here goes to the artisans, and some to charity.

SIPA'S Craftlink (Map pp1030-1; 28257544; 70 Kodambakkam High Rd, Nungambakkam; 9.30am-8pm Mon-Sat) South India's first fair-trade craft shop.

Amethyst (Map p1034; 28351627; Padmavathi Rd, Gopalapuram; 11am-8pm) See what's the latest at this collection of shops in Sundar Mahal, a lovely heritage building. Clothes, jewellery and home décor by India's hottest designers.

Anokhi (Map pp1030-1; 24311495; 85/47 Chamiers Rd, RA Puram; 10am-8pm) Hand-block-printed

INTO THE 'WOODS

Tamil film fans – and they're known for their fanaticism – will tell you that their movies have always been technically superior to Hindi films. Far from living in Bollywood's shadow, Kollywood – named for Kodambakkam, the neighbourhood preferred by many studios and film people – has its own tradition of filmmaking founded on high-quality production, slightly more realistic plot lines and much more realistic heroes (ie they like them chubby and moustachioed).

Kollywood style, though, is changing. Bollywood's famous 'masala' format – that crowd-pleasing mix of drama, comedy, romance and action – is rubbing off on Tamil films, and vice versa. Bollywood's been remaking Tamil blockbusters, while the big-name celebs in Mumbai (Bombay) are working in Kollywood. (The effect of watching Aishwarya Rai lip-synch to dubbed Tamil can be unsettling.)

For better or worse, it's working. Kollywood doesn't outdo Tollywood (the Telugu film industry) for output, but it comes second to Bollywood for revenue. Some say it even rivals it for distribution, with obsessed Tamil fans queuing up not only in Tamil Nadu's 1800 cinemas, but also in Sri Lanka, Malaysia, South Africa, Europe and the USA. The popularity of Telegu-dubbed Tamil movies over home-grown Tollywood films even led the Andhra Pradesh government to pass a law banning dubbing! Meanwhile, some Hindi film studios, hearing the ch-ching of Kollywood's success, have begun to get in on the action and produce Tamil films themselves – films which, to be sure, will be remade someday in Bollywood.

TRADITIONAL TRADERS

George Town, the area that grew around the fort, retains much of its original flavour. This is the wholesale centre of Chennai (Madras). Many backstreets, bordered by NSC Bose Rd, Krishna Koil St, Mint St and Rajaji Salai, are entirely given over to selling one particular type of merchandise as they have for hundreds of years – paper goods in Anderson St, fireworks in Badrian St and so on. Even if you're not in the market for anything, wander the mazelike streets to see another aspect of Indian life flowing seamlessly from the past into the present.

Passenger ships sail from the George Town harbour to Port Blair in the Andaman Islands (see p1111) every 10 days. The Director of Shipping Services (Map pp1030-1; ☎ 25226873; fax 25220841; Shipping Corporation Bldg, Rajaji Salai; ⏲ 10am-3pm Mon-Fri) sells tickets (Rs 1522 to 5892) for the 60-hour trip. You'll need two photos and three photocopies each of your passport and visa.

Bus

Most Tamil Nadu (SETC) and other government buses operate from the massive Chennai Mofussil Bus Terminus (CMBT; ☎ 23455858, 24794705; Jawaharlal Nehru Salai, Koyambedu), better known as Koyambedu CMBT, 7km west of town.

Buses 15 or 15B from Parry's Corner or Central Station, and 27B from Anna Salai or Egmore station, all head there (Rs 4, 40 minutes). An autorickshaw charges around Rs 120 for the same ride.

Frequent SETC, Karnataka (KSRTC) and Andhra Pradesh (APRSTC) buses cover the following destinations, usually in the morning and late afternoon:

Destination	Fare* (Rs)	Duration (hr)
Bengaluru	175	9

Puducherry	59	4
Thanjavur	135	9
Tirupathi	63	4
Trichy	150	8

* Fares are for ordinary buses.

Several companies operate Volvo AC buses to the same destinations from the less overwhelming private-bus station next door; try KPN (☎ 24797998) or Rathi Meena (☎ 24791494). Private operators also depart from opposite Egmore train station. These superdeluxe buses usually leave at night and cost two to three times more than ordinary buses.

Train

Interstate trains and those heading west generally depart from Central Station (Map pp1030–1), while trains heading south depart from Egmore (Map p1034). The Train Reservation Complex (☎ general 131, reservations 1361; ⏲ 8am-8pm Mon-Sat, 8am-2pm Sun) is on the west side of Central Station; the Foreign Assistance Tourist Cell is on the 1st floor. Egmore's booking office (☎ 28194579) keeps the same hours.

Shatabdi fares are chair/executive; Rajdhani fares are for 3AC/2AC; Express and Mail fares are 2nd/chair car for day trains, sleeper/3AC/2AC for overnight trains.

The table, above, lists some popular Chennai routes. For Goa there's one direct train a week: Friday's Chennai–Vasco Express.

GETTING AROUND

To/From the Airport

The cheapest way to reach the airport is by MRTS train to Tirusulam station, 500m across the road from the terminals.

An autorickshaw should cost you about Rs 200/300 for a day/night trip.

Both terminals have prepaid taxi kiosks, where tickets are Rs 240 (Egmore) or Rs 260 (to Anna Salai or Triplicane).

Autorickshaw

Fares are relatively high: locals pay Rs 20 for a short trip down the road. From Egmore to George Town, Triplicane or Anna Salai should cost no more than Rs 40, to Nungambakkam, Rs 50. Prices are at least 25% higher after 10pm. There's a prepaid booth outside Central Station.

See p1033 for more on details Chennai's autorickshaws.

Bus

Chennai's bus system is worth getting to know. The main city bus stand is at Parry's Corner (Map pp1030–1), and fares are between Rs 4 and 10. Some useful routes follow.

Bus No	Route
1	Parry's-Central-Triplicane
5D	Koyambedu CMBT-Guindy-Adyar-Mylapore
9, 10	Parry's-Central-Egmore-T Nagar
11/11A	Parry's-Anna Salai-T Nagar
15B	Parry's-Central-Koyambedu CMBT
18	Parry's-Saidapet
19S	Parry's-Central-Adyar
27B	Egmore-Chetpet-Koyambedu CMBT
31	Parry's-Central-Vivekananda House
32	Central-Triplicane-Vivekananda House
51M	T Nagar-St Thomas Mount

Car & Taxi

For an extended hire, organise a driver through a travel agent or large hotel. You might pay a little more, but the driver should be reliable and you'll have a point of contact should something go wrong. Non-AC rates are around Rs 450 per half-day (five hours) within the city, and Rs 5 per kilometre, with a daily 250km minimum, beyond city limits. Note that the clock starts ticking when the driver leaves the office.

We like Shankaran (☎ 24713874; lmt_shankaran@yahoo.co.in). Manjoo Cabs (☎ 23813083; manjoocabs@yahoo.com) is a drivers' cooperative.

Train

Efficient MRTS trains run every 15 minutes from Beach station to Fort, Park (at Central Station), Egmore, Chetpet, Nungambakkam, Kodambakkam, Mambalam, Saidapet, Guindy, St Thomas Mount, Tirusulam (for the airport), and on down to Tambaram. The second line branches off at Park and hits Light House and Tirumailar (at Kapaleeshwarar Temple). Tickets cost between Rs 5 and 10.

NORTHERN TAMIL NADU

CHENNAI TO MAMALLAPURAM

Chennai's urban sprawl continues a fair way south before opening up on the East Coast Rd to Mamallapuram. Along this stretch, known as the Coromandel Coast, are several small beach resorts and wonderful artists' communities, along with less fortunate tsunami-ravaged fishing villages still slowly being rebuilt.

In the village of Injambalkkam, 18km south of Chennai, the Cholamandal Artists' Village (☎ 044-24490092; cholamandalartvillage.com; admission free; 9.30am-6.30pm), set on 4 hectares of land, was created in 1966 as a cooperative where artists and sculptors could live, work and exhibit. Still thriving, the group of traditional thatch-roofed buildings and gardens includes galleries and studios where there are usually artists at work and fine contemporary paintings and sculptures on show and for sale. A new gallery and public exhibition space was being built in 2006, and there are two simple studio-cum-guesthouses available for visiting artists only (Rs 500 per day; book well in advance).

At Muttukadu, 12km south of Cholamandal, is DakshinaChitra (☎ 044-27472603; www.dakshinachitra.net; Indian student/adult Rs 25/50, foreign student/adult Rs 70/175; 10am-6pm, closed Tue), a remarkable cultural centre and arts complex displaying traditional arts and crafts from Tamil Nadu, Kerala, Karnataka and Andhra Pradesh. Established by the Madras Crafts Association, the village incorporates traditional buildings and workshops including silk-weavers' houses, potters' sheds and merchants' homes. Static arts and craft displays are complemented by daily interactive demonstrations of pottery, basket weaving, puppet making and palm-leaf decoration (Rs 5 to 25), and free weekend activities include a puppet show and glass blowing. A truly delightful cool, tiled 12-room guesthouse (☎ 98414 22149; r without/with AC Rs 550/800) is in the grounds (though you might want to check you're not coinciding with a school overnight excursion). You can also book rooms through the centre.

To reach these places, take any bus heading south to Mamallapuram (bus 188 or 118, Rs 22, one hour) and ask to be let off; an AC taxi for a full day tour costs about Rs 1200.

Crocodile Bank (☎ 04114-242511; adult/child Rs 20/10, camera/video Rs 10/75; 8am-5.30pm, closed Mon), 40km south of Chennai, is a well-regarded breeding farm for crocodiles, alligators and turtles. There are hundreds of reptiles here, including the Indian mugger and gavial crocodiles and the saltwater crocs of the Andaman and Nicobar Islands. The leafy grounds support more than 50 bird species; keep an eye open for jewel-like kingfishers bobbing above the croc pools. Late afternoon is feeding time (Rs 20). An attached snake farm (adult/child Rs 5/3; 10am-1pm & 2-5pm) produces antivenin.

About 5km north of Mamallapuram in the village of Salavankuppam, beside the East Coast Rd, the Tiger Cave is a rock-cut shrine, possibly dating from the 7th century. It's dedicated to Durga and has a small mandapa featuring a crown of carved yali (mythical lion creature) heads.

MAMALLAPURAM (MAHABALIPURAM)

☎ 044 / pop 12,049

Mamallapuram is Tamil Nadu's only true travellers' enclave, a mix of sun, seafood and sand with a dash of seediness thrown in. But it's much more than that. Famous for its ancient rock carvings, especially the Shore Temple, it was once the second capital and seaport of the Pallava kings of Kanchipuram. The village is listed as a World Heritage site and remains a renowned centre for stone carving; you'll see and hear the constant tapping of hammer and chisel as artisans chip away at exquisite sculptures.

Less than two hours by bus from Chennai, with a reasonably good beach, an excellent combination of cheap accommodation, fish restaurants, handicraft shops, spectacular stone carvings dotted around the town and Tamil Nadu's most highly regarded dance festival (see the boxed text, p1028), it's easy to see why travellers make a beeline here from Chennai and hang around for a while. The local community was affected by the 2004 tsunami but worked hard to get back to sort-of normal as quickly as possible; check out the 'before and after' photos in some of the beachfront restaurants.

Orientation & Information

Mamallapuram village is tiny and laid-back, with most of the action on East Raja, Othavadai and Othavadai Cross Sts; the latter runs parallel to the beach. The surrounding sites of interest can be explored on foot or by bicycle.

BOOKSHOP

JK Bookshop (☎ 9840442853; Othavadai St; 8.30am-9pm) A small bookshop where you can buy or swap (Rs 50) books in several languages, including English, French and German. Proceeds support village schools established by the owner.

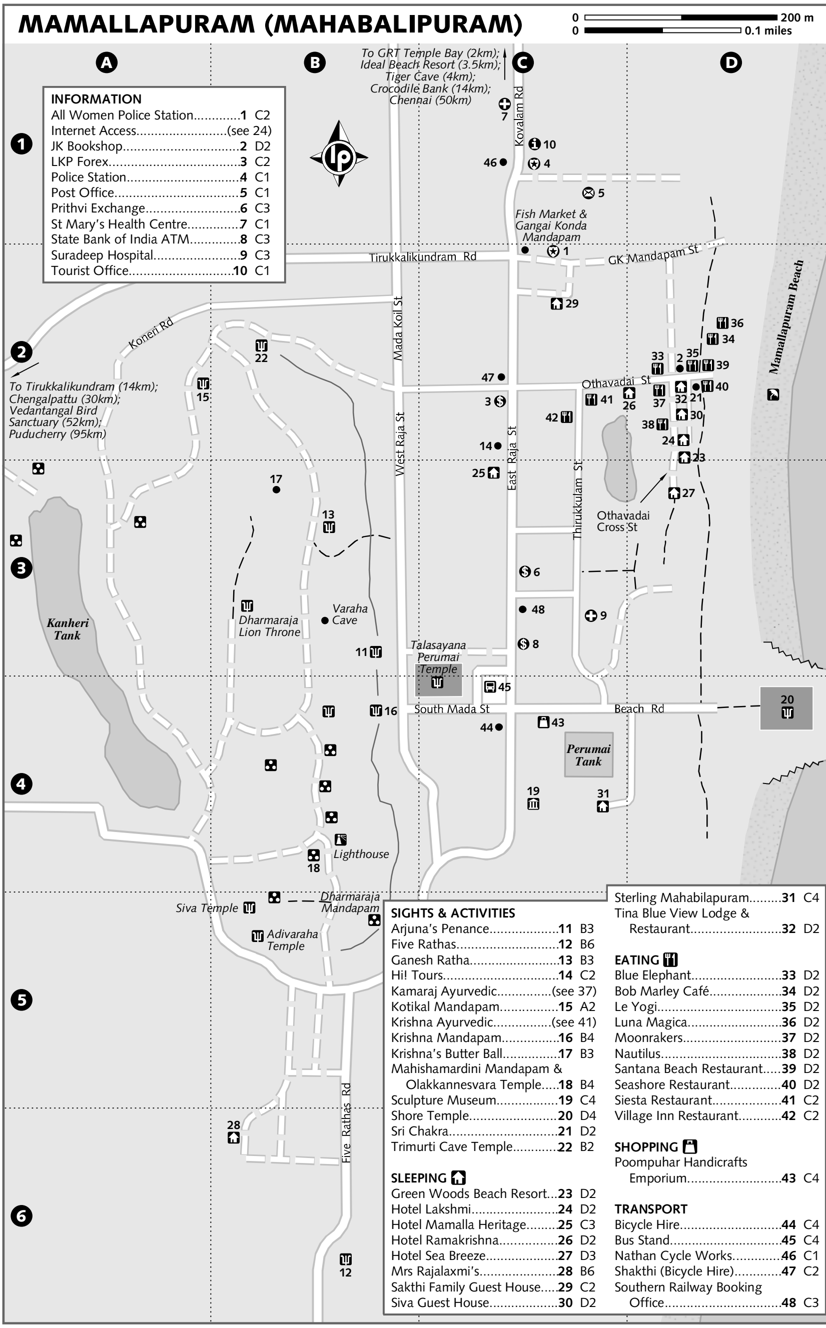
Sights

You can easily spend a full day exploring the temples, mandapas and rock carvings around Mamallapuram. Apart from the Shore Temple and Five Rathas, admission is free.

SHORE TEMPLE



Standing alone and majestic facing the Bay of Bengal (but enclosed by a steel fence), this small but romantic temple (combined ticket with Five Rathas Indian/foreigner Rs 10/250, video Rs 25; 6.30am-6pm), weathered by the wind and sea, represents the final phase of Pallava art. Originally constructed around the middle of the 7th century, it was later rebuilt by Narasimha Varman II (also known as Rajasimha). The temple's two main spires contain shrines for Shiva. Facing east and west the original linga (phallic images of Shiva) captured the sunrise and sunset. A third and earlier shrine is dedicated to the reclining Vishnu. A remarkable amount of temple carving remains, especially inside the shrines. The temple is now protected from further erosion by a huge rock wall. Like many of Mamallapuram's sights, it's spectacularly floodlit at night.

THE ROCK CARVINGS OF MAMALLAPURAM

The images carved into the rocks around Mamallapuram (Mahabalipuram) are like no other in Tamil Nadu. Much religious stonework in the state is alive with complex depictions of gods and goddesses, and images of ordinary folk are conspicuous because of their absence. Yet the splendid carvings at Mamallapuram are distinctive for the simplicity of their folk-art origins. The sculptures show scenes of everyday life – women milking buffaloes, pompous city dignitaries, young girls primping and posing on street corners or swinging their hips in artful come-ons.

Most of the temples and rock carvings here were completed during the reigns of Narasimha Varman I (AD 630–68) and Narasimha Varman II (AD 700–28). But this is not an art form consigned to history. Approximately 200 sculptors line the streets and chisel their stone from dawn to dusk. Indeed Mamallapuram's historical reputation for skilled carvers remains sufficiently intact – the town's craftsmen are frequently commissioned to create sculptures for new temples around the world.

FIVE RATHAS

A fine example of Pallava architecture is the Five Rathas (Five Rathas Rd; combined ticket with Shore Temple Indian/foreigner Rs 10/250, video Rs 25; 6.30am-6pm), rock-cut temples resembling chariots. Just 300m from the sea, they were hidden in the sand until excavated by the British 200 years ago.

The Five Rathas derive their names from the champions of the Mahabharata; the Pandavas and their collective wife, Draupadi.

The first ratha, Draupadi Ratha, on the left after you enter the gate, is dedicated to the goddess Durga. Within, the goddess stands on a lotus, her devotees on their knees in worship. Outside, the huge sculpted lion stands proudly in front of her temple.

Behind the goddess shrine, a huge Nandi (Shiva's bull vehicle) heralds the next chariot, the Arjuna Ratha, dedicated to Shiva. Numerous deities, including Indra, the rain god, are depicted on the outer walls.

The next temple chariot, Bhima Ratha, honours Vishnu. Within its walls a large sculpture of this deity lies in repose.

The outside walls of Dharmaraja Ratha, the tallest of the chariots, portray many deities, including the sun god, Surya, and Indra. The final ratha, Nakula-Sahadeva Ratha, is dedicated to Indra. The fine sculptured elephant standing next to the temple represents his mount. As you enter the gate, approaching from the north, you see its back first, hence its name gajaprishthakara (elephant's backside). This life-sized image is regarded as one of the most perfectly sculptured elephants in India.

ARJUNA'S PENANCE

This relief carving (West Raja St) on the face of a huge rock depicts animals, deities and other semidivine creatures as well as fables from the Hindu Panchatantra books. The panel (30m by 12m) is divided by a huge perpendicular fissure that's skilfully encompassed into the sculpture; originally, water, representing the Ganges, flowed down it.

It's one of the most convincing and unpretentious rock carvings in India, with the main relief showing Shiva standing with a wizened Arjuna, balanced on one leg in a state of penance. A guide (around Rs 30) can be useful to help explain the reliefs.

GANESH RATHA & AROUND

This ratha is northwest of Arjuna's Penance. Once a Shiva temple, it became a shrine to Ganesh (the elephant-headed god) after the original lingam was removed. Just north of the ratha is a huge boulder known as Krishna's Butter Ball. Immovable, but apparently balancing precariously, it's a favourite photo opportunity. The nearby Kotikal Mandapa is dedicated to Durga.

Nearby, the Trimurti Cave Temple honours the Hindu trinity – Brahma, Vishnu and Shiva – with a separate section dedicated to each deity.

MANDAPAMS

Many mandapas, featuring fine internal sculptures, are scattered over the main hill. Among them is Krishna Mandapa, one of the earliest rock-cut temples and predating the penance relief. Its carvings of a pastoral scene show Krishna lifting up the mythical Govardhana mountain to protect his kinsfolk from the wrath of Indra. Others include Mahishamardini Mandapa, just a few metres southwest of the lighthouse. Scenes from the Puranas (Sanskrit stories dating from the 5th century AD) are depicted on the mandapa with the sculpture of the goddess Durga considered one of the finest.

Above the mandapa are the remains of the 8th-century Olakkannesvara Temple, and spectacular views of Mamallapuram. Photography is forbidden here for 'security reasons' – there's a nuclear power station a few kilometres south.

SCULPTURE MUSEUM

This museum (East Raja St; adult/child Rs 2/1, camera Rs 10; 9am-5.30pm) contains more than 3000 local sculptures in stone, wood, metal and even cement. Some fine paintings are also on display and the front courtyard is littered with sculptures.

GETTING BETTER AT DOING GOOD

'Great work was done here after the tsunami. The difficulty is in keeping the development sustainable and long term once it's no longer front-page news.'

Paul Knight, director of NGO Earth Aid Asia in Mamallapuram (Mahabalipuram), is musing on the long-term effects of the disaster. 'It became apparent to us that communities inland were also suffering, but indirectly; for example, in poor tribal villages where families relied on occasional day labour to buy food, both work and money dried up and people miles from the coast were literally starving. From the relationships we built with some of these communities then, we're continuing with health, education and income-generating projects – the things they've told us are their priorities – which will both improve their quality of life and help to bring in some money.' You can learn more about Earth Aid's work – and opportunities for volunteers – by dropping into the office in Bharathi Street (☎ 9884252252; www.earthaidindia.org). It may also be possible to support its work by staying at its guesthouse.

The needs of poor villagers are not as visible as those of the children who beg for funds for the many orphanages in Mamallapuram. Sometimes it's hard to define their presence as anything less than child exploitation when they should really be in school or playing. If you want to give to the kids, do your homework. Ask around town to get an idea of how children's homes are regarded locally, and give financial donations to reputable charities that support the children in the long term.

Activities

BEACH

The village is only about 200m from the wide beach, north of the Shore Temple, where local fishers pull in their boats. The beach is cleaner further north, or to the south of the Shore Temple, and you can take long unimpeded walks, although at high tide you need to walk over the rocks in front of the Shore Temple. It's not a great place for swimming – there are dangerous rips – but it's possible to go fishing in one of local outriggers; negotiate a price with the owner. Despite the beach scene, Western swimwear is not the norm here and you (and local people) may feel more comfortable if you cover up.

THERAPIES

There are numerous places offering massage, reiki, yoga and Ayurvedic practices. Sessions cost around Rs 350 for 30 to 45 minutes. Krishna (Siesta; Othavadai St) is recommended by both male and female travellers, as is Kamaraj Ayurvedic (☎ 27442115; full body Rs 300, face & neck Rs 150), which can be contacted through Moonrakers restaurant (p1050).

Sri Chakra (Othavadai St; massage per hr Rs 300; 🕒 8am-9pm) offers Ayurvedic massage as well as yoga sessions (Rs 150) at 7am.

There are many other operators in town with similar rates and timings. As always, and especially for such an intimate service, ask fellow travellers, question the masseur carefully and if you have any misgivings, don't proceed.

Tours

To tour Mamallapuram on two wheels, Hi! Tours (☎ 27443260; www.hi-tours.com; 123 East Raja St) runs bicycle tours (Rs 250, minimum four people) to local villages and sights, including the Tiger Cave and Tirukkalikundram Temple. The tours run from 8am to 2pm and include guide and lunch. Hi! Tours also organises day trips to Kanchipuram (p1051) and Vedantangal Bird Sanctuary (p1050).

Sleeping

Mamallapuram is full of traveller accommodation. If you don't mind roughing it too much, you can stay in basic home accommodation with families in the backstreets near the Five Rathas and elsewhere around the village. The rooms and facilities are very simple but travellers' reports are positive. The usual cost is around Rs 50 per day or Rs 300 per week.

The main budget and midrange places are on Othavadai and Othavadai Cross Sts, and top-end hotels are north of town on the road to Chennai.

BUDGET

Mrs Rajalaxmi's (☎ 27442460; r Rs 50) One of several cheap family-run places near the Five Rathas, this is friendly and homy but pretty basic.

Rooms have fans and electricity, and there's a communal squat toilet.

Sakthi Family Guest House (☎ 27442577; 6 East Raja St; r Rs 60-150) This rambling old house in the town centre is owned by the affable Mrs Chandra Palani, headmistress of the local primary school. Rooms outside the house are very basic and guests are treated like part of the furniture. There's no sign, but you'll find it hidden down a lane behind the town hall building.

Hotel Ramakrishna (☎ 27442331; 8 Othavadai St; s/d/tr Rs 100/150/250) This is a large place on three floors around a central parking area with no garden. Rooms are simple, but clean and good value.

Tina Blue View Lodge & Restaurant (☎ 27442319; 34 Othavadai St; r Rs 150-300) Run by the friendly Xavier, Tina Blue is one of Mamallapuram's originals so it looks a bit old hat, but it's set in a leafy garden with chairs and tables outside the rooms and has a bamboo-and-thatch restaurant on stilts.

Siva Guest House (☎ 27443234; sivaguesthouse@hotmail.com; 2 Othavadai Cross St; d without/with AC Rs 250-800;) Deservedly popular with travellers, Siva gets consistently good reports. Rooms are spotless and each has a small veranda.

Green Woods Beach Resort (☎ 27443243; greenwoods_resort@yahoo.com; 7 Othavadai Cross St; d without/with AC Rs 300/750;) Although not flash, Green Woods is homely and popular, with a garden and some pleasant rooftop rooms; No 4 has good balcony space.

Hotel Lakshmi (☎ 27442463; d without AC Rs 200-500, with AC Rs 850;) At the end of Othavadai Cross St and with beach access, the former Lakshmi Lodge is a long-standing backpacker place. With a tanklike swimming pool and a popular 1st-floor café hang-out, it's maintaining a standard, but the owners can be a little overbearing.

MIDRANGE & TOP END

Hotel Mamalla Heritage (☎ 27442060; 104 East Raja St; s/d Rs 850/1050;) In town, this standard midrange place has spacious, comfortable rooms, all with fridge, the pool's a decent size, and there's a quality veg and rooftop restaurant.

Hotel Sea Breeze (☎ 27443035; seabreezehotel@hotmail.com; Othavadai Cross St; r from Rs 1075;) The biggest draw here is the shady garden and pool (nonguests can use it for Rs 150) which give the air of a more upmarket resort. Rooms are pretty standard but bright and spacious.

Ideal Beach Resort (☎ 27442240; www.idealresort.com; s/d Rs 1400/1700, cottages from Rs 2200;) With a landscaped tropical garden setting and comfortable rooms or cottages, this low-key beachfront resort is popular with package tours. The design is small and secluded enough to have an intimate atmosphere and there's a lovely open-air poolside restaurant. It's about 3.5km north of town.

Sterling Mahabalipuram (☎ 27442287; Shore Temple Rd; d Rs 4950;) In a quiet location near the Shore Temple and set in sprawling, shady grounds, this is a pleasant if overpriced place. Facilities include a bar, restaurant, children's play area, big pool and large old-fashioned rooms.

GRT Temple Bay (☎ 27443636; www.grttemplebay.com; r from Rs 5500;) Best of the town's northern resorts, the pool here is beachside, there's a gym, and most of the stylish rooms have sea views and balconies.

Eating & Drinking

One of the pleasures of Mamallapuram is eating out. Palm-thatched beachside restaurants serve up fresh seafood to the gentle sounds of the ocean. Be sure to ask about prices, though, as most seafood varies by weight or availability and king prawns and lobster can turn out to cost more than you expected. Restaurants are neatly clustered around Othavadai St and the beach, and all have extensive breakfast menus, and vegetable, Continental and Chinese dishes. Most places – licensed or not – serve beer but be sensitive to the 11pm local curfew; if you persuade a restaurant to allow you to linger longer over last drinks, it's the owner, not you, who faces a hefty fine. All places listed are open for breakfast, lunch and dinner.

Siesta (Othavadai St; dishes Rs 30-60) On the shaded and breezy rooftop of Sri Murugan Guest House, this tapas restaurant offers – among other things – authentic Spanish omelette, patatas bravas (fried potatoes in a spicy sauce), garlic mushrooms and paella.

Village Inn Restaurant (☎ 27442151; Thirukkulam St; mains Rs 45-85, beer Rs 75) Tucked away off the main strip, there's cane furniture, a couple of tables on the veranda and Indian classical music playing in the background, with inexpensive seafood, steaks (order in advance) and, surprisingly, Scotch eggs.

Nautilus (Othavadai Cross St; mains from Rs 50) This bustling French-run eatery is popular for its espresso coffee and European dishes such as ratatouille, salads, stuffed tomatoes or steak and chips, along with the usual seafood and Indian fare.

Le Yogi (☎ 27442571; Othavadai St; mains from Rs 50) Run by a French and Indian couple, this is the place to come for good wholemeal bread, salads, crepes and pasta. Sit up at tables, or loll with a coffee on the comfy floor cushions.

Moonrakers (Othavadai St; mains Rs 60-150) Run by three friendly brothers, Moonrakers' food has long been popular with its big menu of seafood, beef and chicken dishes plus breakfast fare such as pancakes and muffins. It's also a busy late-night hang-out where you can get a beer and meet other travellers. Chinese lamps, wagon wheels and wooden carvings decorate the place. Across the road, the newer and more comfortable Blue Elephant Restaurant – run by another brother! – is also recommended.

If beachside ambience and the strains of Bob Marley are what you're after, Bob Marley Café, Seashore Restaurant, Santana Beach Restaurant and Luna Magica are all recommended for fresh seafood; you'll get a good plate of fish for around Rs 70, with other meals from about Rs 40. All are open from about 7am and make a good setting for breakfast too.

Shopping

Mamallapuram wakes each day to the sound of sculptors' chisels on granite. You can browse hassle-free and buy from the fixed-price Poompuhar Handicrafts Emporium (☎ 27442224; South Mada St; 10am-7pm, closed Wed) or from the craft shops that line the main roads (prices negotiable). Sculptures range from Rs 300 (for a small piece to fit in your baggage) to Rs 400,000 for a massive Ganesh that needs to be lifted with a mobile crane.

Getting There & Away

Mamallapuram's small but busy bus stand is on the corner of East Raja and South Mada Sts. The most direct service to/from Chennai (Rs 22, two hours, 30 daily) is on buses 188 and 118. The express (ECR) buses are fastest. To Chennai airport take bus 108B (Rs 23, two hours, four daily).

To Puducherry (Rs 35, two hours, nine daily) take bus 188A. To Kanchipuram (Rs 20, two hours, 11 daily) via Tirukkalikundram and Chengalpattu (Chingleput) take buses 212A or 212H.

To get to Madurai catch a bus to Chengalpattu (Rs 9, one hour, 33 daily) and then a train from there.

Taxis are available from the bus station. Long-distance trips require plenty of bargaining. It's about Rs 900 to Chennai or the airport.

You can make train reservations at the Southern Railway Booking Office (East Raja St).

Getting Around

The easiest way to get around is on foot, though on a hot day it's quite a hike to see all the monuments. You can hire bicycles from several places, including the bicycle shops near the bus station, Nathan Cycle Works (Kovalam Rd; 8am-6pm) near the post office, or Shakthi (137 East Raja St; 8am-8pm), for around Rs 30 per day. Shakthi also hires mopeds for around Rs 150 a day, as do several other shops and restaurants around town.

AROUND MAMALLAPURAM

About 14km west of Mamallapuram, Tirukkalikundram is a pilgrimage centre with the hilltop Vedagirishvara Temple (admission Rs 2; 8.30am-1pm & 5-7pm) dedicated to Shiva. It's often called the Eagle Temple; according to legend two eagles come here each day at noon from Varanasi, a good 2000km away. They often don't turn up on time.

You climb the 550 smooth steps to the hilltop bare-footed. Once there, the temple contains two beautiful shrines and at intervals there are 360-degree views of the larger Bhaktavatsaleshavra Temple, the temple tanks, rocky hills and rice paddies. It's lovely – if busy – in the late afternoon but the middle of the day, while making for a hot climb, is very peaceful when the temple itself is closed. You can get here by bus or bicycle from Mamallapuram.

VEDANTANGAL BIRD SANCTUARY

Located about 52km from Mamallapuram, this wildlife sanctuary (admission Rs 5; 6am-6pm) is one of the best bird-watching places in South India and is an important breeding ground for waterbirds – cormorants, egrets, herons, ibises, spoonbills, storks, grebes and pelicans – that migrate here from October to March. At the height of the breeding season (December and January) there can be up to 30,000 birds nesting in the mangroves, and the best viewing times are early morning and late afternoon; head for the watchtower and look down on the noisy nests across the water. At other times of the year there are no migrants, but enough resident birds to keep keen birders happy.

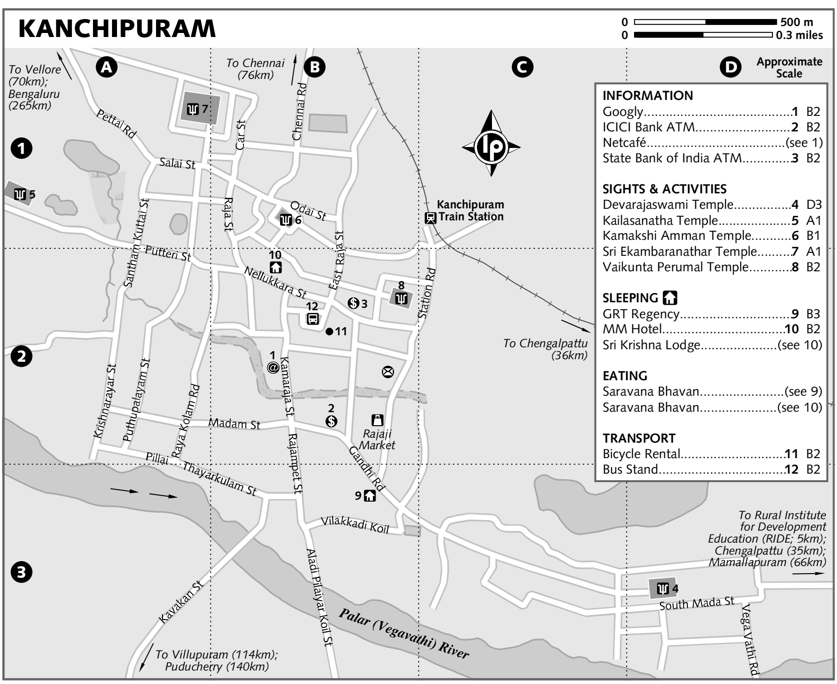
Big, basic and comfortable rooms are available at the Forest Department Resthouse (d Rs 300), a lovely quiet spot 500m before the sanctuary. You're supposed to book in advance with the WWO (Map pp1030-1; ☎ 24321471; 4th fl, DMS office, 259 Anna Salai, Teynampet) in Chennai – good luck if you try to do that – but in practice the caretaker will probably find a room for you if one's available. You may or may not be offered food if you arrive unexpectedly; come with snacks just in case, or if you have transport be prepared to drive 10km or so to the nearest evening food stall.

To get there by public transport, first get to Chengalpattu, an hour's bus ride from Mamallapuram (see opposite). From here you can take a bus to Vedantangal via Padalam, where you may have to change buses at the road junction. Most Vedantangal buses go directly to the sanctuary entrance, others to the village bus station, from where the sanctuary is a 1km walk south. Visitors also often make a day trip by AC taxi from Mamallapuram; this should cost around Rs 1000.

KANCHIPURAM



☎ 044 / pop 188,000

Famous throughout India for its silk saris, the temple town of Kanchipuram (Kanchi) is also a treasure-trove of Hindu temples and art from the Pallava, Chola and Pandyan dynasties. Many travellers make a day trip here from Chennai or Mamallapuram, which isn't a bad idea as its attraction for pilgrims and tourists has led to a culture of harassment at some temples and silk shops.

Orientation & Information

The city is on the main Chennai–Bengaluru road, 76km southwest of Chennai.

There's no tourist office, but for information online check out www.hellokanchipuram.com. On Kamaraja St there's a small cluster of cheap internet cafés. None of Kanchipuram's banks will touch travellers cheques, but ATMs

CHILD LABOUR & THE SILK INDUSTRY

The sari is synonymous with Indian style, and a brocade bridal sari from Kanchipuram is among the most coveted of garments. The more expensive ones are shot through with gold and silver and can fetch up to Rs 25,000 and weigh around 1.5kg.

About 80% of Kanchipuram's population depend on hand-weaving for a living, and most of the work is done in private homes as part of a larger cooperative. Such a diffuse operation is notoriously difficult to police. Despite national legislation prohibiting child labour, it is estimated that some 4000 school-aged children in Kanchipuram still work full time in the industry, though the situation has improved markedly in the past five years.

Owners of silk looms pay poor families a significant sum of money to buy the children's labour. The opportunity to receive an amount of money that most families could never otherwise dream about is a powerful lure. The payment is in the form of a loan, which families must later repay. When they are unable to pay, silk loom owners offer further loans at high interest rates, thereby perpetuating the cycle of indebtedness and culture of child labour, which is a foundation of this lucrative industry.

One organisation which is challenging the system is the Rural Institute for Development Education (RIDE; ☎ 27268393; www.rideindia.org; 46 Periyar Nagar, Little Kanchipuram 631503), a secular NGO. This impressive agency operates in more than 200 villages in the Kanchipuram district by taking children away from the looms (and from other work such as stone masonry) and placing them into one of 11 special RIDE transition schools for six to 12 months, before facilitating their entry into the government education system.

There are many ways that travellers can assist the institute in its work. Volunteers are welcomed in training teachers, counselling, and helping staff write proposals for funding and project development. Qualified teachers can also, with advance notice, assist with teaching in the schools. Volunteers should be prepared to commit for at least one week, preferably longer, and are accommodated in the organisation's guesthouse. A volunteer fee of US$100 per week covers costs.

If you're just passing through, RIDE offers a 24-hour programme that includes accommodation, and visits to some or all of: a local village to see the silk-weaving industry at work and meet its participants; a RIDE school; and silk-weaving factories and silk stores which support child-free labour. The cost is Rs 1300 per person; there are abridged half-day programmes for Rs 850. If you're in town to buy silk, think about contacting RIDE, which can put you in direct touch with a weaver; your transaction is then only between you and them, with no commissions or fees paid to salespeople.

The RIDE office is near Pachapayya James College, about 5km east of Kanchipuram. It's a Rs 50 rickshaw ride, and there are good signs on the roadside.

Sights

All the temples are open from 6am to 12.30pm and 4pm to 8.30pm. Most have free admission.

KAILASANATHA TEMPLE

Dedicated to Shiva, Kailasanatha Temple is the oldest temple in Kanchipuram and for many it is also the most beautiful. Reflecting the freshness of early Dravidian architecture, it was built by the Pallava king Rayasimha in the late 7th century, though its front was added later by his son, King Varman III.

The remaining fragments of 8th-century murals are a visible reminder of how magnificent the original temple must have looked. There are 58 small shrines honouring Shiva and Parvati and their sons, Ganesh and Murugan.

Non-Hindus are allowed into the inner sanctum here, where there is a prismatic lingam – the largest in town and third-largest in Asia. The guide and priest here are generous with information and, set in a quiet residential area, this is the most pleasant temple to visit.

SRI EKAMBARANATHAR TEMPLE

This temple is dedicated to Shiva and is one of the largest in Kanchipuram, covering 12 hectares. Its 59m-high gopuram and massive outer stone wall were constructed in 1509 by Krishnadevaraya of the Vijayanagar empire, though construction was originally started by the Pallavas, with later Chola extensions. The temple's name is said to derive from Eka Amra Nathar – Lord of the Mango Tree – and there is an old mango tree, with four branches representing the four Vedas (sacred Hindu texts). Non-Hindus cannot enter the sanctum. If you wish to support the temple, get an official receipt for your donation.

KAMAKSHI AMMAN TEMPLE

This imposing temple is dedicated to the goddess Parvati in her guise as Kamakshi, who accedes to all requests. To the right of the temple's entrance is the marriage hall, which has wonderful ornate pillars, and directly ahead is the main shrine topped with gold; again, non-Hindus cannot enter the sanctum. Each February/March carriages housing statues of deities are hauled through the streets in a colourful procession. The goddess' birthday is in October/November.

DEVARAJASWAMI TEMPLE

Dedicated to Vishnu, this enormous monument (admission Rs 2, camera/video Rs 5/100) was built by the Vijayanagars and is among the most impressive of Kanchipuram's temples. It has a beautifully sculptured '1000-pillared' hall (only 96 of the original 1000 remain) as well as a marriage hall commemorating the wedding of Vishnu and Lakshmi. One of the temple's most notable features is a huge chain carved from a single piece of stone which can be seen at each corner of the mandapa. The annual temple festival is in May.

Every 40 years the waters of the temple tank are drained, revealing a huge statue of Vishnu. You may like to hang around for the next viewing – in 2019.

VAIKUNTA PERUMAL TEMPLE

Dedicated to Vishnu, this temple was built shortly after the Kailasanatha Temple. The cloisters inside the outer wall consist of lion pillars and are representative of the first phase in the architectural evolution of the grand 1000-pillared halls. The main shrine, on three levels, contains images of Vishnu in standing, sitting and reclining positions.

Sleeping & Eating

Don't get too excited about the accommodation options in Kanchi. The cheap pilgrims' lodges are pretty dire, so unless you are on a tight budget, head for one of the better-value midrange places. Most hotels and lodges are clustered together in the noisy town centre, within a few minutes' walk from the bus station.

Sri Krishna Lodge (☎ 27222831; 60 Nellukkara St; s/d Rs 160/230) One of the few OK cheapies, the cheerful staff makes up for the drab and tatty interior.

MM Hotel (☎ 27227250; www.mmhotels.com; 65 Nellukkara St; d without/with AC Rs 400/700; ❄) A good-value, busy and clean hotel, frequented by Indian businesspeople. Saravana Bhavan veg restaurant is next door, with a welcome AC dining room.

GRT Regency (☎ 27225250; adminkanchi@grtregency.com; 487 Gandhi Rd; s/d Rs 975/1250; ❄) While it's not the best setting on the noisy main road, the rooms here are the probably the cleanest and most comfortable you'll find in Kanchi. Another Saravana Bhavan restaurant is next door at Hotel Jaybala International.

Getting There & Away

The busy bus stand is in the centre of town. See the table, below, for bus services.

Regular suburban trains leave from Beach, Fort or Egmore stations in Chennai direct to Kanchipuram (Rs 18, two hours).

BUSES FROM KANCHIPURAM

Destination	Fare (Rs)	Duration (hr)	Frequency
Bengaluru	100	6	2 daily
Chennai	22.50	2	every 10min
Mamallapuram	20	2	9 daily
Puducherry	30	3	12 daily
Tiruvannamalai	32	3	22 daily
Trichy	90	7	5 daily
Vellore	20	1½	every 15min

Getting Around

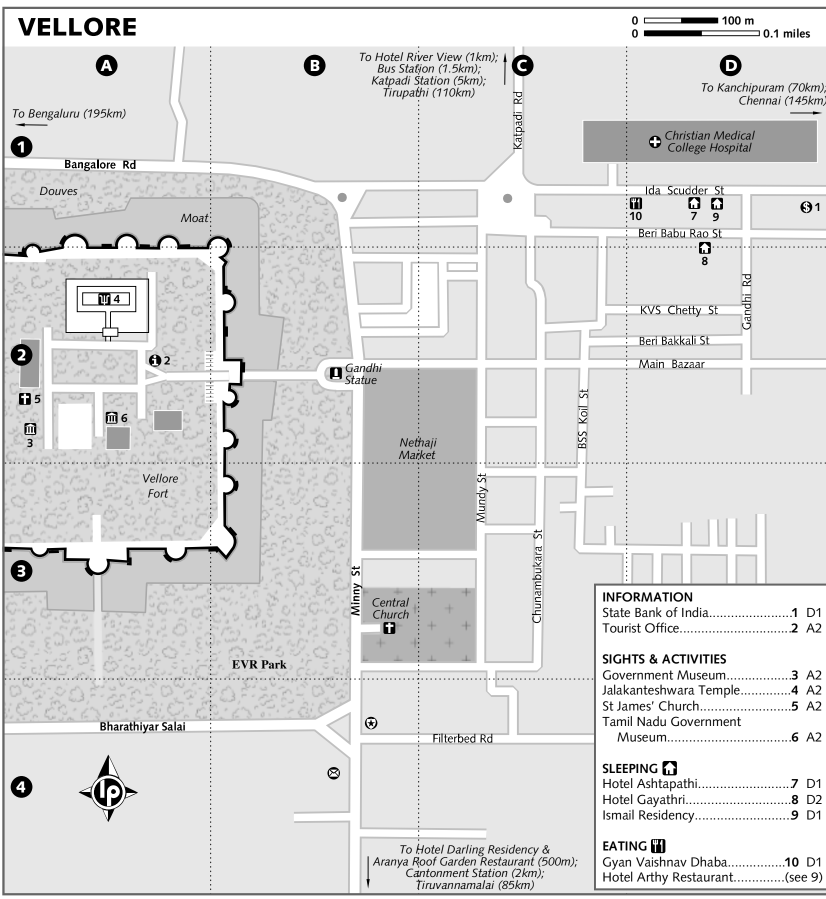
Bicycles can be hired (per hour/day Rs 3/40) from stalls around the bus station. An autorickshaw for a half-day tour of the five main temples (around Rs 200) will inevitably involve a stop at a silk shop.

VELLORE

☎0416 / pop 388,211

Vellore, 145km west of Chennai, is a dusty bazaar town whose well-preserved Vijayanagar Fort and temple are the main features on the tourist trail. The city is also famed for its Christian Medical College (CMC) Hospital – a leader in research and health care, recognised as one of the finest hospitals in India. The hospital attracts international medical students as well as patients from all over India, giving this small town a cosmopolitan feel.

Information



There are several internet cafés along Ida Scudder Rd in front of the hospital and Surfzone is next to the State Bank of India.

State Bank of India (102 Ida Scudder Rd) Money can be exchanged here and there's an ATM.

Tourist office (⏰ 10am-5.45pm Mon-Fri) Inside the fort complex, to the right of the main gate.

Sights

The solid walls and dry moat of the splendid Vellore Fort dominate the west side of town. It was built in the 16th century and passed briefly into the hands of the Marathas in 1676 and the Mughals in 1708. The British occupied the fort in 1760 following the fall of Srirangapatnam and the death of Tipu Sultan. These days it houses various government offices, parade grounds, a university, a church and an ancient mosque, and a police recruiting school.

At the west side of the fort complex, the small national government museum (admission free; 9am-5pm, closed Fri) contains sculptures dating back to Pallava and Chola times. Next door, pretty St James' Church (1846) is only open for Sunday services.

On the east side, the Tamil Nadu government museum (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; 9am-5pm, closed Fri) displays hero stones in the forecourt, dating from the 8th century and depicting the stories of war heroes in battle. The dusty exhibits inside have seen much better days, but the small collection of tribal clothes and artefacts is interesting.

Near the fort entrance, the Jalakanteshwara Temple (6am-1pm & 3-8pm), a gem of late Vijayanagar architecture, was built about 1566; check out the small detailed sculptures on the walls of the marriage hall. During the invasions by the Adil Shahis of Bijapur, the Marathas and the Carnatic nawabs (Muslim ruling princes), the temple was occupied by a garrison and temple rituals ceased. Now it's once again a place of worship.

Sleeping & Eating

Vellore's cheapest hotels are concentrated along the roads south of and parallel to the hospital, mostly catering to people in town for treatment; there are many to choose from on Beri Babu Rao St. Decent midrange hotels are scattered further afield.

Hotel Gayathri (☎ 2227714; 22 Beri Babu Rao St; s/d Rs 140/170) This dingy place has impersonal service and squat toilets, but at least the shared balconies let in some light.

Hotel Ashtapathi (☎ 2224602; Ida Scudder St; r without/with AC Rs 325/525;) It's small, clean and good value here, but ask for a room off the noisy roadside. There's a decent veg restaurant attached.

Ismail Residency (☎ 2223216; Ida Scudder St; r Rs 400;) A five-room lodge with tatty but spotless rooms, this is next door to the clean Hotel Arthy restaurant.

Hotel River View (☎ 2225251; New Katpadi Rd; d without/with AC Rs 470/700;) North of the town centre and close to the bus station, this hotel benefits from a relatively quiet location and pleasant gardens, but the 'river view' is hardly that. Rooms are spacious, the Shikar garden restaurant serves a barbecue every evening and there's a bar.

Darling Residency (☎ 2213001; 11/8 Officers Line; s/d Rs 750/850;) Recognised as the best hotel in town, the rooms here are clean and comfortable, and there's even a small fitness room with exercise bike. The rooftop Aranya Roof Garden Restaurant (open lunch and dinner) is cool and breezy, serving salads (Rs 25), a variety of pasta, tandoor oven and Chinese food for around Rs 60, and good ice cream. It's recommended by visiting medicos and locals alike.

Cheap veg restaurants line Ida Scudder St, or try Gyan Vaishnav Dhaba (thalis Rs 25) for good Punjabi food.

Getting There & Away

BUS

The bus stand is about 500m from the Hotel River View, 1.5km to the north of town. For services, see above.

TRAIN

Vellore's main train station is 5km north at Katpadi. Bus 192 (Rs 2) shuttles between the station and town. There are at least six daily express trains to/from Chennai Central (2nd class/sleeper Rs 42/67), which continue to Bengaluru (Rs 65/104).

TIRUVANNAMALAI

☎ 04175 / pop 130,301

The small, unassuming town of Tiruvannamalai, 85km south of Vellore, is something of a hidden gem in a region overwhelmed by significant temples. Flanked by Mt Arunachala, this is an important Shaivite town where Shiva is revered as Arunachaleswar, an aspect of fire. At each full moon the hill swells with thousands of pilgrims who circumnavigate the base of the mountain, but at any time you'll see gatherings of Shaivite priests, sadhus (spiritual men) and devotees gathered around the temple. Tiruvannamalai is also home to the Sri Ramanasramam Ashram.

The main post office is just off the road to Gingee; there are several internet cafés in town and opposite the ashram. Although the State Bank of India won't change travellers cheques, its ATM accepts international cards.

Sights & Activities

ARUNACHALESWAR TEMPLE

Covering some 10 hectares, this vast temple (🕒 6am-1pm & 5.30-10pm) is one of the largest, and most captivating, in India. Although it dates from the 11th century, much of the structure is actually from the 17th to 19th centuries. It has four large unpainted gopurams, one at each cardinal point, with the eastern one rising to 66m with 13 storeys.

The main (eastern) entrance to the temple is reached by a covered walkway lined with trinket sellers, merchants, half-naked sadhus and orange-clad priests – the atmosphere here in the evenings is noisy and electric. You may be approached to donate rice cakes for the poor that, at Rs 50 for 10, you can then hand to recipients; this may be preferable to handing a few rupees to a beggar. Once inside the temple, there's a 1000-pillared mandapa on the right and the large tank on the left, then another gateway leads through a central courtyard containing the main shrine, a Shiva lingam where puja is performed daily at 8am, 10am, 6pm, 8pm and 9.30pm. You're likely to wander here comfortably without attracting too much attention.

MT ARUNACHALA

This 800m-high boulder-strewn hill, known locally as Girivalam, looms over the town. On full-moon and festival days thousands of pilgrims circumnavigate the 14km base of the mountain. If you're not quite that devoted, an autorickshaw will take you around – stopping at small temples and shrines along the way – for around Rs 120. An alternative is to pick up a circle map from the ashram office, hire a bicycle (per hour Rs 3) from the road near the entrance, and bike your way around.

For a superb view of the Arunachaleswar Temple, climb part or all the way up the hill (about four hours return). There's a signed path that leads up through village homes near the northwest corner of the temple, passing two caves, Virupaksha and Skandasramam. Sri Ramana Maharshi lived and meditated in these caves for more than 20 years from 1899 to 1922, after which he and his growing band of spiritual followers established the ashram.

SRI RAMANA ASHRAM

This tranquil ashram (☎ 237292; www.ramana-maharshi.org; 🕒 office 8am-11am & 2-5pm), 2km southwest of Tiruvannamalai, draws devotees of Sri Ramana Maharshi, a guru who died in 1950 after nearly 50 years in contemplation. It's a very relaxed place, set in green surrounds, where visitors are able to meditate or take part in puja at the shrine where the guru achieved samadhi (ecstatic state involving conscious exit from the body) and to use the bookshop. Day visits are permitted but devotees only may stay at the ashram by applying in writing, preferably at least three months in advance.

THE LINGAM OF FIRE

Legend has it that Shiva appeared as a column of fire on Mt Arunachala in Tiruvannamalai, creating the original symbol of the lingam. Each November/December full moon, the Karthikai Deepam Festival, one of India's oldest festivals, celebrates this legend throughout India but the festival is particularly significant at Tiruvannamalai. Here, a huge fire, lit from a 30m wick immersed in 2000L of ghee, blazes from the top of Mt Arunachala for days. In homes, lamps honour Shiva and his fiery lingam. The fire symbolises Shiva's light, which eradicates darkness and evil.

At festival time up to half a million people come to Tiruvannamalai. In honour of Shiva, they scale the mountain or circumnavigate its base (14km). On the upward path, steps quickly give way to jagged and unstable rocks. There's no shade and the sun is relentless. And the journey must be undertaken in bare feet – a mark of respect to the deity. None of this deters the thousands of pilgrims who quietly and joyfully make their way to the top and the abode of their deity.

Sleeping & Eating

There are budget lodges in the busy area around the temple and in the calmer surrounds near the ashram. During festival time (November/December) prices can rise by a staggering 1000%.

Arunachala Ramana Home (☎ 236120; s/d Rs 150/200) Recommended as basic, clean and friendly. It's close to the fabulous Manna Café which will answer any need you may have for non-Indian food, including salads (Rs 25), juices, pastas and cakes. Plenty of chai (tea) stalls and veg cafés are nearby.

Hotel Ganesh (☎ 2226701; 111A Big St; d without/with AC Rs 245/645;) On the busy bazaar road running along the north side of the temple, Ganesh is a little haven of peace and excellent value. Some of the rooms are a bit poky, but they're clean enough and the hotel's inner courtyard balcony is a pleasant place to sit. There's a decent veg restaurant downstairs.

Hotel Arunai Anantha (☎ 237275; hotelarunai anantha@yahoo.co.in; s/d Rs 1100/1250;) The big draws at this hotel, about 1km beyond the ashram, are the landscaped gardens and swimming pool. For deluxe rooms add Rs 300; they're worth it for the extra size and comfort.

Getting There & Away

There are buses every half-hour to Chennai (Rs 62, 3½ hours) and Vellore (Rs 23, two hours). There are at least three daily buses to Puducherry (Rs 31, three hours). A taxi to Puducherry (via Gingee) costs around Rs 800.

Only local passenger trains currently use Tiruvannamalai train station – two trains a day pass through between Vellore and Villupuram (where you can change for Puducherry).

GINGEE (SENJI)

☎ 04145

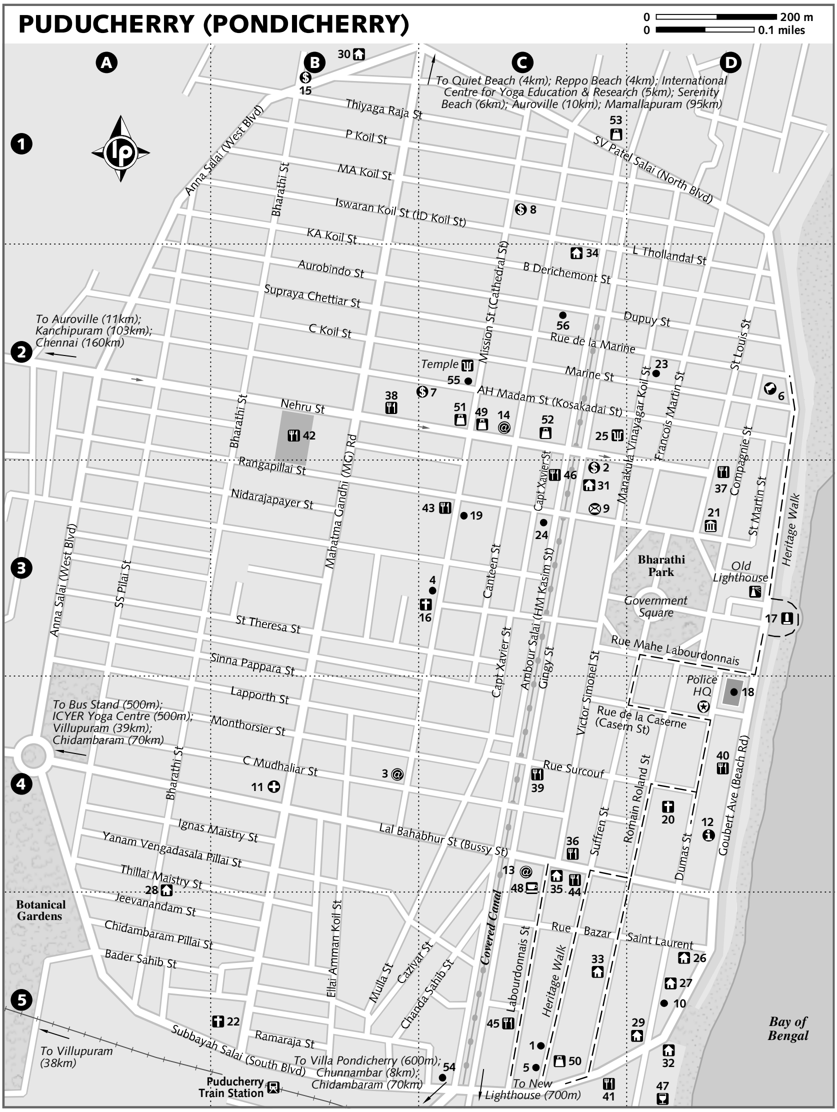
The twin ruined forts of Rajagiri & Krishnagiri (King & Queen Fort; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; 9am-5pm) crown the hilltops as you pass through rural countryside near Gingee (shin-gee), 37km east of Tiruvannamalai. Constructed mainly in the 16th century by the Vijayanagars (though some structures date from the 13th century), the fort has been occupied by various armies, including the forces of Adil Shah from Bijapur and the Marathas, who assumed control from 1677. In 1698 the Mughals took over. Then came the French, who remained until the British defeated them at Puducherry.

Nowadays the forts are delightfully free of human activity – except for the odd picnicker or herd of goats you may find you've got the place to yourself. A walk around will take half a day, especially if you cross the road and make the steep ascent to the top of Krishnagiri. Buildings within the main fort (on the south side of the road) include a granary, a Shiva temple, a mosque and – most prominent – the restored audience hall.

It's easy to day trip to Gingee from Puducherry (67km) or Tiruvannamalai (37km). Buses leave every 30 minutes from Tiruvannamalai (Rs 11.50, one hour). Ask to be let off at 'the fort', 2km before Gingee town. An autorickshaw from Gingee to the fort costs about Rs 25 one way.

PUDUCHERRY (PONDICHERRY)

☎ 0413 / pop 220,749



With its seafront promenade, wide boulevards, enduring pockets of French culture and architecture, and a popular ashram, charming Puducherry – whose name officially changed from Pondicherry in October 2006 – is unlike anywhere else in South India. That's hardly surprising – the former French colony was settled in the early 18th century as a colonial enclave and it retains a mildly Gallic air superimposed on a typical Indian background.

The French relinquished their control of the Union Territory of 'Pondy' (as the city is still universally known) some 50 years ago, but reminders of the colonial days remain; the tricoleur flutters over the grand French consulate, there's a hôtel de ville (town hall), and local police wear red kepis (caps) and belts. Don't expect a subcontinental Paris though – this is still India, with all the autorickshaws, choked streets, bazaars and Hindu temples of any city.

A big draw in Puducherry is its alluring restaurants – many serving an approximation of French cuisine – and some superb hotels that make use of the town's French architectural heritage. Without the crippling taxes of Tamil Nadu, beer is relatively cheap and accommodation good value.

Many travellers come here to study yoga or meditation at the Sri Aurobindo Ashram, so there's always a large contingent of foreigners in Puducherry. In any case, this easy-going coastal city is firmly on the travellers' itinerary and you may find yourself staying here longer than you had intended.

PUDUCHERRY (PONDICHERRY)

Orientation

Puducherry is split from north to south by a partially covered canal. The more 'French' part of town is on the east side (towards the sea) and the more typically Indian part to the west. With its grid design, navigating the town is easy, but there are still some eccentricities with street names. Many have one name at one end and another at the other, while others use the French 'rue' instead of 'street'. See the boxed text, opposite, for more information.

Information

Puducherry keeps European hours and takes a long lunch break; expect most businesses to be closed from about 1pm to 3.30pm.

Sights & Activities

FRENCH QUARTER

The best way to view the slightly tattered heritage buildings and broad streets of the French Quarter (bounded roughly by NSC Bose St, SV Patel Rd and Goubert Ave) is to take Puducherry's heritage walk. Start at the north end of Goubert Ave, the seafront promenade, and wander south, past the French consulate and the Gandhi Statue. Turn right at the town hall on Rue Mahe Labourdonnais, past the shady Bharathi Park. From there it's a matter of pottering south through Dumas, Romain Rolland and Suffren Sts. Focus Books (p1059) sells heritage walking trail brochures (Rs 9).

SRI AUROBINDO ASHRAM

Founded in 1926 by Sri Aurobindo and a Frenchwoman known as 'the Mother', this ashram (cnr rue de la Marine & Manakula Vinayagar Koil St) propounds spiritual tenets that represent a synthesis of yoga and modern science. After Aurobindo's death spiritual authority passed to the Mother, who died in 1973 aged 97. These days, the ashram underwrites many cultural, educational and social welfare activities in Puducherry.

A constant flow of visitors files through the main ashram building (8am-noon & 2-6pm Mon-Sat), which has the flower-festooned samadhi (tomb venerated as a shrine) of Aurobindo and the Mother in the central courtyard, where devotees gather and meditate. Opposite the main building, in the educational centre, you can sometimes catch a film, play or lecture, and there are occasional evening music performances in the library. For other information, call at the ashram information centre (☎ 2233604; bureaucentral@sriaurobindoashram.org; cnr Rangapillai & Ambour Salai; 6am-8pm).

PUDUCHERRY MUSEUM

This museum (St Louis St; adult/child Rs 2/1; 9.40am-1pm & 2-5.20pm Tue-Sun), housed in an interesting old colonial building, features a well-presented collection, including sculptures from the Pallava and Chola dynasties, fine bronzes, coins and an archaeological display of artefacts from the days of Roman trade with India. There's a striking collection of French colonial paraphernalia which includes a 19th-century pousse pousse (like a rickshaw, except pushed along), a horse-drawn carriage, colonial furniture, an antique grandfather clock and a bed slept in by the peripatetic Dupleix, the colony's most famous governor.

CHURCHES & TEMPLES

Puducherry has several churches built by French missionaries which contribute greatly to the city's Mediterranean flair. The Church of Our Lady of the Immaculate Conception (Mission St) was completed in 1791. Its medieval architecture is in the style of many of the Jesuit constructions of that time. The Sacred Heart Church (Subbayah Salai) is an impressive sight with its Gothic architecture, stained glass and striking brown and white colours. The mellow pink-and-cream Notre Dame de Anges (Dumas St), built in 1858, looks sublime in the late afternoon light. The smooth limestone interior was made using eggshells in the plaster.

Although Puducherry is not often associated with temples, the Hindu faith is celebrated here with as much vigour as anywhere – there are said to be more than 150 temples in the Puducherry area and you'll often stumble across the entrance to an almost-hidden temple while wandering the central streets, particularly west of the canal. One of the most vibrant in the city is Sri Manakula Vinayagar Temple (Manakula Vinayagar Koil St; 5.45am-12.30pm & 4-9.30pm), dedicated to Ganesh. Renovations have furnished its sanctum with Rajasthan marble and its vimana (a tower over the sanctum) with a gold roof. It's tucked away down a backstreet just south of the Sri Aurobindo Ashram, and also contains more than 40 skilfully painted friezes.

BOTANICAL GARDENS

Established by the French in 1826, the botanical gardens (admission free; 10am-5pm) form a green oasis on the southwest side of the city.

BEACHES

The long stretch of city 'beach' is virtually devoid of sand, but the promenade is a fun place to walk at dawn and dusk when it seems that all of Puducherry takes its daily constitutional exercise. There are a few decent beaches to the north and south of town; Quiet, Reppo and Serenity Beaches are all north of the centre within 8km of Puducherry. Chunnambar, 8km south, has Paradise Beach, some resort accommodation, water sports and backwater boat cruises. The tourist office (p1059) has details.

Courses

ARTS

Jayalakshmi Fine Arts Academy (☎ 2342036; goodsin@vsnl.net.in; 221 Mission St; 9.30am-1.30pm & 3.30-8.30pm Mon-Sat, 7am-12.30pm Sun) is an established place with classes in bharatanatyam (dance), singing, veena (stringed instrument), tabla (drums) and a range of other musical instruments. Private tuition fees start at Rs 200 per hour for a minimum of five hours, and there's a one-off registration fee (Rs 350).

YOGA & AYURVEDA

Puducherry's International Yoga Festival is held annually in early January.

International Centre for Yoga Education & Research (ICYER; ☎ 2241561; www.icyer.com; 16A Mettu St, Chinnamudaliarchavady, Kottukuppam) Also known as the Ananda Ashram, established by Swami Gitananda, this renowned centre conducts annual six-month yoga teacher-training courses and 10-day summer courses. Its city office is Yoganjali Natyalayam (25 2nd Cross Iyyana Nagar), near the bus stand.

Prana Ayurvedic Massage (☎ 2331214; 101 Canteen St) Ayurvedic massage (Rs 400 an hour), steam bath (Rs 150) and yoga classes (Rs 150 an hour). Inquire at Satsanga restaurant (p1062).

Sri Aurobindo Ashram (☎ 23396483; bureaucentral@sriaurobindoashram.org; Rangapillai St) Study and/or practise yoga (see also opposite).

Tours

The Puducherry tourist office runs half-day sightseeing tours (Rs 90, 2pm to 6pm) that take you to the water sports complex at Chunnambar, Hanuman Temple, Auroville and Sri Aurobindo Ashram. Full-day tours (Rs 110, 9.30am to 6pm) cover the same area plus the botanical gardens, paper factory, Sacred Heart Church and a couple of Hindu temples; both tours need a minimum of six people to operate.

Sleeping

Puducherry has some of South India's best accommodation in the midrange and top-end bracket – charming old colonial houses and gorgeously decorated guesthouses. At the budget end there's ashram accommodation and basic Indian lodges. The most pleasant part of town is east of the canal, but accommodation is scattered far and wide.

BUDGET

If you've come to Puducherry to sample ashram life, the best budget places are the guesthouses run by Sri Aurobindo Ashram. They're well maintained, well located and you'll be around like-minded souls. However, the accommodation is set up for ashram devotees, and rules include a 10.30pm curfew, and smoking and alcohol ban. For information and reservations, contact the information centre (☎ 2233604; bureaucentral@sriaurobindoashram.org; cnr Rangapillai & Ambour Salai Sts; 6am-8pm).

Surya Swastika Guest House (☎ 2343092; 11 Iswaran Koil St; d without/with bathroom Rs 100/150) You get just what you pay for in this small old-style guesthouse, with its simple rooms.

International Guest House (☎ 2336699; Gingy St; old wing from Rs 100, new from Rs 450;) The most central of the ashram guesthouses, this large, ordered place fronts the canal in the city centre.

Park Guest House (☎ 233644; Goubert Ave; d without/with AC Rs 400/600;) This is the most sought-after ashram address in town thanks to its wonderful seafront position. All front rooms point to the sea and have their own porch or balcony, and there's a large lawn area for morning yoga or meditation.

MIDRANGE & TOP END

Ganga Guest House (☎ 2222675; 479 Bharathi St; r Rs 500-600) A fabulous colonnaded old house, decked out in deep reds and yellows and awash in Bollywood posters, offers rooms here. Those on the rooftop get a breeze, and some have balconies.

Villa Pondicherry (☎ 2356253; www.pondy.org; 23 Dr Ambedkar Salai; d with shared/private bathroom from Rs 550/650;) This ageing but charming colonial family residence is about 1km south of the train station next to St Francis Xavier Church. The five rooms and central lounge certainly have character and fun décor, but some may find it a little too homely. It's not well signposted – look for the red door and small brass plaque under the veranda.

Dumas Guest House (☎ 2225726; 31 Dumas St; s/d Rs 600/750;) A tall, thin rabbit warren of nooks and crannies, this tidy six-room guesthouse opened in 2006 in a good location.

Ajantha Beach Guest House (☎ 2338898; 1 rue Bazar St Laurent; d with sea view Rs 600-1200;) The location is the main selling point for this place – right on the beachfront promenade. The four sea-view rooms are plain but comfortable and have balconies; the others are drab and windowless.

Hotel Surguru (☎ 2339022; www.hotelsurguru.com; 104 SV Patel Salai; s/d Rs 730/890;) If you're content in a comfortable but characterless business-type hotel, Surguru is the best value in Puducherry. It's large and modern, with bright, spacious rooms and satellite TV. There's a good veg restaurant and credit cards are accepted.

Hotel de Pondichery (☎ 2227409; 38 Dumas St; r from Rs 1350-2450; ❄) Yet another heritage home, this recently renovated place has 10 lovely colonial-style rooms and outdoor sitting terraces. It's more old-world than luxurious but rooms are private and quiet, set back from the courtyard restaurant.

Villa Helena (☎ 2226789; villahelena@satyam.net.in; 22 Lal Bahabhur St; r Rs 1500-2500; ❄) This is a superb colonial home with a touch of class at reasonable prices. The five rooms are immaculate and individually designed and the spacious courtyard is elegant and tranquil. If it's full, ask about the owner's other properties.

Ajantha Sea View (☎ 2349032; www.ajanthaseaview hotel.com; 50 Goubert Ave; r from Rs 1750; ❄) With full beachfront balconies, these rooms have the best view in town. Go for the corner deluxe rooms, full of light with windows on two sides.

Patricia Coloniale Heritage Guest House (☎ 2224 720; colonialeheritage@rediffmail.com; 54 Romain Roland St; r incl breakfast Rs 1800-3000; ❄) For an intimate, peaceful stay, Patricia's is hard to beat. The delightful colonial home is run by a friendly family and the six rooms all have exotic but original character with stained-glass window panes, traditional Indian furniture and a lovely central garden where breakfast is served in a sunken courtyard. If it's full, ask the owners about their other properties.

Eating

If you've been on the road in Tamil Nadu for a while you'll find Puducherry's restaurant scene a revelation. There are several French-Indian places, some good open-air restaurants, beer is relatively cheap and you can sample both Indian and imported wines. At the other end of the scale, you can eat cheaply at the ashram. Places listed are open for breakfast, lunch and dinner unless otherwise specified.

La Coromandale (30 Goubert Ave; mains Rs 30) As the saying goes, the simple things in life are often the best. Tasty South Indian thalis, rice, noodles, cold drinks and a relaxed atmosphere for meeting and chatting are the attractions of this open-fronted restaurant, situated on the promenade and popular with locals.

Coffee.Com (☎ 2339079; 236 Mission St; ⏰ 10am-1am) This internet café and meeting spot serves up great baguettes (Rs 50 to 70), pasta dishes (Rs 130 to 180), good coffee, pastries and milkshakes.

kasha ki aasha (☎ 2222963; www.kasha-ki-aasha .com; 23 rue Surcouf; ⏰ 8am-7pm, closed Sun) You'll get a great pancake breakfast, good lunches (try the European-style thali) and delicious cakes served on the pretty rooftop of this colonial house-cum-craftshop-cum-café. Loll on comfy chairs under the fans, read magazines, drink organic tea and coffee and chat with the all-women staff.

Hotel Aristo (Nehru St; mains around Rs 80-150; ⏰ lunch & dinner Sat-Thu) The rooftop restaurant at Aristo continues to be a great choice and is usually crowded in the evenings. Dishes include walnut chicken with brown rice (delicious but generally made with cashews!) and grilled prawns. A small Kingfisher (known here as 'secret tea') is Rs 40.

La Terrasse (☎ 2220809; 5 Subbayah Salai; pizzas Rs 80-175; ⏰ Thu-Tue) This simple semi-open-air place near the southern end of the promenade has a wide menu but is deservedly best known for good pizzas and safe salads. No alcohol is served.

Au Feu de Bois (☎ 2341821; 28 Lal Bahabhur St; pizzas Rs 100-140; ⏰ lunch & dinner Tue-Sun) With a wood-fired pizza oven, this no-frills place serves pizzas only in its small rooftop courtyard and rustic dining room.

Satsanga (☎ 2225867; 30-32 Labourdonnais St; mains around Rs 100-150) In the covered backyard of a rambling colonial house, Satsanga serves up tasty French and Italian food and is a good place for a casual salad lunch (Rs 70) or dinner. It's also great for breakfast from 9am (Rs 25 to 50) – freshly baked bread, crepes, fruit and yogurt – or coffee with the morning paper in hand, relaxing in low-slung chairs under the balcony.

Rendezvous (☎ 2330238; 30 Suffren St; mains Rs 100-275; ⏰ lunch & dinner Wed-Mon) The food here is regarded by many locals and expats as the best in town. Served rooftop or in AC comfort, the menu includes such French classics as bouillabaisse, quiches and coq au vin (chicken with red wine), along with burgers, pizzas, Indian and Chinese. Wine as well as beer is served.

SELF-CATERING

Nilgiri Supermarket (cnr Mission & Rangapillai Sts; ⏰ 9.30am-9pm) A well-stocked, modern place in which to shop for groceries in air-conditioned comfort. Credit cards are accepted.

Grinde Sridharan General Merchants (☎ 2221232; grspondy@sify.com; 25 St Louis St; ⏰ 9am-1pm & 4-9pm Mon-Sat) An excellent, long-established grocery store with plenty of imported goods and an exchange facility for cash and travellers cheques.

Neighbouring bakeries Your Daily Bread and Hot Breads are on Ambour Salai, selling terrific French bread, croissants and other baked goodies from 7am daily. The main fresh produce market is west of MG Rd, between Nehru and Rangapillai Sts.

Drinking & Entertainment

With low taxes on alcohol, Puducherry has a reputation for cheap booze. The reality is you'll really only find cheap beer (Rs 30) in 'liquor shops' or the darkened bars attached to them. While you can sometimes get a large Kingfisher for Rs 60, the better restaurants charge up to Rs 100. There are a few exceptions and the greatest concentration of local bars can be found along the northern stretch of Anna Salai (West Blvd).

Seagulls Restaurant (19 Dumas St; 11.30am-11.30pm) Although this is a restaurant, the waiters generally look bewildered if you order food. But the location, with a balcony overlooking the sea and views north along the promenade, makes it great for a beer (cheap at Rs 60) on a warm evening; an expansive downstairs veranda was being constructed when we visited.

Coffee.Com (☎ 2339079; www.coffeedotcom.net; 236 Mission St; 10am-1am) Puducherry's cosmopolitan vibe is typified by this hip little internet hang-out. It's a meeting place where you can go online, read magazines, drink espresso coffee and there's a widescreen TV and a selection of DVDs (Rs 100 per hour).

Space Coffee & Arts (☎ 2356253; 2 Labourdonnais St; 6pm-midnight) Space is a funky little semi-open-air café for juice, coffee or beer (Rs 75) and tapas (from Rs 60) in the evening, and it's also a gallery and performing-arts venue with traditional dance often performed on Saturday.

Shopping

Shopping in Puducherry, especially on Nehru St, Mission St and MG Rd, is a strange blend of Indian-bazaar-meets-Western-style opulence, with sari and textile stalls competing for space with modern, neon-lit speciality shops.

Sri Aurobindo Handmade Paper Factory (☎ 2334 763; 50 SV Patel Salai; 8.30am-noon & 1.30-5pm Mon-Sat) Fine handmade paper is sold at the shop here, and you can ask at the counter about tours of the factory. There's a wider choice of goods at Auroboutique near the ashram; all sales support its work.

Fabindia (☎ 2226010; www.fabindia.com; 59 Suffren St; 9.30am-7.30pm) Opposite Alliance Française, this shop has a stunning variety of quality woven goods and furnishings, traditionally made but with a contemporary feel; clothing, however, seems designed more for whippet-thin models than for most people. In operation since 1960, one of its selling points is its 'fair, equitable and helpful relationship' with the village producers of the goods. Upstairs is the very good French Bookshop (p1059).

La Boutique d'Auroville (Nehru St; 9.30am-1pm & 3.30-8pm Mon-Sat) It's fun browsing through the crafts here, including jewellery, batiks, kalamkari (similar to batik) drawings, carpets and woodcarvings; you can also pick

Getting There & Away

BUS

The bus stand is 500m west of town. See p1063 for details of services.

TAXI

Air-conditioned taxis from Puducherry to Chennai cost around Rs 2700 and to Chennai airport Rs 2500.

TRAIN

There are two direct services a day to Chennai (Rs 58, five hours), and one to Tirupathy. There's a computerised booking service for southern trains at the station.

Getting Around

One of the best ways to get around is by walking. Large three-wheelers shuttle between the bus stand and Gingy St for Rs 5, but they're hopelessly overcrowded. Cycle- and autorickshaws are plentiful – an autorickshaw across town costs about Rs 30.

Since the streets are broad and flat, the most popular transport is pedal power. Bicycle hire shops line many of the streets, especially MG Rd and Mission St. You'll also find hire shops in Subbayah Salai and Goubert Ave. The usual rental is Rs 5 per hour, or Rs 20 per day, but some places ask Rs 70.

Mopeds or motorbikes are useful for getting out to the beaches or to Auroville and can be rented from a number of shops and street stalls. The going rate is Rs 100 a day for a gearless scooter and Rs 125 for a motorbike, with a discount for several days' hire. You need to show some ID (such as a driving licence) and leave Rs 500 deposit. Try Vijay Arya (23 Aurobindo St) for moped hire.

AUROVILLE

Just over the border from Puducherry is the international community of Auroville – a project in 'human unity' that has ballooned to encompass more than 80 rural settlements spread over 20km, and about 1800 residents. Two-thirds of these are foreigners, representing around 38 different nationalities.

Auroville is not a tourist attraction, and casual visitors may find it a bit bewildering and unwelcoming. Each settlement has its own area of work interest and expertise – from traditional medicinal plants to renewable energy to organic farming to women's groups, to name just a few – and most Aurovillians are busy simply getting on with their work and lives in these communities off the main road. But if you're at all interested in the philosophy it's worth the ride out to the visitors centre to find out how it all works, to eat some great food at the café, and maybe stay at a guesthouse in one of the settlements that suits your interests.

At the spiritual and physical centre of Auroville is an astonishing structure called the Matrimandir, looking something like a cross between a giant golden golf ball and a NASA space project. It contains a silent inner chamber lined with white marble and housing a solid crystal (the largest in the world) 70cm in diameter. Rays from the sun are beamed into this crystal from a tracking mirror in the roof. On cloudy days, solar lamps do the job. But you won't actually see this; the Matrimandir is not open to casual visitors. A section of the gardens (10am-1pm & 2-4.30pm daily except Sun afternoon), from which you can see the structure, can be visited; you need to pick up a pass (free) from the information service (below).

Information

There's a photographic exhibition and video room at the Auroville Information Service (admission free; 9am-1pm & 1.30-5.30pm), which also issues garden passes for external views of the Matrimandir (from 9.45am to 12.30pm and 1.45pm to 4pm only). In the same complex, the visitors centre (☎ 2622239; www.auroville.org; 9am-6pm) contains a bookshop, café, and Boutique d'Auroville, which sells Aurovillian handicrafts.

Sleeping & Eating

People with a serious interest in the aims of Auroville can stay with any one of the 40 community groups here. A stay of no shorter than

AUROVILLE: THE INTERNATIONAL VISION

Auroville is the brainchild of the Mother, 'an experiment in international living where people could live in peace and progressive harmony above all creeds, politics and nationalities'. Designed by French architect Roger Anger, its opening ceremony on 28 February 1968 was attended by the president of India and representatives of 124 countries, who poured the soil of their lands into an urn to symbolise universal oneness.

The geographical layout of Auroville was seen as a reflection of this striving for unity. At the community's centre stands the Matrimandir, which the Mother called the soul of Auroville. Four zones – cultural, international, industrial and residential – were to radiate out from the Matrimandir to cover an area of 25 sq km, although as yet only 10 sq km has been realised.

In the words of the Mother, the founding vision of Auroville is that 'There should be somewhere upon earth a place that no nation could claim as its sole property, a place where all human beings of goodwill, sincere in their aspiration, could live freely as citizens of the world…'

a week is preferred and while work isn't obligatory, it's much appreciated. Accommodation isn't offered in exchange for work; rooms range from Rs 150 to 1000, and guests are also required to contribute Rs 60 per day for the 'maintenance and development' of Auroville.

There are more than 40 guesthouses in Auroville. The best way to find what you're looking for – that is, to match your interests with the community you'll stay in – is to check out the website and, preferably, get suggestions from and make arrangements with the Auroville Guest Service (☎ 2622704; avguests@auroville.org.in) before arriving.

Although there are stores and small roadside eateries in Auroville, and communities have communal dining areas, many Aurovillians gather at the Solar Kitchen – powered by solar energy – which dishes out more than 400 meals daily from its buffet. The café at the visitors centre is open to day visitors.

Getting There & Away

The best way to enter Auroville is from the coast road, at the village of Periyar Mudaliarchavadi, near the turn-off to Repos Beach. Ask around as it's not well signposted. A return autorickshaw ride is about Rs 150, but a better option is to hire a moped or bicycle. It's about 12km from Puducherry to the visitors centre.

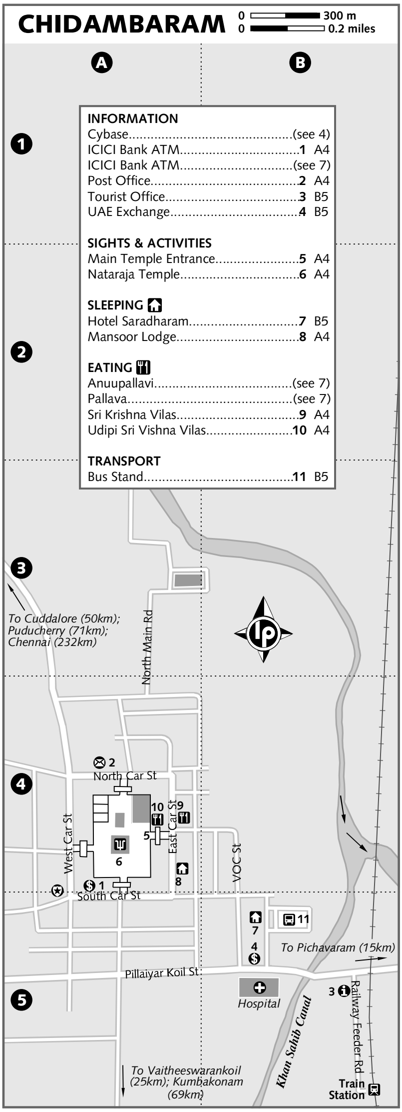
CHIDAMBARAM

☎ 04144 / pop 67,942

Chidambaram's great temple complex of Nataraja, the dancing Shiva, is a Dravidian architectural highlight and one of the holiest Shiva sites in South India. Chidambaram can be visited as a day trip from Puducherry, or as a stopover between Puducherry and Kumbakonam or Trichy.

Of the many festivals, the two largest are the 10-day chariot festivals, which are celebrated in April/May and December/January. In February/March the five-day Natyanjali Dance Festival attracts performers from all over the country to celebrate Nataraja – the Lord of Dances.

Orientation & Information



The small town is developed around the Nataraja Temple with streets named after the cardinal points. This is an easy town for walking, with accommodation close to the temple and the bus stand a five-minute walk to the southeast. The train station is about 1km further south.

Cybase (Pillaiyar Koil St; 9am-9pm) Fast internet access.
ICICI Bank ATM (Hotel Saradharam & South Car St)
Post office (North Car St; 10am-3pm Mon-Sat)
Tourist office (☎ 238739; Railway Feeder Rd; 9am-5pm Mon-Fri) You may be able to pick up a brochure but the office is frequently deserted.
UAE Exchange (Pillaiyar Koil St; Mon-Sat) The only place in town to exchange money.

Sights

NATARAJA TEMPLE

Chidambaram's star attraction, this Shiva temple (courtyard & shrines 6am-12.30pm & 4-10.30pm) draws a regular stream of pilgrims and visitors. The region was a Chola capital from 907 to 1310 and the Nataraja Temple was erected during the later time of the administration. The high-walled 22-hectare complex has four towering gopurams with finely sculptured icons depicting Hindu myths. The temple is renowned for its prime examples of Chola artistry and has since been patronised by numerous dynasties. The main temple entrance is at the east gopuram, off East Car St.

In the northeast of the complex, to the right as you enter, is the 1000-pillared Raja Sabha (King's Hall), open only on festival days, and to the left of that is the Sivaganga (Temple Tank) – guides will explain the stories from paintings and sculptures that surround it. In the southeast of the complex is an impressive statue of the elephant-headed god, Ganesh.

Directly opposite the main entrance a large statue of Shiva's escort, Nandi, looks towards the hall leading to the inner sanctum. Although non-Hindus are officially not allowed inside the gold-roofed inner sanctum itself, it's possible to walk down the corridor and observe rituals such as the fire ceremony (usually held before the afternoon and evening closing), where worshippers light goblets of fire and bells clang. Afternoon puja at around 5pm is also worth seeing.

Brahmin priests will usually take you in for a fee (anywhere from Rs 30 up to 300, depending on the language skills and knowledge of the guide) and guide you around the temple complex. Since the Brahmins work as a cooperative to fund the temple you may wish to support this magnificent building by way of donation (or hiring a guide), but don't feel bound to do so.

Sleeping & Eating

Chidambaram has many cheap pilgrims' lodges clustered around the temple.

Hotel Saradharam (☎ 221336; www.hotelsaradharam.co.in; 19 VGP St; d without/with AC Rs 500/800;) The busy and friendly Hotel Saradharam is the top hotel in town and is conveniently located across from the bus stand. It's starting to look its age, though.

If you're on a budget and need to stay here overnight, possibly the best of the pilgrims' lodges is Mansoor Lodge (☎ 221072; 91 East Car St; s/d Rs 150/200), close to the temple with clean, good-value rooms.

Predictably, the best places to eat are in hotels. Anuupallavi (mains Rs 25-70; lunch & dinner) is an excellent AC multicuisine restaurant; in the same hotel is a veg restaurant, Pallava (breakfast, lunch & dinner). Near the temple entrance, Udipi Sri Vishna Vilas (thalis Rs 25; breakfast, lunch & dinner) is a busy, clean place for South Indian veg food and thalis, as is Sri Krishna Vilas across the road.

Getting There & Away

The bus stand is very central – within walking distance to the temple and accommodation.

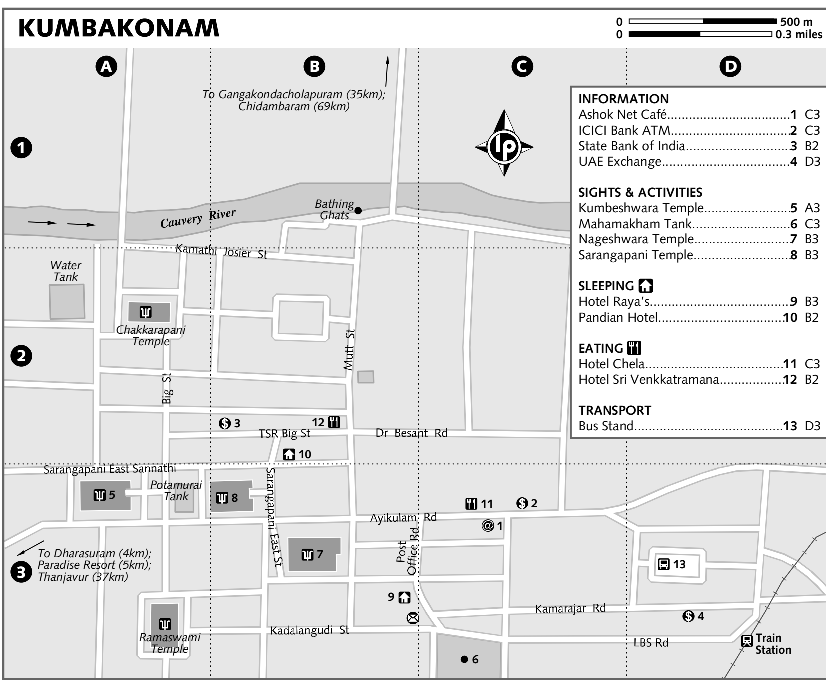
There are hourly buses to Chennai; bus 157 (Rs 75, seven hours) is the quickest. Puducherry (Rs 21, two hours) and Kumbakonam (Rs 22, 2½ hours) buses run regularly. There are also direct buses to Madurai (Rs 120, eight hours, five daily).

Chidambaram is on a metre gauge rail line rather than a main line but the train is useful for getting to Kumbakonam, where you can change trains for Thanjavur or Trichy. There's one daily express train to Kumbakonam (2nd class/sleeper Rs 31/49, two hours) and several passenger trains. The station is a 20-minute walk southeast of the temple (Rs 30 by autorickshaw).

AROUND CHIDAMBARAM

About 15km east of town, Pichavaram is an area of tidal canals and backwaters, fringed by mangroves. You can spend a pleasant hour or two being rowed around the waterways and enjoying the bird life and calm surrounds. Boat hire (per hour Rs 125; maximum five people) is available every day, and is busy with local visitors at the weekend. A basic three-room guesthouse (per room Rs 265) is available beside the boat-hire place, and you can order food there.

KUMBAKONAM



☎ 0435 / pop 160,827

Kumbakonam is a busy, dusty commercial centre, nestled along the Cauvery River some 37km northeast of Thanjavur. Here you can visit the many superb Chola temples scattered around town, or head east to the coastal towns of the Cauvery Delta. It's also an easy day trip from Thanjavur.

There's no tourist office in Kumbakonam, and road names and signs here are more erratic than usual. The best place to exchange travellers cheques is at the UAE Exchange (☎ 2423212; 134 Kamarajar Rd) near the train station. You'll find an ICICI Bank ATM almost opposite Ashok Net Café (☎ 2433054; 24 Ayikulam Rd; per hr Rs 20; 9am-10.30pm).

Sights

Dozens of colourfully painted gopurams point skyward from Kumbakonam's 18 temples, most dedicated to Shiva or Vishnu, but probably only the most dedicated temple-goer would tackle visiting more than a few. All temples are open from 6am to noon and 4pm to 10pm, and admission is free.

The largest Vishnu temple in Kumbakonam, with a 50m-high east gate, is Sarangapani Temple, just off Ayikulam Rd. The temple shrine, in the form of a chariot, was the work of the Cholas during the 12th century.

Kumbeshwara Temple, about 200m west and entered via a nine-storey gopuram, is the largest Shiva temple. It contains a lingam said to have been made by Shiva himself when he mixed the nectar of immortality with sand.

The 12th-century Nageshwara Temple, from the Chola dynasty, is also dedicated to Shiva in the guise of Nagaraja, the serpent king. On three days of the year (in April or May) the sun's rays fall on the lingam. The main shrine here is in the form of a chariot.

The huge Mahamakham Tank, 600m southeast of the Nageshwara Temple, is the most sacred in Kumbakonam. It's believed that every 12 years the waters of the Ganges flow into the tank, and at this time a festival is held; the next is due in 2016.

Sleeping & Eating

Kumbakonam's hotels and restaurants are nothing to write home about but there are plenty to choose from, especially along Ayikulam Rd and the busy bazaar, TSR Big St.

Pandian Hotel (☎ 2430397; hotelrayas@yahoo.co.in; 52 Sarangapani East St; s/d Rs 140/200) This budget hotel is popular; rooms are standard issue with mildewed walls but the bathrooms are astonishingly clean.

Hotel Raya's (☎ 2422545; 18 Post Office Rd; d without/with AC from Rs 500/850; ❄) With pictures of deities hanging everywhere, Raya's gets you in the mood for some temple hopping. Its rooms are not luxurious but it's clean and comfortable and it's the best of the midrange places.

Paradise Resort (☎ 2416469; www.paradiseresortindia.com; Tanjore Rd Darasuram; s/d Rs 1750/1950; ❄) An atmospheric resort constructed around heritage buildings, the rooms here have cool tiles and verandas overlooking quiet and spacious gardens. A swimming pool is planned.

Hotel Sri Venkkatramana (TSR Big Rd; thalis Rs 25; ⏲ breakfast, lunch & dinner) serves good fresh veg food and it's very popular with locals. At Hotel Chela (9 Ayikulam Rd; mains Rs 30-80; ⏲ lunch & dinner) there's a decent North Indian restaurant serving tandoori chicken (Rs 80).

Getting There & Away

The bus stand and train station are about 2km east of the town centre. For details of bus services, see above.

For the Cauvery Delta area there are buses running every half-hour to Karaikal (Rs 16, two hours), via Tranquebar and then on to Nagapattinam.

The overnight Rock Fort Express is the only major train to/from Chennai (sleeper/3AC Rs 130/365), going via Thanjavur and Trichy. Passenger trains run to Chidambaram (Rs 31, two hours) and Thanjavur.

AROUND KUMBAKONAM

Not far from Kumbakonam are two superb Chola temples at Dharasuram and Gangakondacholapuram. Comparatively few visitors go to these temples, and you can often appreciate their beauty in peace. Both can be visited on a day trip from Kumbakonam, or from Thanjavur (for Dharasuram) and Chidambaram (for Gangakondacholapuram).

Dharasuram

Only 4km west of Kumbakonam in the village of Dharasuram, the Airatesvara Temple (⏲ 6am-noon & 4-8pm), constructed by Raja Raja II (1146–63), is a superb example of 12th-century Chola architecture.

The temple is fronted by columns with unique miniature sculptures. In the 14th century, the row of large statues around the temple was replaced with brick and concrete statues similar to those found at the Thanjavur Temple. Many were removed to the art gallery in the raja's palace at Thanjavur, but they have since been returned to Dharasuram. The remarkable sculptures depict, among other things, Shiva as Kankalamurti – the mendicant. Stories from the epics are also depicted. At the main shrine, a huge decorated lingam stands, the natural light illuminating it from dawn to dusk.

You can get to Dharasuram by bus (Rs 5) or autorickshaw (Rs 60 return, including waiting time).

Gangakondacholapuram

This Brihadishwara Temple (6am-noon & 4-8pm), 35km north of Kumbakonam, was built by the Chola emperor Rajendra I (1012–44) in the style of the temple at Thanjavur, built by his father. Later additions were made in the 15th century by the Nayaks. The ornate tower is almost 55m high and weighs 80 tonnes. Within the recesses of the temple walls stand many beautiful statues, including those of Ganesh, Nataraja and Harihara.

Buses go from Kumbakonam bus stand to the temple every half-hour (Rs 11, 1½ hours); early morning is the quietest time to visit.

CAUVERY DELTA

The Cauvery River rises in the Western Ghats and flows eastwards before emptying into the Bay of Bengal. Its delta is a fertile farming area and there are a number of coastal towns of interest.

The Nagapattinam district here was the worst affected part of Tamil Nadu when the 2004 tsunami struck, with up to 7000 lives lost and thousands more left homeless. In 2006 damage was still evident all along the coast, and there were the many local and international aid agencies working in the area.

Tranquebar (Tharangambadi)

About 80km south of Chidambaram, Tranquebar was a Danish post, established in 1620. The solid, pink-hued seafront Danesborg Fort (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/50; 10am-1pm & 2-5.45pm, closed Fri), occupied by the British in 1801, houses a small but fascinating museum on the region's Danish history. The quiet roadway leading to the fort is entered by an impressive 1792 gateway, and an exuberant Sunday service is held in the nearby 1718 church.

Stay directly opposite the fort in the exquisitely comfortable heritage Bungalow on the Beach (04364-288065; www.neemranahotels.com; r from Rs 4000;); the pool was still under construction when we visited, but the rooms and views were fabulous. Just next door – and still with sea views – is its budget option Hotel Tamil Nadu (04364-288065; www.neemranahotels.com; r Rs 600). To get there take a bus from Chidambaram (Rs 28, 2½ hours).

Vailankanni (Velanganni)

04365 / pop 10,104

Vailankanni is the site of the Roman Catholic Basilica of Our Lady of Good Health and its associated sacred sites. Thousands of Christian pilgrims file through the impressive white neogothic structure, which was elevated to the status of basilica in 1962 during the Pope's visit.

An annual nine-day festival culminates on 8 September, the celebration of Mary's birth, and the weeks running up to it see many thousands of pilgrims walking the 300km or so from Chennai and elsewhere; the days before and during the festival see the town packed to bursting. There's a hectically devout but amiable atmosphere, with many interested Hindu visitors. Tragically, many pilgrims were here for Christmas when the 2004 tsunami struck. At least 2000 people were killed and 120 shops leading down to the beach were washed away. The church itself was untouched.

In town there are many lodges, especially in the square by the bus station and around the basilica. VJ Lodge (263861; r without/with AC Rs 250/500;) is a good, tatty and spotless option, or ask at the Church Rooms Booking Office, also on the square. Just out of town is Bethesda Inn (263336; Nagapattinam Main Rd; r Rs 1300;), a quieter midrange option, with a garden swimming pool planned. Room rates everywhere double during the festival.

Daily bus services travel between Vailankanni and Chennai, Coimbatore, Bengaluru, Kanyakumari and Thiruvananthapuram (Trivandrum).

Calimere (Kodikkarai) Wildlife & Bird Sanctuary

This 333-sq-km sanctuary (per person/vehicle Rs 5/15; 6am-6pm) of scrubby evergreen forest, saltpans and coast is 90km southeast of Thanjavur. Noted for its vast flocks of migratory waterfowl, Calimere's tidal mud flats and saltpans are home to teals, shovelers, curlews, terns, plovers, sandpipers, shanks, herons and more from October to March.

In the drier times of the year there are always bush birds to see, and resident black bucks, sambars and spotted deer on the plains. To get the most from your visit, you'll need at least a bicycle (negotiate with a local) and binoculars. If you have a vehicle, a local guide (not officially compulsory, but in fact impossible to bypass; pay around Rs 50) will join you at the park entrance for an hour or so to make a 15km round trip through the sanctuary, pointing out wildlife and stopping at an 1890 lighthouse and watchtower on the shore.

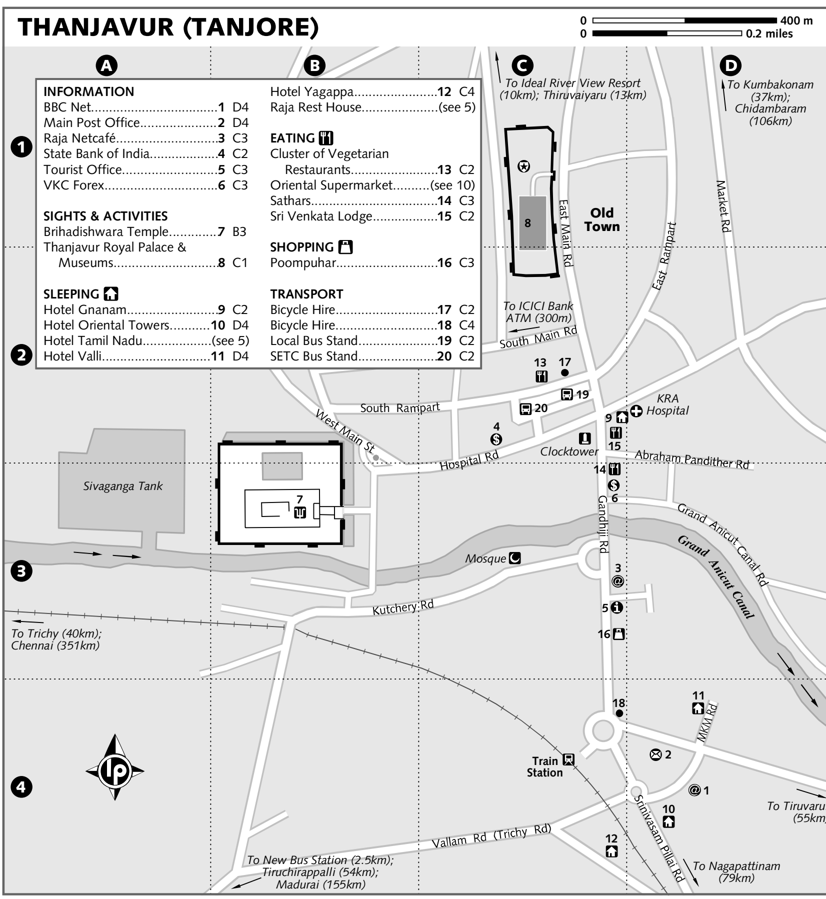
There are two lodges run by the forest department. One is in the village at the end of the road, a big and very obvious (unsigned) building on the right. Rooms here are Rs 100 for two people, and you can get food at the basic stalls outside. A better option if you have a vehicle is Thambusamy Rest House (r Rs 100), 1km or so off the main road and beside the new lighthouse; you can walk to a watchtower and there's a shady, neglected garden. You'll need to bring food with you.



The easiest way to get to Calimere is by bus (Rs 6, every hour) or taxi from Vedaranniyam, which is 12km away and linked by frequent buses to Nagapattinam or Thanjavur.

THANJAVUR (TANJORE)

☎ 04362 / pop 215,725

Dominated by the superb World Heritage–listed Brihadishwara Temple, and a sprawling Maratha Palace complex, Thanjavur is an easy-going town and a worthy detour off the Chennai–Madurai route.

The town is famous also for its distinctive art style, a combination of raised and painted surfaces. Krishna is the most popular deity depicted, and in the Thanjavur school his skin is white, rather than the traditional blue-black.

Thanjavur is set on a fertile delta and the accompanying harvests make the town a great place to be during Pongal (harvest) celebrations in January.

Thanjavur was the ancient capital of the Chola kings, whose origins go back to the beginning of the Christian era. The Cholas' era of empire building was between AD 850 and 1270; at the height of their power, they controlled most of the Indian peninsula. The stylised bronze work for which they were famous is still produced in town.

BRIHADISHWARA TEMPLE & FORT

Built by Raja Raja in 1010, the magnificent Brihadishwara Temple (6am-1pm & 3-8pm) is the crowning glory of Chola temple architecture and the highlight of Thanjavur. Known locally as the 'Big Temple', this fascinating monument is one of only a handful in India with World Heritage listing and is worth a couple of visits – preferably early morning and late afternoon, when the setting sun bathes the sandstone tower and walls in a syrupy glow.

Set in spacious, well-tended grounds, the temple has several pillared halls and shrines and 250 linga enshrined along the outer walls. Inscriptions record the names of dancers, musicians and poets – a reminder of the significance of this area to the development of the arts. A huge covered statue of the bull, Nandi – 6m long by 3m high – faces the inner sanctum. Created from a single piece of rock, it weighs 25 tonnes and is one of India's largest Nandi statues.

Unlike most South Indian temples where the gopurams are the highest towers, here it is the 13-storey vimana above the sanctum at 66m that reaches further into the sky. Its impressive gilded top is the original. The sanctum contains a 4m-high lingam with a circumference of 7m.

To the right of the temple entrance the temple elephant is usually on hand to take a coin donation with its trunk.

THANJAVUR ROYAL PALACE & MUSEUMS

The decaying splendour of huge corridors, spacious halls, observation and arsenal towers and shady courtyards in this labyrinthine and atmospheric complex were constructed partly by the Nayaks of Madurai around 1550 and partly by the Marathas.

At the main entrance of the palace (foreign adult/child Rs 50/25, Indian Rs 5/2, incl entry to the Durbar Hall & bell tower; 9am-6pm), follow the signs to the magnificent Durbar Hall (Royal Court), one of two such halls where the king held audiences. It's unrestored but in reasonable condition, especially the murals at the eastern end beneath which you can see part of a 6km secret passage running under the palace.

In the former Sadar Mahal Palace is the Raja Serfoji Memorial Hall (admission Rs 2) with a small collection of thrones, weapons and photographs. The Royal Palace Museum (admission Rs 1, camera/video Rs 30/250) shows off an eclectic collection of regal memorabilia, including wonderful embroidered shoes and hats, most of it dating from the early 19th century when the enlightened and far-sighted Serfoji II ruled. His sixth descendant still lives here; pick up Raja Serfoji II (Rs 25), his very readable monograph about his extraordinary ancestor, from any of the ticket desks.

The art gallery (admission Rs 15, camera/video Rs 30/250), between the Royal Palace Museum and the bell tower, has a superb collection of detailed Chola bronze statues from the 9th to 18th centuries in the smaller durbar hall. Nearby, the bell tower is worth the climb for the views right across Thanjavur and over the palace itself. The spiral stone staircase is dark, narrow and slippery; and watch your head!

The Saraswati Mahal Library is between the gallery and the palace museum. Established around 1700, its collection includes more than 30,000 palm-leaf and paper manuscripts in Indian and European languages. The library is closed to the public but you can visit the interesting museum (admission free; 10am-1pm & 1.30-5.30pm Tue-Thu), where exhibits range from the Ramayana written on palm leaf, to exquisite miniatures, to explicit prints of Chinese torture methods in 1804.

BUDGET

There's a bunch of nondescript cheap lodges opposite the central bus stand with rooms for around Rs 150 a double.

Raja Rest House (s/d Rs 100/150) Once you get past the dilapidated and mildewed state of this building it's clean enough for the price, and very central, behind Hotel Tamil Nadu. Smiling staff are not included here.

Hotel Valli (☎ 231580; arasu_tnj@rediffmail.com; 2948 MKM Rd; s/d from Rs 185/240, r with AC Rs 600;) Near the train station, Valli is the best bet for budget travellers. The rooms are clean and the staff friendly and helpful. It's in a reasonably peaceful location beyond the greasy backyard workshops.

Hotel Yagappa (☎ 230421; 1 Vallam Rd; d without AC Rs 195-400, with AC Rs 700;) Just off Trichy Rd and near the station, Yagappa is a big place with a variety of rooms and a half-decent garden with requisite restaurant. The more expensive doubles are spacious with some unusual furnishings.

Hotel Tamil Nadu (☎ 231325; Gandhiji Rd; d without/with AC from Rs 275/550;) Although this is a former raja's guesthouse, set in a quiet, leafy courtyard with huge rooms and wide balconies, that's where the royal treatment ends. It's full of character, but some of the rooms look like they haven't been cleaned since the Raj era and the staff give the impression they want to be somewhere else.

MIDRANGE & TOP END

Hotel Gnanam (☎ 278501; www.hotelgnanam.com; Market Rd; s/d Rs 800/900;) Clean as a pin and busy with well-to-do locals, this central hotel with two good restaurants is great value.

Hotel Oriental Towers (☎ 230724; www.hotelorientaltowers.com; 2889 Srinivasam Pillai Rd; s/d from Rs 1100/1300;) With a business centre, gym, sauna, spa, massage and 4th-floor swimming pool (Rs 100 for nonguests), this is a business hotel around the corner from the train station. Ask for the rooms with temple view; they're a good size and comfortable. Service is willing and there are a couple of restaurants and a bar.

Ideal River View Resort (☎ 250633; www.idealresort.com; s/d Rs 1600/2200;) Although 10km northwest of the city, this tranquil resort is by far the nicest place to stay near Thanjavur. Set in beautiful gardens beside the Vennar River are immaculate, brightly furnished cottages with roomy balconies. There's a good open-air restaurant beside the river, a great pool, an Ayurvedic centre, and yoga classes on request. In busy season a shuttle runs into Thanjavur at 10am (returning at 4.30pm) and you can call ahead for a free pick-up.

Eating

There's a cluster of simple veg restaurants, open for breakfast, lunch and dinner, near the local bus stand and along Gandhiji Rd.

Sathars (☎ 331041; 167 Gandhiji Rd; mains Rs 35-85) Good service and quality food make this place popular. Downstairs is a veg restaurant with lunchtime thalis, upstairs is an AC section with great-value nonveg food – whole tandoori chicken for Rs 85 or prawn masala Rs 50.

Nearby to Sathars is the veg-only Sri Venkata Lodge (Gandhiji Rd; thalis Rs 25). For self-caterers, the excellent Oriental Supermarket (9am-9pm), below Hotel Oriental Towers, stocks a bit of everything.

Shopping

Thanjavur is a good place to shop for handicrafts and arts, especially around the palace area. Numerous shops along East Main Rd and Gandhiji Rd sell everything from quality crafts and ready-made clothes to inexpensive kitsch. For fixed prices and hassle-free shopping, Poompuhar (Gandhiji Rd; 10am-8pm Mon-Sat) is good for leatherwork, carvings, jewellery and other crafts.

To see bronze-casters at work, call craftsman Mr Kathirvel (☎ 098432-35202), whose extended family have, for several generations, used the lost-wax method to make bronze artefacts in a backyard kiln; it's a window into the small cottage industries on which Indian craft still thrives. He lives out towards Trichy Rd; call for directions.

Getting There & Away

BUS

The two city bus stands are for local and SETC buses. SETC has a computerised reservation office (☎ 230950; 7.30am-9.30pm). The New Bus Station, 2.5km south of the centre, services local areas and destinations south. Bus 74 shuttles between the three bus stations (Rs 3.50). For details of services, see opposite.

TRAIN

The station is conveniently central at the south end of Gandhiji Rd. Thanjavur is off

BUSES FROM THANJAVUR (TANJORE)

* New Bus Station

the main Chennai–Madurai line, so there's only one express train direct to Chennai – the overnight Rock Fort Express (sleeper/3AC Rs 181/485, 9½ hours) departing at 8.30pm. For more frequent trains north or south, including to Madurai, take a passenger train to Trichy (Rs 12, 1½ hours, eight daily) and change there. There's one daily express (6.50am) and a couple of passenger trains to Kumbakonam (Rs 10, one hour).

The Thanjavur-Mysore Express leaves daily at 7.15pm for Bengaluru (sleeper/3AC Rs 205/493, 11 hours) and Mysore (sleeper/3AC Rs 220/598, 14½ hours).

Getting Around

The main attractions of Thanjavur are close enough to walk between, but it can make for a long tiring day. Autorickshaws will take you on a tour of the temple and palace for around Rs 50 or hire a local taxi (non-AC/AC per half-day Rs 500/700). Both will want to get you into the craft emporiums. Bicycles can be hired from stalls opposite the train station and local bus stand (per hour Rs 3).

An autorickshaw into town from the New Bus Station costs around Rs 150.

AROUND THANJAVUR

About 13km north of Thanjavur, Thiruvaiyaru hosts the January international music festival in honour of the saint and composer Thyagaraja, whose birthplace is at Tiruvarur, 55km east of Thanjavur. The Thyagararajaswami Temple here boasts the largest temple chariot in Tamil Nadu, which is hauled through the streets during the 10-day car festival in April/May. Regular buses run from Thanjavur to Thiruvaiyaru for Rs 4.

TRICHY (TIRUCHIRAPPALLI)

☎ 0431 / pop 847,131

Tiruchirappalli, universally known as Trichy, is a sprawling but extremely enjoyable city with two extraordinary temples – one perched high above the town on a rocky mount – and many travellers find Trichy more enjoyable than the clamour of the more renowned Madurai. It's a well-serviced regional transport centre, always busy with locals especially during auspicious marriage seasons when gorgeously clothed families abound in every hotel.

Trichy's long history dates back to before the Christian era when it was a Chola citadel. During the 1st millennium AD, both the Pallavas and Pandyas took power many times before the Cholas regained control in the 10th century. When the Chola empire finally decayed, Trichy came into the realm of the Vijayanagar emperors of Hampi until their defeat in 1565 by the forces of the Deccan sultans. The town and its most famous landmark, the Rock Fort Temple, were built by the Nayaks of Madurai.

Orientation

Trichy's places of interest are scattered over a large area from north to south, but for travellers the city is conveniently split into three distinct areas. The Trichy Junction, or Cantonment, area in the south has most of the hotels and restaurants, the bus and train stations, tourist office and main post office, all conveniently within walking distance of each other. This is where you'll likely arrive and most likely stay. The Rock Fort Temple and main bazaar area is 2.5km north of here; and the other important temples are a further 3km to 5km north again, across the Cauvery River. Fortunately, the whole lot is connected by an excellent bus service.

Sights

ROCK FORT TEMPLE

The spectacular Rock Fort Temple (Map p1074; admission Rs 1.50, camera/video Rs 10/50; 6am-8pm) is perched 83m high on a massive rocky outcrop. Here, it's not so much the temple itself as the setting and joining the pilgrimage to the top that make it special. This smooth rock was first hewn by the Pallavas who cut small cave temples into the southern face, but it was the Nayaks who later made use of its naturally fortified position. There are two main temples: Sri Thayumanaswamy Temple, halfway to the top (check out the bats snoozing in the stairwell roof near here!), and Vinayaka Temple, at the summit, which is dedicated to Ganesh. It's a stiff climb up the 437 stone-cut steps, but worth the effort – the view is wonderful, with eagles wheeling beneath you. Non-Hindus are not allowed into either temple, but occasionally – for a small fee – temple priests waive this regulation, particularly at the summit temple.

SRI RANGANATHASWAMY TEMPLE

The superb Sri Ranganathaswamy temple complex (Map p1074; camera/video Rs 50/150; 6am-1pm & 3-9pm), about 3km north of the Rock Fort, is dedicated to Vishnu. Although mentioned in the sangam poetry of the early academy of Tamil poets, temple inscriptions date its existence from the 10th century. With the Vijayanagar victory the temple was restored to the structure that exists today. Many dynasties have had a hand in its construction, including the Cheras, Pandyas, Cholas, Hoysalas, Vijayanagars and Nayaks – and work continues. The largest gopuram, the main entrance, was completed in 1987, and now measures 73m.

At 60 hectares, the complex with its seven concentric walled sections and 21 gopurams is possibly the largest in India. The scale of the buildings along the outermost walls retains a sense of the original tradition of poor people and beggars at the first wall, Chettiar traders and financiers at the second, then Brahmins at the third. Inside the fourth wall is a kiosk where you can buy a ticket (Rs 10) and climb the wall for a panoramic view of sorts of the entire complex. Non-Hindus may go to the sixth wall but are not allowed into the gold-topped sanctum. Guides and priests ask high fees to show you around this temple – at least Rs 200 an hour. About half that is reasonable; agree on a fee beforehand.

A Temple Chariot Festival where statues of the deities are paraded aboard a fine chariot is held here each January, but the most important festival is the 21-day Vaikunta Ekadasi (Paradise Festival) in mid-December, when the celebrated Vaishnavaite text, Tiruvaimozhi, is recited before an image of Vishnu.

Bus 1 from Trichy Junction or Rock Fort stops right outside this temple.

SRI JAMBUKESHWARA TEMPLE

Much smaller and often overlooked, the nearby Sri Jambukeshwara Temple (Map p1074; camera/video Rs 20/150; ⌚ 6am-1pm & 3-9pm) is an oasis of calm and serenity after the clamour of Sri Ranganathaswamy Temple. It was built around the same time, and is dedicated to Shiva and Parvati. Being one of the five temples honouring the elements – in this case, water – the temple is built around a partly immersed Shiva lingam. Non-Hindus may not enter the sanctum, but beyond the second wall is an interesting chamber lined with linga and statues of gods.

If you're taking bus 1, ask for 'Tiruvanakoil'; the temple is about 100m east of the main road.

OTHER SIGHTS

Completed in 1896, the soaring, bone-white Lourdes Church (Map p1074) is opposite the Teppakkulam Tank. Modelled on the neogothic basilica in Lourdes, France, it was renovated in January 1998 and an annual procession, the Feast of Our Lady of Lourdes, is held on 11 February. Its entrance is on Madras Trunk Rd, through the calm green gardens of St Joseph's College where an eccentric and dusty museum (admission free; ⌚ 10am-noon & 2-4pm Mon-Sat) contains the natural history collections of the Jesuit priests' summer excursions to the Western Ghats in the 1870s. Bang on the door and the caretaker will let you in.

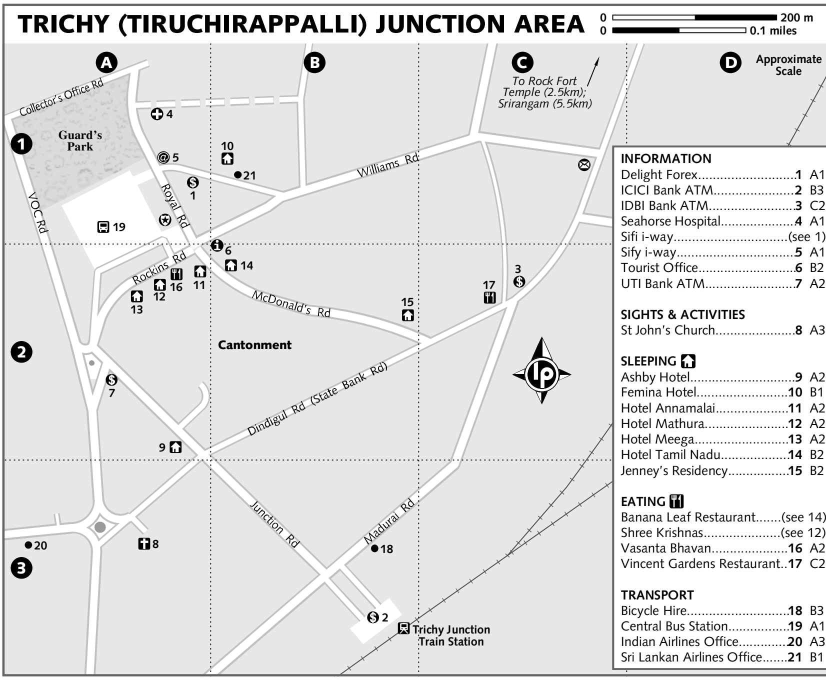
Natharvala Dargah (Map p1074), the tomb of the popular Muslim saint, Nathher, is an impressive building with a 20m-high dome with pinnacles. It's a popular pilgrimage site.

Built in 1812, St John's Church (Map p1076) in the junction area has louvred side doors that open to turn the church into an airy pavilion.

Sleeping

Most of Trichy's accommodation is in the Junction-Cantonment area around the bus station and a short walk north of the train station.

BUDGET



Hotel Tamil Nadu (Map p1076; ☎ 2414346; McDonald's Rd; d without/with AC Rs 300/500; ❄) A decent enough government-run hotel, on a quiet street, with good restaurant attached. It's always busy; book ahead if you can.

Hotel Meega (Map p1076; ☎ 2414092; hotelmeega@rediffmail.com; 3 Rockins Rd; d without/with AC Rs 325/500; ❄) This is a good-value hotel – the rooms are smallish but clean, bright and more midrange than budget standard. There's a popular veg restaurant downstairs.

Ashby Hotel (Map p1076; ☎ 2460652; www.ashbyhotel.com; 17A Junction Rd; d without/with AC from Rs 425/850; ❄) Although it looks a bit worse for wear from the outside, Ashby's Raj-era, old-world atmosphere – with non-AC rooms opening out onto a leafy courtyard garden – is full of character. Rooms are spacious (though the AC rooms at the back are very uninteresting), and there's a bar and garden restaurant. Be prepared to contend with somewhat overbearing staff.

Hotel Mathura (Map p1076; ☎ 2414737; www.hotelmathura.com; 1 Rockins Rd; s without/with AC 325/595, d Rs 415/685; ❄) Right next door to Hotel Meega, Mathura is another good choice. The rooms are clean and comfortable with thick foam mattresses but be sure to ask for a quiet room towards the back. There's a busy restaurant at the front and credit cards are accepted.

Hotel Annamalai (Map p1076; ☎ 2412880; hotelannamalai@yahoo.com; McDonald's Rd; d without/with AC Rs 550/800; ❄) Despite its decidedly insalubrious reception area, the staff is friendly and rooms on this comparatively quiet side street are big, clean and comfortable with decent bathrooms.

MIDRANGE & TOP END

Femina Hotel (Map p1076; ☎ 2414501; try_femina@sancharnet.in; 109 Williams Rd; d without/with AC from Rs 550/1300;) Femina is one of those Indian business hotels that manages to be affordable even if you're on a budget – and the staff doesn't look at travellers as if they've just crawled out of a swamp. There's a small shopping arcade, 24-hour coffee shop and a couple of very good restaurants. Nonguests can use the pool and small gym (per hour Rs 75).

Jenneys Residency (Map p1076; ☎ 2414414; www.jenneysresidency.com; McDonald's Rd; s/d from US$30/40;) Jenneys is enormous, semiluxurious and in a relatively quiet location. The best rooms are on the top floors but all are well appointed; be aware that a 25% luxury tax will be added. Hotel facilities include shops, a health club and a truly bizarre Wild West theme bar.

Eating

Most hotels have their share of good restaurants – such as the multicuisine Madras Restaurant at Jenneys Residency (above) – and most have bars.

Shree Krishnas (Map p1076; Rockins Rd; breakfast, lunch & dinner) The restaurant in front of Hotel Mathura has a popular veg section serving topnotch thalis (Rs 20) – it's always packed at lunchtime. There's a little veranda and snack bar at the front from where you can watch the bustle of the bus stand across the road.

Vasanta Bhavan (Map p1076; Rockins Rd; breakfast, lunch & dinner) Next door to Shree Krishnas, good veg North Indian food such as paneer tikka masala (spicy curd cheese, Rs 30) with naan (flat bread; Rs 12) is a tasty option.

Banana Leaf (Map p1074; ☎ 271101; Madras Trunk Rd; mains Rs 20-75; lunch & dinner) One of the few good choices close to the Rock Fort Temple, this is an intimate little place with a big menu of inexpensive Indian and Chinese dishes – tandoori chicken (Rs 70), crab masala (Rs 45) and the intriguing rabbit masala (Rs 70). It's rustic rather than gourmet, but the food and service are fine. Another branch is next to the Hotel Tamil Nadu in the Trichy Junction area.

Vincent Gardens Restaurant (Map p1076; Dindigul Rd; mains Rs 30-70; lunch & dinner) There's a pleasant outdoor setting, and the limited veg and nonveg menu is done well. Take mosquito repellent in the evening.

Shopping

Trichy's best shopping is in the bazaar area south of the Rock Fort Temple (Map p1074). Wandering along Big Bazaar Rd and Chinnar Bazaar in the evening is a fabulous assault on the senses – these areas are constantly packed with people and, from tiny stalls to flashy department stores, lit up like Times Square on New Year's Eve.

Poompuhar Handicrafts (Map p1074; West Boulevard Rd; 9am-8pm) For fixed-price crafts, check out this place.

Getting There & Away

Trichy is virtually in the geographical centre of Tamil Nadu and it's well connected by air, bus and train.

AIR

As well as domestic flights, Trichy's airport has flights to Sri Lanka. Indian Airlines (Map p1076; ☎ 2341063; 4A Dindigul Rd) flies four days a week to Chennai (US$120). Air Deccan also flies daily to Chennai.

Sri Lankan Airlines (Map p1076; ☎ 2462381; 9am-5.30pm Mon-Sat, 9am-1pm Sun), at Femina Hotel, flies daily to Colombo (Rs 3800).

BUS

Most buses head to the central bus station on Rockins Rd. If you're travelling to Kodaikanal, a good option is to take one of the frequent buses to Dindigul (Rs 25, two hours) and change there. For details of services, see the table, right.

TRAIN

Trichy is on the main Chennai–Madurai line so there are lots of rail options in either direction. Of the nine daily expresses to Chennai, the quickest are the Vaigai Express (2nd/chair class Rs 85/297, 5½ hours) departing Trichy at 9.10am, and the Pallavan Express, which leaves at 6.30am. The best overnight train is the Rock Fort Express (sleeper/3AC Rs 136/382, 7½ hours) at 9.40pm.

For Madurai the best train is the Guruvaya Express (2nd class/sleeper Rs 47/75, three hours), which leaves at 1pm. The Mysore Express goes daily to Bengaluru (sleeper/3AC Rs 160/450, 11½ hours) and Mysore (sleeper/3AC Rs 200/562, 15 hours).

Getting Around

TO/FROM THE AIRPORT

The 7km ride into town is Rs 1250 by taxi and Rs 60 by autorickshaw. Otherwise, take bus 7, 59, 58 or 63 to/from the airport (30 minutes).

BICYCLE

Trichy lends itself to cycling as it's flat; it's a reasonably easy ride from Trichy Junction to the Rock Fort Temple, but a long haul to Srirangam and back. There are a couple of places on Madurai Rd (Map p1076) near the train station where you can hire bicycles (per hr Rs 5).

BUS

Trichy's local bus service is mercifully efficient and easy to use. Bus 1 (A or B) from the main bus station on Rockins Rd goes every few minutes via the Rock Fort Temple, Sri Jambukeshwara Temple and the main entrance to Sri Ranganathaswamy Temple (Rs 4). To see them all, get off in that order (ask the conductor or driver where the stops are), as it runs in a one-way circuit.

SOUTHERN TAMIL NADU

TRICHY TO RAMESWARAM

Several little-visited historical and cultural gems in this area combine to make a great road trip to Rameswaram, or a day tour from either Trichy or Madurai.

Much of the property of this former princely state (1640–1948) is on display in the wonderful Pudukkottai Museum (Indian/foreigner Rs 3/100; 9.30am-5pm), located in a renovated palace building in Pudukkottai town. It's an eclectic collection, including musical instruments and megalithic burial artefacts, textiles and jewellery, some remarkable paintings and miniatures and much more! There are decent English-language signs, too.

Simple and imposing, the renovated Tirumayam Fort (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; 9am-5pm) is worth a climb to the top for 360-degree views of the landscape and the old town walls, and a shady rest with the goats under a banyan tree.

Nothing can adequately prepare visitors for the extraordinary residences of the Chettiars, historically a group of canny businesspeople, bankers and traders from the area of Chettinad. More palaces than houses, these vast constructions of red-tiled roofs, stained glass, carved Burmese teak, sculpted granite and opulent Italian marble – often painted rainbow candy-colours – are stunning. The heritage township of Kanadukathan, off a dusty road with no hint of the wonders ahead, is the place to stop and wander. Some houses welcome visitors to potter through the courtyards and public rooms if the family is not in residence or, to experience life in such a place, the 126-room Chettinadu Mansion (☎ 04565-273080; www.chettinadmansion.com; r Rs 3300), built between 1902 and 1912, has opened seven fabulous guest rooms. Cheaper accommodation is available 12km away in Karaikkudi; Hotel Udhayam (☎ 04565-237440; r without/with AC Rs 195/770;) is a decent option.

It's an easy day tour from either Trichy (taxi without/with AC Rs 1000/1500) or Madurai (a little more). Otherwise catch one of the many daily buses from Trichy to Karaikkudi (Rs 52, three hours) and get on and off at the sights along the way. Coming from Madurai, get a bus to Karaikkudi and then take a local bus, or hire a taxi. Kanadukathan is about a 500m walk off the main road.

Regular buses run between Karaikkudi, via Ramanathapuram, to Rameswaram.

RAMESWARAM

☎ 04573 / pop 38,035

Rameswaram is one of the most significant pilgrimage centres in South India for both Shaivites and Vaishnavaites. It was here that Rama (an incarnation of Vishnu and hero of the Ramayana) offered thanks to Shiva. At the town's core is the Ramanathaswamy Temple, one of the most important temples in India, and here you'll see a representation of India in miniature, with pilgrims including everyone from urbane sophisticates to colourfully clad Rajasthani tribespeople.

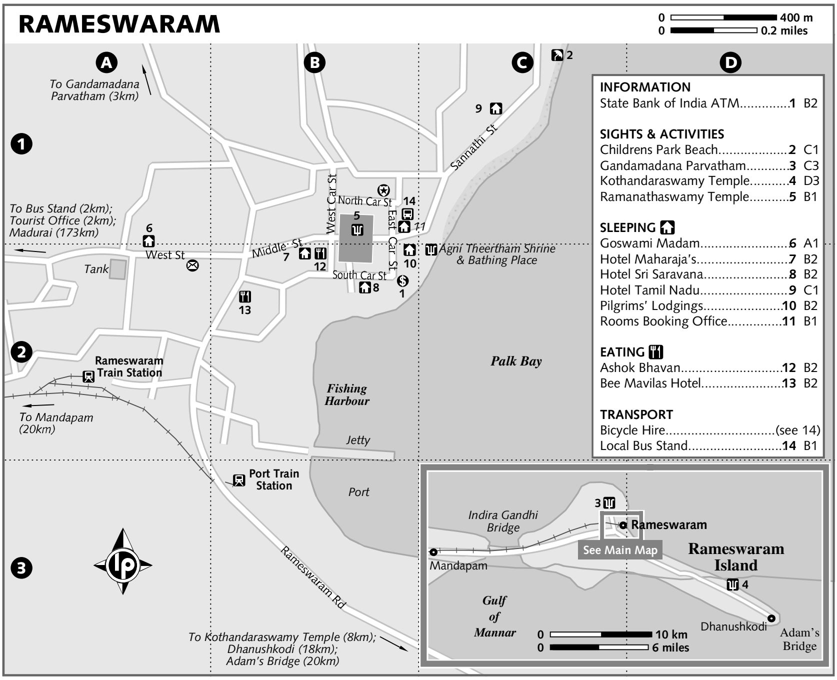
Rameswaram is on an island in the Gulf of Mannar, and is connected to the mainland at Mandapam by one of India's great engineering wonders, the Indira Gandhi bridge, which was opened in 1988. The town was once an important ferry port linking India and Sri Lanka, but the service ceased when things got ugly in Sri Lanka. At the time of writing it shows no signs of resuming, though regular boatloads of Tamil refugees do manage to make the crossing.

Apart from a regular influx of pilgrims, Rameswaram is a sleepy fishing village with a pleasantly laid-back atmosphere and the pungent smell of drying fish hanging in the air – take a stroll down to the harbour in the early morning to see the fishing boats come in and the catch being sorted.

Orientation & Information

Most hotels and restaurants are clustered around the Ramanathaswamy Temple. The bus stand, 2km to the west, is connected by shuttle bus to the town centre.

You can't change money here but the State Bank of India (East Car St) has an ATM accepting international cards.



Sights

RAMANATHASWAMY TEMPLE

A fine example of late Dravidian architecture, this temple (camera Rs 25; 4am-1pm & 3-8.30pm) is most renowned for its four magnificent corridors lined with elaborately sculpted pillars. Construction began in the 12th century AD and later additions included a 53m-high gopuram. The 22 theerthams (tanks) within the complex are believed by devotees to have particular powers and pilgrims are expected to bathe in, and drink from the waters in each theertham. The number of theerthams is said to correspond with the number of arrows in Rama's quiver, which he used to generate water on the island. Only Hindus may enter the inner sanctum, which is adorned with paintings depicting the origins of Rameswaram.

Even when the temple is closed, it is possible to take a peaceful amble through the extensive corridors.

DHANUSHKODI & ADAM'S BRIDGE

About 18km southeast of town, Dhanushkodi is a long, windswept surf beach and sandpit with an end-of-the-world feel. Other than the beach and some straggling fishing shanties, there's not much here, but it's a pleasant walk to the end of the peninsula where you can gaze out at Adam's Bridge, the chain of reefs, sandbanks and islets that almost connects Sri Lanka with India, 33km away. Legend says that these are the stepping stones created by Rama to follow Ravana, in his bid to rescue Sita in the epic Ramayana. Buses (Rs 5, hourly) from the local bus stand on East Car St stop about 4km before the beach so you have to walk the rest of the way. Otherwise, an autorickshaw (45 minutes one way) costs Rs 250 return, including one hour waiting time.

About 10km before Dhanushkodi, the Kothandaraswamy Temple is the only structure to survive the 1964 cyclone that destroyed the village. Legend has it that Rama, overcome with guilt at having killed Ravana, performed a puja on this spot and thereafter the temple was built. It is also believed that Vibhishana, brother of Sita's kidnapper Ravana, surrendered to Rama here.

GANDAMADANA PARVATHAM

This temple, located 3km northwest of Rameswaram, is a shrine reputedly containing Rama's footprints. The two-storey mandapa is on a small hill – the highest point on the island – and has good views out over the coastal landscape. Pilgrims visit here at dawn and dusk.

To visit the temple, it's an easy and interesting bicycle ride through the backstreets of villages and past the humungous TV transmitter.

Activities

At Childrens Park Beach, a shady stretch of relatively clean sand with a few swings and fishing boats, touts hang around offering a two-hour snorkelling trip. This amounts to a short paddle out in a canoe to a virtually nonexistent reef, but it's fun to go for a swim and you might see some fish. The going rate is about Rs 100 per person for two people.

Festivals & Events

Car Festival (Feb/Mar) During the festival, a huge decorated chariot with idols of the deities installed is hauled through the streets in a pulsating parade.

Thiru Kalyana (Jul/Aug) This festival celebrates the celestial marriage of Shiva and Parvati.

Sleeping & Eating

Hotels, mainly geared towards pilgrims, are often booked out during festivals. Don't come here expecting anything resembling luxury – there are no upmarket hotels and at the budget end the choices are a bit grim. Near the temple, music blasts out from 4.30am and for most of the day.

The cheapest places to stay are the pilgrims' lodgings run by the temple, where basic double rooms are Rs 100 to 200. There's a rooms booking office (East Car St) opposite the main temple entrance.

Goswami Madam (☎ 221108; goswamimm@sanchar.net.in; West St; r without/with AC Rs 125/555; ❄) A spare and clean guesthouse funded and maintained by private Hindu donors, this is an oasis of calm about 10 minutes' walk from the temple, where all guests are welcome.

Hotel Maharaja's (☎ 221271; 7 Middle St; d without/with AC incl tax Rs 294/519; ❄) Near the temple's west entrance, this is one of Rameswaram's better choices and is reasonably priced. Rooms are simple and most open out onto a common balcony though some have private balconies – the upper floors have good temple views.

Hotel Sri Saravana (☎ 223367; South Car St; r without/with AC from Rs 315/600; ❄) New in 2006, this hotel has a rooftop overlooking the ocean and cool, clean, tiled rooms; good value and one of the few with sea views.

Hotel Tamil Nadu (☎ 221277; Sannathi St; dm Rs 80, d without/with AC from Rs 300/700; ❄) The breezy oceanfront location is the main reason to choose this hotel. The rooms are worn, but most have balconies or sit-outs and the staff is refreshingly cheery. It's extremely popular with pilgrims, so book if you can. The restaurant (mains Rs 10 to 75, open breakfast, lunch and dinner) has all the atmosphere of a school canteen but it's very popular for its thalis (Rs 30) and is one of the few places in town serving a range of nonveg food such as butter chicken (Rs 60), local fish and (sometimes) chips, and noodles. There's also a bar (open 6pm to 10pm).

A number of inexpensive vegetarian restaurants along West Car St, such as Ashok Bhavan, serve thalis (Rs 15). Bee Mavilas Hotel is a basic, local lunch place that serves fish fries, curries and decent biryanis.

Getting There & Away

BUS

Buses run to Madurai every 10 minutes (Rs 49, four hours). There are SETC buses to Chennai (Rs 228, 12 hours, one daily), Kanyakumari (Rs 108, 10 hours, two daily) and Trichy every half-hour (Rs 82, seven hours).

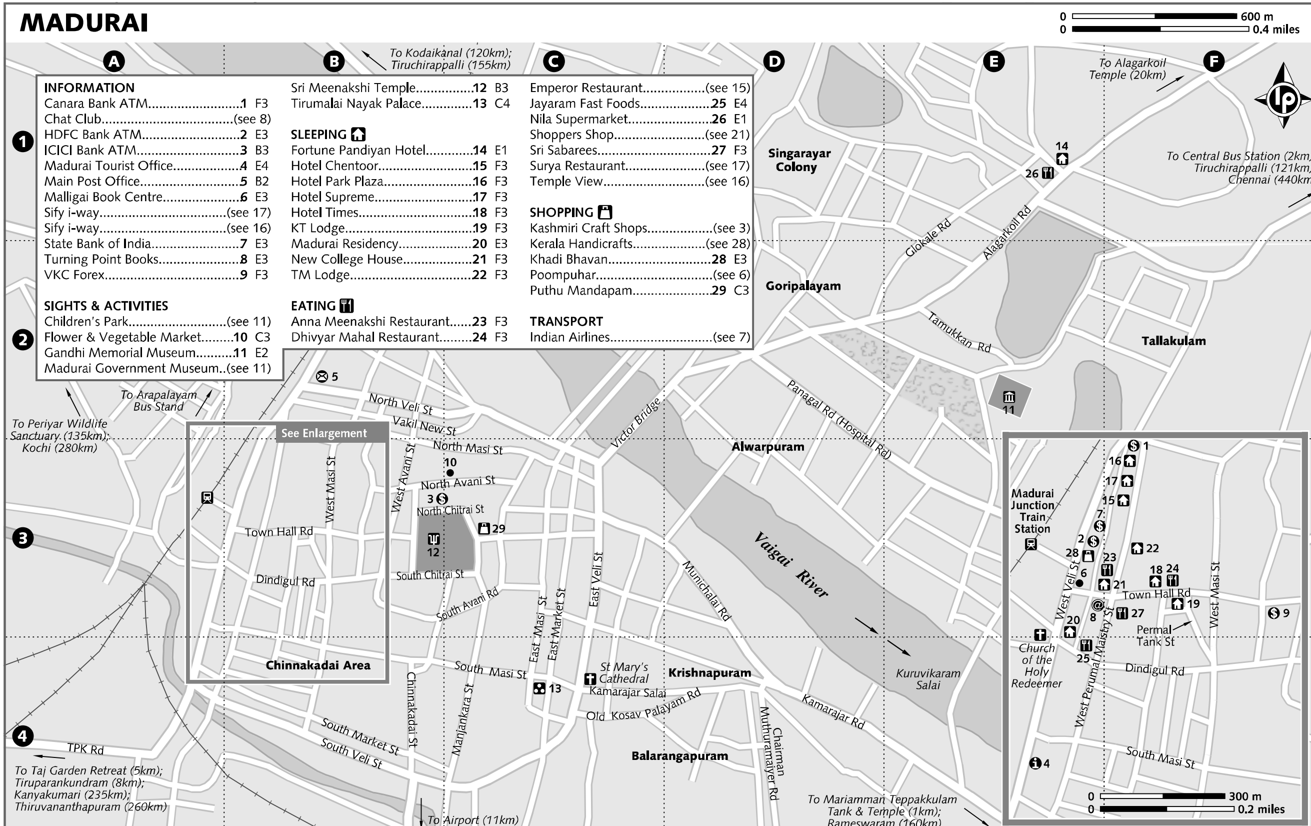
There are also private buses and minibuses from the town centre to Chennai (Rs 400) and Madurai (Rs 125).

TRAIN

Rameswaram's train line was closed in 2006 for an upgrade to broad gauge. It will take at least a couple of years to reopen.

Getting Around

Town buses (Rs 1) travel between the temple and the bus stand from early morning until late at night. Cycling is a good way to get around with many stalls renting old rattlers for Rs 5 per hour – there's one opposite the temple entrance on East Car St, near the local bus stand.



MADURAI

☎ 0452 / pop 1.19 million

Famous for the awe-inspiring Sri Meenakshi Temple complex, Madurai is an animated city packed with pilgrims, beggars, businesspeople, bullock carts and underemployed rickshaw drivers. It's one of South India's oldest cities and has been a centre of learning and pilgrimage for centuries. A textile centre from way back, the city was also the setting for Mahatma Gandhi's decision, in 1921, to wear nothing but khadi (homespun cloth), and tailors' shops are everywhere in town.

Madurai's landmark temple in the heart of the old town is a riotously baroque example of Dravidian architecture with gopurams covered from top to bottom in a breathtaking profusion of multicoloured images of gods, goddesses, animals and mythical figures. The temple seethes with activity from dawn to dusk, its many shrines attracting pilgrims and tourists from all over the world; 10,000 visitors may come here on any one day.

Madurai is on virtually every traveller's Tamil Nadu itinerary – it has excellent transport links and some good midrange accommodation – but be prepared for oppressive touts.

History

Tamil and Greek documents record the existence of Madurai from the 4th century BC. It was popular for trade, especially in spices, and was also the home of the sangam, the academy of Tamil poets. Over the centuries Madurai has come under the jurisdiction of the Cholas, the Pandyas, Muslim invaders, the Hindu Vijayanagar kings, and the Nayaks, who ruled until 1781. During the reign of Tirumalai Nayak (1623–55), the bulk of the Sri Meenakshi Temple was built, and Madurai became the cultural centre of the Tamil people, playing an important role in the development of the Tamil language.

Madurai then passed into the hands of the British East India Company. In 1840 the company razed the fort, which had previously surrounded the city, and filled in the moat. Four broad streets – the Veli streets – were constructed on top of this fill and to this day define the limits of the old city.

Orientation

The main post office, tourist office and many hotels are conveniently wedged between the train station and the temple.

Sights

SRI MEENAKSHI TEMPLE

With its colourful, intricately carved temple towers, the Sri Meenakshi Temple (camera Rs 30; 6am-12.30pm & 4-9pm) is a spectacular pastiche of Dravidian architecture. It was designed in 1560 by Vishwanatha Nayak and built during the reign of Tirumalai Nayak, but its history goes back 2000 years to the time when Madurai was a Pandyan capital. The temple complex occupies an area of 6 hectares. Its 12 highly decorative gopurams range in height from 45m to 50m (the tallest is the southern tower) and are adorned with carvings of celestial and animal figures. The Puthu Mandapam in the east forms a long and impressive entrance hall that leads to the eastern gopuram.

Within the walls of the temple, long corridors lead towards gold-topped sanctums of the deities. It is the custom here to honour the goddess first. Most pilgrims therefore enter the temple at the southeastern corner, through the Ashta Shakti Mandapam, and proceed directly to the Meenakshi shrine.

Also within the temple complex, housed in the 1000-Pillared Hall, is the Temple Art Museum (admission Rs 7; 7am-7pm). It contains painted friezes and stone and brass images, as well as one of the best exhibits on Hindu deities.

Allow plenty of time to see this temple. Early mornings or late evenings are the best times to avoid crowds, and there's often classical dance somewhere in the complex at the weekends. 'Temple guides' charge negotiable fees, rarely below Rs 200, so prepare to negotiate and be aware that they are often a front for emporiums and tailor shops.

MADURAI MARKETS

Just north of the temple, before you get to North Avani St, the daily vegetable market is a labyrinth of bustling laneways strewn with aromatic herbs and vegetables. In the thick of it, on the 1st floor of a nondescript cement building, is the gorgeous flower market. Vendors dexterously heap mountains of marigolds and jasmine onto scales for the temple flower sellers here.

TIRUMALAI NAYAK PALACE

Located about 1.5km southeast of the Meenakshi Temple, this Indo-Saracenic palace (Indian/foreigner Rs 10/50, camera/video Rs 30/100; 9am-1pm & 2-5pm) was built in 1636 by the ruler whose name it bears. Today, only the imposing entrance gate, main hall and Natakasala (Dance Hall) remain. The rectangular courtyard, 75m by 52m, is known as the Swargavilasa or Celestial Pavilion and it gives clues to the original grandeur of the building, regarded as one of the finest secular buildings in South India.

There's a nightly sound-and-light show (Rs 10) which can be fun; the mosquitoes and people carrying on conversations throughout come at no extra cost. The English version is at 6.45pm and it's in Tamil at 8pm. The palace is a 20-minute walk from the temple.

MUSEUMS

Housed in the tamukkam (old exhibition pavilion), of the Rani Mangammal is the excellent Gandhi Memorial Museum (admission free, camera Rs 50; 10am-1pm & 2-5.30pm), set in spacious and relaxing grounds. The maze of rooms contains an impressively moving and detailed account of India's struggle for Independence from 1757 to 1947, and the English-language signs pull no punches about British rule. Included in the exhibition is the blood-stained dhoti (long loincloth) that Gandhi was wearing at the time he was assassinated in Delhi; it's here because he first took up wearing the dhoti in Madurai in 1921. The Gandhian Literary Society Bookstore (closed Sun) is behind the museum.

The Madurai Government Museum (Indian/foreigner Rs 10/100; 9.30am-5.30pm, closed Fri) is next door in the same grounds. Inside is a dusty collection of archaeological finds, sculpture, bronzes, costumes and paintings. A shady children's park (admission Rs 2; 10am-8pm) with pay-as-you-go rides and slides is alongside the museums' entrance driveway.

MARIAMMAN TEPPAKKULAM TANK

This vast tank, 5km east of the old city, covers an area almost equal to that of Sri Meenakshi Temple and is the site of the popular Teppam (Float) Festival, held in January/February, when devotees boat out to the goddess temple in the middle. When it's empty (most of the year) it becomes a cricket ground for local kids. The tank was built by Tirumalai Nayak in 1646 and is connected to the Vaigai River by underground channels.

Tours

The tourist office organises half-day sightseeing tours that include the Tirumalai Nayak Palace and Gandhi Memorial Museum, and finish at the Sri Meenakshi Temple. Tours start at 7am and 3pm and cost Rs 125 per person (minimum six people).

Sleeping

Most of Madurai's accommodation is concentrated in the area between the train station and the Sri Meenakshi Temple. There are loads of places to stay, with plenty of good hotels in the midrange bracket that are reasonably priced and excellent value.

BUDGET

Town Hall Rd, running eastwards from the train station, has a knot of cheap and not-so-cheerful hotels.

KT Lodge (2345387; 29 Town Hall Rd; s/d Rs 185/250) Upstairs rooms are good value here, big and airy, with TV. It's right in the thick of things, so you'll need your earplugs.

Hotel Times (2342651; 15-16 Town Hall Rd; s Rs 190, d Rs 300-420;) Hotel Times is a gloomy place, but it's reasonably clean and mercifully quiet if you stay towards the back. Avoid the windowless rooms.

TM Lodge (2341651; www.maduraitmlodge.com; 50 West Perumal Maistry St; s/d Rs 200/320, d with AC & TV Rs 550;) One of the brighter budget places in the area, this is efficiently run with clean linen and reasonably well-kept rooms. The upper rooms are definitely lighter and airier, some with private sit-outs.

New College House (2342971; collegehouse_mdu@yahoo.co.in; 2 Town Hall Rd; r without/with AC from Rs 200/670;) This is a huge complex virtually opposite the train station. The 250 rooms are varied – from minuscule to spacious – so check out a few as the cheaper rooms are tired and old, and street noise penetrates.

MIDRANGE & TOP END

Madurai's best-value accommodation is in the midrange hotels along West Perumal Maistry St near the train station, and most offer free pick-ups from the airport or train. Rooms without AC are a bargain and worth making that step up from the budget joints. Most have rooftop restaurants with temple and sunset views.

Hotel Chentoor (☎ 2350490; www.hotelchentoor.com; 106 West Perumal Maistry St; s/d Rs 420/460, with AC from Rs 750/850;) Chentoor is one of the first high-rise hotels you come to when walking north along West Perumal Maistry St. The standard rooms are smallish but very clean and comfortable, several AC rooms have temple views and balconies, and the rooftop restaurant is breezy.

Madurai Residency (☎ 2343140; www.madurairesidency.com; West Marret St; s/d Rs 425/490, r with AC from Rs 850;) This is a good-value hotel, with bright, clean rooms – some with temple view – and the highest rooftop restaurant views in town. Breakfast is included with AC rooms.

Hotel Supreme (☎ 2343151; www.supremehotels.com; 110 West Perumal Maistry St; s/d from Rs 460/500, r with AC from Rs 840;) This is another large, well-presented hotel though its growing popularity has brought a noticeable decline in service. However, rooms are comfortable with large windows; many of the AC rooms have balconies and great temple views. Its restaurant is popular and there's a bar decked out like a spaceship!

Hotel Park Plaza (☎ 3011111; www.hotelparkplaza.net; 114 West Perumal Maistry St; s/d Rs 1075/1350;) The Plaza's lobby is slightly more upmarket than its neighbours, and rooms are standard midrange, comfortable and simply furnished. The front rooms have temple views from the 3rd floor up. There's a good rooftop restaurant and the (inappropriately named) Sky High Bar – on the 1st floor.

Fortune Pandiyan Hotel (☎ 2537090; www.fortunepandiyanhotel.com; Alargakoil Rd; s/d Rs 2500/3000;) New in 2005, one of this smart hotel's big draws is a clean swimming pool in a garden setting. Nonguests can use it for Rs 100, and there's a women-only session between 11am and 1pm daily; there's also exercise equipment in the fitness room.

our pick Taj Garden Retreat (☎ 2371601; www.tajhotels.com; 40 TPK Rd; s/d from Rs 3700/4200;) In a stunning hilltop location of landscaped grounds and an 1890 colonial building, this is the best hotel in Madurai. Located 5km west of the city in Pasumalai, it's either peaceful or inconvenient, depending on your point of view.

Eating

Along West Perumal Maistry St, the rooftop restaurants of a string of hotels offer breezy night-time dining and temple views; most also have AC restaurants open for breakfast and lunch.

Jayaram Fast Foods (Dindigul Rd; mains Rs 25-75; lunch & dinner) With a busy bakery downstairs and a spotless AC restaurant upstairs, this makes a pleasant change from thali places. Ice cream and fruit salad is a favourite with families and courting couples, and the menu includes soups, spring rolls, pizzas and burgers.

Surya Restaurant (110 West Perumal Maistry St; mains Rs 30-70; dinner) The rooftop restaurant of Hotel Supreme offers a superb view over the city, multicuisine veg food including pasta, spectacular lunchtime thalis and cold beer.

Dhivyar Mahal Restaurant (☎ 2342700; 21 Town Hall Rd; mains Rs 30-80; lunch & dinner) One of the better multicuisine restaurants not attached to a hotel, Dhivyar Mahal is clean and bright. Roast leg of lamb (Rs 80) makes an interesting change, half tandoori chicken is Rs 80 and prawn masala is Rs 75.

Emperor Restaurant (☎ 2350490; 106 West Perumal Maistry St; mains Rs 30-80; breakfast, lunch & dinner) An all-day rooftop dining area, the restaurant at the Hotel Chentoor appears to be an afterthought, but the food, views and service are all good and nonveg food is served.

Temple View (☎ 3011111; 114 West Perumal Maistry St; mains Rs 55-140; dinner) The nightly rooftop restaurant at the Hotel Park Plaza serves multicuisine veg and nonveg dishes. Butter chicken masala is Rs 80 and the tandoori chicken (half a chicken Rs 110) is especially succulent.

Taj Garden Retreat (☎ 2371601; www.tajhotels.com; 40 TPK Rd; mains from Rs 150; breakfast, lunch & dinner) The indoor/outdoor restaurant is perched in the gardens above the city, with stunning sunset views. If you're hankering for spag and salad in relaxed surrounds, this is the place to come.

Among the cheap and cheerful South Indian veg restaurants in the old town is Anna Meenakshi Restaurant (West Perumal Maistry St), a busy place good for thalis (Rs 30). Sree Sabarees (West Perumal Maistry St) always has a crowd at the outside chai and snacks stand; stop by for a cuppa (Rs 3.50) or eat veg food inside.

Shoppers Shop (Town Hall Rd; 8am-11pm) and Nila Supermarket (Algarkoil Rd; 7am-11pm) are well-stocked grocery stores including a good selection of Western foods.

Shopping

Madurai teems with cloth stalls and tailors' shops. A great place for getting cottons and printed fabrics is Puthu Mandapam, the pillared former entrance hall at the eastern side of Sri Meenakshi Temple. Here you'll find rows of tailors, all busily treadling away and capable of whipping up a good replica of whatever you're wearing in an hour or two. Quality, designs and prices vary greatly depending on the material and complexity of the design, but you can have a shirt made up for Rs 150.

The fixed-price government shops are conveniently located together in West Veli St, including Poompuhar, Kerala Handicrafts and Khadi Bhavan (khadi is the homespun cloth made famous by Gandhi's decision, taken in Madurai, to wear it). Every tout, driver, temple guide and tailor's brother will lead you to the Kashmiri craft shops in North Chitrai St, offering to show you the temple view from the rooftop – the views are good, and so is the inevitable sales pitch.

Getting There & Away

AIR

Indian Airlines (☎ 2341234, airport 2690771; West Veli St; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) flies daily to Mumbai and Chennai. Jet Airways also flies daily to Chennai, as does newcomer Paramount Airways (☎ 1800 180 1234; www.paramountairways.com). Air Deccan flies daily to Bengaluru. None of these airlines three has an office in town, but airport counters open at flight times.

BUS

Most long-distance buses arrive and depart from the central bus station (☎ 2580680; Melur Rd), 6km northeast of the old city. It appears chaotic but is actually a well-organised 24-hour operation. Local buses shuttle into the city every few minutes for Rs 2. Autorickshaw drivers charge Rs 70.

Private bus companies offer superdeluxe coaches with video services to Chennai and Bengaluru (Rs 220 to 300) but the state bus companies have similar services and while travel agencies sell tickets – often at an inflated price – you may end up on a state bus anyway. The table, right, lists prices for government buses; some express services run to Bengaluru, Chennai, Mysore and Puducherry.

The Arapalayam bus stand, northwest of the train station on the river bank, has hourly buses to Kumili (Rs 45, 4½ hours) for the Periyar Wildlife Sanctuary. There are regular stopping services to Coimbatore (Rs 75, six hours) and to Kodaikanal, with an express to Kodaikanal leaving daily at 12.45pm (Rs 40, four hours). Buses to Palani leave every half-hour (Rs 35, five hours).

TRAIN

Madurai Junction is on the main Chennai–Kanyakumari line. There are at least nine daily trains to Chennai, including the overnight Pearl City Express (sleeper/3AC Rs 200/550, 10 hours) at 10.30pm and the Vaigai Express (2nd class/chair class Rs 114/397, eight hours) at 6.45am. Chennai trains stop at Trichy (2nd class/sleeper Rs 47/75, three hours). To Kanyakumari there are three daily services (sleeper/3AC Rs 107/300, six hours).

Other services include Madurai to Coimbatore (2nd class/sleeper Rs 62/98, 6½ hours) and Bengaluru (sleeper/3AC Rs 179/502), as well as Trivandrum and Mumbai.

Getting Around

The airport is 12km south of town and taxis cost Rs 200 to the town centre. Autorickshaws ask around Rs 100. Alternatively, bus 10A from the central bus station goes to the airport but don't rely on it being on schedule.

Central Madurai is small enough to get around on foot.

KANYAKUMARI (CAPE COMORIN)

☎ 04652 / pop 19,678

Approached through a surreal landscape of wind farms, Kanyakumari is the 'Land's End' of the Indian subcontinent, where the Bay of Bengal meets the Indian Ocean and the Arabian Sea. Chaitrapurnima (Tamil for the April full-moon day) is the time to experience simultaneous sunset and moonrise over the ocean.

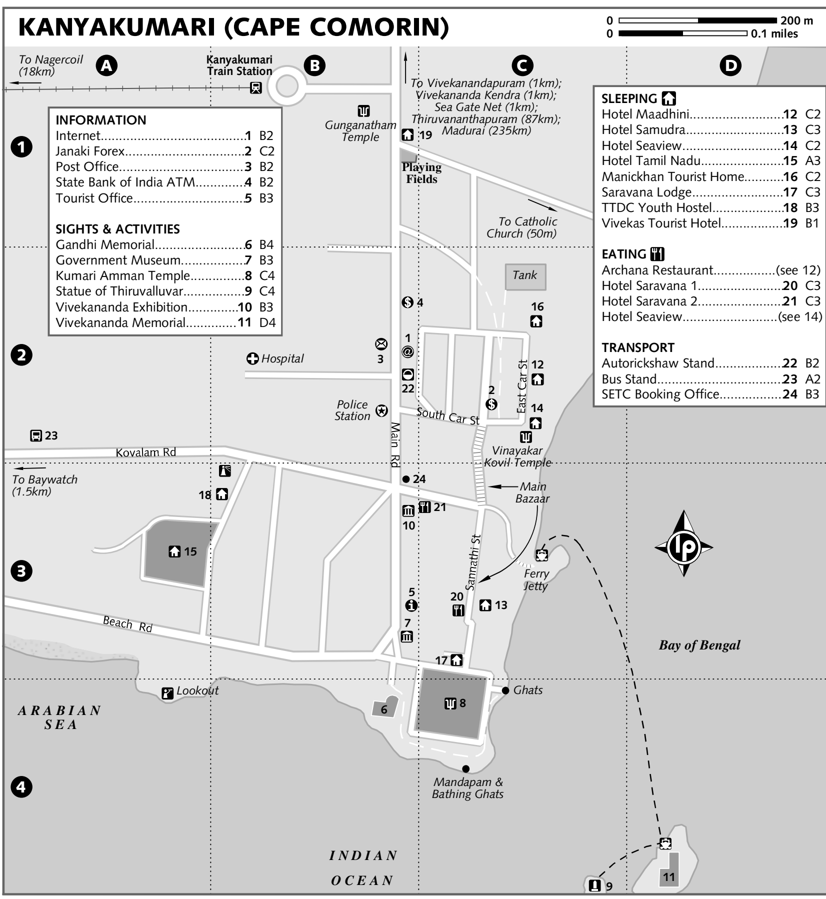
Kanyakumari has great spiritual significance for Hindus, and is dedicated to the goddess Devi Kanya, an incarnation of Parvati. Pilgrims come here to visit the temple and bathe in the sacred waters. Although wildly overdeveloped, the town and fishing beaches still manage a certain relaxed charm and there's enough to keep you occupied for a day or so.

Orientation & Information

The main temple is right on the point of Kanyakumari and leading north from it is a small bazaar lined with restaurants, stalls and souvenir shops.

Internet (Main Rd; per hr Rs 50; 10am-8pm) Slow and expensive internet access.



Janaki Forex (9.30am-6pm Mon-Sat) Off South Car St. Change cash and travellers cheques here.

Post office (Main Rd; 8am-6pm Mon-Fri) About 300m north of the tourist office.

Sea Gate Net (per hr Rs 20; 9am-9pm) Slow but less expensive internet access here, opposite the Vivekanandapuram entrance gate.

Sights & Activities

KUMARI AMMAN TEMPLE

According to legend, the kanya (virgin) goddess Devi single-handedly conquered demons and secured freedom for the world. At this temple (4.30am-12.30pm & 4-8pm) pilgrims give her thanks for the safety and liberty she attained for them. Unusually, men must remove their shirts here. Cameras are forbidden.

In May/June there is a Car Festival where an idol of the deity is taken in procession.

GANDHI MEMORIAL

This striking memorial (admission by donation; 7am-7pm) resembling an Orissan temple and with elements of Hindu, Islamic and Christian architecture in its design, was used to store some of the Mahatma's ashes. Each year, on Gandhi's birthday (2 October), the sun's rays fall on the memorial stone where his ashes were safely kept. Guides may ask for an excessive donation, but Rs 10 is enough.

VIVEKANANDA EXHIBITION & VIVEKANANDAPURAM

In a quirky, purpose-built terracotta building, this exhibition (Main Rd; admission Rs 2; 8am-noon & 4-8pm) details the life and extensive journey across India made by the Indian philosopher Swami Vivekananda (the 'Wandering Monk'; 1863–1902), who developed a synthesis between the tenets of Hinduism and concepts of social justice. Although the storyboards are labelled in English, there's a lot to digest in one visit; if you're overwhelmed, concentrate on enjoying the photos and Swamiji's letters.

A more interesting pictorial exhibition can usually be found at Vivekanandapuram (247012; admission free; 9am-1pm & 5-9pm), a spiritual mission and ashram 3km north of town. The exhibition was closed for renovation in late 2006, but – when open – covers not only the life of Vivekananda in prints, sketches and pictures but is a snapshot of Indian philosophy, religion, leaders and thinkers.

VIVEKANANDA MEMORIAL

This memorial (admission Rs 10; 8am-5pm) is on a rocky island about 400m offshore. Swami Vivekananda meditated here in 1892 before setting out to become one of India's most important religious crusaders. The mandapam, which was built here in Vivekananda's memory in 1970, reflects architectural styles from all over India. Regardless of the number of pilgrims filing through the memorial, it remains a very peaceful and reverent place. From the island there's a fine view back over the fishing harbour and to distant mountains and wind turbines.

The huge statue on the smaller island is not of Vivekananda but of Tamil poet Thiruvalluvar. India's 'Statue of Liberty' was the work of more than 5000 sculptors. It was erected in 2000 and honours the poet's 133-chapter work Thirukural – hence its height of exactly 133ft (40.5m).

Ferries shuttle between the port and the islands between 8am and 4pm; the cost is Rs 20 for the circuit.

GOVERNMENT MUSEUM

The museum (Main Rd; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; 9.30am-5.30pm Sat-Thu) houses a standard display of archaeological finds and temple artefacts.

BAYWATCH

Tired of temples? This impressive amusement park (246563; www.baywatch.co.in; adult/child Rs 240/180; 10am-7pm) is a great way to spend the day, especially if you've got kids in tow. The entry ticket gives unlimited access to a wave pool with water slides (women should swim in at least knee-length shorts and shirt for propriety!) and a host of rides. Its adjacent wax museum (adult/child Rs 50/40), the first and – as we write – the only one in India, contains figures of notable nationals.

Sleeping

Some hotels, especially the midrange places around the bazaar, have seasonal rates, so you may find that prices double here during April and May, and late October to January. Many places also charge more for a 'sea view' or 'rock view' and few offer single rates.

BUDGET

TTDC Youth Hostel (246257; dm Rs 50) This hostel is part of Hotel Tamil Nadu. The dormitories and common bathrooms are pretty dire but you can't beat the price and the location is great.

Vivekananda Kendra (247177; ngc_vkendra@sancharnet.in; Vivekanandapuram; dm Rs 75, r from Rs 150, with AC from Rs 500;) Though 2km from town, this big ashram guesthouse trumps other budget places in terms of peace, quiet and general cleanliness; the three-bed AC room (Rs 700) with private sitting room is great value. Spacious grounds with peacocks lead down to a sunrise viewpoint of the ocean and statue. A free shuttle bus runs hourly into town.

Vivekas Tourist Hotel (☎ 246192; Main Rd; d from Rs 195) Rooms here are simple but very spacious and reasonably clean; it's just opposite the train station.

Saravana Lodge (☎ 246007; Sannathi St; r Rs 200-300) Just outside the temple entrance all rooms have TV and private bathroom with squat toilet; it's very clean and good value. Go for the breezy upstairs rooms.

MIDRANGE & TOP END

Hotel Tamil Nadu (☎ 246257; Beach Rd; r without/with AC Rs 450/750; ❄) Despite the usual quirks of a government-run hotel, this is a great location if you want to be a beachfront walk away from the chaos of town; balcony rooms have ocean, though not temple, views.

Hotel Samudra (☎ 246162; Sannathi St; r without/with sea view Rs 470/670, with AC Rs 970; ❄) Right in the bazaar and near the temple, this hotel is a bit faded but the rooms (especially those overlooking the tank and temple) and service are fine.

Manickhan Tourist Home (☎ 246387; d without/with AC Rs 550/1100; ❄) Many of the rooms at this friendly hotel have been recently and flamboyantly renovated. Most have balconies and many overlook the ocean.

Hotel Maadhini (☎ 246787; East Car St; r ground fl/sea view Rs 500/700, with AC from Rs 1200; ❄) Next door to Manickhan Tourist Home, this hotel offers much the same, plus an excellent garden restaurant.

Hotel Seaview (☎ 247841; seaview@sancharnet.in; East Car St; d without/with AC Rs 1400/1950, with sea view Rs 1750/2550; ❄) The deliciously cool marble lobby signals that this is one of the top places to stay in town. Rooms are neat, clean and well furnished but you pay more for the sea views here than elsewhere.

Eating

There are plenty of fruit stalls and basic veg restaurants in the bazaar area, open for breakfast, lunch and dinner.

Archana Restaurant (East Car St; mains Rs 25-95) At the Hotel Maadhini, this restaurant is one of the more atmospheric places to eat, especially in the evening when the garden section is open. There's a good menu including tandoori chicken, seafood and Chinese, and you can watch chapatis (unleavened Indian bread) being made before your eyes.

Hotel Seaview (East Car St; mains Rs 30-150) This upmarket hotel also has an excellent AC multicuisine restaurant specialising in fresh local seafood.

Hotel Saravana has two clean, busy veg restaurants with thalis (Rs 25) and good chai.

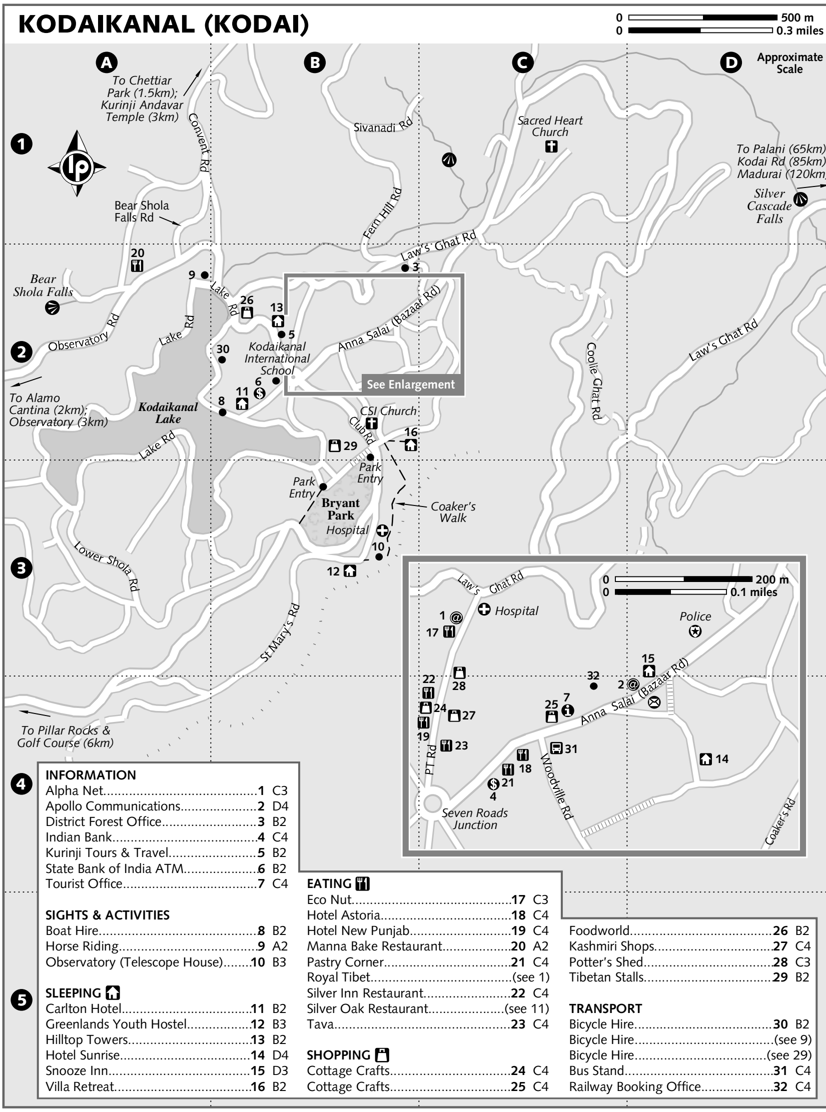
BUS

The surprisingly sedate bus stand is a 10-minute walk west of the centre along Kovalam Rd and there's a handy SETC booking office (⏰ 7am-9pm) on Main Rd. For details of services, see the table, above.

TRAIN

The train station is about 1km north of the bazaar and temple. The daily Chennai Egmore Express departs for Chennai at 5.15pm (sleeper/2AC/3AC Rs 189/321/1026, 13 hours) and the 6.35am Tiruchirappalli–Howrah Express to Chennai departs on Saturday. The same trains stop at Madurai and Trichy.

To Trivandrum there are two daily express trains (2nd class/3AC Rs 33/183, two hours, 87km).



For the real long-haulers or train buffs, the weekly Himsagar Express runs all the way to Jammu Tawi (in Jammu and Kashmir; see p365), a distance of 3734km, in 66 hours – the longest single train ride in India.

THE WESTERN GHATS

The Western Ghats stretch out like a mountainous spine for around 1400km from the north of Mumbai, across Maharashtra, Goa, Karnataka and Kerala, before petering out at the southernmost tip of Tamil Nadu. The hills (with an average elevation of 915m) are covered with evergreen and deciduous forest, and are the source of all the major rivers in South India. They also form a diverse biological and ecological haven with 27% of all India's flowering plants, 60% of all medicinal plants and an incredible array of endemic wildlife, along with several tribal groups whose traditional lifestyle is fast being eroded.

For travellers these mountain areas mean opportunities to trek and see wildlife, and to hang out in Tamil Nadu's climatically cool hill stations of Ooty and Kodaikanal.

KODAIKANAL (KODAI)

☎ 04542 / pop 32,931 / elev 2100m

Kodaikanal is a stunningly situated and easy-going hill station on the southern crest of the Palani knolls, some 120km northwest of Madurai. It's surrounded by wooded slopes, waterfalls and precipitous rocky outcrops and the winding route up and down is breathtaking.

Kodai is the only hill station in India set up by Americans, when missionaries established a school for European children here in 1901. The legacy of this is the renowned Kodaikanal International School, whose cosmopolitan influence is felt throughout the town.

The Kurinji shrub, unique to the Western Ghats, is found in Kodaikanal. Its light, purple-blue-coloured blossoms flower across the hillsides every 12 years; next due date 2018! Australians will feel at home among the many fragrant gum trees.

Kodaikanal provides an escape from the heat and haze of the plains and the opportunity to hike in the quiet sholas (forests). It's a much smaller and more relaxed place than Ooty, though April to June is very busy. The mild temperatures here range from 11°C to 20°C in summer and 8°C to 17°C in winter. Given the mountainous environment, heavy rain can occur at any time; October and November can be seriously wet.

Orientation & Information

For a hill station, Kodai is remarkably compact and the central town area can easily be explored on foot. There are several dial-up internet cafés, and a State Bank of India ATM near the Carlton Hotel.

Alpha Net (PT Rd; per hr Rs 40; 9am-10pm) Internet access.

Apollo Communications (Anna Salai; per hr Rs 40; 9am-8pm) Spacious internet access.

Indian Bank (Anna Salai; 10am-2pm & 2.30-3.30pm Mon-Fri, 10am-12.30pm Sat) With foreign-exchange desk.

Kurinji Tours & Travel (☎ 240008; kurinjitravels@sancharnet.in; Lake Rd; 9am-6pm) Reliable help with onward travel arrangements.

Tourist office (☎ 241675; Anna Salai; 10am-5.45pm) Has answers if you ask the right questions.

Sights & Activities

WALKING & TREKKING

The valley views along paved Coaker's Walk (admission Rs 2, camera Rs 5; 7am-7pm) are superb when the mist clears. There's an observatory (admission Rs 3) with telescope at the southern end. You can start near Greenlands Youth Hostel or Villa Retreat – where stained glass in the nearby Church of South India (CSI) is stunning in the morning light – and the stroll takes all of five minutes. The 5km lake circuit is pleasant early morning, counting kingfishers, before the tourist traffic starts.

GLOBAL CLASSROOM

At weekends they cycle, boat, horse-ride, hike, shop, watch DVDs, hang out. They describe Kodai variously as a bubble; middle of nowhere; beautiful; clean; cold; isolated; small and cute; the boondocks. But one thing this particular group of students from Kodaikanal International School (KIS) agree on is its cosmopolitan food; no small compliment from these well-travelled teenagers from Bangladesh, Bhutan, Mumbai (Bombay), Canada, Delhi, Korea, Nepal, Tibet and the USA.

'Royal Tibetan – the food's really good.'

'Brownies and home-made ice cream at Pastry Corner – addictive!'

'Chicken noodles or sizzler at Silver Inn; they're the best!'

'Buffet at the Carlton. We're not usually allowed there because they serve alcohol, but the food's great. Well, there's lots of it anyway.'

'Veg food? Has to be Tava. Try the sev puri (crisp, puffy fried bread with potato and chutney).'

It's fair to say that the town, at least in its present form, owes its existence to the school. A nondenominational missionary school for more than 100 years, KIS has always worked towards tolerance and social justice; it's the town's main employer; and the multicultural background and presence of its students gives Kodai a worldly feel – and, of course, cuisine – that is quite different from most other small towns in India. Food for thought, hey?

Virginia Jealous, with thanks to Ankita, Intisar, John, Mallimalika, Nitya, Preet, Prioska, Sarah, Tenzing and William

The views from Pillar Rocks, a 7km hike (one-way beginning near Bryant Park), are excellent in fine weather, and there are some wonderful hiking trails through pockets of forest, including Bombay Shola and Pambar Shola, that meander around Lower Shola Rd and St Mary's Rd. You will need a guide though; one good option is the quietly knowledgeable Vijay Kumar of Nature Trails Kodai (☎ 242791, 99942-77373; www.nature-trails.net; per person per hr Rs 50, minimum 2 people), or talk to the helpful folk at Manna Bake Restaurant (p1092). Guides (per hour around Rs 70) of varying quality can also be arranged through the tourist office; its booklet Trekking Routes in Kodaikanal details walks ranging from 8km to 27km.

PARKS & WATERFALLS

Near the start of Coaker's Walk is Bryant Park (admission Rs 5; 9.30am-5pm), landscaped and stocked by the British officer after whom it is named. Chettiar Park (admission free; 8.30am-5pm), about 1.5km uphill from town on the way to the Kurinji Andavar Temple, is a small and pretty landscaped park. There are numerous waterfalls, at their most impressive after rain of course. Silver Cascade, on the road outside Kodai, is often full of interstate tourists bathing and the compact Bear Shola Falls is in a pocket of forest about a 20-minute walk from the town centre.

BOATING & HORSE RIDING

The lake at Kodai is beautifully landscaped and it appears to be de rigueur for families to get out on a boat. Both the Kodaikanal Boat & Rowing Club, and Tamil Nadu Tourist Development Corporation, rent similar boats for similar prices: Rs 20 to 40 for a two-seater pedal boat to Rs 140 (including boatman) for a Kashmiri shikara (covered gondola) for 30 minutes.

At the bicycle hire area by the lake you'll be accosted by guides renting horses. The fixed rate is Rs 130 per hour unaccompanied or Rs 200 with a guide but you can take a short ride for Rs 80. Some of these horses should be retired.

Sleeping

Hotel prices can jump by up to 300% during high season (from 1 April to 30 June). Prices listed here are low-season rates.

Most hotels in Kodai have a 9am or 10am checkout time in high season but for the rest of the year it's usually 24 hours.

BUDGET

Hotel Sunrise (☎ 241358; d Rs 200) This is a down-at-heel but friendly enough place, in a good location. The view from the front (though not from most of the simple rooms) is excellent.

Greenlands Youth Hostel (☎ 240899; dm Rs 100, d Rs 200-800) Near the southern end of Coaker's Walk, this remains the number-one choice for budget travellers, as much for the fine views as the cheap rooms. There's a crowded dormitory and a range of rooms from very basic doubles on the edge of the valley to more spacious rooms with balcony, fireplace and TV. Staff are cheery, the location is peaceful and treks can be arranged here.

Snooze Inn (☎ 240837; Anna Salai; d Rs 300-425) Snooze Inn is well run and good value, with a charming elderly gentleman often at the front desk. Rooms are plain but clean and all have TV; ask for one towards the back, these are quieter, with forest views.

MIDRANGE & TOP END

Villa Retreat (☎ 240940; www.villaretreat.com; Club Rd, Coaker's Walk; r Rs 690-890, cottages Rs 1890) At the northern end of Coaker's Walk, the terrace garden of this lovely old stone-built family hotel offers awesome valley views. The best rooms, somewhat overpriced, are the cottages with panoramic views. Most rooms have fireplaces and TV, and there's a cosy restaurant.

Hilltop Towers (☎ 240413; httowers@sancharnet.in; Club Rd; d/ste from Rs 750/1100) Near the Kodaikanal International School, Hilltop is a neat hotel with bright clean rooms and polished teak floors; those with views are particularly welcoming, as is the helpful staff.

Alamo Cantina (☎ 240566; the.alamo.kodai@gmail.com; r incl breakfast from Rs 1500) Just about ready to open when we visited, this quirky two-room log cabin – a 3km drive from town, but with a 20-minute walking short cut – is all terracotta, wood and bison horns, set in quiet pasture with forest behind.

Carlton Hotel (☎ 240056; www.krahejahospitality.com; Lake Rd; d/cottages Rs 3670/7150) Kodai's most prestigious hotel overlooks the lake, blending colonial style with five-star luxury and a price tag to match. Rooms are bright, spacious and some have private balconies with lake views. Leather chairs huddle around a central stone fireplace in the main lounge which adjoins an excellent bar, billiard room and restaurant. There's also a children's playground, gym, sauna, massage and private boathouse.

Eating

PT Rd is the best place for cheap restaurants and it's here that most travellers and students from the international school congregate. There's a whole range of different cuisines available, including a strong Tibetan influence. Don't expect an early breakfast in Kodai outside of your hotel; not much gets up and running before 9.30am.

Manna Bake Restaurant (☎ 243766; Bear Shola Falls Rd; dishes Rs 20-50; ⌚ breakfast & lunch daily, dinner only Mon-Sat, order by 3pm) This tiny family-run café is a must for its simple home-cooked Western vegetarian food (sandwiches, pizza and soup) and homely atmosphere. The wholemeal bread is legendary and many a cold and hungry traveller has gorged on Ivy's apple crumble and custard (Rs 35). It's a 15-minute walk from town near Bear Shola Falls (fork right off Observatory Rd, then right down a very steep lane before the entrance to Hotel Clifton), and tucked down a leafy driveway.

Hotel Astoria (☎ 240524; Anna Salai; mains Rs 20-50, thalis Rs 30-50; ⌚ breakfast, lunch & dinner) The veg restaurant here is always packed at lunchtime for its excellent all-you-can-eat thalis.

Tava (PT Rd; mains Rs 30; ⌚ lunch & dinner Thu-Tue) A clean, fast and cheap veg option, there's a wide menu here and it's often packed; try the cauliflower-stuffed gobi paratha (spicy cauliflower bread) and sev puri (crisp, puffy fried bread with potato and chutney).

Royal Tibet (PT Rd; ⌚ lunch & dinner) A very popular place, this serves tasty noodle soups and other Himalayan fare; steamed momo (dumplings; Rs 40) are good.

Silver Inn Restaurant (☎ 241374; PT Rd; mains Rs 30-100; ⌚ breakfast, lunch & dinner) This country-style, family-run restaurant is a great place for brunch (full English breakfast is Rs 150) and the menu ranges from homemade fettuccine and pizzas, huge and delicious sizzler plates (Rs 110) and good salad to Indian and Chinese dishes.

Hotel New Punjab (PT Rd; mains Rs 30-100; ⌚ lunch & dinner) For North Indian and tandoori dishes this is the best place in Kodai. Succulent tandoori chicken is Rs 100.

Silver Oak Restaurant (☎ 240056; Lake Rd; buffet lunch & dinner Rs 350; ⌚ breakfast, lunch & dinner) The restaurant at the Carlton Hotel puts on lavish buffet meals, though you might feel a bit out of place in hiking gear. After eating you can relax in the atmospheric bar or sit by the roaring fire in the lounge.

SELF-CATERING

Eco Nut (☎ 243296; PT Rd; ⌚ 10am-5pm, closed Sun) This interesting shop sells a wide range of locally produced organic health food – wholewheat bread, muffins, cheese, salad greens – and essential oils, herbs and herb remedies.

Pastry Corner (Anna Salai; ⌚ 9am-9pm) Pick up great picnic sandwiches and yummy brownies (Rs 5; after 3pm) here, or squeeze onto the benches with a cuppa to watch the world go by.

The local Sunday market, at the northern end of PT Rd, is a colourful riot of fresh produce, and Foodworld (Lake Rd; ⌚ 9am-7.30pm) supermarket stocks pretty much everything else; there's also a Pastry Corner counter here.

Excellent homemade chocolates and dried fruit are sold all over town.

Shopping

The many handicraft stores stock good craftwork, and several reflect the local low-key but long-term commitment to social justice.

Cottage Crafts Shops (☎ 240160; Anna Salai & PT Rd; ⌚ 10am-8pm) Run by the voluntary organisation Coordinating Council for Social Concerns in Kodai (Corsock), these shops sell goods crafted by disadvantaged groups; about 80% of purchase price returns to the craftspeople.

On PT Rd you'll find small Kashmiri shops, as well as the Potter's Shed (⌚ 9am-8pm Thu-Tue, 9am-5pm Wed) with fine ceramics; proceeds go to help needy children.

By the lakeside entrance to Bryant Park Tibetan stalls sell warm clothing and shawls – good, cheap stuff to keep you warm on chilly nights.

Getting There & Away

The nearest train station is Kodai Road, at the foot of the mountain, where taxis (around Rs 800) and buses (Rs 10) wait. There's a train booking office in town.

Don't expect a bus to be leaving from Kodaikanal in the next five minutes. Tickets for private buses can be booked at travel agents near the bus stand. For details of main bus departures from Kodaikanal see opposite.

Getting Around

The central part of Kodaikanal is compact and very easy to get around on foot. There are no autorickshaws (believe it or not) but plenty of taxis willing to take you to various sightseeing points. Charges are fixed and relatively high – the minimum charge is Rs 60, and sightseeing tours cost from Rs 300 for two hours to Rs 700 for six hours.

If you fancy a ride around the lake or you're fit enough to tackle the hills, mountain bikes can be hired from several bicycle stalls (per hr/day Rs 10/75; 8am-6pm) around the lake.

AROUND KODAIKANAL

At the foothills of the Western Ghats, about three hours' drive below Kodaikanal off the Palani–Dindigul road, lies the extraordinary Cardamom House (☎ 0451-2556765, 09360-691793; www.cardamomhouse.com; r from Rs 2700). Created with love and care by a retired Brit, this low-key, comfortable guesthouse and gardens – at the end of a scenic road beside bird-rich Lake Kamarajar – runs on solar power, uses water wisely, farms organically, trains and employs only locals (who produce terrific meals), and supports several village development initiatives. You'll need to book well in advance, hire a driver to take you there, and prepare for some serious relaxation.

INDIRA GANDHI (ANNAMALAI) WILDLIFE SANCTUARY

One of three wildlife sanctuaries in the Western Ghats along the Tamil Nadu–Kerala border, this cool, misty mountain park covers almost 1000 sq km of mostly teak forest and evergreen jungle. It's home to elephants, gaurs, tigers, panthers, spotted deer, wild boars, bears, porcupines and civet cats, and the Nilgiri tahr – commonly known as the ibex – may also be spotted. The park also has a renowned medicinal plant garden and interpretive centre (check out the astrological medicine chart and beauty hints if you're feeling travel-weary), and is home to the tribal group of Kada people, many of whom work here. The park's elephant training centre can be visited on the guided vehicle tour.

The park reception centre (per person Rs 50, camera/video Rs 10/50; day visitors 6am-6pm) at Topslip, where trekking guides can be arranged and where there are several lodges, is about 35km southwest of Pollachi. While wildlife is often seen on the drive in, and you can wander around the reception centre surroundings, access to the inner forest is limited to tours (Rs 625 for a 25-seater bus, irrespective of numbers; one hour) or guided treks (Rs 100, maximum four people, four hours). Tours and treks run on demand. A day visit from Pollachi, using public transport, is feasible (see below).

Sleeping & Eating

Forest accommodation is available at and near Topslip. It must be booked in advance in Pollachi at the WWO (☎ 04259-2225356; Meenkarai Rd; 9am-5pm Mon-Fri), but hours and service here are erratic at best. Rooms in several simple lodges at Topslip are Rs 300; the somewhat more comfortable New Tree Tops lodge is Rs 1000; and dorm beds are available for Rs 20 at Ambulli Illam, 2km from the reception centre. There's a basic canteen at Topslip.

It's a fairly good bet you'll need to overnight in Pollachi; try Sakthi Hotels (☎ 04259-223050; sakthifibreproducts@vsnl.net; Coimbatore Rd; d Rs 200, with AC Rs 495;).

Getting There & Away

The sanctuary is between Palani and Coimbatore. Regular buses travellilng from both places stop at the nearest large town, Pollachi, which is also on the Coimbatore–Dindigul train line.

From Pollachi, buses leave the bus stand for Topslip at 6.15am, 11.15am and 3.15pm, returning at 9.30am, 1pm and 6.30pm. A taxi from Pollachi to the sanctuary costs around Rs 600 one way.

COIMBATORE

☎ 0422 / pop 1.46 million

Although a large business and industrial city, Coimbatore is mainly a transport junction for travellers – a convenient stop if you're heading to the hill stations of Ooty or Kodaikanal. Sometimes known as the Manchester of India for its textile industry, Coimbatore is an easygoing place with plenty of accommodation and eating options.

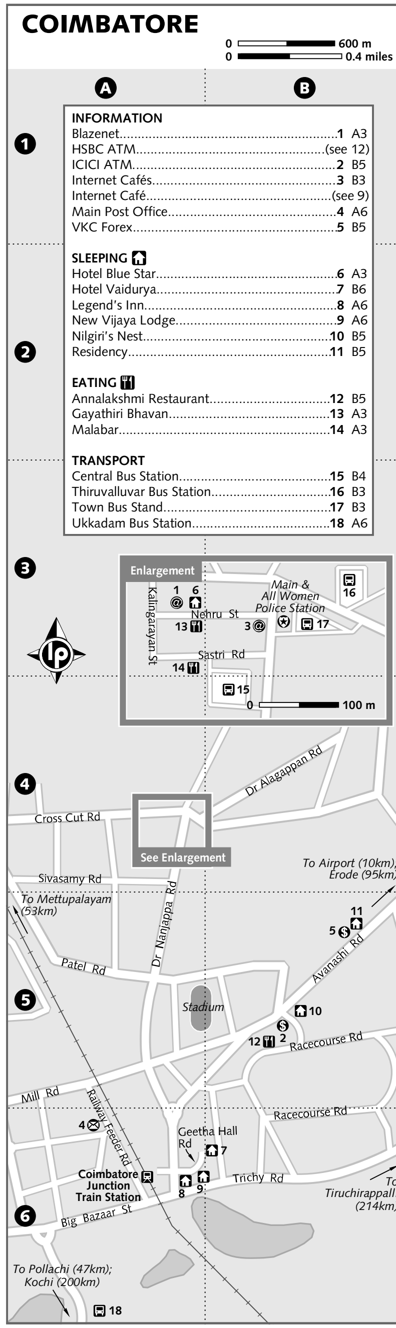
Sleeping



Low-budget and midrange accommodation is in abundance in the bus stand area and down the bustling and narrow Geetha Hall Rd, directly opposite the train station. More upmarket places are along Avanashi Rd.

New Vijaya Lodge (☎ 2301570; Geetha Hall Rd; s/d Rs 120/190) A basic but clean and friendly little hotel, this has good-value rooms with an internet café downstairs.

Hotel Vaidurya (☎ 4392777; www.hotelvaidurya.com; 73 Geetha Hall Rd; s/d from Rs 275/500, with AC Rs 650/750; ❄) Vaidurya is a smart midrange place, with small but pleasant rooms in the main building; the cheaper rooms in the annexe are less inviting.

Hotel Blue Star (☎ 2230635; 369A Nehru St; s/d from Rs 300/450, r with AC Rs 700; ❄) A sprawling hotel, this has simple, clean rooms; the top floor was recently renovated and is much nicer than downstairs. Management is friendly and it's convenient for the bus stands.

Legend's Inn (☎ 4350000; Geetha Hall Rd; s/d Rs 400/600, with AC Rs 750/850; ❄) New in 2005, this hotel is a gem with comfortable furnishings, bamboo blinds, and sparkling bathrooms (long may they last).

Nilgiri's Nest (☎ 2214309; nilgiris@md3.vsnl.net.in; 739A Avanashi Rd; s/d from Rs 1250/1500; ❄) This intimate, well-run hotel has comfortable rooms, an excellent restaurant and supermarket and food hall attached.

Residency (☎ 2201234; www.theresidency.com; 1076 Avanashi Rd; s/d from Rs 3200/3500; ❄ 💻 🏊) Coimbatore's finest hotel has all the trimmings, along with friendly staff and immaculate rooms. There's a well-equipped health club and pool, two excellent restaurants, a coffee shop and a bookshop in the lobby.

Eating

There are numerous places around the train station serving thalis for around Rs 25. Another good place for inexpensive restaurants is along Sastri Rd and Nehru St just north of the central bus station. Avanashi Rd is Coimbatore's trendy area with several high-quality restaurants, and a fast foodhall and supermarket underneath Nilgiri's Nest (opposite).

Gayathiri Bhavan (Nehru St; mains Rs 40-80; 🕑 breakfast, lunch & dinner) This popular veg restaurant has an interesting menu, an AC dining hall and an inviting outdoor seating area where you may have to wait for a table. The 'kebab corner' features marinated diced cottage cheese, capsicum, onion and vegetable kebabs, and there's a great range of juices, ice creams and shakes.

Malabar (Sastri Rd; mains Rs 50-100; 🕑 lunch & dinner) In the KK Residency Hotel, this restaurant specialises in Keralan and North Indian food. The Malabar chicken roast (Rs 100) is a spicy treat and there are seafood choices such as tandoori pomfret.

Annalakshmi (☎ 2212142; 106 Racecourse Rd; set meals Rs 150; 🕑 lunch & dinner Tue-Sun) The top veg restaurant in town, this is run by devotees of Swami Shatanand Saraswati; the price of your meal helps support the Shivanjali educational trust for underprivileged children.

Getting There & Away

AIR

The airport is 10km east of town. Indian Airlines (☎ 2399821; 1604 Trichy Rd) flies daily between Coimbatore and Mumbai (US$160), Delhi (US$325) and Kozhikode (Calicut; US$50) and three times a week to Chennai (US$100) and Bengaluru (US$65).

Jet Airways (☎ 2212034) flies daily to Bengaluru (US$75) and Chennai (US$100). Newcomer Paramount Airways (☎ 1800 180 1234; www.paramountairways.com) also flies to Chennai. Air Deccan (☎ 2599885) offers cheap flights to Bengaluru (Rs 1400). These three airlines have counters at the airport, open to coincide with flight times.

BUS

There are three bus stands in the city centre.

From the Central Bus Station (☎ 2431521) services depart to nearby northern destinations such as Ooty (Rs 31, 3½ hours, every 30 minutes) and Mettupalayam (Rs 10.50, one hour, every 10 minutes).

From Thiruvallur bus station (☎ 25249690) you can catch state and interstate buses to Bengaluru (Rs 160 to 225, nine hours, 10 daily), Mysore (Rs 60, five hours, every hour) and Chennai (Rs 199 to 275, 11½ hours, seven daily). The town bus stand is for local city buses.

Ukkadam bus station, south of the city, is for buses to nearby southern destinations including Palani (Rs 25, three hours, every 20 minutes), Pollachi (Rs 10, one hour, every five minutes) and Madurai (Rs 70, five hours, every 30 minutes).

TRAIN

Coimbatore Junction is on the main line between Chennai and Ernakulam (Kerala). For Ooty, catch the daily Nilgiri Express at 5.15am; it connects with the miniature railway departure from Mettupalayam to Ooty at 7.10am. The whole trip to Ooty takes about seven hours.

Getting Around

For the airport take bus 20 from the town bus stand or bus 90 from the train station (Rs 4). Many buses ply between the train station and the town bus stand (Rs 1.50).

Autorickshaw drivers charge around Rs 40 between the bus and train stations.

AROUND COIMBATORE

ISHA YOGA CENTER

This ashram (☎ 0422-2615345; www.ishafoundation.org; 6am-8pm), in Poondi, 30km west of Coimbatore, is also a yoga retreat and place of pilgrimage. The centrepiece is a multi-religious temple housing the Dhyanalingam, said to be unique in that it embodies all seven chakras of spiritual energy. Visitors are welcome to the temple to meditate, or to take part in one- to two-week Isha yoga courses, for which you should register in advance. The ashram was founded by spiritual leader and yogi Sadhguru Jaggi Vasudev and is home to an order of Bhramhacharya monks and devotees.

METTUPALAYAM

This commercial town is the starting point for the miniature train to Ooty. There's little of interest for travellers, but if you want to avoid a predawn start in Coimbatore to make the 7.20am connection here, there is plenty of accommodation available. Try Nanda Lodge (☎ 04254-222555; Ooty Main Rd; s/d Rs 195/290), which is basic but clean and right opposite the bus station, through which there's a short cut to the train station. Hotel EMS Mayura (☎ 04254-227936; 212 Coimbatore Rd; r without/with AC Rs 450/800;), a decent enough midrange hotel, is 2km from the station. An autorickshaw to the station will cost about Rs 30.

COONOOR

☎ 0423 / pop 101,000 / elev 1850m

Coonoor is one of the three Nilgiri hill stations – Ooty, Kotagiri and Coonoor (see the Nilgiri Hills map, p1096) – that lie above the southern plains.

Climbing up out of the busy market area and looking down over the sea of red tile rooftops to the slopes behind, there's a strong sense of what hill stations were originally all about: peace, cool climate and some beautiful scenery. Although smaller than Ooty, Coonoor's centre doesn't come across as being any less busy, especially the area around the train station, bus stand and market, which is a bustling, choking mess with tenacious touts. Thankfully you leave all this behind at your accommodation, most of which is in quieter Upper Coonoor, 1km to 2km above the town centre.

Sights & Activities

In Upper Coonoor the 12-hectare Sim's Park (adult/child Rs 5/2, camera/video Rs 25/250; 8.30am-6pm) is a peaceful oasis of manicured lawns and more than 1000 plant species, including magnolia, tree ferns and camellia. Buses heading to Kotagiri can drop you here.

There are several popular viewpoints around Coonoor. Dolphin's Nose, about 10km from town, exposes a vast panorama encompassing Catherine Falls across the valley. Heading out here early is the best bet for avoiding the mist. On the way back, drop into Guernsey Tea Factory (☎ 2230205; admission Rs 10; 8am-6pm) and take a short guided tour of the fragrant processing plant. Afterwards stop at Lamb's Rock, named after the British captain who created a short path to this favourite picnic spot in a pretty patch of forest. The easiest way to see these sights – all are on the same road – is on a taxi tour for around Rs 400 and, if you're feeling energetic, walk the 6km or so back into town from Lamb's Rock (it's mostly, but not entirely, downhill).

Sleeping & Eating

Hotel Vivek Coonoor (☎ 2230658; Figure of Eight Rd; dm Rs 100, r from Rs 300-500) Many of the wide range of rooms here have balconies (screened to avoid the 'monkey menace') from which you can hear the tea-pickers plucking the leaves below you. There's also a monster dormitory. It's clean, well run and has a bar and restaurant.

YWCA Wyoming Guesthouse (☎ 2234426; s/d Rs 200/400) This ramshackle guesthouse in Upper Coonoor is a budget favourite. Although ageing and draughty, the 150-year-old colonial house oozes character with wooden terraces and quiet, good views over Coonoor. Take an autorickshaw (around Rs 30) for ease, or catch a town bus to Bedford from where it's a 10-minute walk – you'll need to ask directions.

Taj Garden Retreat (☎ 2230021; www.tajhotels.com; Church Rd; s/d from US$70/85) On the hilltop beside the All Saints Church, this fine hotel has beautiful gardens and enormous comfortable colonial rooms with polished floorboards, bathtubs and open fireplaces. The 'superior' rooms have a separate sitting room. The hotel also has an excellent multicuisine restaurant and a bar, and for the more health conscious, a gym, Ayurvedic and yoga centre.

Tryst (☎ 2207057; www.trystindia.com; d incl breakfast & dinner Rs 3900) If you're looking for a gregarious accommodation experience that's both quirky and classy, check out the website of this extraordinary guesthouse and book ahead. It's beautifully located in a former tea plantation manager's bungalow.

Your best bet for eating is your hotel restaurant, though there are several eating places around the town centre below the train station.

Getting There & Away

Coonoor is on the miniature train line between Mettupalayam (28km) and Ooty (18km) – see p1103. Buses to Ooty (Rs 6.50, one hour) and Kotagiri (Rs 8, one hour) leave roughly every 15 minutes.

KOTAGIRI

☎ 04266 / pop 29,184

Kotagiri is a quiet village 28km east of Ooty. The oldest of the three Nilgiri hill stations, the village itself is dusty and uninspiring but the surrounding landscape of tea estates, tribal Kota settlements and rolling hills is a world away from the overdevelopment of Ooty.

From Kotagiri you can visit Catherine Falls, 8km away near the Mettupalayam road (the last 3km is by foot only, and the falls only flow after rain), Elk Falls (6km) and Kodanad Viewpoint (22km), where there's a view over the Coimbatore Plains and Mysore Plateau. A half-day taxi tour to all three will cost around Rs 600. The scenery on the road down to Mettupalayam is gorgeous, so you may want to detour this way if you're heading down from Ooty.

A couple of very basic lodges are in the small town centre and a splendid 1915 colonial building, Stone House Retreat (☎ 273300; www.naharhotels.com; r Rs 2000), offers fabulous views and atmosphere but charges like a wounded bull for all extras.

Getting There & Away

Buses stop at the edge of town, about 1km from the centre. Buses to Ooty depart hourly (Rs 15, two hours), crossing one of Tamil Nadu's highest passes. Buses to Mettupalayam leave every 30 minutes and to Coonoor every 15 minutes.

OOTY (UDHAGAMANDALAM)

☎ 0423 / pop 93,921 / elev 2240m

Ooty is South India's most famous hill station, established by the British in the early 19th century as the summer headquarters of the then-Madras government and memorably nicknamed 'Snooty Ooty'.

Until about 20 years ago it resembled an unlikely combination of southern England and Australia: single-storey stone cottages, bijou-fenced flower gardens, leafy winding lanes and tall eucalyptus stands, all surrounded by the tea plantations that were the town's original raison d'être. Times have changed and, if not for the climate and the rolling hills, Ooty's centre resembles any overburdened provincial Indian town.

But Ooty has an undeniable charm and the nearby hills and forest are sensational for trekking. Life here is relaxed and just a few kilometres out of town you are in the peace of the hills with superb views. The journey up to Ooty on the miniature train is romantic and the scenery stunning – try to get a seat on the left-hand side where you get the best views across the mountains.

From April to June (the very busy season) Ooty is a welcome relief from the hot plains and in the colder months (October to March) it's crisp, clear and surprisingly cool. You'll need warm clothing – which you can buy very cheaply here – as the overnight temperature occasionally drops to 0°C.

Orientation & Information

Ooty sprawls over a large area among rolling hills and valleys. In between the lake and the racecourse are the train station and the bus station. From either of these it's a 10-minute walk to the bazaar area and a 20-minute walk to Ooty's commercial centre, Charing Cross.

BOOKSHOPS & LIBRARY

ST STEPHEN'S CHURCH

Built in 1829, the immaculately maintained St Stephen's Church (Church Hill Rd; 10am-1pm & 3-5pm Mon-Sat, services 8am & 11am Sun) is the oldest in the Nilgiris. Its huge wooden beams came from the palace of Tipu Sultan in Srirangapatnam and were hauled the 120km by a team of elephants. Marble plaques on the walls, and the quiet and overgrown cemetery, commemorate

BOTANICAL GARDENS

Established in 1848, these beautifully maintained gardens (adult/child Rs 10/3, camera/video Rs 30/100; 8am-6.30pm) include some enormous mature trees as well as native shrubs and lush garden beds. There's also a fossilised tree trunk believed to be around 20 million years old.

CENTENARY ROSE PARK

With its terraced lawns and colourful flowerbeds – best between May and July – this terraced rose garden (Selbourne Rd; adult/child Rs 10/5, camera/video Rs 30/50; 9am-6.30pm) is a pleasant place for a stroll. There are good views over Ooty from the hilltop location.

THREAD GARDEN

The signs announce 'first time in world' and 'miracle', and while it might not exactly be the latter, the Thread Garden (2445145; North Lake Rd; admission Rs 10, camera/video Rs 15/30; 8.30am-7.30pm) is certainly an unusual exhibition. More than 150 species of flowers and plants from around the world have been meticulously re-created using 'hand-wound' thread. The technique was perfected by Keralan artist Anthony Joseph and the work took 50 craftspeople 12 years to complete.

DODDABETTA LOOKOUT

Perched on the highest point (2633m) of the Nilgiris, this viewpoint (admission Rs 2; 7am-6pm) offers fabulous views across the surrounding peaks and plains. It's about 10km out of town; go early before the mist sets in. Any Kotagiri buses will drop you here.

TRIBAL RESEARCH CENTRE MUSEUM

Under the auspices of the Tribal Research Centre (TRC), this interesting museum (admission free; 10am-5pm Mon-Fri) displays cultural exhibits from several tribes; the similarities and subtle differences are striking. Upstairs is a truly wonderful collection of photos taken on the centre's research trips including to the Andaman Islands, and – if you're lucky – knowledgeable and enthusiastic staff will make this a memorable visit. The museum is just beyond the village of M Palada, 11km from Ooty on the way to Emerald. Catch an Emerald bus (several daily) to the TRC stop just after M Palada, or any of the frequent buses heading to M Palada and walk from there.

Activities

TREKKING

To appreciate the natural beauty of Ooty and its surrounds, walking is the way to go and a day hike will take you to some fine viewpoints, through evergreen forest, tea plantations and grassland, and often to a Toda village. If you want to get off the beaten track it's best to get a reliable guide with good local knowledge. For other nearby trekking options, consider the resorts near Mudumalai National Park (see p1104).

The senior guides of the long-standing Queen of the Hills Tourist Guides Association (2444449; seniappan@yahoo.com; half-/full-day trek Rs 250/400) – Seniappan, Sheriff and Mohan – are knowledgeable, affable and good English-language speakers. You'll usually find them around the bus station, or phone and someone will come to find you. Day walks meander through tea plantations, hills, Toda villages and forest, and you'll usually catch a local bus back at the end of the day. Overnight treks staying in a local village can also be arranged.

HORSE RIDING

Alone or with a guide, you can hire horses outside the boathouse on the north side of the lake; the rides mostly consist of a short amble along bitumen. Prices are set, from Rs 50 for a short ride to Rs 150 for an hour, which takes you partway around the lake. The horses at the boathouse looked a lot better cared for than the mangy ponies hanging around the bus stand.

BOATING

Rowboats can be rented from the boathouse (Rs 5, camera/video Rs 10/100; 9am-5.30pm) by the artificial lake (created in 1824). Prices start from Rs 60 for a two-seater pedal boat (30 minutes) and up to Rs 250 for a 15-seater motorboat (20 minutes).

HORSE RACING

Ooty's racecourse dominates the lower part of the hill station between Charing Cross and the lake. The horse-racing season runs from mid-April to June and on race days the town is a hive of activity; it's an event impossible to miss if you're in town. Outside the season,

HILL TRIBES OF THE NILGIRI

For centuries, the Nilgiris have been home to hill tribes. While retaining integrity in customs, dress, principal occupation and language, the tribes were economically, socially and culturally interdependent.

The Toda tribe lived on the western plateau in the area now called Ooty. Their social, economic and spiritual system centred on the buffalo. The produce derived from the buffalo (mainly milk and ghee) was integral to their diet and it was used as currency – in exchange for grain, tools, pots and even medical services. Most importantly, the dairy produce provided offerings to the gods as well as fuel for the funeral pyre. It was only at the ritual for human death that the strictly vegetarian Toda killed a buffalo, and they killed not for food but to provide company for the deceased. Other traditional customs that continue today include the division of labour; men care for the buffaloes and women embroider shawls used for ritual, as well as practical purposes. Today, only about 1500 Toda remain.

The Badaga migrated to the Nilgiri Hills in the wake of Muslim invasions in the north, and are thus not officially a tribal people. With knowledge of the world outside the hills, they became effective representatives for the hill tribes. Their agricultural produce, particularly grain, added a further dimension to the hill diet, and they traded this for buffalo products from the Toda.

The Kotas lived in the Kotagiri area and were considered by other tribes to be lower in status. Artisans of leather goods and pots, the Kotas were also musicians. The Kotas still undertake ceremonies in which the gods are beseeched for rains and bountiful harvests.

The Kurumbas inhabited the thick forests of the south. They gathered bamboo, honey and materials for housing, some of which they supplied to other tribes. They also engaged in a little agriculture, and at sowing and harvest times they employed the Badaga to perform rituals entreating the gods for abundant yields. Kurumba witchcraft was respected and sought after by the other tribes.

The Irulus, also from the southern slopes, produced tools and gathered honey and other forest products that they converted into brooms and incense. They are devotees of Vishnu and often performed special rituals for other tribes.

British settlement in the Ooty area from the early 19th century had a significant impact on tribal life. Some tribes adapted quickly, especially the Badaga. Being cultivators, they continued their traditional pursuits in untraditional ways; they cultivated the cash crops (tea and coffee) of the new settlers, but they were no longer able to provide the grains that were essential to the economy of the other tribes. Eventually, tribal systems, especially economic and cultural ones, began to collapse. Displaced tribes have been 'granted' land by the Indian government. But the cultivation of land is anathema to the Toda, who see themselves as caretakers of the soil – for them, to dig into the land is to desecrate it.

Today many tribal people have assimilated to the point of invisibility. Some have fallen into destructive patterns associated with displacement and alienation. Others remain straddled across two cultures, maintaining vestiges of their traditions while embracing customs and beliefs of the dominant culture.

the 2.4km racecourse is little more than an overgrown paddock.

JOLLY WORLD

This amusement park (admission Rs 5; 9am-7.30pm) is between the lake and the bus stand with stalls, sideshows, rides (Rs 5 to 50) and all the good stuff to keep kids occupied. For grown-up kids there's a go-kart track (Rs 60). It's busy on weekends when families invade Ooty.

Tours

The tourist office (p1098) can put you in touch with agencies that run day trips to Mudumalai National Park via the Pykhara Dam (Rs 200; minimum 15 people) starting at 9.30am and returning at 7pm, with just a quick spin through the park. Trips to Coonoor and surrounds are also possible.

A better alternative is to hire a taxi for the day and go as you please. The rates are set at Rs 450 for a four-hour trip around Ooty, or Rs 1100 for a full day.

Sleeping

Ooty has some of Tamil Nadu's best and/or most atmospheric accommodation if you're prepared to pay for it. It's a sellers' market in the busy high season (1 April to 15 June) when many hotel prices double and checkout time is often 9am. Prices listed here are for the low season when most places are good value. In town you'll be close to all amenities plus the inevitable noise and pollution, but peace, tranquillity and some wonderful midrange hotels can be found just a few kilometres away. Some guesthouses have open fires, either in bedrooms or in a common lounge, and there's generally a small charge for firewood and cleaning.

If you arrive by train with no accommodation booking, you can leave your bags at the station for a reasonable Rs 10 while you look around.

BUDGET

YHA Youth Hostel Ooty (☎ 2447506; ootyyouthhostel@hotmail.com; 42 South Lake Rd; dm member/nonmember Rs 75/100, d Rs 300/400) Ten minutes' walk from the bus stand, this small hostel is quietly located by the lake but can get busy with local youth groups in high season.

YWCA Anandagiri (☎ 2442218; Ettines Rd; dm Rs 110, r & bungalow incl tax from Rs 345-650) The YWCA has many things going for it, not least the good location overlooking the racecourse, within walking distance of the town centre and bus stand. It's set in spacious grounds with a main building, and a cluster of separate cottages. There are two comfy large, colonial-style lounges, a library and dining room with fireplace, and most rooms are spacious and clean.

Reflections Guest House (☎ 2443834; North Lake Rd; d from Rs 350-600) This family-run place overlooks the lake in a peaceful location between the bus stand and the boathouse. Rooms are simple and clean with hot water in the morning – the ones above the main house have sit-outs and good lake views. Home-cooked meals can be ordered, and there's a lounge with TV and open fire.

Hotel Mountview (☎ 2443307; Racecourse Rd; r Rs 400-500) Perched on a quiet driveway directly above the bus station, these eight simple, big rooms in a once-elegant old bungalow are good value and well located.

MIDRANGE & TOP END

Nilgiri Woodlands Hotel (☎ 2442451; Racecourse Rd; d/cottage incl tax Rs 600/750) This Raj-era hotel is looking decidedly the worse for wear but it's full of mildewy faded character. Manicured gardens, and the gabled roof and red-tiled cottages, are a reminder of old Ooty.

Willow Hill (☎ 2444037; willow@sancharnet.in; 58/1 Havelock Rd; d Rs 800-1500) Sitting high above the town, Willow Hill's large windows provide some great views of Ooty. The rooms, all with wooden floors, are spacious and comfortable in the style of an alpine chalet, with the most expensive rooms offering a private garden. It's not as stylish as some, but it's friendly and affordable and there's a reasonable restaurant.

King's Cliff (☎ 2452888; www.kingscliff-ooty.com; Havelock Rd; d Rs 1275-1975) High above Ooty on Strawberry Hill, this is a delightful hotel built into a colonial mansion with wood panelling, antique furnishings and brilliant views. It's an intimate retreat with only nine rooms, and all have individual character along with fireplaces. Deluxe rooms have a private covered porch, and breakfast is included. There's a very comfortable lounge and popular fine restaurant.

Regency Villas (☎ 2442555; regency@sancharnet.in; Fernhill Post; r/cottages Rs 1800/1600) In a state of splendidly decaying grandeur, the rooms, furnishings and palatial bathrooms at what was the Maharaja of Mysore's former guesthouse have to be seen to be believed. Seeming little-changed over the last 100 years, you're paying for nostalgia and loads of atmosphere rather than modern creature comforts. When we visited in 2006, the Maharaja's summer pad next door, the extraordinary Fernhill Palace, was still undergoing a massive renovation programme in preparation for reopening as a seriously luxurious hotel.

Sullivan Court (☎ 2441416; sullivancourt@vsnl.com; Selbourne Rd; s/d from Rs 2600/2900) Ooty's most modern hotel, Sullivan Court boasts a stunning lobby with glass elevator, plush rooms, a good restaurant, children's play area, and gym – it's excellent value if you're after contemporary comfort rather than old-fashioned style.

Savoy Hotel (☎ 2444142; www.tajhotels.com; 77 Sylks Rd; s/d from US$70/85) The Savoy is one of Ooty's oldest hotels, with parts of it dating back to 1829. Big cottages are arranged around a beautiful garden of flowerbeds, lawns and clipped hedges. Quaint rooms have large bathrooms, polished floors, log fires and bay windows.

Modern facilities include a 24-hour bar, excellent multicuisine dining room, an Ayurvedic centre, gym and tennis courts.

Eating

Most of the hotels have their own restaurants, and some of the top-end places are great for lavish meals and atmospheric dining rooms. There are plentiful cheap eats in town.

Hotel Sanjay (☎ 2443160; Charing Cross; mains Rs 35-85; ⏰ breakfast, lunch & dinner) This is a basic but bustling place with generous servings of veg and nonveg fare and a bar on the 1st floor.

Sidewalk Café (Commercial Rd; dishes Rs 40-60, pizzas Rs 45-125; ⏰ lunch & dinner) A cross between an American diner and an Italian café is something you'd expect to find in Mumbai rather than the mountains, but it's a welcome change of scene. In bright, modern décor, efficient staff wheel out wood-fired veg pizzas, burgers, sandwiches (try the chilli cheese or mushroom toast), salads and awesome desserts and smoothies; there's even a cappuccino machine.

Chandan Restaurant (mains Rs 50-75, thalis Rs 50-70; ⏰ lunch & dinner) At Hotel Nahar, Chandan serves up delicious veg dishes in elegant surroundings. Thalis are served at lunchtime or choose from a range of biryanis and Chinese dishes.

Shinkow's Chinese Restaurant (☎ 2442811; 38/83 Commissioner's Rd; mains Rs 50-150; ⏰ lunch & dinner) Shinkow's is an Ooty institution and the simple menu of chicken, pork, beef, fish, noodles and rice dishes is usually pretty good.

Both the Savoy Hotel (mains from around Rs 140; ⏰ lunch & dinner) and King's Cliff (mains Rs 80-200; ⏰ lunch & dinner) have atmospheric restaurants with log fires and quality multicuisine food. The latter has no alcohol permit, but you can bring your own.

QUICK EATS

There are plenty of basic veg places on Commercial and Main Bazaar Rds and you can get a spicy biryani for Rs 10 at street stalls near the bus stand.

Hot Breads (Charing Cross; ⏰ 8am-10pm) This is a popular bakery turning out a huge range of breads, pastries, pies and sweets – go early for the fresh stuff. (Don't be put off by the Chinese shopfront; it's advertising the upstairs restaurant.)

Like Kodai, Ooty is famous for its delicious home-made chocolates (per 100g around Rs 50).

Shopping

Ooty can be a fun place to shop, but don't expect anything out of the ordinary. The main places to shop are along Commercial Rd where you'll find Kashmiri shops as well as government outlets for Kairali and Khadi Gramodyog Bhavan. Poompuhar is on Coonoor Rd.

There's no need to lug warm clothes up to Ooty – you can pick up jackets from Rs 100 and hats and gloves from Rs 10 at shops along Commercial Rd (near the bus stand) or at the Tibetan market (⏰ 9am-8pm) almost opposite the entrance to the Botanical Gardens.

Getting There & Away

Without doubt the most romantic way to arrive in Ooty is aboard the miniature train, and you'll need to book ahead in the high season. Buses also run regularly up and down the mountain, both from other parts of Tamil Nadu and from Mysore in Karnataka.

BUS

The state bus companies all have reservation offices (⏰ 9am-5.30pm) at the busy bus station. There are two routes to Karnataka – the main bus route via Gudalur and the shorter, more arduous route via Masinagudi. The latter is tackled only by minibuses and winds through 36 hairpin bends! For details of bus services, see below.

Connect with trains to Chennai or Kochi (Cochin, Kerala) at Coimbatore.

To get to Mudumalai National Park (Rs 23, 2½ hours, 12 daily), take one of the Mysore buses that will drop you at park headquarters at Theppakadu, or one of the small buses that go via the narrow and twisting Sighur Ghat road. Some of these rolling wrecks travel only as far as Masinagudi (Rs 10, 1½ hours), from where there are buses every two hours to Theppakadu.

Chennai	228	15	2 daily (overnight)
Coimbatore	37	3	every 20min
Mettupalayam	17	2	every 20min
Mysore	69-100	4	11 daily

Local buses leave every 30 minutes for Kotagiri (Rs 10, two hours) and every 10 minutes to Coonoor (Rs 6.50, one hour).

TRAIN

The miniature train – one of the Mountain Railways of India given World Heritage status by Unesco in 2005 – is the best way to get here. There are fine views of forest, waterfalls and tea plantations along the way, especially from the front 1st-class carriage; the steam engine pushes, rather than pulls, the train up the hill, so the front carriage leads the way. Departures and arrivals at Mettupalayam connect with those of the Nilgiri Express, which runs between Mettupalayam and Chennai. The miniature train departs Mettupalayam for Ooty at 7.20am daily (1st/2nd class Rs 117/12; five hours, 46km). If you want a seat in either direction, be at least 45 minutes early or make a reservation (Rs 25) at least 24 hours in advance.

From Ooty the train leaves at 3pm and takes about 3½ hours. There are also two daily passenger trains between Ooty and Coonoor (1½ hours).

Getting Around

Plenty of autorickshaws hang around the bus station – a ride from the train or bus stations to Charing Cross should cost about Rs 25, and a list of autorickshaw fixed prices is on a sign at the steps on Commercial Rd leading to the tourist information office.

Taxis cluster at several stands in town. There are fixed fares to most destinations including to Coonoor (Rs 300), Kotagiri (Rs 400), Gudalur, Mudumalai National Park and Coimbatore (all Rs 600).

You can hire a bicycle at the bazaar if you ask around, but many of the roads are steep so you'll end up pushing it uphill (great on the way down though!). Motorcycles can be hired from Classic Rentals (Ettines Rd; 9am-6pm) at RCM Tours & Travels. A Kinetic Honda, TVS scooter or 100cc Yamaha costs Rs 350 for 24 hours, or Rs 50 per hour. A deposit of Rs 500 is usually required.

MUDUMALAI NATIONAL PARK

☎ 0423

In the foothills of the Nilgiris, this 321-sq-km park (admission Rs 35), and the surrounding forest outside the park boundaries, are the best places for wildlife viewing in Tamil Nadu. Part of the Nilgiri Biosphere Reserve (3000 sq km), the reserve's vegetation ranges from grasslands to semi-evergreen forests that are home to chitals (spotted deer), gaurs (bisons), tigers, panthers, wild boars and sloth bears. Otters and crocodiles inhabit the Moyar River. The park's wild elephant population numbers about 600.

A good time to visit Mudumalai is between December and June although the park may be closed during the dry season, February to March. Heavy rain is common in October and November.

The admission price includes a Rs 20 minibus tour.

Orientation & Information

The main service area in Mudumalai is Theppakadu, on the main road between Ooty and Mysore. Here you'll find the park's reception centre (☎ 526235; 6.30-9am & 3-6pm) and some park-run accommodation.

The closest village is Masinagudi, 7km from Theppakadu.

Tours

It's not possible to hike in the park and tours are limited to the sanctuary's minibuses. Private vehicles are not allowed in the park, except on the main Ooty–Mysore road that runs through it. Minibus tours (per person Rs 35 includes Rs 15 park entry fee, 45 mins) run between 7am and 9am, and 3pm and 6pm making a 15km loop through part of the park.

The once-popular elephant safaris stopped some years ago due to the animals' ill-health; if they do restart, this is the best way to see the park, especially in the early morning.

Guides can be hired for trekking outside the park boundaries, which also provides some rich wildlife habitat. Talk to the guys who hang around the park entry station, or ask at your resort; all have their own knowledgeable, English-speaking guides. Expect to pay around Rs 150 per person for a couple of hours of guided walking, or around Rs 350 per person for a four-hour combined jeep and walking tour; negotiate prices and group size in low season.

Sleeping & Eating

All budgets are catered for – there are cheap and midrange lodges inside the park at Theppakadu; budget rooms and midrange cottages in Masinagudi; and midrange jungle resorts in Bokkapuram (4km south of Masinagudi).

For meals at the resorts, expect to pay from Rs 400 per person, per day.

IN THE PARK

For most accommodation in the park, book in advance, in person, with the WWO in Ooty (p1098). In low season, you may be able to get accommodation if it's available by asking directly at the park reception centre. The following three park-run places are walking distance from park reception and on the banks of the river.

Minivet Dormitory (r per person Rs 35) A clean place, with two four-bed rooms, each with private bathroom with cold water only.

Theppakadu Log House (d/q Rs 330/560) and Sylvan Lodge (d/q Rs 330/560) are the pick of the places in the park. Overlooking the river, they're comfortable, well maintained and good value. There's a kitchen at Sylvan Lodge that prepares meals for booked guests.

The government-run Tamil Nadu Hotel (☎ 252 6580; dm/d/q Rs 75/295/495) is in the same cluster of buildings; it provides basic accommodation and basic meals.

MASINAGUDI

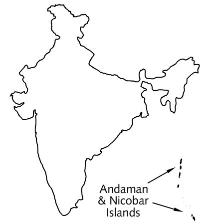
There are several lodges on the main road in Masinagudi as well as the odd place for a meal. Unless you arrive after dark, there's little of interest in town; better head for the park or the nearby resorts. If you need to stay, try the following:

Kongu Lodge (☎ 2526131; Main Rd; s/d Rs 250/400), This simple place doubles as a bar and women travelling alone may feel uncomfortable here. A jeep ride from Masinagudi to the park costs around Rs 80, or wait for one of the buses passing through between Ooty and Theppakadu.

Bamboo Banks Farm (☎ 2526211; bambanks@sancharnet.in; cottages s/d Rs 825/1125) A couple of kilometres out of town towards Bokkapuram, long-established Bamboo Banks Farm offers four big, comfortable private cottages in the lush gardens of a family-run property. The landscape is beautiful but tamed here; you'll need transport to travel the few kilometres to wilderness areas.

BOKKAPURAM

This area south of Masinagudi is home to a gaggle of fine forest resorts, mostly family-run businesses with a warm, homely atmosphere, high standards and breathtaking views. The attraction here is wildlife – trekking in the jungle, jeep safaris, night safaris and bird-watching. Many resorts provide a pick-up service from nearby towns such as Ooty (starting from Rs 500), otherwise hire any jeep in Masinagudi. It's best to book rooms in advance, particularly in the high season. Each resort offers a range of services including visits to Mudumalai National Park, hikes with a guide, fishing and horse riding, all of which cost extra.



Jungle Trails (☎ 2526256; r from Rs 600) There are just a couple of simple rooms at this quiet escape, run for many years by Mark, a quirky and passionate local conservationist. Day visitors (per person Rs 100) are welcome to sit on the comfortable veranda, drink tea and watch the bush (from 6.30am to 8.30am and 4.30pm to 6.30pm). It's just past the bottom of the Sighur Ghat road that winds down from Ooty.

Jungle Hut (☎ 2526240; r from Rs 1200; 🏊) A big draw here is the water hole and swimming pool (great for steamy jungle days), and kids' playground. The rooms, though, are looking a bit tired and not such good value compared with others nearby.

Forest Hills Guest House (☎ 2526216; www.foresthillsindia.com; s/d/tr from Rs 850/1100/1400, huts Rs 1250) Forest Hills is a family-run, family-sized guesthouse (10 rooms on 5 hectares) with a few cute bamboo huts, some clean spacious rooms and a fabulous watchtower for wildlife- and bird-watching. Staff are great and the food is terrific, and there's a slight colonial air here with a gazebo-style bar, games rooms and barbecue pit.

Jungle Retreat (☎ 2526470; www.jungleretreat.com; dm Rs 400, bamboo huts & standard r Rs 1500, cottage Rs 2500) This is one of the most stylish resorts in the area, with lovingly built stone cottages decked out with classic furniture, and sturdy bamboo huts, all spread out to give a feeling of seclusion. It's possible to camp, and there's a dormitory for groups. The bar, restaurant and common area is a great place to meet fellow travellers and the owners are knowledgeable and friendly with a large area of private forest at their disposal.

Andaman & Nicobar Islands

Once known as Kalapani – Black Waters – for their role as a feared penal settlement, the Andaman and Nicobar Islands are now a relaxed tropical island outpost that belongs to India but is geographically closer to Southeast Asia. Superb, near-deserted beaches, incredible corals and marine life, an intriguing colonial past and the remnants of a Stone Age culture lure travellers to these mysterious islands, 1000km off the east coast of India in the Bay of Bengal.

Until the beginnings of colonial rule, the islands were populated mainly by indigenous peoples, but today the majority of the Andamans' population are mainland settlers or their descendants who live in and around Port Blair, the capital, on South Andaman. The territory comprises 572 tropical islands (of which 36 are inhabited), with unique wildlife and lush forests, although the Nicobar Islands are off-limits to tourists.

The islands are close to the epicentre of the undersea earthquake that caused the 2004 Boxing Day tsunami, which, in turn, led to devastating loss of life and homes on the southerly Nicobar Islands and Little Andaman. Apart from flooding on low-lying areas of South Andaman Island and damage to the reefs near Wandoor, the main Andaman island group escaped major damage, though other islands such as Havelock and Interview noticeably tilted with the earth movement. Pre-tsunami, small-scale tourist infrastructure had been slowly developing but the almost total absence of tourists during 2005, coupled with the cost and energy of repairing the damage, demoralised many islanders and there's still much to do to revive these beautiful islands' tourism facilities.

HIGHLIGHTS

- Snorkel the reefs, lounge on the beaches and cruise through mangrove swamps on Havelock Island (p1118)
- Scuba dive among the coral and big fish of the islands' world-class sites, accessible from Havelock Island (p1119)
- Explore the ghosts of the colonial past on Ross Island (p1117) – the former 'Paris of the East'
- Take a road trip through the jungle heart of the Andamans to the quiet coastal beaches and islands around Mayabunder and Diglipur (p1121)
- Relive the horror of Port Blair's origin as a penal colony at the Cellular Jail (p1113)

History

It's not known when the first inhabitants arrived on the Andaman and Nicobar Islands but their presence was documented in the 2nd century by Greek astronomer Ptolemy, and again in the 7th century by Chinese monk Xuan Zang during his 17-year journey through India.

In the late 17th century, the islands were annexed by the Marathas, whose empire consumed vast areas of India. Two centuries later the British found a use for them as a penal colony, initially to detain 'regular' criminals from mainland India and later to incarcerate political dissidents – the freedom fighters for Indian independence. During WWII, the islands were occupied by the Japanese, who were regarded with ambivalence by the islanders. Some initiated guerrilla activities against them, while others regarded them as liberators from British colonialism.

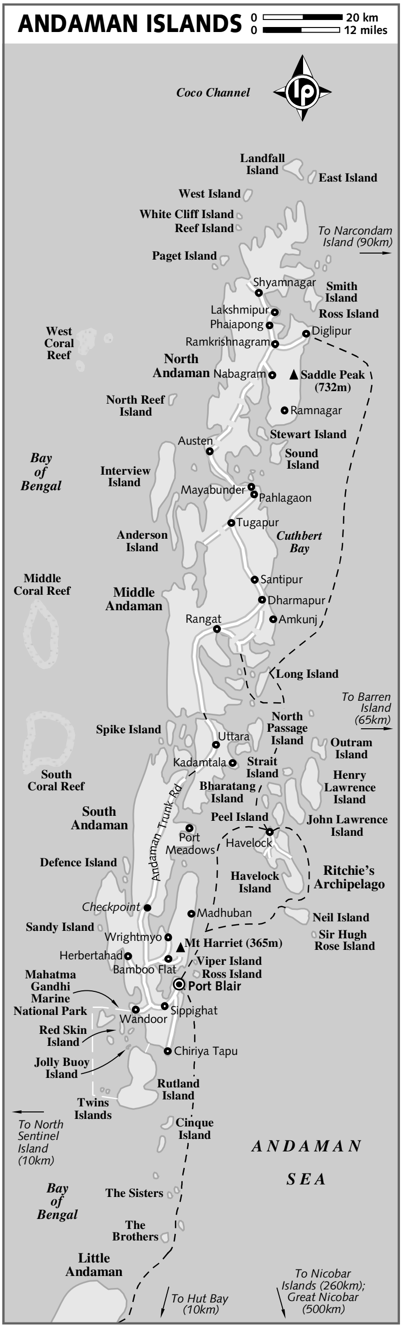
Following Independence in 1947, the Andaman and Nicobar Islands were incorporated into the Indian Union. Since then, massive migration from the mainland has inflated the island population from only a few thousand to more than 350,000. During this influx, tribal land rights and environmental protection were disregarded to some extent, but now local lobby groups are becoming more vocal.

FAST FACTS

- Population: 356,265
- Area: 8248 sq km
- Telephone code: ☎ 03192
- When to go: December to early April

Climate

Sea breezes keep temperatures within the 23°C to 31°C range and the humidity at around 80% all year. The southwest monsoons come to the islands between roughly mid-May and early October, and the northeast monsoons between November and December. The best



EARTHQUAKES & AFTERSHOCKS

The Andaman and Nicobar Island chain is no stranger to earthquakes and tremors. In 1941 an earthquake measuring 7.7 on the Richter scale rocked South and Middle Andaman, destroying many buildings and causing the British administrative centre on Ross Island to be abandoned. A resulting tsunami wave of about 1m reportedly reached the east coast of India, and more than a dozen earthquakes and aftershocks were felt over the next six months on the islands.

It was a far more devastating event at 7.58am on 26 December 2004, when an undersea earthquake measuring 9.0 occurred off the northeastern tip of Sumatra (Indonesia). It was not the tremors that caused the most damage, but the powerful tsunami that swept across the Bay of Bengal and Andaman Sea, devastating parts of Indonesia, Sri Lanka, India, the Maldives, Thailand and the Nicobar Islands. Soon after, a massive aftershock occurred beneath the Andaman and Nicobar Islands, causing more damage and uplifting several islands along the west coast of the Andaman chain (including Interview Island) by as much as 2m. The tsunami's effect on the low-lying Nicobar Islands was severe. When the wave hit the islands, including Great Nicobar, Car Nicobar, Little Andaman, Nancowrie, Katchall and many smaller islands, thousands were caught in its wake. Official figures show 6100 confirmed dead, many more missing and thousands left homeless, evacuated to relief camps in Port Blair. Initial access to some islands proved difficult, so many people were left stranded for days, without food or water, waiting for help. The islands' tribal people suffered few fatalities; responding to signs in the natural world, most had moved to higher ground before the wave hit.

Fortunately the northerly and more densely populated Andaman Island chain was largely spared. Low-lying parts of South Andaman were flooded, leaving many homeless, and water surged into shore areas of Port Blair and islands such as Havelock, but with little lasting damage.

British geologist Dr Mike Searle says some 1300km of the boundary between the Indian plate to the west and the Burma-Andaman-Sumatra plate to the east, was ruptured, while the Indian plate is presently pushing under the Burma-Andaman-Sumatra plate to the east. While such a catastrophe will hopefully never again be seen again, these remote islands are clearly a seismic hotspot.

time to visit is between December and early April, when the days are warm, but not oppressive, and the nights pleasant.

Geography & Environment

The islands form the peaks of a vast submerged mountain range that extends for almost 1000km between Myanmar (Burma) and Sumatra in Indonesia. The majority of the land area is taken up by the Andamans at 6408 sq km. The Nicobar Islands begin 50km south of Little Andaman.

The isolation of the Andaman and Nicobar Islands has led to the evolution of many endemic species of both plants and animals. Of 62 identified mammals, 32 are unique to the islands. Among these are the Andaman wild pig, the crab-eating macaque, the masked palm civet and species of tree shrews and bats. Almost 50% of the islands' 250 bird species are endemic, and include eagles, ground-dwelling megapodes, swiftlets (hawabill), doves, teals and hornbills. The isolated beaches provide excellent breeding grounds for turtles. While dolphins are frequently sighted, the once abundant dugongs have all but vanished.

Mangroves are an important aspect of the landscape, offering a natural protective barrier to both land and sea. Further inland the tall evergreen and moist deciduous forests contain many important tree species, including the renowned padauk – a hardwood with light and dark colours occurring in the same tree.

Information

Even though they're 1000km east of the mainland, the Andamans still run on Indian time. This means that it can be dark by 5pm and light by 4am. The peak season is December and January, and in September and October domestic holidaymakers can fill literally every bed in Port Blair; book accommodation in advance if you're travelling at these times.

Andaman & Nicobar Tourism (A&N Tourism; Map p1114; ☎ 232747; www.tourism.andaman.nic.in; Port Blair; 8.30am-1pm & 2-5pm Mon-Fri, 8.30am-noon Sat) is the main tourism body for the islands.

ACCOMMODATION

Accommodation choices and standards are on the way up in the Andamans, despite the slow progress of tourism recovery after the tsunami. Just a few years ago the only places to stay outside Port Blair were tatty government guesthouses and basic forest rest houses.

FESTIVALS IN THE ANDAMAN ISLANDS

The 10-day Island Tourism Festival is held in Port Blair, usually in January. Dance groups come from surrounding islands and the mainland, and various cultural performances are held at the Exhibition Complex. One of the festival's more bizarre aspects is the Andaman dog show, but there's also a flower show, a baby show and a fancy-dress competition! For information, check the website of A&N Tourism (www.tourism.andaman.nic.in).

These days you can stay in cheap bamboo huts or a handful of romantic upmarket resorts on Havelock and Neil Islands. Although taxes are low, accommodation is expensive by Indian standards – some of the midrange and top-end places in Port Blair are grossly overpriced for the quality – but budget travellers can find a cheap lodge in Port Blair or a simple hut by the beach on Havelock for less than Rs 150.

Prices shoot up in the peak season (15 December to 15 January). Prices given in this chapter are for midseason (1 October to 30 April, excluding peak). May to September is low season.

Camping is currently not permitted on public land or national parks in the islands.

PERMITS

Most senior civil servants come to Port Blair on two-year postings from the mainland. With such a turnover of staff, be aware that rules and regulations regarding tourism and permits are subject to sudden changes.

All foreigners need a permit to visit the Andaman Islands, and it's issued free on arrival. The 30-day permit (which can be extended to 45 days), allows foreigners to stay in Port Blair. Overnight stays are also permitted on South and Middle Andaman (excluding tribal areas), North Andaman (Diglipur), Long Island, North Passage, Little Andaman (excluding tribal areas), Havelock and Neil Islands.

The permit also allows day trips to Jolly Buoy, South Cinque, Red Skin, Ross, Narcondam, Interview and Rutland Islands, as well as The Brothers and The Sisters.

To obtain the permit, air travellers simply present their passport and fill out a form on arrival at Port Blair airport. Permits are usually issued for as long as you ask, up to the 30-day maximum.

Boat passengers will probably be met by an immigration official on arrival, but if not should seek out the immigration office at Haddo Jetty immediately – you won't be able to travel around without the permit (police will frequently ask to see it, especially when disembarking on another island, and hotels may also need the details). Check current regulations regarding boat travel with:

A&N Tourism office (Map p1114; ☎ 232747; http://tourism.andaman.nic.in; Port Blair; 8.30am-1pm & 2-5pm Mon-Fri, 8.30am-noon Sat)

Foreigners' Registration Office Chennai (Madras; ☎ 044-28278210); Kolkata (Calcutta; ☎ 033-22473300)

Shipping Corporation of India (SCI; www.shipindia.com) Chennai (☎ 044-25231401; Rajaji Salai); Kolkata (☎ 033-22482354; 1st fl, 13 Strand Rd); Port Blair (Map p1114; ☎ 233347; Aberdeen Bazaar)

National Parks & Sanctuaries

Additional permits are required to visit some national parks and sanctuaries. To save a lot of running around, take advantage of the 'single window' system for permits and information at the A&N Tourism office (see opposite) in Port Blair, where there's now also a Forestry Department Desk (8.30-11am & 3-5pm, closed Sun). Here you can find out whether a permit is needed, how to go about getting it, how much it costs and whether it is in fact possible to get one (it's not always).

If you plan to do something complicated, you'll be sent to the Chief Wildlife Warden (CWW; Map p1114; ☎ 233549; Haddo Rd; 8.30am-noon & 1-4pm Mon-Fri) where your application should consist of a letter stating your case, the name of the boat and the dates involved; all things being equal, the permit should be issued within the hour.

For most day permits it's not the hassle of getting it but the cost that hurts. For areas such as Mahatma Gandhi Marine National Park, and Ross and Smith Islands near Diglipur, the permits cost Rs 50/500 for Indians/foreigners. For Saddle Peak National Park, also near Diglipur, the cost is Rs 25/250.

Students with valid ID often only pay minimal entry fees, but must produce a letter from the Chief Wildlife Warden in Port Blair authorising the discount.

The Nicobar Islands are normally off limits to all except Indian nationals engaged in research, government business or trade.

Activities

DIVING

Crystal-clear waters, superb coral, kaleidoscopic marine life and some virtually undiscovered sites make the Andaman Islands a world-class diving destination.

Dive Operators

There are currently two professional dive outfits based on Havelock Island, and the main dive season – depending on the monsoon – runs from about November to about April. The centres offer fully equipped boat dives, Discover Scuba Diving courses (around US$100), open water (US$350) and advanced courses (US$270), as well as Divemaster training. Prices vary depending on the location, number of participants and duration of the course, but diving in the Andamans is not cheap (compared with Southeast Asia) at around US$45/70 for a single/double boat dive. In national parks there's an additional cost of Rs 1000 per person per day payable directly to the park.

Barefoot Scuba (Map p1118; ☎ in Port Blair 237656; www.barefootindia.com) Based at Café del Mar at No 3 Village in Havelock, this dive operation is connected with Barefoot at Havelock resort.

Dive India (Map p1118; ☎ 282187; www.diveindia.com) Based at Island Vinnie's Tropical Beach Cabanas, midway between Villages No 3 and 5, this operator offers a variety of dive and accommodation packages.

Another long-term dive operator, Andaman Dive Club (Map p1118; ☎ 282002; www.andamandiveclub.com), is based at No 1 Village, though he's been off-island for a while. If around, he's also recommended.

Dive Sites

Much of the Andamans' underwater life can be seen between 10m and 20m, and there are sites suitable for all levels of dive experience. The greatest range of options is off Havelock Island where sites include Mac Point, Aquarium, Barracuda City, Turtle Bay, Seduction Point, Lighthouse, The Wall, Pilot Reef and Minerva Lodge. Neil Island sites are also visited on day-dives from Havelock. Check out www.diveindia.com for detailed information on these and other dive sites.

SNORKELLING

Much easier and cheaper to arrange than diving, snorkelling can be highly rewarding. Snorkelling gear – though not always good gear – is available for hire, but you may prefer to bring your own or buy some from Port Blair (or the Indian mainland, where it's cheaper and the choice is greater). Havelock Island is one of the best, and certainly easiest, places for snorkelling as many accommodation places organise boat trips out to otherwise inaccessible coral reefs and islands, and you can snorkel offshore on Neil Island.

The closest place to Port Blair for snorkelling is North Bay. Other relatively easily accessible snorkelling sites include Red Skin and Jolly Buoy, near Wandoor.

SURFING & FISHING

Intrepid surfing travellers have been whispering about Little Andaman since it first opened up to foreigners several years ago. Although the island is still quite remote, surfers continue to drift down there for the reliable waves off the east coast. SEAL (http://seal-asia.com) offers a couple of live-aboard surfing charters a year, with pick-up and drop-off in Port Blair, between mid-March and mid-May.

The Andamans also have game fishing opportunities. The occasional charter boat out of Phuket makes live-aboard trips (www.andamanisland-fishing.com), usually around March.

Getting There & Away

Getting to the Andamans can be an adventure in itself if you take the boat from Chennai or Kolkata. It's a long journey and you'll need to plan ahead as there's usually only one or two sailings a fortnight from each mainland city. Flying from Chennai, Kolkata or Delhi is relatively quick and easy but book ahead to ensure a seat in high season.

AIR

Indian Airlines (Chennai ☎ 044-28555201; Kolkata ☎ 033-22110730; Port Blair Map p1114; ☎ 233108; ⏲ 9am-1pm & 2-4pm Mon-Sat) flies daily to Port Blair from Chennai (US$230) and Kolkata (US$245). Jet Airways (Chennai ☎ 044-28414141; Port Blair ☎ 236922; ⏲ 9am-7pm Mon-Sat, 9am-3pm Sun) flies at least once daily from Chennai (US$235). Air Deccan flies daily from Chennai, and Air Sahara flies daily from Delhi; their airport counters open to coincide with flights.

There's been talk for some years about direct flights from Phuket (Thailand) to Port Blair, but these seem to have been shelved after the tsunami, and at least until the airport

ISLAND INDIGENES

The Andaman and Nicobar Islands' indigenous peoples constitute just 12% of the population and, in most cases, their numbers are decreasing.

Onge

Two-thirds of Little Andaman's Onge Island was taken over by the Forest Department and 'settled' in 1977. The 100 or so remaining members of the Onge tribe live in a 25-sq-km reserve covering Dugong Creek and South Bay, and were (temporarily) relocated to refugee camps in Port Blair following the tsunami. Anthropological studies suggest that the Onge population has declined due to demoralisation through loss of territory.

Sentinelese

The Sentinelese, unlike the other tribes in these islands, have consistently repelled outside contact. Every few years, contact parties arrive on the beaches of North Sentinel Island, the last redoubt of the Sentinelese, with gifts of coconuts, bananas, pigs and red plastic buckets, only to be showered with arrows, although in recent years encounters have been a little less hostile. About 250 Sentinelese remain.

Andamanese

Now numbering only about 40, it seems impossible that the Andamanese can escape extinction. There were around 7000 Andamanese in the mid-19th century but friendliness to the colonisers was their undoing, and by 1971 all but 19 of the population had been swept away by measles, syphilis and influenza epidemics. They've been resettled on tiny Strait Island.

Jarawa

The 350 remaining Jarawa occupy the 639-sq-km reserve on South and Middle Andaman Islands. In 1953 the chief commissioner requested an armed sea plane bomb Jarawa settlements and their territory has been consistently disrupted by the Andaman Trunk Rd, forest clearance and settler and tourist encroachment. Hardly surprisingly, most Jarawa remain hostile to contact although encounters with outsiders are becoming more common.

Shompen

Only about 250 Shompen remain in the forests on Great Nicobar. Seminomadic hunter-gatherers who live along the riverbanks, they have resisted integration and avoid areas occupied by Indian immigrants.

Nicobarese

The 30,000 Nicobarese are the only indigenous people whose numbers are not decreasing. The majority have converted to Christianity and have been partly assimilated into contemporary Indian society. Living in village units led by a head man, they farm pigs and cultivate coconuts, yams and bananas. The Nicobarese, who probably descended from people of Malaysia and Myanmar, inhabit a number of islands in the Nicobar group, centred on Car Nicobar, the region worst affected by the tsunami.

is upgraded to full international status. Check the tourism department's website (http://tourism.andaman.nic.in) for updates.

BOAT

There are usually four to six sailings a month between Port Blair and the Indian mainland – fortnightly to/from Kolkata (56 hours) and weekly (in high season) to/from Chennai (60 hours) on four vessels operated by SCI (Map p1114; ☎ 233347; www.shipindia.com; Aberdeen Bazaar, Port Blair). The schedule is erratic, so check with the SCI in advance or see the A&N Tourism (www.tourism.andaman.nic.in) website, which usually posts an up-to-date schedule. Also, take the sailing times with a large grain of salt – travellers have reported sitting on the boat at Kolkata harbour for up to 12 hours, or waiting to dock near Port Blair for several hours. So with hold-ups, and variable weather and sea conditions, the trip can take three full days or more. The service from Chennai goes via Cap Nicobar once a month, taking an extra two days, but only residents may disembark. There is usually a service once a month from Visakhapatnam in Andhra Pradesh (see p953 for more details).

If you're buying your return ticket in Port Blair, go to the 1st floor of the A&N Tourism office where they can reserve you a berth under the tourist-quota system; you then take the approval letter to the Directorate of Shipping Services' ticket office at Phoenix Bay Jetty. This process can take some days, so it's simpler to arrange return tickets on the mainland when purchasing your outward ticket.

Ships currently in use are the MV Nancowry and MV Swarajdweep from Chennai, the MV Nicobar and MV Akbar from Kolkata, and MV Harshavardan from both ports.

Classes vary slightly between the boats, but the cheapest class of accommodation is bunk (Rs 1510), which can be difficult to get. Next up is 2nd or B class (Rs 3870, 16 berths), 1st or A class (Rs 4860, four to six berths) and deluxe cabin (Rs 5880). Food (tiffin for breakfast, and thalis for lunch and dinner) costs around Rs 150 per day. Almost everyone complains; bring something (fruit in particular) to supplement your diet. Some bedding is supplied, but if you're travelling bunk class, bring a sleeping sheet and be prepared for fetid toilets. Many travellers take a hammock to string up on deck.

Getting Around

All roads – and ferries – lead to Port Blair, but getting around the islands can be a slow process, particularly to outlying islands. The main island group – South, Middle and North Andaman – is connected by road, with ferry crossings and bridges. Buses run south from Port Blair to Wandoor, and north to Bharatang, Rangat, Mayabunder and finally to Diglipur, 325km north of the capital. But don't expect to cover any more than 30km an hour, even in a taxi.

Of course, a boat is the only way to reach most islands and both the rigour and romance of ferry travel is alive and well here – you'll often see flying fish and even dolphins from crowded decks. It's relatively quick and easy to get to Havelock and Neil Islands, and there are regular ferries to Rangat, Mayabunder and Diglipur among others. The best source of information about inter-island ferry schedules is in the daily newssheets in Port Blair; the Andaman Herald and Daily Telegrams list sailing times up to a week in advance.

A subsidised inter-island helicopter service, launched in 2003, remains in service to destinations including Havelock Island (Rs 850; twice weekly) and Diglipur (Rs 2125; once weekly). Bookings must be made at the islands' Secretariat (☎ 230093) in Port Blair.

Indian mainland train bookings can also be made in the Secretariat complex, at the Railway Bookings Centre (🕑 8am-12.30pm & 1-2pm) which is very useful for onward travel plans.

PORT BLAIR

pop 100,186

The green, ramshackle capital sprawls around a harbour on the east coast of South Andaman and is the administrative nerve centre of the islands. There's plenty to see in town relating to the islands' colonial past plus a couple of interesting museums, and as this is the only place to change money, reliably access the internet and book (and wait for) onward transport, most travellers will spend at least a couple of days here. If you want to experience the more natural beauty of the Andamans – above and below the water – book a ferry and move on to Havelock or one of the other islands.

Orientation

Most of the hotels, the bus station and inter-island ferries from Phoenix Bay Jetty are around or above the Aberdeen Bazaar area. The airport is about 4km south of town.

Sights & Activities

CELLULAR JAIL NATIONAL MEMORIAL

Built by the British over a period of 18 years from 1890, and preserved as a shrine to India's freedom fighters, the Cellular Jail National Memorial (GB Pant Rd; admission Rs 5, camera/video Rs 10/50; 9am-12.30pm & 1.30-5pm; closed Mon) is well worth a visit to understand the islands' colonial past and its significance in the memory of the Indian people. Originally seven wings containing 698 cells radiated from a central tower, but only three remain. These remnants, however, give a fair impression of the 'hell on earth' that the prisoners here endured. There's an art gallery, museum, martyrs' memorial, the original gallows, and good views from what was once the central tower.

An informative and atmospheric sound-and-light show (adult/child Rs 20/10) depicts the jail's brutal history. It's in Hindi nightly at 6pm and usually in English at 7.15pm but check this, as language and timing vary depending on numbers of local and overseas visitors in town. No refunds for bad weather!

SAMUDRIKA MARINE MUSEUM

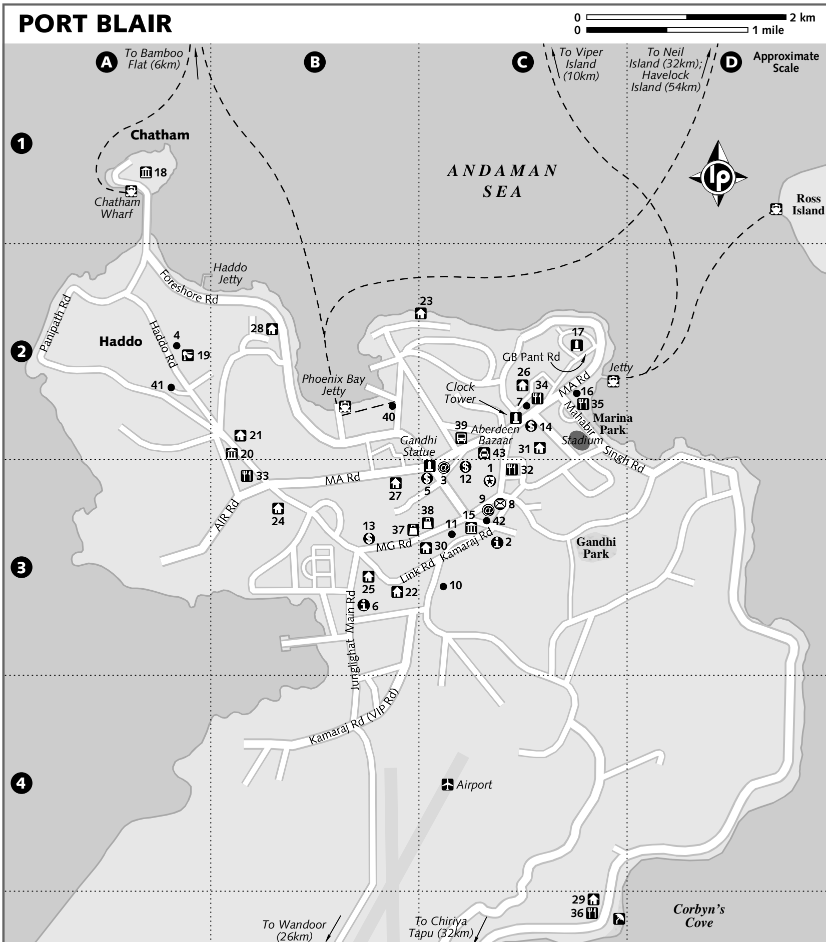
Run by the Indian navy, this interesting museum (☎ 232012, ext 2214; Haddo Rd; adult/child Rs 10/5, camera/video Rs 20/40; 9am-5.30pm Tue-Sun) is a good place to get a handle on the islands' eco-system. Across several galleries you'll find informative displays on the islands' tribal communities, plants, animals and shells (check out the giant clam shell), as well as rooms dedicated to corals and marine archaeology.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL MUSEUM

With excellent displays of tools, clothing and photographs of the indigenous islanders, this museum (☎ 232291; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/50; 9am-1pm & 1.30-4.30pm, closed Thu) helps unlock the mysteries of local tribal cultures. There are authentic reconstructions of tribal dwellings with decent – if old fashioned – information in English, and a small selection of Andaman-related books in the gift shop.

MINI-ZOO

Some of the 200 animal species unique to the islands can be seen in rusting cages at the small and rather sad zoo (Haddo Rd; adult/child Rs 2/1; 8am-5pm, closed Mon). These include the Nicobar pigeon, the Andaman pig (the staple diet of some tribal groups) and the crab-eating macaque. Feeding time is 8.30am to 9am, and there's a short film shown at 10am and 3pm.



FOREST MUSEUM & CHATHAM SAW MILL

Located on Chatham Island (reached by a road bridge), the saw mill (admission Rs 2; 8am-2.30pm, closed Sun) was set up by the British in 1836 and was one of the largest wood processors in Asia. Inside is the forest museum, which displays locally grown woods, including the padauk, and has displays on the history of timber milling on the island. It may not be to everyone's taste – especially conservationists – but it gives a different perspective on the islands' colonial history and economy.

AQUARIUM & SWIMMING POOL

The aquarium (Mahabir Singh Rd; adult/child Rs 5/3; 9am-1pm & 2-4.45pm, closed Wed & 2nd Sat of month) displays some of the 350 species found in the Andaman Sea – many pickled in formaldehyde – as well as more interesting live specimens in small tanks, including puffer fish, batfish and tiger fish. Opposite the aquarium, the Olympic-sized public swimming pool (admission Rs 25; Mon-Sat) is clean enough, and open to men only 6.30am to 8am and 5pm to 6pm, to women only 4pm to 5pm, and to families 6pm to 7pm. It's closed at other times.

CORBYN'S COVE

Corbyn's Cove, 4km east of the airport and 7km south of the town, is the nearest beach to Port Blair – a small curve of sand backed by palms. It's popular for swimming, sunset-viewing and lazing around, and is packed with picnicking locals on Sunday and holidays.

Tours

Possible day tours include trips to Wandoor Beach and Chiryu Tapu, or to Mt Harriet. There are few scheduled tours, but the following agencies can arrange private tours (which basically mean hiring a car and driver).

Andaman Teal House (☎ 232642; Haddo Rd) An A&N Tourism agency.

Island Travels (☎ 233034; islandtravels@yahoo.com; Aberdeen Bazaar) The most helpful and clued-up of the agencies, used to dealing with international travellers.

Shompen Travels (☎ 233028; Kamaraj Rd) Provides local tours.

Sleeping

Accommodation is quite scattered in Port Blair, but most places are within a few kilometres of each other around MA Rd and Aberdeen Bazaar. Within each price range there's a huge variety in quality, and accommodation in general is higher priced than its equivalent on the mainland. Checkout is usually 8am, to get ready for early-flight arrivals.

BUDGET

Youth Hostel (☎ 232459; dm/d Rs 50/100) Opposite the stadium, this is a rare Indian YHA, although the only discount is for students (Rs 30). It's still the cheapest place around but it's often filled with groups. Management can be unwilling to accommodate foreigners.

Central Lodge (☎ 243791; Link Rd; s/d with shared bathroom Rs 70/120, with private bathroom Rs 80/150) Set back from the road, this is a basic wooden building. Small rooms are a bit grim but it's a popular cheapie – a throwback to simple lodgings on the backpacker trail of old, minus the banana pancakes.

Jagannath Guest House (☎ 232148; 72 MA Rd; dm/s/d Rs 60/200/300) This is a reasonably good budget choice, not least because the management is accustomed to travellers. Rooms are simple but relatively clean and most have a small balcony.

Holiday Resort (☎ 234231; Prem Nagar; s/d Rs 350/500, with AC Rs 600/800; ❄ 💻) Don't be fooled by the name – this isn't a resort or much of a place for a holiday, but it's central, cleanish and straddles budget and midrange mainly because there are AC rooms with TVs.

Hotel Raja Monsoon Villa (☎ 241133; s/d Rs 400/550, with AC Rs 550/900) Centrally located, this tatty, clean and friendly family-run hotel is in a side-street of small shops and tea stalls opposite the town's main mosque.

Many cheap lodges line Aberdeen Bazaar.

MIDRANGE

Andaman Teal House (☎ 234060; Haddo Rd; d without/with AC Rs 400/800; ❄) Run by A&N Tourism (bookings must be made through the tourist office), this is reasonably central and has a range of ageing rooms spilling through gardens and down the hillside. The AC rooms at the top are better, with TV, carpet and furniture – the others are bare and musty.

Hotel Aparupa (☎ 246582; hotelaparupa@yahoo.com; Link Rd; s/d Rs 750/1050, with AC Rs 900/1200; ❄) This smart hotel has 26 smallish but immaculate rooms with tile floors, TV and central AC. There's a good little restaurant with a view of sorts and a bar.

Sun Sea Resort (☎ 238330; MG Rd; s/d from Rs 900/1250; ❄) New in 2006, at these prices (which include breakfast) this is the best value in town. Clean, comfortable and central – with a truly unique exterior, a purple bar and an AC restaurant – it is, however, nowhere near the sea.

Megapode Nest Tourist Complex (☎ 232207; aniidco@vsnl.com; off Haddo Rd; s/d from Rs 1000/1400, cottages Rs 2000; ❄) At Haddo, on the hill above the bay, the Megapode Nest is good value in the upper midrange. Many of the rooms have harbour views and there are large AC doubles and generous yurt-style AC cottages. Prices include breakfast, and it's pleasant to sit in the garden with a cold beer.

TOP END

Major credit cards are accepted at the following hotels and prices include breakfast. They have their charms, but don't expect luxury; they're overpriced for the facilities offered.

Fortune Resort – Bay Island (☎ 234101; bayislandresort@fortuneparkhotels.com; Marine Hill; s/d from Rs 2749/3960; ❄ 🏊) Port Blair's top hotel boasts a great location, perched above the ocean with fine sea views from its terraced garden and balcony restaurant. The rooms, while comfortable with polished floors, balconies, neat furnishings, are small and make sure to ask for a sea-facing room. There's a swimming pool and a good restaurant and bar.

Peerless Resort (☎ 229263; pblbeachinn@sancharnet.in; s/d Rs 2250/3650, cottage d Rs 4500;) The location is the main plus for Peerless Resort – just back from Corbyn's Cove Beach. Otherwise, the rooms are ageing, undersized and in need of serious maintenance and a good clean, although most have a balcony and sea views. The manicured gardens are pleasant, and there's a tennis court, bar and restaurant.

Eating

Port Blair has a range of eating places – from cheap Indian thali places around the bazaar to multi-cuisine hotel restaurants. Good seafood is available at a few places, and those listed are open for breakfast, lunch and dinner unless stated otherwise.

Annapurna (MG Rd; from Rs 20) This spotless veg restaurant, just south of Aberdeen Bazaar, whips up good fresh paratha for breakfast and afternoon snacks, as well as main meals; go early or late to avoid local tour groups in peak season.

Durbar Hotel & Juice Bar (near junction Haddo & MA Rd; mains from Rs 20) For cheap clean eats and juices, try this place; the lunchtime side dish of spicy fish fillet (Rs 10) goes well with a thali (Rs 20).

New Lighthouse Restaurant (Marina Park; mains Rs 25-75, seafood Rs 150-350) A decaying structure next to the aquarium, this has a breezy semi-open-air section with a view over the water across sundry piles of rubbish. Fresh seafood – including whole fish, crab and lobster (prices depend on weight and season) – is the main attraction, and you can also get breakfast or a beer here.

Lighthouse Residency (MA Rd, Aberdeen Bazaar; mains Rs 45-110; lunch & dinner) Modern and trying hard to be chic, this once bright restaurant and cocktail bar had been seriously overtaken by mould when we visited. However there's AC, the beer's cold, and Thai and Chinese dishes make a welcome addition to the Indian favourites.

Waves (Corbyn's Cove; mains Rs 30-95; lunch & dinner) This breezy open-air beachfront restaurant is a good spot for lunch or an evening meal beneath the palms; indoors it's a bit dismal. Seafood is available (Malai prawns Rs 75, crab and lobster by weight), along with Thai and Indian dishes. You can get a beer at the resort next door.

Mandalay Restaurant (Marine Hill) The open-deck restaurant at Fortune Resort – Bay Island is enjoyable for the views alone, and you can feast in season on the daily buffets (breakfast Rs 200, lunch and dinner Rs 350).

Shopping

Aberdeen Bazaar is lined with stalls selling cheap clothing and household goods. Island crafts such as fine wood carvings, shell jewellery, bamboo and cane furniture, are available from a handful of emporiums and speciality shops. Most of the shells on sale are collected legally – a good emporium can show proof of this – but, as always, be aware of your home countries' restrictions on importing them.

Andaman Handicrafts Emporium (☎ 240141; MG Rd, Middle Point)

Sagarika Government Emporium (MG Rd, Middle Point)

Getting There & Away

See p1110 for details on transport to and from the Andaman Islands.

BOAT

Most inter-island ferries depart from Phoenix Bay Jetty. Advance tickets for boats can be purchased from the ticket counters between 9am and 11am the day before travel. On some boats, such as the Neil and Havelock Island ferries, tickets can be purchased on the boat but in high season you risk missing out.

From Chatham Wharf there are hourly passenger ferries to Bamboo Flat (Rs 3, 15 minutes).

BUS

The bus stand in Port Blair has a clear, current timetable hanging from the roof.

Services include four daily buses to Wandoor (Rs 8, 1½ hours). There's a daily bus at 4.30am to Diglipur (Rs 120, 12 hours). A direct bus goes to Mayabunder at 5am and 10.30am (Rs 95, nine hours) and to Rangat at 5.45am and 10.50am (Rs 65, six hours).

If you want to take the scenic 48km road trip to Bamboo Flat and Mount Harriet, there's a bus at 8.15am and 4pm (Rs 15, 1½ hours); returning by ferry will take only 15 minutes.

Getting Around

The central area is easy enough to get around on foot, but if you want to get out to Corbyn's Cove, Haddo or Chatham Island, you'll need some form of transport. A taxi or autorickshaw from the airport to Aberdeen Bazaar costs around Rs 50. From Aberdeen Bazaar to Phoenix Bay Jetty is about Rs 25 and to Haddo Jetty it's around Rs 35.

A good way to explore the island south of Port Blair is by moped or motorbike. They can be hired through Govindamma & Co (☎ 232999; gdmyamaha@yahoo.co.in; off Haddo Rd) for Rs 150 per day for a gearless scooter or Rs 200 per day for a 125cc motorbike. Rs 1000 deposit is required and helmets (of sorts) are supplied. Go to their Yamaha workshop on 2nd DP St, opposite the Hindi Medium School on Haddo Rd but call ahead to check availability.

Bicycles are good for getting around the town and the immediate Port Blair area. They can be hired from stalls in Aberdeen Bazaar for Rs 40 per day.

AROUND PORT BLAIR & SOUTH ANDAMAN

Ross Island

An essential half-day trip from Port Blair, this eerie place was once the administrative headquarters for the British. Ross Island (admission Rs 20) is where all the action was in those heady colonial days and newspapers of the day fondly called it the 'Paris of the East'. However, the manicured gardens and grand ballrooms were destroyed by an earthquake in 1941. Six months later, after the Japanese entered WWII, the British transferred their headquarters to Port Blair. The island was again damaged by the tsunami in 2004.

Many of the buildings still stand as evocative ruined shells slowly being consumed by trees. Landscaped paths cross the island and all of the buildings are labelled. There's a small museum with historical displays and photos of Ross Island in its heyday.

Ferries to Ross Island (Rs 16, 20 minutes) depart from the jetty behind the Aquarium in Port Blair at 8.30am, 10.30am, 12.30pm and 2pm Thursday to Tuesday; check current times when you buy your ticket, as times can be affected by tides.

Viper Island

The afternoon boat trip to Viper Island (admission Rs 5) is worthwhile to see the sobering remains of the ochre-coloured brick jail and the gallows built by the British in 1867. Viper is named after a 19th-century British trading ship that was wrecked nearby.

A harbour cruise to Viper Island leaves from the jetty behind the Aquarium daily at 3pm (Rs 65, 45 minutes each way) stopping at the island for about 20 minutes. On Wednesday (when no boats are going to Ross Island), there are more frequent ferries.

North Bay

This is the most easily accessible snorkelling bay to Port Blair. A combined boat tour to Ross and Viper Islands and North Bay leaves daily from the jetty behind the Aquarium (per person Rs 250; 9.30am-5pm), allowing 2½ hours to snorkel and explore the bay.

Mt Harriet

Mt Harriet (365m) is across the inlet, north of Port Blair, and there's a road up to the top with good views and good birding. To reach Mt Harriet, take the Bamboo Flat passenger ferry (Rs 3, 15 minutes), which leaves regularly from Chatham Jetty. From Bamboo Flat the road runs 7km along the coast and up to the summit. Taxis will do the trip for around Rs 250 if you don't want to walk.

Wandoor

Wandoor, a tiny speck of a village 29km southwest of Port Blair, is the jumping-off point for Mahatma Gandhi Marine National Park (Indian/foreigner Rs 50/500), which covers 280 sq km and comprises 15 islands. The diverse scenery includes mangrove creeks, tropical rainforest and reefs supporting 50 types of coral. The marine park's snorkelling sites at Jolly Buoy and Red Skin islands, damaged during the tsunami, have reopened and boats leave somewhat erratically from Wandoor Jetty for visits to both (per person Rs 300); check the current situation with the Forestry Department desk at A&N Tourism in Port Blair. You can pick up your permit there, or at the office next to the Wandoor Jetty. However, if Havelock or Neil Islands are on your Andamans itinerary, you may find it easier and cheaper to wait until you reach them for your underwater experience.

Buses run from Port Blair to Wandoor (Rs 8, 1½ hours). About 2km beyond the Wandoor Jetty are a number of quiet, sandy beaches with some excellent snorkelling.

Chiriya Tapu

Chiriya Tapu, 30km south of Port Blair, is a tiny village with beaches and mangroves.

There's a beach about 2km south of Chiriya Tapu that has some of the best snorkelling in the area. There are seven buses a day to the village from Port Blair (Rs 8, 1½ hours) and it's possible to arrange boats from here to Cinque Island.

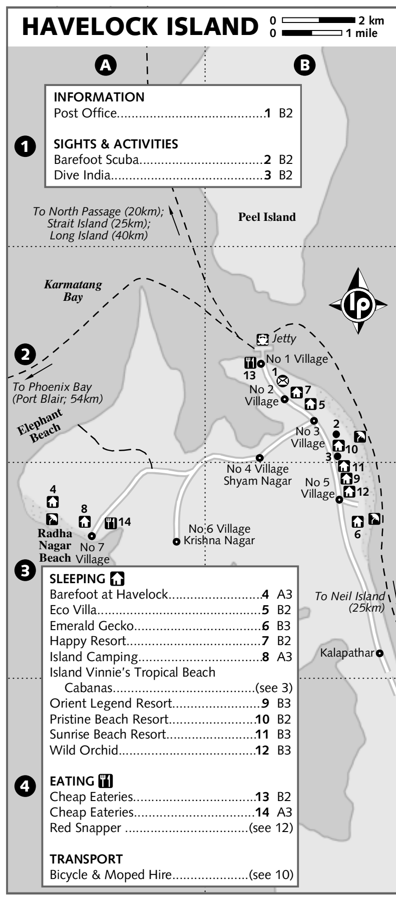
Cinque Island

The uninhabited islands of North and South Cinque, connected by a sandbar, are part of the wildlife sanctuary south of Wandoor. The islands are surrounded by coral reefs, and are among the most beautiful in the Andamans. Visiting boats usually anchor off South Cinque and passengers transfer via dinghy to the beach.

Only day visits are allowed but, unless you're on one of the day trips occasionally organised by travel agencies, you need to get permission in advance from the Chief Wildlife Warden (p1109). The islands are two hours by boat from Chiriya Tapu or 3½ hours from Wandoor, and are covered by the Mahatma Gandhi Marine National Park permit (Indian/foreigner Rs 50/500).

HAVELOCK ISLAND

With one of the Andaman's most dazzling beaches and plenty of cheap bamboo-hut accommodation, Havelock is the island of choice for travellers wanting to kick back and enjoy the slow (but not comatose) pace of island life. It's easily accessible from Port Blair, and offers excellent snorkelling and scuba-diving opportunities. Although Havelock is the most developed of the islands, it's still very low-key and simple – a world away from the beach resorts of mainland India or Southeast Asia.



Inhabited by Bengali settlers since the 1950s, Havelock is about 54km northeast of Port Blair and covers 100 sq km. Only the northern third of the island is settled, and each village is referred to by a number. Boats dock at the jetty at No 1 Village; the main bazaar is 2km south at No 3 Village; and most of the accommodation is strung along the east coast between villages No 2 and No 5.

Sights & Activities

Radha Nagar Beach (also called No 7), on the northwestern side of the island about 12km from the jetty, is a gorgeous stretch of squeaky clean white sand – though some seaweed gets thrown up during monsoon – and crystal-clear water backed by native forest. Don't miss a sunset here. In peak season you can take a short elephant ride (adult/child Rs 20/10) through the beach's shady forest. Ten minutes' walk along the beach to the northwest is the gorgeous 'lagoon' stretch of sheltered sand and calm water.

Elephant Beach, where there's good snorkelling, is further north and reached by a 40-minute walk through a muddy elephant logging trail and swamp; it's well-marked (off the cross-island road), but is hard going after rain. The beach itself virtually disappeared after the tsunami and at high tide it's impossible to reach – ask locally.

A highlight of Havelock is snorkelling or fishing, and the best way to do either is on

THE GOOD, THE BAD & THE UGLY

Havelock has become a magnet for budget travellers over the last few years. This is a mixed blessing for islanders, who are delighted by the income they bring, but considerably less delighted by the behaviour of a noticeable minority. Here's the gist of conversations we had repeatedly with locals:

'I don't understand why when we agree a price for something – a room or a tour or motorbike hire – later they shout at me and want me to make a smaller price. Why do they break their word?'

'Some of them are so aggressive. They don't know how to have a conversation or how to ask for something, they only know how to shout. Now I don't have anything to do with those ones, you can tell them a mile off.'

'I think they think we're stupid. They eat almost all the meal and then complain that it wasn't what they ordered and want us to give it free or to make them another one.'

'Well my family can't go to the beach and I can't go out fishing sometimes, when my boat's on-shore and men and women are sunbathing naked on the sand beside it. We don't take our clothes off in front of strangers. They never see us like that, so why do they think it's OK and that we don't mind?'

Fair comments.

a boat trip organised by one of the accommodation places. Trips cost from Rs 300 to 1000, depending on the number of people and the distance. Wild Orchid organises full-day trips (per couple from Rs 2000) that take you through a mangrove swamp and to some great snorkelling sites.

Havelock is also the premier spot for scuba diving on the Andamans; Barefoot Scuba and Dive India are the two professional dive outfits here (see p1110 for more information).

Some resorts can organise guided jungle treks for keen walkers or birders, though be warned that the forest floor turns to slippery and very gluggy mud after rain, and walking is hard work. The inside rainforest is spectacular, giving new meaning to the notion of tall trees, and the bird-watching – especially on the forest fringes – is rewarding; look out for the blue-black racket-tailed drongo trailing his fabulous tail feathers and, by way of contrast, the brilliant golden oriole.

About 5km beyond Village No 5 is Kalapathar, where an elephant training camp is sometimes open to visitors. Beyond Kalapathar the road peters out into deep forest, and there are some good snorkelling spots accessible by boat along the coast.

Sleeping & Eating

Heading south along the coast from the jetty there's a string of simple huts and a couple of more upmarket places at No 5 Village or west to No 7 Village. The listings that follow are in geographical order beyond the jetty.

Pristine Beach Resort (☎ 282344; alexpristine@hotmail.com; huts Rs 100-150, cottages with private bathroom Rs 250-400) Run by an affable couple, these cute huts, good restaurant and a licence to serve alcohol make this a cut above most places. The bar stays open late for night owls (but quietly enough to allow other guests to sleep). It's on a nice bit of beach.

Island Vinnie's Tropical Beach Cabanas (☎ 282187; www.islandvinnie.com; cabanas without/with bathroom Rs 450/1200) New in 2006, these comfortably furnished pink canvas tents, raised on individual verandas, wouldn't look out of place in a desert setting, and so far they're surviving the monsoon climate. Packages are offered for divers, and for visitors who are staying more than 10 days.

Wild Orchid (☎ 282472; www.wildorchidandaman.com; d cottages without/with AC Rs 2100/2500; ☒) Set back from a secluded beach, this is a mellow, friendly place with tastefully furnished cottages designed in traditional Andamanese style. Modern bathrooms, four-poster beds and verandas, and roomy public spaces with comfortable seating add to the comfort factor. There's also a masseur on-site in season, and a bar. The restaurant here, Red Snapper (mains Rs 100 to 250), is one of few genuinely good places to eat on the island and certainly scores on ambience. Fresh seafood is usually available (often caught by the owner or guests!) and the menu can include terrific homemade pasta, Thai curries and Continental dishes, as well as Indian favourites. Book your table early in peak season.

Emerald Gecko (☎ 282170; www.emerald-gecko.com; small huts Rs 200-300, large huts Rs 1000-1500) This is a step up in quality from other hut resorts. There are four comfortable double-storey huts with open-roofed bathrooms, lovingly constructed from bamboo rafts that have drifted ashore from Myanmar. There are some budget huts too, and a restaurant with a good creative menu designed by the same folk as Wild Orchid, and a bar. It's low-key and peaceful.

Island Camping (furnished tents Rs 150-500) Island Camping has tented accommodation in an enviable location among the palms at the end of the road to Radha Nagar Beach. All tents have solid floors, raised camp beds and mosquito nets. It's open from November to March; book through A&N Tourism in Port Blair.

Barefoot at Havelock (☎ 282151, in Port Blair 237656; www.barefootindia.com; cottages Rs 3600-5300;) For the location alone – ensconced in bird-filled forest grounds just back from Radha Nagar Beach – this is the Andamans most luxurious resort, conscious of its use of natural resources. Accommodation is in 18 beautifully designed timber and bamboo-thatched cottages with four-poster beds, stylish bathrooms and verandas, and attention to privacy. Staff and food service still have some way to go to match the quality of accommodation.

Numerous small places have set up under the palm trees, with accommodation in sturdy bamboo huts with lights and fans for around Rs 150 to 300, and all have their own simple, open-sided restaurants. Popular hot spots at the time of research:

Happy Resort (☎ 282061; Village No 2)

Sunrise Beach Resort (Village No 3)
Orient Legend Resort (☎ 282389; Village No 3)

There are cheap eateries serving thalis and fish dishes near the jetty, and on the road leading to No 7 beach.

Getting There & Away

Ferry times are changeable, but there are always direct sailings to and from Havelock from Phoenix Jetty in Port Blair at least once daily, and often twice or more (tourist ferry Rs 150; 2½ hours). Check times in the local newssheet or at the jetty, and you're best to book at least a day in advance at the Port Blair passenger terminal. The ticket office is open between 9am and 11am.

Several ferries a week link Havelock with Neil Island, and also with Rangat in Middle Andaman, where buses continue north to Diglipur.

Getting Around

A local bus connects the jetty and villages on a roughly hourly circuit, but having your own transport is useful on Havelock. You can rent mopeds or motorbikes (per day Rs 150) and bicycles (per day Rs 40 to 50) from the shop outside Pristine Beach Resort, from the stall with the sign in Village No 3, or ask at your hotel.

An autorickshaw from the jetty to No 3 Village is Rs 30, to No 5 is Rs 50 and to No 7 it's Rs 200.

NEIL ISLAND

If you really want to slow down, and are looking for peace, isolation and near-deserted beaches without being a castaway, Neil Island, 40km northeast of Port Blair, is a good place to get off the ferry. Much quieter than nearby Havelock Island, Neil is populated by Bengali settlers involved in fishing and agriculture. This is the place to lie on the beach, junglewalk, snorkel, cycle through paddy fields and farms, and then lie on the beach some more.

Sights & Activities

Neil Island's beaches are numbered 1 to 5, and the road distance between them is 8km. No 1 Beach is the prettiest and most accessible, a 40-minute walk 3km west of the jetty and village. Most of the accommodation places are close to No 1 Beach and the island's best snorkelling is around the coral reef at the far (western) end of this beach. At low tide it's difficult getting over the coral into the water; conversely, at high tide the beach is underwater so plan your activities around tide times. No 2 Beach, on the north side of the island, has a natural bridge rock formation in the water; a cycle ride and short walk will take you to it. A track up the small hill behind Gyan Garden Restaurant leads to a viewpoint across the island and out to sea. No 5 Beach, reached via the village road to the eastern side of the island, is an enclosed stretch with a bit of swell. It's a pleasant bike ride out here (about 5km from the village); just cycle to the end of the road, and walk 50m or so straight ahead to the beach.

You should be able to hire snorkelling gear around town (per day Rs 100), but don't bank on it. Hire of a fishing boat to go to offshore snorkelling or fishing spots will cost per day between Rs 800 and 900; several people can fit on board, depending on the size of the boat. Bicycles are available for hire at several shops in the village (per day Rs 40).

Contact the charming Saha (☎ 282620, 9474212840), Neil Island's unofficial Mr Fixit, for help with accommodation, tours and transport.

Sleeping & Eating

In the village, a few hundred metres from the jetty, there's a market, a few shops, a couple of basic restaurants and the A&N Tourism guesthouse. West of the jetty along No 1 Beach are three small 'resorts' with basic huts and marginally more comfortable cottages; all have great potential and great locations but are in various stages of decay. All provide food.

Cocon Huts (☎ 282528; huts Rs 50, cottages Rs 350-400) The first place you come to, about 500m from the village market, has a good waterfront location but its bar has become a serious local drinking hole, and it can sometimes get pretty uncomfortable for guests.

Tango Beach Resort (☎ 282583; huts Rs 50, cottages Rs 500) Further west, this is a similar set up minus the drinkers, with a couple of concrete cottages as well as huts. It's closer to the better part of No 1 Beach.

Pearl Park Resort (☎ 282510; huts Rs 100, cottages & rooms Rs 400-1000) Pearl Park is set quietly beyond the end of the road, in a beautiful garden of palms and flowering plants a short stroll from the western end of No 1 Beach. As well as thatch huts, there are two dilapidated but once-charming Nicobarese-style cottages on stilts, and a couple of concrete hotel-style rooms.

Hawa Bill Nest (☎ 282630; dm Rs 150, d Rs 800; ❄) It's not often that a charmless government-run hotel comes out ahead in the comfort and cleanliness stakes, but at the time of research it was true on Neil Island. Five minutes' walk from the village beach, it's convenient if not as atmospheric as the other options; book through A&N Tourism in Port Blair.

Providing somewhat erratic service out of season, but popular when/if they're up and running, Gyan Garden Restaurant and Green Heaven Restaurant are two informal and relaxed outdoor eateries and hang-outs between the village and No 1 Beach.

There are plans afoot for accommodation and food at No 5 Beach; check with the folk at Wild Orchid on Havelock Island to see what's become of those.

Getting There & Away

A ferry makes a round trip each morning from Phoenix Bay Jetty in Port Blair (Rs 36, two hours). Twice a week the Rangat ferry calls at Neil after Havelock, which is useful if you want to visit both islands.

An autorickshaw will take you to No 1 Beach from the jetty for Rs 50.

MIDDLE & NORTH ANDAMAN

The Andaman Trunk Rd runs north from Port Blair to Bharatang Island and Middle Andaman – both linked by small roll-on roll-off ferries – then onto North Andaman linked by road bridges. It's very slow going, but consider at least the northern part of the road – say between the jetties at Rangat and Diglipur – as an alternative to taking the ferry in both directions. Relentlessly thick jungle opening to mangrove-fringed waterways with only occasional cultivated clearings make this a spectacularly lush and green journey, especially with the knowledge that tribal people still live traditional lives in the deep forest. The road runs beside Jarawa reserves on the west coasts of South and Middle Andaman, but as most traditional Jarawa people are busy getting on with their lives in the forest you're unlikely to encounter them unless they're beside the road (see the boxed text, p1122). Motorcycles are forbidden beyond the checkpoint, 40km outside of Port Blair.

You can get to Rangat, in Middle Andaman, several times a week from Port Blair or Havelock Island by ferry (Rs 80/25, nine hours) or daily by bus (Rs 70, eight hours). Hawksbill Nest (☎ 279022; four-bed dm Rs 600, d without/with AC Rs 450/850; ❄) is about 15 minutes north of Rangat, and any northbound bus will drop you there; bookings must be made at A&N Tourism in Port Blair. Hawksbill turtles do nest on the beaches of nearby Cuthbert Bay between November and February.

Mayabunder & Around

In Mayabunder there's an unexpected gem in the shape of Sea'n'Sand (☎ 273454; thanzin_the_great@yahoo.co.in; r Rs 200-500), a simple lodge, restaurant and bar overlooking the water 1km south of the town centre. Run by Titus and Elizabeth, along with their young family, it's low-key and will appeal to travellers looking for an experience away from the crowds. Titus organises a range of boat-based day tours (per tour from Rs 500-2500) that, depending on the season

CLOSE ENCOUNTERS OF THE WORST KIND

It's mid-afternoon during a torrential monsoon downpour, and our convoy of public buses, local tour vehicles, goods trucks and police escort crawls slowly along the narrow Andaman Trunk Rd, through the Jarawa tribal reserve.

There is the occasional glimpse of Jarawa people standing beside the road with a police guard – there to protect them from us, I realise, as my bus goes past. People thrust mobile phone cameras out of the windows, fling sweets and bananas, laugh and make monkey noises, and make crude gestures. How the groups of naked and shivering tribal adolescents feel about being on display like this isn't immediately apparent as we go past in a blur, further showering them with water. No-one is reprimanded or arrested or fined. Later I am told that this happens during every transport convoy, every day.

The considerable legal restrictions about contact with tribal people – no gifts, no photography, no 'feeding' – and the considerable police presence in the reserve clearly isn't effective. Many in the islands' government and civil society are lobbying to close the road to the general public and to leave the Jarawa in peace. After this trip I hope they succeed.

Virginia Jealous

and how he feels about you, may include Forty One Caves where hawabills (swiftlets) make their highly prized edible nests; easy snorkelling off Avis Island; or a coast-and-forest-wilderness experience on Interview Island.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Mayabunder, 71km north of Rangat, is linked by daily buses from Port Blair (Rs 95, 10 hours) and by once- or twice-weekly ferries.

Diglipur & Around

Diglipur, three hours by road north of Mayabunder, is the main town of North Andaman and as far north as you can get in the island chain. The town itself and nearby Kalipur are the only places on North Andaman where foreigners can stay. Ferries arrive at the Aerial Bay Jetty from where it's 11km southwest to Diglipur village and the bus stand, basic restaurants, market and a couple of lodges. Ferry tickets can be booked at the Administration Block in town. Kalipur is on the coast 8km southeast of the jetty.

SIGHTS & ACTIVITIES

The twin islands of Smith and Ross, connected by a narrow sand bar, are accessible by boat and here you can walk through forest, or swim and snorkel in the shallow waters. Since this is designated as a marine sanctuary, you must get a permit (Indian/foreigner Rs 50/500) from the Forest Office (⏲ 6am-2pm, closed Sun) opposite the Aerial Bay Jetty. You can charter a boat to take you for the day from the village near the jetty for around Rs 500.

At 732m, Saddle Peak is the highest point in the Andamans. You can trek through subtropical forest to the top and back from Kalipur in about six hours. Again a permit is required from the Forest Office (Indian/foreigner Rs 25/250) and a local guide will make sure you don't get lost – ask at Pristine Beach Resort. Snorkelling behind the small island off the beach near Pristine Resort, and just around the coast at Radha Nagar Beach, is good; limited snorkelling gear is available for hire (per day Rs 100).

Leatherback and green turtles nest along the Diglipur coastline between December and March.

SLEEPING & EATING

There are two places to stay opposite each other at Kalipur, 8km southeast of the Aerial Bay Jetty. Buses run along this route (Rs 8); an autorickshaw costs about Rs 100.

Pristine Beach Resort (☎ 201837; huts Rs 200-500) Huddled among the palms between paddy fields and the beach, Pristine is a pretty spot with several simple bamboo huts on stilts, a restaurant and friendly owners. It gets very busy in peak season.

Turtle Resort (☎ 272553; r without/with AC Rs 400/800; ❄) Set on a small hill with rural views from the balconies, this A&N Tourism hotel provides some level of comfort, despite being a little run-down and musty and having a forlorn feel. It's best to book ahead through A&N Tourism in Port Blair, though you'll be able to get a room on-site if one's available.

GETTING THERE & AWAY

Diglipur, about 80km north of Mayabunder, is served by daily buses to/from Port Blair (Rs 120, 12 hours), as well as buses to Mayabunder (Rs 30, 2½ hours) and Rangat (Rs 50, 4½ hours). There are also daily ferries from Port Blair to Diglipur, returning overnight from Diglipur (seat/berth Rs 81/150, 10 hours).

LITTLE ANDAMAN

Little Andaman is still an outpost and one of the more remote inhabited islands in the group at 120km south of Port Blair.

The island is home to members of the Onge tribe, who were relocated to a tribal reserve in 1977 when the government began developing the island for agriculture and logging of forest timber. Settlement and opening up of the island has had a serious impact on the Onge through loss of environment and hunting grounds – only 100 or so remain. The tribal reserve is out of bounds to visitors.

The populated east coast of Little Andaman was badly affected by the tsunami and most of the population temporarily evacuated to Port Blair. Tourism and other development plans have been severely hampered; relief work was still underway at the time of research, and we didn't get the opportunity to visit. The big attractions here were pristine beaches such as Netaji Nagar Beach, 11km north of Hut Bay, and Butler Bay, a further 3km north, good for surfing and swimming but not for snorkelling; unfortunately this was the area worst hit by the tsunami. Inland, White Surf and Whisper Wave waterfalls offer a forest experience.

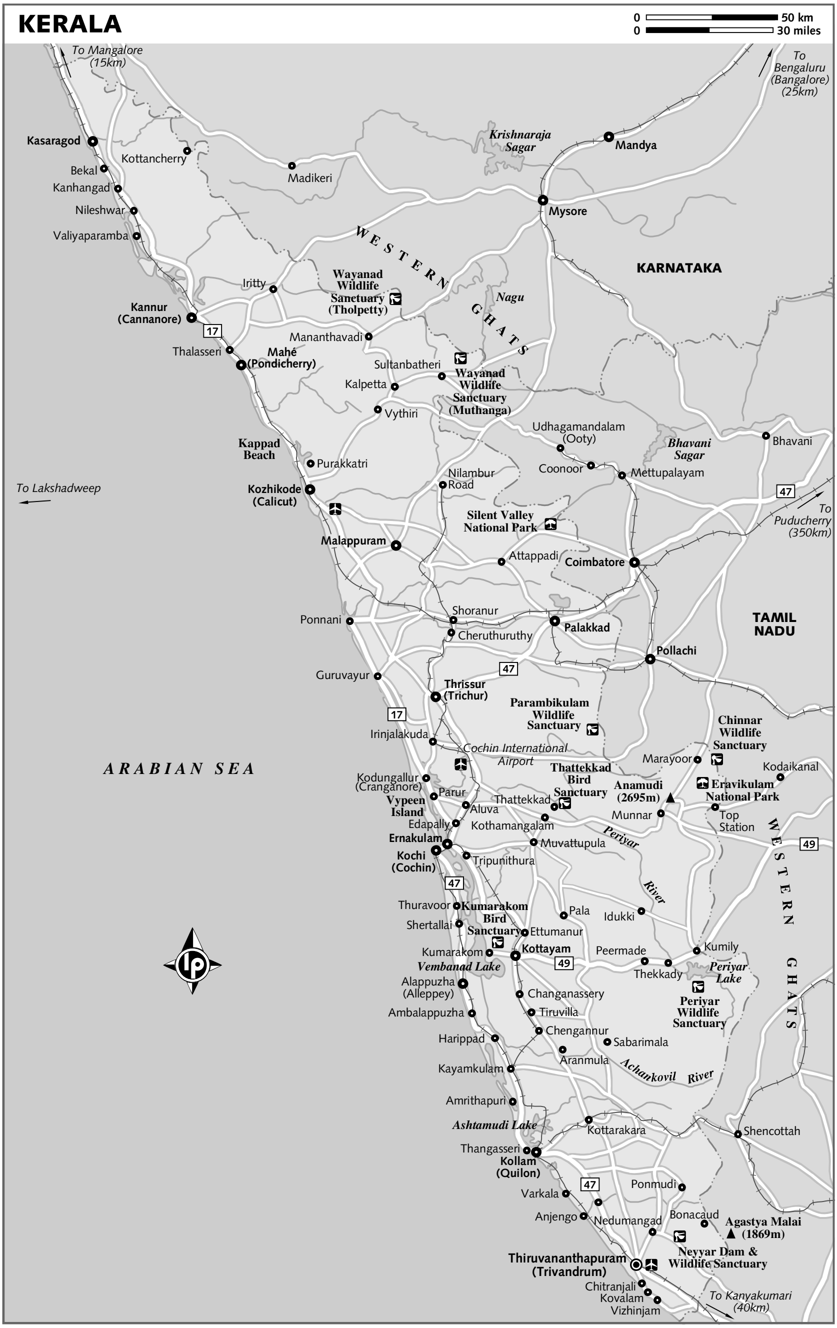
Andaman & Nicobar Islands Forest Plantation Development Corporation (ANIFPDCL; ☎ in Port Blair 232866; pblvanvikas@sancharnet.com) had been actively developing a 1500-hectare red oil palm plantation about 11km from Hut Bay, but this was also damaged during the tsunami and its future is uncertain. ANIFPDCL also managed the two guesthouses on the island, but these were not functioning at the time of writing.

Ferries land at the Hut Bay Jetty on the east coast and from there most of the accessible beaches and attractions are to the north. Boats sail from Port Blair about three times a week.

Kerala

Kerala is where India slips down into second gear, stops to smell the roses and always talks to strangers. A strip of land between the Arabian Sea and the Western Ghats, its perfect climate flirts unabashedly with the fertile soil, and everything glows. An easy-going and successful socialist state, Kerala has a liberal hospitality that stands out as its most laudable achievement.

The backwaters that meander through Kerala are the emerald jewel in South India's crown. Here, spindly networks of rivers, canals and lagoons nourish a seemingly infinite number of rice paddies and coconut groves, while sleek houseboats cruise the water highways from one bucolic village to another. Along the coast, slices of perfect, sandy beach beckon the sun-worshipping crowd, and far inland the mountainous Ghats are covered in vast plantations of spices and tea. Exotic wildlife also thrives in the hills, for those who need more than just the smell of cardamom growing to get their juices flowing.



This flourishing land isn't good at keeping its secret: adventurers and traders have been in on it for years. The serene Fort Cochin pays homage to its colonial past, each building whispering a tale of Chinese visitors, Portuguese traders, Jewish settlers, Syrian Christians and Muslim merchants. Yet even with its colonial distractions, Kerala manages to cling to its vibrant traditions: Kathakali – a blend of religious play and dance; kalarippayat – a gravity-defying martial art; and theyyam – a trance-induced ritual. Mixed with some of the most tastebud-tingling cuisine in India and you can imagine how hard it will be to leave before you even get here.

History

Traders have been drawn to the whiff of Kerala's spices and to the shine of its ivory for more than 3000 years. The coast was known to the Phoenicians, the Romans, the Arabs and the Chinese, and was a transit point for spices from the Moluccas (eastern Indonesia). It was probably via Kerala that Chinese products and ideas first found their way to the West.

The kingdom of Cheras ruled much of Kerala until the early Middle Ages, competing with kingdoms and small fiefdoms for territory and trade. Vasco da Gama's arrival in 1498 opened the floodgates to European colonialism as Portuguese, Dutch and English interests fought Arab traders, and then each other, for control of the lucrative spice trade.

The present-day state of Kerala was created in 1956 from the former states of Travancore, Cochin and Malabar. A tradition of valuing the arts and education resulted in a post-Independence state that is one of the most progressive in India.

Kerala had the first freely elected communist government in the world, coming to power in 1957 and holding power regularly since. The participatory political system has resulted in a more equitable distribution of land and income, and impressive health and education statistics (see p965). Many Malayalis (speakers of Malayalam, the state's official language) work in the Middle East, and remittances play a significant part in the economy.

National Parks

All national parks mentioned in this chapter close for one week for a tiger census during the months of January or February. The dates differ, so check with Kerala Tourism for exact dates.

Information

Kerala Tourism (☎ 0471-2321132; www.keralatourism.org) is a government tourism promotion body with information offices – usually called District Tourism Promotion Council (DTPC) or Tourist Facilitation Centres – in most major towns. Be aware of places with official-sounding names that are actually private tour companies.

ACCOMMODATION

Parts of Kerala – particularly the beachside towns and backwater hubs – have a distinct high season around November to March. Around the mid-December to mid-January peak season, prices creep up again, though great deals are to be had during the monsoon season (April to September).

Getting Around

The Kerala State Road Transport Corporation (KSRTC) runs an extensive network of buses between most Keralan cities. They're not the fastest or most comfortable things on earth, but are reliable and nearly always punctual. Private buses ply the same routes, plus some the KSRTC don't cover, and can be more comfortable – though departure times are more erratic.

SOUTHERN KERALA

THIRUVANANTHAPURAM (TRIVANDRUM)

☎ 0471 / pop 889,191

The unpretentious capital of Kerala, Trivandrum (many people still call it by this colonial name, understandably) rests upon seven low hills. You only have to walk a few metres off the fume-filled racetrack that passes for a main road to appreciate its gentler side, where much of old Kerala's ambience remains intact. Pagoda-shaped buildings with red-tiled roofs line the narrow, winding lanes, and life slows exponentially the further you walk. For most visitors it's just a gateway to the golden-sand resorts of nearby Kovalam and Varkala, but there are some great attractions in and around town for visitors with time to wander off the traveller trail.

Mahatma Gandhi (MG) Rd, the traffic-clogged artery of town, runs 4km north–south from

FESTIVALS IN KERALA

Across the state on any night (but especially during festival season from November to mid-May) there are literally hundreds of vivid temple festivals being held, featuring an array of performing arts and rituals, music and the odd elephant procession. Some highlights:

Ernakulathappan Utsavam (Jan/Feb; Shiva Temple, Ernakulam, Kochi (Cochin), p1007) Hugely significant for residents of Kochi, the climax of this eight-day festival brings a procession of 15 splendidly decorated elephants, ecstatic music and fireworks.

Bharni Utsavam (Feb/Mar; Chettikulangara Bhaghavathy Temple, Chettikulangara village, near Kayamkulam, p980) This one-day festival is dedicated to the popular Keralan goddess Bhagavathy. It's famous for its kootiattam (traditional Sanskrit drama) ritual and the spectacular procession to the temple of larger-than-life effigies.

Thirunakkara Utsavam (Mar; Thirunakkara Shiva Temple, Kottayam, p985) There's all-night Kathakali dancing on the third and fourth nights of this 10-day festival; on the last two nights there are processions of caparisoned elephants.

Pooram Festival (Apr; Asraman Shree Krishna Swami Temple, Kollam (Quilon), p978) There are full-night Kathakali performances during this 10-day festival; on the last day there's a procession of 40 ornamented elephants in Asraman Maidan.

Thrissur Pooram (Apr/May; Vadakkumnatha Temple, Thrissur (Trichur), p1016) The elephant procession to end all elephant processions. Thrissur is Kerala's festival hot spot; see the Thrissur section for more details.

Nehru Trophy Snake Boat Race (2nd Sat in Aug; Punnamadakalyal, Alappuzha (Alleppey), p984) The most popular of Kerala's boat races.

Aranmula Boat Race (Aug/Sep; near Shree Parthasarathy Temple, Aranmula, p988) This water regatta recreates a ritualistic journey in honour of Krishna. It's a spectacularly exciting event, with crowds cheering as rowers shout along with the songs of the boatmen.

Onam (Aug/Sep; statewide) Kerala's biggest cultural celebration is the 10-day Onam, when the entire state celebrates the golden age of mythical King Mahabali. This is primarily a family affair, with an emphasis on feasting and decorating the home in anticipation of the king's visit.

Ashtamudi Craft & Art Festival (Dec/Jan; Asraman Maidan, Kollam (Quilon), p978) This festival, held every second year, features folk art from all over India, with workshops, demonstrations and exhibitions.

ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS & MUSEUMS

This well-cultivated collection of museums, a gallery and an excellent zoo are a peaceful haven from the flurry of the city.

The modern zoological gardens (admission Rs 6, camera Rs 20; 9am-5.15pm Tue-Sun) are among the most impressive in the subcontinent. There are shaded paths meandering through miles of woodland and lakes, where animals happily carouse in massive, open enclosures that mimic their natural habitats. There's also a separate reptile house (entrance with zoo ticket), where dozens of the slithery things do their thing and cobras frequently flare their hoods – just don't ask what the cute guinea pigs are for.

A single Rs 6 entry ticket, purchased at the ticket counter (10am-4pm), covers the following gallery and museums (10am-5pm Tue & Thu-Sun, 1-5pm Wed) in the park. Housed in an absorbing Keralan-style wooden building from 1880, the Napier Museum has an eclectic display of bronzes, Buddhist sculptures, temple carts and ivory carvings. The painted carnivalesque interior is stunning and worth a look in its own right. The dusty Natural History Museum has hundreds of stuffed animals and birds, a fine skeleton collection and the odd empty display case. The Sri Chitra Art Gallery has paintings of the Rajput, Mughal and Tanjore schools, and works by Ravi Varma.

SRI PADMANABHASWAMY TEMPLE

This 260-year-old temple (4am-7.30pm) is Thiruvananthapuram's spiritual heart and the city's erstwhile guardian. Spilling over 2400 sq metres, its main entrance is the 30m tall, seven-tier eastern gopuram (gateway tower). In the inner sanctum, the deity Padmanabha reclines on the sacred serpent and is made from over 10,000 salagramam (sacred stones) that were purportedly, and no doubt slowly, transported from Nepal by elephant.

The temple is officially open to Hindus only, but the path around to the right of the gate offers good views of the gopuram.

PUTHE MALIGA PALACE MUSEUM

The Puthe Maliga Palace Museum (admission Rs 20; 8.30am-1pm & 3-5.30pm Tue-Sun) is housed in the 200-year-old palace of the Travancore maharajas. Based on typical Keralan architecture, it has carved wooden ceilings, marble sculptures and even imported Belgian glass – it took 5000 workers four years to complete. Inside you'll find Kathakali images, an armoury, portraits of Maharajas, ornate thrones and other artefacts.

The annual classical music festival is held here in January/February.

VELI TOURIST PARK

At the junction of Veli Lake and the Arabian sea, 8km west of the city, this unique park (2500785; admission Rs 5; 8am-7.30pm) showcases strikingly oversized sculptures by local artist Kanai Kunhiraman. It's well designed, and the ponds, mammoth concrete conches and quasi-erotic curves of the artwork make for an interesting backdrop for a picnic or a stroll.

LEADER OF THE PACK

In 1957, Kerala was first in the world to freely elect a communist government. While communism's hammer and sickle hasn't had much luck in running other parts of the world, Kerala's unique blend of democratic-socialist principles has a pretty impressive track record.

Kerala has been labelled 'the most socially advanced state in India' by Nobel prize–winning economist Amartya Sen. Land reform and a focus on infrastructure, health and education have played a large part in Kerala's success. The literacy rate (91%) is the highest of any developing nation in the world, though a strong history of education goes back centuries to the days of magnanimous Rajas and active missionaries. The infant mortality rate in Kerala is one-fifth of the national average, while life expectancy stands at 73 years, 10 years higher than the rest of the country.

The picture is not all rosy, however. A lack of any industrial development or foreign investment means that many educated youth have their ambitions curtailed. This might explain why Kerala also has the highest suicide rates and liquor consumption statistics in the country. A big hope for the future is the recent boom in tourism, with Kerala emerging as one of India's most popular new tourist hot spots. So, thanks for coming, and congratulations on being a part of the solution.

AYURVEDA

The students at Ayurveda College (☎ 2460190; MG Rd; ⏲ 8am-1pm) perform massage and general panchakarma (cleansing and purification) treatments (after consultation with a doctor) free of charge. Expect to wait in line, and expect Indian hospital, rather than Western resort-style, ambience.

Courses

Margi Kathakali School (☎ 2478806; Fort), behind Fort School, conducts courses in Kathakali (see the boxed text, p1011) and kootiattam for genuine students – absolute beginners as well as advanced. Fees average Rs 200 per 1½-hour class. Visitors can peek at the uncostumed practise sessions held 10am to noon Monday to Friday.

CVN Kalari Sangham (☎ 2474182; South Rd; ⏲ 10am-1pm & 5-6.30pm) offers three-month courses (Rs 1000 per month) in kalarippayat (see boxed text, p1011) for serious students with some experience in martial arts. Contact Sathyan (☎ 2474182) for details. Daily training sessions (⏲ 7-8.30am Mon-Sat) are open for public viewing.

Tours

KTDC offers tours, leaving from the KTDC Hotel Chaithram (Central Station Rd). The Kanyakumari Day Tour (per person Rs 250; ⏲ 7.30am-9pm Tue-Sun) visits Padmanabhapuram Palace (p973), Kanyakumari (p1085) and the nearby Suchindram Temple. The Thiruvananthapuram City Day Tour (half-/full-day tours Rs 80/130) visits Trivandrum's major sights plus Kovalam beach (half-day 8.30am to 1pm, 2 to 7pm; full day 8.30am to 7pm). Avoid Mondays when some places are closed.

Sleeping

BUDGET

The best hunting ground is along the quieter Manjalikulam Rd – streetside rooms in MG Rd hotels are very noisy.

Omkar Lodge (☎ 2451803; MG Rd; s/d Rs 130/230) While Omkar offers little more than cramped, bare rooms, it does throw in a free ration of mosquito cream every night! Rooms are clean enough, though the street noise isn't exactly a sweet lullaby.

Kukie's Holiday Inn (☎ 2478530; Lukes Lane; s/d Rs 150/325) This gem of a cheapie lies enveloped in golden, verdant silence at the end of a small lane. The rooms are very simple but thoughtfully maintained and offer frilly bits, like wicker chairs and bright paintwork. Some of the best bang-for-buck around.

Pravin Tourist Home (☎ 2330443; Manjalikulam Rd; s/d Rs 170/253) Pravin's rooms are an outstanding example of our favourite Indian budget-hotel label: BBC (Basic But Clean).

Greenland Lodge (☎ 2328114; Thampanoor Jn; s/d Rs 184/276) Greenland greets you with lots of serenity-inducing pastel colours. Spick-and-span rooms are excellent value, have lots of space and come with hybrid squat/Western toilets. Best of all, it's efficiently run by smiling staff. You get free mosquito coils nightly.

YWCA International Guesthouse (☎ 2477308; 4th fl, MG Rd; s/d/tr Rs 250/350/450, d with AC Rs 600; ❄) While the rooms are a bit tattered around the edges, they're well kept and offer space in spades. Those facing away from the street are much quieter. They have a 10pm curfew, as well as the slowest elevators in all of India.

MIDRANGE

Homeland (☎ 2338415; Manjalikulam Rd; s/d Rs 350/490, with AC Rs 675/800; ❄) Homeland has spotless, austere rooms in a brand-spanking new hotel. It is characterless midrange quality for near budget prices.

Hotel Regency (☎ 2330377; www.hotelregency.com; Manjalikulam Cross Rd; s/d Rs 375/600, with AC Rs 800/950; ❄) With small, cosy rooms, a leafy entryway, lots of hush and plenty of smiles, this is an excellent choice for a good night's rest.

Manjalikulam Tourist Home (☎ 2330776; Manjalikulam Rd; s/d Rs 400/600, with AC Rs 700/750; ❄) The rooms here are massive and tidy but spartan, except for a few odd grandmotherly touches like pink floral curtains.

Hotel Highland Park (☎ 2338800; Manjalikulam Rd; s/d Rs 450/600, with AC Rs 750/850; ❄) This is relatively new and in very good nick, though the single rooms are really cramped. Don't mistake this for its older sister-hotel, Hotel Highland, across the road.

Wild Palms Home Stay (☎ 2471175; wildpalm@md3.vsnl.net.in; Mathrubhumi Rd; s Rs 895-1495, d Rs 1095-1895; ❄) The only pad in this price range that offers any real character – where else would you have a Venus de Milo statue greet you in the front garden? This lavish but comfortable family home has spacious rooms, handsome furniture and a friendly vibe (breakfast included).

Hotel Geeth (☎ 2471987; www.geethinternational.in; Ambujarilasam Rd; s/d from Rs 900/1500; ❄) Nothing too flash going on here, but the agreeable rooms all come with AC and lounge chairs, cable TV and eager staff for good measure. The top-floor restaurant comes recommended.

Wild Palms On Sea (☎ 2756781; Puthenthope; s/d from Rs 1295/1595) A resort-style place about 20km from town on a secluded beach (Rs 350 by taxi), run by the same owners as Wild Palms Home Stay.

TOP END

KTDC Hotel Mascot (☎ 2318990; hotelmascot@vsnl.net; Mascot Sq; s/d from Rs 2400/2900; ❄ 💻 🏊) Lots of stylish period touches, massive hallways and an imposing reception area lend this place the sort of charisma missing from modern-mausoleum hotels. There's a monster pool and an Ayurvedic spa, and it's convenient for visits to the zoo, museums and galleries.

Muthoot Plaza (☎ 2337733; www.sarovarhotels.com; Punnen Rd; s/d from Rs 3300/3800, ste from Rs 6500; ❄ 💻) In an unabashedly modern, cool-aqua glass tower, even the cheaper rooms are plush and top value. It's studiously focused on business travellers, with free breakfast and damned efficient service.

Eating

For some unusual refreshments with your meal, look out for karikku (coconut water) and sambharam (buttermilk with ginger and chilli).

Ananda Bhavan (MG Rd; dishes Rs 15-20; 🕑 lunch & dinner) This veg restaurant hones its skills on South Indian and tandoori dishes. It's a classic Keralan sit-down-and-dig-in-with-your-hands type situation.

Maveli Café (Central Station Rd; dishes Rs 15-45) Part of the Indian Coffee House chain, Maveli serves its standard tucker in a unique, narrow, four-storey spiralling tower lined by bench tables. Equal parts funhouse and Indian diner, it's a must-see. There's a traditional branch of Indian Coffee House (Museum Rd; 🕑 8.30am-6pm) opposite the zoo.

Kerala House Family Restaurant (Statue Rd; mains Rs 25-55) Don't expect much in the way of décor (think formica), but do expect one mean fish-curry masala (Rs 50). The fish pollichathu (baked in banana leaf), with ginger, vegetables and spices, is also top-notch.

Kalavara Family Restaurant (Press Rd; dishes Rs 30-105; 🕑 lunch & dinner; ❄) A favourite of Trivandrum's middle class, this place does commendable lunchtime biryanis (Rs 41 to 75) and a range of Keralan fish dishes; the fish molee (fish pieces in coconut sauce, Rs 59) is excellent and there's atmospheric rooftop dining.

There are plenty of good places to eat near the bus and train stations:

Azad Restaurant (MG Rd; nonveg mains Rs 17-40) Popular place with a juice bar attached.

Prime Square (Central Station Rd; mains from Rs 25) Keralan specialities and a great-value fish curry (Rs 28).

There's a choice of good hotel buffets at places like Tiffany's Restaurant (Muthoot Plaza; lunch Rs 350, dinner Rs 450) and Regency (MG Rd; buffet Rs 275) at the South Park Hotel. Spencer's Daily (MG Rd; 🕑 9am-9pm) is a well-stocked supermarket with lots of Western food, and even tampons!

Entertainment

Academy of Magical Sciences (☎ 2358910; www.magicmuthukad.com; Poojapurra) Ever wanted to learn how on earth they do that Indian rope trick? This is your chance. This academy works to preserve traditional Indian magic, give recognition to street magicians and train students in the art of illusion. It holds regular shows and has a shop selling magic kits. Fun.

For a quick Bolly- or Hollywood fix, try Sree Kumar Cinema (☎ 2331222; Central Station Rd; admission Rs 30-35; 🕑 11am-11pm).

Shopping

Wander around Connemara Market to see vendors selling vegetables, fish, live goats, fabric, clothes, spices and more bananas than you've ever seen in one place.

Sankers Coffee & Tea (☎ 2330469; MG Rd; 🕑 9am-9pm Mon-Sat) You'll smell the fresh coffee well before you reach this dainty little shop. It sells Nilgiri Export OP Leaf Tea (Rs 240 per kilogram) and a variety of coffee and nuts.

SMSM Institute (☎ 2330298; YMCA Rd; 🕑 9am-8pm Mon-Sat) Contrary to intuition, this place is not dedicated to the study of text messaging, but is a Kerala Government–run handicraft emporium with an Aladdin's den of reasonably priced goodies. A giant dancing-Shiva statue will greet you at the entrance.

Getting There & Away

AIR

Both Indian Airlines (☎ 2314781; Museum Rd; 🕑 10am-1pm & 1.45-5.35pm Mon-Sat) and Jet Airways (☎ 2728864; Sasthamangalam Junction; 🕑 9am-5.30pm Mon-Sat) have offices in Trivandrum.

Jet Airways and Indian Airlines fly daily to Mumbai (Bombay, US$262). Air India (☎ 2500585; International Airport; 🕑 9am-5.30pm Mon-Sat) flies to Kochi (US$115), while Indian Airlines flies to Bengaluru (Bangalore, US$162), Chennai (Madras, US$157) and Delhi (US$442).

There are regular flights from Trivandrum to Colombo and Male; see p1165.

All airline bookings can be made at the efficient Airtravel Enterprises (☎ 2334202; fax 2331704; New Corporation Bldg, MG Rd; 9.30am-6pm Mon-Sat, 9.30am-5pm Sun).

BUS

For buses operating from the KSRTC bus stand (☎ 2323886), opposite the train station, see the table below.

There's also a daily 8.45am bus to Thekkady (Rs 141, eight hours) for Periyar Wildlife Sanctuary.

For Tamil Nadu, State Express Transport Corporation (SETC) buses leave from the eastern end of the KSRTC bus stand for Chennai (Rs 306, 17 hours, eight daily) and Madurai (Rs 135, seven hours, nine daily). There's one daily bus at 3.45pm for Udhagamandalam (known as Ooty; Rs 258, 14 hours) and one at 2pm for Puducherry (Pondicherry, Rs 265, 16 hours).

Buses leave for Kovalam Beach (Rs 8, every 15 minutes) between 5.40am and 10pm from the southern end of the East Fort bus stand on MG Rd.

TRAIN

Trains are often heavily booked, so it's worth visiting the reservation office (8am-8pm Mon-Sat, to 2pm Sun).

A bunch of trains run up the coast via Kollam and Ernakulam to Thrissur. Beyond Thrissur, many others branch off east via Palakkad (Palghat) to Tamil Nadu. You can travel to Coimbatore (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 194/514/728, 11 hours) for connections to Ooty.

BUSES FROM TRIVANDRUM (KSRTC BUS STAND)

Destination	Fare (Rs)	Duration (hr)	Frequency
Alleppey	90	3½	every 15min
Kanyakumari	40	2	6 daily
Kochi	124	5	every 15min
Kollam	42	1½	every 15min
Neyyar Dam	20	1½	every 40min
Thrissur	168	7½	every 30min
Varkala	32	1¼	hourly

Trains that travel up the coast as far as Mangalore in Karnataka include the daily Parasuram Express (2nd class/AC chair Rs 154/547, 16 hours, 6.35am) and Malabar Express (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 261/705/1000, 6.30pm).

There are frequent trains to Varkala (2nd class/AC chair Rs 24/142, around 45 minutes), Kollam (Rs 31/167, 1¼ hours) and Ernakulam (2nd class/3AC/2AC Rs 60/335/470, 4½ hours), with three passing through Alleppey (2nd class/AC chair Rs 47/180, three hours). There are daily services to Calicut (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 190/505/716, 11 hours) and Kanyakumari (Rs 131/213/291, two hours).

Getting Around

The airport (☎ 2501537) is 6km from the city and 15km from Kovalam; take local bus 14 from the East Fort bus stand (Rs 5). Prepaid taxi vouchers from the airport cost Rs 206 to the city and Rs 313 to Kovalam.

Autorickshaws patrol the streets and are the easiest transport around the city. Standard rates (assuming you can convince drivers to use the meter) are Rs 10 flagfall, then Rs 5 per kilometre, but all rules go out the window at night – 50% over the meter is fair. Agree on a fare beforehand. A cheap way to get around is to hop on and off any of the crowded buses plying the length of MG Rd (Rs 3).

AROUND TRIVANDRUM

Neyyar Dam Sanctuary

This sanctuary (☎ 2272182; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/100; 9am-4pm Tue-Sun), 32km north of Trivandrum, is set around an idyllic lake created by the 1964 Neyyar dam. The verdant forest lining the shoreline is home to gaurs, sambar deer, sloth, elephants, lion-tailed macaques and the occasional tiger.

The sanctuary office organises 40-minute lion safaris (Rs 250 per car, plus Rs 10 each for guide), though you're more likely to see monkeys than big cats. For improved spotting opportunities it's better to sneak around on a three-hour guided trek (Indian/foreigner Rs 400/800 per group of up to 10 people). There's a Crocodile Protection Centre (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/10) nearby and you can go for a dip in the lake's pristine waters (Rs 50). The elephant rehabilitation centre (Kappukadu; 9am-5pm), 7km up the road, offers 30-minute rides for Rs 100.

You can get here by frequent bus from Trivandrum (Rs 16, 1½ hours). A taxi costs

Rs 650 return (with two hours waiting time) and a very bumpy rickshaw costs half that.

Sivananda Yoga Vedanta Dhanwantari Ashram

Just before Neyyar Dam, this ashram (☎/fax 0471-2273093; www.sivananda.org/ndam), established in 1978, is renowned for its hatha yoga courses. Courses run for a minimum of two weeks and cost Rs 650 per day for accommodation in a double room (Rs 450 in dormitories). Low season (April to October) rates are Rs 100 less. There's an exacting schedule (6am to 10pm) of yoga practise, meditation and chanting; and students rave about the food (included in the rates). Prior bookings are required. Month-long yoga-teacher training and Ayurvedic massage courses are also available – it's often best to go when one of these is running.

KOVALAM

☎ 0471

The frenzied beachfront development, bloated prices and indefatigable souvenir-sellers of Kovalam are almost worth putting up with for its lovely slice of sand and perfectly swaying palms. Permanently tattooed on European charter-group itineraries, these days there is little room left for the budgeteers that pioneered India's tourism industry. Nevertheless, Kovalam clings to some remnants of charm, particularly once you step off the main-beach drag into the rice paddies and palm groves that stretch far inland. It can be a good place to kick back for a few days, particularly during quieter times.

Orientation

Kovalam consists of two coves (Lighthouse Beach and Hawah Beach) separated from less-populated beaches north and south by rocky headlands. The town proper is at Kovalam Junction, about 1.5km from the beaches.

Information

Just about every shop and hotel wants to change your money, but ask around for the best rate. There are Federal Bank and ICICI ATMs at Kovalam Junction. There are also plenty of small, uniformly slow internet places charging Rs 30 to 50 per hour and lots of STD/ISD facilities around.

Bookshop (🕑 7am-11pm) A good range of books to rent/buy/exchange, underneath the German Bakery.

Post office (🕑 10am-1pm Mon-Sat)

Top Shop Cyber Cafe (per hr Rs 30; 🕑 9.30am-midnight) Off the beach up a steep hill, this is the only serious internet joint.

Tourist facilitation centre (☎ 2480085; 🕑 10am-5pm) Very helpful, inside the entrance to the Kovalam Beach Resort.

United Books (NUP Beach Rd; 🕑 9am-9pm) A kooky collection of books on Kerala, Indian spirituality and English-language trash lit.

Upasana Hospital (☎ 2480632; 🕑 9.30am-10pm Mon-Sat, 9.30m-12pm Sun) Has two English-speaking doctors who can take care of minor injuries.

Dangers & Annoyances

Women are likely to grow tired of the parade of male Indian daytrippers who stroll along the beach in the hope of glimpsing female flesh – it's more annoying than dangerous, however. Theft does occur, both from hotels and the beach. Lock the doors and windows and watch your possessions at the beach.

There are strong rips at both ends of Lighthouse Beach that carry away several swimmers every year. Swim only between the flags in the area patrolled by lifeguards.

Kovalam has frequent blackouts and the footpaths further back behind Lighthouse Beach are unlit, so carry a torch (flashlight) after dark.

Sleeping

Kovalam is bumper to bumper with hotels, though budget places cost more than usual and are fewer in number every year. Beachfront properties are the most expensive and have great sea views, but many of these cater to package groups. There are lots of better-value, smaller places tucked away in the labyrinth of paths behind the beach among palm groves and rice paddies.

Prices quoted are for the November to March high season; outside of these times expect huge discounts. During the Christmas and New Year rush savvy owners double their prices. Rooms offered are usually doubles, though single travellers often bargain a small discount.

BUDGET

Pink Flower (☎ 2383908; d Rs 250) It's worth seeking this place out, at least for the look of surprise on friendly Mr Sadanandan's face that you managed to find his little guesthouse. Tucked well away in the palms behind several hotels, this lovingly kept place has several humble, spotless rooms that may just be the cheapest digs in Kovalam.

Hotel Holiday Home (☎ 2486382; d Rs 300-800) This great place has spacious, if a bit dark, bungalow-style rooms facing each other over a small garden. There's a tangible chill-out vibe, helped along by its tranquil setting in a maze of paths behind the main beach. It's popular with long-term travellers.

Hotel Surya (☎ 2481012; kovsurya@yahoo.co.in; d downstairs/upstairs Rs 350/500, with AC Rs 1200; ❄) This run-of-the-mill place has small, dark, downstairs rooms and bigger upstairs ones with TV, fridge and a communal balcony.

Dwaraka Lodge (☎ 2480411; d Rs 400) This concrete building is a little grimy, but inside you get clean sheets, a loo and a room with ocean views. What more do you want at this price?

Moon Valley Cottage (☎ 9847049643; sknairkovalam@yahoo.com; d from Rs 400, upstairs apt per week Rs 5000) There's nothing but swaying palms all the way back here, and this place makes the most of it with a thatched-roof, top-floor hang-out where you can practically reach out and fondle the coconuts. The rooms are typically basic and clean.

Green Valley Cottages (☎ 2480636; indira_ravi@hotmail.com; s/d Rs 500/600) Also way back in the paddy fields, this serene spot is the place to revel in serious hush time. The rooms are ruthlessly austere, perfect for monks-in-training looking to escape pesky distractions like room furnishings.

LUNGI OR DHOTI?

No, it's not a dress, or a kilt, or a frock the men in Kerala are all wearing, it's called a lungi. Made from cotton and patterned in different designs, men sporting lungis are a common sight in southern India, as well as in Bangladesh and Myanmar.

The lungi is traditionally a colourful piece of fabric, often sewn together to form a tube, and knotted around the waist. It comes in many colours and is worn mostly as casual dress. If the lungi is white, it's called mundu, which is worn at formal occasions like weddings. Men will fold their lungi or mundu in half while working or during hot weather (ie most of the time), though this is never done in formal situations. Interestingly, Muslim men wear their lungi tucked to the left, while Hindus and Christians wear theirs to the right.

Now before you think you're an expert on the subject, don't get this confused with the dhoti (called a vesthi in Kerala), which is a white, open rectangular piece of cloth wrapped around the waist and worn throughout India on official occasions. It is generally acceptable for foreigners to wear a lungi/mundu/vesthi/dhoti. Try it out – there's nothing like having a cool breeze running between your legs on a scorching Kerala day.

Wilson Tourist Home (☎ 9847363831; d Rs 500-900, with AC Rs 1300 incl breakfast;) Wilson has large courtyard rooms set around a garden, with swing chairs on the balconies and Keralan darkwood touches. The cheaper rooms aren't much to write home about.

White House (☎ 3091963; whitehousekovalam@walla.com; d Rs 600) Next door to Hotel Surya, this is a clone offering 'same-same but different'.

MIDRANGE

Hotel Silverstar (☎ 2482983; www.silverstar-kovalam.com; d incl breakfast Rs 600-800) Fresh from a round of renovations, the spick-and-span rooms here have enough space to swing at least two cats. The hotel's set back in the heart of the village, which means it's quiet, but the large balconies don't have much of a view. Mosquito nets are provided and there's a roof terrace.

Hotel Greenland (☎ 2486442; hotelgreenlandin@yahoo.com; s/d Rs 600/800) The humungous refurbished rooms in this multilevel complex sport natural light and small kitchenettes for self-catering. It's a very friendly place that cooks up yummy food on request.

Maharaju Palace (☎ 2485320; www.maharajupalace.in; d Rs 1100) More of a quiet retreat than a palace, this boutiquey place has far more character than anything else in its class. The few medium-sized rooms are decorated with artsy touches and have a large shared balcony sporting comfortable lounging chairs. There's a charming, secluded little garden out the front.

Aparna (☎ 2480950; s/d Rs 1250/1500) Immediately behind Hotel Rockholm, this is similar and has slightly better-kept rooms, but with less character.

Hotel Rockholm (☎ 2480306; www.rockholm.com; Lighthouse Rd; s/d Rs 1350/1500, with AC Rs 1850/2000;) Overlooking crashing waves and near a secluded beach, this place clings to leftover '80s chic. AC rooms are slightly bigger and have romantic window seats.

Varmas Beach Resort (☎ 2480478; www.calangutebeach.com; Lighthouse Rd; d Rs 1500, with AC Rs 2500;) This is the best-looking place in Kovalam, with a Kerala-style façade, rooms with wooden furniture and rattan sitting areas on the balconies. Throw in some exceptional views and access to an isolated beach and shazam – we have a winner!

Jeevan Ayurvedic Beach Resort (☎ 2480662; www.jeevanresort.com; d Rs 2100-3500;) This resort has a great burnt-orange/blue colour scheme, decent-sized rooms with bathtubs and an alluring pool that practically plays footsies with the ocean.

Also recommended:

Orion Beach Resort (☎ 2480999; www.orionbeachresort.com; d downstairs/upstairs Rs 700/1500) Your rupees pay for the balconies with awesome seaviews, but there's not much left over for anything more than rudimentary rooms.

Moon Light Tourist Home (☎ 2480375; moonlight@satyam.net.in; d Rs 1500, with AC Rs 1750;) Friendly place with a dash of character and a few great balcony rooms. Nonguests can use the pool for Rs 150.

Hotel Blue Sea (☎ 2480555; www.hotelbluesea.net; r Rs 1000-2500, with AC Rs 3500;) Something different: great rooms inside circular, three-storey towers with polished floors and round verandas.

TOP END

Best Western Swagath Holiday Resort (☎ 2481148; www.swagathresorts.com; r Rs 1400-3600, with AC Rs 1800-4000, ste Rs 6000;) Set in a cultivated, fairytale-perfect garden overlooking coconut palms. The rooms are big and well furnished, but with a whiff of the chain hotel about them. The place is kid-friendly, with a small playground and kiddie pool, and there is one ridiculously charming garden villa (Rs 2000), complete with white picket fence.

Leela (previously Kovalam Beach Resort; ☎ 2480101; www.theleela.com; s/d from US$295/320, ste from Rs 9000;) This hotel is glamorously located around extensive grounds on the headland north of Hawah Beach. There are three (three!) swimming pools, an Ayurvedic centre, gym and all the luxury you'd expect for the price. Rooms aren't huge, but are sumptuously decorated with colourful textiles and Keralan artwork.

Eating

Open-air restaurants line the beach area displaying the catch of the day nightly – just pick a fish, settle on a price (per serve around Rs 150, tiger prawns over Rs 400) and decide how you want it prepared. Menus and prices are indistinguishable, so it's more about which ambience takes your fancy. Restaurant are open from around 7.30am to midnight.

Suprabhatham (meals Rs 45-75) This vegetarian place dishes up excellent, dirt-cheap and truly authentic Keralan cooking. It's secluded and intimate, out in the palm groves with an option to dine under the stars to a nightly orchestra of crickets.

Garzia Seafood Corner (mains Rs 50-200) Long-term visitors rate this lime-green place as a reasonable seafood option.

Spice Village (dishes Rs 50-220) A romantic lily-pond oasis, this place calls itself 'traditional Keralan', though the requisite pasta and Chinese dishes make their cameo appearances. Nevertheless, it does some excellent Keralan seafood, like its fish pollichathu (marinated fish wrapped in a banana leaf and grilled, Rs 130).

Beatles (mains Rs 60-180) Offering the usual Kovalam food suspects, what sets Beatles apart is the funky gnarled wood décor, with vines dripping from every corner. The jungle continues upstairs with awesome sea views to boot.

Café Spice Garden (mains Rs 60-300) Modishly decked out in brightly coloured cushions, there's a wide-ranging menu that includes a dangerously long list of cocktails. The seafood gets particularly good reports.

German Bakery (mains Rs 80-160) The most popular breakfast hang-out, this rooftop bakery has a winning range of breakfasts, strong coffee, fresh pastries, quiches and a varied selection of main courses, including stir-fried tofu (Rs 100) and seafood pizza (Rs 140). We love its version of the French breakfast: croissant, café au lait and a cigarette (Rs 60).

Fusion (mains Rs 90-200) This funky pad has an inventive menu where East meets West – and they even seem to get along pretty well. Its fusion dishes have Indian and continental choices colliding to form yummy new taste combinations.

Entertainment

During the high season, a shortened version of Kathakali is performed most nights somewhere – inquire about locations and times from the Tourist Facilitation Centre (p969). The intricate make-up process starts at around 5pm, the performance around 6.30pm. On weekends cultural programmes involving music and dance are sometimes performed on the beach – look out for signs.

Western videos are shown twice a night in some restaurants. Dedicated bars are thin on the ground, but beer is available in most of the restaurants (around Rs 80) and some serve cocktails (Rs 80 to 100) to an endless soundtrack of reggae, trance and classic rock.

Getting There & Away

BUS

There are local buses between Kovalam and Trivandrum every 20 minutes between 5.30am and 9.30pm (Rs 8, 30 minutes); catch them from the entrance to Leela resort. Buses to Ernakulum leave at 6am, 6.30am and 2.30pm (Rs 125, 5½ hours), stopping at Kallambalam (for Varkala, Rs 38, 1½ hours), Kollam (Rs 47, 2½ hours) and Alleppey (Rs 92, four hours).

TAXI & AUTORICKSHAW

A taxi between Trivandrum and Kovalam Beach is Rs 250. Autorickshaws should be around Rs 100, depending on the season. Prepaid taxis from Trivandrum airport to Lighthouse Beach cost Rs 313.

A great way to get around to remote beaches is on your own wheels. Voyager Travels (☎ 2485217) rents out scooters/Enfields for around Rs 450/550 per day – though its opening hours can be unpredictable.

AROUND KOVALAM

Samudra Beach

Samudra Beach, about 4km north of Kovalam by road, has a couple of resorts jostling for space with local fishing villages. Although more peaceful, the steep and rough beach is not as good for swimming.

Alitalia Beach House (☎ 2480042; s/d Rs 600/1000) The unique, octagonal rooms here have neat furniture, poster beds with mosquito nets, rooftop seating and windows on six sides – perfect for that fresh ocean breeze.

Puja Mahal (☎ 2481245; www.hotelpujamahal.com; s/d Rs 2000/2500;) This new hotel has made some rather curious interior-design decisions – concrete, jungle scenes anyone? The rooms are perfectly comfortable, but the star attraction remains the refreshing pool.

Pulinkudi & Chowara

Around 8km south of Kovalam are some luxury alternatives to Kovalam's crowded beaches.

Dr Franklin's Panchakarma Institute (☎ 2480870; www.dr-franklin.com; Chowara; s €15-50, d €20-65;) For those serious about Ayurvedic treatment, this is a reputable and less expensive alternative to some flashier resorts. Daily treatment costs €35, with a full meal plan an additional €16. Accommodation is clean and comfortable but not resort style (though sea-view rooms are available). Options include packages for spine problems and slimming, as well as general rejuvenation and stress relief.

Thapovan Heritage Home (☎ 2480453; www.thapovan.com; s/d Rs 3000/3850) This is the way to live the simple life (no pool, AC, TV) in the complete luxury of gorgeous Keralan teak cottages filled with handcrafted furniture. It's set among perfectly manicured grounds that roll down a hillside and overlook acres of swaying palm groves. Ayurvedic treatments available range from one-hour massages to 28-day treatment marathons. It's a few kilometres from the nearest beach.

Bethsaida Hermitage (☎ 2267554; www.bethsaida-c.org; Pulinkudi; r €55-80) A resort with a difference: this is a charitable organisation that helps support a nearby orphanage. As a bonus, it's also a luxurious beachside escape, with rolling, sculpted gardens, seductively slung hammocks, palms galore and shade in spades. It offers a variety of cottages, from rainbow-painted, half-ovals scattered down a hillside, to spacious, cool Kerala-style huts.

Surya Samudra Beach Garden (☎ 2480413; www.suryasamudra.com; Pulinkudi; r incl breakfast €120-350;) This luscious, small resort has six types of cottages, many of which are constructed from transplanted traditional Keralan houses, with spectacular carved ceilings and open-air bathrooms. There are private beaches, an infinity pool and Ayurvedic treatments – all on 21 acres of wonderfully cultivated grounds.

PADMANABHAPURAM PALACE

With several large lumberyards worth of carved ceilings and polished-teak beams, this palace (admission Rs 10, camera/video Rs 25/1200; 9am-5pm Tue-Sun) is considered the best example of traditional Keralan architecture today. Parts of it date back to 1550, though as the egos of successive rulers left their mark, it expanded into the magnificent conglomeration of 14 palaces it is today.

The largest wooden palace complex in Asia, it was once the seat of the rulers of Travancore, a princely state taking in parts of Tamil Nadu as well as Kerala. Fetchingly constructed of teak and granite, the exquisite interiors include rosewood ceilings carved in floral patterns, Chinese-influenced screens, and floors finished to a high-black polish. Getting one of the English-speaking guides that hang around inside the gate is worthwhile (around Rs 50 to 100).

Padmanabhapuram is around 60km southeast of Kovalam. Catch a local bus from Kovalam (or Trivandrum) to Kanyakumari and get off at Thuckalay, from where it's a short autorickshaw ride or 15-minute walk. Alternatively, take one of the tours organised by the KTDC (see p966), or hire a taxi (about Rs 1000 return).

VARKALA

☎ 0470 / pop 42,273

The sensational cliffs of Varkala might just be its saving grace, holding back the kind of development that has left nearby Kovalam gasping for air. With a strand of golden beach nuzzling the cliff edge, and more Bob Marley music that you can poke a dreadlocked backpacker at, the vibe here remains faithfully laid-back. Varkala's beaches are protected by soaring bluffs, while all the on-land action is perched precariously, but beautifully, along the crumbling precipice above. Sure, the number of new hotels is creeping up each year, but it's still a great place to while away the days, even weeks, with tonnes of sleeping options and some excellent dining spots (with dramatic, cliffside sunsets on the house).

Orientation & Information

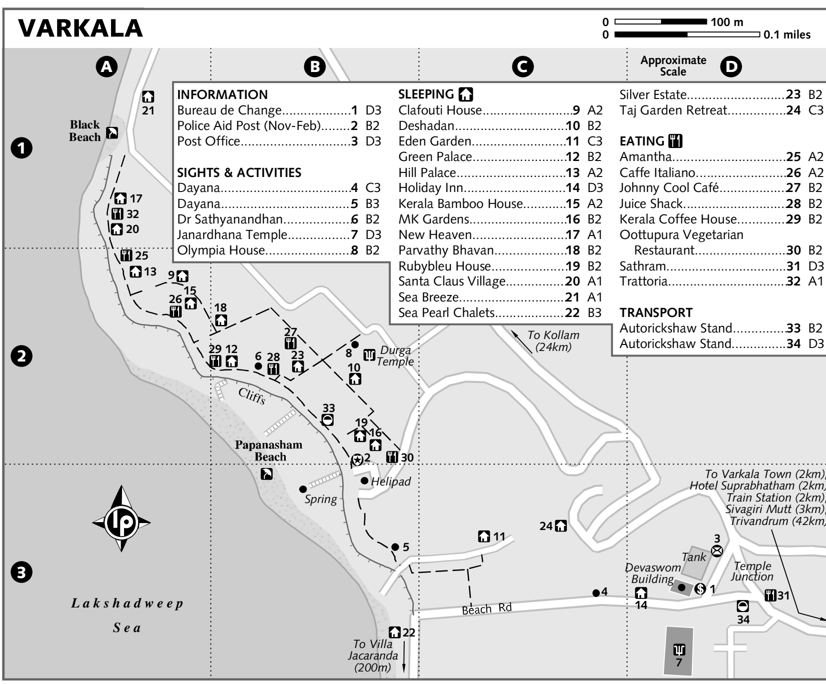
The main beach is accessed from either Beach Rd, or by several steep stairways cut into the north cliff. The town and the train station are about 2km from the beach. There's a State Bank of India ATM in Varkala town and there are plenty of slow internet places along the clifftop (around Rs 40 per hour) – save your emails often as power cuts are not uncommon.

Bureau de Change (☎ 2606623; Temple Junction; 9am-7pm) Cashes travellers cheques, does credit-card cash advances, and is helpful for bus and train times.

Police aid post (Nov-Feb) At the helipad.

Post office (10am-2pm Mon-Sat) North of Temple Junction.

Dangers & Annoyances



The beaches at Varkala have very strong currents; even experienced swimmers have been swept away. This is one of the most dangerous beaches in Kerala, so be careful and swim between the flags or ask the lifeguards for the best place to swim.

Indian male gawkers are starting to discover the bikini-clad attractions at Varkala. However, with police patrolling beaches to keep male starers a-walkin' and the hawkers at bay, there had been no serious incidents when we were there. It still pays to dress sensitively, especially if you're going into Varkala town.

It seems like every man and his dog has an Ayurvedic-related product to sell, from treatments, to massage, to Ayurvedic tea and even Ayurvedic toilets. Most people aren't qualified practitioners – it's best to ask for recommendations before you go get herbalised (see opposite). Women should always be treated by a female practitioner.

Sights & Activities

Varkala is a temple town, and Janardhana Temple is the main event – its technicolour Hindu spectacle sits hovering above Beach Rd. It's closed to non-Hindus, but you may be invited into the temple grounds where there is a huge banyan tree and shrines to Ayyappan, Hanuman and other Hindu deities.

Sivagiri Mutt (☎ 2602807; www.sivagiri.org) is the headquarters of the Sree Narayana Dharma Sanghom Trust, the ashram devoted to Sree Narayana Guru (1855–1928), Kerala's most prominent guru. This is a popular pilgrimage site and the swami is happy to talk to visitors. If you're serious about studying meditation and philosophy here, it's possible to stay (rooms Rs 200 to 250).

Practically everyone offers Ayurveda, yoga or massage (see also Dangers & Annoyances, opposite). A recommended place for Ayurvedic beauty treatments is Dayana (☎ 2609464; manicure & pedicure Rs 250, facials Rs 400-1000; 9am-7pm), which has a shack on the beach and a shop on Beach Rd (women only). Mr Omanakuttan at Olympia House (☎ 3291783) is a qualified massage instructor, in both Ayurveda and other schools, and has an excellent reputation. His wife sees female clients. Eden Garden (☎ 2603910; www.eden-garden.net), a popular Ayurvedic resort, offers single treatments and packages; see p976 for accommodation details. Readers also have good things to say about Dr Sathyanandhan (☎ 2602950; smAyurveda@hotmail.com), near Seaview. Single massage treatments cost between Rs 500 and Rs 900.

For tabla (traditional drum) lessons contact Mr Venu (☎ 9895473304), who has been playing and teaching for 15 years and will come to your residence for banging instructions (Rs 250 to 300 per hour).

Boogie boards can be rented from places along the beach for Rs 100, but be wary of very strong currents (see Dangers & Annoyances, opposite).

Sleeping

Most places to stay are along the north cliff; some open only for the tourist onslaught in November. The quieter places are either inland or at the far northern end of the cliff; although the number of guesthouses is inexorably increasing here, too. Prices given are average high-season (November to March) rates, which fluctuate wildly with the ebb and flow of demand – expect astronomical prices around the Christmas holidays and bargains in the off season.

The commission racket is alive and well – make sure that your rickshaw takes you to the place you've asked for.

BUDGET

Rubybleu House (☎ 9995040495; www.rubybleuhouse.com; dm Rs 75, s/d Rs 200/300) This gem of a guesthouse has basic, colourful rooms in a rambling house deep among the palm groves. There's a small jungle/garden with rare plants from around the world and the friendly hippy vibe is administered by the very informative Leon and his partner Katalin (who's a qualified reiki instructor). They have an awesome 6000-CD music collection and an eclectic Buddhist/rock-and-roll library. Long-termers love this place.

AYURVEDA

With its roots in Sanskrit, the word Ayurveda is derived from ayu (life) and veda (knowledge); it is the knowledge or science of life. Principles of Ayurvedic medicine were first documented in the Vedas some 2000 years ago, but it may even have been practised centuries earlier.

Ayurveda sees the world as having an intrinsic order and balance. It argues that we possess three doshas (humours): vata (wind or air); pitta (fire); and kapha (water/earth). Known together as the tridoshas, deficiency or excess in any of them can result in disease – an excess of vata may result in dizziness and debility; an increase in pitta may lead to fever, inflammation and infection. Kapha is essential for hydration.

Ayurvedic treatment aims to restore the balance, and hence good health, principally through two methods: panchakarma (internal purification) and massage. The herbs used for both grow in abundance in Kerala's moist climate, and every village has its own Ayurvedic pharmacy.

Having an occasional Ayurvedic massage, something offered at tourist resorts all over Kerala, is relaxing, but you have to go in for the long haul to reap any real benefits – usually 15 days or longer. Expect a thorough examination followed by an appropriate Ayurvedic diet, exercises and a range of treatments, as well as regular massages.

If you want to learn more, pick up a copy of Ayurveda: Life, Health & Longevity by Dr Robert E Svoboda, or check out www.ayur.com.

Silver Estate (☎ 9387755309; mohdrafi20@rediffmail.com; s/d Rs 250/300) Silver Estate gets rave reviews for the friendliness of its staff. It has typically basic rooms with hammocks out the front, and is back far enough from the beach to be blissfully quiet. There's a child-care centre run from here during the high season.

MK Gardens (☎ 2603298; mkgarden_2005@yahoo.com; r Rs 250-300) In a massive house well off Varkala's 'Vegas strip,' the rooms are plain but enormous, with palm-top views that come together to spell 'good budget value'.

New Heaven (☎ 2156338; newheavenbeachresort@yahoo.com; r Rs 500-700) Just back from the northern cliffs, New Heaven has easy access to Black Beach and great top-floor views. Rooms are tidy and have big, blue bathrooms.

Kerala Bamboo House (☎ 9895270993; www.keralabamboohouse.com; huts Rs 700-800) For a slightly upmarket bamboo-hut experience, this wonderful place has dozens of pretty, Balinese-style huts with handsome interiors of antique wood and painted bamboo. Cooking classes are run nightly (Rs 500), there are culture shows and yoga classes in the Keralan-styled pavilion.

Also recommended:

Parvathy Bhavan (☎ 2602596; d Rs 300-400) An elementary homestay with bare, tiled rooms popular with the ultra-budget brigade.

Holiday Inn (r Rs 300-400) Clean, plain rooms near the tank with – wait for it – holy water straight from the tap!

MIDRANGE

Eden Garden (☎ 2603910; www.eden-garden.net; d Rs 800-1200) Delightfully situated overlooking silent paddy fields, this place has a few small, orderly and well-decorated double rooms set around a lush lilypond. There are dining gazebos on stilts over the pools and an Ayurvedic resort (see above). You'll need to lather yourself in mosquito repellent by night.

Santa Claus Village (☎ 9249121464; www.santaclausvillageresort.com; s Rs 900-1700, d Rs 1400-1900, s/d with AC Rs 2000/2200; ❄ 🏊) Even though the cheesy name is only funny once a year, this place is surprisingly well designed, with traditional Keralan-themed buildings, nice bits of furniture and lots of teak-wood flair. The two deluxe rooms come with huge bay windows facing out to sea.

Green Palace (☎ 2610055; greenpalace@eth.net; s/d from Rs 1000/1200, with AC Rs 2400/3000; ❄) The Palace's rooms, while big and orderly, are nondescript and don't really follow through on the façade's promises of luxury. There's a trim lawn leading down to the cliff edge, illuminated at night by a brash runway of coloured fairylights.

Sea Pearl Chalets (☎ 2605875; seapearlvarkala@hotmail.com; d Rs 1250) Precariously dangling off the southern cliffs of Varkala, these small but charismatic concrete wigwams boast unbeatable views. They're definitely worth checking out before they tumble into the ocean.

Sea Breeze (☎ 2603257; www.seabreezevarkala.com; r Rs 1500, with AC Rs 2500; ❄) The large and orderly rooms in this hefty building all offer great sea views and share a large veranda – perfect for nightly sunset adulation. The friendly owners have their restaurant under a beachside coconut grove.

Also recommended:

Clafouti House (☎ 2601414; www.clafouti.com; d Rs 700-900) Intimate, homey atmosphere, with bright double rooms straight out of the '80s.

Hill Palace (☎ 2610142; www.hillpalace.com; d Rs 800) Chintzy but always clean and freshly painted, with balconies facing the ocean.

Deshadan (☎ 3204242; www.deshadan.com; r incl breakfast Rs 3000; 🏊 ❄) In a notable, burnt-red complex with rooms decorated in themes from regions of India.

TOP END

Villa Jacaranda (☎ 2610296; www.villa-jacaranda.biz; d Rs 3300-4400) The ultimate in understated luxury, this romantic retreat has several huge, bright, beautiful rooms with balconies, individually decorated with a chic blend of modern and period touches. Front rooms have sea views; the roof-terrace room is really impressive.

Taj Garden Retreat (☎ 2603000; www.tajhotels.com; r US$120-145; ❄ 💻 🏊) Luxury, '80s-style: this opulent but slightly dated resort has big rooms, an Ayurvedic centre, bar and health club. The Sunday lunch buffet (12.30pm to 3pm; Rs 400) is deservedly popular – particularly since you get to use the pool. Cocktails all round, then!

Eating

Restaurants in Varkala are open from around 7.30am to midnight and offer pretty much the same mix of Indian, Asian and Western fare. It's best to join in the nightly Varkala cliff-side saunter till you find a place that suits your mood.

Oottupura Vegetarian Restaurant (mains from Rs 30) Bucking the trend and serving only veggie options, this great budget restaurant has a respectable range of dishes, including breakfast puttu (wheat and coconut flour with milk, bananas and honey, Rs 35).

Juice Shack (juices Rs 50, snacks Rs 30-100; 7am-7.30pm) A funky little health-juice bar that doubles as Varkala's own intranet, where long-termers come to gossip and share the latest news the old way.

Kerala Coffee House (breakfast/mains around Rs 50/100) With oodles of atmosphere and top service, this perennially popular hang-out has tableclothed dining under the swaying palms (221 days since the last coconut-related injury at time of writing). It serves cocktails (around Rs 70) and has particularly tasty pizzas (Rs 70 to 90), all served to a dancy, reggae soundtrack.

Johnny Cool Café (meals Rs 60-150) Run by dreadlocked hipster Manu, this place serves superb Western and Indian food – but be warned, it may take a while to come out. Quite a while if Manu has to run down to the market to grab ingredients. It's always worth the wait, however; there's no set menu so just turn up and ask what's going.

Trattoria (meals Rs 70-150) This friendly and efficient Tibetan-managed place does some of the most consistently well-prepared Western food in town (lasagne in particular, Rs 80 to 105). Meals from the other directions of the compass ain't bad either.

Also recommended:

Sathram (Temple Junction; meals Rs 20-30) Eat with the autorickshaw drivers at this no-frills Keralan diner.

Caffe Italiano (meals Rs 40-200) Leafy, vine-side dining.

Amantha (thalis Rs 30, meals Rs 50-100) A tiny, barely standing family-run hut.

Culinary adventurers should ask around town about certain Varkalan households that prepare outstanding home-cooked meals on request.

Drinking

Although most of the places along the cliff aren't licensed, most will serve beer (around Rs 70), sometimes in a discreet teapot and with a watchful eye for patrolling police.

Entertainment

Kathakali performances are organised during December and January; look out for signs advertising location and times.

Getting There & Away

There are frequent trains to Trivandrum (2nd class/AC chair Rs 24/142, 45 minutes) and Kollam (Rs 20/142, 35 minutes), and three a day to Alleppey (Rs 38/155, two hours). It's easy to get to Kollam in time for the morning backwater boat to Alleppey (see the boxed text, p982). From Temple Junction, four daily buses go to/from Trivandrum (Rs 36, 1½ hours) and one express bus goes to Kollam at 11.15am (Rs 34, one hour). Many slower buses also head to Kollam, or alternatively you can catch a bus or autorickshaw to the highway junction 7km away for more frequent express buses rumbling north.

Getting Around

An autorickshaw between the train station and the beach is Rs 30 to 40, a taxi about Rs 60. Beware that many drivers will try to shoehorn you into the hotel that pays them the highest commission – it's often best to be dropped off at the Helipad and walk to your chosen hotel. Many places along the cliff-top rent Enfields/scooters for Rs 350/250 per day.

KOLLAM (QUILON)

☎ 0474 / pop 379,975

Kollam is a tranquil trading town and the secret southern approach to Kerala's backwaters. One of the oldest ports in the Arabian Sea, it was once a major commerce hub that saw Roman, Arab, Chinese and later Portuguese, Dutch and British traders jostle ships into port, eager to get their hands on spices and the region's valuable cashew crops. The town's shady streets and antediluvian market are worth a wander, and the calm waterways of the surrounding Ashtamudi Lake are still fringed with coconut palms, cashew plantations and traditional villages.

Information

There are a couple of ATMs around town.

Cyber Zone (☎ 2766566; per hr Rs 15; 9.30am-9.30pm) The fastest of the numerous internet cafés at the Bishop Jerome Nagar Complex.

DTPC information centre (☎ 2745625; contact@dtpckollam.com; 8.30am-7pm) Very helpful; near the KSRTC bus stand.

Post office (☎ 2746607)

UAE Exchange (☎ 2751240; Tourist Bungalow Rd; 9.30am-5.30pm Mon-Sat, to 1pm Sun)

Sights

The lively Shrine of Our Lady of Velankanni is dedicated to a patron saint from neighbouring Tamil Nadu. There aren't many places in the world you can see sari-clad Christian iconography worshipped with such Hindu exuberance. On the next street south, the Mukkada Bazaar has been a commercial hub of activity for hundreds of years. Here, spice merchants sit atop bags of bright powders, porters ferry goods deftly on their heads and shop fronts are draped in mysterious herbs (many used for Ayurvedic treatments).

At Kollam Beach you can stroll past picturesque Keralan fishing hamlets, where fishermen mend nets and dozens of fishing boats colour the shoreline. There's a rowdy fish market here, where customers and fisherfolk alike pontificate on the value of the catch of the day – get there early in the morning. The beach is 2km south of town, a Rs 20 rickshaw ride away.

The Police Museum (admission Rs 3; ⌚ 9am-6pm) has a random collection of old uniforms, dusty muskets, and a macabre room displaying photographs of violent-crime victims. It's not for everyone, but the 100-year-old banyan tree sprouting from a well out the back is impressive, and 100% gore-free.

The Pooram festival (April) is held in Kollam annually, while the Ashtamudi Craft and Art festival (December/January) every two years.

Activities

Janakanthi Panchakarma Centre (☎ 2763014; Vaidyasala Nagar, Asraman North; s/d Rs 400/500, with AC Rs 500/750) is a lakeside Ayurvedic resort, 5km from Kollam, popular for its seven- to 21-day treatment packages (seven-day packages start from around Rs 15,000). You can also just visit for a rejuvenation massage and herbal steam bath (Rs 500). A return boat trip from the jetty in Kollam should cost around Rs 300.

Tours

Canoe-boat tours (per person Rs 300; ⌚ 9am & 2pm) through the canals of Munroe Island and across Ashtamudi Lake are organised by the DTPC. On these excellent excursions (with knowledgeable guides) you can observe daily life in this isolated village area, and see kettuvallam (rice barge) construction, toddy (palm beer) tapping, coir-making (coconut fibre), prawn and fish farming, and do some bird-watching and perhaps a quick spice-garden tour.

Sleeping

BUDGET

The DTPC office keeps a list of homestays (d Rs 200-500) in and around Kollam.

Lekshmi Tourist Home (☎ 2741067; Main Rd; s/d Rs 130/200) This primitive pilgrims' lodge may have stained walls and musty rooms, but at least the sheets are clean and there's plenty of light.

Government Guest House (☎ 2743620; d without/with AC Rs 220/240; ❄) Wafting in the remnants of faded grandeur, this Raj relic (3km north of the centre on Ashtamudi Lake) has immense, crumbling rooms with high ceilings and wooden floors. They're a bargain but isolated.

Kodiylil Residency (☎ 9847913832; Main Rd; s/d Rs 300/400, s/d with AC Rs 500/800; ❄) This new hotel brings a desperately needed touch of class to the budget category. Bright red walls are lit by mood lighting, rooms come in shades of lime, and have stylishly modern furniture and TVs. Shame about the complete lack of windows.

MIDRANGE

KTDC Yatri Nivas (☎ 2745538; s Rs 275-330, d Rs 330-500) Though the rooms are run-down and slightly dysfunctional, they're sanitary and all have balconies overlooking the backwaters. A fun taxi-boat ride across the lake is Rs 35.

Hotel Sudarsan (☎ 2744322; Alappuzha Rd; www.hotelsudarsan.com; s Rs 450, s/d with AC from Rs 750/850; ❄) Welcoming but overpriced, all the non-AC rooms in the front wing are spacious but very noisy. The executive rooms at the back (s/d Rs 1400/1650) are smaller and quieter.

Hotel Shah International (☎ 2742362; Tourist Bungalow Rd; r Rs 400-450, d with AC Rs 800-1300; ❄) With a once funky, but now dated, mirrored-ceiling approach to design, this is a slightly shabby and institutional hotel. The big, bright executive rooms (Rs 1300) with AC and bathtub are OK value.

Valiyavila Family Estate (☎ 9847132449; www.kollamlakeviewresort.com; Panamukkom; s/d Rs 1300/1500, deluxe with AC Rs 2300/2500; ❄) The pick of Kovalam's sleeping bunch, this estate crowns a breezy peninsula surrounded by leisurely backwaters on three sides. The enormous rooms have Jacuzzis and lots of windows to enjoy the views, the morning breeze and the extraordinary sight of pert bosoms (belonging to their misshapen sculpture – the 'Goddess of Light'). Call ahead for a boat pick-up or catch one of the nine daily public ferries from Kovalam (Rs 3).

Eating

Fayalwan Hotel (Main Rd; meals Rs 10-40) This is a real Indian working-man's diner, packed to the rafters come lunchtime. There are concrete booths and long benches for sitting and tucking in – try its mutton biryani (Rs 40).

Sree Suprabatham Restaurant (Chinnakkada Rd; meals Rs 20-30) This veg restaurant is popular with local families and there's a remarkable spread of breakfast dishes, especially dosas (from Rs 15).

All Spice (Musaliar Bldgs; mains Rs 30-110; 🕒 lunch & dinner) Desperate for a Western fast-food fix? Burgers (Rs 29 to 55), pizza (Rs 50 to 90), hot dogs (Rs 35) and excellent tandoori items can be followed up with ice-cream desserts – all served in a disconcertingly shiny cafeteria-style atmosphere.

Kedar Restaurant (Alappuzha Rd; mains Rs 35-130) The restaurant at Hotel Sudarsan does good Indian food; the tangy fish curry (Rs 60) is the pick of the bunch.

Also recommended:

Supreme Bakers (Musaliar Bldgs; 🕒 9am-8pm) Selection of Indian and Western cakes and sweets.

Indian Coffee House (Main Rd) Reliable for a decent breakfast and strong coffee.

Vijayalaxmi Cashew Co (Main Rd; 🕒 9.30am-8pm) A major exporter of Kollam's famous cashews; quality nuts are around Rs 250 per 500g.

Getting There & Away

BOAT

See the boxed text, p982, for information on cruises to Alleppey. There are public ferry services across Ashtamudi Lake to Guhanandapuram (one hour) and Perumon (two hours), leaving from the jetty. Fares are around Rs 10 return.

BUS

Kollam is situated on the well-serviced Trivandrum–Kollam–Alleppey–Ernakulam bus route, with superfast/superexpress (sic) buses going every 10 or 20 minutes to Trivandrum (Rs 42, 1½ hours), Alleppey (Rs 52, two hours) and Kochi (Rs 84, 3½ hours). Buses depart from the KSRTC Bus Stand.

TRAIN

There are frequent trains to Ernakulam (2nd class/AC chair Rs 46/177, 3½ hours, 12 daily) and Trivandrum (Rs 31/167, 1¼ hours, nine daily), as well as four daily trains to Alleppey (Rs 33/142, 1½ hours).

Getting Around

Most autorickshaw trips should cost around Rs 20, but drivers will ask for more at night. There's a prepaid stand near Supreme Bakers.

AROUND KOLLAM

Krishnapuram Palace Museum

Two kilometres south of Kayamkulam (between Kollam and Alleppey), this restored palace (☎ 2441133; admission Rs 3; 10am-1pm & 2-5pm Tue-Sun) is a grand example of Keralan architecture. Now a museum, the two-storey palace houses paintings, antique furniture and sculptures. Its renowned 3m-high mural depicts the Gajendra Moksha, or the liberation of Gajendra, the chief of the elephants, as told in the Mahabharata. The Bharni Utsavam Festival is held at the nearby Chettikulangara Bhaghavathy Temple in February/March.

Buses (Rs 22) leave Kollam every few minutes for Kayamkulam. Get off at the bus stand near the temple gate, 2km before Kayamkulam.

ALAPPUZHA (ALLEPPEY)

☎ 0477 / pop 282,727

A slice of Venice in the heart of Kerala, Alleppey is a mix of shady streets set around a grid of canals spilling into the vast watery highways of the region. The most popular place to organise a foray into the backwaters, this is the base for most of the houseboat-action in Kerala (and even more houseboat agents), and home to the famous Nehru Trophy Snake Boat Race. It's worth stopping in Alleppey to soak in some tropical village life before making a beeline for the backwaters.

Orientation

The bus stand and boat jetty are close to each other; the hotels are spread far and wide. The train station is 4km southwest of the town centre. The beach is about 2km west of the city centre; it's a nice, shaded walk, but there's no shelter at the beach itself and swimming is dangerous.

Information

There are several ATMs around town.

Danys Bookshop (☎ 2237828; Hotel Royale Park; 10am-1pm & 5.30-9pm) Has a small but good-quality selection of books about India, and some English fiction.

DTPC Tourist Reception Centre (☎ 2253308; www.alappuzhatourism.com; 8.30am-6pm) Fairly helpful office.

Mailbox (☎ 2339994; Boat Jetty Rd; per hr Rs 40; 8.30am-11.30pm) Internet access.

National Cyber Park (☎ 2238688; YMCA Compound; per hr Rs 30; 10am-10pm Mon-Sat) Internet access.

Tourist Police (☎ 2251161; 24hr)

UAE Exchange (☎ 1800 4259585; cnr Cullan & Mullackal Rds; 9.30am-6pm Mon-Sat, to 1pm Sun) Changes cash and travellers cheques.

Tours

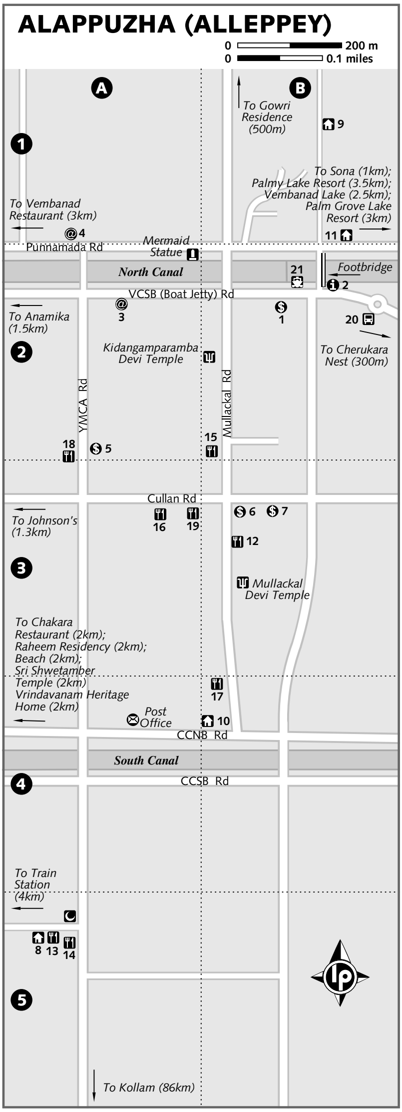
Any of the dozens of travel agencies in town can arrange canoe-boat tours of the backwaters; see also the boxed text, p982.

The DTPC organises motor-boat rental, with several different itineraries possible in the high season (November to March). Boats cost Rs 25 per hour for up to 10 people.

Sleeping

Look out for guesthouse and heritage home accommodation in Alleppey; it's better value and a much nicer choice than the profoundly uninspiring hotels.

There are several relaxed options to stay on the backwaters a few kilometres north of Alleppey; all arrange pick-ups and drop offs from town.



BUDGET

St George Lodgings (☎ 2251620; CCNB Rd; s/d Rs 106/190, with shared bathroom Rs 75/135) It's amazing what a fresh lick of yellow paint can do to a place – this once-grimy cheapie is now eminently sleepable. There are loads of different rooms, but all are very basic. The communal bathrooms have quite a waft.

Vrindavanam Heritage Home (☎ 2263321; Zacharia Bazaar; r Rs 250-550) Definitely the best budget deal around. The better rooms are in a beautifully preserved, 180-year-old home set around a small, luxuriant courtyard garden. The cheaper rooms are in a separate building and are inlaid with bamboo and thatch, have pretty, frilly touches and bright, hand-painted art. It's walking distance to the beach.

Palmy Residency (☎ 2235938; www.geocities.com/palmyresorts; r Rs 300-500) Run by the same super-friendly folk at Palmy Resort, this new little place is very central and has four lovely, quiet rooms of varying size – all with mosquito netting and flyscreens and free bicycles. It's just north of the footbridge.

Gowri Residence (☎ 2236371; www.gowriresidence.com; d from Rs 400, with AC Rs 900;) A friendly heritage home with a selection of spacious and

THE BACKWATERS

The undisputed main attraction of a trip to Kerala is travelling through the 900km network of waterways that fringe the coast and trickle far inland. Long before the advent of roads these waterways were the slippery highways of Kerala, and many villagers today still use paddle-power as transport. Trips through the backwaters cross shallow, palm-fringed lakes studded with cantilevered Chinese fishing nets, and travel along narrow, shady canals where coir (coconut fibre), copra (dried coconut meat) and cashews are loaded onto boats. Along the way are small villages with mosques, churches, temples and schools, villagers going about their daily chores and tiny settlements where people live on narrow spits of reclaimed land only a few metres wide.

Kerala Tourism (www.keralatourism.org) produces a Backwater Map.

Tourist Cruises

The popular cruise between Kollam and Alleppey (adult/student Rs 300/250) departs at 10.30am and arrives at 6.30pm, operating daily from August to March and every second day at other times. Many hotels in Kollam and Alleppey take bookings for one or other of these services; some offer cheaper rates but you'll end up paying the difference on board.

Generally, there are two stops: a 1pm lunch stop (be aware that you'll pay extra for every element over the standard meal!) and a brief afternoon chai stop. The crew has an ice box full of fruit, soft drinks and beer to sell. Bring sunscreen and a hat.

It's a scenic and leisurely way to get between the two towns, but as a backwater experience the cruise is limited by the fact that the boat travels along the major highways of the canal system and you won't see much of the close-up village life that makes the backwaters so magical. Some travellers have reported becoming bored with the eight-hour trip.

Another option is to take the trip halfway (Rs 150) and get off at the Matha Amrithanandamayi Mission (☎ 0476-2896399; www.amritapuri.org; Amrithapuri), the ashram of Matha Amrithanandamayi. One of India's very few female gurus, Amrithanandamayi is known as Amma (Mother) and is called 'The Hugging Mother' because of the darshan (blessing) she practises, often hugging thousands of people in marathon all-night sessions. The ashram runs official tours at 5pm each day, or you may be able to get someone to show you around when you arrive off the boat. It's a huge complex, with around 2000 people living here permanently – monks and nuns, students, Indian families and Westerners. There's food available, Ayurvedic treatments, yoga and meditation, as well as souvenirs from the cult of Amma, everything from books to postcards of her toes. Amma travels around for much of the year, so you might be out of luck if you're after a cuddle.

Visitors should dress conservatively and there is a strict code of behaviour. You can stay at the ashram for Rs 150 per day (including simple vegetarian meals) and pick up an onward or return cruise a day or two later. Alternatively, you can take a (free) ferry to the other side of the canal anytime. From here a rickshaw will take you the 10km to Karunagappally (around Rs 100) and you can take one of the frequent buses from there to Alleppey (Rs 30, 1½ hours).

The DTPC offices in Alleppey (p980) and Kollam (p977) run some sightseeing tours on tourist boats during the high season.

Houseboats

Renting a houseboat designed like a kettuvallam (rice barge) could be one of your most expensive experiences in India, but it's worth every darned rupee. Drifting through quiet canals lined with coconut palms, eating deliciously authentic Keralan food, meeting local villagers and sleeping on the water under a galaxy of stars – it's a world away from the clamour of India.

Houseboats cater for groups (with up to eight bunks) or couples (one or two double bedrooms). Food (and an onboard chef to cook it) is generally included in the quoted cost. The houseboats can be chartered through the DTPC in Kollam or Alleppey, or through a multitude of private operators.

This is the biggest business in Kerala and some operators are unscrupulous. The boats come in a range of qualities, from veritable rust buckets to floating palaces – try to lay eyes on the boat you'll be travelling in before agreeing on a price. Make sure that everything (eg food) has been included in your price.

Travel-agency reps will be pushing their boats as soon as you set foot in Kerala and most of the bad experiences we hear about are from people who booked their trip outside the backwater hub towns. Your choice is greater in Alleppey (350 boats and counting!), but it's also the more popular base and you're quite likely to get caught in something approaching backwater-gridlock there in the high season.

It's possible to travel by houseboat between Alleppey and Kollam, or between Alleppey and Kochi, over 24 hours but only on larger boats that operate an inboard motor. These larger boats not only cost more but aren't as environmentally friendly. Those that are propelled by punting with two long bamboo poles obviously don't allow you to cover as much distance (no more than 15km in 24 hours, usually a round trip from Alleppey), but can be a wonderfully relaxing way to travel.

Prices are hugely variable. Expect a boat for two people for 24 hours to cost anything from Rs 3500. Shop around outside the high season to negotiate a bargain; in the peak season you'll definitely pay more.

Village Tours & Canoe Boats

Village tours usually involve small groups of five to six people, a knowledgeable guide and an open canoe or covered kettuvallam. The tours (from Kochi, Kollam or Alleppey) are from 2½ to six hours in duration and cost around Rs 300 to 600 per person. They include visits to villages to watch coir-making, boat building, toddy (palm beer) tapping and fish farming, and on the longer trips a traditional Keralan lunch is provided. The Munroe Island trip from Kollam (see p978) is an excellent tour of this type; the tourist desk in Ernakulam also organises recommended tours (see p1006).

In Alleppey, rented canoe boats offer a nonguided laze through the canals on a small, covered canoe for up to four people (Rs 600 for four hours) – the ultimate way to spend a relaxing afternoon.

Public Ferries

If you want the local backwater transport experience, or a shorter trip, there are State Water Transport boats between Alleppey and Kottayam (Rs 12, 2½ hours, five boats daily from 7.30am to 5.30pm). The trip crosses Vembanad Lake and has a more varied landscape than the Alleppey cruise.

Environmental Issues

Environmental problems, such as pollution, land reclamation, and industrial and agricultural development, seriously threaten the backwaters and the communities that live on their banks. It's estimated that the backwaters are only at one-third of their mid-19th-century levels. Many migratory birds no longer visit the backwaters. Another very obvious problem is the unhindered spread of water hyacinth (African moss or Nile cabbage), which clogs many stretches of the canals.

Pollution from houseboat motors is becoming a real problem as their numbers swell every season. The Keralan authorities have introduced an ecofriendly accreditation system for houseboat operators. Among the categories an operator must fulfil before being issued with the 'Green Palm Certificate' are the installation of solar panels and sanitary tanks for the disposal of waste, as well as trying to minimise the use of outboard motors. Although the system is still new, ask operators whether they have the requisite certification. There's been talk of running boats on cleaner natural gas, though we've yet to see this being implemented. Seriously consider choosing a punting, rather than motorised, boat.

Punnamada Lake, close to the starting point of the Nehru Cup race, this is an upmarket option, with stylish cottages in natural materials with secluded verandas, outdoor showers and perfect patio views of the lake.

Raheem Residency (☎ 2239767; www.raheemresidency.com; Beach Rd; s/d from €117/130;) The top-end option of choice, this is a romantic, architecturally acclaimed refurbishment of an 1860s mansion. All rooms have bathtubs, dashing antique furniture and appropriate period fixtures. The common areas are airy and comfortable, and there's a thoughtfully stocked library.

Also recommended:

Cherukara Nest (☎ 2251509; lakes_lagoon@satyam.net.in; d Rs 550, with AC Rs 1200;) Gracious, century-old family home, with roomy doubles and lots of character. Breakfast included.

Anamika (☎ 242044; www.anamikahome.com; VCSB (Boat Jetty) Rd; d incl breakfast Rs 1500-2000) Elegant Syrian Christian home with four massive, breezy rooms, agreeable furniture and lamp lighting.

Eating

Hot Kitchen (Mullackal Rd; thali Rs 22-28) This place comes highly recommended for veg meals and South Indian breakfasts – it gets packed at lunchtime.

Vembanad Restaurant (AS Rd; mains Rs 30-150) At the Alleppey Prince Hotel, it's well worth making the trip out here. One of the better eating options around, you can dine pool side to live music (nightly from 6.30pm).

Kream Korner (Mullackal Rd; dishes Rs 40-80) This place has two locations with a relaxed atmosphere and is popular with Indian and foreign families. There's a multicuisine menu with tandoori choices, and the cold coffee with ice-cream (Rs 22) beats a frappuchino any day

Royal Park Hotel (YMCA Rd; meals Rs 45-210;) Excellent food is served up in this swish hotel's restaurant, and it has the same menu in the upstairs licensed bar, so you can have a Kingfisher with your tasty butter chicken masala (Rs 70).

Chakara Restaurant (☎ 2230767; Beach Rd; 3 courses €12; lunch & dinner) The restaurant at Raheem Residency is the most expensive, and best, place in town. The menu is creative and combines elements of traditional Keralan and European cuisine. Grover's Estate wine is available at Rs 990 per bottle.

Also try:

Indian Coffee House (Mullackal Rd & YMCA Rd; snacks Rs 4-12)

Hotel Aryas (Collectorate Rd; meals Rs 12-20) Has a cheap veg restaurant.

Sree Durga Bhavan Udipi Hotel (Cullan Rd; thali Rs 24) Veg food and more thalis.

Getting There & Away

BOAT

Ferries run to Kottayam from the jetty on VCSB (Boat Jetty) Rd; see p983.

BUS

There are frequent services that operate along the Trivandrum–Kollam–Alleppey–Ernakulam route, with buses to Trivandrum (Rs 90, 3½ hours, every 20 minutes) also stopping at Kollam and Kochi (Rs 36, 1½ hours). Buses to Kottayam (Rs 28, 1¼ hours, every 30 minutes) are considerably faster than the ferry.

TRAIN

There are frequent trains to Ernakulam (2nd class/AC chair Rs 28/142, 1½ hours) and Trivandrum (Rs 47/180, three hours).

NEHRU TROPHY SNAKE BOAT RACE

This famous regatta on Vembanad Lake in Alleppey takes place on the second Saturday of August each year, with scores of giant, low-slung chundan vallam (snake boats) competing. Each boat is over 30m long with a raised, snaking prow, and is crewed by up to 100 rowers singing in unison and shaded by gleaming silk umbrellas. Watched avidly by thousands of cheering spectators, the annual event celebrates the seafaring and martial traditions of ancient Kerala with floats and performing arts.

Tickets entitle you to seats on bamboo terraces, which are erected for the races. Prices range from Rs 75 to 500 for the best seats in the Tourist Pavilion, which offers views of the finishing point and separates you from gatherings of rowdy men. Take food, drink and an umbrella.

Other less famous but no less spectacular boat races are held around the backwaters between June and September. Ask at any KTDC office for details.

AROUND ALLEPPEY

Kerala's backwaters snake in all directions from Alleppey, and while touring on a houseboat is a great experience, taking time to slow down and stay in a village can be even more rewarding.

A mere 10km from Alleppey, and run by the erudite and ever-helpful Thomas, Greenpalm Homes (☎ 2724497, 9495557675; greenpalms@sifi.com; Chennamkary; s/d/tr with full board Rs 1000/1500/1750) is a series of bucolic homestays that seems like a universe away. Set in a typical and ridiculously picturesque backwater village, you sleep in basic rooms in villagers' homes among the rice paddies. Your hosts double as guides to the village and its traditions, and will prepare three Keralan meals a day. It's wonderfully quiet, there are no roads in sight and you can rent bicycles (Rs 20/100 per hour/day), take canoe trips (Rs 150) or ask about cooking classes.

To get here, call ahead and catch one of the hourly ferries from Alleppey to Chennamkary (Rs 5, 1¼ hours). Please remember this is a traditional village; dress appropriately.

KOTTAYAM

☎ 0481 / pop 172,867

Sandwiched between the Western Ghats and the backwaters, Kottayam is more renowned for being Kerala's centre of the spice and rubber trade than for its aesthetic appeal. It's a good place to make a connection between these two regions, or to pop into the pretty backwater village of Kumarakom.

Kottayam is a bookish town: the first Malayalam-language printing press was established here in 1820 and it was the first district in India to achieve 100% literacy. Today it's home to the newspaper Malayala Manorama (with the second-largest circulation in India) and is the headquarters of DC Books, Kerala's excellent bookshop chain. A place of churches and seminaries, Kottayam was a refuge for the Orthodox church when the Portuguese began forcing Keralan Christians to switch to Catholicism in the 16th century (see the boxed text right).

The Thirunakkara Utsavam Festival is held in March at the Thirunakkara Shiva Temple.

Orientation & Information

The KSRTC bus stand is 1km south of the centre, the boat jetty a further 2km (at Kodimatha), while the train station is 1km north of Kottayam. There are a couple of ATMs in Kottayam.

DC Books Heritage Bookshop (☎ 2300501; Good Shepherd St; 9.30am-7.30pm Mon-Sat) Excellent collection of literature, philosophy and culture titles.

DTPC office (☎ 2560479; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) At the boat jetty.

Sify iWay (☎ 2563418; KK Rd; per hr Rs 25; 8.30am-8.30pm Mon-Sat) Fast internet connections.

UAE Exchange (☎ 2303865; 1st fl, MC Rd; 9.30am-6pm Mon-Sat, 9.30am-12.30pm Sun) For changing cash or travellers cheques.

Sleeping

Accommodation for all budgets is pretty dire. Try checking for homestays (☎ 2560479; around Rs 500-1000) at the DTPC office, but most of these will be outside town.

Ambassador Hotel (☎ 2563293; KK Rd; s/d from Rs 200/250, d with AC Rs 600;) Definitely the pick of the budget litter, the rooms are spartan but speckless, spacious and quiet. There's a bakery, an adequate restaurant and a huge painting of the Last Supper to greet you in the lobby.

Hotel Venad (☎ 2568012; MC Rd; s/d Rs 250/300) Venad's rooms are central, a little weathered and depressingly dark. It's do-able for a night's rest, though street-facing rooms will have to contend with the racket of the street.

Hotel Aida (☎ 2568391; MC Rd; s/d Rs 350/700, with AC Rs 500/850;) Looking like a very lost ski-chalet

SYRIAN CHRISTIANS IN SOUTH INDIA

Tradition has it that Christianity was first brought to India in the first century, when St Thomas (one of the original apostles) found his way to the subcontinent and evangelised a family of Brahmins. With strong early ties to the Middle East, Christians in Kerala aligned themselves with the Syrian Patriarch from around the 4th century onwards.

The 16th century brought the Portuguese to Kerala, along with missionaries eager to convert locals to their Roman brand of Catholicism. Then the arrival of the Anglican British in the 18th century led to further challenges to India's unique Christianity. Today, small communities of Syrian Christians still survive in Kerala, professing a faith that dates all the way back to one adventurous apostle.

from the outside, the rooms inside are comfortable, but on the dark and dowdy side.

Pearl Regency (☎ 2561123; www.pearlregencyktm.com; MC Rd; s/d from Rs 1200/1400; ❄ 💻) A slick new business-focused contender, this place has roomy, but boring, abodes. It's all run very efficiently, and there's an internet centre, coffee shop and restaurant on site. It's good value.

Windsor Castle (☎ 2363637; www.thewindsorcastle.net; MC Rd; s/d Rs 2500/3000, cottages Rs 5000; ❄ 🏊) This grandiose carbuncle of a building has the best rooms in Kottayam – minimally furnished, spacious and with bathtub – but they're still overpriced. Luxurious cottages are strewn around lake-side grounds, with Chinese fishing nets for the snaphappy.

Eating

Hotel Suryaas (TB Rd; dishes Rs 10-30; ❄) Packed at mealtimes, this popular eatery serves North and South Indian food as well as the ubiquitous thali (Rs 35).

Hotel Green Park (Nagampadon; meals Rs 30-90; ❄) The restaurant at this hotel serves up great Indian victuals, both veg and nonveg, in either its fan room or in AC comfort.

Meenachil (2nd fl, KK Rd; Rs 40-80; 🕑 lunch & dinner) With a friendly family atmosphere, this tidy, modern place does good biryanis, veg and nonveg dishes, and tandoori, to the sound of cheesy muzak.

Nalekattu (MC Rd; dishes Rs 60-125; 🕑 lunch & dinner) The traditional Keralan restaurant at the Windsor Castle is in an open-walled pavilion and serves delicious Keralan specialities, such as chemeen (mango curry, Rs 125) and tharavu (duck in rich coconut gravy, Rs 110).

Also try:

Indian Coffee House (TB Rd) We just can't get enough of this South Indian institution.

Hotel Basant (TB Rd; meals Rs 22) Popular lunchtime place with set meals.

Getting There & Away

BOAT

Ferries run to Alleppey; see p983.

BUS

The KSRTC bus stand has buses to Trivandrum (Rs 86, four hours, every 20 minutes) and Kochi (Rs 44, two hours, every 30 minutes). There are also buses to Kumily for Periyar Wildlife Sanctuary (Rs 66, four hours, every 30 minutes) and Munnar (Rs 92, 5½ hours, five daily). Private buses, which are a little faster and more comfortable, depart from the Nagambaram (New) Bus Stand for Kochi (Rs 37, 1½ hours, every 15 minutes) and Kumily (Rs 63, every hour).

TRAIN

Kottayam is well served by express trains running between Trivandrum (2nd class/3AC/2AC Rs 50/251/399, three hours, 10 daily) and Ernakulam (Rs 28/188/266, 1½ hours, 12 daily).

Getting Around

An autorickshaw from the jetty to the KSRTC bus stand is around Rs 30, and from the bus stand to the train station about Rs 20. Most trips around town cost Rs 15.

AROUND KOTTAYAM

Kumarakom

Kumarakom, 16km west of Kottayam and on the shore of Vembanad Lake, is an unhurried backwater town with a smattering of resplendent, top-end sleeping options. You can arrange houseboats through Kumarakom's less-crowded canals, but expect to pay considerably more than in Alleppey.

Arundhati Roy, author of the 1997 Booker Prize–winning The God of Small Things, was raised in the nearby Aymanam village.

SIGHTS

Kumarakom Bird Sanctuary (☎ 2525864; Indian/foreigner Rs 5/45; 🕑 6am-5.30pm) is on the 5-hectare site of a former rubber plantation and is the haunt of a variety of domestic and migratory birds. October to February is the time for travelling birds, such as the garganey teal, osprey, marsh harrier and steppey eagle, while May to July is the breeding season for local species, such as the Indian shag, pond herons, egrets and darters. Early morning is the best viewing time.

Buses between Kottayam's KSRTC stand and Kumarakom (Rs 8, 30 minutes, every 15 minutes) stop at the entrance to the sanctuary.

SLEEPING

Mooleppura Guest House (☎ 2525980; r without/with AC Rs 600/1100;) If you are on a budget, this has small, bucolic rooms in a friendly family home 500m south of the sanctuary entrance.

Tharavadu Heritage Home (☎ 2525230; www.tharavaduheritage.com; r without/with AC Rs 1200/1800;) Tharavadu means 'large family house', an apt description. Rooms are in the perfectly restored, 1870s teak family mansion, or in individual, creekside cottages. All are well crafted, some with glistening teak-wood beams, and others with big bay windows and relaxing patios. It's 4km before the bird sanctuary

Taj Garden Retreat (☎ 2524377; retreat.kumarakom@tajhotels.com; s/d US$150/160, cottage r US$245, villa US$385;) The height of secluded luxury, this excellent resort has rooms in a lovingly restored colonial house, cottages on a private lagoon in extensive grounds and luxury villas on the lake. It's right next door to the bird sanctuary, so wannabe ornithologists don't have to leave their porch.

Coconut Lagoon (☎ 2524491, reservations 0484-2668221; coconutlagoon@cghearth.com; cottages US$190-375;) This sprawling resort has beautiful tharawad (ancestral home) cottages. There's a list of activities as long as your arm, including cooking classes, traditional music lessons and village walks. It's reachable by boat from the private jetty just north of the sanctuary entrance. This place might seem familiar to those who have read Arundhati Roy's The God of Small Things.

Ettumanur

The Shiva Temple at Ettumanur, 12km north of Kottayam, has inscriptions dating from 1542, but parts of the building may be even older than this. The temple is noted for its exceptional woodcarvings and murals similar to those at Kochi's Mattancherry Palace. The annual festival, involving exposition of the idol (Shiva in his fierce form) and elephant processions, is held in February/March.

Sree Vallabha Temple

Devotees make offerings at this temple, 2km from Tiruvilla, in the form of traditional, regular all-night Kathakali performances that are open to all. Tiruvilla, 35km south of Kottayam, is on the rail route between Ernakulam and Trivandrum.

Vijnana Kala Vedi Cultural Centre

This French-run centre (☎ 0468-2214483; www.vijnanakalavedi.org; Tarayil Mukku) at Aranmula, 10km from Chengannur, offers highly recommended courses in Indian arts with expert teachers. You can choose to study from a range of 15 subjects, including Ayurveda, Kathakali or Kathakali make-up, mohiniattam and bharatanatyam (classical dances), Carnatic or percussive music, mural painting, Keralan cooking, languages (Malayalam, Sanskrit and Hindi) and kalarippayat. Classes are generally individual and are held for a minimum of three hours per day, Monday to Friday.

Fees, which include lessons, accommodation in the village and all meals, are US$230/650 per week/month – less for longer stays. You can volunteer to teach English to children in the village schools, which will entitle you to a discount on your fees. Short stays of one to three nights are also possible (US$32 per night), though you will need to book well ahead.

The Aranmula Boat Race is held here in August/September.

THE WESTERN GHATS

PERIYAR WILDLIFE SANCTUARY

☎ 04869

Periyar (☎ 224571; www.periyartigerreserve.org; Indian/foreigner Rs 25/300; 6am-6pm), South India's most popular wildlife sanctuary, encompasses 777 sq km, with a 26-sq-km artificial lake created by the British in 1895. It's home to bison, sambar, wild boar, langur, over 1000 elephants and at least 46 tigers. This is an established tourist spot, and can sometimes feel like Disneyland-in-the-Ghats, but the mountain scenery on the road up, the lake cruise and a jungle walk make for an enjoyable visit. Bring warm and waterproof clothing.

Orientation

Kumily, 4km from the sanctuary, is a small strip of hotels, spice shops and Kashmiri emporiums. Thekkady is the centre inside the park with the KTDC hotels and boat jetty. When people refer to the sanctuary, they tend to use Kumily, Thekkady and Periyar interchangeably.

Information

DC Books (☎ 222548; 8.30am-9.30pm) Has a small but decent-quality selection of fiction and books about India.

DTPC office (☎ 222620; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) Behind bus stand.

IR Communications (per hr Rs 40; 7am-10pm)

Spider-Net Cafe (☎ 223727; per hr Rs 40; 9.30am-9.30pm)

State Bank of Travancore (10am-3.30pm Mon-Fri, to 12.30pm Sat) Changes travellers cheques and currency; the ATM accepts foreign cards.

Wildlife Information Centre (☎ 222028; 6am-6pm) Above the boat jetty in Thekkady.

Wildlife Interpretation Centre (7.30am-7.30pm) This excellent centre at Spice Village (see p998) has a resident naturalist showing slides between 7.30pm and 9.30pm and answering questions about the park. Guests and diners at its restaurant can attend free of charge.

Sights & Activities

VISITING THE PARK

Two-hour KTDC boat trips (lower/upper deck Rs 45/100; 7am, 9.30am, 11.30am, 2pm & 4pm) around the lake are the usual way of touring the sanctuary. The boat trip itself is enjoyable enough, though any wildlife you see will be from afar. The smaller, more decrepit Forest Department boats (per person Rs 15; 9.30am, 11.30am, 2pm & 4pm) offer a chance to get a bit closer to the animals, and are driven by sanctuary workers who may offer some commentary. Entry to the park doesn't guarantee a place on the boat; get to the ticket office (6.30am-5.30pm) one hour before a scheduled trip to buy tickets (no advance reservations). The first and last departures offer the best wildlife-spotting prospects, and October to March are generally the best times to see animals.

Guided three-hour jungle walks (per person Rs 100; 7am, 10.30am & 2pm) cover 4km or 5km and are a better way to experience the park close up, accompanied by a trained tribal guide. Note that leeches are common after rain.

A number of more adventurous explorations of the park can be arranged by the Ecotourism Centre (☎ 224571; 8am-6pm). These include two-/three-day 'tiger trail' treks (per person Rs 3000/5000), full-day hikes (per person Rs 1000), three-hour night treks (per person Rs 500) and full-day bamboo rafting (per person Rs 1000) on the lake. See www.periyartigerreserve.org for more information on what's available.

A small outfit called Tribal Heritage Tour (per person Rs 100 8am-4pm) does engaging 1½-hour tours through Mannakudy tribal village inside the sanctuary (you will need your park day-ticket). The walk includes a visit to the small village museum, which has some old tools and paintings done by villagers.

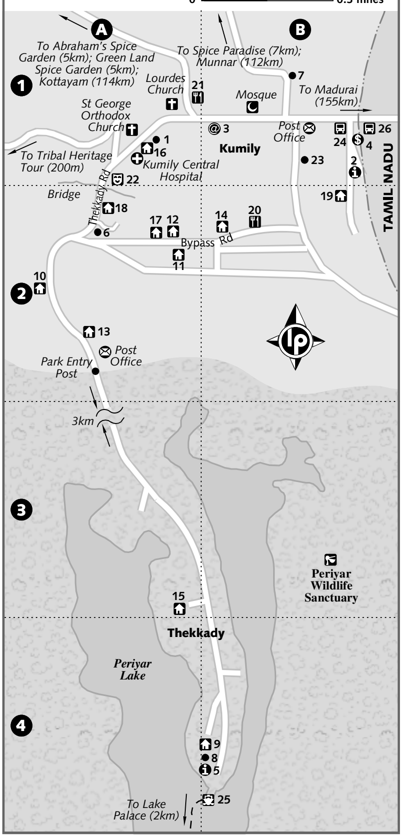
Agencies around town arrange all-day 4WD Jungle Safaris (per person Rs 1500; ⏰ 5am-6pm), which cover over 40km of trails in jungle bordering the park. Tours include meals as well as a paddleboat trip. You can arrange elephant rides (per 30 min Rs 250) at Indian Spices (☎ 222868; Thekkady Rd).

SPICE GARDENS & PLANTATIONS

Spice tours (costing around Rs 400/600 by autorickshaw/taxi and lasting two to three hours) can be arranged anywhere and are really insightful if you get a knowledgeable guide. Spice gardens are small domestic gardens, whereas plantations are bigger commercial affairs where you may also see harvesting and processing. If you want to see a tea factory in operation (worth it for the smell alone), do it here – tea-factory visits are not permitted in Munnar.



If you'd rather do it independently, you can visit a few excellent spice gardens several kilometres from Kumily: Abraham's Spice Garden (☎ 222919; ⏰ 6.30am-7.30pm) has been going for 54 years and does one-hour tours of their 1-hectare garden for Rs 50. At Spice Paradise (☎ 222868; ⏰ 7am-7pm) there is a 4-hectare garden interplanted with Ayurvedic herbs among the usual spices. Two-hour tours are Rs 100.

AYURVEDA

One highly recommended place for the Ayurvedic experience is Santhigiri Ayurveda (☎ 223979; Vandanmedu Junction), offering both massage (from Rs 500) and long-term treatments.

Sleeping & Eating

INSIDE THE SANCTUARY

The Ecotourism Centre can arrange accommodation in a forest cottage (d with meals Rs 2000).

The KTDC has three hotels in the park. It's a good idea to make reservations (at any KTDC office), particularly for weekends. Note that there's effectively a curfew at these places – guests are not permitted to wander the sanctuary after 6pm.

Periyar House (☎ 222026; periyar@sancharnet.in; s/d with breakfast & dinner from Rs 800/1250) This faux-brick, school camp–like complex has plain, slightly musty and definitely overpriced rooms.

Aranya Nivas (☎ 222023; aranyanivas@sancharnet.in; s/d from Rs 3100/3950;) Bright, clean abodes in an imposing, pseudo-stone building with token period touches. There are no real views, but the pool is in a lush forest setting.

Lake Palace (☎ 222023; aranyanivas@sancharnet.in; s/d ste with all meals Rs 6750/7850) The only place where you can stay in the midst of the sanctuary and view elephants over breakfast, this is an appealingly restored former game lodge with a Raj-era ambience. Transport is only by boat across the lake. Make reservations through Aranya Nivas.

KUMILY

There's a growing homestay scene in Kumily offering better bang-for-your-rupee than the town's uninspiring hotels.

Green View Homestay (☎ 211015; www.sureshgreenview.com; Bypass Rd; s Rs 150, d incl breakfast Rs 300-600) With loads of greenery, there are great large and airy doubles here, all with balconies and small sitting areas – though the singles are tiny. The garden out the back has hammocks to laze in and the hosts are very friendly.

our pick Coffee Inn (☎ 222763; coffeeinn@sancharnet.in; Thekkady Rd; huts/cottages Rs 200/250, r Rs 400-500) This is a charming, friendly place with a range of simple accommodation, from cute bamboo huts and tree houses to comfortable cottages and nicely finished rooms. Best of all, it abuts the sanctuary and it has its own secluded animal-spotting hut. Their restaurant is also top-notch.

Mickey Homestay (☎ 223196; www.mickeyhomestay.com; Bypass Rd; r Rs 250-600) In a fetching and lush family house, the five rooms here come in all shapes, sizes and configurations. All have homey touches and massive balconies with rattan furniture and hanging bamboo seats. Ask about long-distance trekking and mountain-biking adventures (including a jungle walk all the way to Alleppey!).

Leelapankai (☎ 9349197934; Thekkady Rd; r Rs 700) Leelapankai's dainty, individual thatched-roof cottages sit up on a hill overlooking the sanctuary. They're plain on the inside, but the views of the park from the porches and restaurant are first rate.

Prime Castle (☎ 223469; Thekkady Rd; d Rs 850-1200) In a gaudy pink complex, the rooms inside are well maintained, spacious and many have chichi bathrooms. The budget annexe (Rs 100 per person) has small, dark, cheap rooms.

El Paradiso (☎ 222350; www.goelparadiso.com; Bypass Rd; r Rs 950) El Paradiso has fastidiously neat, massive rooms in a large and welcoming family-house complex. All have homely touches and balconies with hanging bamboo. Ask about Keralan cooking instruction.

Spice Village (☎ 222314; spicevillage@cghearth.com; Thekkady Rd; villa s US$190-250, d US$200-250, breakfast/lunch/dinner Rs 300/500/500;) This place has captivating, spacious cottages in beautifully kept grounds. All the facilities (including the Raj-style bar with billiard table) are open to nonguests. The restaurant does lavish buffets, and if you come for dinner you can also attend a Keralan cooking demonstration and listen to its Wildlife Interpretation Centre talk (see p988).

Also recommended:

Rose Cottage (☎ 223146; r Rs 200-500) Next door to Green View, this is a good homestay.

Victoria House (☎ 222684; homestaythekkady@emailworld.com; Rosappukandam; r Rs 300) Huge plain rooms with hot water, TVs, and very friendly staff.

There are plenty of good cheap veg restaurants in the bazaar area.

Chrissie's Café (Bypass Rd; snacks Rs 30-60, meals Rs 100-120) A perennially popular haunt that continues to satisfy travellers with yummy cakes and snacks, and extremely well-prepared Western faves like pizza and pasta. Try the spinach lasagne (Rs 120).

Jungle Café (meals Rs 40-80) With views into the sanctuary jungle, this budget eatery is great for a masala dosa (curried vegetables in pancake) breakfast (Rs 18), pancakes (Rs 30) or traditional South Indian fare.

Coffee Inn (meals Rs 60-120) This laid-back restaurant, in a peaceful spice-garden setting, serves just a few expertly prepared Indian and Western meals. Dishes are all made fresh and take a while – but the patient are well rewarded. Cheeky monkeys from the neighbouring sanctuary often make guest appearances.

You can also try Hotel Lakeshore (dishes Rs 20-60), a local favourite for veg and nonveg dishes.

Entertainment

Mudra (☎ 9447157636; admission Rs 125; ⏲ shows 4.30pm & 7pm) Kathakali shows twice a day; make-up starts 30 minutes before the show begins.

Getting There & Away

Buses originating or terminating at Periyar start and finish at Aranya Nivas, but they also stop at the Kumily bus station, at the eastern edge of town.

Eight buses daily operate between Kochi and Kumily (Rs 98, six hours). Buses leave every 30 minutes for Kottayam (Rs 66, four hours), and there are two direct buses daily to Trivandrum at 8.45am and 5pm (Rs 148, eight hours). Four morning buses and one afternoon bus go to Munnar (Rs 68, 4½ hours).

Tamil Nadu buses leave every 30 minutes to Madurai (Rs 40, four hours) from the Tamil Nadu bus stand just over the border.

Getting Around

Kumily is about 4km from Periyar Lake; you can catch the bus (almost as rare as the tigers), take an autorickshaw (Rs 40) or set off on foot; it's a pleasant, shady walk into the park. Bicycle rental (per hr Rs 4; ⏲ 6.30am-8pm) is available from a couple of shacks near the bus stand.

MUNNAR

☎ 04865 / elev 1524m

With a Sound-of-Music-in-India backdrop of rolling mountain scenery, craggy peaks, manicured tea estates and crisp mountain air, Munnar really hits the spot after the sticky heat of the lowlands. Once known as the High Range of Travancore, today Munnar is the commercial centre of some of the world's highest tea-growing estates. But don't be fooled by the noisy and grubby namesake town of the region; the real attractions lie in the surrounding hills.

Information

There are ATMs near the bridge, south of the bazaar.

DTPC Tourist Information Office (☎ 231516; ⏲ 8.30am-7pm) Marginally helpful.

State Bank of Travancore (☎ 230274; ⏲ 10am-3.30pm Mon-Sat, to noon Sun) Changes travellers cheques.

Tourist Information Service (☎ 231136; ⏲ 9am-6pm) Run by local legend Joseph Iype, a walking Swiss-army knife of Munnar information, this office has maps, local history, travel tips and much more.

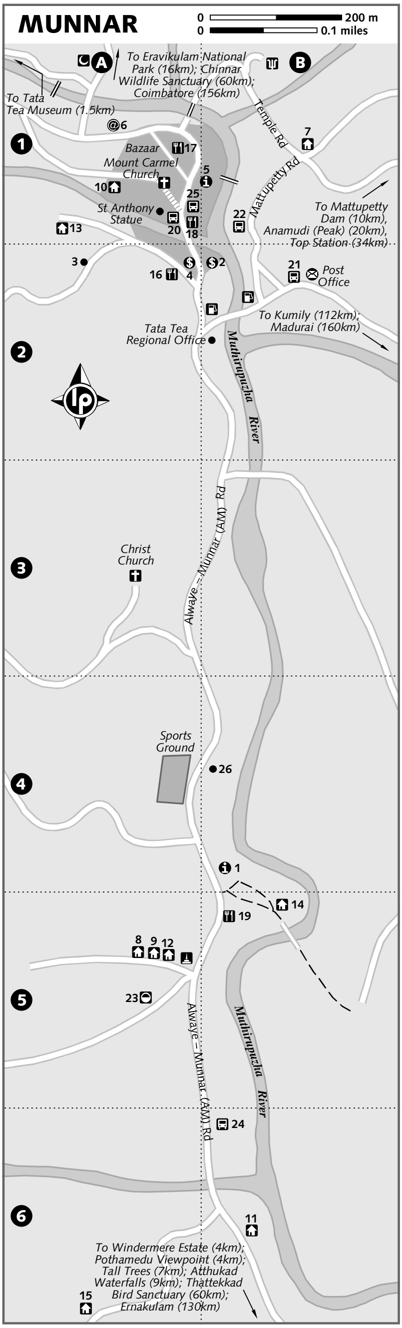
Triveni Communications (☎ 230966; per hr Rs 40; ⏲ 8am-10pm) New computers put this place a nose ahead of some sad competition.

Sights & Activities

The main reason to be in Munnar is to explore the verdant hillocks that surround it (see below for tour options). Travel agencies and autorickshaw drivers, as well as most passers-by, want to organise a day of sightseeing for you; shop around. The DTPC can organise half-day, full-day and two- to four-day treks around Munnar.

You can do your own 12km day-trek around the patchwork of plantations surrounding Munnar to visit the Pothamedu Viewpoint and the roaring Atthukad Waterfalls. Head south on the road towards Ernakulum, cross the bridge just after the government checkpoint, take a right and continue up the road. Take a path leading to the viewpoint just after Copper Castle Resort. Continue on to the waterfalls, from where you can take a shortcut back to the Ernakulum–Munnar Rd and either walk, or catch one of the frequent buses, back to Munnar. A rickshaw to the waterfalls or to the viewpoint and back costs Rs 150.

Tata Tea Museum (☎ 230561; adult/child Rs 50/25; ⏲ 10am-4pm Mon-Sat) is, unfortunately, about as close as you'll get to a working tea factory around Munnar. It's a slightly sanitised and deserted version of the real thing, but it still shows the basic process. A collection of old bits and pieces from the colonial era, including photographs and a 1905 tea-roller, are also kept here.



Tours

The DTPC runs a couple of fairly rushed full-day tours to points around Munnar:

Chinnar Wildlife Tour (per person Rs 300; ⏲ 9am-7pm) Goes to Chinnar Wildlife Sanctuary (p1001).

Sandal Valley Tour (per person Rs 300; ⏲ 9am-6pm) Visits several viewpoints, waterfalls, plantations, a sandalwood forest and villages.

Tea Valley tour (per person Rs 250; ⏲ 10am-6pm) Visit Echo Point, Top Station and Rajamalai (for Eravikulam National Park), among other places.

Sleeping

There are several cheap-and-nasty hotels right in Munnar town, but these are best avoided. Prices are a bit higher than in comparable Indian towns, though there are several neat homestay and top-end options around.

Kaippallil Homestay (☎ 230203; www.kaippallil.com; r Rs 200-800) Up the hill and away from (most of) the clatter of the bazaar, Kaippallil has several unique rooms in an attractively landscaped house. There are inviting sitting areas and the rooms are eclectically but tastefully decorated, some with balconies and great views. The budget rooms share bathrooms and are a tad dark.

SMM Cottage (☎ 230159; r Rs 350-500) Right next to JJ Cottage and Green View, this brisk homestay will do if the others are full.

JJ Cottage (☎ 230104; d Rs 350-800) The mothering family at this genial homestay will go out of their way to make sure your stay is comfortable. The varied and uncomplicated rooms are very clean, bright and have TV and geyser hot water.

Green View (☎ 230940; www.greenviewmunnar.com; r Rs 500-600) Next door to JJ Cottage, this offers the same thing with less attentive staff.

Zina Cottages (☎ 230349; d incl tax Rs 600-800) Just on the outskirts of town but already immersed in lush tea plantations, these cosy rooms are an excellent deal. Stunning vistas come standard, as does the piles of information provided by gregarious owner Mr Iype from the Tourist Information Service (see p999).

Westwood Riverside Resort (☎ 230884; www.westwoodmunnar.com; AM Rd; r Rs 1800-2600) You might be forgiven for thinking you'd stumbled onto a ski lodge. There's lots of polished wood around and the rooms are refreshingly pleasant for a cookie-cutter standard, midrange hotel.

Edassery Eastend (☎ 230451; www.edasserygroup.com; Mattupetty Rd; cottages Rs 1950-2300) With a Disneyland-perfect miniature garden, these blandly comfortable and spacious rooms are probably a tad overpriced.

You can also try:

Westend Cottages (☎ 230954; d Rs 250-450, with shared bathroom Rs 250) A few darkish but clean doubles in a friendly family home.

Royal Retreat (☎ 230240; www.royalretreat.co.in; r Rs 1200-1500) Comfortable rooms; OK value by Munnar's standards.

There are some excellent top-end accommodation options in plantations in the hills around Munnar, where the mountain serenity is unbeatable.

Tall Trees (☎ 230641; Pothamedu; cottages Rs 4500-5500) Spread around thick forest and far away from the clamour of the world, this back-to-nature retreat has comfy cottages with natural-wood finishes, each with balconies opening to infinite nature views. There's a kids' playground and sprawling grounds dotted with cardamom trees. It's 7km from Munnar.

Windermere Estate (☎ 230512; www.windermeremunnar.com; Pothamedu; r & cottages incl breakfast US$125-195) Windermere is a boutique-meets-country-retreat and manages to be both luxurious and intimate at the same time. There are farmhouse rooms and newer, swankier cottages with spectacular views. Book ahead.

Eating

Early morning food stalls in the bazaar serve breakfast snacks and cheap meals.

Hotel Saravan Bhavan (dishes Rs 15-50) Try this popular place for top-value veg banana-leaf meals (Rs 18).

SN Restaurant (AM Rd; meals Rs 20-80) This seems to always be full of people digging into morning dosas (Rs 15 to 25) and other Indian dishes. The butter chicken is outstanding (Rs 60).

Rapsy Restaurant (Bazaar; dishes around Rs 25-40) This place is packed at lunchtime, with locals lining up for Rapsy's famous paratha or biryani (from Rs 25). It also makes a stab at international dishes like Spanish omelette (Rs 25) and Israeli shakshuka (scrambled eggs with tomatoes and spices Rs 30).

Silver Spoon (AM Rd; meals Rs 40-100; ⌚ lunch & dinner) Beneath the Munnar Inn, this popular family eatery has some tables overlooking the river and a great Keralan fish-curry meal, with 12 all-you-can-eat dishes to savour (Rs 60).

Getting There & Away

Roads around Munnar are in poor condition and can be seriously affected by monsoon rains, so bus times may vary. The main KSRTC bus station (AM Rd) is south of the town, but it's best to catch buses from stands in town, where more frequent private buses also depart. See Map p1000 for bus departure locations.

There are around 10 buses a day to Ernakulam in Kochi (Rs 84, 4½ hours), and a few daily services to Kottayam (Rs 92, five hours), Kumily (Rs 68, five hours) and Trivandrum (Rs 176, nine hours). There are Tamil Nadu buses to Coimbatore (Rs 80, six hours, two daily) and Madurai (Rs 88, six hours, one daily at 2.30pm).

Getting Around

Raja Cycles (per hr Rs 8; ⌚ 8.30am-7.30pm) rents bicycles. Gokulam Bike Hire (☎ 9447237165; per day Rs 250; ⌚ 7.30am-7pm) has several motorbikes for rent.

Autorickshaws ply the hills around Munnar with bone-shuddering efficiency; they charge from Rs 150 to nearby places and up to Rs 650 for a full day's sightseeing.

AROUND MUNNAR

Eravikulam National Park (Indian/foreigner Rs 15/200; ⌚ 7am-6pm Sep-May), 16km from Munnar, is home to the rare, but almost tame, Nilgiri tahr (a type of mountain goat). From Munnar, an autorickshaw/taxi costs Rs 150/300 return; a government bus takes you the final 4km from the checkpoint (Rs 20).

Chinnar Wildlife Sanctuary (⌚ 7am-6pm), about 10km past Marayoor and 60km northeast of Munnar, hosts deer, leopards, elephants and the endangered grizzled giant squirrel.

Trekking (Rs 100 for three hours) and tree house or hut stays (huts Rs 500-1000) within the sanctuary are available, as well as ecotour programs like river-trekking, cultural visits, and waterfall treks (Rs 35 to Rs 100). For details contact the Forest Information Centre (☎ 231587; enpmunnar@sify.com; 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) in Munnar. There is also accommodation in Marayoor. Buses from Munnar heading to Coimbatore can drop you off at Chinnar (Rs 28, 1½ hours).

Top Station, on Kerala's border with Tamil Nadu, has spectacular views over the Western Ghats. From Munnar, four daily buses (Rs 25, from 7.30am) make the steep 32km climb in around an hour. Taxis (Rs 800) and rickshaws (Rs 400) also make the return trip from Munnar.

Thattekkad Bird Sanctuary (Indian/foreigner Rs 10/100; 6am-6pm) is a serene 25-sq-km park, home to over 270 species, including Malabar grey hornbills, parakeets, jungle nightjar, cuckoo, grey drongo, jungle babbler, darters and rarer species, such as the Sri Lankan frogmouth and rose-billed roller. You can rent private guides (Rs 150 to 200) in the sanctuary, and there's a canteen with basic food and drinks just inside the gate. There's a Treetop Machan (dm Rs 900) in the sanctuary that you can stay in; contact the assistant wildlife warden (☎ 0485-2588302) at Kothamangalam. Otherwise, Hornbill Inspection Bungalow (☎ 0484-2310324; www.thehornbillcamp.com; s/d Rs 900/1800) has basic rooms outside the sanctuary, though you might be better off asking around about homestays (around Rs 600 including meals).

Thattekkad is on the Ernakulam–Munnar road. Take a direct bus from Ernakulam to Kothamangalam, from where a Thattekkad bus travels the final 12km (Rs 6, 25 minutes).

PARAMBIKULAM WILDLIFE SANCTUARY

Resting in a deep valley around the Parambikulam, Thunakadavu and Peruvaripallam Dams, Parambikulam Wildlife Sanctuary (Indian/foreigner Rs 25/100; 7am-6pm) extends for 285 sq km. It's home to elephants, bison, gaur, sloth bears, wild boars, sambar, chital, crocodiles, tigers, panthers and some of the largest teak trees in Asia. There's also an elephant camp at Kozhikamthi and you can go boating on the reservoir. The sanctuary is best avoided during monsoon (June to August) and it sometimes closes in March and April.

For entry to the sanctuary, permission is required from the divisional forests officer (☎ 04253-244500) at Thunakadavu. Three-hour jeep tours (Rs 750) are available and short treks can also be organised from here.

There are Forest Rest Houses at Thunakadavu, Thellikkal and Anappady, and a tree-top hut (d Rs 1000) at Thunakadavu; book through the divisional forests officer.

The best access to the sanctuary is by bus from Pollachi (40km from Coimbatore and 49km from Palakkad) in Tamil Nadu. There are at least two buses in either direction between Pollachi and Parambikulam via Anamalai daily (Rs 15, 1½ hours).

CENTRAL KERALA

KOCHI (COCHIN)

☎ 0484 / pop 1.36 million

If you listen closely, you can hear the collective sigh breathed by travellers upon setting foot in laid-back Fort Cochin. Kochi has been luring wanderers and traders for over 600 years and remains a living homage to its varied colonial past: giant fishing nets influenced by Chinese merchants, a 16th-century synagogue, ancient mosques, Portuguese houses built half a millennia ago and the crumbling residuum of the British Raj. The result is an unlikely blend of medieval Portugal, Holland and an English country village grafted on to the tropical Malabar Coast. It's a delightful place to spend some time, soak in the history, peruse art galleries and nap in some of the finest heritage accommodation in India.

Mainland Ernakulam is the hectic transport hub and cosmopolitan heart of Kerala, where neon lights and upmarket chainstores rule the roost. The historical towns of Fort Cochin and Mattancherry, however, are wonderfully serene – thick with the smell of the past and with more goats than rickshaws patrolling the streets.

Orientation

Kochi is made up of a gaggle of islands and peninsulas, including mainland Ernakulam; the islands of Willingdon, Bolgatty and Gundu in the harbour; Fort Cochin and Mattancherry on the southern peninsula; and Vypeen and Vallarpadam Islands, north of Fort Cochin. All are linked by ferry, with bridges connecting Ernakulam to Willingdon Island and the Fort Cochin/Mattancherry peninsula; the new Goshree bridge links Ernakulam with Bolgatty, Vallarpadam and Vypeen Islands. The main train station, the bus stand and KTDC Tourist Reception Centre are in Ernakulam, while Fort Cochin and Mattancherry have all the historical sites and most of the better-value accommodation.

TOURIST INFORMATION

There's a tourist information counter at the airport. Many places distribute a brochure that includes a passable map and walking tour entitled 'Historical Places in Fort Cochin'.

Government of India Tourist Office (Map p1004; ☎ 2668352; indtourismkochi@sify.com; Willingdon Island; 9am-5.30pm Mon-Fri, to 1pm Sat) A huge range of brochures and maps of India.

KTDC Tourist Reception Centre (Map p1008; ☎ 2353234; Shanmugham Rd, Ernakulam; 8am-7pm) Organises tours.

Tourist Desk Information Counter Ernakulam (Map p1008; ☎ 2371761; touristdesk@satyam.net.in; 8.30am-6pm); Fort Cochin (Map p1004) A private agency at the main ferry jetty in Ernakulam that is very knowledgeable about Kochi and beyond.

Tourist police Ernakulam (Map p1008; ☎ 2353234); Fort Cochin (Map p1004; ☎ 2215055)

Sights

FORT COCHIN

The tip of Fort Cochin is strung with the unofficial emblem of Kerala's backwaters: cantilevered Chinese fishing nets (Map p1004). A legacy of traders from the court of Kubla Khan in around the 1400s, these enormous, spider-like contraptions require at least four men to operate the counterweights – they're mainly used at high tide. Unfortunately, modern fishing techniques are making the nets less and less profitable.

Said to be India's oldest European-built church, St Francis Church (Map p1004) was constructed in 1503 by Portuguese Franciscan friars. The church's original wooden structure was rebuilt in stone around the mid-16th century. Vasco da Gama, who died in Cochin in 1524, was buried on this spot for 14 years before his remains were taken to Lisbon; you can still visit his tombstone in the church.

The Indo-Portuguese Museum (Map p1004; ☎ 215400; Indian/foreigner Rs 10/25; 9am-1pm & 2-6pm Tue-Sun), in the garden of the Bishop's House, preserves the heritage of one of India's earliest Catholic communities, including vestments, silver processional crosses and altarpieces from the Cochin diocese. The basement contains remnants of the Portuguese Fort Immanuel.

The Dutch Cemetery (Map p1004), consecrated in 1724, contains the worn and dilapidated graves of Dutch traders and soldiers; ask at St Francis Church if you want to have a look around.

The imposing Catholic Santa Cruz Basilica (Map p1004) was originally built on this site in 1506, though the current building dates to 1902. Inside you'll find artefacts from the different eras in Cochin and a striking, pastel-coloured interior.

MATTANCHERRY PALACE

Built by the Portuguese in 1555, Mattancherry Palace (Dutch Palace; Map p1004; ☎ 2226085; Bazaar Rd; admission Rs 2; ⏲ 10am-5pm Sat-Thu) was presented to the raja of Cochin, Veera Kerala Varma (1537–61), as a gesture of goodwill (and probably as a means of securing trading privileges). The Dutch renovated the palace in 1663, hence its alternative name, the Dutch Palace.

The star attractions here are the astonishingly preserved Hindu murals, depicting scenes from the Ramayana, Mahabharata and Puranic legends in intricate detail. The central hall on the 1st floor, once a coronation hall, is now a portrait gallery of maharajas from 1864. There's an impressive collection of palanquins (hand-carried carriages), bejewelled outfits and splendidly carved ceilings in every room. The ladies' bedchamber downstairs features a cheerful Krishna using his six hands and two feet to engage in foreplay with eight happy milkmaids.

Photography is prohibited.

PARDESI SYNAGOGUE & JEW TOWN

Originally built in 1568, the synagogue (Map p1004; admission Rs 2; ⏲ 10am-noon & 3-5pm Sun-Fri, closed Jewish holidays) was destroyed by the Portuguese in 1662 and rebuilt two years later when the Dutch took Kochi. It features an ornate gold pulpit and hand-painted, willow-pattern floor tiles from China. It's magnificently illuminated by chandeliers and coloured-glass lamps. The graceful clock tower was built in 1760. There is an upstairs balcony for women who worshipped separately according to Orthodox rites.

The synagogue is smack bang in the middle of Jew Town, a bustling port area and centre of the Kochi spice trade. Scores of small firms huddle together in old, dilapidated buildings and the air is filled with the biting aromas of ginger, cardamom, cumin, turmeric and cloves. These days, the lanes right around the Dutch Palace and the synagogue are filled with antique and tourist curio shops rather than pungent spices. Look out for the Jewish names on some of the buildings.

ART GALLERIES

Kochi is a leader in encouraging contemporary local artists.

Chitram Art Gallery (Map p1003; ☎ 2374012; MG Rd, Ernakulam; ⏲ 9.30am-8pm Mon-Sat) Has a few excellent pieces by both well-known and emerging Indian artists.

Draavidia Art & Performance Gallery (Map p1004; ☎ 3296812; Bazaar Rd; ⏲ 10am-6pm) Shows off art by Keralan artists in an airy upstairs gallery. It also holds classical music concerts for Rs 100 from November to March at 6pm.

Kashi Art Gallery (Map p1004; ☎ 215769; Bazaar Rd, Mattancherry; ⏲ 10am-6pm) Changing exhibitions, local artists, often experimental.

Lila Studio (Map p1004; www.anandagaya.com; Bazaar Rd; ⏲ 10am-6pm Mon-Sat) Mostly showing works by co-director, painter and sculptor Gayatri Gamuz.

Activities

SWIMMING

Nonguests can swim in the garden pool of Casino Hotel (Map p1003; Willington Island; per person Rs 250). For a dip in the ocean, you can make a day trip to the attractive Cherai beach on Vypeen Island (see p1014).

AYURVEDA

Ayur Dara (☎ 2502362; www.ayurdara.de; Murikkumpadam, Vypeen Island; 1-/7-day treatment incl lunch Rs 1000/7000; ⏲ 9am-5pm) Run by a world-renowned Ayurvedic practitioner, it's 4km from the Vypeen Island ferry (autorickshaw Rs 30). Appointment necessary.

Cochin Ayurvedic Centre (Map p1004; ☎ 2217103; fort_hs@yahoo.com; Santa Cruz School Rd, Fort Cochin; massage treatment from Rs 500; ⏲ 9am-7pm) Recommended Ayurvedic massage and treatment.

Kerala Ayurveda Chikitsa Kendram (Map p1008; ☎ 2376916; Kannanthodathu Lane, Ernakulam; rejuvenation massage Rs 500, steam bath Rs 200; ⏲ 9.30am-5.30pm) Full range of treatments available.

Courses

Mrs Leelu Roy runs a highly recommended class called Cook & Eat (Map p1004; ☎ 2215377; simonroy@hotmail.com; Quiros St; class Rs 400; ⏲ 11am & 6pm) in a great big family kitchen. Several homestays also run cooking demonstrations for guests – ask around.

The Kerala Kathakali Centre (see p1012) has lessons in classical Kathakali dance, music and make-up (from Rs 350 per hour).

Tours

The private Tourist Desk Information Counter runs a full-day backwater tour (Rs 550) on a houseboat through the wider canals and lagoons, and a canoe through the small canals and villages. Lunch and hotel pick-up are provided. See the boxed text, p983, for more information.

The KTDC runs half-day backwater tours (Rs 350) at 8.30am and 2.30pm, and tourist boat tours around Fort Cochin (Rs 100) at the same times. It also has full-day backwater trips (Rs 650) at 8.30am, where you stop to see local weaving factories, spice gardens and most importantly toddy (palm beer) tapping!

Festivals & Events

The eight-day Ernakulathappan Utsavam festival culminates in a procession of 15 decorated elephants, ecstatic music and fireworks.

Sleeping

Fort Cochin is a great place to escape the noise and chaos of the mainland – it's tranquil and romantic, with superior accommodation choices. Budget-priced rooms, however, are becoming rarer each season. Ernakulam is buzzing, and more convenient for onward travel, but accommodation is uninspiring. Book well ahead during December and January.

BUDGET

Fort Cochin

Oy's Homestay (Map p1004; ☎ 2215798; oyshomestay@yahoo.com; Burgher St; s Rs 150-400, d Rs 250-500) Oy's has a warren of eclectic and funky rooms. They run the whole gamut from big, bright and cheery to small, dark and dreary.

Princess Inn (Map p1004; ☎ 2217073; princessinnfortkochi@gmail.com; Princess St; s Rs 250, d Rs 350-550) A shining example of what a fresh lick of paint can do: sprucing up what would otherwise be dull, small rooms with cheery bright colours, comfy communal spaces and spotless bathrooms. Great value.

Spice Holidays Homestay (Map p1004; ☎ 2216650; spiceholidays@yahoo.com; Burgher St; s/d from Rs 350/500) The friendly owners here more than make up for the plain rooms, which lack window real estate. The courtyard and welcoming sitting area is a plus.

Vasco Homestay (Map p1004; ☎ 2216267; vascoinformations@yahoo.co.uk; Rose St; d Rs 400-700) The longtimer has just two subdivided rooms in an elegant Portuguese mansion, thought to be the house where Vasco da Gama died. Its corner room is sensational value: it's enormous, has poster beds with mosquito netting, a few simple decorations and bay windows looking onto St Francis church.

Green Woods Bethlehem (Map p1004; ☎ 3247791; greenwoodsbethlehem1@vsnl.net; opp ESI Hospital; r Rs 400-800, with AC Rs 1000; ❄) This excellent option is in a residential area enclosed in its own, thick jungle of plants and palms, 1½km south of Fort Cochin. There are a few humble, but extremely cosy, rooms, top-floor ones with bird's eye-to-eye views of the treetops. The family (who look ready to adopt everyone who walks through the door) often cook enough dinner for everyone to join in. Breakfast on their inviting rooftop is included and they often hold cooking classes/demonstrations.

You can also try:

Elite Hotel (Map p1004; ☎ 2215733; elitejoy@yahoo.com; Princess St; s Rs 350, d Rs 400-800) An old-school backpacker favourite, the plain rooms are barely OK value these days.

Vintage Inn (Map p1004; ☎ 2215064; www.vintageresorts.in; Residale Branch Rd; s Rs 300-500, d Rs 600-800, d with AC Rs 1200; ❄) Away from the action, with clean, bright and roomy but unexciting digs.

Ernakulam

Piazza Residency (Map p1008; ☎ 2376508; Kalathiparambil Rd; s Rs 170-250, d Rs 240-370) Rooms here are carpeted and a little tattered, but come in a variety of sizes and have tolerable wooden furniture.

Sapphire Tourist Home (Map p1008; ☎ 2381238; Cannon Shed Rd; d Rs 275-325) Close to the main boat jetty, this place has cheerful, bright rooms – not bad value at this price.

Maple Tourist Home (Map p1008; ☎ 2355156; Cannon Shed Rd; d Rs 285-450, with AC Rs 680; ❄) This place has solid-value rooms right near the boat stations. Some are still fresh and sparkling clean from a refurbishment, and all come with TV.

Bijus Tourist Home (Map p1008; ☎ 2361661; www.bijustouristhome.com; Market Rd; s/d from Rs 325/420, d with AC Rs 800; ❄) A friendly, ever-popular choice, handy for the main jetty. Rooms are smart, simple and comfy, and the place is efficiently run

MIDRANGE

Fort Cochin

Walton's Homestay (Map p1004; ☎ 2215309; cewalton@redffmail.com; Princess St; r Rs 800-1000) You'll be in good care with the affable Waltons as your hosts. They have big and light rooms, all white with blue trim, a lush garden out the back and a second-hand bookshop downstairs. They also have a big garden cottage with AC (Rs 1500 to 1800).

Ann's Residency (Map p1004; ☎ 2218024; www.annsresidency.com; Post Office Rd; r Rs 1000-1850, with AC Rs 1850-2300; ❄) A friendly homestay that has 11 varied and bright rooms, all with poster beds and mosquito nets. There's an open-air restaurant and some rooms have balcony views looking onto the school classes next door.

Spencer Home (Map p1004; ☎ 2215049; spencerhomestyfc@rediffmail.com; Parade Ground Rd; d Rs 1200) This handsomely restored heritage home has snug rooms around a quiet garden courtyard – complete with huge Chinese fishing net. Check out the amazingly intricate gold antique lock on one of the doors.

Delight Home Stay (Map p1004; ☎ 2217658; www.delightfulhomestay.com; Post Office Rd; r Rs 1200-1500, with AC Rs 2500;) Delightful it is. There are many uniquely styled rooms, all beautifully remodelled and immediately alluring. There's frilly white woodwork all around, a trim garden and an imposing sitting room covered in wall-to-wall polished teak. Keralan cooking classes are held here.

Raintree Lodge (Map p1004; ☎ 3251498; www.fortcochin.com; Peter Celli St; r Rs 1800;) The intimate and comfortable rooms have an agreeable blend of modern and period odds and ends. Try to get an upstairs room with a balcony looking onto the quiet street.

Also recommended:

Kapithan Inn (Map p1004; ☎ 2226560; www.kapithaninn.com; s/d from Rs 600/750, cottages Rs 1800-3000;) Quiet and pleasant, with bright, restful rooms.

Ballard Bungalow (Map p1004; ☎ 2215854; www.cochinballard.com; River Rd; d Rs 1200, with AC Rs 2200;) A gorgeous colonial building with airy, spacious rooms. Price includes breakfast.

Ernakulam

Respectable midrange options in Ernakulam are few and far between.

Hotel Aiswarya (Map p1008; ☎ 2364454; Warriam Rd; s/d Rs 400/600, d with AC Rs 900;) Top marks for its central location and a respectable score its for clean, bright rooms. This is a fair midrange choice.

Paulson Park Hotel (Map p1008; ☎ 2378240; www.paulsonparkhotel.com; Carrier Station Rd; s/d from Rs 500/800, with AC Rs 900/1200;) Right near the station, this spick-and-span, quiet place boasts a fantasy-inspired indoor garden (was that a unicorn?). The cheaper rooms are minimalist, but the pricier rooms have just enough decoration to make them feel welcoming.

Hotel Excellency (Map p1008; ☎ 2378251; www.hotelexcellency.com; Nettipadam Rd; s/d from Rs 600/700, with AC Rs 900/1000;) It feels a little like a hospital but rooms are neat and very tidy. Look at a few rooms; some are bigger than others.

Yuvarani Residency (Map p1008; ☎ 2377040; www.yuvaraniresidency.com; MG Rd; s/d from Rs 850/1000, with AC Rs 1250/1600;) Even though all that glitters is not gold here, the rooms are perfectly comfortable and finished with all the stylish darkwood fixtures your heart might desire. It's set back from MG Rd enough to shield the noise, making it the best midrange choice in town.

Mattancherry & Jew Town

Caza Maria (Map p1004; ☎ 2225678; cazamaria@rediffmail.com; Jew Town Rd; r with breakfast Rs 1600 & 1900) Right in the heart of Jew Town, this place has just two magnificently decorated, gigantic rooms overlooking the bazaar. Fit for a maharaja, it definitely has idiosyncratic style.

TOP END

Fort Cochin

Malabar House (Map p1004; ☎ 2216666; www.malabarhouse.com; Parade Ground Rd; r €175, ste €250-300, incl breakfast;) If you have money to burn, let this be your pyre. What may just be the best boutique hotel in India, Malabar flaunts its uber-hip blend of modern colours and period fittings like it's not even trying. The suites are huge and lavishly appointed, although the standard rooms could use more space.

Brunton Boatyard (Map p1004; ☎ 2215461; bruntonboatyard@cghearth.com; River Rd; r US$275, ste US$385;) This imposing hotel faithfully reproduces 16th- and 17th-century Dutch and Portuguese architecture in a grand 26-room complex. All of the smallish rooms look out over the harbour, and have bathtub and balconies with a refreshing sea breeze that's better than AC. There are two restaurants and a bar; breakfast is included.

Around Cochin

our pick Olavipe Homestay (☎ 0478-2522255; www.olavipe.com; Olavipe; s/d incl meals Rs 5000/6500) This gorgeous 1890s traditional Syrian-Christian home is on a 16-hectare farm surrounded by backwaters, 28km south of Cochin. A restored mansion of rosewood and glistening teak, it has several large and breezy rooms – all wonderfully finished with original period décor (only the ceiling fans are new). There are lots of shady awnings and sitting areas, a fascinating archive with six generations of family history, and the gracious owners will make you feel like a welcome friend rather than a guest. You can visit nearby backwater villages from here, use their paddle boat, or help out with the working shrimp farm or plant pollination. A taxi to/from Fort Cochin is Rs 600 to 700.

Eating & Drinking

Covert beer consumption is de rigueur at most of the Fort Cochin restaurants, and more expensive in the licensed ones (Rs 80 to 165).

FORT COCHIN

In some places you can blow a night's accommodation on a single dish, but with some genuinely interesting food on offer you'll get the urge to splurge.

Teapot (Map p1004; Peter Celli St; snacks Rs 30-50, meals Rs 150) This stylish haunt is the perfect venue for high tea, with quality teas, sandwiches and full meals served in chic minimalist, airy rooms. Witty accents include antique teapots, old tea chests for tables and a gnarled, tea tree–based glass table. The death by chocolate (Rs 50) is truly coco homicide, trust us.

Solar Café (Map p1004; Bazaar Rd; meals Rs 30-75; 10am-6pm) This arty and funky café at Draavidia Gallery (p1006) serves up breakfast and lunch in a brightly coloured and friendly setting. It has some upstairs veranda seats overlooking the hubbub of the street below.

Talk of the Town (Map p1004; cnr KB Jacobs Rd & Bastion St; meals Rs 30-120) Upstairs, casual and breezy, don't miss out on the cheap and expertly prepared Indian dishes whipped up here.

Kashi Art Café (Map p1004; Burgher St; breakfast/lunch Rs 70/75; 8.30am-7pm) Something of an institution, this place has a hip-but-casual vibe, along with hip-but-casual service. The coffee is as strong as it should be, and the daily Western breakfast and lunch specials are excellent. You can fill plastic water bottles for Rs 5 per litre, and a small gallery shows off local artists.

Old Courtyard (Map p1004; ☎ 2216302; Princess St; mains from Rs 160) Seafood focused, the small but thoughtful international menu is well executed – Spanish-style beef (Rs 250) and baked mussels (Rs 150) get our vote.

Malabar Junction (Map p1004; ☎ 2216666; Parade Ground Rd; mains Rs 300-1000) Set in an open-sided pavilion, this classy restaurant at Malabar House is movie-star cool. There's a seafood-based, European-style menu and Grover's Estate (quaffable, Indian) wine by the bottle (Rs 1200) or glass (Rs 250).

Also recommended:

New Ananda Bhavan (Map p1004; River Rd; dishes Rs 11-35) Herbivores: make a beeline for this basic but spotless veggie restaurant.

Salt 'n' Pepper (Map p1004; Tower Rd; dishes Rs 35-120; 24 hr) Superbly average food, but the street-side tables bustle nightly with punters having a special-teapot tipple (Rs 80).

History Restaurant (Map p1004; ☎ 2215461; River Rd; mains Rs 350-425) At the Brunton Boatyard, this restaurant has a marvellous historical menu tracing Kochi's Jewish, Syrian, Arabic and Portuguese history.

Behind the Chinese fishing nets are a couple of fishmongers (Map p1004; seafood per kg Rs 50-300), from whom you can buy fish (or prawns, scampi, lobster), then take your selection to a shack where they will cook it and serve it to you (about Rs 40 per kilogram of fish).

ERNAKULAM

Spices Food Joint (Map p1008; Cannon Shed Rd; dishes Rs 7-35; 5am-12pm) A family-run hole-in-the-wall restaurant captained by the gregarious Sherief. The cheap veg, chicken and meat biryanis (Rs 18 to 35), as well as fish-curry meals (Rs 15), are deservedly popular.

Frys Village Restaurant (Map p1008; Veekshanam Rd; dishes Rs 15-70; ⌚ lunch & dinner) This cafeteria-like family restaurant is the best place in town for authentic Keralan food, especially seafood, such as fish pollichathu and crab roast (both Rs 65).

City Park Restaurant (Cannon Shed Rd; dishes Rs 60-90) City Park has a well-prepared and varied menu (Indian, Chinese, continental). The masala tea is especially tangy (Rs 8).

Chinese Garden (Warriom Rd; dishes Rs 75-150; ⌚ lunch & dinner) Good Chinese food served in a plush-red, moodily lit interior.

Other options:

Spencer's Daily (Veekshanam Rd; ⌚ 7.30am-10.30pm) Well-stocked supermarket.

Indian Coffee House (Cannon Shed Rd) Also has branches on Jos Junction and MG Rd near Padma Junction.

Coffee Beanz (Shanmugham Rd; breakfasts Rs 20-60; ⌚ lunch & dinner; ❄) For a hip coffee hit.

Pizza Hut (Durbar Hall Rd; medium pizza Rs 90-120; ⌚ lunch & dinner) For when the junk-food cravings win. Delivery is available.

MATTANCHERRY & JEW TOWN

Ramathula Hotel (Map p1004; Lobo Junction, Mattancherry; biryani Rs 22-38; ⌚ lunch & dinner) This place is legendary among locals for its chicken and meat biryanis – get here early or you'll miss out. It's better known by the chef's name, Kayee.

Caza Maria (Map p1004; ☎ 2225678; Boat Jetty Rd; mains from Rs 100-200; ⌚ lunch & dinner) Run by a Frenchman, this is an enchanting space with good music but slightly bland food. There's a small menu of Indian and a few French dishes (poisson à la Provençale, Rs 140). Service is great and the ambience delightful.

Entertainment

CINEMAS

Shenoy Cinema (Map p1008; Shanmugham Rd, Ernakulam; tickets Rs 40) Screens films in Malayalam, Hindi, Tamil and English.

KATHAKALI

There are several places in Kochi where you can view Kathakali (see the boxed text, below).

TRADITIONAL KERALAN ARTS

Kathakali

The art form of Kathakali crystallised at around the same time as Shakespeare was scribbling his plays, though elements of it stem from 2nd-century temple rituals. The Kathakali performance is the dramatised presentation of a play, usually based on the Hindu epics the Ramayana, the Mahabharata and the Puranas. All the great themes are covered – righteousness and evil, frailty and courage, poverty and prosperity, war and peace.

Drummers and singers accompany the actors, who tell the story through their precise movements, particularly mudras (hand gestures) and facial expressions. Traditionally, performances took place in temple grounds and went from 8pm until dawn; now shorter performances in other open-air locales, as well as indoor halls, are also popular.

Preparation for the performance is lengthy and disciplined. Paint, fantastic costumes, highly decorated headpieces and meditation transform the actors both physically and mentally into the gods, heroes and demons they are about to play.

You'll can see cut-down performances in tourist hot spots all over the state, and there are Kathakali schools in Trivandrum (see p966) and near Thrissur (see p1017) that encourage visitors. Many temple festivals across the state feature traditional all-night Kathakali shows; ask at DTPC offices.

Kalarippayat

Kalarippayat is an ancient tradition of martial training and discipline. Still taught throughout Kerala, some believe it is the forerunner of all martial arts. Its roots can be traced back to the 12th century, when skirmishes among the many feudal principalities in the region were common.

Masters of kalarippayat, called Gurukkal, teach their craft inside a special arena called a kalari. The kalari is part gymnasium, part school and part temple. Its construction follows traditional principles: its rectangular design is always aligned east–west and Hindu deities are represented in each corner.

Kalarippayat movements – the foundation of choreography that uses the actors' bodies and gestures as the primary tools of expression – can be traced in Kerala's performing arts, such as Kathakali and kootiattam (traditional Sanksrit drama), and in ritual arts such as theyyam.

The performances are certainly made for tourists, but they're also a great introduction to this intriguing art form. The standard programme starts with the intricate make-up application, followed by a commentary on the dance and then the performance. All places charge around Rs 125.

See India Foundation (Map p1008; ☎ 2376471; Kalathiparambil Lane, Ernakulam; make-up 6pm, show 6.30-8pm) One of the oldest Kathakali theatres in Kerala, it has small-scale shows with an emphasis on the religious and philosophical roots of Kathakali.

Art Kerala (Map p1008; ☎ 2375238; Kannanthodath Lane, Ernakulam; make-up 6pm, show 7-8.15pm) Started in 1977, this place stages rooftop performances and provides a printout of the night's story.

Kerala Kathakali Centre (Map p1004; ☎ 2215827; www.kathakalicentre.com; River Rd, Fort Cochin; make-up 5pm, show 6.30-8pm) This place stages big, showy performances. It provides useful printed translations of the night's story. Classes in classical dance, music and make-up (from Rs 350 per hour) are also available.

Shopping

Broadway in Ernakulam (p1008) is good for local shopping, spice shops, clothing and a bazaar feel. Around Convent and Market Rds there's a huddle of tailors, and on and around Market Rd, between Jew and Press Club Rds, is the textiles centre. On Jew Town Rd in Mattancherry (Map p1004), there's a plethora of shops selling antiques and reproductions. Many shops in Fort Cochin operate lucrative commission rackets, with rickshaw drivers getting huge kickbacks (which are added to your price) just for dropping tourists at the door.

Kairali (Map p1008; ☎ 2354507; MG Rd, Ernakulam; 9am-8pm Mon-Sat) This is one of many handicraft shops around here, a government emporium with quality items at fixed prices. There's a much smaller Kairali (Map p1004; ☎ 221544; River Rd; 9am-7pm Mon-Sat) in Fort Cochin.

Cinnamon (Map p1004; ☎ 2217124; Post Office Rd, Fort Cochin; 10am-7pm Mon-Sat) This exquisite shop sells high-quality, individually designed Indian clothes and homewares.

Getting There & Away

AIR

Book flights through the following airlines:

Air India (Map p1003; ☎ 2351295; MG Rd; 9.30am-1pm & 1.45-5.30pm Mon-Sat)
Indian Airlines (Map p1008; ☎ 2370235; Durbar Hall Rd; 9.45am-1pm & 1.45-5pm)
Jet Airways (Map p1003; ☎ 2293231; MG Rd; 9am-7pm Mon-Sat, to 4pm Sun)
Kingfisher Airlines (Map p1003; ☎ 2351144; Sreekandath Rd; 9am-6pm Mon-Sat)

Jet Airways has three daily services to Mumbai (US$239), one daily to Chennai (US$164) and Delhi (US$442), and two daily to Bengaluru (US$126). Indian Airlines flies daily to these cities for the same prices, and also has two flights a week to Goa (US$172) and daily flights to Trivandrum (US$142). Kingfisher flies to most of these destinations for nearly 70% less.

BUS

The KSRTC bus stand (Map p1008; ☎ 2372033; reservations 6am-10pm) is in Ernakulam, along the railway, halfway between the train stations, near Ammankovil Rd. Many buses passing through Ernakulam originate in other cities – you may have to join the scrum when the bus pulls in. You can make reservations up to five days in advance for buses originating here. There's a separate window for reservations to Tamil Nadu. See the boxed text, below, for more information on buses from Ernakulam.

In addition, two daily buses (6am and 9pm) run up the coast through Calicut to Kannur (Cannanore), Kasaragod and onto Mangalore (Rs 304).

MAJOR BUSES FROM ERNAKULAM

The following bus services operate from the KSRTC bus stand.

Destination	Fare (Rs)	Duration (hr)	Frequency
Alleppey	33	1½	every 20min
Bengaluru	304	14	6 daily
Calicut	118	5	hourly
Chennai	425	15	2 daily
Coimbatore	127	4½	9 daily
Kanyakumari	166	8	2 daily
Kollam	84	3½	every 20min
Kottayam	38	2	every 20min
Kumily (for Periyar)	73	5	6 daily
Madurai	167	9	2 daily
Thrissur	40	2	every 15min
Trivandrum	127	5	every 20min

There are a number of private bus companies that have super-deluxe, AC, video buses daily to Bengaluru, Chennai, Mangalore and Coimbatore; prices are around 75% higher than the government buses, and there are shops and stands selling tickets all over Ernakulam. The main private bus stand (the Kaloor bus stand) is north of the city.

TRAIN

Ernakulam has two train stations, Ernakulam Town and Ernakulam Junction. Reservations for both stations have to be made at the Ernakulam Junction reservations office (8am-8pm Mon-Sat, 8am-2pm Sun).

There are daily trains to Trivandrum (2nd class/3AC/2AC Rs 60/335/470, 4½ hours, 13 daily), via either Alleppey (Rs 28/188/266, 1½ hours) or Kottayam (Rs 28/188/266, 1½ hours). There are also trains to Thrissur (Rs 30/188/266, two hours, 10 daily), Calicut (Rs 57/281/402, five hours, seven daily) and Kannur (Rs 75/361/518, seven hours, seven daily). For long-distance trains, see the boxed text, below.

Getting Around

TO/FROM THE AIRPORT

Kochi International Airport (2610113) is at Nedumbassery, 30km northeast of Ernakulam. Taxis to Ernakulam cost around Rs 400, and from Fort Cochin around Rs 550.

BOAT

Ferries are the fastest form of transport between Fort Cochin and the mainland. The stop on the eastern side of Willingdon Island is called Embarkation (Map p1004); the west one, opposite Mattancherry, is Terminus (Map p1003); and the main stop at Fort Cochin is Customs (Map p1004), with another stop at the Mattancherry Jetty near the synagogue (Map p1004). Ferry fares are all around Rs 2.50; buy tickets on board.

Ernakulam

There are services to Fort Cochin every 40 minutes (4.40am to 9.30pm) from the main jetty (Map p1008). There are six ferries directly to/from the Mattancherry Jetty (5.55am to 6.45pm). The ticket office in Ernakulam opens 10 minutes before each sailing.

Ferries run every 20 minutes to Willingdon and Vypeen Islands (6am to 10pm) – although with the new bridge to Vypeen these are often empty.

Fort Cochin

Ferries run from Customs Jetty to Ernakulam from 6.20am to 9.50pm. Ferries also run between Customs Jetty and Willingdon Island about 18 times a day from 6.40am to 9.30pm (Monday to Saturday).

Car and passenger ferries cross to Vypeen Island from Fort Cochin virtually nonstop from 6am until 10pm.

LOCAL TRANSPORT

There are no real bus services between Fort Cochin and Mattancherry Palace, but it's an enjoyable 30-minute walk through the busy warehouse area along Bazaar Rd. Autorickshaws should cost around Rs 20, but you'll need to haggle. Most autorickshaw trips around Ernakulam shouldn't cost more than Rs 25.

MAJOR TRAINS FROM ERNAKULAM

The following are major long-distance trains departing from Ernakulam Town.

Destination	Train No & Name	Fare (Rs Sleeper/3AC/2AC)	Duration (hr)	Departures
Bengaluru	6525 Kanyakumari–Bangalore Exp	261/705/1000	11	6.05pm
Chennai	2624 Trivandrum–Chennai Mail	293/771/1082	12	7.10pm
Delhi*	2625 Kerala Exp	589/1601//2282	48	3.50pm
Mangalore	6329 Malabar Exp	190/505/716	10½	11.50pm
Mumbai	1082 Kanyakumari–Mumbai Exp	477/1313/1878	41	12.50pm
Parasuram	6349 Parasuram Exp	116/395	10	11.15am

* Departs from Ernakulam Junction
 Fare in 2nd class/AC chair

To get to Fort Cochin after ferries stop running, catch a bus in Ernakulam on MG Rd (Rs 6), south of Durbar Hall Rd. Taxis charge round-trip fares between the islands, even if you only go one way – Ernakulam Town train station to Fort Cochin should cost around Rs 150.

Vasco Tourist Information Centre (Map p1004; ☎ 2216215; vascoinformations@yahoo.co.uk; Bastion St, Fort Cochin) rents bicycles/scooters for Rs 45/200 per day.

AROUND KOCHI

Tripunithura

Hill Palace Museum (☎ 0484-2781113; admission Rs 15; 9am-12.30pm & 2-4.30pm Tue-Sun) at Tripunithura, 12km southeast of Ernakulam en route to Kottayam, was formerly the residence of the Kochi royal family and is an arresting, 49-building palace complex. It now houses the collections of the royal families, as well as 19th-century oil paintings, old coins, sculptures and paintings, and temple models. From Kochi, catch the bus to Tripunithura from MG Rd or Shanmugham Rd, behind the Tourist Reception Centre; an autorickshaw should cost around Rs 225 return with one-hour waiting time.

Cherai Beach

On Vypeen island, 25km from Fort Cochin, Cherai Beach might just be Kochi's best-kept secret. It's an enchanting stretch of undeveloped white sand, with miles of lazy backwaters just 300m back from the seashore. Best of all, it's close enough to visit on a day trip from Kochi.

If you plan on staying for more than a day, there are a handful of stylish but unobtrusive resorts around.

Cherai Beach Resort (☎ 0484-2481818; www.cheraibeachresorts.com; Vypeen Island; r Rs 1000-2500, with AC Rs 3500;) This excellent collection of unique cottages lies around a meandering lagoon, with the beach on one side and backwaters on the other. Bungalows are individually designed using natural materials, in conjunction with either curving walls, split-levels or lookouts onto the backwaters – there's even a tree growing inside one room. We love the tiny, individually hammocked islets connected by walkways. There is a restaurant serving daily buffets (breakfast/lunch/dinner Rs 100/300/300) and even lagoon-side wi-fi.

For a budget option, you can try the irregularly open Fisherman's Village (r Rs 500-750; Nov-Mar) a few kilometres further north. It has simple bungalows right near the shore, but the beach here is rocky. At the time of research it was being rehabilitated by a Frenchman.

To get here from Fort Cochin, catch a vehicle ferry to Vypeen Island (per person/scooter Rs 1.50/3) and either hire an autorickshaw from the jetty (around Rs 250) or catch one of the frequent buses (Rs 10, one hour).

Parur & Chennamangalam

Nowhere is the tightly woven religious cloth that is India more apparent than in Parur, 35km north of Kochi. The oldest synagogue (Rs 2; 9am-5pm Tue-Sun) in Kerala has been wonderfully renovated and sits in Chennamangalam, around 8km from Parur. It has notable door and ceiling wood reliefs in dazzling colours and an intricately carved wooden ark. Just outside is the oldest tombstone in India, inscribed with the Hebrew date corresponding to 1269. There's a Jesuit church and the ruins of a Jesuit college nearby. The Jesuits first arrived in Chennamangalam in 1577 and soon after the first book in Tamil (the written language then used in this part of Kerala) was printed on this spot. From here you can also walk to the Hindu temple on the hill overlooking the Periyar River. On the way you'll pass a 16th-century mosque, as well as Muslim and Jewish burial grounds.

In Parur town, you'll find the agraharam (place of Brahmins) – a small street of closely packed and brightly coloured houses. It was settled by Tamil Brahmins, though it may as well have been garden gnomes judging by the houses' fairytale-like appearance.

Parur is compact and locals can point you in the right direction, though Chennamangalam is best visited with a guide. Indoworld (Map p1003; ☎ 0484-2367818; www.indoworldtours.com; Heera House, MG Rd, Ernakulam; 8am-8pm Mon-Sat, to 2.30pm Sun) can organise tours (around Rs 600 plus guide). It also has an office (Map p1004; Princess St) in Fort Cochin.

For Parur, catch a bus from the KSRTC bus stand in Kochi (Rs 15, one hour, every 10 minutes). From Parur catch a bus (Rs 3) or autorickshaw (Rs 45) to Chennamangalam.

THRISSUR (TRICHUR)

☎ 0487 / pop 330,067

While the rest of Kerala has its fair share of celebrations, Thrissur remains the cultural cherry on the festival cake. With a list of brash festivals as long as a temple elephant's trunk, the whole region supports multiple institutions that are nursing the dying classical Keralan performing arts back to health. It is a busy, bustling place, home to a community of Nestorian Christians, whose denomination dates back to the 3rd century AD. The popular Sri Krishna Temple (33km northeast of Thrissur; see p1017) and performing-arts school Kerala Kalamandalam (see p1017) are nearby. Plan to get here during the rambunctious festival season (November to mid-May).

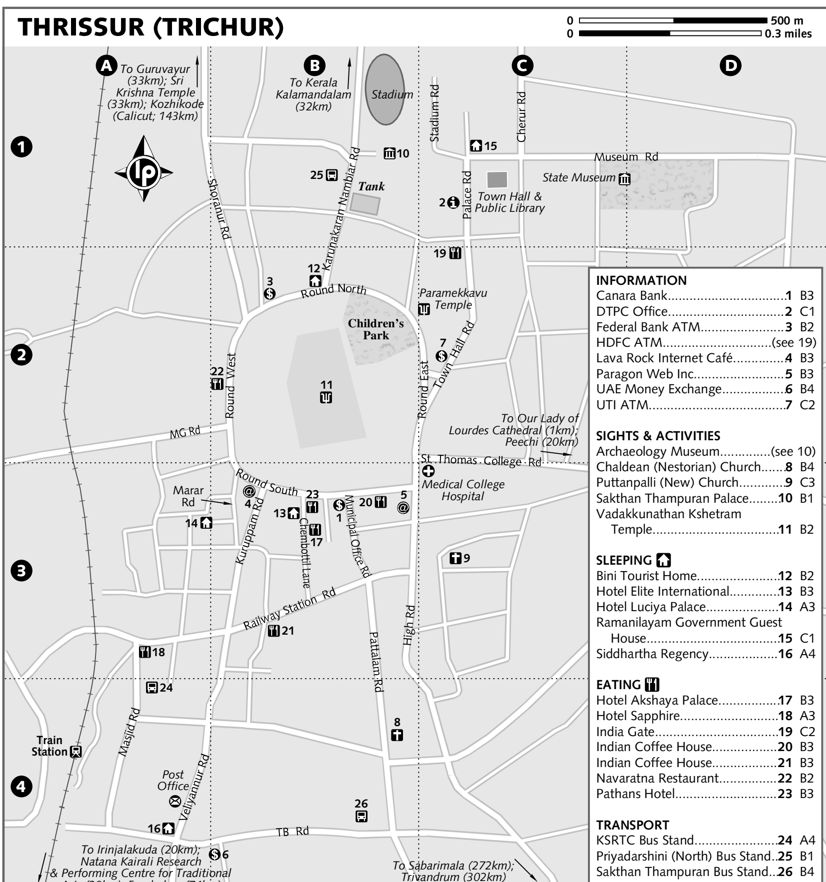
Orientation & Information

There's HDFC, UTI and Federal Bank ATMs in town, accepting all foreign cards.

DTPC office (☎ 2320800; Palace Rd; ⏲ 10am-5pm Mon-Sat)



Lava Rock Internet Café (Kuruppam Rd; per hr Rs 20; ⏲ 8.30am-10.30pm)

Paragon Web Inc (2nd fl, High Rd; per hr Rs 15; ⏲ 8am-10.30pm)

UAE Money Exchange (☎ 2445668; TB Rd; ⏲ 9am-6.30pm Mon-Sat, 9.30am-1pm Sun) Next to the Casino Hotel.

Sights & Activities

One of the oldest in the state, Vadakkunathan Kshetram Temple crowns the hill at the epicentre of Thrissur. Finished in classic Keralan architecture, only Hindus are allowed inside, though the mound surrounding the temple has sweeping metropolis views and is a popular spot to loiter. There are also a number of inspiring churches, including Our Lady of Lourdes Cathedral, a massive cathedral with an underground shrine; Puttanpalli (New) Church, which has towering, pure-white spires visible from all round town; and the Chaldean (Nestorian) Church, which is unique in its complete lack of pictorial representations of Jesus.

The Archaeology Museum (admission Rs 6; 9am-5pm Tue-Sun) is in the 200-year-old Sakthan Thampuran Palace. Wandering through its arrow-guided maze you get to see some worthy artefacts, including 12th-century Keralan bronze sculptures, earthenware pots big enough to cook children in, decadent remnants of Kochi's royalty, and an extraordinary 1500kg wooden treasury box covered with iron spikes and locks.

In a state where festivals are a way of life, Thrissur is the standout district for temple revelry. Some of the highlights include Thrissur Pooram (April/May), Kerala's biggest and most colourful temple festival – expect processions of elephants; Uthralikavu Pooram (March/April), where the climactic day sees 20 elephants circling the shrine; and Thypooya Maholsavam (January/February), with a spectacular kavadiyattam (a form of ritualistic dance) procession where hundreds of dancers carry tall, ornate structures called kavadis on their heads.

Sleeping

Ramanilayam Government Guest House (☎ 2332016; cnr Palace & Museum Rds; s/d Rs 165/220;) This is the best-value place in town, if you can get in. Huge rooms with balconies are painted a particularly calming shade of green, and it's set in big grounds. Ring ahead, or just show up and try sweet talking them.

Bini Tourist Home (☎ 2335703; Round North; s/d Rs 300/350, with AC Rs 400/550) This massive U-shaped complex has big, clean and respectable-value rooms – all with TV. The staff seem bewildered by foreign visitors.

Hotel Elite International (☎ 2421033; mail@hotelelit einternational.com; Chembottil Lane; s/d from Rs 391/483, with AC Rs 517/644;) Not quite elite, but better than average and the decent rooms all have balconies – though some are noisy. The staff can be brisk. Breakfast is included.

Hotel Luciya Palace (☎ 2424731; luciyapalace@hotmail .com; s/d Rs 450/575, with AC Rs 675/775;) Considerably more splendid from the outside than inside, this hotel off Marar Rd has reasonably comfortable rooms. Some of the non-AC rooms are nicer than those with AC.

Siddhartha Regency (☎ 2424773; cnr TB & Veliyan-nur Rds; s/d Rs 750/900;) This is excellent value, with comely rooms decked out in simple but pleasant décor – and there's a pool!

Eating

Pathans Hotel (Round South; dishes from Rs 20) Clean and cafeteria-esque, this atmospheric place is popular with families for lunch and has a sweets counter downstairs.

Hotel Sapphire (Railway Station Rd; dishes Rs 20-60) Another place bustling for lunch-time biryanis (Rs 32 to Rs 49), this one's close to the train and bus stations for a quick meal between trips.

India Gate (Palace Rd; dishes around Rs 25) In the same building as the HDFC Bank, this is a bright, pure-veg place serving an unbeatable range of dosas, including jam, cheese and cashew versions.

Navaratna Restaurant (Round West; dishes Rs 30-80; lunch & dinner;) Cool dark and intimate, this upmarket, North Indian veg place has excellent lunch-time meals (Rs 60).

Also try:

Hotel Akshaya Palace (Chembottil Lane; dishes Rs 15-50) Veg and biryani dishes.

Indian Coffee House Branches at Round South and Railway Station Rd.

Getting There & Away

BUS

KSRTC buses leave around every 30 minutes from the KSRTC bus stand for Trivandrum (Rs 170, 7½ hours), Kochi (Rs 46, two hours), Calicut (Rs 72, 3½ hours), Palakkad (Rs 37, 1½ hours) and Kottayam (Rs 64, four hours). Hourly buses go to Coimbatore (Rs 61, three hours). There are also buses to Ponnani (Rs 25, 1½ hours) and Prumpavoor (Rs 30, two hours), for connections to Munnar.

The large, private Sakthan Thampuran stand has buses for Guruvayur (Rs 14, one hour) and Irinjalakuda (Rs 11, 45 minutes). The smaller, private Priyadarshini (also called north) stand has many buses bound for Shoranur and Palakkad, Pollachi and Coimbatore. There are also buses from here to Cheruthuruthy (Rs 17, 1½ hours, every 10 minutes).

TRAIN

Services run regularly to Ernakulam (2nd class/3AC/2AC Rs 30/188/266, two hours) and Calicut (Rs 41/213/295, 3½ hours). There are also trains running to Palakkad (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 101/188/266, two hours) via Shoranur.

AROUND THRISSUR

The Hindu-only Sri Krishna Temple at Guruvayur, 33km northwest of Thrissur, is perhaps the most famous in Kerala. Said to be created by Guru, preceptor of the gods, and Vayu, god of wind, the temple is believed to date from the 16th century and is renowned for its healing powers. The temple's elephants (over 50 at last count) are kept at an old Zamorin palace, Punnathur Kota. An annual and spectacular Elephant Race is held here in February or March.

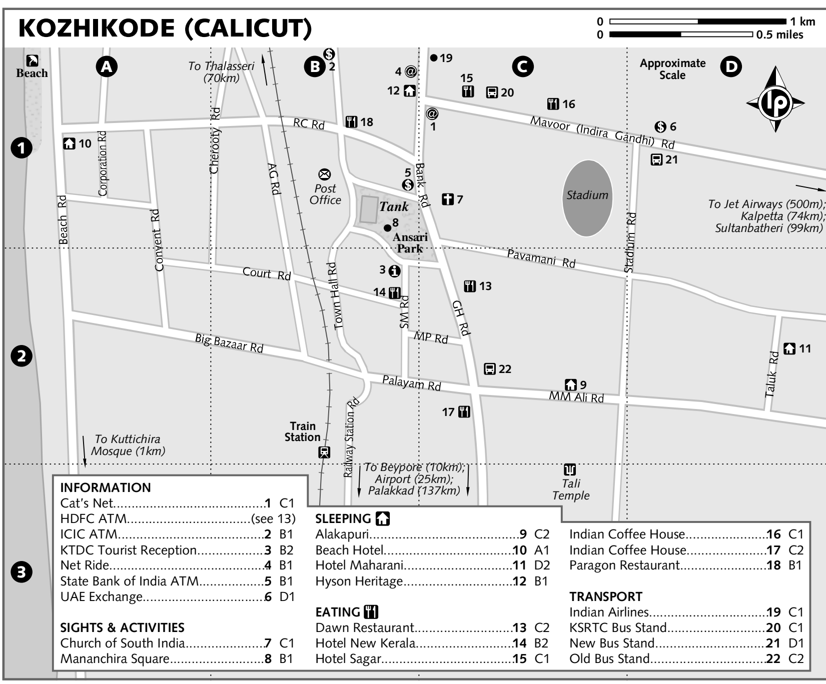
Kerala Kalamandalam (☎ 04884-262418; www.kalamandalam.com), 32km northeast of Thrissur at Cheruthuruthy, is a champion of Kerala's traditional art renaissance. Using an ancient Gurukula system of learning, students undergo intensive study in Kathakali, mohiniattam (classical dance), kootiattam (traditional Sanskrit drama), percussion, voice and violin. Structured visits (per person incl lunch US$18; 9.30am-1pm) are available, including a tour around the theatre and classes. Individually tailored introductory courses are offered one subject at a time (between six and 12 months; around Rs 1500 per month, plus Rs 1500 for accommodation).



Natana Kairali Research & Performing Centre for Traditional Arts (☎ 0480-2825559; natanakairali@gmail.com), 20km south of Thrissur near Irinjalakuda, offers training in traditional arts, including rare forms of puppetry and dance. Short appreciation courses (usually about one month) are available to foreigners. In December each year, the centre holds five days of mohiniyattam (dance of the temptress) performances, a form of classical Keralan women's dance.

NORTHERN KERALA

KOZHIKODE (CALICUT)

☎ 0495 / pop 880,168

Always a prosperous trading town, Calicut was once the capital of the formidable Zamorin dynasty. Vasco da Gama first landed near Calicut in 1498, on his way to snatch a share of the subcontinent for king and country (Portugal that is). These days, trade depends mostly on exporting Indian labour to the Middle East. There's not a lot for tourists to see, though it's a good break in the journey and is the jumping-off point for Wayanad Wildlife Sanctuary.

Information

There are HDFC and State Bank of India ATMs in town.

Cat's Net (Mavoor Rd; per hr Rs 20) Open 24 hours – though not always in a row.

KTDC Tourist Reception (☎ 2722391; Malabar Mansion, SM Rd) Rudimentary tourist information.

Net Ride (Bank Rd; per hr Rs 20; 9am-10pm Mon-Sat)

UAE Exchange (☎ 2723164; Mavoor Rd; 9.30am-6pm Mon-Sat, to 1.30pm Sun).

Sights

Mananchira Square was the former courtyard of the Zamorins, and preserves the original spring-fed tank. The 650-year-old Kuttichira Mosque is in an attractive four-storey wooden building supported by wooden pillars and painted brilliant aqua, blue and white. Burnt down by the Portuguese in 1510, it was rescued and rebuilt to tell the tale. The Church of South India was established by Swiss missionaries in 1842 and has unique Euro-Keralan architecture.

Calicut's beach, north of the Beach Hotel, is a lovely place to stroll in the late afternoon.

Sleeping

Alakapuri (☎ 2723451-54; www.alakapurihotels.com; MM Ali Rd; s/d from Rs 150/550, with AC Rs 450/650;) Around a green lawn (complete with fountain!) this place is off the road and a little quieter than most. Rooms come in all different sizes and prices, and while a little scuffed are tidy and reasonable value.

Hotel Maharani (☎ 2723101; www.hotelmaharani.com; Taluk Rd; d without/with AC from Rs 400/800;) With abundant greenery, a lush garden and palms all around, it's a shame the rooms are spartan and a bit worn. Regardless, it's a great place to get away from the city noise.

Hyson Heritage (☎ 2766726; www.hysonheritage.com; Bank Rd; s/d from Rs 475/600, with AC from Rs 900/1200;) At this place you get a fair bit of swank for your rupee. The standard rooms are tidy, spacious and comfortable, while the massive deluxe AC rooms come with bathtubs and bad art.

Beach Hotel (☎ /fax 2762055; www.beachheritage.com; Beach Rd; r without/with AC Rs 1200/1400;) Built in 1890 to house the Malabar British Club, this is now a dainty 10-room hotel. Beach-facing rooms have bathtubs and secluded verandas; all the rooms are tastefully furnished and have plenty of character. This is easily the best place to stay in Calicut.

Eating

Hotel Sagar (Mavoor Rd; dishes from Rs 20; 6am-2am) This is a stylish and breezy veg and nonveg place with biryanis (including fish, Rs 60) and meals at lunchtime.

Paragon Restaurant (Kannur Rd; dishes Rs 28-90) Not as flash as the sign would have you believe, this place comes highly recommended for veg and nonveg dishes and is packed to the rafters come lunchtime to prove it.

Dawn Restaurant (GH Rd; dishes Rs 60-150, buffet Rs 126;) The restaurant at the Hotel Malabar does multicuisine well, serving inventive Indian dishes and Keralan specials to truly awful, loud muzak.

For tasty, cheap meals also try the following:

Indian Coffee House (Mavoor Rd) Great for breakfast; there's also a branch on GH Rd.

Hotel New Kerala (SM Rd; dishes Rs 12-50) Full daily for lunch-time set meals (Rs 30) and biryanis.

Getting There & Away

AIR

Jet Airways (☎ 2740518; 29 Mavoor Rd) flies daily to Mumbai (US$200) – as does Indian Airlines (☎ 2766243; Eroth Centre, Bank Rd) for the same price. It also has daily flights to Chennai (US$137), Delhi (US$382) and Coimbatore (US$77), and twice-weekly flights to Goa (US$200).

BUS

The KSRTC bus stand (Mavoor Rd) has buses to Bengaluru (via Mysore, Rs 188, eight hours, 10 daily), Mangalore (Rs 148, seven hours, four daily) and to Ooty (Rs 83, 5½ hours, four daily). There are also frequent buses to Thrissur (Rs 74, three hours), Trivandrum (going via Alleppey and Ernakulam; Rs 248, 10 hours, eight daily) and Kottayam (Rs 146, seven hours, 13 daily). For Wayanad district, buses leave every 15 minutes heading to Sultanbatheri (Rs 57, three hours) via Kalpetta (Rs 45, two hours).

The new bus stand, further east along Mavoor Rd, has long-distance private buses.

TRAIN

The train station is south of Mananchira Sq. There are trains to Mangalore (2nd class/3AC/2AC Rs 64/310/445, five hours) via Kannur (Rs 34/188/266, two hours), Ernakulam (Rs 57/281/402, five hours) via Thrissur (Rs 41/213/295, 3½ hours), and to Trivandrum (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 190/505/716, 11 hours).

Heading southeast, there are trains to Coimbatore (sleeper/3AC/2AC Rs 101/271/388, five hours), via Palakkad (Rs 101/221/316, three hours). These trains then head north to the centres of Bengaluru, Chennai and Delhi.

Getting Around

Calicut has a glut of autorickshaws. It's about Rs 10 from the station to the KSRTC bus stand or most hotels.

WAYANAD WILDLIFE SANCTUARY

☎ 04936

If Kerala is 'God's Country', this must be his garden of Eden. Part of a remote forest reserve that spills over into national parks in Karnataka and Tamil Nadu, Wayanad lies cocooned in the hills of the Western Ghats. Famed among Keralans for its jaw-dropping beauty, the landscape is a green medley of rice paddies, untouched forests, spice plantations and more rice paddies (the name translates to 'country of paddy fields'). A convenient stopover point between Bengaluru or Mysore and Kochi, the region gets surprisingly few visitors, though it's one of the few places you're almost guaranteed to spot wild elephants. Other wildlife that roam the forests here include sambar and spotted dear, Indian bison, langur monkeys and, drumroll, occasionally tigers.

Orientation & Information

The sanctuary, covering an area of 345 sq km, consists of two separate pockets – Muthanga in the east of the district, on the border of Tamil Nadu, and Tholpetty in the north, on the border with Karnataka. Three major towns in Wayanad district make good bases for exploring the sanctuary – Kalpetta in the south, Sultanbatheri (also known as Sultan Battery) in the east and Mananthavadi in the northwest.

The extremely helpful DTPC office (☎ 04936-202134; www.dtpcwayanad.com; Kalpetta; 🕒 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) can help organise tours, permits and trekking. There's a UAE Exchange (☎ 04936-207636; Main Rd; 🕒 9.30am-6pm Mon-Sat, 9.30am-1.30pm Sun) in Kalpetta, and Federal Bank or Canara Bank ATMs can be found in each of the three main towns, as well as internet cafés.

Sights & Activities

VISITING THE SANCTUARY

Entry to both parts of the sanctuary (Indian/foreigner Rs 10/100, camera/video Rs 25/150; 🕒 7am-5pm) is only permitted with a park guard (Rs 200); you can organise this through the DTPC office, with your hotel or at the park's entrance offices.

At Tholpetty, early morning 1½-hour jeep tours (Rs 500 incl guide) are a great way to spot wildlife; afternoon tours are also available. Pachyderm Palace (see p1020) arranges wildlife-spotting treks into the areas surrounding the Tholpetty sanctuary.

At Muthanga, two-hour jeep tours (Rs 350 incl guide) and four-hour guided walks (Rs 300) are available.

The DTPC and most hotels arrange guided jeep tours (up to five people, Rs 1700 to Rs 2000) of the sanctuaries and surrounding sights.

OTHER SIGHTS & ACTIVITIES

There are some top opportunities for trekking around the district, including the precipice of Chembra Peak, at 2100m the tallest summit; Vellarimala, with great views and lots of wildlife-spotting opportunities; Pakshipathalam, a formation of large boulders deep in the forest; and a number of waterfalls. Permits are necessary and available from forest officers in South or North Wayanad. The accommodating DTPC office in Kalpetta organises permits, trekking guides (Rs 500 per day), camping equipment (Rs 200 per person) and transport – pretty much anything you might need to organise you own trek. It also runs four-hour bamboo rafting trips (Rs 950) from June to December.

Thought to be one of the oldest on the subcontinent, Thirunelly Temple (🕒 dawn-dusk) is around 10km from Tholpetty. While non-Hindus cannot enter, the ancient and intricate pillars and stone carvings, set against a backdrop of soaring, mist-covered peaks, is an astounding sight no matter what your creed.

The 13th-century Jain temple (🕒 8am-noon & 2-6pm), near Sultanbatheri, has splendid stone carvings and is an important monument to the region's strong historical Jain presence. Close by, near Ambalavayal, are the Edakal Caves (admission Rs 5; 🕒 9am-5pm), with petroglyphs thought to date back over 3000 years and awe-inspiring views of Wayanad district. In the same area, Wayanad Heritage Museum (Ambalavayal; admission Rs 5; 🕒 9am-5pm) exhibits headgear, weapons, pottery, carved stone and other artefacts dating back to the 15th century that shed light on Wayanad's significant Adivasi population (around 17% of the total population). The labelling is poor, but the friendly guardian is happy to explain what's on display.

The picture-perfect Pookot Lake (admission Rs 5; 9am-6pm) is 3km before Vythiri. Geared up for visitors, it has well-maintained gardens, a cafeteria, playground and paddle/row boats for rent (Rs 30/50 per 20 minutes). It's still peaceful, particularly if you take a half-hour stroll around the lake's perimeter.

Sleeping & Eating

There's a seramby (wooden hut; d Rs 900) at Tholpetty near the sanctuary entrance, though you'll have to bring your own food. Contact the wildlife warden (04936-220454; 10am-5pm Mon-Fri) at Sultanbatheri for details.

PPS Tourist Home (04936-203431; www.ppstouristhome.com; Kalpetta; s/d Rs 150/250, deluxe d Rs 500-550) This agreeable and friendly place in the middle of Kalpetta has rooms that are clean, good sized and comfy. You can arrange trips to Wayanad (Rs 1700 per carload) here or hikes up Chembra Peak (Rs 600, six hours).

Hotel Regency (04936-220512; Sultanbatheri; s/d from Rs 350/400, with AC from Rs 750/800) The best deal in Sultanbatheri, this new place is not particularly inspired, but with large, restful, tidy and quiet rooms it's still a winner. The deluxe rooms differ from the standard ones in price only.

Pachyderm Palace (0484-2371761; touristdesk@satyam.net.in; Tholpetty; r per person incl meals Rs 1250-1500) This comfortable house lies huddled outside the gate of Tholpetty Wildlife Sanctuary – handy for early morning treks, tours and ad hoc wildlife viewing. The varied rooms are simple and spotless, but the stilt-bungalows surrounded by forest are the pick of the litter. The Keralan food is outstanding. Make reservations through the Tourist Desk in Ernakulam (see p1005).

Stream Valley Cottages (0436-255860; www.streamvalleycottages.com; Vythiri; d Rs 2500) These huge, modern cottages are set by a small stream among the hills, about 2.5km off the main road before Vythiri. Fully self-contained, with kitchen, separate living area and balcony, there's peace here aplenty. Traditional Keralan meals are available (Rs 250 per day).

Tranquil (04936-220244; www.tranquilresort.com; Kuppamudi Estate, Kolagapara; s/d €190/240, deluxe s/d €270/340) This truly charming and luxurious homestay is in the middle of 160 hectares of pepper, coffee, vanilla and cardamom plantations. The elegant house has sweeping verandas filled with plants and handsome furniture. The owners are excellent hosts and arrange tours of the area (included). They also have the most luxurious treehouse we've ever seen (single/double €240/300). Prices include meals and tax.

You could also try:

Dew Drops (04935-242; Mysore Rd, Mananthavadi; s from Rs 150/200) The only half-decent place to stay in Mananthavady.

Green Gates Hotel (04936-202001; www.greengateshotel.com; Kalpetta; s/d Rs 1250/1500, cottages s/d Rs 2750/3000) Well-designed cottages with a blend of modern and natural materials.

Getting There & Around

Buses brave the windy roads between Calicut and Sultanbatheri (Rs 57) via Kalpetta (Rs 45) every 30 minutes. Private buses also run between Kannur and Mananthavadi every 45 minutes (Rs 48, 2½ hours). One bus per day passes through Sultanbatheri at 1pm on its way to Ooty (Rs 76, four hours), and buses for Mysore leave every 30 minutes.

Local buses connect Mananthavadi, Kalpetta and Sultanbatheri every 10 to 20 minutes (Rs 12 to Rs 18, 45 minutes to 1¼ hours). You can rent jeeps to get from one town to the next; they cost about Rs 450 to 600 each way – look for them lined up near the bus stands.

There are plenty of autorickshaws for trips around the district, and the DTPC can arrange car rental (from around Rs 1300 per day).

KANNUR (CANNANORE)

0497 / pop 498,175

Under the Kolathiri rajas, Kannur was a major port bristling with international trade – explorer Marco Polo christened it a 'great emporia of spice trade'. Since then, the usual colonial suspects, including the Portuguese, Dutch and British, have had a go at shaping Kannur. Today it's an agreeable, though unexciting, town known mostly for its weaving industry and cashew trade, with an excellent beach at Costa Malabari and incredible theyyam possession performances (see opposite).

Information

The DTPC (2706336; 10am-6pm Mon-Sat), opposite the KSRTC bus stand, and the information counter (8am-7pm) at the train station can supply maps of Kannur and a few brochures.

There are Federal Bank and State Bank of India ATMs adjacent to the bus stand, and an HDFC ATM about 50m from it, along with a UAE Exchange (☎ 2708818; Mahatma Mandir Junction; ⏰ 9.30am-5.30pm Mon-Sat, to 1.30pm Sun).

Sights

Kannur is the best place to see the ritual dance theyyam (see the boxed text, below); there should be a theyyam on somewhere reasonably close by most nights of the year. To find it, ask at Costa Malabari (see right), or try the Kerala Folklore Academy (☎ 2778090), near Chirakkal Pond, Valapattanam.

The Portuguese built St Angelo Fort (admission free; ⏰ 9am-6pm) in 1505 from brilliantly red laterite stone on the promontory northwest of town. It's serene and has excellent views of some palm-fringed beaches.

Established in 1955, the Kausallaya Weavers' Co-Operative (☎ 2835279; ⏰ 9am-6pm) is the largest in Kannur and occupies a creaky building clicking with the sound of looms. You can stop by for a quick tour – it's 8km south of Kannur. This region is known for the manufacture of beedis, those tiny Indian cigarettes deftly rolled in green leaves. One of the largest, and purportedly best, manufacturers is the Kerala Dinesh Beedi Co-Operative (☎ 2835280; ⏰ 8-5pm Tue-Sat), with a factory at Thottada, 7km south of Kannur. Either of these cooperatives is a Rs 80 (return) autorickshaw ride from Kannur town.

Kairail (☎ 0460-2243460), located 20km north of Kannur, is starting to offer houseboat trips on the unspoilt northern Kerala backwaters. Day cruises for up to 10 people cost Rs 3500, and 24-hour overnight trips for two are Rs 5000.

Sleeping & Eating

Centaur Tourist Home (☎ 2768270; MA Rd; s/d Rs 175/290, with shared bathroom Rs 120/230) This has basic, spacious, clean rooms, across the road from the train station. There are plenty of similar lodges in this area.

Palmgrove Heritage Retreat (☎ 2703182; Mill Rd; s/d from Rs 200/350, with AC Rs 700/800; ❄) In a big heritage house packed with antique furniture and bric-a-brac, there's a variety of quiet, smallish-but-snug rooms set around lots of greenery.

Government Guest House (☎ 2706426; d Rs 220, with AC Rs 575; ❄) Ostensibly only for government officials (but it will let visitors in if there's room), this is great value – huge, bright rooms, all with balcony, in a sprawling complex by the ocean. Phone ahead.

Mascot Beach Resort (☎ 2708445; s/d Rs 700/900, with AC Rs 1000/1200; ❄ 🏊) Near the Government Guest House, this also has grand views of the ocean from its comfy AC rooms, though the cheaper options are tucked away and a bit dark.

THEYYAM

Kerala's most popular ritualistic art form, theyyam, is believed to predate Hinduism and to have developed from folk dances performed in conjunction with harvest celebrations. An intensely local ritual, it's often performed in the kavus (sacred groves) that are abundant throughout northern Kerala (there are up to 800 in Kannur district alone).

Theyyam refers to both the form or shape of the deity or hero portrayed, and to the ritual. There are around 450 different *theyyam*s, each with a distinct costume; face paint, bracelets, breastplates, skirts, garlands and especially headdresses are exuberant, intricately crafted and sometimes huge (up to 6m or 7m tall). Today's theyyam performances have morphed to incorporate popular Hindu deities and even Muslim characters.

The performer prepares for the ritual with a period of abstinence, fasting and meditation, which extends into the laborious make-up and costume session. During the performance, the performer loses his physical identity and speaks, moves and blesses the devotees as if he were the deity. There is frenzied dancing and wild drumming, and a surreal, otherworldly atmosphere is created, the kind of atmosphere in which a deity indeed might, if it so desired, manifest itself in human form.

The theyyam season is October to May, during which time there will be an annual ritual at each kavu. *Theyyam*s are also often held to bring good fortune to important events, such as marriages and house warmings. See above for details on how to find one.

from an idyllic and secluded beach, this place has a few bright, spacious rooms in an old hand-loom factory. There's a huge communal space and lots of comfy lounging areas dot the outside, plus it has expanded to include a second house perched dramatically on a sea cliff. The home-cooked Keralan food is plentiful and, frankly, might just be the best in the country. Kurien, your gracious host, is an expert on the astonishing theyyam ritual (see boxed text, p1021) and can help arrange a visit. It's 8km from Kannur town; a taxi from the train station is around Rs 80. Make reservations at the Tourist Desk in Ernakulam.

Getting There & Away

There are frequent daily buses to Mysore (Rs 136, eight hours) and a few to Mangalore (Rs 76, four hours). Most departures to Calicut (Rs 52, 2½ hours) and Ernakulam (Rs 170, eight hours) leave in the afternoon and evening. There's one bus daily to Ooty (via Wayanad, Rs 170, nine hours). Frequent private buses to Mananthavadi (for Wayanad, Rs 48, 2½ hours) leave from the private bus stand, located between the KSRTC stand and the train station.

There are several daily trains to Mangalore (2nd class/3AC/2AC Rs 44/221/316, three hours), Calicut (Rs 34/188/266, two hours) and Ernakulam (Rs 75/361/518, seven hours).

BEKAL & AROUND

☎ 0467

Bekal (and nearby Palakunnu and Udma) in Kerala's far north boast unspoilt white-sand beaches. Word on the street is they form the palm-fringed finish line for several large-scale, luxury resorts hoping to transform the area into the next Kovalam. As yet, there are few decent places to stay (and none near a beach) and getting around can be a real pain, making it a DIY destination for off-the-beaten-track adventurers. Because it's a predominantly Muslim area, it's important to keep local sensibilities in mind, especially at the beach.

The laterite-brick Bekal Fort (Indian/foreigner Rs 5/100; 8am-5pm), built between 1645 and 1660, sits on Bekal's rocky headland and houses a small Hindu temple and plenty of goats.

Kappil Beach, 6km north of Bekal, has fine sand and calm water, but beware of shifting sandbars.

Bekal Boat Stay (☎ 0476-3953311; bekalboats@rediffmail.com; Kottappuram), 22km south of Bekal, is one of the first enterprises in the region to offer houseboat trips (Rs 6000/8000 per 24 hours for two/four people).

Sleeping & Eating

Sleeping options are mostly scattered between Kanhangad (12km south) and Kasaragod (10km north).

K-Tees Residency (☎ 3950208; www.kteesresidency.com; Bekal; s/d from Rs 200/350) The only place near Bekal passing muster in the hygiene department, it's squished between the railway and the road and has big, clean rooms.

Hotel Bekal International (☎ 2204271; www.hotelbekal.com; Kanhangad; s/d from Rs 200/350, d with AC from Rs 550;) The most comfortable hotel around, it's 12km south of Bekal. The huge complex has a green fetish, in everything from walls to '70s chairs, and a big choice of spacious, immaculate (green) rooms.

Gitanjali Heritage (☎ 2234159; www.gitanjaliheritage.com; s/d with meals US$50/75) Five kilometres from Bekal, this place is deep in the inland villages, surrounded by paddy fields. It's an intimate homestay in a graceful heritage home, with comfortable, higgledy-piggledy rooms filled with ancestral furniture and polished wood.

Getting There & Around

Frequent local trains stop at Kotikulum, in the village of Palakunnu 3km from Bekal. Kanhangad, 13km south, is the major stop. There are many buses to/from Kasaragod (Rs 10, 20 minutes), the nearest big town, and an autorickshaw at Bekal Junction can take you to/from Palakunnu and Udma (Rs 20 to 30).

LAKSHADWEEP

pop 60,595

A string of 36 palm-covered coral islands 300km off the coast of Kerala, Lakshadweep is as stunning as it is difficult to get to. Only 10 of the islands are inhabited, mostly with Sunni Muslim fishermen, and foreigners are only allowed to stay on a handful of these. With fishing and coir production the main sources of income, local life on the islands remains highly traditional and a caste system divides the islanders between Koya (land owners), Malmi (sailors) and Melachery (farmers).

The real attraction of the islands lies under the water: the 4200 sq km of pristine archipelago lagoons, unspoiled coral reefs and warm waters are a magnet for flipper-toting travellers and divers alike. Lakshadweep can only be visited on a pre-organised package trip – all listed accommodation prices are for the peak October to May season and include permits and meals.

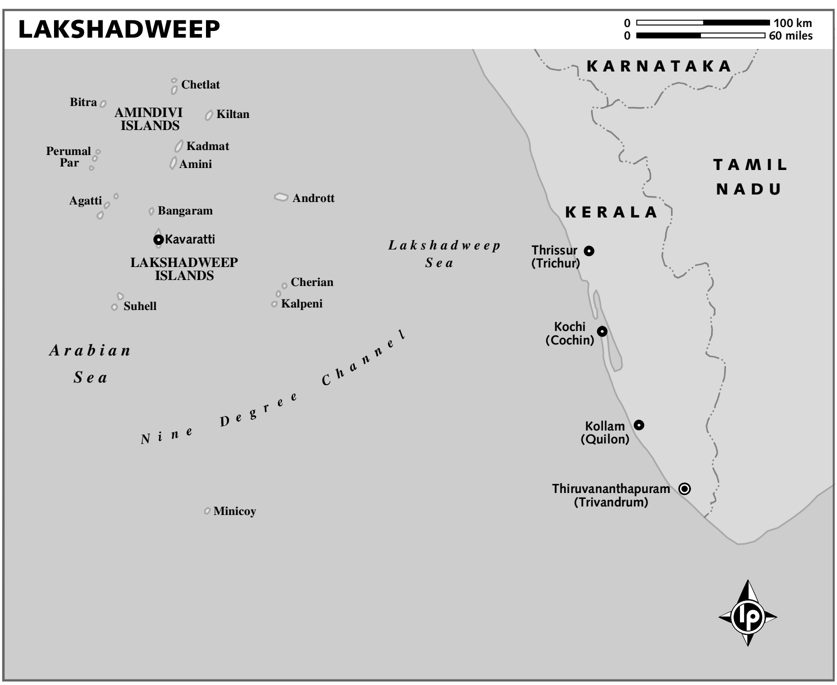
Information

Sports (Society for the Promotion of Recreational Tourism & Sports; Map p1003; ☎ 0484-2668387; www.lakshadweeptourism.com; IG Rd, Willingdon Island; ⏰ 10am-5pm Mon-Sat) is the main tourism organisation.

PERMITS

Foreigners are limited to staying in pricey resorts; a special permit (one month's notice) is required and is organised by tour operators, hotels or Sports in Kochi. Foreigners and Indians can stay on Bangaram, Agatti and Kadmat, and Indians can stay in resorts on Minicoy and Kavaratti.



Getting There & Away

Indian Airlines has daily 9.15am flights Monday to Saturday from Kochi to Agatti Island (US$200 each way, 1¼ hours). The plane is a tiny Dornier 228 propeller aircraft and passengers are restricted to 10kg of luggage. Book well in advance. As this book went to press, Kingfisher Airlines had just started up flights between Kochi and Agatti Island with bigger planes and for half the price (around US$200 return). Flights leave Kochi Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday at 12.50pm and return the same day at 2.40pm – though this may all change so its best to check its website (www.flykingfisher.com) for the latest information. A 1½-hour transfer by boat from Agatti to Bangaram costs an extra US$50 return. A boat trip to Agatti from Kochi is US$50 one way (16 to 20 hours).

For Kadmat, there are scheduled boat departures from Kochi between October and May (US$75 return in AC seats, including food, 18 to 20 hours each way) – allow a stay of three to five days plus travelling time. Get in touch with Sports in Kochi for details.

BANGARAM ISLAND

The 50-hectare island is fringed with pure sand, and the sight of the moon slipping beneath the lagoon horizon is very nearly worth

DIVING

Lakshadweep is a diver's dream, with excellent visibility and a plethora of marine life living on undisturbed coral reefs. The best time to dive is between mid-October and mid-May when the seas are calm and visibility is 20m to 40m. During the monsoon the weather and strong currents severely limit these opportunities and many dive outfits close up shop.

Lacadives (☎ 022-66627381-82; www.lacadives.com; E-20 Everest Bldg, Taredo Rd, Mumbai) runs dive centres on Bangaram and Kadmat Islands. Costs can vary: a CMAS one-star course costs US$400, while experienced divers pay US$40 per dive (plus equipment rental), with discounts available for multiple dives. Information is available through the hotels or directly through Lacadives in Mumbai; its website also has details about accommodation packages. The diving school on Agatti Island is run by Goa Diving (☎ 0832-2555117; www.goadiving.com).

From Kadmat Island, dives range from 9m to 20m in depth and some of the better sites include the North Cave, the Wall, Jack Point, Shark Alley, the Potato Patch, Cross Currents and Sting Ray City. Around Bangaram, good spots include the 32m-deep wreck of the Princess Royale, Manta Point, Life, Grand Canyon and the impressive sunken reef at Perumal Par.

Because of weight restrictions on aircraft (10kg), most divers rely on equipment provided on the islands. For a guide to environmentally friendly diving, see the boxed text, p94.

the expense. Activities include diving, snorkelling, deep-sea fishing and sailing.

Bangaram Island Resort (www.cghearth.com; s/d with full board Oct-Apr US$280/290, 4-person deluxe cottages with meals US$525) is run by the CGH Earth group (☎ 0484-2668221; bangaramisland@cghearth.com), and is administered from its hotel in Kochi. Shop around before you leave home – some operators can secure a better deal.

AGATTI ISLAND

The village on this 2.7-sq-km island has several mosques, which you can visit if dressed modestly. There's no alcohol on the island. Snorkelling, kayaking, glass-bottom boat trips and jaunts to nearby islands can be arranged.

Agatti Island Beach Resort (☎ 0484-2362232; www.agattiislandresorts.com; tw per person for 3 nights US$305-345, with AC US$430-470; ❄) sits on two beaches at the southern tip of the island and offers a range of packages. The resort has simple, low-rise beach cottages, designed to be comfortably cool without AC, and a restaurant for 20 people.

KADMAT ISLAND

Kadmat Beach Resort (☎ 0484-2668387; laksports_2004@vsnl.net; s/d for Indians Rs 2000/3000, with AC Rs 2500/4000, s/d for foreigners US$75/125, with AC US$100/175; ❄) is administered by Sports (see p1023).

MINICOY ISLAND

Indians wishing to stay on remote Minicoy can rent newly built cottages at Swaying Palm (s/d Rs 2000/3000, with AC Rs 2500/4000; ❄). Boat transport from Kochi (tourist/1st/deluxe class Rs 3500/6000/7000 return) must be added to the prices.

ACCOMMODATION

India has a range of accommodation to suit all budgets, from grungy backpacker hotels with concrete floors and cold showers to the former palaces of maharajas (princely rulers or kings). Most towns have something for all budgets, but rates vary widely around the country, and popular tourist centres see a significant price hike during the tourist season.

Accommodation listings in this book are arranged in price order – scroll through the listings to find places that meet your budget and accommodation preferences.

Hotel tariffs vary widely across India – see individual chapters to gauge accommodation costs in the areas you intend visiting. Tariffs in this book are based on high-season rates and don't include taxes unless otherwise indicated. If the rates are seasonal, this will be indicated. Note that hotels in resort towns can triple their rates in season – advance bookings are often essential at these times.

Prices for accommodation v0ary widely as you travel around the country, so it is hard to pinpoint exact accommodation costs, but most hotels fall somewhere within the following ranges: in budget establishments, single rooms range from Rs 100 to 400, and doubles from Rs 200 to 600; midrange single rooms range from Rs 300 and 1300, and double rooms from Rs 450 to 1800; top-end singles and doubles start from around Rs 1900 and go up to US$150 or more.

Room quality can vary within hotels so try to inspect a few rooms first. Avoid carpeted rooms at cheaper hotels unless you like the smell of mouldy socks. For the low-down on hotel bathrooms, see the p1127. Sound pollution can be a pain (especially in urban centres); pack good-quality earplugs and request a room that doesn't face onto a busy road.

Credit cards are accepted at most top-end hotels and some midrange places; budget hotels require cash. Most hotels ask for an deposit at check in – ask for a receipt and be wary of any request to sign a blank impression of your credit card. If the hotel insists, go to the nearest ATM and pay cash. Verify the check-out time when you check in – some hotels have a fixed check-out time (usually 10am or noon), while others give you 24-hour check out. Reservations by phone without a deposit are usually fine, but call to confirm your booking the day before you arrive.

Be aware that in tourist hot spots (eg Rajasthan, Varanasi), hotels often 'borrow' the name of a thriving competitor to confuse travellers, paying commissions to taxi and rickshaw drivers who bring them unsuspecting customers. Make sure that you know the exact name of your preferred hotel, and confirm

PRACTICALITIES

- Electricity is 230V to 240V, 50 Hz AC, and sockets are the three-round-pin variety (two-pin sockets are also found). Blackouts are common, particularly during the monsoon.
- Officially India is metric. Terms you're likely to hear are: lakhs (one lakh = 100,000) and crores (one crore = 10 million).
- Major English-language dailies include the Hindustan Times, Times of India, Indian Express, Pioneer, Asian Age, Hindu, Statesman, Telegraph and Economic Times. Regional English-language and local-vernacular publications are found nationwide.
- Incisive current-affairs reports are printed in Frontline, India Today, the Week, Sunday and Outlook. For India-related travel articles, get Outlook Traveller.
- The national (government) TV broadcaster is Doordarshan. More people watch satellite and cable TV; English-language channels include BBC, CNN, Star Movies, HBO and MTV. TV programme (and radio) details appear in most major English-language dailies.
- Government-controlled All India Radio (AIR) nationally transmits local and international news. There are also private channels broadcasting news, music, current affairs, talkback and more.

Accommodation Options

As well as conventional hotels, there are some charming guesthouses in traditional village homes and numerous colonial properties displaying faded British Raj charm. Standout options in this book are indicated by our pick.

BUDGET & MIDRANGE HOTELS

Most budget and midrange hotels are modern concrete blocks. Shared bathrooms are usually only found at the cheapest hotels; most places offer rooms with private bathrooms of varying standards, though dripping taps and leaky sinks are common. Most rooms have ceiling fans, and better rooms have electric mosquito killers or window nets, though cheaper rooms may not have windows. Bringing your own sheets (or a sleeping-bag liner) is a sound policy – some cheap places have sheets with more holes and stains than a string vest at an oyster-eating contest. Away from tourist areas, cheaper hotels may not take foreigners because they don't have foreigner-registration forms.

Midrange hotels usually offer comforts such as carpets and TVs, usually with dozens of channels of Bollywood movies as well as an English-language movie channel and international news. Some places offer noisy 'air-coolers' that cool air by blowing it over cold water. They're better than nothing, but no challenge to real air-conditioning.

Not all cheap hotels are characterless. Every so often you stumble across a budget or midrange gem – an old house from the colonial era or the fading wing of a maharaja's palace. In remote mountain areas, the cheapest hotels are often traditional wood or stone houses, with more character and charm than many expensive places.

Note that some cheaper hotels lock their doors at night. Members of staff normally sleep in the lobby but waking them up can be a challenge. Let the hotel know in advance if you are arriving or coming back to your room late in the evening.

CAMPING

There are few official camping sites in India, but campers can usually find hotels with gardens where they can camp for a nominal fee and use the bathroom facilities. Wild camping is often the only accommodation option on trekking routes. In mountain areas, you'll also find summer-only tented camps, with accommodation in semipermanent 'Swiss tents' with attached bathrooms.

BOOK ACCOMMODATION ONLINE

For more accommodation reviews and recommendations by Lonely Planet authors, check out the online booking service at www.lonelyplanet.com. You'll find the insider lowdown on the best places to stay, and reviews are thorough and independent.

DORMITORY ACCOMMODATION

Many hotels have cheap dormitories, though these are often mixed and may be full of drunken drivers – not ideal conditions for single women. Better dorms are found at the handful of hostels run by the YMCA, YWCA and the Salvation Army, and HI-associate hostels. Tourist bungalows run by state governments and railway retiring rooms also offer cheap dorm beds.

GOVERNMENT ACCOMMODATION & TOURIST BUNGALOWS

The Indian government maintains a network of guesthouses for travelling officials and public workers, known variously as rest houses, dak bungalows, circuit houses, PWD (Public Works Department) bungalows and forest rest houses. These places may accept travellers if no government employees need the rooms, but permission is sometimes required from local officials and you'll have to find the chowkidar (attendant) to open the doors.

'Tourist bungalows' are run by state governments – rooms tend to be cheap and clean, and service tends to be friendly but somewhat inefficient. Some state governments also run chains of more expensive hotels, including some fabulous heritage properties. Details are normally available through the state tourism office.

HOMESTAYS & ACCOMMODATION FOR PAYING GUESTS

Staying with a local family is increasingly popular in India. There are guesthouses in cities as well as county areas, and the owners often provide blisteringly authentic home-cooked meals. Standards range from mud-and-stone huts with hole-in-the-floor toilets to comfortable middle-class homes. Contact the local tourist office for lists of families involved in homestay schemes, or see the entries in the regional chapters.

There are homestays all over India. Options in this book include Khajuraho (p679) in Madhya Pradesh; Mysore (p899) in Karnataka; Zanskar and Ladakh (p374) in Jammu and Kashmir; and Allepey (Alappuzha; p985), Kochi (Cochin; p1007), Kollam (Quilon; p979), Kottyam (p985), Munnar (p1000) and Periyar Wildlife Sanctuary (p998) in Kerala.

RAILWAY RETIRING ROOMS

Most large train stations have basic rooms for travellers in possession of an ongoing train ticket or Indrail Pass. Some are awful, others are surprisingly pleasant, but all are noisy from the sound of passengers and trains. Nevertheless, they're useful for early-morning train departures and there is usually a choice of dormitories or private rooms (24-hour checkout).

RESORTS

There are growing numbers of beach resorts in Goa and Kerala offering standard resort facilities, including swimming pools, water sports and organised nightlife. 'Resorts' in the mountains are normally just comfortable upmarket hotels, sometimes with adventure activities and cottages for accommodation.

TEMPLES & PILGRIMS' REST HOUSES

Accommodation is available at some ashrams (spiritual communities or retreats), gurdwaras (Sikh temples) and dharamsalas (pilgrims' guesthouses) for a donation, but these places are mainly there for genuine pilgrims so please exercise judgment about the appropriateness of staying. Always abide by any local protocols on smoking, drinking and making noise.

TOP-END & HERITAGE HOTELS

India has plenty of top-end hotels, from five-star chain hotels to colonial-era palaces that don't even have a classification system (if they did, it would have to be five tiger-skin rugs). Rooms and catering are usually excellent; service can be variable. Many heritage hotels make a special feature of their faded Raj atmosphere, though the museum-like atmosphere appeals to some travellers more than others. Most top-end hotels have rupee rates for Indian guests and separate US dollar rates for foreigners (including Non-Resident Indians, or NRIs). Officially, you are supposed to pay the dollar

CARBON-MONOXIDE POISONING

Some mountain areas rely on charcoal burners for warmth, but these should be avoided due to the risk of fatal carbon-monoxide poisoning. The thick, mattresslike blankets used in mountain areas are amazingly warm once you get beneath the covers. If you're still cold, improvise a hot-water bottle by filling your drinking water with boiled water and covering it with a sock (in the morning, the water can be drunk because it's been purified).

KNOW YOUR BATHROOM

Top-end and midrange hotels in India generally have sit-down toilets with toilet paper supplied. In cheaper hotels, and in places off the tourist trail, squat toilets are the norm and toilet paper is rarely provided. Squat toilets are variously described as 'Indian-style', 'Indian' or 'floor' toilets, while the sit-down variety may be called 'Western' or 'commode' toilets. In a few places, you'll find the curious 'hybrid toilet', a sit-down toilet with footpads on the edge of the bowl.

Terminology for hotel bathrooms varies across India. 'Attached bath', 'private bath' or 'with bath' means that the room has its own ensuite bathroom. 'Common bath', 'no bathroom' or 'shared bath' means communal bathroom facilities down the hall.

Not all rooms have hot water. 'Running', '24-hour' or 'constant' water means that hot water is available around the clock (not always the case in reality). 'Bucket' hot water is only available in buckets (sometimes for free, sometimes for a charge).

Many places use small, wall-mounted electric geysers (water heaters) that need to be switched on an hour before use. Even in rooms with a hot shower, it makes sense to fill the provided bucket with hot water in case the shower suddenly runs cold.

Hotels that advertise 'room with shower' may be misleading you. Sometimes the shower is just a pipe sticking out of the wall. Some hotels surreptitiously disconnect showers to cut costs, while showers at other places render a mere trickle of water.

In this book, hotel rooms have their own private bathroom unless otherwise indicated.

rates in foreign currency or by credit card, but many places will accept rupees adding up to the dollar rate.

The Government of India tourism website, Incredible India (www.incredibleindia.org), has a useful list of palaces, forts and castles that accept paying guests – click on the Royal Retreats heading and browse through the list.

Costs

While it's hard to give an overview of prices, the cheapest rooms usually have shared bathrooms. Rooms with private bathrooms cost around twice as much, and you often get a TV. If there is no running hot water, buckets of hot water can be delivered to your room, either free or for a nominal charge. Pay twice as much again and you'll get air-conditioning (AC). Blackouts are common – midrange and top-end places usually have generators, but check first before paying extra for TV and hot water.

In winter, hotels in the mountain provide gas or electric heaters, or wood for the open fire, for an additional fee. Be careful of charcoal burning fires; see Carbon-Monoxide Poisoning, opposite.

SEASONAL VARIATIONS

Hotels in popular tourist hang-outs crank up their prices in the high season, which usually coincides with the best weather for the area's various sights and activities – normally summertime in the mountains (June to October), and the period before and after the monsoon in the plains (April to June and September to October). In areas popular with foreign tourists, there's an additional peak period over Christmas and New Year. At other times, these hotels offer significant discounts. It's always worth trying your luck and asking for a discount if the hotel seems quiet.

Many temple towns have additional peak seasons around major festivals and pilgrimages. During the Durga Puja festival in October, Bengalis flock to the mountains in their tens of thousands. See the Festivals in… box texts for details of other festivals. For any major festival, make your accommodation arrangements well in advance. Room rates in this book were generally collected outside the peak season, but the regional chapters have details on seasonal rates for individual areas.

TAXES & SERVICE CHARGES

State governments slap a variety of taxes on hotel accommodation, and these are added to the cost of your room, except at the cheapest hotels. Taxes vary from state to state and are detailed in the regional chapters. Many upmarket hotels also levy an additional 'service charge' (usually around 10%). Rates quoted in this book's regional chapters exclude taxes unless otherwise indicated.

Many hotels raise their room tariffs annually – be prepared for a slight increase on the rates we've provided.

BUSINESS HOURS

Official business hours are from 9.30am to 5.30pm Monday to Friday, but many offices open later and close earlier. Government offices may also open on certain Saturdays (usually the first, second and fourth of the month). Most offices have an official lunch hour from around 1pm. Shops generally open around 10am and stay open until 6pm or later; some close on Sunday. Note that curfews apply in some areas, notably Kashmir and the northeast. Airline offices generally keep to standard business hours Monday to Saturday.

Banks are open from 10am to 2pm on weekdays (till 4pm in some areas), and from 10am to noon (or 1pm) on Saturday. Exact branch hours vary from town to town so check locally. Foreign-exchange offices open longer seven days per week.

Main post offices are open from 10am to 5pm on weekdays, and till noon on Saturday. Some larger post offices have a full day on Saturday and a half-day on Sunday.

Restaurant opening hours vary regionally – you can rely on most places to be open from around 8am to 10pm. Exceptions are noted in the regional chapters.

CHILDREN

India is far more accepting of children than most Western nations, but extra caution is required as the normal risks are amplified in these hot and crowded conditions. Pay close attention to hygiene and be very vigilant around traffic. Also keep children away from monkeys and local dogs, which carry all sorts of diseases. See Lonely Planet's Travel with Children, and the travelling with children section of Lonely Planet's Thorn Tree forum (http://thorntree.lonelyplanet.com) for more advice.

Practicalities

ACCOMMODATION

Many hotels have 'family rooms' and almost all will provide an extra bed for a small additional charge, though cots are rare. Upmarket hotels may offer baby-sitting facilities and/or kids' activity programmes – inquire in advance. Upmarket hotels also have cable TV with English-language children's channels (cheaper hotels only have cartoons in Hindi).

DISCOUNTS

On Indian trains, children under four travel free and children aged five to 12 pay half-price. Most airlines charge 10% of the adult far for infants and 50% for under-12s.

Many tourist attractions charge a reduced entry fee for children under 12 (or children aged under 15 in some states).

FOOD & DRINK

Children are welcome in most restaurants, but only upmarket places and fast-food chains have highchairs and children's menus. Across India, nappy-changing facilities are usually restricted to the (often cramped) restaurant toilet. Getting children to eat unfamiliar food is another challenge, though Western fast food is widely available and snack food such as pakoras (deep-fried battered vegetables), dosas (paper-thin lentil-flour pancakes) and finger chips (seasoned potato chips) goes down fairly easily. As long as it is peeled or washed in purified water, fruit can offset the unhealthiness of lots of fried food. Bottled water, cartons of fruit juice and bottles of soft drink are usually safe to drink. Some children also warm to sweet milky chai (tea).

HEALTH

Avoiding stomach upsets is a daily battle – washing hands with soap or rubbing alcohol is your first line of defence (see p1186 for more advice). If your child takes special medication, bring along an adequate stock. Note that rabid animals also pose a risk. Check with a doctor before departure about the correctly recommended jabs and drug courses for children in India.

TRANSPORT

Any long-distance road travel should include plenty of food and toilet stops, particularly on rough roads. Travel sickness is another problem. Children may be expected to give their seat to adults, meaning long journeys with the children on your lap. Note that child seats – or indeed any kind of seat belts – are extremely rare.

Trains are usually the most comfortable mode of travel, especially for long trips. Internal air travel can save time and tempers.

TRAVEL WITH INFANTS

Standard baby products such as nappies (diapers) and milk powder are available in most large cities and tourist centres. If you've got a fussy baby, consider bringing powdered milk or baby food from home. Also bring along high-factor sunscreen, a snug-fitting wide-brimmed hat and a washable changing mat for covering dirty surfaces. Breast-feeding in public is generally not condoned by Indian society.

Sights & Activities

Allow a few days at the start of your trip for your child to acclimatise to India's explosion of sights, smells, tastes and sounds before beginning any trips around the country. Some destinations are better for children than others – Delhi (p127) has a number of child-friendly museums and the atmospheric Red Fort sound-and-light show.

There are more good museums in Bengaluru (Bangalore; p886), Chennai (Madras; p1033), Kolkata (Calcutta; p502) and Mumbai (Bombay; p781), some of which have child-friendly interpretive displays. Old-fashioned planetariums are found in Chennai (p1035), Guwahati (p598), Hyderabad (p943) and Kolkata (p493).

Theme parks and water parks are taking off in a big way in India – head to Ahmedabad (p722), Bengaluru (p894), Kanyakumari (p1087) and Nainital (p475).

Children will also enjoy spotting India's exotic beasties – some of the country's zoos are depressing but there are better-than-average zoos in (or near) Darjeeling (p536), Mumbai (p779), Thiruvananthapuram (Trivandrum; p965), Bengaluru (p894) and Lucknow (p416). Wildlife safaris, particularly those offering elephant rides, are also worth considering (see p91).

Beaches make great family outings. The best are found in Kerala, Goa, Karnataka and Gujarat. Goa, in particular, is very well set up for beach water sports. Skiing is possible in Himachal Pradesh (p292 and p317), Uttarakhand (Uttaranchal; p470) and Kashmir (p360).

Hill stations offer peaceful forest picnics, cooler weather and family-friendly activities such as paddle boating and pony rides. Top spots include Ooty (Udhagamandalam; p1098), Mussoorie (p450), Kodaikanal (p1089), Mt Abu (p229), Shimla (p282), Nainital (p474) and Darjeeling (p530).

India's bounty of festivals may also capture your child's imagination, although some will be spooked by the crowds. For festival details see p1136, and the Festivals in… boxed texts at the start of regional chapters.

CLIMATE CHARTS

India is so vast that climatic conditions in the far north have little relation to those of the extreme south. Generally speaking, the country has a three-season year – the hot, the wet and the cool. See p1130 for climate charts.

COURSES

You can learn all sorts of new skills in India, from yoga and meditation to Indian cooking and Hindi. To find out about local courses, inquire at tourist offices, ask fellow travellers, and browse local newspapers and notice boards. See p90 for courses in adventure sports and holistic activities, and p115 for cooking courses.

Arts & Crafts

Interesting arts and crafts courses:

Madhya Pradesh & Chhattisgarh The NGO SAATHI offers courses in Bastar tribal arts near Jagdalpur (p713).

Rajasthan Jaipur (p172), Jhunjhunu (p189) and Udaipur (p222) have painting courses; Jaipur also has pottery classes.

Languages

Language courses need time to give lasting benefits – some courses ask for a minimum time commitment. The following places offer courses:

Delhi Basic Hindi classes at Delhi's Central Hindi Directorate (p138).

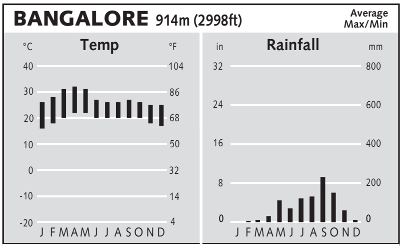
Himachal Pradesh Long and short courses in Tibetan in McLeod Ganj (p325).

Kerala Short courses in Malayalam, Hindi and Sanskrit at Vijnana Kala Vedi Cultural Centre (p987) near Kottayam.

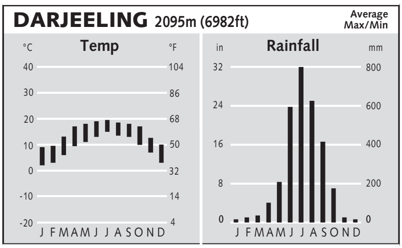
Mumbai Beginners' courses in Hindi, Marathi and Sanskrit at Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan (p781).

Tamil Nadu Hindi and Tamil courses in Chennai (p1036).

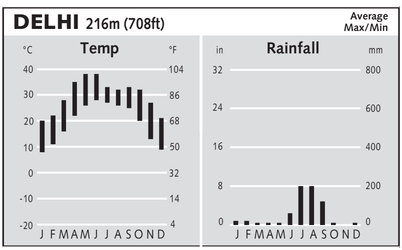
Uttar Pradesh Hindi courses at the Bhasha Bharati Language Institute (p432) in Varanasi.



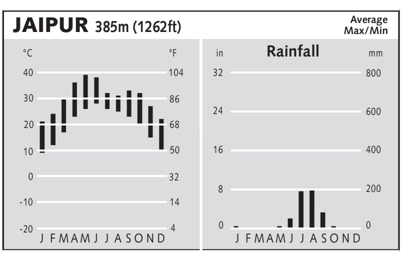
Uttarakhand Hindi courses at schools in Mussoorie (p451).



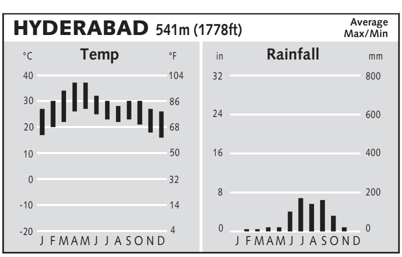
West Bengal Three- to nine-month Tibetan language courses in Darjeeling (p538) from March to December.



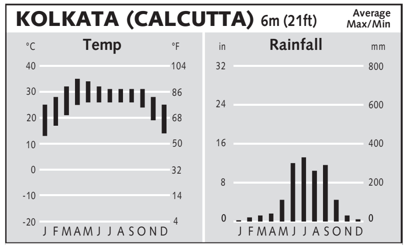
Martial Arts

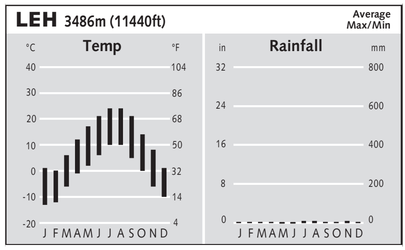


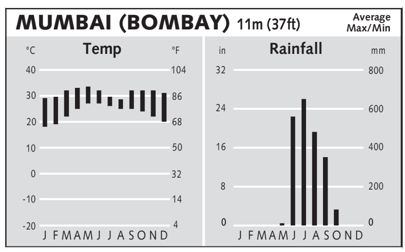
Courses are available in the traditional Keralan martial art of kalarippayat – a form of sword and shield fighting incorporating elements of Ayurveda and marma (the precursor to Chinese acupressure massage).

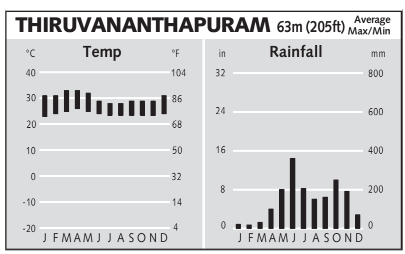


Major centres include the Vijnana Kala Vedi Cultural Centre (p987) in Kottayam and the CVN Kalari Sangham centre (p966) in Trivandrum.









Music & Performing Arts

Indian music follows different rules to Western music, so allow several weeks to get any benefit from music courses. Most centres provide instruments, but invest in your own if you mean to continue to play at home; see p1146 for information about shops selling musical instruments.

Goa Courses in classical Indian singing and tabla in Arambol (p867).

Gujarat Classical Indian dance classes in Ahmedabad (p723).
Himachal Pradesh Various courses in Indian classical music in McLeod Ganj (p324) and Bhagsu (p329).
Karnataka Classical Indian dance classes at Nrityagram (p894) in Hessaraghatta, and tabla (pair of drums) classes at Shruthi Musical Works (p899) in Mysore.
Kerala Courses in kathakali (traditional Keralan dance opera) and kootiattam (traditional Sanskrit drama) in Trivandrum (p966), and dance centres near Thrissur (p1017) and Kottayam (p987).
Kolkata Aurobindo Bhawan (p502) offers classical Indian dance classes.
Rajasthan Tabla, flute, singing and Kathak (Indian classical dance) courses in Pushkar (p193), Jaipur (p172), Udaipur (p222) and Jodhpur (p237).
Tamil Nadu Courses in bharathanatiyam (dance), singing and various musical instruments in Puducherry (Pondicherry; p1060); Kalakshetra Arts Village (p1040) in Chennai offers courses in classical Tamil dance and music.
Uttar Pradesh Sitar (stringed instrument), tabla and classical dance classes in Varanasi (p432).
Uttarakhand Classical dance and musical instrument classes in Rishikesh (p463).

Yoga & Holistic Courses

India has thousands of yoga centres offering courses and daily classes as well as courses in Ayurveda, meditation and other therapies. See p100 for more information.

CUSTOMS

Visitors are allowed to bring 1L each of wine and spirits and 200 cigarettes or 50 cigars or 250g of tobacco into India duty free. Officials may ask tourists to enter expensive items such as video cameras and laptop computers on a 'Tourist Baggage Re-export' form to ensure they are taken out of India when you depart. There are no duty-free allowances when entering India from Nepal.

Technically you're supposed to declare any amount of cash or travellers cheques over US$10,000 on arrival, and rupees should not be taken out of India. However, this is rarely policed. There are additional restrictions on the export of antiques and products made from animals; see p1147.

DANGERS & ANNOYANCES

India has an unenviable reputation for crime and scams, but most problems can be avoided with a bit of common sense and an appropriate amount of caution. Scams change as dodgy characters try to stay ahead of the game, so chat with other travellers and tourism officials to stay abreast of the latest hazards. Also see the India branch of Lonely Planet's Thorn Tree forum (http://thorntree.lonelyplanet.com), where travellers often post warnings about problems they've encountered on the road.

Women travellers should also read the advice on p1160.

Contaminated Food & Drink

In past years, some private medical clinics have provided patients with more treatment than necessary to procure larger payments from travel insurance companies – get a second opinion if possible. In the late 1990s, several travellers were killed in a dangerous food scam in Agra and Varanasi after being fed food spiked with bacteria by restaurants linked to dodgy clinics. This scam has thankfully been quashed, but there's always the chance it could reappear.

Most bottled water is legit, but always ensure the lid seal is intact and check that the bottom of the bottle hasn't been tampered with. Crush plastic bottles after use to prevent them being misused later, or better still, bring along water-purification tablets or a filtration system to avoid adding to India's plastic-waste mountain.

Drugs

Marijuana and other 'recreational' drugs are widely available in India, and highly illegal. A few towns allow the legal sale of bhang (marijuana) for religious reasons, but elsewhere, courts treat possession of cannabis as severely as possession of heroin.

If you do choose to take drugs, use your common sense. Be aware that the police target foreign drug users in bribe scams. Bhang is frequently administered in food and drinks that can be incredibly potent, leaving intoxicated travellers vulnerable to robbery or accidents.

In the Kullu region of Himachal Pradesh, dozens of travellers have disappeared or been murdered in the hills, with suspicion falling on local drug gangs; see Warning – Fatal Vacations, p303. Don't assume strangers are harmless because they share your interest in drugs.

For more information, see p1140.

Festivals

The sheer mass of humanity at India's festivals provides an incredible spectacle, but every year pilgrims are crushed or trampled to death on temple processions and train platforms. Be extra careful around large crowds at these times, and travel on conventional trains rather than special pilgrim services.

Care is also needed during the Holi festival (p1137). Foreigners get doused with water and coloured dye like everyone else, and a few people have been scarred by dodgy chemicals. Consider buying a cheap set of throwaway clothes specifically for this festival. There's also a tradition of guzzling alcohol and bhang at many festivals, and female travellers have been groped by spaced-out blokes. It's wise to seek a companion before venturing onto the streets at festival time.

Noise

Shouting, traffic noise, leaky plumbing and loud music can all add up to a waking nightmare for light sleepers. Bring earplugs and request rooms that face away from busy roads. Earplugs are also useful on public transport to avoid being deafened by noisy engines and tape players. During the tourist season, Indian holidaymakers travel in large groups and knock randomly on hotel room doors looking for members of their party – lock your door if you don't want people to walk in uninvited!

Rebel Violence

Like many countries, India has a number of armed groups fighting for increased political representation. These groups employ the same tried and tested techniques of terrorist groups everywhere – assassinations and bomb attacks on government infrastructure, public transport, religious centres, tourist resorts and markets. Most attacks are linked to small shifts in the political situation, which visitors may not be aware of as they travel around the country.

Most of the time, India is no more dangerous than anywhere else, but certain areas are particularly prone to insurgent violence – specifically Kashmir, the northeast states and Bihar. India has also been hit by a number of random bomb attacks on major cities, linked to the situation in Kashmir and global Islamic fundamentalism.

International terrorism is as much of a risk in Europe or America, so this is no reason not to travel to India, but it makes sense to check the local security situation carefully before travelling to high-risk areas. People involved in tourism rarely admit the dangers, while embassies often exaggerate the risks – the best sources of information are international charities and local news sources. Useful resources are listed in the chapters for Kashmir (p352), the northeast states (p595) and Bihar (p551), but you can find additional information by searching for keywords such as 'Kashmir' (or Bihar, Assam, Tripura, Nagaland etc) and 'violence' on Google.

Scams

India is notorious for scams designed to separate travellers from their money, often with the promise of a chance to get rich quick. Don't be fooled – any deal that sounds to good to be true invariably is.

Be highly suspicious of claims that you can purchase goods cheaply in India and sell them easily at a profit elsewhere. Precious stones and carpets are favourites for this con. Operators who practise such schemes are deceptively friendly and after buttering you up with invitations to their home, free meals etc, they begin pouring out sob stories about not being able to obtain an export licence. And therein lies the opportunity for you to 'get rich quick' – by carrying or mailing the goods home and selling them to the trader's overseas representatives at a profit. Many can provide forged testimonials from other travellers. Without exception, the goods are worth a fraction of what you paid and the 'representatives' never materialise. See p177 for more details.

It also pays to be cautious when sending goods home. Shops have been known to swap high-value items for junk when posting goods to home addresses. If you have any doubts, send the package yourself from the post office. Be very careful when paying for souvenirs with a credit card. Government shops are usually legitimate; private souvenir shops have a reputation for secretly running off extra copies of the credit-card imprint slip, which will be used for phoney transactions after you have left the shop. Insist that the trader carries out any credit-card transaction on the counter in front of you. Alternatively, take out cash from an ATM and avoid the risk.

While it's only a minority of traders who are involved in dishonest schemes, many souvenir vendors are involved in the commission racket (opposite).

Swimming

Beaches can have dangerous rips and currents and there are drowning deaths each year. Always check locally before swimming anywhere in the sea and be careful of currents when swimming in any rivers, including the sacred Ganges River at Rishikesh.

Transport Scams

Many private travel agencies make extra money by scamming travellers for tours and travel tickets. Make sure you are clear what is included in the price of any tour (get this in writing) to avoid charges for hidden 'extras' later on.

Be cautious of anyone offering tours to Kashmir in Delhi and other traveller centres. Some travel agents exploit travellers' safety concerns to make extra cash from tours that you can do just as easily (and safely) on public transport. Always check the security situation before you travel and make your own tour arrangements after you arrive to cut out these dodgy middlemen.

Tours to Srinagar's houseboats from Delhi should definitely be avoided. Some travellers have reported virtually being held prisoner and charged hundreds of dollars for unwanted extras (see p357).

When buying a bus, train or plane ticket anywhere other than the registered office of the transport company, make certain you are getting the ticket class you paid for. It is not uncommon for travellers to book a deluxe bus or AC train berth and arrive to find a bog-standard ordinary bus or a less comfortable sleeper seat.

Theft & Druggings

Theft is a risk in India, as it is anywhere else. On buses and trains, keep luggage securely locked (minipadlocks and chains are available at most train stations) and lock your bags to the metal baggage racks or the wire loops found under seats; padlocking your bags to the roof racks on buses is also a sensible policy.

Thieves tend to target popular tourist train routes, such as Delhi to Agra. Be extra alert just before the train departs; thieves often take advantage of the confusion and crowds. Airports are another place to exercise caution; after a long flight you're unlikely to be at your most alert.

Occasionally, tourists (especially those travelling solo) are drugged and robbed during train or bus journeys; a friendly stranger strikes up conversation, offers you a spiked drink (to send you to sleep), then makes off with everything you have. Politely decline drinks or food offered by strangers – stomach upsets are a convenient excuse.

Unfortunately some travellers make their money go further by helping themselves to other peoples – take care in dormitories. For lost credit cards, immediately call the international lost/stolen number; for lost/stolen travellers cheques, contact the Amex or Thomas Cook office in Delhi (p125).

A good travel-insurance policy is essential (see p1139); keep the emergency contact details handy and familiarise yourself with the claims procedure. Keep photocopies of your passport, including the visa page, separately from your passport (these are also useful for obtaining permits), as well as a copy of your airline ticket. You could also email scans to yourself.

The safest place for your money and your passport is next to your skin, either in a money belt or a secure pouch under your shirt. If you carry your money in a wallet, keep it in your front trouser pocket, never the back pocket (the 'pickpocket's friend'). Bum bags are often targeted by thieves as they are usually full of goodies.

It is usually wise to peel off at least US$100 and store it away separately from your main stash; however, keep your main stash and other valuables on your person. Also, separate big notes from small bills so you don't publicly display large wads of cash when paying for services or checking into hotels.

In dodgy-looking hotels, put your money belt under your pillow when you sleep, and never leave your valuable documents and travellers cheques in your hotel room when you go out (even under your mattress). Better hotels will have a safe for valuables, and the YMCA and other hostels normally provide a locker where you can use your own padlock. For peace of mind, you may also want to use your own padlock in hotels where doors are locked with a padlock (common in cheaper hotels). If you cannot lock your hotel room securely from the inside at night, stay somewhere else.

Touts & Commission Agents

With so many businesses dependent on tourism, competition is cut-throat. Many hotels and shops drum up extra business by paying commission to local fixers who bring tourists through the doors. These places tend to be unpopular for a reason – prices will invariably be raised (by as much as 50%!) to pay the fixer's commission. To get around this, ask taxis or rickshaws to drop you at a landmark rather than your real destination, so you can walk in alone and pay the normal price.

Train and bus stations are often swarming with touts – if anyone asks if this your first trip to India, say you've been here several times, as this is usually a ruse to gauge your vulnerability. You'll often hear stories about the hotels that refuse to pay commissions being 'full', 'under renovation' or 'closed'. Check things out yourself. Be very sceptical of phrases like 'my brother's shop' and 'special deal at my friend's place'.

On the flip side, touts can be beneficial if you arrive in a town without a hotel reservation when some big festival is on, or during the peak season – they'll know which places have beds.

Trekking

Trekking off the beaten track always carries risks and India is poorly set up for independent trekkers. We strongly recommend hiring local guides and porters or joining an organised trek before heading off into potentially dangerous terrain; see p97 for more information.

DISCOUNTS

Seniors

Indian Airlines and Sahara Airlines offer 50% discounts on domestic air travel for foreign travellers aged 65 or over; Jet Airways offers 25% off. However, promotional fares and tickets on budget airlines are often cheaper than discounted full fares. Ask travel agents about discounts on other air carriers. If you're over 60, you're entitled to a 30% discount on the cost of train travel. Bring your passport as proof of age.

Student & Youth Travel

Student cards are of limited use nowadays as most concessions are based on age. Hostels run by the Indian Youth Hostels Association are part of the HI network; an HI card sometimes entitles you to discount rates. YMCA/YWCA members also receive discounts on accommodation.

Foreigners aged 30 or under receive a 25% discount on domestic air tickets. Again, this applies to full-price tickets, so standard fares for budget airlines may be cheaper still. Students studying in India get 50% off train fares.

YOUR OWN EMBASSY

It's important to realise what your own embassy – the embassy of the country of which you are a citizen – can and can't do to help you if you get into trouble.

Generally speaking, it won't be much help in emergencies if the trouble you're in is remotely your own fault. Remember that you are bound by the laws of India. Your embassy will not be sympathetic if you end up in jail after committing a crime locally, even if such actions are legal in your own country.

In genuine emergencies you might get some assistance, but only if other channels have been exhausted. Do not expect hand-outs. New passports can be issued, but a loan for travel home and is exceedingly unlikely – the embassy would expect you to have insurance.

FESTIVALS & EVENTS

India officially follows the European Gregorian calendar but most holidays and festivals follow the Indian or Tibetan lunar calendars, tied to the cycle of the moon, or the Islamic calendar, which shifts forward 11 days each year (12 days in leap years). As a result, the exact dates of festivals change from year to year.

The India-wide holidays and festivals listed here are arranged according to the Indian lunar calendar, starting in Chaitra (March or April). Contact local tourist offices for exact dates or check the web – http://festivals.iloveindia.com and www.festivalsofindia.in have extensive listings, or you can visit the regional websites for the state governments, listed on http://india.gov.in/knowindia/districts.php.

The 'wedding season' falls in the cooler period from November to March. During this period you're likely to see at least one wedding procession on the street, with the groom dressed in finery on the back of a horse, and a brass band carrying electric lights on modified hats.

The following represent major national festivals; for details of regional festivals, see the Festivals in… boxed texts at the beginning of regional chapters.

Chaitra (March/April)

Mahavir Jayanti Jain festival commemorating the birth of Mahavira, the founder of Jainism.

Ramanavami Hindus celebrate the birth of Rama with processions, music and feasting, and readings and enactments of scenes from the Ramayana.

Easter Christian holiday marking the Crucifixion and Resurrection of Jesus Christ.

Eid-Milad-un-Nabi Islamic festival celebrating the birth of the Prophet Mohammed; it falls on 20 March 2008, 9 March 2009 and 26 February 2010.

Vaisakha (April/May)

Buddha Jayanti Celebrating Buddha's birth, enlightenment and attainment of nirvana (final release from the cycle of existence); it can fall in May, April or early June.

Jyaistha (May/June)

Only regional festivals fall in this period; see the regional chapters for details.

Asadha (June/July)

Rath Yatra (Car Festival) Effigies of Lord Jagannath (Vishnu as lord of the world) are hauled through cities on man-powered chariots, most famously in Puri (p645) in Orissa.

Sravana (July/August)

Naag Panchami Hindu festival dedicated to Ananta, the serpent upon whose coils Vishnu rested between universes.

KUMBH MELA

Held four times every 12 years at locations that hopscotch around the plains, the Kumbh Mela is the largest religious congregation on earth. This vast celebration attracts tens of millions of Hindu pilgrims, including mendicant Nagas (naked spiritual men) from militant Hindu monastic orders. The Kumbh Mela doesn't belong to any particular caste or creed – devotees from all branches of Hinduism come together to experience the electrifying sensation of mass belief and to take a ceremonial dip in the sacred Ganges, Shipra or Godavari rivers. Teams of astrologers gather every Kumbh to pinpoint the most auspicious moment for the mass bathing to begin.

The origins of the festival go back to the battle for supremacy between good and evil. In the Hindu creation myths, the gods and demons fought a great battle for a kumbh (pitcher) containing the nectar of immortality. Vishnu got hold of the container and spirited it away, but in flight four drops spilt on the earth – at Allahabad, Haridwar, Nasik and Ujjain. Kumbh Mela celebrations are held every 12 years in all of these four cities; effectively there's a Kumbh Mela every four years in one city. Allahabad hosts the even larger Maha (Great) Kumbh Mela, with even bigger crowds.

The last Maha Kumbh Mela took place in Allahabad in 2001, attracting around 100 million celebrants – equivalent to a third of the population of America or 30 times the number of people who attend the annual haj (pilgrimage to Mecca). Controlling these multitudes takes thousands of officials, and vast tent cities are erected to provide accommodation and meals for the devotees. The Kumbh is invariably an international media circus, with news agencies from around the globe competing for the best shot of the naked Nagas leading the charge into the river.

The schedule for Kumbh Melas can be bewildering because of the overlapping cycles, but the next Kumbh Mela is at Haridwar in 2010. You can find dates and general information on the website www.kumbhamela.net.

Snakes are venerated as totems against monsoon flooding and other evils.

Raksha Bandhan (Narial Purnima) On the full moon, girls fix amulets known as rakhis to the wrists of brothers and male friends to protect them in the coming year. Brothers reciprocate with gifts. Some people also worship the Vedic sea god Varuna.

Bhadra (August/September)

Independence Day This public holiday (15 August) marks the anniversary of India's Independence in 1947. Celebrations are a countrywide outpouring of patriotic sentiment.

Drukpa Teshi A Buddhist festival celebrating the first teaching given by Siddhartha Gautama.

Ganesh Chaturthi Hindus celebrate the birth of the elephant-headed god, Ganesh, with verve, particularly in Mumbai. Clay idols of Ganesh are paraded through the streets before being ceremonially immersed in rivers, tanks (reservoirs) or the sea.

Janmastami The anniversary of Krishna's birth is celebrated with wild abandon, particularly in Krishna's birthplace Mathura.

Shravan Purnima On this day of fasting, high-caste Hindus replace the sacred thread looped over their left shoulder.

Pateti Parsis celebrate the Zoroastrian new year at this time, particularly in Mumbai.

Ramadan (Ramazan) Thirty days of dawn-to-dusk fasting mark the ninth month of the Islamic calendar, when the Quran was revealed to the Prophet Mohammed; fast starts on 1 September 2008, 22 August 2009 and 11 August 2010.

Asvina (September/October)

Navratri (Festival of Nine Nights) This Hindu festival leading up to Dussehra celebrates the goddess Durga in all her incarnations. Special dances are held, and the goddesses Lakshmi and Saraswati also get special praise. Festivities are particularly vibrant in Gujarat and Maharashtra.

Dussehra (Durga Puja) A Vaishnavite festival, celebrating the victory of the Hindu god Rama over the demon-king Ravana and the triumph of good over evil. Dussehra is big in Kullu (p303) and Mysore (p897), where effigies of Ravana and his cohorts are ritually burned.

Durga Puja Also symbolising the triumph of good over evil, Durga Puja commemorates the victory of the goddess Durga over buffalo-headed demon Mahishasura. Celebrations take place on the same dates as Dussehra, particularly in Bengal (p521), where thousands of images of the goddess are displayed then ritually immersed in rivers, tanks and the sea.

Gandhi Jayanti This public holiday is a solemn celebration of Mohandas Gandhi's birth on 2 October, with prayer meetings at Gandhi's cremation site in Delhi.

Eid al-Fitr Muslims celebrate the end of Ramadan with three days of festivities, starting 30 days after the start of the fast.

Kartika (October/November)

Diwali (Deepavaali) On the 15th day of Kartika, Hindus celebrate the 'festival of lights' for five days, giving gifts, lighting fireworks, and burning butter and oil lamps to lead Rama home from exile.

Govardhana Puja A Vaishnavite Hindu festival celebrating the lifting of Govardhan Hill by Krishna; it's celebrated by Krishna devotees around India.

Aghan (November/December)

Nanak Jayanti The birthday of Guru Nanak, the founder of Sikhism, is celebrated with prayer readings and processions.

Eid al-Adha Muslims commemorate Ibrahim's readiness sacrifice his son to God; the festival falls on 20 December 2007, 8 December 2008, 27 November, 2009 and 16 November 2010.

Pausa (December/January)

Christmas Day Christians celebrate the birth of Jesus Christ on 25 December.

Losar Tibetan New Year – celebrated by Tantric Buddhists all over India, particularly in Himachal Pradesh, Sikkim, Ladakh and Zanskar. Exact dates vary from region to region.

Magha (January/February)

Republic Day This public holiday, celebrated on 26 January, commemorates the founding of the Republic of India in 1950; the most spectacular celebrations are held in Delhi, which holds a huge military parade along Rajpath and the Beating of the Retreat ceremony three days later.

Pongal A four-day Tamil festival marking the end of the harvest season. Families in the south prepare pots of pongal (a mixture of rice, sugar, dhal and milk), symbolic of prosperity and abundance, then feed them to decorated and adorned cattle.

Vasant Panchami Honouring Saraswati, the goddess of learning, Hindus dress in yellow and place books, musical instruments and other educational objects in front of idols of the goddess to receive her blessing.

Phalguna (February/March)

Holi One of the most exuberant festivals in North India; Hindus celebrate the beginning of spring by throwing coloured water and gulal (powder) at anyone within range. On the night before Holi, bonfires are built to symbolise the destruction of the evil demon Holika.

Muharram Shi'ia Muslims commemorate the martyrdom of the Prophet Mohammed's grandson Imam; the festival starts on 10 January 2008, 29 December 2009 and 18 December 2010.

Shivaratri This day of Hindu fasting recalls the tandava (cosmic dance) of Lord Shiva. Temple processions are followed by the chanting of mantras and anointing of linga (phallic images of Shiva).

FOOD

Nowhere in the world makes such an inspired use of spices as India. To get a taste of what's on offer, check out p104 and the Eating sections of the regional chapters. As well as sampling restaurants, look out for all the wonderful street stalls, snack joints, market vendors, takeaway counters and sweet shops that make eating on the move in India such a pleasure. Places to eat are generally open from early morning (or lunchtime) to late at night; see p1128 and the Eating sections for more information.

GAY & LESBIAN TRAVELLERS

Technically, homosexual relations for men are illegal in India and the penalties for transgression can theoretically be up to life imprisonment. There's no law against lesbian sexual relations. Ironically, private homosexuality is quite common because of the strict separation of unmarried men and women in Indian society, but talking openly about this is taboo.

Foreigners are unlikely to be targeted by India's homosexuality laws, but Indian gays have been campaigning against this legislation for years. The campaign to repeal 'Section 377' has attracted some high profile supporters, including Amartya Sen and Vikram Seth.

There are low-key gay scenes in Mumbai, Delhi, Kolkata, Bengaluru and Chandigarh, but India is a conservative society and physical contact and public displays of affection are generally frowned on for heterosexual couples as well as gay and lesbian couples. In fact, men holding hands is far more common than heterosexual couples holding hands, though this is generally a sign of friendship rather than sexual orientation.

See p60 for more information.

Publications & Websites

The Mumbai publication Bombay Dost is a gay-and-lesbian magazine available from 105A Veena-Beena Shopping Centre, Bandra West, Mumbai, and from bookshops in more progressive Indian cities.

For further information about India's gay scene, point your web browser towards Indian Dost (www.indiandost.com/gay.php), Gay Bombay (www.gaybombay.org), Humrahi (www.geocities.com/WestHollywood/Heights/7258) and Humsafar (www.humsafar.org).

Support Groups

Several organisations in Bengaluru offer support to the gay-and-lesbian community. A weekly support group for gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender people is run by Good As You (☎ 080-22230959; www.sawnet.org/orgns/good_as_you.html; Bengaluru).

The NGO Swabhava (☎ 080-22230959; http://swabhava_trust.tripod.com; 54 Nanjappa Rd, Shanthinagar, Bengaluru 560027) works directly with issues affecting lesbians, gays, bisexuals and transsexuals through research, documentation, advocacy and training programmes. Volunteers are welcome.

Sangama (☎ 080-22868680; www.sangamaonline.org; Flat 13, Royal Park Apartments, 34 Park Rd, Tasker Town, Bengaluru 560051) deals with crisis intervention and provides a community outreach service for gay and bisexual men and women, transgenders and hijras (transvestites and eunuchs).

In Kolkata the Counsel Club (☎ 033-23598130; counselclub93@hotmail.com; c/o Ranjan, Post Bag No 794, Kolkata 700017) provides support for gays, lesbians and bisexuals, and arranges monthly meetings; contact the organisation for details. The associated Palm Avenue Integration Society (pawan30@yahoo.com; c/o Pawan, Post Bag No 10237, Kolkata) offers health advice for lesbians, gay men, bisexuals and transgender individuals. There's also a library service; opening times and directions are by request.

In Chennai, Sahodaran (☎ 044-8252869; www.sahodaran.faithweb.com; 127 Sterling Rd, Nungambakkam, Chennai), a support group for gay men, holds social-group meetings weekly (in English); contact the office for details.

HOLIDAYS

In India there are officially three national public holidays: Republic Day (26 January), Independence Day (15 August) and Gandhi Jayanti (2 October). Every state celebrates its own official holidays, which cover bank holidays for government workers as well as major religious festivals – usually Diwali, Dussehra and Holi (Hindu), Nanak Jayanti (Sikh), Eid al-Fitr (Muslim), Mahavir Jayanti (Jain), Buddha Jayanti (Buddhist) and Easter and Christmas (Christian). For more on religious festivals, see p1136.

Most businesses (offices, shops etc) and tourist sites close on public holidays, but transport is usually unaffected as many locals travel for religious celebrations. Make transport and hotel reservations well in advance if you intend visiting during major festivals.

INSURANCE

Every traveller should take out travel insurance – if you can't afford it, you definitely can't afford the consequences if something does go wrong. Make sure that your policy covers theft of property and medical treatment, as well as air evacuation. Be aware that some policies place restrictions on potentially dangerous activities such as scuba diving, skiing, motorcycling, trekking, paragliding and climbing. When hiring a motorcycle in India, make sure the rental policy includes at least third-party insurance; see p1175.

There are hundreds of different policies so read the small print carefully and make sure your activities are covered. In some areas, trekking agents will only accept customers who have cover for emergency helicopter evacuation. Some policies pay doctors and hospitals directly; others expect you to pay upfront and claim the money back later (keep all documentation for your claim). It is crucial to get a police report in India if you've had anything stolen; insurance companies may refuse to reimburse you without one. Also see p1181.

Worldwide coverage for travellers from over 44 countries is available online at www.lonelyplanet.com/travel_services.

INTERNET ACCESS

Internet cafés are widespread in India and connections are usually quite fast, except in more remote areas. Bandwidth load tend to be lowest in the morning and early afternoon. Internet charges vary regionally, but most places charge between Rs 10 and 60 per hour, usually with a 15-minute minimum.

It's a good idea to write and save your messages in a text application before pasting them into your browser – power cuts are common and all too often your hard-crafted email can vanish into the ether. Be wary of sending sensitive financial information from internet cafés; some places use keystroke-capturing technology to steal passwords and read emails. Using online banking on any nonsecure system is generally a bad idea.

If you're travelling with a laptop most internet cafés can supply you with internet access over a LAN Ethernet cable, or you can join an international roaming service with an Indian dial-up number, or take out an account with a local Internet Service Provider (ISP). Major ISPs in India include Sify (www.sify.com/products), BSNL (www.bsnl.co.in) and VSNL/Tata Indicom (www.vsnl.in). Make sure your modem is compatible with the telephone and dial-up system in India (an external global modem may be necessary).

Another useful investment in India is a fuse-protected universal AC adaptor to protect your circuit board from power surges. Plug adaptors are widely available throughout India, but bring spare plug fuses from home. Wi-fi access is available in many luxury hotels and some coffees hops in modernised cities, but security is a consideration – never send credit-card details or other personal data over a wireless connection. For more information on travelling with a portable computer see www.teleadapt.com.

In this book, hotels offering internet access to guests are marked by . See also p27 for useful web resources about India.

LAUNDRY

Most hotels offer a same- or next-day laundry service, and private laundries are plentiful in tourist areas. Most employ the services of dhobi-wallahs – washermen and women who will diligently bash your wet clothes against rocks and scrubbing boards, returning them spotlessly clean and ironed, but maybe missing a few buttons. If you don't think your gear will stand up to the treatment, wash them yourself or give them to a drycleaner. Washing powder can be bought cheaply virtually everywhere.

Most laundries and hotels charge per item (you'll be required to submit a list with your dirty clothes) or by dry weight. Hand clothes in before 9am if you want them back the same day. It can take longer to dry clothes during the humid monsoon. Note that many hotels ban washing clothes in their rooms.

LEGAL MATTERS

If you're in a sticky legal situation, immediately contact your embassy (p1134). However, be aware that all your embassy may be able to do is monitor your treatment in custody and arrange a lawyer. In the Indian justice system, the burden of proof is on the accused and long stays in prison before trial are common.

You should carry your passport at all times; police are entitled to ask your for identification in all sorts of situations. Corruption is rife

BEWARE BHANG LASSIS!

Although it's rarely printed in menus, many restaurants in tourist centres will clandestinely whip up a bhang lassi, a yoghurt and iced-water beverage laced with cannabis. Commonly dubbed 'special lassi', this often potent concoction can cause a drawn-out high that verges on delirium and lasts for many hours. Many travellers have been badly hurt in accidents or been robbed of all their possessions after drinking this risky brew.

so the less you have to do with local police the better (unless getting a written police report for your insurance company in the event of theft).

If you are asked for a bribe, the prevailing wisdom is to pay it, as the alternative can be a trumped-up prosecution. The problem is knowing how much to pay – it's better not to put yourself in a situation where you might be asked for a bribe.

Drugs

India is famous – or notorious – for recreational drugs such as marijuana and hashish, and many travellers visit India specifically for this reason. Possession of any illegal drug is treated as a serious criminal offence. If convicted, the minimum sentence is 10 years, with no chance of remission or parole.

Cases can take several years to appear before a court, while the accused waits in prison, and there's usually a hefty monetary fine on top of any custodial sentence. The police have been getting particularly tough on foreigners who use drugs, so you should take this risk very seriously.

Note that travellers are frequently targeted in sting operations (usually for bribes) in Manali and other backpacker centres. Marijuana grows wild throughout India, but picking and smoking it is still an offence, except in towns where bhang is legally sold for religious rituals.

Antisocial Behaviour

Like many Western countries, India has started clamping down on antisocial behaviour. Smoking in public is now illegal in Delhi, Shimla, Gangtok and all of Kerala, and a number of cities have also banned spitting and littering. The punishment for breaking these rules is a stiff (for locals) fine of at least Rs 100. This is variably enforced, but the police do have the power, so heed the street signs.

So far, restaurants are exempt from the smoking ban, but smoking is banned on the Delhi Metro and many other forms of public transport, and the penalties for breaking the ban are enforced. There are plans to eventually make the whole country smoke free, though this is highly unpopular with locals.

MAPS

Maps available inside India are fairly poor and some locally printed maps contain deliberate errors to confuse would-be invaders. Better map series include TTK Discover India, covering states and cities; Nest & Wings (www.nestwings.com) for maps and guidebooks; and Eicher (maps.eicherworld.com) for street atlases and city maps. The Kolkata-based Survey of India (www.surveyofindia.gov.in) also publishes decent city, state and country maps, but some titles are restricted for security reasons. Nelles (www.nelles-verlag.de) also produces good maps covering various regions of India. All of these maps are available at good bookshops, or you can buy them online from Delhi's India Map Store (www.indiamapstore.com).

Throughout India, state-government tourist offices stock local maps, which are often dated and lacking in essential detail, but are good enough for general orientation.

MONEY

The Indian rupee (Rs) is divided into 100 paise (p), but paise coins are increasingly rare. Coins come in denominations of 5, 10, 20, 25 and 50 paise, and Rs 1, 2 and 5; notes come in Rs 10, 20, 50, 100, 500 and 1000 (this last bill can be hard to change outside banks). The Indian rupee is linked to a basket of currencies and its value is generally stable; see the inside front cover of this book for exchange rates.

ATMs linked to international networks are common in most towns and cities in India. However, carry cash or travellers cheques as backup in case the power goes down, the ATM is out of order, or you lose or break your plastic.

Remember, you must present your passport whenever you change currency or travellers cheques. Commission for foreign exchange is becoming increasingly rare; if it is charged, the fee is nominal. For information about costs, see p24.

See p1133 for tips on keeping your money safe during your trip.

ATMs

Modern 24-hour ATMs are found in most large towns and cities, though the ATM may not be in the same place as the bank branch. The most commonly accepted cards are Visa, MasterCard, Cirrus, Maestro and Plus. Banks in India that reliably accept foreign cards include Citibank, HDFC, ICICI, UTI, HSBC, the Punjab National Bank and the State Bank of India. Away from major towns, always carry cash or travellers cheques as backup.

Bank impose higher charges on international transactions, but this may be cancelled out by the favourable exchange rates between banks. Reduce charges by making larger transactions less often. Always check in advance whether your card can access banking networks in India and ask for details of charges.

Note that several travellers have reported ATMs snatching back money if you don't remove it within around 30 seconds. Conversely, other machines can take more than 30 seconds to actually release cash, so don't panic if the money doesn't appear instantaneously.

The ATMs listed in this book's regional chapters accept foreign cards (but not necessarily all types of cards). Always keep the emergency lost-and-stolen numbers for your credit cards in a safe place, separate from your cards, and report any loss or theft immediately.

Black Market

Black-market moneychangers do exist in India, but legal moneychangers are so common that there's no reason to use them, except to change small amounts of cash at land border crossings. As a rule, if someone comes up to you in the street and offers to change money, you're probably being set up for a scam.

Cash

Major currencies such as US dollars, UK pounds and euros are easy to change throughout India, though some bank branches insist on travellers cheques only. A few banks also accept Australian, New Zealand and Canadian dollars, and Swiss francs. Private moneychangers accept a wider range of currencies, but Pakistani, Nepali and Bangladeshi currency can be harder to change away from the border. When travelling off the beaten track, always carry a decent stock of rupees.

Whenever changing money, check every note. Banks staple bills together into bricks, which puts a lot of wear on tear on the currency. Do not accept any filthy, ripped or disintegrating notes, as these may not be accepted as payment. If you get lumbered with such notes, change them to new bills at branches of the Reserve Bank of India in major cities.

Nobody in India ever seems to have change, so it's a good idea to maintain a stock of smaller currency. Try to stockpile Rs 10, 20 and 50 notes; change bigger bills into these denominations every time you change money.

Officially, you cannot take rupees out India, but this is laxly enforced. However, you can change any leftover rupees back into foreign currency, most easily at the airport (some banks have a Rs 1000 minimum). Note that some airport banks will only change a minimum of Rs 1000. You may require encashment certificates (below) or a credit-card receipt, and you may also have to show your passport and airline ticket.

Credit Cards

Credit cards are accepted at growing numbers of shops, upmarket restaurants, and midrange and top-end hotels, and you can also use them to pay for flights and train tickets. Cash advances on major credit cards are also possible at some banks without ATMs. However, be wary of scams; see p1132. MasterCard and Visa are the most widely accepted cards; for details about whether you can access home accounts in India, inquire at your bank before leaving.

Encashment Certificates

By law, all foreign currency must be changed at official moneychangers or banks. For every foreign exchange transaction, you will receive an encashment certificate, which will allow you to re-exchange rupees into foreign currency when departing India (see above). You'll need to have encashment certificates totalling the amount of rupees you intend changing back to foreign currency. Printed receipts from ATMs may also be accepted as evidence of an international transaction at some banks. Keep a few rupees handy until you fly – airport services are disproportionately expensive.

Traditionally, money-exchange receipts have also been required when paying for tourist-quota train tickets in rupees, but this requirement has recently been relaxed.

International Transfers

If you run out of money, someone at home can wire you money via moneychangers affiliated with Moneygram (www.moneygram.com) or Western Union (www.westernunion.com).

You'll need to call someone at home to transfer the money, and a hefty fee is added to the transaction. To collect cash, bring your passport, and the name and reference number of the person who sent the funds.

Moneychangers

Private moneychangers are usually open for longer hours than banks, and they are found almost everywhere (many also double as internet cafés and travel agents). Compare rates with those at the bank, and check you are given the correct amount. In a scrape, some upmarket hotels may also change money, usually at well below the bank rate.

Tipping, Baksheesh & Bargaining

In tourist restaurants or hotels, a service fee is usually already added to your bill and tipping is optional. Elsewhere, a tip is appreciated. Hotel bellboys expect around Rs 20 to carry bags, and hotel staff expect similar gratuities for services above and beyond the call of duty. It's not mandatory to tip taxi or rickshaw drivers, but it's good to tip drivers who are honest about the fare.

Baksheesh can be defined as a 'tip', and it covers everything from alms for beggars to unjustified demands for money for pointing out that the temple you are looking for is across the street. Beggars attach themselves to new arrivals in many Indian cities – whether you give or not is up to you, but try to treat people compassionately and consider what you might do if the positions were reversed.

Many Indians implore tourists not to hand out sweets, pens or money to children, as it encourages them to beg. This is often selfish giving – designed to make the traveller feel good rather than producing any positive benefit for the child. To make a lasting difference, donate to a school or charitable organisation (see p1155).

Apart from at fixed-price shops, bargaining is the norm; see the Art of Haggling, p1148.

Travellers Cheques

All major brands are accepted in India, but some banks may only accept cheques from Amex and Thomas Cook. Pounds sterling and US dollars are the safest currencies, especially in smaller towns. Charges for changing travellers cheques vary from place to place and bank to bank.

Always keep an emergency cash stash in case you lose your travellers cheques, and keep a record of the cheques' serial numbers separate from your cheques, along with the proof-of-purchase slips, encashment vouchers and photocopied passport details. If you lose your cheques, contact the Amex or Thomas Cook office in Delhi (see p125).

To replace lost travellers cheques, you need the proof-of-purchase slip and the numbers of the missing cheques (some places require a photocopy of the police report and a passport photo). If you don't have the numbers of your missing cheques, Amex (or whichever company has issued them) will contact the place where you bought them.

PHOTOGRAPHY

For useful tips and techniques on travel photography, read Lonely Planet's travel photography guides, including Travel Photography, Landscape Travel Photography and People Travel Photography.

Digital

Memory cards for digital camera are available from photographic shops in most large cities, and increasingly from shops in small places too. However, the quality of memory cards is variable – some do not carry the advertised amount of data. Expect to pay upwards of Rs 1000/1600 for a 512MB/1GB card. To be safe, regularly back up your memory card to CD; internet cafés offer this service for Rs 50 to 100 per disk. Some photographic shops make prints from digital photographs for roughly the standard print-and-processing charge.

Print & Slide

Colour-print film-processing facilities are readily available in most cities. Film is relatively cheap and the quality is usually good, but you'll only find colour-slide film in the major cities and tourist traps. On average, developing costs around Rs 6 per 10cm by 15cm print, plus Rs 15 to 20 for processing. Passport photos are available from photo shops for around Rs 100 (10 to 12 shots).

Always check the use-by date on local film and slide stock. Make sure you get a sealed packet and that you're not handed a roll that's been sitting in a glass cabinet in the sunshine for the last few months. Be wary of buying film from street hawkers – unscrupulous characters have been known to load old/damaged film into new-looking canisters. It's best to only buy film from reputable stores – and preferably film that's been refrigerated.

Restrictions

India is touchy about anyone taking photographs of military installations – this can include train stations, bridges, airports, military installations and sensitive border regions. Photography from the air is officially prohibited, though airlines rarely enforce this. On flights to strategically important destinations, cameras may be banned from the cabin (or you may need to remove the batteries).

Many places of worship – such as monasteries, temples and mosques – also prohibit photography. Respect these proscriptions and always ask when in doubt as taking photographs of forbidden images can cause serious offence. See p58 for the etiquette of photographing people.

POST

India has the biggest postal network on earth, with over 155,618 post offices. Mail and poste restante services are generally good, although the speed of delivery will depend on the efficiency of any given office. Airmail is faster and more reliable than sea mail, although it's best to use courier services (such as DHL) to send and receive items of value; expect to pay around Rs 2700 per kilo to Europe, Australia or the USA. Private couriers are cheaper, but goods are often repacked into large packages to cut costs and things sometimes go missing.

Receiving Mail

To receive mail in India, ask senders to address letters to you with your surname in capital letters and underlined, followed by poste restante, GPO (main post office), and the city or town in question. Many 'lost' letters are simply misfiled under given/first names, so check under both your names and ask senders to provide a return address in case you don't collect your mail. Letters sent via poste restante are generally held for around one month before being returned. To claim mail, you'll need to show your passport. It's best to have any parcels sent to you by registered post.

Sending Mail

Posting aerogrammes/postcards to anywhere overseas costs Rs 8.50/8 and airmail letters cost from Rs 15 (1 to 20 grams). For postcards, stick on the stamps before actually writing on them, as post offices can give you as many as four stamps per card. Sending a letter by registered post adds Rs 15 to the stamp cost.

Posting parcels is quite straightforward; prices vary depending on weight and you have a choice of airmail (delivery in one to three weeks), sea mail (two to four months), or Surface Air-Lifted (SAL) – a curious hybrid where parcels travel by both air and sea (one month). Parcels must be packed up in white linen and the seams sealed with wax. Local tailors offer this service, or there may be a parcel service at the post office. Carry a permanent marker to write on the parcel any information requested by the desk. The post office can provide the necessary customs declaration forms and these must be stitched or pasted to the parcel. If the contents are a gift under the value of Rs 1000, you won't have to pay duty at the delivery end. Never try to send drugs by post – the police will track the package to your door and bust you when you open it.

Parcel post has a maximum of 20kg to 30kg depending on the destination, and charges vary depending on whether you go by air or sea. As an indication, a 1kg parcel costs the following prices (in rupees):

Destination	Airmail	SAL	Sea mail
Australia	570	535	450
Europe	645	525	500
USA	645	595	480

It is sometimes cheaper to send packages under 2kg in weight as registered letters (packed the same way as parcels). You also have the option of the EMS (express mail service; delivery within three days) for around 30% more than the normal airmail price.

Books or printed matter can go by inexpensive book post (maximum 5kg), but the package must be wrapped with a hole that reveals the contents for inspection by customs – tailors are experienced in creating this in such a way that nothing falls out. Overseas rates depend on the weight, not the country – a 1kg book-post parcel costs just Rs 260 to any international destination. The website for India Post (www.indiapost.gov.in) has an online calculator for other international postal tariffs.

Be cautious with places that offer to mail things to your home address after you have bought them. Government emporiums are usually fine, but in most other places it pays to do the posting yourself.

SHOPPING

India is an Aladdin's cave of delights for shoppers, with shops and markets dripping with precious metals, gemstones, silks, pearls, carpets and statues of Indian gods. The hard part is carting it all home!

Every region has its own special crafts, usually showcased in state emporiums and cottage industries' cooperatives. These shops normally charge very fair fixed prices; everywhere else, you'll have to bargain (see the Art of Haggling, p1148). Opening hours for shops vary.

Be very cautious when buying items that include delivery to your country of residence, and be wary of being led to shops by touts (see p1133). Exporting antiques is prohibited (p1147).

Only a small proportion of the money brought to India by tourism reaches people in rural areas. You can make a greater contribution by shopping at community cooperatives, set up to protect and promote traditional cottage industries, and to provide education, training and a sustainable livelihood for rural families. Many of these projects focus on refugees, low-caste women, the disabled and other socially disadvantaged groups. Prices are usually fixed and a share of the money goes directly into social projects like schools, healthcare and training. Shopping at the national network of Khadi & Village Industries emporiums will also contribute to rural communities.

Bronze Figures, Pottery, Stone Carving & Terracotta

In southern India and parts of the Himalaya, small images of deities are created by the age-old lost-wax process. A wax figure is made, a mould is formed around it, and the wax is melted and poured out and replaced with molten metal; the mould is then broken open to reveal the figure inside. Figures of Shiva as dancing Nataraja are the most popular items, but you can also find images of Buddha and numerous deities from the Hindu pantheon.

The West Bengalese also employ the lost-wax process to make Dokra tribal bell sculptures, while the Bastar region of Chhattisgarh produces interesting human and animal figures. In Buddhist areas, you can find very striking bronze statues of Buddha and the Tantric gods, finished off with finely polished and painted faces.

In Mamallapuram (p1050) in Tamil Nadu, craftsmen using local granite and soapstone have revived the ancient artistry of the Pallava sculptors; souvenirs range from tiny stone elephants to enormous deity statues weighing half a tonne. Tamil Nadu is also known for the bronzeware from Thanjavur (p1071) and Trichy (Tiruchirappalli).

Kolkata and Bihar produce attractive terracotta work, ranging from vases and decorative flowerpots to terracotta images of deities and children's toys.

Jaipur (p177) in Rajasthan specialises in blue-glazed pottery with floral and geometric motifs. At temples across India you can buy small clay or plaster effigies of Kali, Durga and other deities.

Carpets

Artisans have been producing carpets since at least the Mughal era, and carpet-making is a living craft, with workshops across the country producing fine wool- and silkwork in traditional and modern designs. The best carpets are produced in Kashmir and the Buddhist heartlands of Ladakh, Himachal Pradesh, Sikkim and West Bengal. Carpet-making is also a major revenue earner for Tibetan refugees; most refugee settlements have cooperative carpet workshops. You can also find reproductions of tribal Turkmen and Afghan designs in Uttar Pradesh. Antique carpets usually aren't antique – unless you buy from an internationally reputable dealer, stick to new carpets.

The price of a carpet will be determined by the number and the size of the hand-tied knots, the range of dyes and colours, the intricacy of the design and the material. Silk carpets cost more and look more luxurious, but wool carpets last longer. For more infor-

CARPETS & CHILD LABOUR

Children have been employed as carpet weavers in India for centuries, and many childcare charities from Europe and America are campaigning against the use of child labour by the carpet industry. There are thought to be at least 30,000 child carpet weavers in India, and 10% of these children are believed to have been trafficked from neighbouring countries.

Unfortunately, the issue is more complicated than it first appears. In many areas, education is often not an option, for both economic and cultural reasons, and the alternative to child labour may not be school but hunger for the whole family. We encourage travellers to buy from carpet weaving cooperatives that employ adult weavers and provide education for their children, breaking the cycle of child labour.

The Carpet Export Promotion Council of India (www.india-carpets.com) is campaigning to eliminate child labour from the carpet industry by penalising factories that use children and by founding schools to provide an alternative to carpetmaking. Ultimately, the only thing that will stop child-labour completely is compulsory education for children. However, the economic and social obstacles are significant.

Unfortunately for the buyer, there is no easy way of knowing whether a carpet has been made by children. Shops are unlikely to admit using child labour and most of the international labelling schemes for carpets have been discredited. The carpets produced by Tibetan refugee cooperatives are almost always made by adults, but Uttar Pradesh is the undisputed capital of child labour in India. Government emporiums and charitable cooperatives are by far the best places to buy.

mation, see p359. Expect to pay upwards of US$200 for a good quality 90cm by 1.5m (or 90cm by 1.8m, depending on the region) wool carpet, and US$2000 for a similar sized carpet in silk. Tibetan carpets are slightly cheaper, reflecting the relative simplicity of the designs; many refugee cooperatives sell 90cm by 1.5m carpets for US$100 or less.

Many people buy carpets under the mistaken belief that they can be sold for a profit back home. Unless you really know your carpets and the carpet market in your home country, buy a carpet because you love it. Many places can ship carpets home for a fee – though it may be safest to ship things independently to avoid scams – or you can carry them in the plane's hold (allow 5kg to 10kg of your baggage allowance for a 3ft by 5ft carpet).

In both Kashmir and Rajasthan, you can also find coarsely woven woollen numdas (or namdas), which are much cheaper than knotted carpets. Various parts of India produce flat weave dhurries (kilimlike cotton rugs), including Kashmir, Himalaya Pradesh, Rajasthan and Uttar Pradesh. Kashmiris also produce striking gabbas, made from chain-stitched wool or silk.

Jewellery

Virtually every town in India has at least one bangle shop. These sell an extraordinary variety of bangles made from plastic, glass, brass, bone, shell and wood for just Rs 20 to 200 for a set of 12. Traditionally, these are worn continuously until they break – Hindu widows break all their bangles as part of the mourning process.

Heavy folk-art silver jewellery can be found in parts of the country, particularly in Rajasthan – Jaipur (p176), Udaipur (p227) and Pushkar (p197) are good places to find silver jewellery pitched at foreign tastes. Jaipur is also renowned for its precious and semiprecious gems – and gem scams (see p1132 and p177). Throughout India you can find finely crafted gold and silver rings, anklets, earrings, toe rings, necklaces and bangles, and pieces can often be crafted to order.

Chunky Tibetan jewellery made from silver (or white metal) and semiprecious stones is sold all over India. Many pieces feature Buddhist motifs and text in Tibetan script, including the famous mantra Om Mani Padme Hum. Some of the pieces sold in Tibetan centres such as McLeod Ganj and Leh are genuine antiques but there is huge industry in India, Nepal and China making artificially aged souvenirs, so buy something because you like it, not for its antique value. If you feel like being creative, loose beads of agate, turquoise, carnelian and silver are widely available. Buddhist meditation beads made of gems, wood or inlaid bone also make nifty souvenirs.

Pearls are produced by most seaside states. They're a speciality of Hyderabad (p947) and pearls are crafted into jewellery in many other Indian states. You'll find them at most state emporiums. Prices vary depending on the colour and shape – you pay more for pure white pearls or rare colours like black and red, and perfectly round pearls are more expensive than misshapen or elongated pearls. However, the quirky shapes of Indian pearls are often more alluring than the perfect round balls. A single strand of seeded pearls can cost as little as Rs 200, but better-quality pearls start at Rs 600.

Cuttack in Orissa (p657) is famed for its lacelike silver filigree work known as tarakasi. A silver framework is made and then in-filled with delicate curls and ribbons of thin silver.

Leatherwork

As cows are sacred in India, leatherwork is made from buffalos, camels, goats or some other substitute. Kanpur in Uttar Pradesh is the country's major leatherwork centre.

Chappals, those wonderful curly-toed leather sandals found all over India, are a particularly popular buy. They are sold in most cities, but they are particularly good in the Maharashtran cities of Kolhapur, Pune and Matheran; prices start at around Rs 150. The states of Punjab and Rajasthan (especially Jaipur, p176) are famed for jootis (traditional pointy-toed shoes) – buy a pair, if only as part of your genie costume for fancy-dress parties. Most big cities offer striking modern leather footwear at very competitive prices, often stitched with thousands of sequins – great partywear!

In Bikaner in Rajasthan, artisans decorate camel hide with gold to produce beautiful mirror frames, boxes and bottles, while in Indore (p699) in Madhya Pradesh, craftspeople stretch leather over wire and cloth frameworks to make cute toy animals. In all the big cities you'll find well-made, moderately priced leather handbags, belts and other leather accessories.

Metalwork & Marble

You'll find copper and brassware throughout India. Candleholders, trays, bowls, tankards and ashtrays are particularly popular buys. In Rajasthan and Uttar Pradesh, the brass is inlaid with exquisite designs in red, green and blue enamel. Bidri – a form of damascening where silver is inlaid in gunmetal (an alloy of zinc, copper, lead and tin) – is used to make boxes and ornaments in Bidar in Karnataka; see Bidri: the Art of Bidar, p934.

Many Tibetan religious objects are created by inlaying silver in copper; prayer wheels, ceremonial horns and traditional document cases are all inexpensive buys. Resist the urge to buy kangling (Tibetan horns) and kapala (ceremonial bowls) made from inlaid human leg bones and skulls – they are illegal!

In all Indian towns, you can find kadhai (Indian woks, also known as balti) and other items of cookware for incredibly low prices. Beaten-brass pots are particularly attractive, and steel storage vessels, copper-bottomed cooking pans and steel thali trays are also popular souvenirs.

The people of Bastar in Chhattisgarh discovered a method of smelting iron some 35,000 years ago. Similar techniques are used today to create abstract depictions of animal and human figures, which are often made into functional items such as lamp stands and coat racks.

A sizable cottage industry has sprung up in Agra (p406) reproducing the ancient Mughal art form of pietra dura (inlaying marble with semiprecious stones). The inspiration for most pieces comes from the Taj Mahal. Expect to pay about Rs 400 for a jewellery box or miniature model of the Taj; chess sets start at Rs 2000.

Musical Instruments

Quality Indian musical instruments are available in the larger cities, especially Kolkata (p512), Varanasi (p436) and Delhi (p154). Prices vary, but the higher the price the better the quality – and sound – of the instrument.

Decent quality tabla sets with a wooden tabla (tuned treble drum) and metal doogri (bass tone drum) cost upwards of Rs 3000. Cheaper sets are generally heavier and sound inferior.

Sitars range from Rs 4000 to 15,000 – a good starter sitar with quality inlay work will cost upwards of Rs 7000. The sound of each sitar will vary with the wood used and the shape of the gourd, so try a few. Some cheaper sitars can warp in colder or hotter climates. On any sitar, make sure the strings ring clearly and check the gourd carefully for damage. Spare string sets, sitar plectrums and a screw-in 'amplifier' gourd are sensible additions.

Other popular instruments include the shennai (Indian flute; Rs 250 upwards), the sarod (like an Indian lute; from Rs 8000), the

PROHIBITED EXPORTS

To protect India's cultural heritage, the export of many antiques is prohibited. Many 'old' objects are fine, but the difficulties begin if something is verifiably more than 100 years old. Reputable antique dealers know the laws and can make arrangements for an export-clearance certificate for any old items that you are permitted to export. If in doubt, contact Delhi's Archaeological Survey of India (Map pp132-3; ☎ 011-23010822; asi@del3.vsnl.net.in; Janpath; 🕐 10am-1pm & 2-5pm Mon-Fri) next to the National Museum. The rules may seem unfair, but the loss of artworks and traditional buildings in Ladakh, Himachal Pradesh, Gujarat and Rajasthan due to the international trade in antiques and carved windows and doorframes is shocking. Look for quality reproductions instead.

The Indian Wildlife Protection Act bans any form of wildlife trade. Don't buy any products that endanger threatened species and habitats – doing so can result in heavy fines and even imprisonment. This includes ivory, shahtoosh shawls (made from the down of rare Tibetan antelopes), and anything made from the fur, skin, horns or shell of any endangered species. Realistically, the only way to be sure is to avoid animal products completely. Products made from certain rare plants are also forbidden for export.

Note that your home country may have additional laws forbidding the import of restricted items and wildlife parts. The penalties can be severe so know the law before you buy.

harmonium (from Rs 3500) and the esraj (like an upright violin; from Rs 3000). Conventional violins are a bargain – prices range from Rs 3000 to 15,000.

Paintings

Reproductions of Indian miniature paintings are widely available, but quality varies – the best are almost as good as the real thing, while cheaper ones have less detail and use inferior colours. Beware of paintings purported to be antique – it's highly unlikely, and paintings over 100 years old can't be exported from India (see above). Udaipur (p227) and Bikaner in Rajasthan have particularly good shops specialising in modern reproductions on silk and paper, or you can browse Delhi's state emporiums (p152).

In Kerala and Tamil Nadu, you'll come across miniature paintings on leaf skeletons depicting domestic and rural scenes and deities. In Andhra Pradesh you can buy exquisite cloth paintings called kalamkari, which depict deities and historic events; see www.kalamkariart.org for more on this interesting artform.

The artists' community of Raghurajpur (p648) near Puri (Orissa) preserves the age-old art of pattachitra painting. Cotton or tassar (silk cloth) is covered with a mixture of gum and chalk; it's then polished, and images of deities and scenes from Hindu legend are painted on with exceedingly fine brushes. Orissa also produces chitra pothi, where images are etched onto dried palm-leaf sections with a fine stylus.

Bihar's unique folk art is Mithila (or Madhubani) painting, an ancient artform preserved by the women of Madhubani (see p554). These interesting records of rural life are most easily found in Patna; prices start at Rs 300 for a small unframed picture on paper.

In all Tibetan Buddhist areas, including Sikkim, parts of Himachal Pradesh and Ladakh, you can find exquisite thangkas (rectangular Tibetan paintings on cloth) of Tantric Buddhist deities and ceremonial mandalas. Some perfectly reproduce the glory of the murals in India's medieval gompas (Buddhist monasteries); others look crude on closer inspection. Prices vary, but bank on at least Rs 3000 for a decent quality thangka of A3 size, much more for large intricate thangkas. The selling of antique thangkas is illegal, and you would be unlikely to find the real thing anyway.

Throughout the country (especially in capital cities) look out for shops and galleries selling brilliant contemporary paintings by local artists. Mumbai (p775) is the centre of the Indian contemporary art scene.

Papier-Mâché

Artisans in Srinagar (p358) have been producing lacquered papier-mâché for centuries, and papier-mâché-ware is now sold across India. The basic shape is made in a mould from layers of paper (often recycled newsprint), then painted with fine brushes and lacquered for protection. Prices depend upon the complexity and quality of the design, and

THE ART OF HAGGLING

Government emporiums, department stores and modern shopping centres usually charge fixed prices. Anywhere else you need to bargain, and bargain hard. Shopkeepers in tourist hubs are accustomed to travellers who have lots of money and little time to spend it, so you can expect to be charged double or triple the 'real' price. Souvenir shops are probably the least likely places of all to charge you the real going rate.

The first 'rule' to haggling is never to show too much interest in the item you want to buy. Secondly, don't buy the first item that takes your fancy. Wander around and price things, but don't make it too obvious – if you return to the first shop the vendor will know it's because they are the cheapest and the price won't go down much lower.

Decide how much you would be happy paying and then express a casual interest in buying. If you have absolutely no idea of what something should really cost, start by slashing the price by half. The vendor will make a show of being shocked at such a low offer, but the game is set and you can now work up and down respectively in small increments until you reach a mutually agreeable price. You'll find that many shopkeepers lower their so-called final price if you head out of the shop saying you'll 'think about it'.

Haggling is a way of life in India, but it should never be an angry process. Keep in mind exactly how much a rupee is worth in your home currency to put things in perspective. If a vendor seems to be charging an unreasonably high price, simply look elsewhere.

the amount of gold leaf used. Many pieces feature patterns of animals and flowers, or hunting scenes from Mughal miniature paintings. You can find papier-mâché bowls, boxes, letter holders, coasters, trays, lamps and Christmas decorations (stars, crescent moons, balls and bells). Weight for weight, these are probably the most cost-effective souvenirs in India but you need to transport them carefully. A small jewellery box will only cost around Rs 150.

Rajasthan is the place to buy colourful papier-mâché puppets. These are typically sold as a pair – depicting a husband and wife – and are traditionally used in kathputli (wooden doll) puppet dramas. Prices start from Rs 150 a pair.

Shawls, Silk & Saris

Indian shawls are famously warm and lightweight – they're often better than the best down jackets. It's worth buying one to use as an emergency blanket on cold night journeys. Shawls are made from all sorts of wool, from lamb's-wool to fibres woven from yak, goat and angora-rabbit hair. Many are embroidered with intricate designs. However, shahtoosh shawls should be avoided, as rare Tibetan antelopes are killed to provide the shawl's wool.

The undisputed capital of the Indian shawl is the Kullu Valley (p305) in Himachal Pradesh, with dozens of women's cooperatives producing very fine woollen shawls. Prices range from about Rs 200 for a simple lamb's-wool shawl to Rs 6000 for a stylish angora shawl. The intricately embroidered shawls worn by village women cost as much as Rs 10,000.

Ladakh and Kashmir are major centres for pashmina (wool shawl) production – you'll pay at least Rs 6000 for the authentic 'slides through a wedding ring' article. Be aware that many so-called pashmina shawls are actually made from a mixture of yarns. Shawls from the northeast states are famously warm, with bold geometric designs. In Sikkim and West Bengal, you may also find fantastically embroidered Bhutanese shawls. Gujarat's Kutch region produces some distinctive woollen shawls, patterned with subtle embroidery and mirrorwork. Handmade shawls and tweeds are also found in Ranikhet (p478) and Almora (p481) in Uttarakhand.

Saris are a very popular souvenir, and they can be readily adapted to other purposes. Real silk saris are the most expensive, and the silk usually needs to be washed before it becomes soft. The 'silk capital' of India is Kanchipuram (p1051) in Tamil Nadu, but you can also find fine silk saris from Varanasi (p436) and Kolkata. Assam is renowned for its muga, endi and pat silks (produced by different species of silkworms), which are widely available in Guwahati (p599). You'll pay Rs 3000 or more for a quality embroidered silk sari.

The town of Patan (p728) in Gujarat is the centre for the ancient and laborious craft of patola-making – every thread in these fine silk saris is individually hand dyed before weaving, and patterned borders are woven with real gold. Slightly less involved versions are produced in Rajkot (p758) – only the warp threads are dyed. Gold thread is also used in the famous kota doria saris from Kota (p213) in Rajasthan.

Aurangabad (p808) in Maharashtra is the traditional centre for the production of himroo shawls, sheets and saris, which are made from a blend of cotton, silk and silver thread; prices start at Rs 500. Silk and gold-thread saris produced at Paithan near Aurangabad are some of India's finest – prices range from around Rs 6000 to a mind-blowing Rs 300,000. Other states that are famous for sari production include Madhya Pradesh for maheshwar (cotton saris from Maheshwar) and chanderi (silk saris from Chanderi) saris, and Bishnapur in West Bengal for baluchari saris, which use a traditional form of weaving with untwisted silk thread.

Child labour is sometimes used in silk production; see p1052 for more information.

Textiles

Textile production is India's major industry, and around 40% of production takes place at the village level, where it is known as khadi (homespun cloth) – hence the government-backed khadi emporiums around the country. These inexpensive superstores sell all sorts of items made from homespun cloth, including the popular Nehru jackets and kurta pyjamas (long shirt and loose-fitting trousers), and sales benefit rural communities.

You will find a truly amazing variety of weaving and embroidery techniques around the country. In tourist centres such as Goa, Rajasthan and Himachal Pradesh, textiles are stitched into items such as handbags, wall hangings, cushion covers, bedspreads, clothes and much more.

Appliqué is an ancient art in India, with most states producing their own version, usually featuring abstract or anthropomorphic patterns. The traditional lampshades and pandals (tents) used in weddings and festivals are produced using the same technique.

In Adivasi (tribal) areas of Gujarat and Rajasthan, small pieces of mirrored glass are embroidered onto fabric, creating vivid bags, cushion covers and wall hangings. Jamnagar (p754) is famous for its vibrant bandhani (tie-dye work), used for saris, scarfs, and anything else that stays still for long enough. Ahmedabad (p725) is a good place to buy Gujarati textiles, and Vadodara (p731) is famous for block-printed textiles used for bedspreads and dress material.

Block-printed and woven fabrics are sold by fabric shops all over India, often in vivid colours. Each region has its own speciality. The India-wide chain-store Fabindia (www.fabindia.com) works to preserve traditional patterns and fabrics, transforming them into highly accessible items for home decoration and Indian and Western fashions.

Orissa has a reputation for bright appliqué and ikat (a Southeast Asian technique where thread is tie-dyed before weaving). The town of Pipli (p643), between Bhubaneswar and Puri, produces some particularly eye-catching appliqué work. The techniques used to create kalamkari cloth paintings in Andhra Pradesh and Gujarat are also used to make striking wall hangings and lamp shades.

Lucknow (p419) in Uttar Pradesh is noted for hand-woven embroidered chikan cloth, which features incredibly intricate floral motifs. Punjab is famous for the attractively folksy phulkari embroidery (flowerwork with stitches in diagonal, vertical and horizontal directions), while women in West Bengal use chain stitches to make complex figurative designs called kantha. A similar technique is used to make gabba, women's kurtas and men's wedding jackets in Kashmir.

Batik can be found throughout India. It is often used for saris and salwar kameez (a long dresslike tunic worn over baggy trousers). City boutiques produce trendy salwar kameez for women and the similar kurta Punjabi for men in a staggering array of fabrics and styles. Big Indian cities such as Mumbai (p792) and Delhi are great places to pick up haute couture by talented Indian designers, as well as moderately priced Western fashions.

Woodcarving

Woodcarving is a living art all over India. In Kashmir, walnut wood is used to make finely carved wooden screens, tables, jewellery boxes and trays, inspired by the decorative trim of houseboats. Willow cricket bats are another inexpensive Kashmiri speciality (from Rs 150).

Sandalwood carvings of Hindu deities is one of Karnataka's specialities, but you'll pay a kings' ransom for the real thing – a 10cm-high Ganesh costs around Rs 3000 in sandalwood, compared to Rs 300 in kadamb wood. However, the sandalwood will release fragrance for years. Wood inlay is one of Bihar's oldest crafts – you'll find wooden wall hangings, tabletops, trays and boxes inlaid with metals and bone. The religious icons produced from wood inlay in Goa also have a certain chintzy appeal.

In Udaipur (p227) in Rajasthan, you can buy brightly painted figures of Hindu gods carved from mango wood. In many parts of Rajasthan you can also find fabric printing blocks carved from teak wood. The carved wooden massage wheels and rollers available at many Hindu pilgrimage sites are also good presents.

Buddhist woodcarvings are a speciality of Sikkim, Ladakh, Arunachal Pradesh and all Tibetan refugee areas. You'll find wall plaques of the eight lucky signs, dragons and chaam masks, used for ritual dances. Most of the masks are artless reproductions, but you can sometimes find genuine chaam masks made from lightweight whitewood or papier-mâché from Rs 3000 upwards.

Other Buys

Indian scents and spices are famous. Most towns have shops and markets selling locally produced spices at cash-and-carry prices. Karnataka, Kerala, Uttar Pradesh, Rajasthan and Tamil Nadu produce most of the spices that go into garam masala (the 'hot mix' used to flavour Indian curries), while the northeast states and Sikkim are famous for black cardamoms and cinnamon bark.

Attar (essential oil made from flowers) shops can be found around India. Mysore (p900) is famous for its sandalwood oil, and Mumbai is a major centre for the trade of traditional fragrances, including valuable oud, made from a rare mould that grows on the bark of the agarwood tree. Tamil Nadu, Ooty and Kodaikanal produce aromatic and medicinal oils from herbs, flowers and eucalyptus.

Indian incense is exported worldwide, with Bengaluru and Mysore (p900) being major producers. Incense from Auroville, an ashram near Puducherry, is of particularly high quality. Beware, however, that there are many inferior copies of the quality brands.

One speciality of Goa is feni (liquor distilled from coconut milk or cashews), a head-spinning spirit that often comes in decorative bottles. Sikkimese liquors are also good and many come in funky-shaped bottles – the 1L bottle of Old Monk rum comes in a monk-shaped bottle with a screw-off head. Prices for Indian spirits start at around Rs 200 per litre. India is also gaining a reputation for the wines produced by vineyards in Maharashtra; Sula, Grover and Chateau Indage are all good labels. Fruit wines from Himachal Pradesh are also interesting quaffs.

Quality Indian tea is sold in Darjeeling (p541) and Kalimpong in West Bengal, Assam and Sikkim, as well as parts of South India.

In most traveller centres, you'll find traditional clay chillums (pipes of hookahs). Smoking and possessing drugs is illegal but buying the paraphernalia is not – however, used paraphernalia can land you in a lot of trouble with customs when you get back home.

In Bhopal (p687) in Madhya Pradesh, colourful jari shoulder bags, embroidered with beads, are a speciality. Also on the portables front, the Northeast States are noted for their beautiful hand-woven baskets and wickerwork – each tribe has its own unique basket shape. Another unique souvenir is a tribal bow and arrow, easily purchased in Shillong.

Jodhpur (p240) is famed for its antiques, with numerous large showrooms selling window frames, ornaments and furnishings. We recommend only buying reproductions – the export of many kinds of antiques is banned to preserve India's cultural heritage. Bikaner, Mumbai (p792) and Delhi also have shops selling antiques, while occasional Raj gems show up in Kolkata's auction rooms (p511). Better dealers may be able to arrange export licenses.

In towns with Buddhist populations, such as McLeod Ganj, Leh, Manali, Gangtok, Kalimpong and Darjeeling, keep an eye out for 'Buddha shops' selling religious objects such as prayer flags, wall hangings, trumpets, drums, singing bowls, hand-bells, prayer wheels and thangkas (see p1147), all of which make terrific souvenirs.

Fine-quality handmade paper – often made into cards, boxes and notebooks – is available in Puducherry (p1063), Darjeeling and McLeod Ganj (p328). Lavishly embellished Indian cards and paper and envelope sets are available in Delhi's Chowri Bazaar (p153) and Mumbai's Chimanlals (p793).

Hats are a popular buy through India – the Assamese make decorated reed-pith sun hats, and Tibetan refugees produce woollen hats, gloves and scarves, which are sold all over India. Also popular are the traditional caps worn by men and women from India's Himalayan tribes; they're available in many towns in Himachal Pradesh for under Rs 150.

You can find a phenomenal range of books in India, including excellent cook books and glossy coffee-table photo books. CDs by local musicians are also good value, costing Rs 100 or less – perennially popular artists include Ravi Shankar (sitar), Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan (traditional Urdu vocals) and Nawang Khechog (traditional Tibetan flutist). Pirate copies of Western CDs are available in tourist towns, along with original and pirate copies of DVD movies, both Bollywood and international.

SOLO TRAVELLERS

Tourist hubs such as Goa, Rajasthan, Manali, McLeod Ganj, Leh, Agra, Kerala and Varanasi are good places for solo travellers to network. The main traveller hotels and restaurants are good places to swap stories, get up-to-the-minute travel tips and find people to travel with. You might also try advertising for travel companions on Lonely Planet's Thorntree forum (http://thorntree.lonelyplanet.com). Throughout India, people tend to move in the same direction, so you'll probably see the same faces over and over again on your trip.

Although most solo travellers experience no major problems in India, some less honourable souls (locals and travellers alike) view lone tourists as an easy target for theft. Don't be paranoid, but like anywhere else in the world, it's wise to stay on your toes in unfamiliar surroundings.

Perhaps the most significant issue facing solo travellers is cost. Single-room rates at guesthouses and hotels are sometimes not much lower than double rates; some midrange and top-end places don't even offer a single tariff. However, it's always worth trying to negotiate a lower rate for single occupancy.

In terms of transport, you'll save money if you find others to share taxis and autorickshaws. This is also advisable if you intend hiring a car with driver.

For important information specific to women, see p1160.

TELEPHONE

There are few payphones in India, but private PCO/STD/ISD call booths do the same job, offering inexpensive local, interstate and international calls are much lower prices than calls made from hotel rooms. Many booths are open 24 hours, and a digital meter displays how much the call is costing and provides a printed receipt when the call is finished. Faxes can be sent from some call centres, or from the local telephone exchange or BSNL Customer Service Centre.

Call centres charge the full rate from around 9am to 8pm. After 8pm the cost slides, with the cheapest time to call being between 11pm and 6am. Interstate calls are half-price on Sunday. Direct international calls from call booths range from Rs 22 to 40 per minute depending on the country you are calling. Hotels charge much more all the time. International calls for as little as Rs 5 per minute can be made through internet cafés using Net2phone, Skype and other netphone services.

Some places also offer a 'call-back' service – you ring home, provide the phone number of the booth and wait for people at home to call you back, for a fee of Rs 5 to 10 on top of the cost of the preliminary call.

India has both White Pages (www.indiawhitepages.com) and Yellow Pages (www.indiayellowpages.com) online.

Note that getting a line can be difficult in remote country and mountain areas – an engaged signal may just mean that the exchange is overloaded, so keep trying.

Mobile Phones

India is going mobile-phone crazy and there is roaming coverage for international GSM phones in most large towns and cities. Mobile phone numbers in India usually have 10 digits, typically starting with 9. To avoid expensive roaming costs (often highest for incoming calls), get hooked up to the local mobile-phone network. Mobiles bought in Western countries are often locked to a particular network; you'll have to get the phone unlocked, or buy a local phone (available from Rs 2300) to use an Indian SIM card.

In most towns you simply buy a prepaid mobile-phone kit (SIM card and phone number, plus an allocation of calls) for around Rs 150 from a phone shop or local PCO/STD/ISD booths, internet cafés or grocery stores.

Thereafter, you must purchase new credits on that network, sold as scratch-cards in the same shops and call centres. Credit must usually be used within a set time limit and costs vary with the amount of credit on the card. The amount you pay for a credit top-up is not the amount you get on your phone – state taxes and service charges come off first. For some networks, recharge cards are being replaced by direct credit, where you pay the vendor and the credit is deposited straight to your phone – ask which system is in use before you buy.

Calls made within the state or city in which you bought the SIM card are cheap – less than Rs 1 per minute – and you can call internationally for less than Rs 25 per minute. SMS messaging is even cheaper. The more credit you have on your phone, the cheaper the call rate. However, some travellers have reported unreliable signals and problems with international texting (with messages or replies being delayed or failing to get through).

The most popular (and reliable) companies are Airtel, Hutch (Orange in some states), Idea and BSNL. Locals swear BSNL is the best. Note that most SIM cards are state specific; they can be used in other states, but you pay for calls at roaming rates and you will be charged for incoming calls as well as outgoing calls.

As the mobile-phone industry is evolving, mobile rates, suppliers and coverage are all likely to develop over the life of this book.

Phone Codes

Regular phone numbers have an area code followed by up to eight digits. The government is slowly trying to bring all numbers in India onto the same system, so area codes may change and new digits added to numbers with limited warning. It pays to keep abreast of new developments as you travel round the country.

To make a call to India from overseas, dial the international access code of the country you're in, then 91 (international country code for India), then the area code (drop the initial zero when calling from abroad), then the local number.

To make an international call from India, dial 00 (international access code from India), then the country code of the country you are calling, then the area code and the local number.

Also available is the Home Country Direct service, which gives you access to the international operator in your home country. For the price of a local call, you can then make reverse-charge (collect) or phonecard calls. The number is typically constructed ☎ 000 + the country code of your home country + 17. Some countries and their numbers:

Country	Number
Australia	☎ 0006117
Canada	☎ 000167
Germany	☎ 0004917
Italy	☎ 0003917
Japan	☎ 0008117
Netherlands	☎ 0003117
New Zealand	☎ 0006417
Spain	☎ 0003417
UK	☎ 0004417
USA	☎ 000117

TIME

India is 5½ hours ahead of GMT/UTC, 4½ hours behind Australian Eastern Standard Time (EST) and 10½ hours ahead of American EST. The local standard time is known as IST (Indian Standard Time), although many affectionately dub it 'Indian Stretchable Time'. The floating half hour was added to maximise daylight hours over such a vast country. See the world time zones map, pp1234–5.

TOILETS

Public toilets are generally confined to the major cities and tourist sites. The cleanest toilets are at restaurants and fast-food chains, museums, upmarket shopping complexes and cinemas. There are public urinals and squat toilets in many towns (an entry fee of Rs 1 to Rs 2 applies), but they tend to be quite filthy. Upmarket restaurants almost always have sit-down toilets, but be sure to carry your own toilet paper in case there is just a tap and a jug; see p1127 for more on Indian toilets.

When it comes to effluent etiquette, locals prefer the 'hand-and-water' technique, which involves cleaning your bottom with a small jug of water and your left hand. If you choose to do the same, carry some soap for hand-washing. If you prefer to use toilet paper, it is widely available in cities and towns. However, paper (as well as sanitary napkins and tampons) goes in the bin beside the toilet, not into the narrow and easily-blocked drains.

TOURIST INFORMATION

Local Tourist Offices

In addition to the excellent Government of India tourist offices, each state maintains its own network of tourist offices. These vary in their efficiency and usefulness – some are run by enthusiastic souls who go out of their way to help, others are basically a vehicle for the sale of State Tourism Development Corporation tours. Most of the tourist offices have free brochures and often a free (or inexpensive) local map. Booklets listing state-owned tourist bungalows and hotels are available for free or for a small fee.

The first stop for information should be the tourism website of the Government of India, Incredible India (www.incredibleindia.org). Here you'll find information in English, French, German, Spanish, Korean and Hindi. For details of regional offices around India, click on 'Links' at the bottom of the homepage. You can also find useful information on the official state government websites; there's a list on india.gov.in/knowindia/districts.php.

TRAVEL PERMITS

Access to certain parts of India – particularly disputed border areas – is controlled by a complicated permit system. A permit known as an Inner-Line Permit (ILP) is required to visit northern parts of Himachal Pradesh, Ladakh, Uttarakhand and Sikkim that lie close to the disputed border with China/Tibet. Obtaining the ILP is basically a formality, but travel agents must apply on your behalf for certain areas, including many trekking routes passing close to the border. ILPs are issued by regional magistrates and district commissioners, either directly to travellers (for free) or through travel agents (for a fee). See p282 (Himachal Pradesh), p366 (Ladakh), p483 (Uttaranchal) and p570 (Sikkim) for additional information.

Entering the northeast states of Arunachal Pradesh, Nagaland, Manipur and Mizoram is much harder – tourists require a Restricted Area Permit (RAP), which must be arranged through Foreigners' Regional Registration Offices (FRRO) offices. Ultimate permission comes from the Ministry of Home Affairs in Delhi, which is reluctant to issue permits to foreigners – without exception, your best chance of gaining a permit is to join an organised tour and let the travel agent make all the arrangements. See p592 for further details.

Most permits officially require you to travel in a group of four (married couples are also permitted in certain areas). This is enforced in some places, not in others – travel agents may have suggestions to help solo travellers get around these restrictions. Note that you can only travel to the places listed on the permit, often by set routes, and this is hard to change after the permit is issued.

It's not a bad idea to double-check with tourism officials to see if permit requirements have undergone any recent changes before you head out to these areas.

TRAVELLERS WITH DISABILITIES

The crowded public transport, crush of humanity and variable infrastructure can test even the hardiest able-bodied traveller. If you have a physical disability or you are vision impaired, these pose even more of a challenge. However, many disabled travellers rise above these obstacles.

India has a limited number of wheelchair-friendly hotels (mostly top end). Some restaurants and offices have ramps, but most have at least one step. Staircases are often steep and lifts frequently stop at mezzanines between floors. Footpaths and pavements, where they exist at all, are riddled with holes, littered with debris and packed with pedestrians, hindering movement. Try to book ground-floor hotel rooms and, if you use crutches, bring along spare rubber caps for the tips as they will wear down quickly.

If your mobility is considerably restricted you may like to consider travelling with an able-bodied companion. Additionally, hiring a car with driver will make moving around a whole lot easier (see p1172). Note that the new petroleum gas-powered taxis in large cities have not space in the boot for a wheelchair.

Organisations that may offer further advice include the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation (RADAR; ☎ 020-7250 3222; www.radar.org.uk; 12 City Forum, 250 City Rd, London EC1V 8AF, UK) and Mobility International USA (MIUSA; ☎ 541-3431284; www.miusa.org; Suite 343, 132 E Broadway, Eugene, OR 97401, USA). There are also some good websites on the net, including www.access-able.com.

VISAS

You must get a visa before arriving in India and these are easily available at Indian missions worldwide; see p1134 for listings. Most people travel on the standard tourist visa, which is more than adequate for most needs. Student visas and business visas have strict conditions and also restrict your access to tourist services such as tourist quotas on trains. An onward travel ticket is a requirement for most visas, but this is not always enforced (check in advance), except for the 72-hour transit visa.

Six-month multiple-entry tourist visas (valid from the date of issue) are granted to nationals of most countries regardless of how long you intend to stay. You can enter and leave as often as you like, but you can only spend a total of 180 days in the country, starting from the date of issue. There are additional restrictions on travellers from Bangladesh and Pakistan, as well as certain Eastern European, African and Central Asian countries. Check any special conditions for your nationality with the Indian embassy in your country.

Visas are priced in the local currency; Brits pay UK£30, Americans pay US$60, Australians pay A$75 (an extra A$15 service fee applies at consulates) and Japanese citizens pay just ¥1200.

Extended visas (up to five years) are possible for people of Indian descent (excluding those in Pakistan and Bangladesh) who hold a non-Indian passport and live abroad. Contact your embassy for more details.

For visas lasting more than six months, you need to register at the Foreigners' Regional Registration Office (FRRO; see below) within 14 days of arriving in India; inquire about these special conditions when you apply for your visa.

Visa Extensions

Fourteen-day visa extensions are theoretically possible at the discretion of the Ministry of Home Affairs (Map pp132-3; ☎ 011-23385748; 26 Jaisalmer House, Man Singh Rd, Delhi; inquiries 9-11am Mon-Fri) but don't get your hopes up. The only circumstances where this might conceivably happen is if you were robbed of your passport just before you planned to leave the country at the end of your visa. If you run low on time, consider doing the 'visa run' over to Bangladesh or Nepal and applying for another six-month tourist visa there.

If you do find yourself needing to request an extension, you should contact the Foreigners' Regional Registration Office (FRRO; Map pp120-1; ☎ 011-26195530; frrodelhi@hotmail.com; Level 2, East Block 8, Sector 1, Rama Krishna Puram, Delhi; 9.30am-1.30pm & 2-3pm Mon-Fri), just around the corner from the Hyatt Regency hotel. This is also the place to come for a replacement visa if you've had your lost/stolen passport replaced (required before you can leave the country). Regional FRROs are even less likely to grant an extension.

Assuming you meet the stringent criteria, the FRRO is permitted to issue an extension of 14 days, free for nationals of all countries except Japan (Rs 390), Sri Lanka (Rs 135 to 405, depending on the number of entries), Russia (Rs 1860) and Romania (Rs 500). You must bring your confirmed air ticket, one passport photo and a photocopy of your passport (information and visa pages). Note that this system is designed to get you out of the country promptly with the correct official stamps, not to give you two extra weeks of travel.

VOLUNTEERING

Numerous charities and international aid agencies work in India, and there are plentiful opportunities for foreign volunteers. However, there is a growing backlash against the casual volunteering that exists mainly for the benefit of the volunteer rather than the host community. It is unlikely that you will do much good by teaching children for a week – instead look for longer-term opportunities that require your specific skills. Better volunteer agencies will work to make small, sustainable changes, letting the process be guided and informed by local people. Be aware that many religious charities have a conversion agenda. Stick to manual tasks such as litter clearing and support roles unless you have time to make a real contribution. It is possible to find a placement after you arrive in India, but charities and NGOs normally prefer volunteers who have applied in advance and been approved for the kind of work involved.

Agencies Overseas

There are hundreds of international volunteering agencies, and it can be bewildering trying to assess which ones have ethical policies. Agencies that offer short projects in lots of different countries whenever you want to go are almost certainly tailoring projects to the volunteer rather than finding the right volunteer for the work that needs to be done.

The organisation Ethical Volunteering (www.ethicalvolunteering.org) has some excellent guidelines for choosing an ethical sending agency. Always allow enough time to make a difference – a month is a reasonable minimum time period to volunteer – and look for projects where you use your existing skills, rather than signing up for something that just sounds like a fun thing to do.

There are some tried and tested international projects, such as Britain's Voluntary Service Overseas (VSO; www.vso.org.uk), that volunteer in serious professional roles, though the time commitment can be as much as two years. The international organisation Indicorps (www.indicorps.org) matches volunteers to projects across India in all sorts of fields, particularly social development. There are special fellowships for people of Indian descent living outside India. Many Indian NGOs also offer volunteer work; for listings click on www.indianngos.com.

To find sending agencies in your area, look at Lonely Planet's Volunteer, the Gap Year Book and the Career Break Book, or use the internet – searching for 'volunteering' on Google will bring up pages of agencies and listings of volunteer opportunities. Some good starting sites include World Volunteer Web (www.worldvolunteerweb.org), Working Abroad (www.workingabroad.com) and Worldwide Volunteering (www.worldwidevolunteering.org.uk).

Aid Programmes in India

Following are listings of programmes in India that may have opportunities for volunteers. Always contact them in advance, rather than turning up on the doorstep expecting to be offered a position. Donations of money or clothing from travellers may also be welcomed. Note that unless otherwise indicated, volunteers are expected to cover their own costs (accommodation, food, transport etc).

ANDHRA PRADESH

The Confederation of Voluntary Associations (COVA; ☎ 040-24572984; www.covanetwork.org; 20-4-10, Charminar, Hyderabad) is an umbrella organisation for around 800 NGOs, predominantly based in Andhra Pradesh, working with women, children, civil liberties and sustainable agriculture. Volunteers are matched to programmes that need their skills (long-term volunteers preferred).

With an animal hospital and sanctuary, Karuna Society for Animals & Nature (☎ 08555-287214; www.karunasociety.org; 2/138/C Karuna Nilayam, Prasanthi Nilayam Post, Anantapur 515134) works to rescue sick and mistreated animals. There are opportunities for volunteer vets.

BIHAR

There are opportunities for volunteer teachers, carers, health professionals and other roles in schools and community projects around Bihar, both long and short term. See Schools & Institutions, p560 for details.

CHHATTISGARH

The NGO-run crafts-complex SAATHI (☎ 07786-242852; saathibastar@yahoo.co.in; Kondagaon) encourages local employment in the production of terracotta, ironwork and other metalwork, and woodcarving. There are opportunities for volunteers to help with training (a design or craft background is preferred).

DELHI

There are two branches of Mother Teresa's Kolkata-based order Missionaries of Charity (Nirmal Hriday Map pp120-1; ☎ 011-23812180; 1 Magazine Rd; Shishu Bhavan Map pp120-1; ☎ 011-23950181; 12 Commissioners Lane), which welcome volunteers. Shishu Bhavan looks after infants (female volunteers only), while Nirmal Hriday cares for the sick, destitute and dying. However, the organisation has a religious agenda that will not appeal to all volunteers.

The Concern India Foundation (Map pp120-1; ☎ 011-26210997; delhi@concernindia.org; Room A52, 1st fl, Amar Colony, Lajpat Nagar 4) may be able to link volunteers with current projects around the country; contact them well in advance for information.

Near the Hotel Namaskar in Delhi's Paharganj, Salaam Baalak Trust (Map p140; ☎ 011-23681803; www.salaambaalaktrust.com; Chandiwalan, Main Bazaar, Paharganj) provides shelter, food, education and other support to Delhi's homeless street children. Volunteers to teach English and other subjects are welcome. Another way you can help is by taking a tour with a street child – see p139.

SOS Children's Village (Map pp132-3; ☎ 011-24359734; www.soscvindia.org; A7 Nizammudin West) assists orphan, abandoned and destitute children. There are periodic openings for volunteers to teach English for a minimum of three months (apply in advance). See p1159 for information about other SOS projects in India.

GOA

Goa's leading environmental group, the Goa Foundation (☎ 0832-2263305; www.olb.com; c/o Other India Bookstore, Mapusa, Goa 403507), runs occasional voluntary programmes, including litter clean-ups; contact them for details.

The British-based organisation Children Walking Tall (☎ 01623-450944; www.childrenwalkingtall.com; 54 Clipstone Drive, Forest Town, Mansfield, Notts, NG19 0JJ, UK) has opportunities for volunteer child carers, teachers and medics at its projects for homeless children and orphans near Mapusa. The minimum placement is three months and every volunteer needs a criminal background check.

GUJARAT

Mother Teresa's Kolkata-based Missionaries of Charity (☎ 079-27559050; 831/1 Bhimjipura, Nara Wadaj, Ahmedabad) has a branch in Ahmedabad that takes care of abandoned infants (female volunteers only). Some may be uncomfortable with the religious agenda.

Also in Ahmedabad is the Animal Help Foundation (Map p719; ☎ 079-2867698; www.ahfindia.org; 5 Retreat, Shahibaug, Ahmedabad 380004), which helps destitute animals, including street dogs and the thousands of birds wounded during the Makar Sakranti kite festival. Opportunities exist for vets and animal carers.

HIMACHAL PRADESH

McLeod Ganj is the volunteering capital of Himachal Pradesh, with numerous opportunities to work with Tibetan refugees, both long and short term. See p325 for more details.

About 6km south of Manali in the village of Rangri, the Himalayan Buddhist Cultural School (☎ 01902-251845; palkithakur@yahoo.com) has placements for experienced teachers who are willing to volunteer for six months or more. This is a working school, so call or email before turning up on the doorstep.

Volunteer placements for experienced teachers can be arranged at Buddhist nunnery schools in Spiti through the US-based Jamyang Foundation (☎ 619-260-4600; www.jamyang.org; 5998 Alcala Park, San Diego, CA 92110-2492); see p342 for more information.

JAMMU & KASHMIR

Volunteering in Jammu and the Kashmir Valley is complicated by the security situation, but there are numerous opportunities in Zanskar and Ladakh. Many Buddhist monastery schools need experienced teachers of English for long-term volunteer placements, and there are also tours that clean the rubbish from remote areas; for details, see p373.

Volunteer placements for teachers at Buddhist schools for girls in Zanskar can be arranged through the US-based Jamyang Foundation (☎ 619-260-4600; www.jamyang.org; 5998 Alcala Park, San Diego, CA 92110-2492).

The British-based charity International Society for Ecology and Culture (☎ 01803-868650; www.isec.org.uk; Foxhole, Dartington, Devon TQ9 6EB, UK) works to promote sustainable development in rural parts of Ladakh. There are one-month placements on rural farms that aim to give Ladakhis control over their future and foster cross-cultural understanding; contact the charity directly to find out exactly how you can help.

The local NGO Ladakh Ecological Development Group (☎ 01982-253331; Ecology Centre, Leh) is involved in environmental education and sustainable development; contact the group directly for ways to help.

Many international volunteer sending agencies also offer placements in Ladakh; see p1155 for details.

KARNATAKA

Bengaluru's Ashoka Trust for Research in Ecology & the Environment (Atree; ☎ 080-23533942; www.atree.org; 659 5th A Main Rd, Hebbal, Bengaluru 560024) is committed to sustainable development issues related to conservation and biodiversity. It takes volunteers with experience or a keen interest in conservation and environmental issues.

Equations (☎ 080-25457607; www.equitabletourism.org; 415, 2nd C Cross, 4th Main Rd, OMBR Layout, Banaswadi Post, Bengaluru 560043) works to promote 'holistic tourism' and protect local communities from exploitation through lobbying, local training programmes and research publications.

Family Services (☎ 9844026222; www.thefamilyindia.org; 68, 2nd fl, Transpade Towers, Koramangala Industrial Layout, Jyothi Nivas College Rd, Bengaluru 560095) runs a school for slum kids – it's possible to visit at the weekends to help out. It also runs programmes in Delhi and Mumbai.

It may also be possible to volunteer at the Bengaluru gay-and-lesbian support groups Sangama (p1138) and Swabhava (p1138).

KOLKATA

Founded by Mother Teresa, the Missionaries of Charity has opportunities at several care homes around Kolkata, including Nirmal Hriday (home for the dying), Prem Dan (for the sick and mentally ill) and Shishu Bhavan (for orphaned children). The administrative centre for volunteers is the Motherhouse (Map pp488-9; ☎ 033-22497115; 54A AJC Bose Rd); register and get more information about placements at 3pm Monday, Wednesday and Friday. Note that this organisation has been criticised over sustainability issues and its religious agenda.

The Situational Management & Inter-Learning Establishment (SMILE; ☎ 033-30956494; www.smilengo.org; Udayrajpur, Madhyamgram, No 9 Rail Gate) is an NGO working with Kolkata's destitute young people. It runs a residential children's home and provides direct assistance to homeless children at Sealdah train station. Volunteers are accepted for two-week work camps and longer stays lasting up to a year (you pay a fee to participate, which covers meals and accommodation).

Started in 1979, Calcutta Rescue (Map p494; ☎/fax 033-22175675; www.calcuttarescue.com; 4th fl, 85 Collins St) provides medical care and health education for the poor and disadvantaged of Kolkata and West Bengal. The organisation has six- to nine-month openings for experienced medical staff, teachers and administrators; contact it directly for current vacancies.

Run by volunteer vets, the Calcutta Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (CSPCA; Map p496; ☎ 033-22367738; cspca@rediffmail.com; 276 BB Ganguly Street) cares for stray and domestic animals in Kolkata and campaigns for animal rights. Qualified vets can volunteer at the veterinary surgery on BB Ganguly Rd, but a minimum of one month is preferred.

MADHYA PRADESH

Serious volunteers should head to Bhopal, where the Sambhavna Trust (Map p683; ☎ 2730914; www.bhopal.org; Bafna Colony, Berasia Rd) accepts volunteers at its clinic providing long-term care to the victims of the Bhopal chemical disaster. There are opportunities in health care, promotion, research and internet communications (two weeks minimum).

In Khajuraho, volunteers can help at workshops run by NGO Global Village (☎ 07686-274237; globalvillage@indiatimes.com; Main Rd, Khajuraho), which targets environmental problems such as the plastic bags left littering the town by tour groups.

Volunteers with an interest in architecture can assist the work of the Nek Chand Foundation (☎ 01923-856644; www.nekchand.com; 1 Watford Rd, Radlett, Herts, WD7 8LA, UK), which maintains and preserves the mosaics of the unusual Nek Chand Rock Garden in Chandigarh.

MAHARASHTRA

Based near Phaltan, the Nimbkar Agricultural Research Institute (☎ 02166-222396; http://nariphaltan.virtualave.net/; Phaltan-Lonand Rd, Tambmal, Phaltan) has a focus on sustainable development, animal husbandry and renewable energy. Volunteer internships lasting two to six months are available for agriculture, engineering and science graduates to assist with the research.

Located 30km from Pune is Sadhana Village (☎ 020-25380792; www.sadhana-village.org; Priyankit, 1 Lokmanya Colony, Pune 411038), a residential-care centre for intellectually disabled adults. Volunteers assist in workshops, cultural activities and community-development programmes for women and children. Meals and accommodation are provided but the organisation receives no government funding so donations are appreciated.

MUMBAI

In Mumbai, the independent trust Child Rights & You (CRY; ☎ 022-23063647/51; www.cry.org; 189A Anand Estate, Sane Guruji Marg) organises fundraising for more than 300 projects India-wide, including a dozen projects in Mumbai helping deprived children. There are long- and short-term opportunities for people from all backgrounds.

The Vatsalya Foundation (☎ 022-24962115; Anand Niketan, King George V Memorial, Dr E Moses Rd, Mahalaxmi) works with Mumbai's street children, focusing on rehabilitation into mainstream society. There are long- and short-term opportunities in teaching and sports activities.

The charitable Concern India Foundation (☎ 022-22880129; www.concernindia.org; 3rd fl, Ador House, 6K Dubash Marg) supports development-oriented organisations working with vulnerable members of the community. The focus is on establishing sustainable projects run by local people. The foundation can arrange volunteer placements matched to your skills and interests in Mumbai and around India (six months minimum). Volunteers should preferably speak Hindi.

Saathi (☎ 022-23520053; www.saathi.org; Agripada Municipal School, Farooque Umarbhouy Lane) works with adolescent street children. It also has a project in Ahmedabad (Gujarat) for children affected by communal violence. Volunteers should be willing to commit at least three months and work full time for the organisation during the project.

ORISSA

The Wildlife Society of Orissa (☎ 0671-2311513; A320, Sahid Nagar, Bhubaneswar 751007) accepts volunteers to help with its work to save endangered species in Orissa, especially the olive ridley turtle (see p652).

RAJASTHAN

The Jaipur branch of Mother Teresa's Kolkata-based Missionaries of Charity (☎ 0141-2365804; Vardhman Path, C-Scheme, Jaipur) provides a refuge for the destitute, many of whom are mentally ill or disabled. However, its ethos focuses on care rather than medical treatment or prevention.

Assisting people with cerebral palsy and other neural conditions, Disha – Centre for Special Education, Vocational Training and Rehabilitation (☎ 0141-2393319/2391690; www.dishafoundation.org; Disha Path, Nirman Nagar-C, Jaipur 302019) operates a centre providing special education, home management, staff training, counselling and advocacy. Volunteers from the fields of physiotherapy, speech therapy, special education, sports, arts and crafts and vocational counselling are welcomed.

The animal hospital Help in Suffering (☎ 0141-2760803; hisjpr@datainfosys.net; Maharani Farm, Durgapura, Jaipur 302018) is partly funded by the World Society for the Protection of Animals (WSPA) and welcomes qualified voluntary vets (three-/six-/12-month commitments). Apply first in writing.

Also in Jaipur is the SOS Children's Village (☎ 0141-2280262; www.sos-childrensvillages.org; Jhotwara Rd, Jaipur), located opposite Petal Factory, which cares for and educates children and young adults. Volunteers teach English and help the children with their homework for a minimum of one year. The parent organisation SOS Kinderdorf International runs more than 30 programmes across India, employing unmarried women, abandoned wives and widows as carers for orphaned, destitute and abandoned children.

The NGO Marwar Medical & Relief Society (☎ 0291-2545210, 0291-2571620; www.mandore.com; c/o Mandore Guest House, Mandore) works to address drug-addiction problems and provide medical services and education in the Jodhpur district. Guests at its guesthouse in Mandore and other volunteers are accepted on short-term development and education projects in local villages.

Jaipur's Ladli (☎ 9829011124; www.ladli.org; 74 Govindpuri, Rakdi, Sodala, Jaipur 302006) provides vocational training for abused, orphaned and destitute children. Volunteers work in child care, teach English and take children's activities, and placements last two months to a year.

Seva Mandir (☎ 0294-2450960; www.sevamandir.org; Old Fatehpura, Udaipur 313004) is involved in health promotion, literacy programmes and developing natural resources. Development interns can observe and participate in development work for a minimum period of two weeks; apply through the website.

Also in Udaipur, the animal hospital Animal Aid Society (%0294-3111435; www.animalaidsociety.org; c/o Pratap Singh Rathore, 27C Neemach Mata Scheme, Dewali, Udaipur 313004) accepts trained veterinary staff and other animal-loving volunteers to help rescue and treat injured stray animals and street dogs at its veterinary clinic in Chota Hawala village.

The Urmul Trust (☎ 0151-2523093; Urmul Bhawan, Ganganagar Rd, Bikaner) provides primary health care and education to around 500 villages in Rajasthan, as well as promoting rights for women. Volunteer placements (minimum one month) are available in social welfare, teaching, health care and other projects. The Urmul Trust is located inside Urmul Dairy (next to the bus terminal).

SIKKIM

Placements for volunteer teachers at schools in Sikkim – including the Denjong Pedma Choling Academy near Pelling – can be arranged through the British-based charity Himalayan Education Lifeline Programme (HELP; ☎ 012-2726 3055; www.help-education.org; Mansard House, 30 Kingsdown Park, Whitstable, Kent CT5 2DF, UK). Placements last a minimum of two months (exactly two months in Sikkim), and volunteers cover all their expenses and make a contribution to the programme. English speakers over 20 years old are preferred.

Teaching placements in Sikkim can also be arranged through the Muyal Liang Trust (☎ 020-7229 4774; 53 Blenheim Crescent, London W11 2EG UK).

TAMIL NADU

In Chennai, there are volunteer opportunities at the Missionaries of Charity (☎ 044-25956928; 79 Main Rd, Royapuram, Chennai), which is part of Mother Teresa's Kolkata-based care operation. However, the organisation has been criticised for its religious agenda.

The Freedom Foundation (☎ 044-25567228; www.thefreedomfoundation.org; 15 United Colony, Red Hills Rd, Kolathur, Chennai) provides services to people living with HIV/AIDs, including treatment at its clinic and work-skills training. It also campaigns for HIV education and prevention. There are opportunities for counsellors, trainers, teachers and carers.

The international eye-care charity Unite for Sight (www.uniteforsight.org/intl_volunteer) has regular month-long openings for volunteer assistants, teachers, nurses and optical-health professionals to help at its partner eye-care clinics in Chennai and around India; see the website for details.

The NGO Rural Institute for Development Education (RIDE; ☎ 04112-268393; www.charityfocus.org/India/host/RIDE; 46 Periyar Nagar, Little Kanchipuram) works with around 200 villages in Kanchipuram to remove children from forced labour and into transition schools. Volunteers can contribute in teaching, administrative and support roles. See p1052 for more on child labour.

In Chennai, the Rejuvenate India Movement (RIM; ☎ 044-22235133; www.india-movement.org; A1 Monisha Sriram Flats, 9 Kulothungan Cross St, Chittlapakkam, Chennai 600064) can arrange three week to one year placements for skilled volunteers on development projects run by partner NGOs in 14 villages in Tamil Nadu. There are also opportunities in Karnataka. Spoken Hindi is an asset.

UTTAR PRADESH

Varanasi offers opportunities for volunteering at local schools. One such place is the Learn for Life Society (www.learn-for-life.org) which can be contacted through the Brown Bread Bakery (Map p426; 17 Tripura Bhairavi, Varanasi). For more information see p432.

UTTARAKHAND

Volunteers can help the Uttaranchal Forest Development Corporation (www.uafdc.org) with animal rescue and Gujjar tribal village development projects in Rajaji National Park. For more information, write to Pratap Chauhan, EDC Chairman, PO Pulna (Bhyundai), Chamoli, Uttarakhand, or contact Mahesh Yogi Organisation (☎ 01334-9051335; mohansadventure@vsnl.com; c/o Mohan's Adventure Tours, Railway Rd, Haridwar).

The grass-roots Rural Organisation for Social Elevation (ROSE; ☎ 05963-241081; www.rosekanda.info; Sonargaon Village, PO Kanda, Bageshwar, Uttarakhand 263631) is based in Kanda village, near Bageshwar in Uttarakhand. Volunteers live with a local family for one to six months, helping out with cooking, teaching, field work and building projects.

In Ghangaria village in the Valley of Flowers in northern Uttarakhand, the Eco Development Committee runs conservation projects between June and October. Contact the Nature Interpretation Centre (p471).

WEST BENGAL

In Darjeeling, Hayden Hall (Map p532; ☎ 2253228; haydenhall@cal.vsnl.net.in; 42 Laden La Rd, Darjeeling) has volunteer opportunities (minimum six months) for people with backgrounds in health care and preschool teaching.

The Tibetan Refugee Self-Help Centre (Map p531; ☎ 0354-52346; 65 Gandhi Rd, Darjeeling) has occasional openings for volunteer nursery- and early-primary-school teachers, medical staff, and geriatric- and child-care workers. Previous experience is preferred.

Human Wave (☎ 033-26852823; humanwav@cal3.vsnl.net.in; 52 Tentultala Ln, Mankundu, Hooghly 712136) runs community development and health schemes in West Bengal, including volunteer projects in the Sunderbans and youth projects in Kolkata. The minimum period for volunteers is 15 days and you pay a small fee for food and accommodation. Contact the organisation directly for opportunities.

WOMEN TRAVELLERS

Although things are changing, particularly in the big cities, India remains a conservative country, especially so when it comes to the role of women. Despite a long history of erotic art, female sexuality is hidden away in modern Indian society. Combined with local attitudes to sex, the skimpy clothing and culturally inappropriate behaviour of a minority of foreign women have had a ripple effect on the perception of foreign women in India. The situation hasn't been helped by the Hollywood film industry traditionally portraying Western women as sexual objects.

One unfortunate consequence of this is that many female travellers experience sexual harassment in India – predominantly lewd comments and invasion of privacy, though groping is not uncommon. Most cases are reported in urban centres of North India and prominent tourist towns elsewhere. The problem barely exists in Buddhist regions like Sikkim and Ladakh, making these areas a welcome bolt hole to escape the hassle of the plains.

While there's no need to be paranoid, you should be aware that your behaviour and dress code is under scrutiny, and that local men may have a misguided opinion of how foreign women behave. Getting constantly stared at is something you'll have to get used to. Just be thick-skinned and try to rise above it. It's best to refrain from returning male stares, as this may be considered a come-on; dark glasses can help.

Other harassment women have encountered include provocative gestures, jeering, getting 'accidentally' bumped into on the street and being followed. Exuberant special events such as the Holi festival can be notorious for this (see p1137). Women travelling with a male partner are less likely to be harassed. However, mixed couples of Indian and non-Indian descent may get disapproving stares, even if neither individual actually lives in India.

Ultimately, there are no sure-fire ways of shielding yourself from sexual harassment, even if you do everything 'right' – use your own judgement and instincts, and err on the side of caution if you are unsure. The warnings in this section may seem a little daunting, but most men are not out to bother you and thousands of female travellers rise above these challenges every year.

Sanitary pads and tampons are available from pharmacies in all large cities and most tourist centres. Carry additional stocks for travel off the beaten track.

Clothing

Warding off sexual harassment is often a matter of adjusting your behaviour to match the prevailing social norms in India. Avoiding culturally inappropriate clothing can help enormously. Steer clear of sleeveless tops, shorts, miniskirts (ankle-length skirts are recommended) and any other skimpy, see-through or tight-fitting clothing. Baggy clothing that hides the contours of your body is the way to go.

In some areas, such as Goa and Mumbai, there's generally a more liberal attitude towards dress. Beachwear is normally fine on the beach and party clothes are OK for nightclubs, but away from these areas, take your cues from local women. Most Indian women wear saris, salwar kameez, or long shorts and a T-shirt whenever swimming in public view. When returning from the beach, use a sarong to avoid stares on the way back to your hotel.

Indian dress, when done properly, makes a positive impression and can dramatically cut down the harassment and stares. The salwar kameez is regarded as respectable attire and wearing it will reflect your respect for local dress etiquette. The flowing outfit is also surprisingly cool in the hot weather, and the dupatta (long scarf) worn with it is very handy if you visit a shrine that requires your head to be covered.

Going into public wearing a choli (small tight blouse worn under a sari) or a sari petticoat (which many foreign women mistake for a skirt) is rather like strutting around half dressed – don't do it. Read personal experiences proffered by fellow women travellers on the India page at www.journeywoman.com.

Staying Safe

Women have reported being molested by masseurs and other therapists, especially in Varanasi and McLeod Ganj. No matter where you are, try to check the reputation of any teacher or therapist before going to a solo session. If you feel uneasy at any time, leave. For gynaecological health issues, seek out a female doctor.

Keep conversations with unknown men short – getting involved in inane conversations with men can be misinterpreted as a sign of sexual interest. Questions such as 'Do you have a boyfriend?' or 'You are looking very beautiful' are indicators that the conversation may be taking a steamy tangent. Some women prepare in advance by wearing a pseudo wedding ring, or by announcing early on in the conversation that they are married or engaged (even if it isn't true).

If you still get the uncomfortable feeling that a man is encroaching on your space, he probably is. A firm request to keep away is usually enough, especially if your voice is loud enough to draw the attention of passers-by. Alternatively, the silent treatment (not responding to questions at all) can be remarkably effective.

When interacting with men on a day-to-day basis, adhere to the local practice of not shaking hands. Instead, say namaste – the traditional, respectful Hindu greeting – and bow slightly with the hands brought together at the chest or head level.

Female filmgoers will probably feel more comfortable (and decrease the chances of potential harassment) by going to the cinema with a companion. Lastly, it's wise to arrive in towns before dark and, of course, always avoid walking alone at night, especially in isolated areas.

Taxis & Public Transport

Officials recommend that solo women prearrange an airport pick-up from their hotel if their flight is scheduled to arrive late at night. If that's not possible, catch a prepaid taxi and make a point of (in front of the driver) writing down the car registration and driver's name, and giving it to one of the airport police. The system was overhauled after the shocking murder of a female tourist by a prepaid-taxi driver in Delhi in 2004, but most solo women (especially to Delhi) still prefer to prearrange an airport pick-up or wait until daybreak before leaving the airport.

Avoid taking taxis alone late at night (when many roads are deserted) and never agree to having more than one man (the driver) in the car – ignore claims that this is 'just his brother' or 'for more protection'. Women are advised against wearing expensive-looking jewellery as it can make them a target for muggers.

On trains and buses, being a woman has some advantages. Women are able to queue-jump without consequence, and on trains there are special ladies-only carriages. Solo women have reported less hassle by opting for the more expensive classes on trains, especially for overnight trips. If you're travelling overnight in a three-tier carriage, try to get the uppermost berth, which will give you more privacy (and distance from potential gropers).

On public transport, don't hesitate to return any errant limbs, put some item of luggage in between you and, if all else fails, find a new spot. You're also within your rights to tell him to shove off – loudly enough to attract public attention and shame the guy into leaving you alone.

WORK

Obtaining paid work in India is harder than you might expect, and local wages rarely make this cost effective for travellers. Business trips are easy, but working for an Indian company requires visa sponsorship from an Indian employer and finding a job before you travel. Although not strictly legal, casual opportunities exist at some tourist resorts teaching adventure sports and holistic therapies. However, this may deprive locals of much needed employment.

There may be opportunities with international package holiday companies for tour reps in Goa and Kerala (though you normally need to complete seasons in Europe to qualify), and opportunities for drivers and guides with the big overland tour companies (see p1177).

If you're a Bollywood fan there may be opportunities for working as an extra in Mumbai (see p778). Film crews also visit traveller hotels in Chennai (p1036) looking for extras for the day.

Transport

CONTENTS

GETTING THERE & AWAY

The following sections contain information on transport to and around India. Flights, tours and rail tickets can also be booked online at www.lonelyplanet.com.travel_services.

ENTERING THE COUNTRY

Entering India by air or land is relatively straightforward, with standard immigration and customs procedures (p1131).

> THINGS CHANGE…
> The information in this chapter is particularly vulnerable to change. Check directly with the airline or a travel agent to make sure you understand how a fare (and the ticket you may buy) works and be aware of the security requirements for international travel. Shop carefully. The details given in this chapter should be regarded as pointers and are not a substitute for your own careful, up-to-date research.

Passport

To enter India you need a valid passport, visa (see p1154) and an onward/return ticket. If your passport is lost or stolen, immediately contact your country's representative (see p1134). It's wise to keep photocopies of your airline ticket and the identity and visa pages from your passport in case of emergency. There are restrictions on entry for some nationalities – see the Visa section, p1154.

AIR

Airports & Airlines

India has four main gateways for international flights (listed below), and international flights also land in Bengaluru (Bangalore), Guwahati and Amritsar – for details, see www.indianairports.com. India is a big county so it makes sense to fly into the nearest airport to the area you want to visit.

Chennai (Madras; MAA; Anna International Airport; ☎ 044-22560551; www.chennaiairport.com)
Delhi (DEL; Indira Gandhi International Airport; ☎ 011-25652011; www.delhiairport.com)
Kolkata (Calcutta; CCU; Netaji Subhas Chandra Basu International Airport; ☎ 033-25118787; www.calcuttaairport.com)
Mumbai (Bombay; BOM; Chhatrapati Shivaji International Airport; ☎ 022-26829000; www.mumbaiairport.com)

India's national carrier is Air India (www.airindia.com) and the state-owned domestic carrier Indian Airlines (www.indian-airlines.nic.in) also offers flights to 20 countries in Asia and the Middle East (though it has a poor safety record). The more reliable private airlines Jet Airways (www.jetairways.com) and Air Sahara (www.airsahara.net) offer flights to Colombo, Kathmandu and the Maldives. Jet has recently started longhaul flights to London, Bangkok, Kuala Lumpur and Singapore. For details about India's domestic airlines, see p1169.

Departing India

Most airlines no longer require reconfirmation of international tickets, though it's still a good idea to call to check that flight times haven't changed. Most airlines ask you to check in

CLIMATE CHANGE & TRAVEL

Climate change is a serious threat to the ecosystems that humans rely on, and air travel is one of the fastest-growing contributors to the problem. Lonely Planet regards travel, overall, as a global benefit, but we believe that everyone has a responsibility to limit their personal impact on global warming.

Flying & Climate Change

Every form of motorised travel generates CO_2 (the main cause of human-induced climate change) but planes are far and away the worst offenders, not just because of fuel they consume, but because they release greenhouse gases high into the atmosphere. Two people taking a return flight between Europe and the US will contribute as much to climate change as an average household's gas and electricity consumption over a whole year.

Carbon Offset Schemes

Climatecare.org and other websites use 'carbon calculators' that allow travellers to offset the level of greenhouse gases they are responsible for with financial contributions to sustainable travel schemes and tree planting projects that offset the effects of global warming – including projects in India.

Lonely Planet, together with Rough Guides and other concerned partners in the travel industry, support the carbon offset scheme run by climatecare.org. Lonely Planet offsets all of its staff and author travel. For more information check out our website: lonelyplanet.com.

three hours before international departures – remember to factor in the Indian traffic when planning your trip to the airport.

Most Indian airports have free luggage trolleys, but porters will eagerly offer to lug your load for a negotiable fee. For flights originating in India, hold bags must be passed through the X-ray machine in the departures hall and baggage tags are required for the security check for all cabin bags, including cameras.

Tickets

An onward or return air ticket is a condition of the tourist visa, so few visitors buy international tickets inside India. Only designated travel agents can book international flights, but fares are normally the same if you book directly with the airlines. The cheapest time to visit is generally the monsoon (June to August). The departure tax of Rs 500 (Rs 150 for most South and Southeast Asian countries) and the Rs 200 passenger service fee is included in the price of almost all tickets.

The fares we've given in this section represent average starting fares available at the time of research. Contact a travel agent or surf the web to get up-to-the-minute fares and flight schedules. Advertisements for discount travel agencies appear in the travel pages of major newspapers and listings magazines. Note that fares on airline websites are sometimes just as cheap as going through an agent. Alternatively, try the following international online ticket agencies:

Ebookers (www.ebookers.com)
Expedia (www.expedia.com)
Flight Centre International (www.flightcentre.com)
Flights.com (www.tiss.com)
STA Travel (www.statravel.com)
Travelocity (www.travelocity.com)

Africa

There are direct flights to India from South Africa and East Africa. Return fares to Mumbai include US$600 from Nairobi and US$500 from Cape Town or Johannesburg.

There are international ticket agents in most African capitals. Rennies Travel (www.renniestravel.com) and STA Travel (www.statravel.co.za) have offices throughout southern Africa.

Asia

There are international travel agencies in capital cities across Asia, including STA Travel (Bangkok ☎ 02-2360262; www.statravel.co.th; Hong Kong ☎ 0852-27361618; www.hkst.com.hk/statravel; Kuala Lumpur ☎ 03-21489800; www.statravel.co.my; Singapore ☎ 67377188; www.statravel.com.sg; Tokyo ☎ 03-53912922; www.statravel.co.jp). Alternatively, book directly with the airlines.

BANGLADESH

Dhaka is the air hub for Bangladesh. Biman Bangladesh and Indian Airlines offer flights between Dhaka and Kolkata (from US$200 return) or Delhi (from US$500 return).

JAPAN

Tokyo/Narita is the main hub for flights between Japan and India. Flights to Delhi, Chennai, Kolkata and Mumbai start from US$540.

MALDIVES

A return or onward ticket is a condition of travel to the Maldives. Excursion fares to Malé from Thiruvananthapuram (Trivandrum) on Indian Airlines start at US$200 return.

MYANMAR (BURMA)

Return flights between Yangon (Rangoon) and Kolkata cost around US$350. Alternatively, you can connect through Bangkok, Singapore or Kuala Lumpur for around US$500.

NEPAL

Royal Nepal Airlines and half a dozen Indian carriers provide flights from Kathmandu to Delhi, Mumbai, Kolkata, Bengaluru and Varanasi. One-way/return fares include: Delhi (from US$150/300); Mumbai (from US$230/450); Kolkata (from US$120/240); Varanasi (from US$200/400) and Bengaluru (from US$230/450). You'll need an onward ticket to enter India on a one-way ticket from Nepal.

PAKISTAN

Flights between India and Pakistan are often suspended when relations between the two countries sour. At the time of research, return fares from Karachi cost US$300 to Delhi and US$200 to Mumbai. Flights from Lahore to Delhi are marginally cheaper.

SINGAPORE, MALAYSIA, HONG KONG & CHINA

There are extensive air connections between Southeast Asia and Delhi, Mumbai, Bengaluru, Chennai or Kolkata. Return flights between Singapore, Hong Kong or Kuala Lumpur and India start from US$550. Several airlines have recently started flights from Beijing and Shanghai to Delhi or Mumbai (from around US$550).

SRI LANKA

Sri Lankan Airlines and several Indian carriers provide connections from Colombo. Return fares include Mumbai (US$390), Delhi (US$450), Bengaluru (US$270) and Thiruvananthapuram (US$200).

THAILAND

Bangkok is the most popular departure point from Southeast Asia to India. Return fares from Bangkok include: Delhi or Mumbai (US$500), Kolkata (US$400) and Chennai (US$700).

Australia

Qantas has a flight from Sydney to Mumbai via Darwin, or you can fly to Delhi, Kolkata, Chennai, Mumbai or Bengaluru with a stop in Southeast Asia. Return fares to Delhi, Mumbai, Kolkata and Chennai range from A$1200 and A$1700, depending on the season.

STA Travel (☎ 134782; www.statravel.com.au) and Flight Centre (☎ 133133; www.flightcentre.com.au) have offices throughout Australia. For online bookings, try the website www.travel.com.au.

Canada

From eastern and central Canada, most flights go via Europe; from Vancouver and the west coast, flights go via Asia. Return fares from Vancouver or Toronto to Delhi or Mumbai start at around C$1500. Travel Cuts (☎ 800-667-2887; www.travelcuts.com) is Canada's national student travel agency, or try the big online agents.

Continental Europe

There are connections to Delhi, Mumbai, Kolkata, Chennai or Bengaluru from most European capitals, either directly or with a stop in the Middle East. For discount fares, try the agencies below or visit the big online ticket agencies. STA Travel (Austria ☎ 01-401486000; www.statravel.at; Denmark ☎ 33-141501; www.statravel.dk; Finland ☎ 09-68127717; www.statravel.fi; Germany ☎ 069-74303292; www.statravel.de; Norway ☎ 815-59905; www.statravel.no; Sweden ☎ 0771-474850; www.statravel.se; Switzerland ☎ 0900-450402; www.statravel.ch) and Last Minute (www.last-minute.co.uk) have regional websites for nations across Europe.

LAND

Border Crossings

Although most visitors fly into India, the overland route from Nepal is extremely popular and smaller numbers of travellers enter India from Pakistan and Bangladesh. For more on these routes, consult Lonely Planet's Istanbul to Kathmandu, or see the 'London to India' section on www.seat61.com/India.htm.

If you enter India by bus or train you'll be required to disembark at the border for standard immigration and customs checks. You must have a valid Indian visa in advance as no visas are available at the border. The standard Indian tourist visa allows multiple entries within a six-month period.

Drivers of cars and motorbikes will need the vehicle's registration papers, liability insurance and an International Driving Permit. You'll also need a Carnet de passage en douane, which acts as a temporary waiver of import duty. To find out the latest requirements for the paperwork and other important driving information contact your local automobile association.

See p1172 and p1175 for more on car and motorcycle travel.

BANGLADESH

Foreigners can use four of the land crossings between Bangladesh and India, all in West Bengal or the Northeast States. Exiting Bangladesh overland is complicated by red tape – if you enter by air, you require a road permit (or 'change of route' permit) to leave by land. This free permit can be obtained in Dhaka at the Directorate of Immigration and Passports (☎ 02-9131891/9134011; Sher-e-Bangla Nagar, Agargaon Rd; 9am-5pm Sun-Thu) in two to three working days; bring several passport photos. Some travellers have also reported problems exiting Bangladesh overland with the visa issued on arrival at Dhaka airport.

Heading from India to Bangladesh, tourist visas should be obtained in advance from a Bangladeshi mission. Delhi's Bangladesh embassy (☎ 011-24121389; EP39 Dr Radakrishnan Marg, Chanakyapuri; applications 9.30am-11pm Mon-Fri) issues visas in two working days with two passport photos; fees vary depending on nationality. Visas can also be obtained from the Bangladeshi missions in Kolkata (see p1135) and Agartala (see the boxed text, p615).

Heading from Bangladesh to India, you must pre-pay the exit tax at a designated branch of the Sonali Bank, which may be some distance from the border post.

Kolkata to Dhaka

There are daily bus services from Kolkata to Dhaka, crossing the India–Bangladesh border at Benapol – see p512 for more information. Plans for a train link between Kolkata and Dhaka have dragged on for years – inquire locally for progress reports.

Siliguri to Chengrabandha/Burimari

This minor northern border crossing is accessible from Siliguri in West Bengal. You must take a private bus from outside Tenzin Norgay central bus station to Jalpaiguri (Rs 40, two hours) and change there for the border post at Chengrabandha. See p528 for more details.

Shillong to Sylhet

This little-used crossing offers a handy back route from northeast India to Bangladesh. Share jeeps run every morning from Bara Bazaar in Shillong to the border post at Dawki, where you can walk or catch a taxi to the bus station in Tamabil, which has regular buses to Sylhet – see the boxed text p612 for more information.

Agartala to Dhaka

The Bangladesh border is 4km from Agartala and several daily trains run on to Dhaka from Akhaura on the Bangladesh side of the border. See the boxed text p612 for more details.

BHUTAN

Phuentsholing is the main entry and exit point between India and Bhutan; you now need a full Bhutanese visa to enter the country, which must be obtained at least 15 days before your trip from a registered travel agent listed under the Department of Tourism, Bhutan (www.tourism.gov.bt).

Bhutan visas for non-Indians require a prepaid tour (minimum US$200 to US$240 per day, all-inclusive). Tour and visa can be arranged within two days through RCPL Travels (Map pp488-9; ☎ 24400665; travelcal@vsnl.net; www.kingdomofbhutan.info; 5/4 Ballygunge Pl, Kolkata).

Siliguri/Kolkata to Phuentsholing

Buses from Kolkata and Siliguri to Phuentsholing are run by Bhutan Transport Services.

From Kolkata, there's a direct bus at 7pm on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday (Rs 300, 20 hours). See the boxed text p528 for details on travel from Siliguri. There's also a rail route from Siliguri via Alipurduar (on the main train line between Siliguri and Guwahati) connecting with local buses to the border.

NEPAL

The security situation in Nepal has improved massively since the ceasefire in 2006. Nevertheless, it makes sense to check the security situation before crossing into Nepal by land – local newspapers and international news websites are good places to start.

Political and weather conditions permitting, there are five land border crossings between India and Nepal:

- Sunauli in Uttar Pradesh to Bhairawa in central Nepal
- Raxaul in Bihar to Birganj in central Nepal
- Panitanki in West Bengal to Kakarbhitta in eastern Nepal
- Jamunaha in Uttar Pradesh to Nepalganj in western Nepal
- Banbassa in Uttaranchal to Mahendranagar in western Nepal

Two-month single-entry visas for Nepal (US$30) are available at all the border crossings but payment is due in US dollars and you need two passport photos. Alternatively, obtain a single-entry or six-month multiple-entry visa (US$80) in advance from a Nepalese mission. In Delhi, the Nepal embassy (☎ 011-23327361; Barakhamba Rd; ☎ applications 9am-noon Mon-Fri) issues visas in one day with two passport photos. In Kolkata the Nepal consulate (☎ 033-24561224; 1 National Library Ave, Alipore; 9am-4pm Mon-Fri) issues visas while you wait.

Sunauli to Bhairawa

The easiest crossing for Delhi or Varanasi, with connections on to Kathmandu, Pokhara and Lumbini. There are daily buses to Sunauli from Varanasi (Rs 172, 10 hours) or Delhi (Rs 1400, 36 hours), or you can travel by train to Gorakhpur (p439) and take a local bus to Sunauli from there. See the boxed text p442 for information on crossing the border.

Banbassa to Mahendranagar

This intriguing back route into Nepal provides access to the little-visited western Terai. However, the route is often blocked by flooding and landslides in the monsoon and it's sensible to check the political situation before you travel. Daily buses to Banbassa leave Delhi's Anand Vihar bus stand (☎ bookings 011-22141611) hourly until late (Rs 210, 10 hours). See the boxed text p484 for information crossing the border.

Raxaul to Birganj

This crossing is convenient for Kolkata, Patna and the eastern plains, and there are onward connections to Kathmandu. Daily buses run to Raxaul from Patna and Kolkata, but it's more comfortable to jump on the daily Mithila Express train from Kolkata's Howrah train station – see the entry under Raxaul (p557) and the boxed text (p557) for information on crossing the border.

Panitanki to Kakarbhitta

The handiest crossing for Darjeeling, Sikkim and the Northeast States. Buses and share jeeps run to the border from Siliguri and several other towns in West Bengal, and you can explore the eastern Terai as you travel on to Kathmandu. See the boxed text p528 for details on crossing the border.

Jamunaha to Nepalganj

Plenty of domestic tourists cross into Nepal at Jamunaha in Uttar Pradesh, but most foreign travellers stick to more convenient crossings. However, Nepalganj is a useful gateway for Nepal's Royal Bardia National Park and there are regular onward flights to Kathmandu. Buses run regularly from Lucknow to Rupaidha Bazar (Rs 160, seven hours), a short rickshaw ride from the Jamunaha border post. Alternatively, you can take a train to Nanpara, and change to a bus or taxi for the 17km trip to the border.

PAKISTAN

Crossing between India and Pakistan by land depends on the current state of relations between the two countries. Militants regularly slip across the porous border from Pakistan to carry out attacks in India and transport between the two countries often stops in the aftermath of any attack. Assuming the crossings are open, there are routes into Pakistan from Delhi, Amritsar and Rajasthan by bus or train. The much-celebrated bus route from Srinagar to Pakistan-administered Kashmir is currently only open to Indian travellers.

You must have a visa to enter Pakistan, and it is usually easiest to obtain this in the Pakistan mission in your home country. At the time of writing, the Pakistan embassy (☎ 24676004; 2/50G Shantipath, Chanakyapuri; applications 8.30am-11.30am Mon-Fri) in Delhi was issuing double-entry, two-month tourist visas for most nationalities in around two days, but this office may stop issuing visas at times of political tension. If you apply within India, you'll need a letter of recommendation from your home embassy as well as the usual application forms and passport photos.

Attari to Wagah (Amritsar to Lahore)

The main transit point between India and Pakistan is the border post between Attari, near Amritsar, and Wagah, near Lahore. Regular buses run from Amritsar (p269) to the border and there are regular onward connections from Wagah to Lahore. There are also through bus and train services all the way from Delhi – see below. For more information on crossing the border, see the boxed text, p275. Try to coordinate your crossing with the spectacular closing of the border ceremony – see the boxed text, p276.

Delhi to Lahore

If you prefer to keep things simple, there are direct bus and train services between Delhi and Lahore. However, these services are extremely crowded and clearing the border formalities can take anywhere between two and five hours – compared to one or two hours if you travel independently. Security is also a serious concern – the Delhi–Lahore train was bombed by militants in February 2007, killing 67 people.

The Lahore Bus Service leaves from Delhi's Dr Ambedkar Bus Station office (☎ 011-23318180 or 23712228; Delhi Gate; 9am-7pm Mon-Sat) at 6am on Tuesday, Wednesday, Friday and Sunday, arriving in Lahore 12 hours later. The fare is Rs 1250 one-way (advance bookings are essential). The baggage limit is 20kg per person (Rs 60 per extra kg, maximum 15 kg) plus one piece of hand luggage.

The Samjhauta Express train leaves the Old Delhi train station (purchase tickets here) on Wednesday and Sunday at 10.50pm and arrives at the Indian border crossing of Attari at 7am, where passengers disembark for customs checks and visa procedures, before reboarding for the 30 minute trip to Lahore. Tickets cost Rs 209 in sleeper class. However, services may be disrupted following the February 2007 bomb attack.

Rajasthan to Pakistan

After 35 years of wrangling, the 4889 Thar Express train from Jodhpur in Rajasthan to the border crossing at Munabao/Khokraparand onto Karachi in Pakistan resumed in early 2006. Unfortunately, services were suspended almost immediately because of flood damage to the track during the 2006 monsoon. A limited service resumed in February 2007, with a maximum of 400 passengers in each direction. However, schedules are erratic so check locally in Jodhpur for departure times.

SEA

There are several sea routes between India and surrounding islands but none leave Indian sovereign territory – see p1171. There has been talk of a passenger ferry service between southern India and Colombo in Sri Lanka but this has yet to materialise. Inquire locally to see if there has been any progress.

GETTING AROUND

AIR

The big three domestic airlines – Indian Airlines, Jet Airways and Air Sahara – charge rupee fares for Indian citizens and higher US dollar fares for foreigners (usually payable in rupees). Most budget airlines charge the same low rupees to everyone. Budget airline seats can be booked by telephone, through travel agents, or cheaply over the web. Fares change daily, but you usually get a better deal the further you book in advance – check the airline websites for details.

Reconfirmation is normally only required if your ticket was bought outside India, but call a few days ahead to be safe. Airlines may issue a replacement for lost tickets at their discretion, but refunds are rare. For details of discounts on airfares, see p1134.

Check-in for domestic flights is an hour before departure and hold luggage must be X-rayed and stamped before you check-in. Every item of cabin baggage needs a baggage label, which must be stamped as part of your security check. Flights to sensitive destinations (eg Kashmir or Ladakh) have extra security restrictions: cabin baggage may be completely

HELICOPTER SERVICES IN INDIA

Several companies offer helicopter shuttle services around India. Operating under a variety of names, the state-subsidised carrier Pawan Hans Helicopters (www.pawanhans.nic.in) connects the regional capitals of Northeast India, and there are also flights from Siliguri in West Bengal to Gangtok in Sikkim (see p526) and from Srinagar to the main pilgrimage sites in Kashmir (see p358). However, helicopter travel in India has a shocking safety record, with four major accidents since 2002, and numerous minor crashes. We won't say don't use them, but be aware of the risks.

prohibited and batteries must be removed from all electronic items and placed in the hold. You may also need to identify your bags on the tarmac before they are loaded on the plane. Officially, photography is forbidden but this is not strictly enforced.

Some smaller airlines will only take off if there are enough passengers to cover costs. Passengers usually receive a refund for cancellations, but several travellers have reported being booked onto other airlines at inflated prices by airline staff. If your flight is cancelled demand a refund and make the onward booking yourself.

The baggage allowance is 20kg (10kg for smaller aircraft) in economy class, 30kg in business.

Airlines in India

In recently years, there has been a massive surge in domestic flights around India. The state-owned carrier Indian Airlines (www.indian-airlines.nic.in) still has the largest network, but its record on safety and reliability is unenviable and the private airlines Jet Airways (www.jetairways.com) and Air Sahara (www.airshahara.net) are catching up fast. Then there are India's new budget airlines, offering discounted rupee fares for flights around the country over the internet.

In fact, the whole industry is seriously overinflated, with many airlines spiralling into debt. Until the bubble bursts, this is a great time to fly around India, but fares change daily and there is no guarantee that all the airlines will be around after the expected slump occurs. As a rough indication, fares for a one-hour flight range from US$150 on an established carrier to Rs 1000 with a budget airline.

New airlines seem to spring up every month, so it's worth talking to local travel agents and scanning the web for the latest routes and carriers. At the time of writing, the airlines listed below were serving destinations across India – the regional chapters and the airline websites have details of routes, fares and booking offices.

Air Deccan (www.airdeccan.net) Budget fares and a growing list of destinations, including Kashmir, the Kullu Valley and the northeast.

Air India (www.airindia.com) India's national carrier operating a number of domestic flights generally leaving from the international terminals of Indian airports (check in advance).

GoAir (www.goair.in) New budget carrier, connecting Goa with major hubs across India.

Indian Airlines (www.indian-airlines.nic.in) With its subsidiary Alliance Air, the state domestic carrier has flights across India and international services to 20 neighbouring countries, but a poor record on safety and service.

IndiGo (www.goindigo.in) A growing budget carrier set to expand massively with 100 new planes.

Jagson Airlines (www.jagsonairline.com) Uses tiny Dornier planes to access small runways in Himachal Pradesh.

Jet Airways (www.jetairways.com) Rated by many as India's best airline, serving the entire country, plus Sri Lanka, Nepal, Southeast Asia and the UK.

Kingfisher Airlines (www.flykingfisher.com) Yep, it's an airline owned by a beer company, serving Kashmir, the plains, South India and the northeast.

Sahara Airlines (www.airsahara.net) Hot on the heels of Jet, with a similar domestic and international network.

Spicejet (www.spicejet.com) Discount seats to hubs across India.

Air Passes

The big three Indian airlines – Indian Airlines, Jet Airways and Air Sahara – all offer air passes. However, these rarely work out cheaper than buying individual discounted tickets.

Indian Airlines' 'Discover India' pass costs US$630/895 for 15/21 days, plus US$21 tax for each flight sector. You can travel on any flight, except the flight to the Lakshadweep Islands, but you can't visit the same place twice. There's also the Indian Airlines 'India Wonder' fare, which costs US$300 plus US$21 per flight sector for one week's travel. The pass is valid for North India or South India, and you must specify one or the other when you book. Again, Lakshadweep is off-limits.

Air passes are also available from Jet Airways (foreigners and Indians) and Air Sahara (Indian nationals only).

BICYCLE

There are no restrictions on bringing a bicycle into India, though it may be cheaper to hire or buy a bike after you arrive. Mountain bikes with off-road tires give the best protection against India's potholed and puncture-prone roads. Roadside cycle mechanics abound but you should still bring spare tires and brake cables, lubricating oil and a chain repair kit, and plenty of puncture repair patches. Bikes can often be carried for free, or for a small luggage fee, on the roofs of public buses – handy for uphill stretches. Contact your airline for information about transporting your bike and customs formalities in your home country.

Read up on bicycle touring before you travel – Rob van de Plas' Bicycle Touring Manual (Bicycle Books, 1987) and Stephen Lord's Adventure Cycle-Touring Handbook (Trailblazer Publications, 2006) are good places to start. Consult local cycling magazines and cycling clubs for useful information and advice. The Cycle Federation of India (☎/fax 011-23392578; Yamuna Velodrome, IGI Sports Complex, New Delhi; 🕑 10am-5pm Mon-Fri) can provide local advice.

Road rules are virtually nonexistent in India and cities and national highways are hazardous places to cycle, so stick to back roads. Be conservative about the distances you expect to cover – an experienced cyclist can cover 60km to 100km a day on the plains, 40km to 60km on sealed mountain roads and 40km or less on dirt roads.

Hire

Big tourist centres and other places where travellers hang around – eg Goa, Hampi and Leh – are the easiest places to find bicycles for hire. Expect to pay Rs 30 to Rs 100 per day for a roadworthy, Indian-made bike. Hire places may require a security deposit (cash, airline ticket or passport). See Cycling & Motorcycling on p93 for good places to rent a bike.

Purchase

The best place to buy anything bicycle-related is Delhi's Jhandewalan Cycle Market (Map pp120–1), which has imported and domestic new and secondhand bikes and spare parts. Mountain-bikes from reputable brands like Hero, Atlas, Hercules or Raleigh start at Rs 2000, and extras like panniers, stands and bells are readily available. Reselling is quite easy – ask at local cycle or hire shops or put up an advert on travel noticeboards. You should be able to get 50% of what you originally paid back if it was a new bike and is still in reasonably good condition.

BOAT

Regular scheduled ferries connect mainland India to Port Blair in the Andaman Islands (see p1111). The trip takes around 60 hours from Chennai (see p1042) or around 56 hours from Kolkata (see p512). There are also sporadic ferries from Visakhapatnam (Andhra Pradesh) to the Andaman Islands (see p1111). From October to May, there are also ferry services from Kochi (Cochin) in Kerala to the Lakshadweep Islands (around 20 hours; see p1023).

There are also numerous ferry services across rivers, from chain pontoons to wicker coracles, and various boat cruises – see the regional chapters and the Activities chapter p93 for more information.

BUS

Buses are the cheapest way to get around India, though most travellers prefer trains for long-distance journeys. Services are fast and frequent, and buses are the only way to get around many mountainous areas. However, roads are perilous, buses are driven with wilful abandon and accidents are always a risk. Avoid night buses unless there is no alternative – drivers use the quieter roads as an excuse to take even more death-defying risks. All buses make regular snack and toilet stops, providing a break from the rattle and shake but adding hours to journey times.

Buses run by the state government bus companies are usually the safest and most reliable option, and seats can be booked up to a month in advance. Private buses tend to be cheaper but drivers are notorious speed-demons and conductors cram as many passengers on as possible to maximise profits. Earplugs are a boon on all long-distance buses to muffle the deafening music. On any bus, sit between the axles to minimise the effect of bumps and potholes.

Luggage is either stored in compartments underneath the bus (sometimes for a small fee) or it can be carried free of charge on the roof. Conductors will carry your bags up for a modest tip, or you can scramble up yourself and have peace of mind that your luggage is secure. Roof riding on public buses used to be a thrilling way to see the Indian countryside but the authorities have decided that it is (a) dangerous, and (b) too much fun. Roof-riding is now only possible on local buses between outlying villages.

If your bags go on the roof, make sure they are locked shut and securely tied to the metal baggage rack – some unlucky travellers have seen their belongings go bouncing off the roof on bumpy roads! Theft is a minor risk so keep an eye on your bags at snack and toilet stops and never leave your day-pack unattended inside the bus.

Share jeeps complement the bus service in many mountain areas – see p1177.

Classes

Both state and private companies offer 'ordinary' buses – ageing rattletraps with wonky windows that blast in dust and cold air – or more expensive 'deluxe' buses, which range from less decrepit versions of ordinary buses to flashy Volvo tour buses with AC and reclining two-by-two seating. Travel agents in tourist towns offer expensive private two-by-two buses, which tend to leave and terminate at conveniently central stops. Be warned that agents have been known to book people onto ordinary buses at super-deluxe prices. If possible book directly with the bus company – many state tourist offices run their own reliable deluxe bus services. Timetables and destinations are usually displayed on signs or billboards at travel agencies and tourist offices.

Costs

The cheapest buses are 'ordinary' government buses but prices vary from state to state – expect to pay Rs 40 to Rs 60 for a three-hour daytime journey and Rs 200 to Rs 300 for an all-day or overnight trip. Add around 50% to the ordinary fare for deluxe services, double the fare for AC and triple or quadruple the fare for a two-by-two service.

Reservations

Deluxe buses can usually be booked in advance – up to a month in advance for government buses – at the bus stand or local travel agents. Reservations are rarely possible on 'ordinary' buses and travellers often get left behind in the mad rush for a seat. To maximise your chances of securing a seat, either send a travelling companion ahead to grab some space or pass a book or article of clothing through an open window and place it on an empty seat. This 'reservation' method rarely fails. If you board a bus mid-way through its journey, you will have to stand until a seat becomes free.

At many bus stations there is a separate women's queue, although this isn't always obvious as signs are often in Hindi and men frequently join the melee. Women have an unspoken right to push to the front of any queue in India. This includes female travellers so be ready to sharpen your elbows and barge through the crowds.

CAR

Few people bother with self-drive car rental but hiring a car with a driver is surprisingly affordable, particularly if several people share the costs. Seatbelts are rarely working – if they are, use them – or hold on tightly to the handrails.

Hiring a Car & Driver

Hiring a car and driver is an excellent way to see several places in one day, and the cost comes down dramatically if you can find other travellers to split the fare. Most towns have taxi stands where you can arrange tours and charter trips. Some taxi companies will only operate in a designated area, dictated by their government permit. If you cross a state border, there may be an additional fee.

Try to find a driver who speaks some English and knows the region. For multi-day trips, the fare should cover the driver's meals and accommodation, but confirm this when you book (preferably in writing). Drivers make their own sleeping and eating arrangements in the evening. Offering to buy the driver a meal is a nice gesture but it can cause embarrassment – use your judgement.

Finally, it is essential to set the ground rules from day one. Many travellers have complained of having their holiday completely dictated by their driver. Politely, but firmly, let the driver know from the outset that you're the boss!

COSTS

The cost of charter trips depends on the distance and the terrain (driving on mountain roads uses more petrol, hence the higher cost). If your destination is a remote backwater, expect a higher fare to cover petrol for the return trip. One-way trips often cost as much as return trips for the same reason. Petrol is usually included in the price, but confirm this before you set off.

Expect to pay Rs 1500 to Rs 2000 for a day trip, including petrol and waiting time at sights along the way. Some taxi unions set a time limit or a maximum kilometre distance for day trips – if you go over, you'll have to pay extra. To avoid problems later, confirm in advance that the fare covers petrol, sightseeing stops, all your chosen destinations and meals and accommodation for the driver. Sightseeing trips around a single city are usually cheaper – Rs 500 is a reasonable starting point for an eight-hour city tour (with an 80km limit).

You generally pay the fee at the end of the trip, though the driver may ask for an advance to cover petrol (ask for a written record of this at the time). A moderate tip is customary at the end of your journey.

Self-Drive Hire

Self-drive car hire is possible in India's larger cities, but given the hair-raising driving conditions most travellers opt for a car with driver. International rental companies with representatives in India include Budget (www.budget.com) and Hertz (www.hertz.com); you'll need an international driving permit.

HITCHING

Truck drivers supplement the bus service in some remote areas for a fee, particularly in Ladakh, Lahaul and Spiti. However, as drivers rarely speak English, you may have difficulty explaining where you want to go and working out how much is a fair price to pay. As anywhere, women are strongly advised against hitching alone.

LOCAL TRANSPORT

Buses, cycle-rickshaws, autorickshaws, taxis, boats and urban trains provide transport around India's cities. On any form of transport without a fixed fare, agree on the fare before you start your journey and make sure that it covers your luggage and every passenger. If you don't, expect heated altercations when you get to your destination. Even where local transport is metered, drivers may refuse to use the meter, demanding an elevated 'fixed' fare. If this happens, find another cab. Parked taxis in tourist areas almost always ask for elevated fares – moving taxis are more likely to use their meters. On some routes, particularly to airports, it may be impossible to get a metered fare.

Costs for public transport vary from town to town. Fares usually increase at night (by up to 100%) and some drivers charge a few rupees extra for luggage. Carry plenty of small bills for taxi and rickshaw fares as drivers rarely have change.

Many taxi/autorickshaw drivers are involved in the commission racket – for more information see p1133.

Autorickshaw, Tempo & Vikram

The Indian autorickshaw is basically a three-wheeled motorcycle with a tin or canvas cab, providing room for two passengers and luggage. You may also hear autorickshaws called autos, scooters, tuk-tuks or Bajaj (after the company that makes them). Autorickshaws tend to be cheaper than taxis (though not everywhere) and they are usually metered, though getting the driver to turn the meter on is a challenge.

Travelling by auto can be great fun, but the clunky two-stroke engines are smelly and noisy and the open windows allow in blasts of cold air – which can be a boon or a curse, depending on the ambient temperature and the level of pollution outside.

Tempos and vikrams are basically outsized autorickshaws with room for more passengers, running on fixed routes for a fixed fare. In country areas, you may also see the fearsome-looking ‘three-wheeler’ – a crude, tractorlike tempo with a front wheel on an articulated arm.

Boat

Various kinds of local ferries offer transport across and down rivers in India, from big car ferries to wooden canoes and wicker coracles – see regional chapters for details. Most boats carry bikes and motorcycles for a fee.

Bus

Urban buses, particularly in the big cities, are fume-belching, human-stuffed, mechanical monsters which travel at breakneck speed (except during morning and evening rush hour, when they can be endlessly stuck in traffic). It’s usually more convenient and comfortable to opt for an autorickshaw or taxi.

Cycle-Rickshaw

A cycle-rickshaw is a pedal cycle with two rear wheels, supporting a bench seat for passengers. Most have a canopy that can be raised in wet weather, or lowered to provide extra space for luggage. Most of the big cities have phased out the cycle-rickshaw, but they are still the main means of local transport in many smaller towns. As with taxis and autorickshaws, fares must be agreed upon in advance.

Locals invariably pay lower fares than foreigners, but considering the effort put in by the rickshaw-wallahs, it’s hard to begrudge them a few extra rupees. Around Rs 20 to Rs 40 is a fair price to pay for a one or two kilometre journey in town and tips are always appreciated.

Kolkata is the last bastion of the human-powered rickshaw, a hand-cart pulled directly by the rickshaw-wallah. Of course, some people feel that being towed around by a local is a little too colonial for comfort.

Taxi

Most towns have taxis, and these are usually metered. However, getting drivers to use the meter is a major hassle. Drivers often claim that the meter is broken and request a hugely elevated fixed fare. Threatening to get another taxi will often miraculously fix it. In tourist areas, some taxis flatly refuse to use the meter – if this happens to you, just find another taxi. It is usually less hassle to use a prepaid taxi from the airport or train station.

Getting a metered ride is only half the battle. Meters are almost always outdated, so fares are

PREPAID TAXIS

Most Indian airports and many train stations have a prepaid-taxi booth, normally just outside the terminal building. Here, you can book a taxi to town for a fixed price (which will include baggage) and hopefully avoid price hikes and commission scams. However, it makes sense to hold on to the payment coupon until your reach your chosen destination, in case the driver has any other ideas! Smaller airports and stations may have prepaid autorickshaw booths instead.

calculated using a combination of the meter reading and a complicated 'fare adjustment card'. Predictably, this system is open to abuse. If you spend a few days in any town, you'll soon get a feel for the difference between a reasonable fare and a rip-off. Many taxi drivers supplement their earnings with commis sions – refuse any unplanned diversions to shops, hotels or private travel agencies.

Other Local Transport

In some towns, tongas (horse-drawn two-wheelers) and victorias (horse-drawn carriages) still operate. Kolkata has a tram network and both Delhi and Kolkata have fast and efficient underground train networks. Mumbai, Delhi and Chennai all have suburban trains that leave from ordinary train stations. See regional chapters for further details.

MOTORCYCLE

Despite the horrendous traffic, India is an amazing country for long-distance motorcycle touring. Motorcycles handle the pitted roads far better than four-wheeled vehicles, and you'll have the added bonus of being able to stop when and where you want. However, motorcycle touring can be quite an undertaking – there are some excellent motorcycle tours (see p1176) that will save you the rigmarole of going it alone.

The classic way to motorcycle round India is on an Enfield Bullet, still built to the original 1940s specifications. As well as making a satisfying chugging sound, these bikes are fully manual, making them easy to repair (parts can be found everywhere in India). On the other hand, Enfields are less reliable than many of the newer, Japanese-designed bikes.

The most preferred starting point for motorcycle tours is Delhi, and popular destinations include Rajasthan, South India and Ladakh. Weather is an important factor to consider – for the best times to visit see the Fast Facts boxes at the start of regional chapters. At the time of research, it wasn't possible to cross into Pakistan by motorcycle – check if the law has since changed. It's still possible to cross into Nepal, Bangladesh and Bhutan with the correct paperwork – contact the relevant diplomatic mission for details.

Driving Licence

You're technically required to have a valid International Driving Permit to hire a motorcycle in India, however, many places are happy with the driving licence from your home country. In tourist areas, you may be able to rent a small motorcycle without a driving licence, but you definitely won't be covered by insurance in the event of an accident.

Fuel & Spare Parts

Petrol and engine oil are widely available in the plains, but petrol stations are widely spaced in the mountains. If you intend to travel to remote regions, ensure you carry enough extra fuel (seek local advice about fuel availability before setting off). At the time of writing, petrol cost Rs 30 to Rs 45 per litre.

If you're going to remote regions it's also important to carry basic spares (valves, fuel lines, piston rings etc). Spare parts for Indian and Japanese machines are widely available in towns and cities. Delhi's Karol Bagh is a good place to find parts for all Indian and imported bikes.

For all machines (particularly older ones), make sure you regularly check and tighten all nuts and bolts, as Indian roads and engine vibration tend to work things loose quickly. Check the engine and gearbox oil level regularly (at least every 500km) and clean the oil filter every few thousand kilometres. Given the road conditions, the chances are you'll make at least a couple of visits to a puncture-wallah – start your trip with new tyres (around Rs 1500) and carry spanners to remove your own wheels.

Hire

Plenty of places rent out motorcycles for local trips and longer tours. Japanese and Indian-made bikes in the 100cc to 150cc range are cheaper than the big 350cc to 500cc Enfields. As a deposit, you'll need to leave your passport, air-ticket or a big cash lump sum. See the regional chapters for information on local rental firms.

One consistently reliable company for long-term rentals is Lalli Motorbike Exports (p1176). A 500cc Enfield costs Rs 13,000/23,000 for three/eight weeks. The price includes excellent advice and an invaluable crash course in Enfield mechanics and repairs. See the regional chapters for other recommended rental companies.

Insurance

Only hire a bike with third-party insurance – if you hit someone without insurance, the consequences can be severe. Reputable companies will include third-party cover in their policies. Those that don't probably aren't reputable.

You must also arrange insurance if you buy a motorcycle. The minimum level of cover is third-party insurance – available for Rs 300 to Rs 500 per year. This will cover repair and medical costs for any other vehicles, people or property you might hit, but no cover for your own machine. Comprehensive insurance (recommended) costs Rs 500 to Rs 2000 per year.

Organised Motorcycle Tours

Dozens of companies offer organised motorcycle tours around India with a support vehicle, mechanic and a guide. Below are some reputable companies (see websites for contact details, itineraries and prices):

Blazing Trails (www.jewelholidays.com)
Classic Bike Adventures (www.classic-bike-india.com)
Ferris Wheels (www.ferriswheels.com.au)
H-C Travel (www.hctravel.com)
Himalayan Roadrunners (www.ridehigh.com)
Indian Motorcycle Adventures (http://homepages.ihug.co.nz/~gumby)
Indian Shepherds (www.asiasafari.com)
Lalli Singh Tours (www.lallisingh.com)
Moto Discovery (www.motodiscovery.com)
Royal Expeditions (www.royalexpeditions.com)
Saffron Road Motorcycle Tours (www.saffronroad.com)
Wheel of India (www.wheelofindia.com)

Purchase

If you are planning a longer tour, consider purchasing a motorcycle. Secondhand bikes are widely available and the paperwork is a lot easier than buying a new machine. Finding a secondhand machine is a matter of asking around. Check travellers' noticeboards and approach local motorcycle mechanics and other bikers.

In Delhi, the area around Hari Singh Nalwa St in Karol Bagh has dozens of motorcycle and parts shops, but plenty of dodgy dealers. We consistently receive good reports about Lalli Motorbike Exports (Map pp120-1; ☎ 011-25728579; www.lallisingh.com; 1740-A/55 Basement, Hari Singh Nalwa St, Abdul Aziz Rd, Karol Bagh Market). Run by the enthusiastic and knowledgeable Lalli Singh, this place sells and rents Enfields and parts, and buyers get a crash-course in running and maintaining these loveable but temperamental machines.

A decent firm in Mumbai is Allibhai Premji Tyrewalla (☎ 022-23099313; www.premjis.com; 205/207 Dr D Bhadkamkar (Lamington) Rd, Opera House), which sells new and secondhand motorcycles with a buy-back option.

COSTS

A well-looked-after secondhand 350cc Enfield will cost Rs 18,000 to Rs 40,000; the 500cc model will cost Rs 35,000 to Rs 65,000. Prices for new Enfield models are listed on www.royalenfield.com. It's advisable to get any secondhand bike serviced before you set off (for Rs 10,000 to 15,000). When re-selling your bike, expect to get between half and two thirds of the price you paid if the bike is still in reasonable condition. Shipping an Indian bike overseas is complicated and expensive – ask the shop you bought the bike from to explain the process.

As well as the cost of the bike, you'll have to pay for insurance – see p1175. Helmets are available for Rs 1000 to Rs 1500, and extras like panniers, luggage racks, protection bars, rear-view mirrors, lockable fuel caps, petrol filters and extra tools are easy to come by. One useful extra is a customised fuel tank, which will increase the range you can cover between fuel stops. An Enfield 500cc gives about 25km/L: the 350cc model gives slightly more.

OWNERSHIP PAPERS

There is plenty of paperwork associated with owning a motorcycle. The registration papers are signed by the local registration authority when the bike is first sold and you'll need these papers when you buy a secondhand bike. Foreign nationals cannot change the name on the registration. Instead, you must fill out the forms for a change of ownership and transfer of insurance. If you buy a new bike, the company selling it must register the machine for you, adding to the cost.

For any bike, the registration must be renewed every 15 years (for around Rs 5000) and you must make absolutely sure that there are no outstanding debts or criminal proceedings associated with the bike. The whole process is extremely complicated and it makes sense to seek advice from the company selling the bike – see the Purchase section earlier for some honest operators. Allow around two weeks to get the paperwork finished and get on the road.

Road Conditions

Given the road conditions in India, this is not a country for novice riders. Hazards range from cows and chickens crossing the carriageway to broken-down trucks, pedestrians on the road, and perpetual potholes and unmarked speed humps. Rural roads sometimes have grain crops strewn across them to be threshed by passing vehicles – a serious sliding hazard for bikers.

Try not to cover too much territory in one day and avoid travelling after dark if at all possible – many vehicles drive without lights and dynamo-powered motorcycle headlamps are useless at low revs while negotiating around potholes. On busy national highways expect to average 50km/h without stops; on winding back roads and dirt tracks this can drop to 10km/h.

For long hauls, transporting your bike by train can be a convenient option. Buy a standard train ticket for the journey, then take your bike to the station parcel office with your passport, registration papers, international driving licence and insurance documents. Packing-wallahs will wrap your bike in protective sacking for around Rs 100 and you must fill out various forms and pay the shipping fee – around Rs 1600 for a 350cc or smaller bike – plus an insurance fee of 1% of the declared value of the bike. Bring the same paperwork to collect your bike from the goods office at the far end. If the bike is left waiting at the destination for more than 24 hours, you'll pay a storage fee of around Rs 30 per day.

Road Rules

Traffic in India nominally drives on the left, but in reality, everyone drives all over the road. Observe local speed limits (these vary from state to state) and give way to any larger vehicles. Locals tend to use the horn more than the brake, but travellers should heed the advice of the Border Roads Organisation – it is better to be Mr Late than Late Mr! Drink and riding never go together – it's illegal as well as dangerous.

SHARE JEEPS

In mountain areas, share jeeps supplement the bus service, charging similar fixed fares. Although nominally designed for five to six passengers, most share jeeps squeeze in eleven. The seats beside and immediately behind the driver are more expensive than the cramped bench seats at the rear. Jeeps only leave when full, and it is not uncommon for everyone to bail out of a half-full jeep and pile onto a fuller vehicle that is ready to depart. Drivers will leave immediately if you pay for all the empty seats in the vehicle.

Jeeps run from jeep stands and 'passenger stations' at the junctions of major roads; ask locals to point you in the right direction. See the regional chapters for routes and fares. In some states, jeeps are known as 'sumos' after the TATA Sumo, India's favourite 4WD.

Be warned that many locals suffer from travel sickness, particularly on mountain roads. Be prepared to give up your window seat to queasy fellow passengers.

TOURS

Tours are available all over India, run by tourist offices, local transport companies and travel agencies. Organised tours can be an inexpensive way to see several places on one trip, through you rarely get much time at each place. If you arrange a tour through the local taxi office, you'll have more freedom about where you go and how long you stay.

Drivers typically double as guides, or you can hire a qualified local guide for a fee. However, be wary of touts claiming to be professional guides in tourist towns. Ask the local tourist office about recommended guides and demand to see evidence from guides who claim to be accredited. Assess the experience of trekking guides by asking about routes, distances and the type of terrain involved – vague answers should set off alarm bells.

On any overnight tour or trek, ensure that all the necessary equipment is provided (eg first aid, camping gear) and inspect everything before you set off. Always confirm exactly what the quoted price includes (food, accommodation, petrol, trekking equipment, guide fees etc).

See the Tours sections in the regional chapters for information on local tours. For more on treks and tours, read the Activities chapter (p90).

International Tour Agencies

Many international companies offer tours to India, from straightforward sightseeing trips to adventure tours and activity-based holidays. To find tours that match your interests, quiz travel agents and surf the web. Some interesting possibilities include the following:

Dragoman Overland (www.dragoman.com) One of several overland tour companies offering trips to and around India on customised vehicles.
Essential India (www.essential-india.co.uk) Various tailor-made and special-interest trips and treks in North and South India, with a responsible-tourism ethos.
Exodus (www.exodustravels.co.uk) A wide array of specialist trips, including tours with a holistic, wildlife and adventure focus.
India Wildlife Tours (www.india-wildlife-tours.com) All sorts of wildlife tours, plus horse-riding safaris, fishing tours and bird-watching.
Indian Encounters (www.indianencounters.com) Tailor-made and special-interest tours, including wildlife, cookery, arts and horse riding.
Intrepid Travellers (www.intrepidtravel.com) A huge range of tours, from sightseeing to cycling, river cruising, festivals, wildlife and cooking tours.
Peregrine Adventures (www.peregrine.net.au) Trekking, wildlife and cultural tours in South India, Rajasthan, Sikkim and Ladakh.
Sacred India Tours (www.sacredindia.com) Offers tours with a spiritual or holistic focus, including yoga, meditation and Ayurvedic trips.
World Expeditions (www.worldexpeditions.com.au) Options include cooking tours, trekking tours, walking tours, cycling tours and volunteering-based trips.

TRAIN

Train travel is one of the joys of India. The network is extensive, prices are reasonable, and the experience of travelling on an Indian train is a reason to travel all by itself. Around 14 million passengers travel by train in India every day and Indian Railways is the second largest employer in the world, with a staggering 1.6 million workers.

At first, the process of booking a seat can seem bewildering, but behind the scenes things are incredibly well organised – see Reservations later in this section for tips on buying a ticket. Trains are far better than buses for long-distance and overnight trips. Some cities also have suburban train networks, though these can get very crowded during peak hours.

Train services to certain destinations are often increased during major festivals but every year, people get crushed to death in stampedes on overcrowded platforms. Something else to be aware of is passenger drugging and theft – see p1133.

We've listed useful trains throughout this book but there are hundreds of services. It's worth buying a copy of Trains at a Glance (Rs 45), available at train station bookstands and better bookshops and newsstands. It contains comprehensive timetables covering all the main lines, or you can use the train search engine on the Indian Railways website (www.indianrail.gov.in). Another useful resource is www.seat61.com/India.htm. Big stations often have English-speaking staff who can help with picking the best train. At smaller stations, mid-level officials such as the deputy station master usually speak English.

TOP FIVE SCENIC TRAIN JOURNEYS

A handful of delightful toy trains still ply the metre-gauge lines from the plains to the hills, offering fabulous views and a hint of colonial charm. Here are the top five scenic rail journeys.

- Darjeeling Toy Train (p535)
- Mettupalayam–Ooty Miniature Train (p1103)
- Shimla Toy Train (p290)
- Matheran Toy Train (p820)
- Visakhapatnam through Eastern Ghats (p954)

Classes

Trains and seats come in a variety of classes. Express and mail trains usually have general (2nd class) compartments with unreserved seating – usually a real free-for-all – and a series of more comfortable compartments that you can reserve. On day trains, there may be a chair-car with padded reclining seats and (usually) AC, or an executive chair car, with better seats and more space.

For overnight trips, you have several choices. 'Sleeper' berths are arranged in groups of six, with two roomier berths across the aisle, in air-cooled carriages. Air-conditioned carriages have either three-tier AC (3AC) berths, in the same configuration as sleepers, or two-tier AC (2AC) berths in groups of four on either side of the aisle. Some trains also have flashier 1st class AC (1AC) berths, with a choice of 2- or 4-berth compartments with locking doors.

Bedding is provided in all AC sleeping compartments and there is usually a meal service, plus regular visits from the coffee- and chai-wallah. In sleeper class, bring your own bedding (an Indian shawl is perfect for the job). In all sleeping compartments, the lower berths convert to seats for daytime use. If you'd rather sleep, book an upper berth. Note that there is usually a locked door between the reserved and unreserved carriages – if you get trapped on the wrong side, you'll have to wait till the next station to change.

There are also special train services connecting major cities. Shatabdi express trains are same-day services with seating only, in AC executive chair and AC chair cars. Both classes are comfortable, but the tinted-glass windows cut down the views considerably. The best views are from the barred but unglazed windows of non-AC sleeper and general carriages.

Rajdhani express trains are long-distance overnight services between Delhi and state capitals, with a choice of 1AC, 2AC, 3AC and 2nd class. Reserved tickets on both Shatabdi and Rajdhani trains are more expensive but fares include meals. Prices of all tickets reflect the level of comfort – see the Costs section on p1180. In all classes, a padlock and a length of chain are useful for securing your luggage to the baggage racks.

For an excellent description of the various train classes (including pictures) see www.seat61.com/India.htm.

Costs

Fares are calculated by distance and class of travel – as shown in the boxed text, p1180. Rajdhani and Shatabdi trains are slightly more expensive, but the price includes meals. Most air-conditioned carriages have a catering service (meals are brought to your seat, but carry some tissues to use as napkins). In unreserved classes, carry samosas or other portable snack foods. You can search for exact fares on www.indianrail.gov.in. Seniors get discounted train tickets – see p1134.

Major stations offer 'retiring rooms', which can be handy if you have a valid ticket or Indrail Pass – see p1126. Another useful facility is the left-luggage office (cloakroom). Locked bags (only) can be stored for a small daily fee if you have a valid train ticket. For peace of mind, chain your bag to the baggage rack and check the opening times to make sure you can get your bag when you need it.

RIDING THE RAILS IN STYLE

Riding in the private train of a Maharaj is one of those surreal travel experiences you only find in India. A number of trains have been put out of service by the switch from narrow to broad gauge, but there are still several palaces on wheels trundling around the Indian countryside.

Rajasthan's Palace on Wheels (www.palaceonwheels.net) operates week-long tours of Rajasthan, departing from Delhi every Wednesday (September to April). The itinerary includes tours to Jaipur, Jaisalmer, Jodhpur, Ranthambore National Park, Chittorgarh, Udaipur, Keoladeo Ghana National Park and Agra. Although the train looks like the real deal, the rolling stock is actually a convincing replica, designed to fit on the wider rails between these popular destinations. Carriages are decked out with all the expected finery and there are two restaurants and a bar, as well as private bedrooms with ensuite bathrooms.

From October to March, the total fare (seven days) per person is US$2765/2065/1680 for single/double/triple occupancy including tours, admission fees, accommodation and all meals. In September and April it costs US$3745/2695/2205. Book in advance online or through the Rajasthan Tourism Development Corporation (RTDC; Delhi ☎ 011-23389525; Bikaner House, Pandara Rd, New Delhi 110011; Jaipur ☎ 0141-2202586; Hotel Swagatam Campus, Station Rd, Jaipur 302006).

In Maharashtra, the Deccan Odyssey offers seven nights of luxury covering the main tourist spots of Maharashtra and Goa. The train leaves Mumbai every Wednesday (October to April), heading south through the resorts and fort towns of the Konkan Coast to Goa, then looping inland to Pune, Aurangabad (for Ellora), Jalgaon (for Ajanta) and Nasik. Fares per person start at US$485/350/285 per day for single/double/triple occupancy (US$395/295/240 in April). You can do the trip one way for a minimum of three days; the seven-day package costs an extra US$100 for guided tours of Mumbai and Goa. Make reservations through Mumbai's MTDC (☎ 022-22026713; www.maharashtratourism.gov.in/mtdc; Madame Cama Rd, Mumbai 400020).

The tourist authorities in Karnataka have been planning a similar upmarket train tour for years, but nothing has so far materialised. For progress updates contact any Karnataka state tourism office.

Reservations

No reservations are required for general (2nd class) compartments. You can reserve seats in all chair-car, sleeper, and 1AC, 2AC and 3AC carriages up to 60 days in advance at any station with a computerised booking system. Advance bookings are strongly recommended for all overnight journeys.

The reservation procedure is fairly simple – obtain a reservation slip from the information window and fill in the starting station, the destination station, the class you want to travel in and the name and number of the train (this is where Trains at a Glance comes into its own). You then join the long queue to the ticket window, where your ticket will be printed.

In larger cities, there are dedicated ticket windows for foreigners and credit-card payments. Elsewhere, you'll have to join a general queue and pay in rupees cash. A special tourist quota is set aside for foreign tourists travelling between popular stations. These seats can only be booked at dedicated reservation offices in major cities (details are given in the regional chapters), and you need to show your passport and visa as ID. The government has recently changed the rules, allowing foreigners to pay for tourist quota seats in rupees, British pounds, US dollars or Euros, in cash or Thomas Cook and American Express travellers cheques (change is given in rupees). However, some offices still ask to see foreign exchange certificates before accepting payment in rupees.

Trains are frequently overbooked, but many passengers cancel. You can buy a ticket on the 'wait list' and try your luck. A refund is available if you fail to get a seat – ask the ticket office about your chances. Refunds are available on any ticket, even after departure, with a penalty – the rules are complicated so check when you book.

If you don't want to go through the hassle of buying a ticket yourself, many travel agencies and hotels will purchase your train ticket for a small commission, though ticket scams abound.

Internet bookings are also possible on the website www.irctc.co.in, and you can choose an e-ticket, or have the tickets sent to you inside India by courier. The website www.seat61.com/India.htm has some excellent advice on online bookings – scroll down to the 'How to book – from outside India' heading.

Reserved tickets show your seat/berth number (or wait-list number) and the carriage number. When the train pulls in, keep an eye out for your carriage number written on the side of the train (station staff can point you in the right direction if you get confused). A list of names and berths is also posted on the side of each reserved carriage – a beacon of light for panicking travellers!

Train Passes

The Indrail Pass permits unlimited rail travel for the period of its validity, but it offers limited savings and you must still make reservations. Passes are available for one to 90 days of travel and you can book through overseas travel agents, or station ticket offices in major Indian cities – click on the Information/International Tourist link on www.indianrail.gov.in for prices. Children aged between five and 12 pay half fare. There's no refund for either lost or partially used tickets.

Health

CONTENTS

There is huge geographical variation in India, from tropical beaches to the Himalayan mountains. Consequently, environmental issues such as heat, cold and altitude can cause significant health problems. Hygiene is generally poor in India so food and water-borne illnesses are common. Many insect-borne diseases are present, particularly in tropical areas. Medical care is basic in many areas so it is essential to be well prepared before travelling to India.

Travellers tend to worry about contracting infectious diseases when in the tropics, but these rarely cause serious illness or death in travellers. Pre-existing medical conditions and accidental injury (especially traffic accidents) account for most life-threatening problems. Becoming ill in some way, however, is very common. Fortunately most travellers' illnesses can be prevented with some common-sense behaviour or treated with a well-stocked traveller's medical kit.

The following advice is a general guide only and does not replace the advice of a doctor trained in travel medicine.

BEFORE YOU GO

Pack medications in their original, clearly labelled containers. A signed and dated letter from your physician describing your medical conditions and medications, including generic names, is very useful. If carrying syringes or needles, be sure to have a physician's letter documenting their medical necessity. If you have a heart condition, bring a copy of your ECG taken just prior to travelling.

If you take any regular medication, bring double your ordinary needs in case of loss or theft. You'll be able to buy many medications over the counter in India without a doctor's prescription, but it can be difficult to find some of the newer drugs, particularly the latest antidepressant drugs, blood pressure medications and contraceptive pills.

INSURANCE

Even if you are fit and healthy, don't travel without health insurance – accidents do happen. Declare any existing medical conditions you have – the insurance company will check if your problem is pre-existing and will not cover you if it is undeclared. You may require extra cover for adventure activities such as rock climbing and scuba diving. If your health insurance doesn't cover you for medical expenses abroad, consider getting extra insurance. If you're uninsured, emergency evacuation is expensive; bills of over US$100,000 are not uncommon.

It's a good idea to find out in advance if your insurance plan will make payments directly to providers or if it will reimburse you later for overseas health expenditures. (In many countries doctors expect payment in cash.) Some policies offer lower and higher medical-expense options; the higher ones are chiefly for countries that have extremely high medical costs, such as the USA. You may prefer a policy that pays doctors or hospitals directly rather than you having to pay on the spot and claim from your insurance company later. If you do have to claim later, make sure you keep all relevant documentation. Some policies ask that you telephone back (reverse charges) to a centre in your home country where an immediate assessment of your problem will be made.

VACCINATIONS

Specialised travel-medicine clinics are your best source of information; they stock all available vaccines and will be able to give specific recommendations for you and your trip. The doctors will take into account factors such as past vaccination history, the length of your trip, activities you may be undertaking and underlying medical conditions, such as pregnancy.

Most vaccines don't give immunity until at least two weeks after they're given, so visit a doctor four to eight weeks before departure. Ask your doctor for an International Certificate of Vaccination (otherwise known as the 'yellow booklet'), which will list all the vaccinations you've received.

Recommended Vaccinations

The World Health Organization (WHO) recommends these vaccinations for travellers to India (as well as being up to date with measles, mumps and rubella vaccinations):

Adult diphtheria and tetanus Single booster recommended if none in the previous 10 years. Side effects include sore arm and fever.

Hepatitis A Provides almost 100% protection for up to a year; a booster after 12 months provides at least another 20 years' protection. Mild side effects such as headache and sore arm occur in 5% to 10% of people.

Hepatitis B Now considered routine for most travellers. Given as three shots over six months. A rapid schedule is also available, as is a combined vaccination with Hepatitis A. Side effects are mild and uncommon, usually headache and sore arm. In 95% of people lifetime protection results.

MEDICAL CHECKLIST

Recommended items for a personal medical kit:

- Antifungal cream, eg Clotrimazole
- Antibacterial cream, eg Muciprocin
- Antibiotic for skin infections, eg Amoxicillin/Clavulanate or Cephalexin
- Antihistamine – there are many options, eg Cetrizine for daytime and Promethazine for night
- Antiseptic, eg Betadine
- Antispasmodic for stomach cramps, eg Buscopam
- Contraceptive method
- Decongestant, eg Pseudoephedrine
- DEET-based insect repellent
- Diarrhoea medication – consider an oral rehydration solution (eg Gastrolyte), diarrhoea 'stopper' (eg Loperamide) and antinausea medication (eg Prochlorperazine). Antibiotics for diarrhoea include Norfloxacin or Ciprofloxacin; for bacterial diarrhoea Azithromycin; for Giardia or amoebic dysentery Tinidazole.
- First-aid items such as scissors, elastoplasts, bandages, gauze, thermometer (but not mercury), sterile needles and syringes, safety pins and tweezers
- Ibuprofen or another anti-inflammatory
- Indigestion tablets, eg Quick Eze or Mylanta
- Iodine tablets (unless you are pregnant or have a thyroid problem) to purify water
- Laxative, eg Coloxyl
- Migraine medication if you suffer from them
- Paracetamol
- Pyrethrin to impregnate clothing and mosquito nets
- Steroid cream for allergic/itchy rashes, eg 1% to 2% hydrocortisone
- Sunscreen and hat
- Throat lozenges
- Thrush (vaginal yeast infection) treatment, eg Clotrimazole pessaries or Diflucan tablet
- Ural or equivalent if prone to urine infections

Polio In 2007 polio was still present in India. Only one booster is required as an adult for lifetime protection. Inactivated polio vaccine is safe during pregnancy.
Typhoid Recommended for all travellers to India, even if you only visit urban areas. The vaccine offers around 70% protection, lasts for two to three years and comes as a single shot. Tablets are also available, however, the injection is usually recommended as it has fewer side effects. Sore arm and fever may occur.
Varicella If you haven't had chickenpox discuss this vaccination with your doctor.

These immunisations are recommended for long-term travellers (more than one month) or those at special risk:
Japanese B Encephalitis Three injections in all. Booster recommended after two years. Sore arm and headache are the most common side effects. Rarely, an allergic reaction comprising hives and swelling can occur up to 10 days after any of the three doses.
Meningitis Single injection. There are two types of vaccination: the quadravalent vaccine gives two to three years' protection; meningitis group C vaccine gives around 10 years' protection. Recommended for long-term backpackers aged under 25.
Rabies Three injections in all. A booster after one year will then provide 10 years' protection. Side effects are rare – occasionally headache and sore arm.
Tuberculosis (TB) A complex issue. Adult long-term travellers are usually recommended to have a TB skin test before and after travel, rather than vaccination. Only one vaccine given in a lifetime.

Required Vaccinations

The only vaccine required by international regulations is yellow fever. Proof of vaccination will only be required if you have visited a country in the yellow fever zone within the six days prior to entering India. If you are travelling to India from Africa or South America, you should check to see if you require proof of vaccination.

IN TRANSIT

DEEP VEIN THROMBOSIS (DVT)

Deep vein thrombosis (DVT) occurs when blood clots form in the legs during plane flights, chiefly because of prolonged immobility. The longer the flight, the greater the risk. Though most blood clots are reabsorbed uneventfully, some may break off and travel through the blood vessels to the lungs, where they may cause life-threatening complications.

The chief symptom of DVT is swelling or pain of the foot, ankle or calf, usually but not always on just one side. When a blood clot travels to the lungs, it may cause chest pain and difficulty in breathing. Travellers with any of these symptoms should immediately seek medical attention.

To prevent the development of DVT on long flights, walk about the cabin, perform isometric compressions of the leg muscles (ie contract the leg muscles while sitting), drink plenty of fluids, and avoid alcohol and tobacco.

JET LAG & MOTION SICKNESS

Jet lag is common when crossing more than five time zones; it results in insomnia, fatigue, malaise or nausea. To avoid jet lag

HEALTH ADVISORIES

It's usually a good idea to consult your government's travel-health website before departure, if one is available:

Australia (www.dfat.gov.au/travel/)
Canada (www.travelhealth.gc.ca)
New Zealand (www.mfat.govt.nz/travel)
South Africa (www.dfa.gov.za/travelling)
UK (www.doh.gov.uk/traveladvice/)
US (www.cdc.gov/travel/)

try drinking plenty of fluids (nonalcoholic) and eating light meals. Upon arrival, seek exposure to natural sunlight and readjust your schedule (for meals, sleep etc) as soon as possible.

Antihistamines such as dimenhydrinate (Dramamine), promethazine (Phenergan) and meclizine (Antivert, Bonine) are usually the first choice for treating motion sickness. Their main side effect is drowsiness. An herbal alternative is ginger, which works like a charm for some people.

IN INDIA

AVAILABILITY OF HEALTHCARE

Medical care is hugely variable in India. Some cities now have clinics catering specifically to travellers and expatriates. These clinics are usually more expensive than local medical facilities, but are worth utilising, as they will offer a superior standard of care. Additionally, they understand the local system, and are aware of the safest local hospitals and best specialists. They can also liaise with insurance companies should you require evacuation. Recommended clinics are listed under Information in the regional chapters in this book. It is difficult to find reliable medical care in rural areas.

Self-treatment may be appropriate if your problem is minor (eg traveller's diarrhoea), you are carrying the relevant medication and you cannot attend a recommended clinic. If you think you may have a serious disease, especially malaria, do not waste time; travel to the nearest quality facility to receive attention. It is always better to be assessed by a doctor than to rely on self-treatment.

Before buying medication over the counter, always check the use-by date and ensure the packet is sealed. Don't accept items that have been poorly stored (eg lying in a glass cabinet exposed to the sun).

INFECTIOUS DISEASES

Avian Flu

'Bird Flu' or Influenza A (H5N1) is a subtype of the type A influenza virus. This virus typically infects birds and not humans; however, in 1997 the first documented case of bird-to-human transmission was recorded in Hong Kong. Currently very close contact with dead or sick birds is the principal source of infection and bird to human transmission does not easily occur.

Symptoms include high fever and typical influenza-like symptoms with rapid deterioration leading to respiratory failure and death in many cases. The early administration of antiviral drugs, such as Tamiflu, is recommended to improve the chances of survival. At this time it is not routinely recommended for travellers to carry Tamiflu with them – rather immediate medical care should be sought if bird flu is suspected. At the time of writing there have been no recorded cases in travellers or expatriates.

There is currently no vaccine available to prevent bird flu. For up-to-date information check these two websites:

- www.who.int/en/
- www.avianinfluenza.com.au

Coughs, Colds & Chest Infections

Around 25% of travellers to India will develop a respiratory infection. This usually starts as a virus and is exacerbated by environmental conditions, such as pollution in the cities, or cold and altitude in the mountains. Commonly a secondary bacterial infection will intervene – marked by fever, chest pain and coughing up discoloured or blood-tinged sputum. If you have the symptoms of an infection seek medical advice or commence a general antibiotic.

Dengue Fever

This mosquito-borne disease is becomingly increasingly problematic in the tropical world, especially in the cities. As there is no vaccine available it can only be prevented by avoiding mosquito bites. The mosquito that carries dengue bites day and night, so use insect avoidance measures at all times. Symptoms include high fever, severe headache and body ache (dengue was previously known as 'breakbone fever'). Some people develop a rash and experience diarrhoea. There is no specific treatment, just rest and paracetamol – do not take aspirin as it increases the likelihood of haemorrhaging. See a doctor to be diagnosed and monitored.

Hepatitis A

A problem throughout the region, this food- and water-borne virus infects the liver, causing jaundice (yellow skin and eyes), nausea and lethargy. There is no specific treatment for hepatitis A, you just need to allow time for the liver to heal. All travellers to India should be vaccinated against hepatitis A.

Hepatitis B

The only sexually transmitted disease that can be prevented by vaccination, hepatitis B is spread by body fluids. The long-term consequences can include liver cancer and cirrhosis.

Hepatitis E

Transmitted through contaminated food and water, hepatitis E has similar symptoms to hepatitis A, but is far less common. It is a severe problem in pregnant women and can result in the death of both mother and baby. There is currently no vaccine, and prevention is by following safe eating and drinking guidelines.

HIV

HIV is spread via contaminated body fluids. Avoid unsafe sex, unsterile needles (including in medical facilities) and procedures such as tattoos. The growth rate of HIV in India is one of the highest in the world.

Influenza

Present year-round in the tropics, influenza (flu) symptoms include fever, muscle aches, runny nose, cough and sore throat. It can be severe in people over the age of 65 or in those with medical conditions such as heart disease or diabetes – vaccination is recommended for these individuals. There is no specific treatment, just rest and paracetamol.

Japanese B Encephalitis

This viral disease is transmitted by mosquitoes and is rare in travellers. Like most mosquito-borne diseases it is becoming a more common problem in affected countries. Most cases occur in rural areas and vaccination is recommended for travellers spending more than one month outside of cities. There is no treatment, and a third of infected people will die while another third will suffer permanent brain damage.

Malaria

For such a serious and potentially deadly disease, there is an enormous amount of misinformation concerning malaria. You must get expert advice as to whether your trip actually puts you at risk. For most rural areas, the risk of contracting malaria far outweighs the risk of any tablet side effects. Before you travel, seek medical advice on the right medication and dosage for you.

Malaria is caused by a parasite transmitted by the bite of an infected mosquito. The most important symptom of malaria is fever, but general symptoms, such as headache, diarrhoea, cough or chills, may also occur. Diagnosis can only be made by taking a blood sample.

Two strategies should be combined to prevent malaria – mosquito avoidance and antimalaria medications. Most people who catch malaria are taking inadequate or no antimalarial medication.

Travellers are advised to prevent mosquito bites by taking these steps:

- Use a DEET-containing insect repellent on exposed skin. Wash this off at night, as long as you are sleeping under a mosquito net. Natural repellents such as citronella can be effective, but must be applied more frequently than products containing DEET.
- Sleep under a mosquito net impregnated with pyrethrin
- Choose accommodation with screens and fans (if not air-conditioned)
- Impregnate clothing with pyrethrin in high-risk areas
- Wear long sleeves and trousers in light colours
- Use mosquito coils
- Spray your room with insect repellent before going out for your evening meal

There are a variety of medications available. The effectiveness of the chloroquine and Paludrine combination is now limited in many parts of South Asia. Common side effects include nausea (40% of people) and mouth ulcers.

The daily tablet doxycycline is a broad-spectrum antibiotic that has the added benefit of helping to prevent a variety of tropical diseases, including leptospirosis, tick-borne disease and typhus. The potential side effects include photosensitivity (a tendency to sunburn), thrush (in women), indigestion, heartburn, nausea and interference with the contraceptive pill. More serious side effects include ulceration of the oesophagus – you can help prevent this by taking your tablet with a meal and a large glass of water, and never lying down within half an hour of taking it. It must be taken for four weeks after leaving the risk area.

Lariam (mefloquine) has received much bad press, some of it justified, some not. This weekly tablet suits many people. Serious side effects are rare but include depression, anxiety, psychosis and having fits. Anyone with a history of depression, anxiety, other psychological disorders or epilepsy should not take Lariam. It is considered safe in the second and third trimesters of pregnancy. Tablets must be taken for four weeks after leaving the risk area.

The new drug Malarone is a combination of atovaquone and proguanil. Side effects are uncommon and mild, most commonly nausea and headache. It is the best tablet for scuba divers and for those on short trips to high-risk areas. It must be taken for one week after leaving the risk area.

Rabies

Around 30,000 people die in India each year from rabies. This uniformly fatal disease is spread by the bite or lick of an infected animal – most commonly a dog or monkey. You should seek medical advice immediately after any animal bite and commence postexposure treatment. Having pretravel vaccination means the postbite treatment is greatly simplified. If an animal bites you, gently wash the wound with soap and water, and apply iodine-based antiseptic. If you are not prevaccinated you will need to receive rabies immunoglobulin as soon as possible, and this is almost impossible to obtain in much of India.

STDs

Sexually transmitted diseases most common in India include herpes, warts, syphilis, gonorrhoea and chlamydia. People carrying these diseases often have no signs of infection. Condoms will prevent gonorrhoea and chlamydia but not warts or herpes. If after a sexual encounter you develop any rash, lumps, discharge or pain when passing urine, seek immediate medical attention. If you have been sexually active during your travels, have an STD check on your return home.

Tuberculosis

While TB is rare in travellers, those who have significant contact with the local population (such as medical and aid workers and long-term travellers) should take precautions. Vaccination is usually only given to children under the age of five, but adults at risk are recommended pre- and post-travel TB testing. The main symptoms are fever, cough, weight loss, night sweats and tiredness.

Typhoid

This serious bacterial infection is also spread via food and water. It gives a high and slowly progressive fever, headache, and may be accompanied by a dry cough and stomach pain. It is diagnosed by blood tests and treated with antibiotics. Vaccination is recommended for all travellers who are spending more than a week in India. Be aware that vaccination is not 100% effective, so you must still be careful with what you eat and drink.

TRAVELLER'S DIARRHOEA

This is by far the most common problem affecting travellers – between 30% and 70% of people will suffer from it within two weeks of starting their trip. In over 80% of cases, traveller's diarrhoea is caused by a bacteria (there are numerous potential culprits), and therefore responds promptly to treatment with antibiotics. Treatment with antibiotics will depend on your situation – how sick you are, how quickly you need to get better, where you are etc.

Traveller's diarrhoea is defined as the passage of more than three watery bowel actions within 24 hours, plus at least one other symptom, such as fever, cramps, nausea, vomiting or feeling generally unwell.

Treatment consists of staying well hydrated; rehydration solutions like Gastrolyte are the best for this. Antibiotics such as norfloxacin, ciprofloxacin or azithromycin will kill the bacteria quickly.

Loperamide is just a 'stopper' and doesn't get to the cause of the problem. It can be helpful, though (eg if you have to go on a long bus ride). Don't take loperamide if you have a fever, or blood in your stools. Seek medical attention quickly if you do not respond to an appropriate antibiotic.

Amoebic Dysentery

Amoebic dysentery is very rare in travellers but is often misdiagnosed by poor-quality labs. Symptoms are similar to bacterial diarrhoea, ie fever, bloody diarrhoea and generally feeling unwell. You should always seek reli-

DRINKING WATER

- Never drink tap water
- Bottled water is generally safe – check the seal is intact at purchase
- Avoid ice
- Avoid fresh juices – they may have been watered down
- Boiling water is the most efficient method of purifying it
- The best chemical purifier is iodine. It should not be used by pregnant women or those with thyroid problems.
- Water filters should also filter out viruses. Ensure your filter has a chemical barrier such as iodine and a small pore size, eg less than four microns.

able medical care if you have blood in your diarrhoea. Treatment involves two drugs: Tinidazole or Metronidazole to kill the parasite in your gut and then a second drug to kill the cysts. If left untreated complications such as liver or gut abscesses can occur.

Giardiasis

Giardia is a parasite that is relatively common in travellers. Symptoms include nausea, bloating, excess gas, fatigue and intermittent diarrhoea. The parasite will eventually go away if left untreated but this can take months; the best advice is to seek medical treatment. The treatment of choice is Tinidazole, with Metronidazole being a second-line option.

ENVIRONMENTAL HAZARDS

Air Pollution

Air pollution, particularly vehicle pollution, is an increasing problem in most of India's major cities. If you have severe respiratory problems, speak with your doctor before travelling to any heavily polluted urban centres. This pollution also causes minor respiratory problems, such as sinusitis, dry throat and irritated eyes. If troubled by the pollution, leave the city for a few days and get some fresh air.

Diving & Surfing

Divers and surfers should seek specialised advice before they travel to ensure their medical kit contains treatment for coral cuts and tropical ear infections, as well as the standard problems. Divers should ensure their insurance covers them for decompression illness – get specialised dive insurance through an organisation such as Divers Alert Network (DAN; www.danasiapacific.org). Have a dive medical before you leave your home country – there are certain medical conditions that are incompatible with diving.

Food

Eating in restaurants is the biggest risk factor for contracting traveller's diarrhoea. Ways to avoid it include eating only freshly cooked food, and avoiding shellfish and food that has been sitting in buffets. Peel all fruit, cook vegetables and soak salads in iodine water for at least 20 minutes. Eat in busy restaurants with a high turnover of customers. See p113 for more on safe eating.

Heat

Many parts of India are hot and humid throughout the year. For most people it takes at least two weeks to adapt to the hot climate. Swelling of the feet and ankles is common, as are muscle cramps caused by excessive sweating. Prevent these by avoiding dehydration and excessive activity in the heat. Take it easy when you first arrive. Don't eat salt tablets (they aggravate the gut); drinking rehydration solution or eating salty food helps. Treat cramps by stopping activity, resting, rehydrating with double-strength rehydration solution and gently stretching.

Dehydration is the main contributor to heat exhaustion. Symptoms include feeling weak, headache, irritability, nausea or vomiting, sweaty skin, a fast, weak pulse and a normal or slightly elevated body temperature. Treatment involves getting out of the heat and/or sun, fanning the sufferer and applying cool wet cloths to the skin, laying the sufferer flat with their legs raised and rehydrating with water containing ¼ teaspoon of salt per litre. Recovery is usually rapid and it is common to feel weak for some days afterwards.

Heat stroke is a serious medical emergency. Symptoms come on suddenly and include weakness, nausea, a hot dry body with a body temperature of over 41°C, dizziness, confusion, loss of coordination, fits, and eventually collapse and loss of consciousness. Seek medical help and commence cooling by getting the person out of the heat, removing their clothes, fanning them and applying cool wet cloths or ice to their body, especially to the groin and armpits.

Prickly heat is a common skin rash in the tropics, caused by sweat being trapped under the skin. The result is an itchy rash of tiny lumps. Treat it by moving out of the heat and into an air-conditioned area for a few hours and by having cool showers. Creams and ointments clog the skin so they should be avoided. Locally bought prickly heat powder can be helpful.

Tropical fatigue is common in long-term expatriates based in the tropics. It's rarely due to disease and is caused by the climate, inadequate mental rest, excessive alcohol intake and the demands of daily work in a different culture.

High Altitude

If you are going to altitudes above 3000m, you should get information on preventing, recognising and treating Acute Mountain Sickness (AMS). The biggest risk factor for developing altitude sickness is going too high too quickly – you should follow a conservative acclimatisation schedule such as can be found in all good trekking guides – and you should never go to a higher altitude when you have any symptoms that could be altitude related. There is no way to predict who will get altitude sickness and it is often the younger, fitter members of a group who succumb.

HEALTH

Symptoms usually develop during the first 24 hours at altitude but may be delayed up to three weeks. Mild symptoms include headache, lethargy, dizziness, difficulty sleeping and loss of appetite. AMS may become more severe without warning and can be fatal. Severe symptoms include breathlessness, a dry, irritative cough (which may progress to the production of pink, frothy sputum), severe headache, lack of coordination and balance, confusion, irrational behaviour, vomiting, drowsiness and unconsciousness.

Treat mild symptoms by resting at the same altitude until recovery, which usually takes a day or two. Paracetamol or aspirin can be taken for headaches. If symptoms persist or become worse, however, immediate descent is necessary; even 500m can help. Drug treatments should never be used to avoid descent or to enable further ascent.

The drugs acetazolamide and dexamethasone are recommended by some doctors for the prevention of AMS; however, their use is controversial. They can reduce the symptoms, but they may also mask warning signs; severe and fatal AMS has occurred in people taking these drugs.

To prevent acute mountain sickness:

- Ascend slowly – have frequent rest days, spending two to three nights at each rise of 1000m.
- It is always wise to sleep at a lower altitude than the greatest height reached during the day, if possible. Also, once above 3000m, care should be taken not to increase the sleeping altitude by more than 300m per day.
- Drink extra fluids. The mountain air is dry and cold and moisture is lost as you breathe.
- Eat light, high-carbohydrate meals.
- Avoid alcohol and sedatives.

Insect Bites & Stings

Bedbugs don't carry disease but their bites are very itchy. They live in the cracks of furniture and walls and then migrate to the bed at night to feed on you. You can treat the itch with an antihistamine. Lice inhabit various parts of your body but most commonly your head and pubic area. Transmission is via close contact with an infected person. They can be difficult to treat and you may need numerous applications of an antilice shampoo such as pyrethrin. Pubic lice are usually contracted from sexual contact.

Ticks are contracted after walking in rural areas. Ticks are commonly found behind the ears, on the belly and in armpits. If you have had a tick bite and experience symptoms such as a rash at the site of the bite or elsewhere, fever or muscle aches, you should see a doctor. Doxycycline prevents tick-borne diseases.

Leeches are found in humid rainforest areas. They do not transmit any disease but their bites are often intensely itchy for weeks afterwards and can easily become infected. Apply an iodine-based antiseptic to any leech bite to help prevent infection.

Bee and wasp stings mainly cause problems for people who are allergic to them. Anyone with a serious bee or wasp allergy should carry an injection of adrenaline (eg an Epipen) for emergency treatment. For others pain is the main problem – apply ice to the sting and take painkillers.

Skin Problems

Fungal rashes are common in humid climates. There are two common fungal rashes that affect travellers. The first occurs in moist areas, such as the groin, armpits and between the toes. It starts as a red patch that slowly spreads and is usually itchy. Treatment involves keeping the skin dry, avoiding chafing and using an antifungal cream such as clotrimazole or Lamisil. Tinea versicolor is also common – this fungus causes small, light-coloured patches, most commonly on the back, chest and shoulders. Consult a doctor.

Cuts and scratches become easily infected in humid climates. Take meticulous care of any cuts and scratches to prevent complications such as abscesses. Immediately wash all wounds in clean water and apply antiseptic. If you develop signs of infection (increasing pain and redness), see a doctor. Divers and surfers should be particularly careful with coral cuts, as they become easily infected.

Sunburn

Even on a cloudy day sunburn can occur rapidly. Always use a strong sunscreen (at least factor 30), making sure to reapply after a swim, and always wear a wide-brimmed hat and sunglasses outdoors. Avoid lying in the sun during the hottest part of the day (10am to 2pm). You can get burnt very easily when you are at high altitudes so be vigilant once above 3000m. If you become sunburnt, stay out of the sun until you have recovered, apply cool compresses and take painkillers for the discomfort. One-percent hydrocortisone cream applied twice daily is also helpful.

WOMEN'S HEALTH

In most places in India, supplies of sanitary products (pads, rarely tampons) are readily available. Birth control options may be limited, so bring adequate supplies of your own form of contraception. Heat, humidity and antibiotics can all contribute to thrush. Treatment is with antifungal creams and pessaries such as clotrimazole. A practical alternative is a single tablet of Fluconazole (Diflucan). Urinary tract infections can be precipitated by dehydration or long bus journeys without toilet stops; bring suitable antibiotics. For gynaecological health issues, seek out a female doctor.

Pregnant women should receive specialised advice before travelling. The ideal time to travel is in the second trimester (between 16 and 28 weeks), when the risk of pregnancy-related problems is at its lowest and pregnant women generally feel at their best. Always carry a list of quality medical facilities available at your destination and ensure you continue your standard antenatal care at these facilities. Avoid rural travel in areas with poor transport and substandard medical facilities. Most of all, ensure that your travel insurance policy covers all pregnancy-related possibilities, including premature labour.

Malaria is a high-risk disease for pregnant women, and WHO recommends that they do not travel to areas with Chloroquine-resistant malaria. None of the more effective antimalarial drugs are completely safe in pregnancy.

Traveller's diarrhoea can quickly lead to dehydration and result in inadequate blood flow to the placenta. Many of the drugs used to treat various diarrhoea bugs are not recommended in pregnancy. Azithromycin is considered safe.

Language

CONTENTS

There is no one 'Indian' language as such. This is part of the reason why English is still widely spoken more than 50 years after the British left India and why it's still the official language of the judiciary.

Eighteen languages are recognised by the constitution, and these fall into two major groups: Indic, or Indo-Aryan, and Dravidian. Additionally, over 1600 minor languages and dialects were listed in the latest census. The scope for misunderstanding can be easily appreciated!

The Indic languages are a branch of the Indo-European group of languages (to which English belongs). The Indic languages were spoken by the Central Asian peoples who invaded what is now India. The Dravidian languages such as Tamil are native to South India, although they have been influenced by Sanskrit and Hindi over the years.

Most of India's languages have their own script, but written English can also be quite common; in some states, such as Gujarat, you'll hardly see a word of it, whereas in Himachal Pradesh virtually everything is in English. An Rs 5 or larger banknote shows the scripts of 14 of India's languages. As well as Hindi and English there's a list of 12 other languages: from the top, they are Assamese, Bengali, Gujarati, Kannada, Kashmiri, Malayalam, Marathi, Oriya, Punjabi, Sanskrit, Tamil, Telugu and Urdu. (See the boxed text, opposite, for more information.)

Major efforts have been made to promote Hindi as the national language of India and to gradually phase out English. A stumbling block to this plan is that Hindi is the predominant language in the north, but it bears little relation to the Dravidian languages of the south. Subsequently, very few people in the south speak Hindi. It is from here, particularly in the state of Tamil Nadu, that the most vocal opposition to the countrywide adoption of Hindi comes, along with the strongest support for the retention of English.

For many educated Indians, English is virtually their first language, and for the large number of Indians who speak more than one language, English is often their second tongue. Thus it's very easy to get around India with English, but it's always good to know at least a little of the local language.

HINDI

Hindi is written from left to right in Devanagari script. While the script may be unfamiliar, English speakers will recognise many of Hindi's grammatical features.

For a far more comprehensive guide to Hindi, get a copy of Lonely Planet's Hindi, Urdu & Bengali Phrasebook.

PRONUNCIATION

Most Hindi sounds are similar to their English counterparts, but there are a few tricky ones. There's a difference between 'aspirated' and 'unaspirated' consonants – the aspirated

INDIA'S OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Assamese State language of Assam, and spoken by nearly 60% of that state's population. Dates back to the 13th century.
Bengali Spoken by nearly 200 million people (mostly in what is now Bangladesh), and the state language of West Bengal. Developed as a language in the 13th century.
Gujarati State language of Gujarat, it is an Indic language.
Hindi The most important Indian language, although it is only spoken as a mother tongue by about 20% of the population, mainly in the area known as the Hindi-belt, the cow-belt or Bimaru, which includes Bihar, Madhya Pradesh, Rajasthan and Uttar Pradesh. This Indic language is the official language of the Indian government, the states already mentioned, plus Haryana and Himachal Pradesh.
Kannada State language of Karnataka, spoken by about 65% of that state's population.
Kashmiri Kashmiri speakers account for about 55% of the population of Jammu and Kashmir. It is an Indic language written in the Perso-Arabic script.
Konkani A Dravidian language spoken by people in the Goa region.
Malayalam A Dravidian language, and the state language of Kerala.
Manipuri An Indic language of the northeast region.
Marathi An Indic language dating back to around the 13th century, Marathi is the state language of Maharashtra.
Nepali The predominant language of Sikkim, where around 75% of the people are ethnic Nepalis.
Oriya An Indic language, it is the state language of Orissa where it is spoken by around 90% of the population.
Punjabi Another Indic language, this is the state language of Punjab. Although based on Devanagari (the same script as Hindi), it is written in a 16th-century script known as Gurumukhi, which was created by the Sikh guru, Guru Angad.
Sanskrit One of the oldest languages in the world, and the language of classical India. All the Vedas and classical literature such as the Mahabharata and the Ramayana were written in this Indic language.
Sindhi A significant number of Sindhi speakers are found in what is now Pakistan, although the greater number are in India. In Pakistan, the language is written in a Perso-Arabic script, while in India it uses the Devanagari script.
Tamil An ancient Dravidian language at least 2000 years old, and the state language of Tamil Nadu. It is spoken by 65 million people.
Telugu The Dravidian language spoken by the largest number of people, it is the state language of Andhra Pradesh.
Urdu This is the state language of Jammu and Kashmir. Along with Hindi, it evolved in early Delhi. While Hindi was largely adopted by the Hindu population, the Muslims embraced Urdu, and so the latter is written in the Perso-Arabic script and includes many Persian words.

ones are pronounced with a strong puff of air, like saying 'h' after the sound. There are also 'retroflex' consonants, produced by curling the tongue up and back to make contact with the ridge of tissue behind the top teeth. The transliteration system we've used for Hindi in this language guide is designed to be as simple as possible, and for this reason it doesn't distinguish between all the sounds of spoken Hindi.

It's important to pay attention to the pronunciation of vowels and especially to their length, eg a compared to aa. The combination ng after a vowel indicates that it is nasalised (ie pronounced through the nose).

Vowels

Whereas we count in tens, hundreds, thousands, millions and billions, the Indian numbering system uses tens, hundreds, thousands, hundred thousands and ten millions. A hundred thousand is a laakh, and 10 million is a krore. These two words are almost always used in place of their English equivalents.

Once in the thousands, written numbers have commas every two places, not three.

LANGUAGE

TAMIL

Tamil is the official language in the South Indian state of Tamil Nadu and the Union Territory of Puducherry (Pondicherry). It is one of the major Dravidian languages of South India.

SCRIPT & TRANSLITERATION

Tamil has its own alphabetic script which has not been included in this language guide. The transliteration system used here is intended as a simplified method for representing the sounds of Tamil using the Roman alphabet.

PRONUNCIATION

Like Hindi, the Tamil sound system includes a number of retroflex consonants, which are pronounced by curling the tongue up and back so that the tip makes contact with the ridge of tissue on the roof of the mouth. For the sake of simplicity, in this language guide we haven't distinguished the retroflex consonants from their nonretroflex counterparts. You'll find that your meaning will still be clear from the context of what you're saying.
